you like." When he has chosen (he is to add), "Don't tell anybody (which way you have voted)." If he ascertains that those whose opinion is against the Dhamma are in the majority, he is to reject the vote as wrongly taken. If he ascertains that those whose opinion is in accordance with the Dhamma are in the majority, he is to report the vote as well taken. Thus, O Bhikkhus, is the whispering method of taking the votes.

'And how, O Bhikkhus, is the open method of taking votes? If he ascertains (beforehand) that those whose opinion is in accordance with the Dhamma are in the majority, the vote is to be taken undisguisedly, openly. Thus, O Bhikkhus, is the open method of taking the votes.

'These, O Bhikkhus, are the three methods of taking the votes¹.'

27. 'By how many kinds of settlement is a legal question arising out of censure settled? A legal question arising out of censure can be settled by four kinds of settlement—by the Proceeding in Presence—by the Proceeding for those who are consciously innocent—by the Proceeding for those who are no longer out of their mind—by the Proceeding for those who are obstinate.

'If one should ask, "Can it be that a legal question arising out of censure, without recourse being had to two modes of settlement—to wit, the Proceeding for those who are no longer out of their mind, and the ¹ This naive chapter would seem to show that the pia fraus was not unknown to the Buddhist monks at the time when the Kullavagga was composed. Buddhaghosa's note (given at p. 315 of H. O.'s edition of the text) specifies the different occasions when each of the three methods should be used.

Proceeding for those who are obstinate—may be settled by the two other modes of settlement—to wit, the Proceeding in Presence, and the Proceeding for those who are consciously innocent?" he should be told, "Yes, it can." (If he should say), "How may that be?" the answer should be as follows:

'In case the Bhikkhus bring a groundless charge against a Bhikkhu of a breach of morality. In respect thereof, O Bhikkhus, to that Bhikkhu whose memory in regard to the matter is quite clear, the Proceeding for the consciously innocent is to be accorded.

'And thus, O Bhikkhus, is to be granted (&c., as in chapter 4, § 10, down to the end, with the necessary alterations for a general rule instead of a particular case).

'This, O Bhikkhus, is called a legal question that has been settled. And how settled? By the Proceeding in Presence, and by the Proceeding for the consciously innocent. And what therein belongs to the Proceeding in Presence? The presence of the Samgha, and the presence of the Dhamma, and the presence of the Vinaya, and the presence of the particular person. And therein what is the presence of the Samgha (&c., as in § 16, down to the end)? And what therein belongs to the Proceeding for the consciously innocent? The carrying out of, the accomplishment of, the proceeding by, the undertaking of, the acceptance of, the pacification of the Proceeding for the consciously innocent¹. That is what belongs herein to the Proceeding for the consciously innocent.'

¹ This clause corresponds to the one above, in § 24, and below, in § 29.

28. [This section bears exactly the same relation to chapter 5 as the last section does to chapter 4, the form of the two sections being exactly the same throughout.]

29¹. 'If one should ask, "Can it be that a legal question arising out of censure, without recourse being had to two modes of settlement—to wit, the Proceeding for those who are consciously innocent, and the Proceeding for those who are no longer out of their mind—may be settled by the two other modes of settlement—to wit, the Proceeding in Presence, and the Proceeding for those who are obstinate?" he should be told, "Yes, it can." If he should say, "How may that be?" the answer should be as follows :

'In case a Bhikkhu warn another Bhikkhu in the midst of the Samgha of a grievous offence, and call upon him to recollect (whether he have committed it or not), saying, "Has the venerable one been guilty of such and such a grievous offence—a Pârâgika offence, or an offence equivalent to a Pârâgika offence?" And he replies thus, "I do not, Sir, call to mind that I have been guilty of such and such a grievous offence—a Pârâgika offence, or an offence equivalent to a Pârâgika offence." To him thus denying the other insists, saying, "Come now, Sir, ascertain for certain whether you are conscious of having been guilty of such and such a grievous offence—a Pârâgika offence, or an offence equivalent to a Pârâgika offence.” And he replies thus: “I do not, Sir, call to mind that I have been guilty of such and such a grievous offence—a Pârâgika offence, or an offence equivalent to a Pârâgika offence. But I do, Sir, recollect that I was guilty of such and such a trifling offence.” To him thus denying the other insists [as before]. And he replies thus: “Seeing that I am willing, Sir, though you did not ask me, to confess myself guilty of that trifling offence, why should I not confess, when asked, such and such a grievous offence—a Pârâgika offence, or an offence equivalent to a Pârâgika offence?” And the other rejoins, “But you do not confess, Sir, even that trifling offence without being asked. How should you confess, if you were not asked, the commission of such and such a grievous offence—a Pârâgika offence, or one equivalent to a Pârâgika offence? Come now, Sir, ascertain for certain whether you are conscious of having been guilty of such and such a grievous offence—a Pârâgika offence, or one equivalent to a Pârâgika offence?” And he replies, “Yes, I am conscious, Sir, of having committed such and such an offence—a Pârâgika offence, or one equivalent to a Pârâgika offence. In sport did I say, in fun did I say that I was not conscious thereof.”

¹ This section again bears exactly the same relation to chapter 11 as the previous ones have done to chapters 4 and 5 respectively. The outline of the form is the same, but as in the introductory part (containing the description of the offence) the present section is much fuller than the chapter to which it refers, we prefer to give that part of this section in full.

‘Then, O Bhikkhus, the Proceeding for those who are obstinate should be carried out against that Bhikkhu.

‘And thus should it be carried out (&c., as chapter 11, § 2, down to the end, reading “such and such a Bhikkhu” for “Upavâla,” and “grievous offence” for “offence”).

‘This, O Bhikkhus, is called a legal question that has been settled. And how has it been settled? By the Proceeding in Presence, and by the Proceeding for those who are obstinate. And what therein belongs to the Proceeding in Presence? The Presence of the Samgha (&c., as in § 16). And what therein belongs to the Proceeding for those who are obstinate? The carrying out of, the accomplishment of, the proceeding by, the undertaking of, the acceptance of, the pacification of the official act (the Kamma) by the Proceeding for those who are obstinate. That is what belongs therein to the Proceeding for those who are obstinate.

‘When a legal question, O Bhikkhus, has been thus settled, if a disputant re-open the question, such re-opening is a Pākittiya. If one who has conveyed his consent complain of the decision, such complaint is a Pākittiya.

30. ‘By how many modes of settlement is a legal question arising out of offence settled? A legal question arising out of offence is settled by three modes of settlement—to wit, by the Proceeding in Presence, and by the Proceeding on confession of guilt, and by the Proceeding by covering over as with grass.

‘If one should ask, “Can it be that a legal question arising out of offence, without recourse being had to the one mode of settlement—to wit, the Proceeding by covering over as with grass—may be settled by the other two modes—to wit, the Proceeding in Presence, and the Proceeding on confession of guilt?” he should be told, “Yes, it can.” If he should say, “How may that be?” the answer should be as follows :

‘In case a Bhikkhu has been guilty of a minor offence. That Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, should go up to another Bhikkhu, and having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, and squatted down on his heels, and stretched forth his hands with the palms held together, should speak as follows: “I, Sir, have been guilty of such and such an offence; and that I confess.” He should say, “Do you acknowledge it?” “Yes; I acknowledge it.” “May you restrain yourself in future¹!”

‘This, O Bhikkhus, is called a legal question which has been settled. And how has it been settled? By the Proceeding in Presence, and by the Proceeding on confession of guilt. And what therein belongs to the Proceeding in Presence? The presence of the Dhamma, and the presence of the Vinaya, and the presence of the particular individual. And what therein is the presence of the Dhamma, and of the Vinaya? The Dhamma, and the Vinaya, and the teaching of the Master, by the aid of which that legal question is settled. That is the presence in such a matter of the Dhamma, and of the Vinaya. And what therein is the presence of the particular individual? He who confesses, and he to whom he confesses, both are present. That is the presence of the particular individual in such a proceeding. And what therein belongs to the Proceeding on confession of guilt? The carrying out of, the accomplishment of, the proceeding by, the performance of, the acceptance of, the pacification of the official act (the Kamma) by the Proceeding on confession of guilt. That is what belongs therein to the Proceeding on confession of guilt.

¹ Āyatim samvareyyâsi. So again in the next section. Compare V, 20, 5.

‘When a legal question, O Bhikkhus, has been thus settled, if a disputant re-open the question, such re-opening is a Pāṭittiya¹.

31. ‘If he should thus receive (absolution), it is well. If he should not receive it, that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, should go up to a number of Bhikkhus, and having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, and bowed down before the elder Bhikkhus, and squatted down on his heels, and stretched forth his two hands with the palms held together, he should speak as follows: “I, Sirs, have been guilty of such and such an offence, and that I confess.” Then some discreet and able Bhikkhu should lay the matter before those Bhikkhus, saying, “Let the venerable ones hear me. This Bhikkhu, of such and such a name, is conscious of an offence; and he discloses it, reveals it, confesses it. If the time seems meet to the venerable ones, I would absolve² that Bhikkhu’s offence.” And he should say, “Do you acknowledge it?” “Yes; I acknowledge it.” “In future may you restrain yourself!”

‘This, O Bhikkhus, is called a legal question which has been settled. And how has it been settled? (&c., as in last section, down to the end.)

32. ‘If he should thus receive absolution, it is well. If he should not receive it, that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, should go before the Saṃgha (&c., as in last section, down to the end, then adding): And if one who has given his consent to the proceeding thereafter make complaint thereof, that is a Pākittiya.

¹ See §§ 16, 29, &c. of this chapter.

² Paṭigāheyyam. See V, 20, 5.

33. 'If one should ask, "Can it be that a legal question arising out of offence, without recourse being had to the one mode of settlement—to wit, the Proceeding on confession of guilt—may be settled by the other two modes—to wit, by the Proceeding in Presence, and by the Proceeding by covering over as with grass?" he should be told, "Yes, it can." If he should say, "How may that be?" the answer should be as follows:

'If while the Bhikkhus are continuing in quarrels (&c., as in chapter 13, §§ 1, 2, and 3, down to the end).

'This, O Bhikkhus, is called a legal question that has been settled. And how has it been settled? By the Proceeding in Presence, and by the Proceeding by the covering over as with grass.

'And what therein belongs to the Proceeding in Presence? The presence (&c., as in § 16, down to) And what therein is the presence of the particular person? He who confesses, and he to whom the confession is made¹, both are present. This is the presence of the particular individual in such a case.

'And what therein belongs to the Proceeding by covering over as with grass? The carrying out of, the accomplishment of, the proceeding by, the performance of, the acceptance of, the pacification of the official act (the Kamma) by the Proceeding by covering over as with grass. That is what belongs therein to the Proceeding by covering over as with grass.

¹ This refers to the technical term of the Proceeding in question, tiṇavatthārakena deseyyam (IV, 13, 2); and the singular of course includes the plural, as the confession usually took place before a number of Bhikkhus.

‘When a legal question, O Bhikkhus, has been thus settled, if a disputant re-open the question, such re-opening is a Pākittiya. If one who has conveyed his consent complain of the decision, such complaint is a Pākittiya.

34. ‘By how many modes of settlement is a legal question arising out of business settled? A legal question arising out of business is settled by one mode of settlement only—to wit, by the Proceeding in Presence.’

End of the Fourth Khandhaka, on the Settlement of Legal Questions.

FIFTH KHANDHAKA.

ON THE DAILY LIFE OF THE BHIKKHUS.

1.

1. Now at that time the Blessed One was staying at Râgagaha, in the Bamboo Grove, in the Kalandaka Nivâpa. And at that time the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus, when bathing, used to rub¹ their bodies—thighs, and arms, and breast, and back—against wood. The people were annoyed, murmured, and became indignant, saying, ‘How can the Sakyaputtiya Samanas do so, like wrestlers, boxers, or shampooers?’ The Bhikkhus heard the people so murmuring, &c. ; and they told the matter to the Blessed One.

Then the Blessed One, on that occasion and in that connection, having convened a meeting of the Bhikkhu-saṃgha, asked the Bhikkhus : ‘Is this true, O Bhikkhus, what they say, that the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus, when bathing, rub (&c., as before)?’

‘It is true, Lord.’

¹ Ugghamseti. The simple verb occurs below, V, 9, 2, 4, X, 10, 2, and at Gâtaka, vol. i, p. 190. It is the Sanskrit root gharsh.

² On malla-mu//hikâ Buddhaghosa merely says mu//hika-mallâ. His note on gâma-poddavâ (already given by H. O. at p. 315 of the edition to the text) says, ‘town’s people given to adorning themselves by painting their skin’ (on which compare below, V, 2, 5). But it is difficult to see how that fits in with the connection here.

The Blessed Buddha rebuked them, saying, 'This is improper, O Bhikkhus (&c., as usual, see I, 1, 2, down to the end).' And when he had rebuked them, and had delivered a religious discourse, he addressed the Bhikkhus, and said: 'A Bhikkhu, when bathing, is not, O Bhikkhus, to rub his body against wood. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

2. Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus, when bathing, used to rub their bodies—thighs, and arms, and breast, and back—against a pillar—against a wall (&c., as in last section, down to the end).

3. Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus used to bathe on an Attāna (a sort of shampooing stand¹). The people (&c., as before). The Bhikkhus (&c., as before). Then the Blessed One (&c., as before, down to) addressed the Bhikkhus, and said: 'You are not to bathe, O Bhikkhus, on an Attāna. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

[Paragraphs similar in every respect to the last follow as to

Using a *Gandhabba-hatthaka*² when bathing.

Using a *Kuruvindaka-sutti*³ when bathing.

Rubbing their bodies, when under water, up against each other⁴.

¹ So Buddhaghosa loc. cit.

² A wooden instrument in the shape of a hand, which was first covered with chunam (fine lime), and then rubbed over the body. See Buddhaghosa's note at p. 315 of H. O.'s edition of the text.

³ Apparently a string of beads which was first covered with the chunam made from Kuruvindaka stone (a ruby-coloured stone), and then held at both ends and rubbed over the body. See Buddhaghosa's note loc. cit.

⁴ As Buddhaghosa, loc. cit., explains this by 'rubbing their

Using a Mallaka¹ when bathing.]

4. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu had the scab, and he could not bathe with comfort without a Mallaka¹.

They told the matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, to a sick man the use of a Mallaka not (artificially) made².’

5. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu who was weak through old age was not able to shampoo his own body.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of an Uk-kāsika³.’

Now at that time the Bhikkhus, (fearing to offend against these rules,) were afraid to shampoo one another.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the ordinary mode of shampooing with the hand⁴.’

2.

1. Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus bodies up against each other⁽¹⁾, vigayha has here probably nothing to do with gâh, but is simply vigrihya.

¹ A kind of back-scratcher, made according to Buddhaghosa, loc. cit., by placing together, by the roots, hooks made of the teeth of crocodiles (makara-dantaka; see V, 11, 6; VI, 3, 2), which had previously been split. Such hooks of split crocodiles' teeth are mentioned in the text itself below, V, 9, 2; and pins or hooks made of nâga's teeth at V, 9, 5, and VI, 3, 5 (nâga-dantaka), and V, 11, 7 (nâga-danta).

² Buddhaghosa, loc. cit., makes this phrase mean only ‘made of teeth that had not been previously split.’

³ Buddhaghosa, loc. cit., explains this word by vattavaṭṭi; which is to us equally unintelligible.

⁴ Pudhu-pāṇikan ti hattha-parikammam vuttati. Tasmā sabbesam hatthena piṭṭhi-parikammam kâtum vaṭṭati (B.).

used to wear ear-rings¹, and ear-drops², and strings of beads for the throat, and girdles of beads³, and bangles⁴, and necklaces⁵, and bracelets, and rings.

The people murmured, &c. . . . The Bhikkhus heard, &c. . . . They told the Blessed One (&c., as in V, 1, 1, down to) he addressed the Bhikkhus, and said :

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to wear any of these things. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata.’

2. [A similar paragraph concluding]

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to wear long hair. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, hair that is two months old, or two inches long.’

3. [Similar paragraph concluding]

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to smooth⁶ the hair

¹ Vallikâ ti kannato nikkhanta-mutt-olambakâdinam etam adhi-vaṭanam. Na kevalaṇ ka vallikâ eva, yam kiṇṇi kanna-pilandhanam antamaso tāla-pannam pi na vaṭati (B.). Compare sata-vallikam at V, 29, 4.

² Pāmaṅga. The meaning of which is not clear from Buddhaghosa's note loc. cit. It occurs also at Dipavamsa XII, 1, and below in Buddhaghosa's note on maddavina at V, 29, 2 (twice).

³ Kaṭi-suttakam. This is not mentioned in the similar paragraph at V, 29, 2, where all special kinds of girdles are enumerated. It is forbidden below to the Bhikkhunīs at X, 16.

⁴ Ovaṭṭika. This word is explained by Buddhaghosa as the same as valayam. Ovaṭṭiya occurs, apparently in a different sense, at Mahāvagga VII, 1, 5, and the present word in Buddhaghosa on sata-vallikam at V, 29, 4.

⁵ Kāyura, on which Buddhaghosa, loc. cit., merely says that the meaning of this, and of the following words, is evident. But the Gātaka commentary (Fausböll III, 437, 14) says kāyūran ti givāya pilandhana-pasāḍhanam.

⁶ Osāṇheti. Compare the Sanskrit ślakṣhṇayati. The art of hair-dressing had, at the time when the Kullavagga was comwith a comb, or with a smoothing instrument shaped like a snake's hood¹, or with the hand used as such an instrument², or with pomade³, or with hair-oil of beeswax³. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

4. [Similar paragraph concluding]

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to look at the image of your faces in a looking-glass, or a bowl of water⁴. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu had a sore in his face. He asked the Bhikkhus what kind of a sore he had. 'Such and such a kind of sore,' replied they. He did not believe what they said. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, on account of a disease, to look at your faces in a looking-glass, or in a bowl of water.'

5. Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus (&c., down to) posed, been already carried to a high state of efficiency in the valley of the Ganges, as may reasonably be concluded from the numerous kinds of head-dresses figured in bas-relief on some of the oldest Buddhist sculptures.

¹ Phañakenā ti dantamayādisu yena kenaṭi (B.).

² Hattha-phañakenā ti hatthen' eva phaṇaka-kikkam karonti, aṅgulīhi osañhenti (B.). It is clear from this last explanation that the phaṇaka was a kind of very primitive brush, but without bristles. In passing the fingers through the hair the fingers are naturally held separate, slightly forward, and stiff—precisely as one would hold them if one wished to imitate the hood of a cobra. To make a real brush with bristles was evidently beyond the mechanical appliances of those times, or such an article would certainly have been mentioned in this connection.

³ On the use of Telaka, compare Mahāvagga VI, 13, 1, and Sittha-telaka at Kullavagga IV, 3, 1.

⁴ Compare Kullavagga X, 10, 4.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to anoint your faces, nor to rub (ointment, &c.) into your faces, nor to put chunam on your faces, nor to smear red arsenic on your faces, nor to paint your bodies, nor to paint your faces¹.’

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu had disease in his eyes. They told the matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, on account of disease, to anoint your faces.’

6². Now at that time there was a festival on the mountain-top³ at Rāgagaha; and the K/abbaggiya Bhikkhus went to see it.

The people murmured, were annoyed, and became indignant, saying, ‘How can the Sakyaputtiya Samanas go to see dancing, and singing, and music, like those who are still enjoying the pleasures of the world?’ And they told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to go to see dancing, or singing, or music. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata.’

¹ All these practices are seriatim forbidden to the Bhikkhuns also in Kullavagga X, 10, 3.

² The following section recurs, almost word for word, of the Bhikkhuns, in the Bhikkhunī-vibhaṅga, Pāṭiṭṭiya X (Sutta-vibhaṅga, vol. ii, p. 267).

³ Giragga-samagga. Compare Dīpavamsa XXI, 32, and Mahāvamsa, p. 214, line 2. It occurs also in the Introductory Story in the Sutta-vibhaṅga on the 37th Pāṭiṭṭiya, and Buddha-ghosa there explains it as follows: Giragga-samaggo ti girimhi agga-samaggo girissa vā agga-dese samaggo. He is evidently in doubt about the word, which is probably connected with ancient local worship or custom, a worship in high-places, as little allied to Vedic Brahmanism as it was to Buddhism.

3.

1. Now at that time the K/abbaggiya Bhikkhus used to sing the Dhamma with the abrupt transitions of song-singing.

The people murmured, were annoyed, and became indignant, saying, 'How can the Sakyaputtiya Samanas [do so]?' The Bhikkhus heard (&c., as usual, down to) he addressed the Bhikkhus, and said :

'These five dangers, O Bhikkhus, befall him who sings the Dhamma with the abrupt¹ transitions of song-singing.—He himself becomes captivated with respect to the sound thereof.—Other people become captivated with respect to the sound thereof.—The laymen are shocked.—The meditation of one who strains after accuracy in the sound is broken.—The common people fall into heresy².—These five dangers, O Bhikkhus, befall him who sings the Dhamma with the abrupt transitions of song-singing. The Dhamma is not, O Bhikkhus, to be sung [in that manner]. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata.'

2. Now at that time the Bhikkhus were afraid to make use of intoning³. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to intone.'

¹ Âyatakena gîta-ssarena. Compare âyataken'eva papâto at Kullavagga IX, 1, 3.

² Probably this is supposed to result because dhamma being sung and not said is not intelligible to them—a complaint often made against the singing of prayers among Protestant Christians. On pakkhimâ ganatâ, compare the closing words of V, 21, 2; and on the rest of the phrase, Puggala III, 10, 14. The translation of sarakuttim is also very doubtful.

³ Sara-bhaññam. So in the Mahāvagga we hear that Sona

4.

1. Now at that time the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus used to wear woollen cloth with long fleece to it¹.

The people murmured . . . (&c., down to) They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to wear woollen cloth with long fleece to it. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

5.

1. Now at that time the mangoes were ripe in the park of Seniya Bimbisāra, the king of Magadha. And Seniya Bimbisāra, the king of Magadha, had given command, saying, 'Let the venerable ones have as much fruit as they like.' Then the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus plucked even the young fruits and ate them.

Now Seniya Bimbisāra, the king of Magadha, wanted a mango; and he gave orders, saying, 'Go, intoned before the Buddha a chapter from the Sutta Nipāta. The expression there used is sarena abhāsi, of which our word is used as the verbal noun, the roots bhaṇ and bhās being not only synonymous but interchangeable. (See, for instance, Vin. Pit. vol. iv, p. 353.) Perhaps 'recitative' would be a good rendering. I have several times heard the Dhamma thus recited by living Buddhists in accordance with the traditional interpretation of this passage, and their Sara-bhaṇṇam was precisely like the intoning of prose passages as practised in our cathedral churches (Rh. D.).

¹ Bāhira-lomim-unnim. Literally, 'with the fleece outside.' Compare Mahāvagga V, 10, 4, and the Magghima Sīla, § 5 (p. 193 of Rh. D.'s 'Buddhist Suttas').

my good men, to the park, and bring me hither a mango.'

'Even so, Lord,' said the men in assent to Seniya Bimbisāra, the king of Magadha: and they went to the park, and said to the park-keepers, 'Our lord, good friends, has need of a mango. Give us one!'

'There are no mangoes, Sirs. The Bhikkhus have plucked even the young ones, and eaten them.'

Then those men told the matter to Seniya Bimbisāra, the king of Magadha, and he said: 'The mangoes have been well used, my good men, by the venerable ones. Notwithstanding it is moderation that has been exalted by the Blessed One.'

The people murmured, were shocked, and were indignant, &c., saying, 'How can the Sakyaputtiya Samanas, knowing no moderation, use up the king's mangoes?' The Bhikkhus heard those men murmuring, shocked, and indignant. Then those Bhikkhus told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to eat mangoes. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

2. Now at that time it was the turn of a certain multitude to provide the Saṃgha with a meal. Mango-peal was put into the curry. The Bhikkhus, fearing to offend, would not partake of it.

'Take it, O Bhikkhus, and eat. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to eat the peal of the mango.'

Now at that time it was the turn of a certain multitude to provide the Saṃgha with a meal. They did not get so far as to make (curry with) the peal, but went about in the dining-hall with whole mangoes. The Bhikkhus, fearing to offend, would not accept them.

'Take them, O Bhikkhus, and eat. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to eat fruit which has become allowable to Samanas in any one of these five ways—when it has been injured by fire¹—or by sword²—or by nails—when it has not yet had any seed in it—and fifthly, when it has no more seed in it³. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to eat fruit which has become allowable to Samanas in any one of these five ways.'

64.

1. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu died of the bite of a snake. They told the matter to the Blessed One.

¹ Buddhaghosa gives in the Samanta Pāsādikā on the 11th Pāṭiṭiya the following explanations of these terms. Aggi-parigītan ti agginā parigītam abhibhūtam daddham phuṭhan ti attho. The reading parigītam is correct and should be inserted in the text for parikītam.

² Sāttha-parigītan ti sātthena parigītam abhibhūtam khinnaṃ viddham vā ti attho. Esa nayo nakha-parigīte (B., loc. cit.).

³ These last two clauses have already occurred at Mahāvagga VI, 21. The principle of the injunction throughout its five divisions is one and the same—the seed, or the capacity of fructification, must either have never existed, or have passed away, or have been destroyed.

⁴ This ancient legend has been expanded into a Gātaka story, under the title of Khandha-vatta Gātaka, No. 203 in Professor Fausbøll's edition (vol. ii, pp. 144–148), in which recur all the verses here given as a snake-charm. The names of the serpents are derived from the ancient mythology, and are not to be supposed to refer to actual breeds of real snakes. Below, Kullavagga VI, 2, 5, where a Bhikkhu is bitten by a snake, the simple precaution enjoined is the use of a higher bedstead.

‘ Now surely, that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, had not let his love flow out over the four royal breeds of serpents! Had he done so, he would not die of the bite of a snake. And which are the four royal breeds of serpents? The Virûpakkhas are a royal breed. The Erâpathas are a royal breed. The Khabyâputtas are a royal breed. The Kanhâgotamakas are a royal breed. Now surely that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, had not let his love flow out over the four royal breeds of serpents! Had he done so, he would not die of the bite of a snake. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to make use of a safeguard for yourselves for your security and protection, by letting your love flow out over the four royal breeds of serpents. And thus, O Bhikkhus, are you to do so.

“ I love Virûpakkhas, the Erâpathas I love.

“ I love Khabyâputtas, the Kanhâgotamakas I love.

“ I love live things that have no feet, the bipeds too I love.

“ I love four-footed creatures, and things with many feet.

“ Let no footless thing do hurt to me, nor thing that has two feet.

“ Let no four-footed creature hurt, nor thing with many feet.

“ Let all creatures, all things that live, all beings of whatever kind, “ Let all behold good fortune¹, and let none fall into sin.

¹ This phrase occurs in the passage at Mahâ-parinibbâna Sutta I, 31, by which Buddhaghosa is so much perplexed.

“Infinite is the Buddha, infinite the Truth, infinite the Order. Finite are creeping things; snakes, scorpions and centipedes, spiders and lizards, rats and mice.

“Made is my safeguard, made my defence. Let living things retreat,

“Whilst I revere the Blessed One, the Buddhas seven supreme¹.”

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to let blood².’

7.

1. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu, tormented by distaste (for meditation, &c.), castrated himself³. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘When one thing wanted cutting off, O Bhikkhus, that foolish fellow has cut off another! You are not, O Bhikkhus, to castrate yourselves. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a thullaṅkāya.¹

¹ This is only one of the many passages from which it is evident that in the oldest Buddhism only the seven Buddhas, from Vipassī down to Gotama inclusive, were known by name to the members of the Buddhist community. Compare Rh. D.’s ‘Hibbert Lectures, 1881,’ p. 142. It is nevertheless probable that, with their ideas as to the infinite number of worlds which had succeeded one another in the past, they considered that the number of previous Buddhas had also been infinite.

² This last injunction, which comes in here so tamely, is omitted in the Gātaka story, and is merely a hook on which to hang an excuse for introducing this ancient and evidently favourite prescription into the Vinaya. That it is quite out of place is sufficiently evident from the fact that it has already been laid down in identical terms in the Mahāvagga VI, 14, 4, where it is found in its natural connection.

³ Anabhiratiyā pīlito attano āṅgaḡātam kkhindi. This anabhirati is constantly referred to, and always as the result of falling in love, or in connection with sexual desire.

8¹.

1. Now at that time the Setthi of Râgagaha had acquired a block² of sandal-wood of the most precious sandal-wood flavour. And the Setthi of Râgagaha thought, 'How would it be if I were to have a bowl carved out of this block of sandal-wood, so that the chips³ shall remain my property, and I can give the bowl away?' And the Setthi of Râgagaha had a bowl turned out of that block of sandal-wood, and put it in a balance, and had it lifted on to the top of a bamboo⁴, and tying that bamboo at the top of a succession of bamboos, he let it be known, saying, 'If any Samana or Brahman be an Arahat and possessed of Iddhi, let him get down the bowl. It is a gift to him!'

Then Pûrana Kassapa went to the Setthi of Râgagaha, and said to him, 'I, O householder, am

¹ A Burmese version of the following legend is translated by Bishop Bigandet in his 'Legend of the Burmese Buddha,' vol. ii, pp. 212-216 (Third Edition).

² Kandana-gaṇḥikâ uppannâ hotî ti kandana-ghaṇḥikâ uppannâ hoti (B.). Compare gaṇḥikâ at Gâtaka I, 150 = gaṇḍikâ at ibid. II, 124, and our note below on that word at V, 29, 3.

³ Lekham. It is clear from V, 9, 2, below, and Buddha-ghosa's note there, that likhitum is used in the sense of 'to plane' or 'to adze' wood or metal; and the Sinhalese MSS. read here likham instead of lekham. It cannot be 'to turn,' as the turning lathe is quite a modern invention.

⁴ A similar proceeding is related of a Bhikkhu at 24, 1.

an Arahāt and possessed of Iddhi. Give me the bowl.'

'If, Sir, you are an Arahāt and possessed of Iddhi, let your reverence get down the bowl!'

Then Makkhali Gosāla, and Agita Kesa-kambālī, and Pakudha Kakkāyana, and Saṅgaya Belatthi-putta, and Nigantha Nāta-putta went severally to the Setthi of Rāgagaha, [and preferred the same request, and received the same reply.]

Now at that time the venerable Mahā Moggallāna and the venerable Pindola Bhāradvāja, having dressed themselves early in the morning, went into Rāgagaha, duly bowled and robed, for alms. And the venerable Pindola Bhāradvāja said to the venerable Mahā Moggallāna: 'The venerable Mahā Moggallāna is both an Arahāt and possessed of Iddhi. Go, friend Moggallāna, and fetch down this bowl, for this bowl belongs to thee.'

'The venerable Pindola Bhāradvāja also is both an Arahāt and possessed of Iddhi. Go, friend Bhāradvāja, and fetch down the bowl, for this bowl belongs to thee.'

Then the venerable Pindola Bhāradvāja, rising up in the air, took the bowl, and went thrice round Rāgagaha (in the air). And at that time the Setthi of Rāgagaha stood in his dwelling-place with his wife and children, and holding up his clasped hands in reverent salutation, he exclaimed, 'May the venerable Bhāradvāja be pleased to descend upon our dwelling-place.' And the venerable Bhāradvāja descended into his dwelling-place. Then the Setthi of Rāgagaha took the bowl from the hands of the venerable Bhāradvāja, and filled it with costly food, and presented it to the venerable Bhāradvāja. And the venerable Bhâradvâga took the bowl, and departed to his Ârâma.

2. Now the people heard, 'The venerable Pindola Bhâradvâga, they say, has got down the Râgagaha Setthi's bowl.' And those people, with shouts loud and long, followed in the steps of Pindola Bhâradvâga. And the Blessed One heard the shouts loud and long, and on hearing them he asked the venerable Ânanda, 'What now, Ânanda, does this so great shouting mean?'

'The venerable Pindola Bhâradvâga, Lord, has got down the Râgagaha Setthi's bowl; and the people thereof are following in his steps with shouts loud and long.'

Then the Blessed One, on that occasion and in that connection, convened a meeting of the Bhikkhu-Samgha, and asked Pindola Bhâradvâga, 'Is it true, as they say, that you, Bhâradvâga, have got down the Râgagaha Setthi's bowl?'

'It is true, Lord.'

The Blessed Buddha rebuked him, saying, 'This is improper, Bhâradvâga, not according to rule, unsuitable, unworthy of a Samana, unbecoming, and ought not to be done. How can you, Bhâradvâga, for the sake of a miserable wooden pot, display before the laity the superhuman quality of your miraculous power of Iddhi? Just, Bhâradvâga, like a woman who displays herself for the sake of a miserable piece of money¹, have you, for the sake of a miserable wooden pot displayed before the laity the superhuman quality of your miraculous power of Iddhi. This will not conduce, Bhâradvâga, either to the conversion of the unconverted, or to the increase of the converted; but rather to those who have not been converted remaining unconverted, and to the turning back of those who have been converted.'

¹ Mâsaka-rûpassa. On the mâsaka, see Rh. D.'s 'Ancient Coins and Measures, &c.,' p. 13. It is evident from the use of the word rûpa here that stamped pieces of money were known in the valley of the Ganges as early as the time when the Kulla-

And when he had rebuked him, and had delivered a religious discourse¹, he addressed the Bhikkhus, and said: 'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to display before the laity the superhuman power of Iddhi. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa². Break to pieces, O Bhikkhus, that wooden bowl; and when you have ground it to powder, give it to the Bhikkhus as perfume for their eye ointments³. And you are not, O Bhikkhus, to use wooden bowls. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa⁴.'

9.

1. Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus used to use bowls of various kinds, made of gold and silver.

The people murmured (&c., as usual, down to) They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to use bowls made vagga was composed. The word occurs also below at Kullavagga XII, 1, 1.

¹ See Kullavagga I, 1, 2.

² Compare the 4th Pârâgika.

³ The use of sandal-wood for this purpose is allowed by the closing words of Mahāvagga VI, 11.

⁴ This injunction is repeated below in the summary at V, 37.

of gold, or made of silver, or set with jewels, or made of beryl (*ve/uriya*¹), or made of crystal, or made of copper, or made of glass², or made of tin, or made of lead, or made of bronze. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, bowls of two kinds,—those made of iron, and those made of clay.'

2. Now at that time the support at the bottom of the bowls wore out³.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to use circular (pieces of metal) as the supports for your bowls.'

Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus used to have various kinds of circular supports to their bowls,—silver ones, and gold ones.

The people murmured (&c., down to) They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to have various kinds of circular supports to your bowls. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, two kinds of circular supports to your bowls,—tin ones, and lead ones.’

¹ It is clear from verses 192–196 of the 13th chapter of the Rāga-nighaṇṭu, written by Narahari of Kashmir in the thirteenth century A. D., that at that time Vaidūrya meant 'cat's-eye.' But it is uncertain whether that was the only meaning of the word ve/uriya at the time when this passage was composed. (See especially V. 124, p. 25, of Dr. Richard Garbe's edition in his work, 'Die Indischen Mineralien,' Leipzig, 1882.) See also Professor Max Müller's interesting note at p. 266 of his 'What can India teach us?'

² Kākamayo. There was probably no glass in our modern sense of the word when the Kullavagga was written. But kāka is a silicious earth, and some sort of glass-like earthenware may very well have been in use. The phrase has already occurred, together with all the others in this passage, at Mahāvagga V, 8, 3, of foot-coverings, but is omitted in the list at Khudda Sikkhā V. 10.

³ Ghaṃsīyati. Literally, 'were rubbed.' See below, § 3, and our note below on V, 9, 2, 4.

The thick circular supports could not be inserted¹.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to shape them² (until they get to be the right size to fit in)³.’

They would not stay in (?)⁴.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to split little pieces of crocodiles’ teeth (to fit them in with)⁵.’

Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus had painted circular linings to the bottoms of their bowls, with painted figures scattered over them, or painted in patches of colour⁶, and they used to walk about the streets exhibiting them.

People murmured (&c., down to) They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to have painted circular supports to the bottoms of your bowls, covered

¹ Akkhūpiyanti. On the use of this word, compare Mahāvagga VIII, 14, 1, where it is used of inserting a slip of cloth in a torn garment.

² See our note above on V, 8, 1. Buddhaghosa says here likhitun ti tanu-karaṇ-atthāy’ etaṃ vuttam. The ‘shaping’ may be by carving, adzing, or planing.

³ Compare above, V, 8, 1, and see Buddhaghosa’s note at p. 316 of the edition of the text.

⁴ The reading is corrupt; and therefore this rendering is merely conjectural. See H. O.’s note at p. 316 of his edition of the text.

⁵ On these split crocodiles’ teeth, see our note above on V, 1, 4.

⁶ Rūpakokinnāni bhāti-kamma-katāni. Buddhaghosa has nothing on these words. On the second, see below, VI, 2, 7, and H. O.’s note on that passage at p. 321 of the edition of the text. It is most probable that the reading in both passages should be bhatti-kamma, ‘patchwork,’ as further explained in our note below on VI, 2, 7; and we have translated accordingly.

with figures, and painted in patches of colour. Whosoever shall do so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, only ordinary linings.'

3. Now at that time the Bhikkhus put away their bowls with water in them, and the bowls were split.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to put away your bowls with water in them. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I enjoin upon you, O Bhikkhus, to dry your bowls in the sunshine¹ before putting them away.'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus dried their bowls in the sunshine, with water in them; and the bowls became evil-smelling.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to dry your bowls in the sunshine with water in them. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to empty out the water², and then warm the bowls, before you put them away.'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus put their bowls away in a warm place; and the colour of the bowls was spoilt.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to put your bowls away in a warm place. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to dry your bowls for a short time in a warm place, and then to put them away.'

¹ Otâpetvâ. The word has already occurred in Mahāvagga I, 25, 16. Compare Khudda Sikkhâ V. 6.

² Vodakam katvâ. Vodakam bears, of course, the same relation to sa-udakam, used just before, as vagga does to samagga. The expression has occurred already at Mahāvagga I, 25, 13.

4. Now at that time a number of bowls were left in the open air without supports; and the bowls were turned over by a whirlwind¹, and broke.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of supports for your bowls (when they are left out).'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus put their bowls away at the edge of the sleeping-benches in the verandahs², and the bowls fell down and were broken.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to put your bowls away on the edge of the sleeping-benches in the verandah. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata.'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus put their bowls away on the edge of the Paribhanda³, and the bowls fell down and were broken.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to put your bowls away on the edge of the Paribhanda. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata.'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus turned their bowls upside down⁴ on the ground, and the lips wore out.

¹ Vāta-mandalikāya. So also in the next section and in the Bhikkhunī-vibhaṅga, Pāṭittiya 96. The reading at Gāṭaka I, 72 is vāta-maṇḍalam.

² Midhante. This word recurs below in VI, 2, 3, where see our note. Buddhaghosa's note is given at p. 317 of the edition of the text. See also Khudda Sikkhā V. 7.

³ Used of a house, this probably means a plastered flooring of scented earth or dried cowdung. See Kullavagga VI, 17, 1, and Buddhaghosa's note there. On the use of the word in tailoring, see Mahāvagga VII, 1, 5, VIII, 21. Buddhaghosa, loc. cit. (p. 317), uses the expression mattika-paribhanda-katāya-bhūmiyā.

⁴ Nikkugganti. See the use of this word at V, 20, 3.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a mat made of grass¹.’

The grass-mat was eaten by white ants.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a small cloth².’

The small cloth was eaten by the white ants.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a raised parapet(?) (on which to put your bowls)³.’

The bowls fell down from the parapet and were broken.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a wicker-work stand⁴.’

On the wicker-work stand the bowls wore out.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of bags to carry your bowls in.’

They had no shoulder-straps⁵.

¹ Tina-santhâarakam. That this word means a mat, and not a layer, of grass is clear from its use at Gâtaka I, 360, and below, V, 11, 3.

² Kolaka. The meaning of the word is doubtful, but see Mahāvagga VIII, 18. In the uddâna (at p. 143) the corresponding word is kola. See also below, VI, 3, 1, VI, 19, VI, 20, 2.

³ Patta-mâ/akam. Buddhaghosa says merely, ‘It should be made either of bricks or of wood.’ He confirms the reading of the text (with l as against Childers’s reading mâlako).

⁴ Patta-kandolikâ ti mahâ-mukha-kunda-santhânâ bhandakukkhâlikâ vukkati (B.). Kandola is a wicker-work basket; see Böhtlingk-Roth, sub voce.

⁵ See H. O.’s note on the reading here; and compare the table of contents to this chapter (at p. 143), where the reading amsa-baddham confirms the suggested alteration. If there were any

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a shoulder-strap (by which to carry the bag), or of a piece of string (by which to tie it on).'

5. Now at that time the Bhikkhus hung up their bowls on pins in the walls, or on hooks¹. The pins or hooks falling down, the bowls were broken.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to hang your bowls up. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus put their bowls down on a bed², or a chair; and sitting down thoughtlessly³ they upset them, and the bowls were broken.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to put your bowls on the bed, or on a chair. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus kept their bowls on their laps; and rising up thoughtlessly they upset them, and the bowls were broken.

further doubt it would be removed on comparing the closing words of Mahāvagga VI, 12, 4, which are identical with the present passage and contain the correct reading. The same remarks apply to other passages, where the same words occur below, V, 11, 5, V, 12, VI, 12, 3.

¹ The use of these appliances is formally allowed at VI, 3, 5.

² Mañña. Compare Rh.D.'s note at p. 277 of the 'Buddhist Birth Stories,' and Khuddha Sikkhā V. 7.

³ Sati-sammosā. The word occurs at Milinda-pañha (ed. Trenckner), p. 260. It must be connected with muṭṭha-sati, of which the Buddhist Sanskrit equivalent is mushita-smṛtiḥ (see Kathā Sarit Sāgara 56, 289). It is evident that Childers's original explanation of muṭṭha-sati from mūḥa was wrong, and that both words must be referred to the root mush, as he points out at p. 618 of his Dictionary.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to keep your bowls on your laps. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

Now at that time the Bhikkhus put their bowls down on a sunshade; and the sunshade being lifted up by a whirlwind, the bowls rolled over, and were broken.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to put your bowls down on a sunshade. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

Now at that time the Bhikkhus, when they were holding the bowls in their hands, opened the door¹. The door springing back the bowls were broken.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to open the door with your bowls in your hands. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

10.

1. Now at that time the Bhikkhus went on their round for alms, carrying water-jugs made out of gourds², or water-pots³.

¹ Kavâṭam paṇāmetvâ. The construction of doors is described in detail at V, 14, 3, with reference to the bath-house, and again at VI, 2. That paṇāmeti is to open, and not to shut, is clear from VIII, 1, 1, just as pattam paṇāmeti at VIII, 5, 2 is to uncover, disclose, the bowl. Compare Khuddha Sikkhâ V. 8.

² Tumba-kaṭāhan ti lāpu-kaṭāham vukkati (B.). Tumba is gourd, according to Böhtlingk-Roth. See Khuddha Sikkhâ V. 11.

³ Ghaṭi-kaṭāhan ti ghaṭi-kapālam (B.). The whole section is repeated in the text of each kind of vessel.

People murmured, were shocked, and indignant, saying, 'As the Titthiyas do.'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to go on your rounds for alms with water-jugs, or pots. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

2. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu, who had taken upon himself a vow to wear or use nothing except what he could procure from dust-heaps or cemeteries, went on his rounds for alms carrying a bowl made out of a skull. A certain woman saw him, and was afraid, and made an outcry¹, saying, 'O horror! This is surely a devil!'

People murmured, were shocked, and indignant, saying, 'How can the *Sakya*puttiya Samaṇas carry about bowls made out of skulls, as the devil-worshippers² do?'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to use bowls made out of skulls. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. And you are not, O Bhikkhus, to take a vow to wear or to use nothing except what you procure from dust-heaps or cemeteries. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

3. Now at that time the Bhikkhus carried out odd bits, and bones, and dirty water³ in their bowls.

People murmured, were shocked, and were indignant, saying, 'The very vessel out of which

¹ Vissaraṃ akāsi, on the use of which idiom see the passages quoted below, Kullavagga VIII, 1, 1.

² Pisāṭillikā. See below, 27, 5, and Mahāvagga III, 12, 3.

³ This list recurs in the Old Commentary on the 10th *Pāṭi*tiya in the Bhikkhunī-vibhaṅga. As an explanation of vighāsa, Buddhaghosa says here ukkhittodakānaṃ ti mukha-vikkhālanodakam.

these Sakyaputtiya Samanas eat, that they use as a waste-tub !'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to carry out odd bits, and bones, and dirty water in your bowls. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a waste-tub ¹.'

11.

1. Now at that time the Bhikkhus sewed their robes together after tearing the cloth with their hands ²; and the robes became jagged.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a blade and of a sheath (for the blade) made of felt ³.'

Now at that time a blade with a haft to it ⁴ had come into the possession of the Saṃgha.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

¹ Paṭiggaho. Slop-basin, waste-tub, 'receptacle' for odd bits. It is so used below at VIII, 4, 4.

² Vipâṭetvâ. The three MSS. read vipphâdetvâ, the same corrected to vipphâdetvâ, and vipphâmetvâ. M for L is a common mistake in Sinhalese MSS., and the correct reading may possibly be vipphâletvâ, if it is not vipphâṭetvâ, as suggested in H. O.'s note, vol. v, p. 259.

³ Namatakan ti satthaka-veṭhanakam pilotika-khandam (B.). The word occurs again below at V, 19, 1, V, 27, 1, and X, 10, 4 (where the nuns are forbidden to use it). Namata is felt; and nâmatika-aṅga, the wearing of felt, is inserted by some Sanskrit Buddhist writers in the list of Dhutaṅgas. (Burnouf, Introduction, &c., p. 306.)

⁴ Danda-satthakan ti vipphalikam vâ aññaṃ pi vâ yam kiṇṇi dandam yogetvâ kata-satthakam (B.). Compare danda-kaṭhinam at V, 11, 3, and danda-parissâvanam at V, 13, 3.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a blade with a haft to it.’

Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus used various kinds of long handles to their blades, made of silver, and made of gold.

People murmured (&c., as usual, down to) They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to use various kinds of handles to your blades. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of handles to your blades made of bone, or ivory, or horn, or of the naḷa reed, or of bamboo, or of hard wood, or of lac, or of the shells of fruit, or of bronze, or of the centre of the chank-shell¹.’

2. Now at that time the Bhikkhus sewed their robes with quills or bits of bamboo rind, and the robes were badly sewn.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of needles.’

The needles got blunted².

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a needle-case made of bamboo³.’

Even in the needle-cases the needles became blunt.

¹ This list is given in the Mahāvagga VI, 12, 1 (where see our notes), as the materials of which ointment-boxes may be made; and below, V, 11, 5, of thimbles.

² Kannakitā hontī ti malagga-kitā (B.). Mala may probably here mean ‘rust,’ if the needles were made of iron. Kannakitā, ‘spoiled,’ is used of plastered walls and the floors of a Vihāra at Mahāvagga I, 25, 15 = Kullavagga VIII, 1, 3; and pamsu-kitā occurs just below in our present passage. Compare also the note on vikannam in the following section.

³ Sūki-nāḷikam. On these needle-cases compare the Introductory Story to the 20th Gātaka. It is Pāṭittiya to have them made of ivory, horn, or bone. (80th Pāṭittiya, but they are there called Sūki-gḥaram.)

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to fill the cases with chunam ¹.

Even in the chunam the needles became blunt.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to fill the cases with barley-meal ².’

Even in the barley-meal the needles became blunt.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of powdered stone ³.’

Even in the powdered stone the needles became blunt.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to mix (the powder) with beeswax ⁴.’

The powder still did not cohere.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to mix sipâtika gum ⁵ with the powder ⁶.’

3. Now at that time the Bhikkhus sewed their robes together by planting stakes here and there, and uniting them (with strings). The robes became out of shape ⁷.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a Kathina ⁸,

¹ Kinnena kunnena (B.).

² Satthuyâ ti halidda-missakena pittha-kunnena (B.).

³ Saritakan ti pāsâna-kunnam vukkati (B.).

⁴ Madhu-sitthakena sâretun ti madhu-sitthakena makkhetum (B.).

⁵ The use of this gum for medicine purposes is allowed at Mahāvagga VI, 7, where see our note. The present use is again mentioned below, V, 27, 1.

⁶ Sarita-sibbâ/ikan ti madhu-sitthaka-pilotikam (B.).

⁷ Vikannam hoti. See the note on this expression at Mahāvagga VI, 21, 1. The ‘robes’ were lengths of cloth, and ‘out of shape’ (vikannam) must mean either that one side was larger than the other, so that each corner (kanno) was not a right angle, or perhaps that each edge (kanno) was not straight.

⁸ What Kathina may mean in this connection is not exactly and that you are to sew the robes together after tying down Kaṭhina-strings here and there.'

They spread out the Kaṭhina on uneven (ground), and the Kaṭhina fell to pieces¹.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to spread out the Kaṭhina on uneven (ground). Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata.'

They spread out the Kaṭhina on the ground, and the Kaṭhina became dirty.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a grass-mat.'

The edge of the Kaṭhina decayed through age.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to strengthen it by a doubling or a binding along the edge².

The Kaṭhina was not large enough³.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a danda- clear to us, but it is evidently a sort of framework, or bench, for the tailors to lay out their work upon. Our notes above on the 1st Nissaggiya and on Mahāvagga VII, 1, 3, refer to a different and secondary use of the word in the Kaṭhina ceremonies—so-called doubtless because the Kaṭhina-dussa (the supply of cloth to be dyed, sewn, and made up into robes, and distributed, on one and the same day) was to be so sewn with the aid of the Kaṭhina here referred to. Buddhaghosa says here, Kaṭhinan ti nissenī pi tattha attharita-katasāraka-kilaññānam aññataram pi kaṭhinam vukkati yāya dupaṭṭa-kīvaram sibbenti kaṭhine kīvaram pi bandhanti. On Dupaṭṭa, see Mahāvagga VIII, 14, 1.

The use of obandhitvā (in reference to the Kaṭhina), in opposition to sambandhitvā (in reference to the mere stakes), is worthy of notice.

¹ Paribhiggaṭi. Perhaps we should translate, 'did not hold together.' See the last section.

² Anuvāṭam paribhandam. See Mahāvagga VII, 1, 5, VIII, 21, Kullavagga V, 9, 4, VI, 17, 1, XI, 1, 14, and our notes there.

³ Kaṭhinam na ppahotī ti dighassa bhikkhuno pamāṇena katam kaṭhinam tattha rassassa bhikkhuno kīvaram patthariya-mānam na ppahoti anto yeva hoti (B.).

*kaṭhina*¹, of a *pidalaka*¹, of a ticket, of binding strings, and of binding threads²; and that you sew your robes together after binding them therewith.'

The interstices between the threads became irregular in length³.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of little marks (of the leaf of the talipot palm, or such-like things)⁴.'

The threads became crooked.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of false threads (laid along the cloth to show where it is to be cut or sewn)⁵.'

4. Now at that time the Bhikkhus got on to the Kaṭhina with unwashed feet, or wet feet, or with their shoes on⁶, and the Kaṭhina was soiled.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to get on to the Kaṭhina with unwashed feet, or with wet feet, or with your shoes on. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata.'

5. Now at that time the Bhikkhus, when sewing

¹ On these terms, which we do not attempt to translate, see Buddhaghosa's notes as quoted by H. O. at p. 317 of the edition of the text. The first seems to be a Kaṭhina with a cross-bar, but danda at V, 11, 1, and V, 13, 3, means handle.

² Vinandhana-raggum vinandhana-suttakam. See Buddhaghosa's notes loc. cit., and compare Mahāvagga V, 11.

³ Visamā honti ti kâṭi khuddakâ honti kâṭi mahantâ (B.). Sutta here probably means those threads or strings just referred to by which the stuff was to be tied on to the Kaṭhina.

⁴ Kaḷimbhakam: so explained by Buddhaghosa, loc. cit.

⁵ Mogha-suttakam. Buddhaghosa says, 'the making of a mark with a green thread, as carpenters do on wood with a black thread.' Compare also our notes 2 and 3 on Mahāvagga VII, 1, 5.

⁶ The whole section is repeated in the text at length for each of these three cases.

their robes, held the stuff with their fingers, and their fingers were hurt.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a thimble¹.’

Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus used various kinds of thimbles,—gold ones, and silver ones.

People murmured, &c. The Bhikkhus heard, &c. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to use various kinds of thimbles. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, thimbles made of bone, or ivory, or horn, or of the na/a reed, or of bamboo, or of hard wood, or of lac, or of the shells of fruit, or of bronze, or of the centre of the chank-shell².’

Now at that time the needles, and scissors, and thimbles got lost.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a box or drawer³ in the workshop.’

They got crowded together in the workshop box.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a thimble bag (to carry the thimbles about in).’

They had no shoulder-strap.

¹ Paṭiggaho, ‘receptacle’ for the finger. See our note above on V, 10, 3, where the same word means a waste-tub. For other secondary uses of the word, see Gātaka I, 146, II, 9, 26. Buddhaghosa says here, paṭiggahan ti āṅguli-kosakam.

² So of ointment-boxes, Mahāvagga VII, 12, 1; and of scissors, above, V, 11, 1.

³ Āsevana-(sic)vitthakam nāma yam kiṇṇi pātī-kaṅgoṭakādi (B.).

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a shoulder-strap, or of a piece of string, to tie the bags on with¹.’

6². Now at that time the Bhikkhus, when sewing their robes in the open air, were distressed by heat and by cold.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a hall or of a shed for the Katthina.’

The Katthina hall had too low a basement, and it was inundated with water.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to make it with a high basement³.’

The facing (of the basement) fell in.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to line the basement with facing of three kinds⁴—brick facing, stone facing, or wooden facing.’

They found difficulty in getting up into it.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of stairs of three kinds—brick stairs, stone stairs, or wooden stairs.’

As they were going up them they fell off.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a balustrade⁵.’

¹ See our note above on V, 9, 4.

² The whole of this paragraph is repeated below, though not in the same order, of the Kaṅkama or cloister, and of the Gantāghara, or bath-house. (See V, 14, 2, 3.)

³ That is, to build it on a raised platform, the technical term for which is kāya.

⁴ See our note below on V, 14, 3. The whole passage recurs of the lining of a well at V, 16, 2, and of Vihâras themselves at VI, 3, 3.

⁵ Ālambana-bāham. At Mahâ-sudassana Sutta I, 59, there is Straw and plaster fell (from the walls and roof) into the Katthina-hall.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to first cover over (the walls and roof with skins¹), and then plaster them within and without. (And I allow the use of) whitewash, and blacking, and red colouring², and wreath-work, and creeper-work, and bone hooks, and cupboards³, and bamboos to hang robes on, and strings to hang robes on.’

7. Now at that time the Bhikkhus, when they had sewn the robes together, left the Katthina as it was, and went away; and the robes were eaten by rats and white ants.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to fold up the Katthina.’
The Katthina came to pieces.

a description of flights of stairs (sopâṇâ), each of which had thambhâ, evidently posts or banisters; sûkiyo, apparently cross-bars let in to these banisters; and unhîsam, either a head-line running along the top of the banisters, or a figure-head at the lower end of such a head-line. (See Rh. D.’s ‘Buddhist Suttas,’ p. 262.) This and the previous paragraphs are repeated below, V, 14, 2, of the Kaṅkama.

¹ See Mahāvagga V, 11, where the same technical term (ogumpheti) is used. Buddhaghosa’s note is given at p. 317 of the text. See also V, 14, 3, below.

² Geruka-parikammam. This reading, and not gerika, is confirmed by VI, 3, 1, VI, 17, 1, where the two previous words also occur. On this mode of preparing walls and floors, see our note below on VI, 20.

³ Pañka-paṭṭikam or -paṭṭhikam, a term of doubtful signification which recurs, together with all the previous words, in the Old Commentary on the 19th Pāṭṭiya. Compare pañka-prastha in B.R. The word is perhaps however connected with Sanskrit paṭṭikâ, as kela-pattikam at V, 21, 2 undoubtedly is. It occurs below, in a similar connection, at VI, 3, 1.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to fold up the Kathina in a cow-hide (?)¹.’

The Kathina got uncovered.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of strings to tie it up with.’

Now at that time the Bhikkhus went away, putting the Kathina up against the wall or a pillar; and the Kathina, falling over, was broken.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to hang it on a stake of the wall, or on a hook ².’

12.

1. Now the Blessed One, when he had stayed at Rāgagaha as long as he thought fit, set out on his journey toward Vesālī³.

Now at that time the Bhikkhus went along, carrying their needles and scissors and drugs in their bowls.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a bag to carry the drugs in ⁴.’

¹ Go-ghamsikāya. Compare pāda-ghamsani at 22. 1; and on the use of samharati in a similar connection, see VI, 2, 7.

² Nāga-dante. See the note on Mallaka at Kullavagga V, 1, 4.

³ This is merely introduced to show that the following rules or privileges in this and the next chapter (§§ 1, 2) were to be in force when the Bhikkhus were on a journey.

⁴ Neither here nor in V, 11, 5 are we to understand that the needles and scissors are to be carried in bags. They are mentioned in both passages merely to show the inconvenience of having no separate receptacles for the thimbles and the drugs.

They had no shoulder-strap.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a shoulder-strap¹, or of a string to tie the bags on with.’

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu tied his sandals on to his girdle, and then entered the village for alms². A certain Upāsaka, when saluting that Bhikkhu, knocked up against the sandals with his head. The Bhikkhu was annoyed; and when he had returned to the Ārāma, he told this matter to the Bhikkhus. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a bag to carry your sandals in.’

They had no shoulder-strap.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a shoulder-strap, or of a string to tie the bags on with.’

13.

1. Now at that time the water as they went along could not be drunk without breaking the rules³, as they had no strainers.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a strainer.’

The little cloth (that was used for a strainer) was not sufficient (to filter enough water for the whole party).

¹ See the note on V, 9, 4.

² He would require the sandals only when he came, in his journey, to rough places; not on the smooth, well-trodden, village paths.

³ The rule, that is, against destroying the life of living things.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a strainer fixed on to a ladle¹.’

Still the little cloth was not sufficient for the purpose.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a regulation water-pot².’

2. Now at that time two Bhikkhus were travelling along the high-road in the Kosala country. One of the Bhikkhus was guilty of some transgression. The other one said to him, ‘Do not, my friend, do such a thing. It is not becoming.’ The first one bore a grudge against him³. Afterwards the other Bhikkhu, being tormented with thirst, said to the Bhikkhu who bore the grudge, ‘Give me, friend, your strainer. I am going to drink some water.’ The Bhikkhu who bore the grudge would not give it to him. The other Bhikkhu died of thirst⁴. Then that Bhikkhu, when he had arrived at the Ârâma, told this matter to the Bhikkhus.

¹ Kaṭakkhu-parissāvanam nāma tīsu dandakesu vinandhitvā kaṭam (B.).

² Dhamma-karakam. Doubtless a water-pot with a strainer so fixed into it that a quantity of water could be filtered quickly. The word occurs at Mahāvamsa, p. 90, and below, VI, 21, 3.

³ So tasmim upanandhi. The Introductory Story in the Sutta-vibhaṅga on the 36th Pāṭṭiya is, so far, word for word the same as this section. Buddhaghosa there explains upanandhi by ganita-upanāho. See vol. iv, p. 359, of H. O.’s edition of the Vinaya Piṭaka. The Introductory Story to the 31st Gāṭaka is also based on a similar incident, and there the corresponding expression is vivādam akamsu. (Fausbøll’s Gāṭaka, vol. i, p. 198.)

⁴ In the Gāṭaka commentary this tragic result of the refusal is absent. The Bhikkhu who has no strainer merely drinks without straining. (Rh. D.’s ‘Buddhist Birth Stories,’ vol. i, p. 278.)

‘What then, Sir? when asked for your strainer, would you not lend it?’

‘It is even so, Sirs.’

Those Bhikkhus who were moderate were annoyed and vexed, and murmured, saying, ‘How can a Bhikkhu, when asked for his strainer, refuse to lend it?’ And they told this matter to the Blessed One.

Then the Blessed One on that occasion and in that connection (&c., as usual, see for instance in Kullavagga I, 1, 2, down to) addressed the Bhikkhus, and said :

‘A Bhikkhu who is on a journey is not, O Bhikkhus, to refuse to lend his strainer, when he is asked for it. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. And (a Bhikkhu who is) not provided with a strainer, O Bhikkhus, is not to undertake a journey. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. If there be no strainer nor regulation water-pot, the corner of the upper robe is to be adopted¹ for the purpose of straining before drinking.’

3. Now the Blessed One, journeying straight on, arrived in due course at Vesālī. And there at Vesālī the Blessed One lodged in the Mahāvana, in the Kûṭāgāra Hall.

Now at that time the Bhikkhus were engaged in building²; and the strainer did not act³.

¹ Adhi/hātabbo, that is, the Bhikkhu is to determine in his mind that that part of his robe is a strainer for the time.

² Navakammam karonti. On the use of this and allied idioms, see Gâtaka I, 92, line 22; Kullavagga I, 18, 1, VI, 5, 2; Bhikkhunī-vibhaṅga, Pārāgika I, 1; Indian Antiquary XI, 29; Senart's Kaṭṭhāyana, p. 189.

³ Na sammati, which is curious. For ‘did not suffice,’ the standing expression would be na ppahoti.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, the use of a double strainer¹.’

The double strainer did not act.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, the use of a filter².’

Now at that time the Bhikkhus were troubled³ by mosquitoes.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, the use of mosquito curtains⁴.’

14.

1. Now at that time at Vesālī a regular service of sweet food had been established, the laity taking the duty in turns. The Bhikkhus, eating the sweet food, became very sick with superfluity of humors in their body⁵.

Now Gīvaka Komārabhaṭṭha went to Vesālī on

¹ Danda-parissāvanam. Apparently a long box, both ends of which strain the water, which is poured into the middle by means of a pipe (dandaka). Buddhaghosa says, Danda-parissāvanan ti (sic; only one s) raganakānam khāra-parissāvanam viya katusu pādesu baddha-nisenikāya sākākam bandhitvā magghe dandake udakam āsiññitabbam. Tam ubhohi koṭṭhāsehi pūretvā parissāvati. Compare danda-satthakam and danda-kathinam, above, V, 11, 1, 3.

² Ottharakam nāma yam udaye ottharivā ghaṭakena udakam ganhanti. Tam hi katusu dandakesu vettham bandhitvā sabbe pariyante udakato moketvā magghe ottharivā ghaṭena udakam ganhanti (B.).

³ Ubbāḷhā. See Mahāvagga III, 9, 1-4, and Gāṭaka I, 300.

⁴ Makasa-kuṭikā ti kīvara-kuṭikā (B.). Literally, a ‘mosquito hut,’ the walls of which are to be of cloth.

⁵ Abhisannakāyā ti semhādi-dos’ussanna-kāyā (B.). This word has already occurred at Mahāvagga VI, 14, 7, where Buddhaghosa’s explanation is much the same. See also Mahāvagga VIII, 1, 30.

some business or other. And on seeing the Bhikkhus very sick with superfluity of humors, he went up to where the Blessed One was; and when he had come there, he saluted the Blessed One and took his seat on one side. And when so seated he said to the Blessed One: 'The Bhikkhus, Lord, are now very sick with superfluity of humors. It would be well if the Blessed One were to prescribe, Lord, for the Bhikkhus the use of the cloister¹ and of the bath-room². Thus will the Bhikkhus become convalescent.'

Then the Blessed One instructed, and aroused, and incited, and gladdened Givaka Komârabhakkā with religious discourse. And Givaka Komârabhakkā, so instructed, and incited, and aroused, and gladdened with religious discourse, arose from his seat and saluted the Blessed One, and keeping him on his right hand as he passed him, departed thence. And the Blessed One, on that occasion and in that connection, convened an assembly of the Bhikkhusamgha, and addressed the Bhikkhus, and said, 'I

¹ Kaṅkama. A straight piece of ground cleared and levelled for the purpose of walking up and down upon for exercise and meditation. See our note on this word at Mahāvagga V, 1, 14.

² Gantāghara. See our note above on Mahāvagga I, 25, 12. It was not ordinarily used for cold baths, which were taken in the rivers or tanks, but for a kind of hot-water bath, or perhaps steam bath, the exact mode of taking or administering which is not as yet certain. Several Bhikkhus took the bath at the same time, but it is not likely that they got into the water (though the expression uttarati is used, loc. cit., of their leaving the bath), as they scarcely would have made vessels large enough to contain a man. It rather seems that they sat on stools close to a large fire, and had water poured over them. The use of this kind of bath is forbidden to the Bhikkhunis at Kullavagga X, 27, 4.

prescribe, O Bhikkhus, the use of the cloister and of the bath-room.'

2. Now at that time the Bhikkhus walked up and down on a cloister on uneven ground; and their feet were hurt.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to make it level.'

The cloister had too low a basement, and was inundated with water¹.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to make it with a high basement.'

The facing of the basement fell in².

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of facing of three kinds—brick facing, stone facing, and wooden facing.'

They found difficulty in getting up into it.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of stairs of three kinds—brick stairs, stone stairs, and wooden stairs.'

As they were going up them, they fell off.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a balustrade.'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus, when walking up and down in the cloister, fell down.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to provide a railing³ for the cloister.'

¹ All the following paragraphs are the same as above, V, 11, 6, where see our notes.

² As we have pointed out above, in our note on Mahāvagga V, 1, 14, it is not probable that the Kaṅkama at first had a roof and stairs and balustrade. These were later improvements.

³ Vedikā. See Mahā-sudassana Sutta I, 60, and Rh. D.'s note there ('Buddhist Suttas,' p. 262), and below, VI, 2, 2.

Now at that time the Bhikkhus, when walking up and down in the open air, were distressed by heat and by cold.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a hall for the cloister¹.’

Straw and plaster fell (from the walls and roof) into the cloister-hall.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to first cover over (the walls and roof with skins), and then plaster them. (And I allow the use of) whitewash, and blacking, and red colouring, and wreath-work, and creeper-work, and bone hooks, and cupboards, and bamboos to hang robes on, and strings to hang robes on.’

3. [The whole of the above, from the basement down to the balustrade, is repeated of the hot-bath house.]

The bath house had no door.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a door, with door-posts and lintel², with hollows like a mortar (for the door to revolve in³), with projections to revolve in those hollows¹, with rings on the door for the bolt to work along in², with a block of wood fixed unto the edge of the door-post and containing a cavity for the bolt to go into (called the monkey's head³), with a pin⁴ (to secure the bolt by), with a connecting bolt⁵, with a key-hole⁶, with a hole for the string with which the door can be closed, and with a string for that purpose⁷.'

¹ Kaṅkamana-sālā, already referred to at Mahāvagga III, 5.

² Piṭṭha-saṃghāṭam. See Childers under saṃghāṭa, and the Samanta Pāsādikā on the 19th Pāṭittiya. Kavāṭa-piṭṭha occurs in Mahāvagga I, 25, 15, and in the Samanta Pāsādikā on Pāṭittiya 19 (compare upari-piṭṭhiti at Kullavagga VIII, 1, 1), and this and the two following phrases below, VI, 2, 1. Buddha-ghosa has nothing on them, either here or there; and they were probably therefore in quite common use even in his day. The whole of this paragraph recurs below, VI, 3, 7.

³ Udukkhalikam. Presumably the door had no hinges, but the upper and lower ends of one side projected into hollows prepared for them in the lintel and the threshold. This suggestion is confirmed by the connection in which these words are used at VI, 2, 1.

¹ Uttara-pâsakam. See the last note. Pâsaka recurs also in the next but one. Compare aggala-pâsaga in Âyâraṅga Sutta II, 1, 5, 2.

² Aggala-vaṭṭi nâma dvâra-bâhâye samappamâno yeva aggalatthambho vuḍḍati yattha tîni kattâri khiddâni katvâ sūhiyo denti (B.).

³ Kapi-sîsakam nâma dvâra-bâham vigghitva tattha pavesito aggala-pâsako vuḍḍati (B.). The word recurs in the Mahâ-parinibbâna Sutta V, 32, where it is said of Ânanda that he kapisîsakam âlambitvâ aṭṭhâsi, just as in the Mahâ-sudassana Sutta II, 24 it is said of the queen under similar circumstances that she dvâra-bâham âlambitvâ aṭṭhâsi. Buddhaghosa's commentary on the word in the former of these two passages is given by Rh. D. in his note at p. 95 of the 'Buddhist Suttas.'

⁴ Sūhikâ ti tattha (that is, kapi-sîsake) magghe khiddam katvâ pavesitâ (B.). Apparently a pin to pass through the monkey's head so as to secure the bolt in its place after it has been shot into the cavity. See the next note and below, VI, 2, 1.

⁵ Ghaṭikâ ti upari-yogitâ (B.). At Gâtaka I, 360 (compare Kullavagga IX, 1, 2), we are told of a man who dvârâni pidahanto sabba-dvâresu sūlighaṭikâdayo datvâ talam (sic, query tâlam) abhiruhitvâ tattha pi dvâram pidahitvâ nisîdi. As the principal bolt was probably called aggala (unless that were the name for the whole machinery), this was some smaller bolt. And in Kullavagga VIII, 1, 1 an instance is given of a man undoing the bolt (ghaṭikam ugghâ/etvâ) of an uninhabited vihâra, such as is referred to in VI, 2, 1.

⁶ Tâlakkhiddam. See the end of VI, 2, 1, and Childers under the word tâlo. Buddhaghosa says nothing. The word tâla occurs in the last note.

⁷ Âviññhana-kkhiddam âviññhana-raggum. These are said in VI, 2, 1 to be necessary because the door could not be put

The lower part of the wattle and daub wall¹ of the bath-room decayed (through damp).

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to face round the lower half of the wall (with bricks²).'

The bath-room had no chimney³.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a chimney.'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus made a fire-place in the middle of a small bath-room, and there was no room to get to (the bath).

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to make the fire-place at one side of a small bath-room, and in the middle of a large one⁴.'

The fire in the bath-room scorched their faces.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of clay to spread over your faces⁵.'

They moistened the clay in their hands.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a trough to moisten the clay in⁶.'

to, and doubtless have the meaning above assigned to them. Āviññi (or āviñgi?) at Sutta-vibhaṅga, Samghādisesa II, 4, 9, means he drew towards himself; and Āviññanā (āviñganā?), ibid. II, 2, 2, is used as an equivalent of ākaddhanā, which is much the same thing.

¹ Kudda-pādo. Compare Rh. D.'s note on Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta V, 41. The phrase recurs below of Vihāras at VI, 3, 4.

² Mandalikam kātun ti nika-vatthukam kinitum (B.). Kīnāti is the technical word for laying bricks one above another; the comment therefore means 'to line or face the lower part with bricks.' (Compare pokkharaniyo itthikāhi kinitum at Mahā-sudassana Sutta I, 58; Rh. D.'s 'Buddhist Suttas,' p. 262, 'to face the ponds with bricks or tiles;' and on facing a well below, V, 16, 2.)

³ Dhūma-nettan ti dhūma-nikkhamana-khiddam (B.). The word is used of a surgical instrument at Mahāvagga VI, 13, 2.

⁴ A similar paragraph occurs below, VI, 3, 3, of Vihāras.

⁵ Mukha-mattikam. See our note 4 on Mahāvagga I, 25, 12.

⁶ Mattikā-donikam. See the last words of V, 16, 2.

The clay had a bad smell.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to scent it.’

The fire in the bath-room scorched their bodies.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to have water poured over you.’

They poured the water out of dishes and alms-bowls.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, a stand for the water, and saucers¹ to pour it from.’

A bath-room with a thatched roof did not produce perspiration.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to cover the roof of the bath-room (with skins²), and to plaster it within and without.’

The bath-room became swampy.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to lay the floor with flooring of three kinds—brick flooring, stone flooring, and wooden flooring.’

It still became swampy.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to wash the floor.’

The water settled on the floor.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a drain to carry off the water³.’

Now at that time the Bhikkhus sat in the bath-room on the ground, and they had pins and needles in their limbs⁴.

¹ Sarāvakaṃ. See Mahāvagga VI, 12, 1, and Gâtaka, vol. i, p. 8.

² Ogumphetvâ. See above, V, 11, 6, and our note there.

³ Udaka-niddhamanaṃ. See Gâtaka I, 175, 409, 425, 489, in which passages an entrance to, or an exit from, a palace or a city is effected respectively niddhamana-mukhena, niddhamana-dvârena, niddhamanena, and niddhamana-maggena. Our phrase here recurs below, V, 35, 4.

⁴ Gattâni kaṇḍuvanti. Gattâni is nominative, not accusative. Compare Mahāvagga VI, 14, 5, where kaṇḍuvati is used in the neuter sense. (‘The sore was irritable.’)

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of stools for the bath-room.’

Now at that time the bath-room had no enclosure.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to enclose it with three kinds of enclosures—brick walls, and stone walls, and wooden fences.’

4. There was no antechamber¹ (in which the water could be kept).

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to have an antechamber.’

The basement of the antechamber was too low, and it was inundated with water [and so on, as in II. 6, and in the last section down to the end of the description of the door, followed by the closing words of II. 6 and of § 2 from ‘straw and plaster fell, &c.,’ down to ‘cupboards²’].

5. The cell³ became swampy.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to spread gravel⁴ over it.’

¹ Ko//hako. This word means a room without a window; and it is used either of 1. ‘a room over a gateway,’ or 2. ‘a room used as a store-room.’ (Compare Mahāvagga III, 5, 6, 9; Kullavagga IV, 4, 6, 7, VI, 3, 7, 9, VI, 4, 10, IX, 1, 2; and Gātaka I, 179, 227, 230, II, 168.) The whole of this paragraph recurs below, V, 35, 4, of the ko//haka to a privy; and the two passages taken together show that an entrance room or passage, a porch or antechamber, is meant, in which the water was kept ready for use. For that reason this particular kind of ko//haka is elsewhere called, in both connections, udaka-ko//haka (Mahāvagga VI, 14, 3, of the bath-room—where see Buddhaghosa’s note quoted in our ‘Vinaya Texts,’ vol. ii, p. 57—and Dhammapada, p. 103, of the privy). Buddhaghosa explains it here by dvāra-ko//hako; and it occurs again below, VIII, 8, 2, in the same sense.

² The last two items in § 2 are supplied for this case also in the next chapter but one.

³ Pariveṇa is doubtless here, and below at VIII, 8, 2 in the same connection, a cell used as a cooling-room, after the steam bath. Buddhaghosa says nothing here, but gives a note below, V, 35, 4.

⁴ Marumba. This word occurs in a description of different kinds of earths in the Old Commentary on the 10th Pāṭittiya

They did not succeed in getting any¹.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to flag it with stone.’

The water settled on the floor.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to have a drain to it.’

15.

1. Now at that time the Bhikkhus, when naked², saluted one another, and received salutes; did service to one another, and received services; gave to one another, and accepted; ate, both hard food and soft; tasted; and drank.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A man, O Bhikkhus, when naked, is not to give salutations, nor receive them; is not to do services, nor to accept them³; is not to give, nor to receive; is not to eat either hard or soft; is not to taste; is not to drink. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

16.

1. Now at that time the Bhikkhus in the bath-room put the robes down on the ground, and the robes became dirty.

(Sutta-vibhaṅga, Pāṭittiya X, 2, 1); and in a similar connection at Dīpavamsa XIX, 2. Also below, V, 35, 4, VI, 3, 8.

¹ Na pariyāpuṇanti. See the use of this phrase at Kullavagga V, 5, 2.

² That is, while in the Gantāghara, which explains the otherwise inexplicable fact of this chapter being inserted here instead of at the commencement of 16. 2.

³ In Mahāvagga I, 25, 13, services are to be rendered to a Bhikkhu who is in the bath. This is permitted by 16. 2 below.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a bamboo to hang your robes on, and of a string to hang your robes on¹.’

When rain fell, it fell over the robes.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to have a hall to the bath-room.’

The basement of the bath-room hall was too low [&c., as in 11. 6; 14. 2 as to basement, roof-facing, stairs, and balustrade, followed by the closing words of 11. 6 and 14. 2, down to the end].

2. Now at that time the Bhikkhus were afraid² to do service to one another, both when in the bath-room and in the water.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, three kinds of coverings—the covering of the bath-room, the covering of the water, and the covering by clothes³.’

Now at that time there was no water in the bath-room.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a well.’

The facing of the well fell in⁴.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to line the well with

¹ So also above, 11. 6 (at the end), and 14. 2 (at the end).

² On account of the rule laid down in chapter 15.

³ This rule abrogates that laid down in chapter 15, so far as regards bathing and shampooing. Buddhaghosa says accordingly, Tisso paṭikkhādayo ti. Ettha gantāghara-paṭikkhādi ka udaka-paṭikkhādi ka parikammam karontass’ eva vaṭṭati, sesesu abhi-vādanādisu na vaṭṭati. Vattha-paṭikkhādi sabba-kammesu vaṭṭati.

⁴ Kūlam luggati. (The reading is not without doubt.) Compare Paluggati. The same expression occurs below, V, 17, 2; and luggati at Mahāvagga VIII, 21, 1.

facings of three kinds¹—brick facing, stone facing, and wooden facing.’

[Then follow the paragraphs as to the high basement, the facing of the roof, the stairs, and the balustrade, as in 11. 6; 14. 2; and above, § 1².]

Now at that time the Bhikkhus drew water with jungle-rope³, or with their waistbands.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a string rope to draw water with.’

Their hands were hurt (by the rope).

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a long pole balanced as a lever⁴, of a bullock machine⁵, or of a wheel and axle⁶.’

¹ Kinitum tayo kaye. See our note 4 above on V, 14, 3, and the passages there quoted. The whole passage occurs V, 11, 6.

² All this refers doubtless to the kind of shed or portico to be erected over the well. (See below.) One would expect that the formal licence for such a mandapa would have been inserted here in due course as above, 11. 6, for the Kaṭhina-sālā.

³ This is the usual Anglo-Indian term for the creepers so commonly used for such purposes. The Pāli word is vallikā, which occurs in a different sense at V, 2, 1.

⁴ Tulā. This is the ordinary and simple machine, so common in all countries where irrigation is carried on, for raising water from canals or from shallow wells. Buddhaghosa says here: Tulan ti pannikānam viya udaka-abbhāhana-tulā. Pannika is ‘florist’ (see Gāṭaka I, 411, II, 180). Abbhāhana must be wrong (see Sutta Nipāta III, 8, 8); possibly abbhāvāhana is the correct reading.

⁵ The name of this machine is spelt differently in the MSS. (karaka/aṅka the Sinhalese MS., and karakaḍaka the Burmese MSS.), and the reading is doubtful. Buddhaghosa says: Dakadaka/ako (sic! In the next note but two the same MS. reads kaṭadaka/ake) vukkati gone vā yogetvā hatthehi vā gahetvā dīgha-varattādīhi ākaddhana-yantam. We can only say negatively that the word can have nothing to do either with karka/aka, a hook in the form of a crab’s claw; or with kara-kaṇṭaka, finger-nail.

⁶ Kakkavaṭṭakam, on which Buddhaghosa has the unintelligible note arahatta(!)-ghaṭi-yantam.

A number of pots were broken.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, water-vessels¹ of three kinds—brass pots, wooden pots, and skins².'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus, when drawing water in the open air, suffered from heat and cold.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to build a shed over the well³.'

Straw and plaster fell into the building over the well.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to cover the shed with skins, and to plaster it within and without; and I allow the use of whitewash, blacking, red-colouring, wreath work, creeper work, cupboards, bamboos to hang robes on, and strings to hang robes on.'

The well was uncovered, and it was littered over with grass, and plaster, and dirt.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, a lid⁴ to the well.'

Water-vessels were found wanting.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of troughs⁵ and basons.'

¹ Vārake. The spelling of this word in Childers's Dictionary (varāko) is a misprint. Both the passages he quotes read vārako. Other water-vessels, besides these three, are allowed by the closing rule of this chapter.

² Kamma-khandam nāma tūlāya vā ka/adaka/ake vā yogetabam kamma-bhāganam (B.). The rendering adopted by Childers from Turnour (Mahāvamsa, p. 3) is therefore incorrect.

³ The following passage has already occurred above, V, 11, 6 and V, 14, 3.

⁴ Apidhānam. See Mahāvagga VI, 12, 2.

⁵ Udaka-donim. At Gâtaka I, 450, such a doni is said to have been made out of the trunk of a tree. Compare the use of mattikâ-donikam at V, 14, 3.

17.

1. Now at that time the Bhikkhus used to bathe anywhere all over the Ârâma, and the Ârâma became muddy.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, a pool (at the entrance to the Ârâma).’

The pool was public, and the Bhikkhus were ashamed to bathe in it.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to surround it with enclosures of three kinds—brick walls, stone walls, and wooden fences¹.’

The pool became muddy.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to flag it with three kinds of flooring—brick flooring, stone flooring, or wooden flooring.’

The water settled.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, a drain.’

Now at that time the Bhikkhus’ limbs became cold.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to make use of a towel², and to wipe the water off with a cloth.’

2. Now at that time a certain Upâsaka was desirous of making a tank for the use of the Samgha.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, a tank.’

The sides of the tank fell in³.

¹ So also the closing words of V, 14, 3.

² Udaka-puññhani. This is also mentioned in the Old Commentary on the 86th Pâṭittiya. The verb recurs in the same sense below, VI, 3, 1.

³ Kûlam luggati. See V, 16, 2.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to line the tank with facing of three kinds—brick facing, stone facing, and wooden facing.'

They found difficulty¹ in getting into it.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, flights of stairs of three kinds—brick steps, stone steps, and wooden steps.'

While going up them, they fell down.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, a balustrade.'

The water in the tank became stale.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of pipes to lay on the water², and to drain the water off³.'

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu was desirous of erecting a bath-room with a *nillekha*⁴ roof for the use of the Samgha.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, a bath-room with such a roof to it.'

18.

1. Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus separated themselves from the mats on which they sat down for four months⁵.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to separate yourselves for four months from the mats on which you sit

¹ Vihaññanti. See V, 11, 6.

² Udakâyatikan ti udakassa âgamana-mattikam (B.). Compare âyataka at IX, 1, 3.

³ See above our note on V, 14, 3.

⁴ Nillekha-gantâgharam nâma âviddha-pakkha-pâsakam vukkati. Gopânasînam upari-mandale pakkha-pâsake ihapetvâ kata-kûta-kkhadanass' etam nâmam (B.).

⁵ Compare the 2nd Nissaggiya.

down. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.¹

Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus lay down to sleep on beds scattered over with flowers.

People who came on a visit to the Vihâras saw it, and murmured, &c., saying, 'Like those who still live in the pleasures of the world.'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to sleep on beds scattered over with flowers. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time people came to the Ârâma, bringing perfumes and garlands. The Bhikkhus, fearing to offend, would not accept them.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to accept the perfume, and to apply it to the door for a space of five finger-breadths¹; and to accept the flowers, and put them on one side in the Vihâra.'

19.

1. Now at that time a sheath of felt² had come into the possession of the Samgha.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, a sheath.'

The Bhikkhus considered whether a sheath was a thing which each one might keep for himself, or a thing which ought to be handed over from time to time by one Bhikkhu to another.'

¹ Kavâṭe pañkaṅgulikam dâtum, on which Buddhaghosa has no note. This measure occurs in Gâtaka I, 166, 192; Fausböll's 'Five Gâtakas' 6; and Mahāvamsa, p. 193.

² Namatakam. See V, 11, 1.

‘A sheath, O Bhikkhus, is neither to be appropriated nor to be handed over¹.’

Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus used to eat lying on decorated divans.

People murmured, &c. . . . saying, ‘Like those still living in the pleasures of the world.’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to eat lying on decorated divans². Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata.’

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu was sick, and when eating he was not able to hold his bowl in his hand.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, the use of a stand for the bowl³.’

Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus used to eat out of one dish, to drink out of one vessel, and to lie on one bed, one coverlet, or one mat⁴.

The people murmured, &c. . . .

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

¹ Na adhi//hâtabbam na vikappetabbam. That is, it is always to be kept as common property of the Samgha (Samghika). See Mahāvagga VIII, 20, 2, where the same expressions occur.

² Âsittakûpadhânam nâma tamba-lohena vâ ragatena vâ katâya pe/âya (MS. belâya) etam adhivaṭṭanam. The use of an ubhato-lohitakûpadhânam is condemned, among other things of a like kind, in the Magghima Sîla, § 5 (Rh. D.’s ‘Buddhist Suttas,’ p. 193), and above, Mahāvagga V, 10, 2.

³ Ma/orikâ ti danâdhâraako vukkati. Ya//hi-âdhâraaka-pammâ-dhâraaka-pakkhita-pi//hâni pi etth’ eva pavii//hâni. Âdhâraaka-samkhepana-gamanato hi pa//hâya khiddam viddham pi aviddham pi va//ati yeva (B.).

⁴ All these words have already occurred above at Kullavagga I, 13, 1. ‘Sitting on one seat’ is there added to the list.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, [to do any of these things.] Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

20.

1. Now at that time Vaddha the Likkhavi was a friend of the Bhikkhus who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummagaka¹. Now Vaddha the Likkhavi went up to the place where those Bhikkhus were, and on arriving there he said to them, ‘My salutation to you, Sirs!’ When he had thus spoken, the Bhikkhus who were followers of Mettiya and Bhummagaka gave him no reply. And a second and a third time [he said the same words, and still received no reply].

‘Wherein have I offended you, Sirs? Why do you give me no reply?’

‘Therein, that you, friend, sit contented while we are being molested by Dabba the Mallian.’

‘But what, Sirs, can I do?’

‘If you wished it, friend, to-day even would the Blessed One expel Dabba the Mallian.

‘But what shall I do, Sirs? What is that it is in my power to do?’

‘Come then, friend Vaddha. Do you go up to the place where the Blessed One is, and when you have come there, say as follows: “This, Lord, is neither fit nor becoming that the very quarter of the heavens which ought to be safe, secure, and free from danger, that from that very quarter should arise danger, calamity, and distress—that where one ought to expect a calm, that just there one should meet a gale! Methinks the very water has taken fire! My wife has been defiled by Dabba the Mallian!”’

¹ These are two of the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus; and the evil deeds of the followers form the subject of Kullavagga IV, 4, 5 and following sections. Our sections 1, 2 are nearly the same as §§ 8, 9 there.

2. ‘Very well, Sirs!’ said Vaddha the Likkhavi, accepting the word of the followers of Mettiya and Bhummagaka. And he went up to the Blessed One [and spake even as he had been directed].

Then the Blessed One, on that occasion and in that connection, convened a meeting of the Bhikkhu-saṃgha, and asked the venerable Dabba the Mallian:

‘Are you conscious¹, Dabba, of having done such a thing as this Vaddha says?’

‘As my Lord, the Blessed One, knows.’

[And a second, and a third time, the Blessed One asked the same question, and received the same reply.]

‘The Dabbas, O Dabba, do not thus repudiate. If you have done it, say so. If you have not done it, say you have not.’

‘Since I was born, Lord, I cannot call to mind that I have practised sexual intercourse, even in a dream, much less when I was awake!’

3. Then the Blessed One addressed the Bhikkhus, and said: ‘Let then the Samgha, O Bhikkhus, turn the bowl down² in respect of Vaddha the Likkhavi, and make him incapable of granting an alms to the *Samgha*¹.

¹ See the note above on IV, 4, 9.

² Pattam nikkuggatu. This phrase is used in the ordinary signification above, V, 9, 4. It is characteristic of the mildness of early Buddhism that this should be the only penalty imposed upon a layman. Compare H. O.’s remarks in his ‘Buddha, sein Leben, seine Lehre, seine Gemeinde,’ pp. 391–393. The house of such a layman becomes then an agoḥaro, an ‘unlawful resort.’ (Kulla-vagga VIII, 1, 2.)

‘There are eight things, O Bhikkhus, which when they characterise an Upāsaka, the bowl is to be turned down in respect of him;—when he goes about to bring loss of gifts on the Bhikkhus, when he goes about to bring harm to the Bhikkhus, when he goes about to cause the Bhikkhus to want a place of residence, when he reviles or slanders the Bhikkhus, when he causes divisions between Bhikkhus and Bhikkhus;—when he speaks in dispraise of the Buddha;—when he speaks in dispraise of the Dhamma;—when he speaks in dispraise of the Samgha. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to turn down the bowl in respect of an Upāsaka who is characterised by these eight things².’

4. ‘And thus, O Bhikkhus, is the bowl to be turned down. Some able and discreet Bhikkhu is to lay the matter before the Samgha, saying,

¹ Asambhogam samghena karotu. This phrase is used in regard to a Bhikkhu at Kullavagga I, 25, 1, as the distinctive mark of the Act of Suspension (Ukkhepaniya-kamma), and there means ‘depriving him of his right to eat and dwell with the other Bhikkhus.’ Sambhoge anâpatti at Mahāvagga I, 79, 2 (at the end), means that it is not an offence for the Bhikkhus to eat and dwell together with a guilty Bhikkhu under certain conditions there specified. As an Upāsaka never, under any circumstances, either eats or dwells together with the Bhikkhus (in Pāṭittiya 5 the reference is to sāmañeras), the meaning here must be to make him one who has no dealings with the Samgha, to withdraw his privilege of providing food or lodging for the Samgha. The sambhoganam kulam in the 43rd Pāṭittiya has probably nothing to do with this.

² When a Bhikkhu behaves towards the laity in any one of the first five of these eight ways the Paṭisāraṇiya-kamma is to be carried out against him—that is to say, he has to ask pardon of the layman against whom he has offended. See I, 20. The whole eight recur below, § 6.

“Let the venerable Samgha hear me. Vaddha the Likkhavi has brought a groundless charge against the venerable Dabba the Mallian of a breach of morality. If the time seems meet to the Samgha, let the Samgha turn down the bowl as respects Vaddha the Likkhavi, and make him as one who has no dealings with the Samgha.

“This is the motion (ñatti).

“Vaddha the Likkhavi has brought a groundless charge against Dabba the Mallian of a breach of morality. The Samgha turns down the bowl as respects Vaddha the Likkhavi, and makes him as one who has no dealings with the Samgha. Whosoever of the venerable ones approves of the bowl being turned down as regards Vaddha the Likkhavi, and of making him as one who has no dealings with the Samgha, let him keep silence. Whosoever approves not thereof, let him speak.

“The bowl is turned down by the Samgha as regards Vaddha the Likkhavi, he is as one who has no dealings with the Samgha. The Samgha approves thereof. Therefore is it silent. Thus do I understand.”

5. Then the venerable Ānanda, having dressed himself early in the morning, went, duly bowled and robed, to the residence of Vaddha the Likkhavi. And when he had come there he spake to Vaddha the Likkhavi, and said: ‘The bowl, friend Vaddha, has been turned down by the Samgha as regards you, and you are as one who has no dealings with the Samgha.’ And Vaddha the Likkhavi, on hearing that saying, immediately¹ fainted and fell.

¹ Literally, ‘on that very spot.’

Then the friends and companions of Vaddha the Likkhavi, and his relatives of one blood with him, said to him: 'It is enough, friend Vaddha. Weep not, neither lament. We will reconcile¹ the Blessed One to you, and the Order of Bhikkhus.'

And Vaddha the Likkhavi, with his wife and his children, and with his friends and companions, and with his relatives of one blood with him, went up, with wet garments and with streaming hair, to the place where the Blessed One was; and when he had come there, he cast himself down with his head at the feet of the Blessed One, and said: 'Sin has overcome me, Lord—even according to my weakness, according to my folly, according to my unrighteousness—in that without ground I brought a charge against Dabba the Mallian of a breach of morality. In respect thereof may my Lord the Blessed One accept the confession I make of my sin in its sinfulness², to the end that I may in future restrain myself therefrom³.'

'Verily, O friend Vaddha, sin hath overcome you—even according to your weakness, and according to your folly, and according to your unrighteousness—in that you brought without ground against Dabba the Mallian a charge of breach of morality. But since you, O friend Vaddha, look upon your sin as sin, and make amends for it as is meet, we do accept at your hands your confession of it. For this, O friend Vaddha, is the advantage of the discipline of the noble one, that he who looks upon his sin as sin, and makes amends for it as is meet, he becomes able in future to restrain himself therefrom¹.

¹ This is precisely the expression made use of in the converse case, when a Bhikkhu has offended against the laity. See I, 22, 3.

² Akkayam akkayato paṭigāhātu. See the parallel passages in Mahāvagga IX, 1, 9; Kullavagga VII, 3, 6, &c.

³ Āyatim samvarāya. So also above of an offending Bhikkhu, IV, 14, 30.

6. Then the Blessed One addressed the Bhikkhus, and said: 'Let then the Samgha turn up the bowl again as regards Vaddha the Likkhavi, and make him as one who has dealings with the Samgha.

'There are eight things, O Bhikkhus, which when they characterise an Upāsaka the bowl should be turned up again as regards him;—when he goes not about to bring loss of gifts on the Bhikkhus, when he goes not about to bring harm to the Bhikkhus, when he goes not about to cause the Bhikkhus to want a place of residence, when he reviles or slanders not the Bhikkhus, when he causes not divisions between Bhikkhus and Bhikkhus;—when he speaks not in dispraise of the Buddha;—when he speaks not in dispraise of the Dhamma;—when he speaks not in dispraise of the Samgha.

7. 'And thus, O Bhikkhus, is the bowl to be turned up². That Vaddha the Likkhavi should go before the Samgha, with his upper robe arranged over one shoulder³, and squatting down, and raising

¹ Samvaram āpaggati. Compare the use of vikappam āpaggeyya in the 8th Nissaggiya.

² The following paragraphs are precisely the same as those in which the revocation of the Tagganiya-kamma is described in the reverse case of a Bhikkhu, above, I, 8.

³ Ekamsam uttarāsaṅgam karitvā. Unless these words have been introduced by mistake from the corresponding passage in I, 8 (which is not probable), they show that the uttarāsaṅga (on which see the note on Mahāvagga VIII, 13, 4) was also worn by laymen. But this is the only passage known to his hands with the palms joined together, should speak as follows :

“The bowl has been turned down against me, Sirs, by the Samgha, and I am become as one having no dealings with the Samgha. I am conducting myself, Sirs, aright in accordance thereto, and am broken in spirit¹, and I seek for release ; and I request the Samgha for a turning up again of the bowl.”

‘And a second time he is to prefer the same request, and a third time he is to prefer the same request in the same words.

‘Then some discreet and able Bhikkhu should lay the matter before the Samgha, saying,

“Let the venerable Samgha hear me. The bowl has been turned down by the Samgha against Vaddha the Likkhavi, and he is conducting himself aright in accordance thereto, and is broken in spirit, and seeks for release, and requests the Samgha for a turning up again of the bowl. If the time seems meet to the Samgha, let the Samgha turn up the bowl again as regards Vaddha the Likkhavi, and make him as one who has dealings with the Samgha.

“This is the motion (ñatti).

“Let the venerable Samgha hear me. The bowl has been turned down (&c., as before), and he is conducting himself (&c., as before), and he requests the Samgha (&c., as before). The Samgha turns up again the bowl as regards Vaddha the Likkhavi, and makes him as one who has dealings with the us in the earlier literature in which such a use of it is mentioned or implied. Compare Rh. D.’s note on the ‘Book of the Great Decease,’ VI, 26.

¹ Lomam pâtemi. See the note on Kullavagga I, 6, 1.

Samgha. Whosoever of the venerable ones approves thereof, let him keep silence; whosoever approves not thereof, let him speak.

“The bowl is turned up again by the Samgha as regards Vaddha the Likkhavi, and he is as one who has dealings with the Samgha. The Samgha approves thereof. Therefore is it silent. Thus do I understand.”

21.

1. Now the Blessed One, when he had stayed at Vesālī as long as he thought fit, set out on his journey toward Bhaggā¹. And journeying straight on he arrived in due course at Bhaggā. And there at Bhaggā the Blessed One resided on the Dragon's Hill, in the hermitage in the Bhesaka/ā Wood².

Now at that time Bodhi the king's son's mansion, which was called Kokanada, had just been finished, and had not as yet been used³ by Samana, or by Brāhman, or by any human being. And Bodhi the king's son gave command to the young Brahman, the son of the Saṅgika woman⁴, saying, ‘Come

¹ Bhaggesu. Compare Buddhaghosa's note on a similar plural at Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta III, 5, quoted in Rh. D.'s ‘Buddhist Suttas from the Pāli,’ p. 24.

² This place is also mentioned in the Sutta-vibhaṅga on the 55th and 56th Sekhiyas.

³ Anaggāvattho, literally, no doubt, ‘dwelt in.’ But it is clear that the meal afterwards taken in it by the Buddha was supposed to be the dedication, so to say, or the house-warming, after which it was aggāvattho.

⁴ On this habit of naming people after the family or tribal (not the personal) name of their mothers, see Rh. D.'s note in his ‘Buddhist Suttas,’ p. 1.

now, my friend Saṅgikā-putta, go thou to the place where the Blessed One is, and when you have come there, bow down in salutation at his feet on my behalf, and enquire in my name whether he is free from sickness and suffering, and is in the enjoyment of ease and comfort and vigorous health, saying, "Bodhi the king's son, Lord, bows down in salutation at thy feet, and enquires [as I have said]¹, and asks: 'May my Lord the Blessed One consent to take his to-morrow's meal with Bodhi the king's son, together with the Saṃgha of Bhikkhus.'"

'Even so, Sir!' said the young Brahman Saṅgikā-putta, in assent to Bodhi the king's son. And he went up to the place where the Blessed One was, and when he had come there he exchanged with the Blessed One the greetings and compliments of friendship and civility. And when he had done so, he took his seat on one side, and so seated he [delivered to him the message even as the king's son had commanded]. And the Blessed One gave, by silence, his consent.

2. And when the young Brahman Saṅgikā-putta had perceived that the Blessed One had consented, he arose from his seat, and went up to the place where Bodhi the king's son was. And when he had come there, he said to him: 'We have spoken, Sir, in your behalf to that venerable Gotama, saying (&c., as before), and have received the consent of the Samāṇa Gotama.'

Then Bodhi the king's son made ready at the end of that night sweet food, both hard and soft; and had the mansion Kokanada spread over with white cloths even unto the last planks in the flight of steps (at the entrance)¹; and gave command to the young Brahman Saṅgikâ-putta, saying, 'Come now, my friend Saṅgikâ-putta, go thou up to the place where the Blessed One is; and when you have come there, announce the time, saying, "The meal, Lord, is ready, and the time has come."' "

¹ So far this conversation is the stock phrase for a message from a royal personage to the Buddha. See 'Book of the Great Decease,' I, 2 (Rh. D.'s 'Buddhist Suttas,' p. 2).

'Even so, Lord,' said Saṅgikâ-putta in assent [and went to the Blessed One and announced accordingly].

Now the Blessed One, having dressed himself early in the morning, went, duly bowled and robed, to Bodhi the king's son's mansion. And Bodhi the king's son stood at that time at the portico over the outer door to welcome the Blessed One. And he saw the Blessed One coming from afar; and on seeing him he went forth thence to meet him, and when he had saluted the Blessed One, he returned again to the mansion Kokanada.

Now the Blessed One stopped at the last plank on the flight of steps at the entrance. And Bodhi the king's son said to the Blessed One, 'May my Lord the Blessed One walk over the cloths. May the Happy One walk over the cloths, that the same may be to me for a long time for a weal and for a joy.'

And when he had thus spoken, the Blessed One remained silent. And a second time he [preferred the same request in the same words with the same result]. And a third time he [preferred the same request]. Then the Blessed One looked round at the venerable Ānanda.

¹ Sopâna-kaṅgarâ. Compare the Sanskrit Kaṇḍâkara (also written kaṇḍâgara). The correct reading is doubtless 𑖅, not 𑖆.

And the venerable Ānanda said to Bodhi the king's son, 'Let them gather up, O prince, these cloths. The Blessed One will not walk on a strip of cloth (laid down for ceremonial purposes)¹. The Tathâgata has mercy even on the meanest thing.'

3. Then Bodhi the king's son had the cloths gathered up, and spread out a seat on the top of Kokanada. And the Blessed One ascended up into Kokanada, and sat down on the seat spread out there with the Samgha of Bhikkhus. And Bodhi the king's son satisfied the Bhikkhu-samgha with the Buddha at their head with the sweet food, both hard and soft, waiting upon them with his own hand². And when the Blessed One had cleansed his bowl and his hands, he (Bodhi) took his seat on one side. And the Blessed One instructed, and roused, and incited, and gladdened him thus sitting with religious discourse. And when he had been thus instructed, and roused, and incited, and gladdened with religious discourse, Bodhi the king's son rose from his seat and departed thence.

¹ Kela-pattikâ ti kela-santharam, says Buddhaghosa. See pattikâ in Childers, and compare pañña-paṭṭhikam at V, 11, 6. Kela is not merely ordinary cloth; it is cloth regarded as a means of giving a decorative or festive appearance to a house by spreading canopies, &c. See Gâtaka I, 178, and Mahâ-parinibbâna Sutta VI, 26 (p. 64). On such festive occasions the whole house (or the Mandapa erected in special honour of the guest) is covered with lengths of clean cotton cloth—the same as are otherwise used for ordinary apparel—white being the colour signifying peculiar respect. It is such lengths of cloth so used honoris causâ that are called kela-pattikâ. Compare Rh. D.'s note in 'Buddhist Suttas,' p. 122.

² See the note above on Mahâvagga I, 8, 4.

Then the Blessed One, on that occasion and in that connection, convened an assembly of the Bhikkhu-saṃgha, and after he had delivered a religious discourse, he addressed the Bhikkhus and said :

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to walk upon cloth laid down (for ceremonial purposes). Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

4. Now at that time a certain woman who had had a miscarriage, and had invited the Bhikkhus, and spread cloths in their honour, said to them, ‘Step, Sirs, over the cloth.’

The Bhikkhus, fearing to offend, would not do so.

‘Step, Sirs, over the cloth, for good luck's sake.’

The Bhikkhus, fearing to offend, would not do so.

Then that woman murmured, was annoyed, and was indignant, saying, ‘How can their reverences refuse to step over the cloth when they are asked to do so for good luck's sake?’

The Bhikkhus heard of that woman's murmuring, and being annoyed, and indignant. And they told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, when asked to do so for the sake of good luck to laymen, to step over cloth laid down for ceremonial purposes.’

Now at the time the Bhikkhus were afraid to step on to a mat to be used for wiping the feet¹.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

¹ Dhota-pādaka.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to step on to a mat to be used for wiping the feet.’

Here ends the second Portion¹ for Recitation.

22.

1. Now when the Blessed One had remained at Bhaggâ as long as he thought fit, he set out on his journey towards Sâvatthi. And journeying straight on he arrived in due course at Sâvatthi, and there, at Sâvatthi, he stayed in the Getavana, in the Ârâma of Anâtha-pindîka.

Now Visâkhâ the mother of Migâra, bringing small jars², and earthenware foot-scrubbers³, and brooms, went up to the place where the Blessed One was; and when she had come there, she saluted the Blessed One, and took her seat on one side. And so sitting, Visâkhâ the mother of Migâra said to the Blessed One, ‘May the Blessed One accept these things at my hands, that that may be to me for long for a blessing and a joy.’ And the Blessed One accepted the small jars and the brooms; but the Blessed One did not accept the earthenware foot-scrubbers.

¹ There is no mention in the text of where the first such Portion (Bhânavâra) ends. There is also no division into Bhânavâras in the previous books of the Kullavagga.

² Ghaṭakam. At Gâtaka I, 32 this word seems to mean the capital of a pillar. We have taken it as the diminutive of ghaṭa, especially as Buddhaghosa says nothing; but this is doubtful.

³ Katakam. To the note quoted at p. 318 of the text, which shows that this is a kind of foot-rubber, Buddhaghosa adds that this article is forbidden bâhulikânuyogattâ. This injunction is repeated below at V, 37, where kataka is mentioned as a kind of earthenware.

Then the Blessed One instructed (&c., as usual, see 21. 2, down to) she departed thence. And the Blessed One, on that occasion and in that connection, after having delivered a religious discourse, addressed the Bhikkhus, and said :

‘ I allow you, O Bhikkhus, small jars and brooms. You are not, O Bhikkhus, to make use of earthenware foot-scrubbers. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, three kinds of things to rub the feet with—to wit, sandstone¹, gravel¹, and sea-foam².’

2. [A similar paragraph ending]

‘ I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of fans and flower-stands³.’

23.

1. Now at that time a mosquito-fan had come into the possession of the Samgha.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘ I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of mosquito-fans.’

A châmara (a tail of the Bos Gruniens or Tibetan ox, mounted on a stick, to be used by an attendant to whisk off flies) had come into the possession of the Samgha.

¹ Sakkharâ and kaḥala, the exact distinction between which two terms is not stated.

² Samudda-pheṇaka. By this name are designated the bones of the cuttle-fish which, when cast up by the waves on the sea-shore, are not unlike petrified foam, and have actually been introduced from the East into use in Europe as a kind of rough natural soap; and are now sold for that purpose in most chemists' shops in England (compare Meerschaum). The same word is found in later Sanskrit works.

³ Tâlavanīam. See Gâtaka I, 26, 5 (at the end); and compare tâlavanīakam below, V, 29, 4.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to make use of a chāmara. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a *dukkata*¹. I allow, O Bhikkhus, three kinds of fly-whisks—those made of bark, those made of Ustra-grass, and those made of peacocks’ tails².’

2. [Similar paragraph ending]

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of sun-shades³.’

Now at that time the Khabbaggiyas went about with sun-shades up. And at that time a certain Upāsaka went to a garden with a number of men who were followers of the Āgīvakas (naked ascetics). And those followers of the Āgīvakas saw the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus coming along in the distance with sun-shades held over them; and on seeing them, they said to that Upāsaka:

‘Are these, Sir, the men whom you reverence coming along, like lords of the treasury, there with sun-shades held over them?’

‘No, Sirs. These are not Bhikkhus; they are Paribbāgakas (wandering mendicants).’

So they made a bet whether they were Bhikkhus or not. And when that Upāsaka recognised them, when they came up, he murmured, was annoyed, and was indignant, saying, ‘How can their reverences go about with sun-shades held over them?’

The Bhikkhus heard of that Upāsaka’s thus mur-

¹ Probably because this, like a white umbrella, was considered an appanage of royalty.

² Mora-piñkha. This word is spelt piñga by Childers, and by Fausböll, Gātaka I, 38, 207.

³ See the note at the end of the chapter.

muring, &c. And those Bhikkhus told the matter to the Blessed One.

‘Is it true, O Bhikkhus, as they say?’

‘It is true, Lord.’

The Blessed Buddha rebuked them, saying (&c., as usual, see I, 1, 2, 3). And when he had rebuked them, and had delivered a religious discourse, he addressed the Bhikkhus, and said :

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to have sun-shades held over you. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

3. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu was sick, and without a sun-shade (being held over him) he was ill at ease.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a sun-shade for the sick.’

Now at that time the Bhikkhus, thinking, ‘It is for the sick only that sun-shades have been allowed by the Blessed One, and not for those who are not sick,’ were afraid to use sun-shades in the Ârâma, or in the precincts of the Ârâma.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, either a sick man, or one who is not sick, to have a sun-shade held over him either in the Ârâma, or in the precincts of the Ârâma¹.’

¹ There is an ambiguity, either in the use of the word khatta, or in the use of the verb dhâreti, or both, running through this chapter. As a matter of fact, the Bhikkhus now use sun-shades (usually those made of paper in China) of the same shape as the umbrellas now used in England; and they make no distinction as to the place in which they use them. But there is another shape for shades, to be carried by a dependant walking behind the person to be shaded, in which the handle is fastened to the rim at the side of, and not in the middle underneath that part of it which

24.

1. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu tied his bowl with a string, and suspending it on a staff¹, went after noon out of a certain village gate. The people calling out, 'There goes a thief; his sword is glistening,' fell upon him, and seized him. But on recognising him, they let him go. That Bhikkhu, returning to the Ârâma, told this matter to the Bhikkhus.

'What then, Sir, did you carry a staff with a string to it?'

'It is even so, Sirs.'

Those Bhikkhus who were moderate murmured (&c., as usual, see I, 1, 2, 3) told the Blessed One he addressed the Bhikkhus, and said :

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to carry a staff with a string to it. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

2. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu was sick, and he could not wander about without a staff.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

actually keeps off the sun. Both kinds are figured on the most ancient Buddhist sculptures. The Old Commentary on the corresponding rule for the nuns (Bhikkhunī-vibhaṅga, Pâṭittiya LXXXIV, 2, 1) says that sun-shades are either white, or made of matting, or made of leaves (doubtless of the talipot palm); and it adds that they are either maṇḍala-baddham or saḷāka-baddham, which apparently refers to these two ways in which the handle was joined on to the shading-part. In the 57th Sekhiya (compare also the 23rd and the 67th), and in Kullavagga VIII, 1, 1, will be found rules of etiquette which show that it was a sign of courtesy or of respect to put down a sun-shade.

¹ See the similar phraseology at V, 8, 1. On uḷḷitvā, compare oddeti.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to give to a sick Bhikkhu the permission (license) to use a staff. And thus, O Bhikkhus, should it be given. That sick Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, should go up to the Samgha [here follow the words of a Kammavâkâ, precisely as in V, 20, 7].’

3. [Similar paragraphs ending with Kammavâkâs for license to lift the bowl with a string, and with both a staff and a string.]

25.

1. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu was a ruminator¹, and he, continually ruminating, used to chew the cud.

The Bhikkhus murmured, were annoyed, and were indignant, saying, ‘This Bhikkhu eats food out of hours².’ And they told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘This Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, has but lately fallen from the condition of being an ox. I allow, O Bhikkhus, to a ruminator the chew of the cud. But nothing, O Bhikkhus, brought from the door of the mouth to the outside thereof is to be so chewed³. Whosoever does so, shall be dealt with according to the law⁴.’

26.

1. Now at that time a certain multitude had

¹ Romanthaka.

² Which is against the rule laid down in the 27th Pâkittiya.

³ That would be a breach of the 30th Pâkittiya.

⁴ That is, according to the 27th, 28th, or 30th Pâkittiya.

arranged for the privilege of supplying food to the Samgha, and in the dining-hall many fragments of rice were allowed to fall.

The people murmured, were annoyed, and were indignant, saying, 'How can the Sakya-puttiya Samanas, when food is being given to them, take it so carelessly. Each single ball of rice is the result of hundredfold labour!'

The Bhikkhus heard of the people thus murmuring, &c., and they told the matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, whatever thing falls when it is being given to you, yourselves to pick it up and eat it. That has been presented, O Bhikkhus, by the givers.'

27.

1. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu went on his round for alms with long finger-nails. A certain woman, seeing him, said to that Bhikkhu: 'Come along, Sir, and have connection with me.'

'Nay, Sister, that is not becoming.'

'If you do not, Sir, I will at once scratch¹ my limbs with my own nails, and will make as if I were angry, saying, "This Bhikkhu has ill-treated me."'

'Settle that with yourself, Sister.'

That woman did as she had said, and people running up seized that Bhikkhu. Then they saw skin and blood on the woman's nails; and on seeing that, they let the Bhikkhu go, saying, 'This is the work of the woman herself. The Bhikkhu has not done it.'

¹ On vilikhati, compare VI, 20.

Then that Bhikkhu, returning to the Ârâma, told the matter to the Bhikkhus.

'What then, Sir, do you wear long nails?'

'It is even so, Sirs.'

The Bhikkhus who were moderate murmured (&c. . . .) told the matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to wear long nails. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukka \acute{t} a.'

2. Now at that time the Bhikkhus tore off their nails with the nails, bit them off with their teeth, or rubbed them down against the wall; and their fingers were hurt.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, nail-cutters.'

They cut their nails down to the blood, and their fingers were hurt.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to cut your nails according to the length of the flesh.'

Now at that time the K \acute{h} abbaggiya Bhikkhus had all the twenty nails (on their hands and feet) polished.

People murmured, &c., saying, 'Like those who still live in the pleasures of the world.'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to have the twenty nails polished. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to remove the dirt only.'

3. Now at that time the Bhikkhus' hair grew long.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'Are the Bhikkhus able, O Bhikkhus, to remove one another's hair?'

'They are, Lord.'

Then the Blessed One, on that occasion and in that connection, after he had delivered a religious discourse, addressed the Bhikkhus, and said :

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of razors, of a hone to sharpen the razors on, of powder prepared with Sipâtika-gum to prevent them rusting¹, of a sheath to hold them in², and of all the apparatus of a barber³.’

4. Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus wore (&c., as usual, down to)

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to have your beards cut (by barbers)⁴, nor to let them grow long, nor to wear them long on the chin like a goat’s beard⁵, nor so cut that they have four corners⁶, nor to cut off the hair growing on your breast⁷, nor to cut the hair on your bellies into figures⁸, nor to wear whiskers⁹, nor to remove the hair from your private parts¹⁰. Who-soever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

¹ Khura-sipâtikaṃ. See the notes on V, 11, 2, and Buddhaghosa’s note at p. 319 of the text.

² Namatakam. See above, V, 11, 1, and V, 19, 1.

³ Khura-bhandam. Compare Mahāvagga VI, 37.

⁴ Massum kappāpentī ti kattariyā massum khedāpentī (B.). On Kattari (a knife), see Gâtaka I, 223. It is clear from the first words of the next section that Buddhaghosa’s explanation here is not quite accurate.

⁵ Go-lomikan ti hanukamhi dīgham katvā śhapitam elaka-massum vukkati (B.).

⁶ Katurassan ti katu-konaṃ (B.).

⁷ Parimukhan ti ure loma-samharanam (B.).

⁸ Addharūkam. See the various readings and Buddhaghosa’s note at p. 319 of the text.

⁹ Dāṭhikam. It is the Sanskrit dādḥikā or daṃśtrikā; and occurs at Gâtaka I, 305.

¹⁰ On the corresponding rule in the Bhikkhunī-vibhaṅga, the 2nd Pāṭittiya, the Old Commentary has sambādho nāma ubho upakakkhakaṃ mutta-karanam.

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu had a fistula¹, and the ointment would not stick to it.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, on account of disease, to remove the hair from the private parts.'

5. Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus (&c., as before, down to)

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to have your hair cut off with a knife². Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu had a sore on his head, and the hair could not be removed with a razor.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, on account of disease, to have your hair cut off with a knife.'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus wore the hair in their nostrils long.

People murmured, &c., saying, 'Like the devil-worshippers³.'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to wear the hair in your nostrils long. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus had the hair in their nostrils pulled out with a potsherd⁴, or with beeswax; and their nostrils were hurt.

¹ Compare Mahāvagga VI, 22, 2.

² Kattarikâyâ ti ganda-rudhi-(sic MS.)-sīsa-roḡ'-âbâdha-paḡ-kayâ vaṭṭati, which is simply a repetition of the next paragraph, is all that Buddhaghosa here says. See note above on § 4.

³ Pisâḡillikâ. So also V, 10, 2, of carrying a skull about; and Mahāvagga III, 12, 3, of living in the hollow of a tree.

⁴ Sakkharikâ, said at Mahāvagga VI, 14, 5 to be used as a lancet.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of pincers¹.’

Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus (&c., as before, ending with)

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to have the white hairs pulled out (off your heads). Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata.’

6. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu’s ears were stopped with the wax.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of an instrument to remove the wax from the ear².’

[Then a paragraph as to the substances of which it may be made, word for word, as in Mahāvagga VI, 6, 21; 12, 3; Kullavagga V, 5, 2; 29, 2, &c.]

28.

1. Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus laid up much store of brass ware and copper ware.

People who came on a visit to the Vihâras, seeing it, murmured, &c., saying, ‘Like those who spread out copper (for sale)³.’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to lay up much store of brass ware and copper ware. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a *dukkata*⁴.’

¹ Sandâsa. So at Gâtaka I, 138, 4, a barber pulls out a white hair from the king’s head, suvarana-sandâsena.

² This license is repeated in the next chapter.

³ Kamsa-pattharikâ tî kamsa-bhanda-vânigâ (B.).

⁴ They might have all kinds of brass ware, except certain articles, according to chapter 37 below.

2. Now at that time the Bhikkhus were afraid to use boxes to put eye-ointment in¹, and little flat sticks to lay it on with², and instruments for removing wax from the ear³, and handles (for razors, staves, &c.)⁴.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of these things.'

Now at that time the Khaggaggiya Bhikkhus sat down lolling up against their waist-cloths (arranged as a cushion)⁵, and the edges of the waist-cloths wore out⁶.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to loll in this way. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata.'

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu was sick, and without some handicraft⁷ he was ill at ease.

¹ Aṅganīm. The use of these has been already allowed at Mahāvagga VI, 12, 1, 2, 4.

² In the text read aṅgana-saḷākaṃ, on which see Mahāvagga VI, 12, 3, 4.

³ Already allowed in the last chapter.

⁴ Bandhana-mattan ti vāsi-kattara-yaṭṭhi-ādinam vā bandhana-mattam (B.). It is clear from this note, and the repetition of the pi in the text, that we have to do here with a special object, and not a mere qualification of the other three.

⁵ Samghāsi-pallatthikāya nisīditvā. See IV, 4, 7 at the end, and the Old Commentary on the 26th Sekhiya. Childers translates it as if it were the same as ukku/ikam nisīditvā; but it must be different from it as that was allowed and constantly practised.

⁶ Paṭṭā lugganti. So read (not pattā as in the text) in accordance with our note 3 on Mahāvagga VIII, 21, 1. The second word occurs also above, V, 16, 2; 17, 2. From this passage here it is probable that aṭṭha-pāḍaka at Mahāvagga VIII, 21, means a stool.

⁷ Āyogam. Compare the Sutta-vibhaṅga, Pāṭittiya LXXXVIII, 2, 2; Gāṭaka III, 447, 6.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a loom, and of shuttles, strings, tickets, and all the apparatus belonging to a loom.’

29.

1. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu entered the village for alms without a girdle on, and in the highway¹ his waist-cloth fell down². The people made an outcry, and that Bhikkhu was abashed.

On his return to the Ārāma, that Bhikkhu told this matter to the Bhikkhus, and the Bhikkhus told it to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to enter the village without a girdle on. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow, O Bhikkhus, a girdle³.’

2. Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus wore (&c., as usual, ending with)

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to wear special girdles⁴—those made of many strings plaited to-

¹ Rathiyāya. The Old Commentary on the Bhikkhunī-vibhaṅga, Pāṭiṭṭiya XIV, says, Rathiyā ti rakkhā. The word recurs, ibid., Pāṭiṭṭiya LXXXVI, XCVI (the last of which is nearly the same as our passage here). For the more usual form rathikā, see Kullavagga X, 12.

² Pabhassittha. Compare Sutta-vibhaṅga, Pāṭiṭṭiya LXXXIII, 1, 2. It is from the root bhram, not bhās.

³ The use of this has already been enjoined at Mahāvagga I, 25, 9, 10. It was to be tied on round the waist, over the waist-cloth, to keep it in its place.

⁴ It is curious that kaṭi-suttakam, a kind of girdle which would seem properly to belong here, has been included in a former list of forbidden articles at V, 2, 1.

gether¹, those made like the head of a water-snake², girdles with tambourines on them³, girdles with beads on (or with ornaments hanging from them)⁴. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, girdles of two kinds—those made of strips of cloth, and those⁵

The borders of the girdles decayed through age.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, an edging of brighter material⁶ and strengthening at the ends⁷.’

The end of the girdle where the knot was tied decayed through age⁸.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a buckle⁹.’

[A paragraph on the substances of which it may be made, as usual, see Mahāvagga VI, 12, 3; Kulla-

¹ Kalābukam. See Buddhaghosa’s note at p. 319 of the text, and compare Böhtlingk-Roth under kalāpa, kalāpaka.

² Deddubhakam nāma udaka-sappi-sisa-sadisam (B.). Deddubha corresponds to the later Sanskrit dundubha, an older form of which is dundubha.

³ Muraga, literally, ‘tambourines;’ but see Buddhaghosa’s note, loc. cit.

⁴ Maddavīnam nāma pāmaṅga-saṅghānam (B.). On pāmaṅga, see our note at Kullavagga V, 2, 1.

⁵ Sūkarāntakam. See Buddhaghosa’s note at p. 319 of the text. We do not venture to translate the term.

⁶ Sobhanam nāma vetthetvā mukha-vaṭṭi-sibhanam (B.). In the Magghima Sīla, § 3, sobhanakam or sobhana-karaṇam (so Rh. D.’s MS.) is a kind of game or show.

⁷ Gunakam nāma mudika(? muddhika)-saṅghānena sibbanam (B.). Clough, under guṇa, gives inter alia, 1. fastening; 2. a plant of the fibres of which bow-strings are made; 3. bow-string.

⁸ Pavananto ti pāsanto (B.).

⁹ Vidho. But both the reading and the explanation are uncertain, and Buddhaghosa says nothing. The word occurs also, and apparently in the same sense, in the Old Commentary on the 86th Pāṭiṭṭiya.

vagga V, 5, 2, &c., adding at the end 'and made of string.']

3. Now at the time the venerable Ānanda went into the village for alms with light garments on¹; and his garments were blown up by a whirlwind.

The venerable Ānanda, on returning to the Ārāma, told this matter to the Bhikkhus; and the Bhikkhus told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, a block² (to be used as a weight) or a chain³.'

[Similar paragraph to that just above as to the substances of which the block may be made.]

Now at that time the Bhikkhus fastened the block or the chain immediately on to their robes; and the robes gave way.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, a piece of phalaka cloth⁴ to attach the block or the chain to.'

They fastened the phalaka cloth for the block or the chain on to the edge of the robe; and the corner came open⁵.

¹ Samghāsiyo in the plural must mean garments and not waist-cloths only. See the parallel passage in the Bhikkhuni-vibhaṅga, Pāṭikīya XCVI.

² Gaṇṭhikam. The use of this article is referred to in VIII, 4, 3, and at Dhammapada, p. 372. That gaṇṭhi means a block, usually of wood, is clear from the use of dhamma-gaṇṭhikam at Gāṭaka I, 150 (spelt gaṇḍika however at II, 124), compared with gaṇṭhi (block of sandal-wood) above, V, 8, 1. The word occurs also in the Old Commentary on the 86th Pāṭikīya.

³ Pāsakam, which does not correspond to Sanskrit prāsaka here, but to pāsaka = pāsa (Böhtlingk-Roth give inter alia, 'Sahl oder Leiste am Anfange eines Gewebes'). Compare pāsanta in Buddhaghosa on maḍḍhāvāḷakam in the next section.

⁴ See our note on this word at Mahāvagga VIII, 28, 2.

⁵ That is, perhaps, the weight dragged the robe to one side and the legs were visible through the opening.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to fasten the phalaka cloth for the block on the edge of the robe, and to fasten the phalaka cloth for the chain seven or eight finger-breadths up the robe.'

4. Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus wore (&c., as usual, ending with)

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to wear your under garments arranged as laymen do, nor arranged with appendages like elephant-trunks¹, nor arranged like fishing-nets², nor arranged with four corners showing³, nor arranged like flower-stands⁴, nor arranged like rows of jewelry⁵. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

[Similar paragraph, ending]

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to wear your upper⁶

¹ Hatthi-sonḍakam nāma nābhi-mūlato hatthi-sonḍa-saṇḥānam olambakam katvā nivattham, koṭika-itthīnam nivāsanaṃ viya (B.).

² Maḁḁha-vāḷakam nāma ekato dasantam ekato pāsantam olambitvā nivattham (B.).

³ Katu-kannakam upari dve hetthato dve evaṃ kattāro kanne dassetvā nivattham (B.).

⁴ Tāla-vanṭakam nāma tālavant'-ākārena sātakam olambitvā nivāsanaṃ (B.). See our note on tālavanta above, V, 22, 2, and on āmaḷaka-vanṭika-pīḥam below, VI, 2, 4.

⁵ Sata-vallikam nāma dīgha-sātakam aneka-kkhattum obhaṇṇitvā ovaṭṭikam karontena nivattham vā, padakkhina-passesu vā nirantaram valiyo dassetvā nivattham. Sake pana gānuto patthāya eko vā dve vā valiyo paññāyanti, vaṭṭati (B.). Compare vallikā and ovaṭṭikam at V, 2, 1. Buddhaghosa's second explanation would be possible if the reading were sata-valikam, and is probably only a pis aller, due to the difficulty of the first, which we have adopted doubtfully.

⁶ Pārupati as opposed to nivāseti above. Compare Dhammapada, pp. 114, 376; Gāṭaka, vol. i, p. 57, line 16.

garments as the laymen do. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

5. [Similar paragraph, ending]

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to wear your under garments¹ as the king's porters do¹. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

30.

1. Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus carried a double pingo (a yoke over the shoulders with the weight to be carried on both sides).

People murmured, &c., saying, 'Like the king's porters².'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to carry a double pingo. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to carry a single pingo, a pingo for two bearers³, and to carry weights on your head, or your shoulders, or against your hips⁴, and suspended over your backs.'

31.

1. Now at that time the Bhikkhus did not use tooth-sticks⁵, and their mouths got a bad odour.

¹ Samvelliyaṃ nivāsetabbam See Buddhaghosa's note at p. 319 of the text.

² Munda-vallī or -veṭṭhi. See the note from the Samanta Pāsādikā at p. 319 of the text.

³ Antarā-kāgam nāma magghe laggetvā dvīhi vahitabbam bhāram (B.).

⁴ That is held round by the arm, and resting against the side of the hips. Women in India commonly carry their children so, the children sitting on the hip, with one leg in front and one behind.

⁵ Danta-katṭham, not 'tooth-brushes,' as Childers translates.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'There are these five disadvantages, O Bhikkhus, in not using tooth-sticks—it is bad for the eyes¹—the mouth becomes bad-smelling—the passages by which the flavours of the food pass are not pure—bile and phlegm get into² the food—and the food does not taste well³ to him (who does not use them). These are the five disadvantages, O Bhikkhus, in not using tooth-sticks.'

'There are five advantages, O Bhikkhus, (&c., the converse of the last).'

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, tooth-sticks.'

2. Now at that time the Kāḍḍaggiya Bhikkhus used long tooth-sticks; and even struck the Sāmaṇeras with them.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to use long tooth-

Mechanical skill had not advanced so far in those days; and we hear nothing of brushes of any kind (see above, V, 2, 3, as to hair-dressing). The 'tooth-sticks' were bits of sweet-smelling wood or root, or creeper (see Gātaka I, 80; Mahāvamsa, p. 23), the ends of which were to be masticated as a dentifrice, not rubbed on the teeth. After using them the mouth was rinsed out with water; and so in all other passages in the Khandhakas where they are mentioned (always in reference to the duty of providing them), it is in connection with the bringing of water for that purpose.

¹ This has of course nothing to do with keeping the teeth white and beautiful; that was not the purpose which the tooth-sticks were designed to effect. There seems to have been really some idea that the use of them was good for the eye-sight. So Buddhaḥghosa says here, aḥakkhussaṇṇaṃ ti ḥakkhūṇaṃ hitaṃ ma hoti, pari-hāṇiṃ ganeti, quite in accordance with the Sanskrit ḥakṣhushya. The words recur below, VI, 2, 2, in the same sense.

² Pariyonandhanti. Literally, 'envelope,' 'cover.'

³ Na ḥḥādeti. This is a different word from ḥḥādeti, 'to cover.' It is ḥḥad No. 2 in Böhtlingk-Roth.

sticks. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, tooth-sticks up to eight finger-breadths in length. And Sāmañeras are not to be struck with them. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu, when using too short a tooth-stick, got it stuck in his throat.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to use too short a tooth-stick. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, tooth-sticks four finger-breadths long at the least.'

32.

1. Now at that time the Kāḍhagga Bhikkhus set the woods on fire.

People murmured, &c., saying, 'Like the charcoal burners.'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to set woods on fire. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time the Vihāras were hidden under masses of grass¹, and when the woods were set on fire the Vihāras were burnt. The Bhikkhus, fearing to offend, would not make a counter-fire for their own protection.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, when the woods are on fire to make a counter-fire¹, and thus afford yourselves protection.'

¹ Tina-gahanā. Not covered with thatch, the word for which is tina-kkhanā. See V, 11, 6; V, 14, 3, &c.

2. Now at that time the Kabbaggiya Bhikkhus climbed up trees, and jumped from tree to tree.

People murmured, &c., saying, 'Like monkeys.'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to climb up trees. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time, when a certain Bhikkhu in the Kosala country was going to Sāvatti, an elephant pursued him on the way. And that Bhikkhu, when he had run up to the foot of a tree, fearing to offend, did not climb up. The elephant passed on another way.

That Bhikkhu, on arriving at Sāvatti, told this matter to the Bhikkhus (and the Bhikkhus told this matter to the Blessed One²).

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, when there shall be something to be done to ascend a tree to the height of a man; and in cases of misfortune as high as you like.'

33.

1. Now at that time there were two brothers, Bhikkhus, by name Yameḷu and Tekula³, Brāh-mans by birth, excelling in speech, excelling in pronunciation. These went up to the place where the Blessed One was, and when they had come there, they saluted the Blessed One, and took their seats on one side. And so sitting those Bhikkhus spake to the Blessed One thus :

¹ Paḍaggim dātum. See the story at Gātaka I, 212, and foll.

² Omitted in the text.

³ Yameḷutekulā. It is possible that this compound should be dissolved into Yameḷa and Utekula. Compare the word Yameḷe at verse 35 of the Uddāna (which stands where a nominative should stand, judging by the form of the other words in the Uddāna). A comma has there been omitted by misprint after Yameḷe.

‘At the present time, Lord, Bhikkhus, differing in name, differing in lineage, differing in birth, differing in family, have gone forth (from the world). These corrupt the word of the Buddhas by (repeating it in) their own dialect. Let us, Lord, put the word of the Buddhas into (Sanskrit) verse¹.’

‘How can you, O foolish ones, speak thus, saying, “Let us, Lord, put the word of the Buddhas into verse?” This will not conduce, O foolish ones, either to the conversion of the unconverted, or to the increase of the converted ; but rather to those who have not been converted being not converted, and to the turning back of those who have been converted.’

And when the Blessed One had rebuked those Bhikkhus, and had delivered a religious discourse², he addressed the Bhikkhus, and said :

¹ We think that in these words (khandaso âropema) there does lie a reference to the earlier Sanskrit. And this especially for four reasons : firstly, this is required by the antithesis to ‘their own dialect ;’ secondly, the use of the word khandasi in Pāṇini, where it always means precisely ‘in the Veda-dialect,’ requires it ; thirdly, it is difficult to understand otherwise the mention of ‘Brāhmins by birth ;’ and fourthly, this is in accordance with the traditional interpretation of the passage handed down among the Bhikkhus. Buddhaghosa says, khandaso âropemâ ti Vedam viya sakkata-bhāsāya vātanā-maggam âropema. Sakkata is of course Sanskṛita.

² See the substance intended at Kullavagga I, 1, 3.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to put the word of the Buddhas into (Sanskrit) verse. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to learn the word of the Buddhas each in his own dialect¹.’

2. Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus learnt the Lokāyata system².

People murmured, &c., saying, ‘Like those who still enjoy the pleasures of the world!’

The Bhikkhus heard of the people thus murmuring; and those Bhikkhus told the matter to the Blessed One.

‘Now can a man who holds the Lokāyata as valuable reach up, O Bhikkhus, to the full advantage of, or attain to full growth in, to full breadth in this doctrine and discipline³?’

‘This cannot be, Lord.’

‘Or can a man who holds this doctrine and discipline to be valuable learn the Lokāyata system?’

¹ On the historical conclusions which may be drawn from this tradition, see H. O.’s introduction to the text of the Mahāvagga, pp. xlix and following.

² This is mentioned also in the Assalāyana Sutta (at the beginning), and in the same terms in the Milinda Paṇḥa, p. 10, as one of the branches of learning distinctive of well-educated Brāhmins. It is condemned among other ‘low arts’ in the very ancient Mahā Sīla, § 5. (See Rh. D.’s ‘Buddhist Suttas from the Pāli,’ p. 199, and his note on the age of this work, ibid. p. 188.) Among later works, the Nepalese Buddhists refer to it as one of the things with which a Bodhisattva will not condescend to occupy himself (Lotus of the Good Law, ch. xiii, Burnouf’s version, p. 168), and in which good disciples will take no pleasure (ibid. p. 280). Buddhaghosa has a note on the passage in the Mahā Sīla (quoted by Childers sub voce), which shows that it was understood in his time to be, or rather to have been, a system of casuistry.

³ So also in the Ketokhila Sutta 2 (translated in Rh. D.’s ‘Buddhist Suttas from the Pāli,’ p. 223).

‘This cannot be, Lord.’

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to learn the Lokâyata system. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus taught the Lokâyata system.

People murmured, &c., saying, ‘Like those still enjoying the pleasures of the world!’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to teach the Lokâyata system. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

[Similar paragraphs to the last, ending]

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to learn—to teach—the low arts¹ (of divination, spells, omens, astrology, sacrifices to gods, witchcraft, and quackery).’

3. Now at that time the Blessed One when, surrounded by a great assembly, he was preaching the Dhamma, sneezed. The Bhikkhus raised a great and mighty shout, ‘Long life to our Lord the Blessed One! Long life to the Happy One!’ and by the sound thereof the discourse was interrupted. Then the Blessed One said to the Bhikkhus :

‘Now if when a man has sneezed, O Bhikkhus, some one says, “Long life to you,” can he live or die on that account?’

‘Not so, Lord.’

¹ Tirakkhâna-viggâ. Literally, ‘brutish, or beastly, wisdom.’ These are set out in full in the seven sections of the Mahâ Sīla (translated in Rh. D.’s ‘Buddhist Suttas from the Pāli,’ pp. 196–200). As noticed above, the Lokâyata system is there mentioned (§ 5) as one of them. Learning or teaching these things are forbidden in almost identical terms to the Bhikkhunis in the Bhikkhuni-vibhaṅga, Pāṭṭiyas XLIX and L.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, when one has sneezed, to call out, “Long life to you.” Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa¹.’

Now at that time people said to the Bhikkhus when they sneezed, ‘Long life to your reverence!’ and the Bhikkhus, fearing to offend, gave no reply. The people murmured, were annoyed, and were indignant, saying, ‘How can the Sakya-puttiya Samanas omit to reply when people say, “Long life to your reverence?”’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘Laymen, O Bhikkhus, are given to lucky phrases². I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to reply, “May you live long!” to laymen who say to you, “Long life to your reverence!”’

34.

1. Now at that time the Blessed One when, surrounded by a great assembly, he was preaching the Dhamma, was seated. And a certain Bhikkhu, who had eaten onions, sat down apart, thinking, ‘Let not the Bhikkhus be annoyed³!’

The Blessed One saw that Bhikkhu sitting apart; and on seeing him, he said to the Bhikkhus, ‘Why now, O Bhikkhus, is that Bhikkhu seated apart?’

‘This Bhikkhu, Lord, has eaten onions, and has

¹ This story forms the Introductory Story also to the Gaggā Gâtaka (No. 155 in Fausböll's edition). On the superstition here condemned, see Dr. Morris's remarks in the ‘Contemporary Review’ for May, 1881.

² Gihî bhikkhave maṅgalikā.

³ Vyâbâhimsu is for vyâbâdhimsu. See p. 320 of the edition of the text.

seated himself apart in order not to annoy the Bhikkhus.'

'But ought, O Bhikkhus, anything to be eaten, that will cause the eater to keep away from such a preaching of the Dhamma as this?'

'No, indeed, Lord.'

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to eat onions. Who-soever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa¹.'

2. Now at that time the venerable Sâriputta had wind in his stomach. And the venerable Mahâ Moggallâna went up to the place where the venerable Sâriputta was, and when he had come there, he said to the venerable Sâriputta :

'How did you formerly, friend Sâriputta, get relief, when you had wind in the stomach?'

'By eating onions, my friend².'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to eat onions on account of disease.'

35.

1. Now at that time the Bhikkhus made water here and there in the Ârâma, and the Ârâma was defiled.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to make water at one side (of the Ârâma).'

¹ There is a similar rule for the Bhikkhunis in the Bhikkhunî-vibhaṅga, Pâkittiya I. So also onions are mentioned among the things a Gain Bhikkhu may not accept (Âyâraṅga Sutta II, 1, 8, 13).

² It is gruel of various kinds that is prescribed for this malady in Mahâvagga VI, 16, 3-17, 2.

The Ārāma became offensive. . . .

[The rest of this chapter is scarcely translatable. It records in like manner the various sanitary difficulties which arose from the living together of a number of Bhikkhus. Each such difficulty is quite solemnly said to have been reported to the Blessed One, and he is said to have found a way out of it. The result of the whole is, that the building of privies is enjoined, and all the contrivances, such as seats, doors, steps, plastering, &c., already mentioned with respect to the bath-room, above, V, 14, are here repeated verbatim¹.]

36.

Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus followed evil practices such as these—they used to plant [&c., word for word as in the long list at I, 13, 1, 2, down to the end].

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to follow manifold evil practices. Whosoever does so, shall be dealt with according to the law.’

37.

1. Now at the time when the venerable Kassapa of Uruveḷa went forth (from the world), much property in brass and wood and earthenware came into the possession of the *Samgha*². And the

¹ For some of the details, compare Mahāvagga V, 8, 3, and Mahāvagga I, 25, 19=Kullavagga VIII, 1, 5, and Kullavagga VIII, 9 and 10.

² See Mahāvagga I, 20, 19–21.

Bhikkhus thought, 'What kinds of brass ware—of wooden things—of earthenware¹—has the Blessed One allowed, and what kinds has he not allowed?'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

Then the Blessed One, on that occasion and in that connection, when he had delivered a religious discourse, addressed the Bhikkhus, and said :

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, all kinds of brass ware, except weapons²—all kinds of wooden things, except divans³, and long-armed chairs³, and bowls⁴, and shoes⁵,—and all kinds of earthenware, except *katikas*⁶, and large earthen vessels to be used as huts to live in⁷.'

Here ends the Fifth Khandhaka, on minor details.

¹ See Kullavagga VIII, 3, 1.

² Paharanattham katan paharanî ti vuḍḍati. Yassa kassa ki āvudha-samghâtass' etam adhivāṭanam (B.).

³ See Mahāvagga V, 10, 4, 5.

⁴ See Kullavagga V, 8, 2.

⁵ See Mahāvagga V, 6, 4.

⁶ On this word see our note above at V, 22, 1.

⁷ This is the only one of the things here mentioned not referred to in previous rules. Buddhaghosa says, Kumbha-kārikā ti Dhaniyass' eva sabba-mattikāmaya-kūṭi vuḍḍati. The story of Dhaniya is given in the text of the Vinaya, vol. iii, pp. 42 and following.

SIXTH KHANDHAKA.

ON DWELLINGS AND FURNITURE.

1.

1. Now at that time the Blessed Buddha¹ was staying at Rāgagaha in the Veḷuvana, in the Kalandaka Nivāpa². And at that time no permission had been given to the Bhikkhus by the Blessed One with respect to dwellings. So the Bhikkhus dwelt now here, now there—in the woods, at the foot of trees, on hill-sides, in grottoes, in mountain caves, in cemeteries, in forests, in open plains, and in heaps of straw. And at early morn they came in from this place or from that place—from the woods (&c., as before) decorous in their walking and turning, in their looking on or looking round, in stretching out their arms or in drawing them back, with eyes cast down, and dignified in deportment³.

2. Now at that time the Setthi of Rāgagaha went at early morn to his garden. And the Setthi of ¹ Our readers will have noticed that the phrase at the beginning of each Khandhaka is 'the Blessed Buddha,' and not merely 'the Blessed One.' It recurs besides only in the constantly-repeated paragraph 'The Blessed Buddha rebuked them, saying, &c.' (see, for instance, Kullavagga I, 1, 2, where the connection is given in full).

² Compare the note on Mahāvagga III, 1, 1.

³ So also Mahāvagga I, 23, 2, and frequently in the Suttas.

Râgagaha saw those Bhikkhus coming in from this place and from that place, from the woods (&c., as in § 1, down to the end), and on seeing them he took pleasure therein¹. And the Setthi of Râgagaha went up to those Bhikkhus, and said to them :

‘If, Sirs, I were to have dwellings erected for you, would you take up your abode in those dwellings?’

‘Not so, O householder. Dwellings have not been allowed by the Blessed One.’

‘Then, Sirs, ask the Blessed One about it, and let me know.’

‘Very well, O householder,’ said they, in assent to the Setthi of Râgagaha. And they went up to the Blessed One, and saluted him, and took their seats on one side. And when they were so seated, they said to the Blessed One :

‘The Setthi of Râgagaha, Lord, wishes to have dwellings erected for us. What, Lord, should be done?’

Then the Blessed One, on that occasion and in that connection, when he had delivered a religious discourse, addressed the Bhikkhus, and said :

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, abodes of five kinds—Vihâras, Addhayogas, storied dwellings, attics, caves².’

3. Then those Bhikkhus went up to the Setthi of Râgagaha, and said to him : ‘The Blessed One, Sir, has allowed us dwellings ; do, therefore, what seemeth to thee good.’ And the Setthi of Râgagaha had sixty dwelling-places put up in one day.

¹ So also of Bimbisâra in the Gâtaka Commentary, I, 66.

² Buddhaghosa’s note on these pañka lenâni has already been given in our note above, Mahāvagga I, 30, 4.

4. And when the Setthi of Râgagaha had completed those sixty dwelling-places, he went up to the place where the Blessed One was, and [invited him and the Bhikkhu Samgha for the morrow's meal; and so on, as usual¹, down to the time when, after the meal, the Setthi] said to the Blessed One :

'I have had, Lord, these sixty dwelling-places made for the sake of merit, and for the sake of heaven. What am I to do, Lord, with respect to them?'

'Then, O householder, dedicate² these sixty dwelling-places to the Samgha of the four directions, whether now present, or hereafter to arrive.'

'Even so, Lord!' said the Setthi of Râgagaha, in assent to the Blessed One, and he dedicated those sixty dwelling-places to the use of the Samgha of the four directions whether present or to come³.

5. Then the Blessed One gave thanks to the Setthi of Râgagaha in these verses⁴:

'1. Cold he wards off and heat, so also beasts of prey,
And creeping things and gnats, and rains in the wet season.
And when the dreaded heated winds arise,
they are kept off.

¹ See, for instance, Mahâvagga VI, 30, or Kullavagga V, 27.

² Literally, 'establish' (paṭiṭṭhâpehi).

³ This formula of dedication has been constantly found in rock-inscriptions in India and Ceylon over the ancient cave-dwellings of Buddhist hermits. See Rh. D. in the 'Indian Antiquary' for May, 1872.

⁴ The following verses recur below at VI, 9, 2; and also in that connection in the Gâtaka Commentary, I, 93.

2. To give Vihâras to the Samgha, wherein in safety and in peace
To meditate and think at ease, the Buddha calls the best of gifts. .
3. Let then the able man, regarding his own weal,
Have pleasant monasteries built, and lodge
there learned men ¹.
4. Let him with cheerful mind give food to them,
and drink,
Raiment, and dwelling-places, to the upright in heart.
5. Then shall they preach to him the Truth—
The Truth dispelling every grief—
Which Truth when here that man perceives
He sins no more, and dies away ² !'

And when the Blessed One had given thanks to the Setthi of Râgagaha in these verses, he rose from his seat, and departed thence.

2.

1. And the people heard, saying, 'Vihâras have been allowed by the Blessed One.' And they built Vihâras zealously. Those Vihâras had no doors ³, and snakes, scorpions, and centipedes got in.

¹ This verse forms the subject of one of the 'Questions of Milinda' (ed. Trenckner, p. 211).

² The above verses may have stood originally in a different context from that in which they have been handed down, as the opening phrase sîtam pañhanti would be more intelligible if the word vihâro occurred in the immediately preceding clause.

³ Kavâṭa. This is the special word for door. Dvâra often roughly translated door, is not really 'door,' but 'door-' or 'gate-way,' with special reference to the aperture and not to that by which the aperture could be closed. The latter word is also

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, a door¹.'

They made holes in the wall, and tied the door on with string or with creepers, These were eaten by mice and white ants ; and when the things by which the doors had been tied on had been eaten away, the doors fell.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, door-posts and lintel, hollow like a mortar, for the door to revolve in, and projections to the door for it to revolve on.'

The doors would not come to.

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, a hole to pass a string through with which to pull the door to, and a string for that purpose.'

The doors could not be made fast².

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, rings on the door for the bolt to work along in, blocks of wood fixed to the edge of the door-post and containing a cavity for the bolt to go into, a pin to secure the bolt by, and a bolt.'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus were not able to open the door.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

different from 'door,' in that it is never used for the entrance into an inner chamber. It is always the outer entrance (and the entrance at the front as distinguished from the entrance at the back) of a house, or one of the principal entrances to a walled town or village. See, for instance, Pāṭiṭiya XIX ; Kullavagga VIII, 5, 1, VIII, 8, 1 ; Gāṭaka I, 63, 114, 346, 361, II, 63, 140.

¹ On this and the following details, compare V, 14, 3, and the notes there.

² Thakīyanti: literally, 'covered, or stopped, up.' The same word is used at Kullavagga VIII, 1, 5, of closing up the lattices mentioned in the next section (VI, 2, 2).

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, key-holes, and keys of three kinds—bronze keys, and keys of hard wood, and keys of horn.’

When anybody unlocked them¹, and entered, the Vihâras became unprotected.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a yantaka, and a pin to it².’

2. Now at that time the Vihâras were thatched; and in the cold season they were cold, and in the hot season hot.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to cover them (with skins)³, and to plaster them within and without.’

Now at that time the Vihâras had no windows, and they were bad for the eyes, and had a disagreeable odour.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, windows of three kinds—windows made with railings⁴, windows made with network⁵, and windows made with slips of wood⁶.’

¹ Ugghâ/etvâ, an expression used in VIII, 1, 1 of undoing the bolt (gha/ikâ) just referred to.

² Yantakaṃ sūṭikam, which is the only expression here used which has not already occurred above at V, 14, 3. Buddhaghosa says, Yantaka-sūṭikan ti ettha yaṃ yaṃ gānāti taṃ taṃ yantakaṃ. Tassa vivara-sūṭikam kuṇṭhikam kātum vaṭṭati.

³ See the note at V, 14, 3.

⁴ Vedikā-vātapānaṃ nāma kētiye vedikā-sadisam (B.). See our note on vedikā above, V, 14, 2. These windows or lattices are mentioned in Kullavagga VIII, 1, 5; Mahāvagga I, 25, 18.

⁵ Gāla-vātapānaṃ nāma gālaka-baddham (B.). Gālam, literally ‘net,’ is given as a word for ‘window’ at Abhidhāna-ppadīpikā, verse 216. The expression probably corresponds to our ‘lattice,’ and does not mean that an actual net was used. Compare the Anglo-Indian ‘jalousie.’

⁶ Salāka-vātapānaṃ nāma thambhaka-vātapānaṃ (B.). Pos-

Squirrels and bats¹ entered through the opening for the window.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, window-blinds (or curtains)².’

The squirrels and bats still got in through the interstices between the blind (and the wall).

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, shutters, and rolls or bags (to fill up interstices with)³.

3. Now at that time the Bhikkhus slept on the floor, and both their limbs and their robes became dirty.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, mats made of grass.’

The mats were eaten by mice and white ants.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a solid bench or divan (built up against the wall of a room, or under the verandah against the outside wall of the house)⁴.

sibly this means with slips of wood arranged horizontally as in our venetian blinds.

¹ Vagguliyo. This habit of the bat and its harmlessness are referred to in Milinda Panha, p. 404. Compare the Sanskrit valgulī.

² Kakkalikaṇa ti. Ettha kolaka-pāda-puññhaṇaṃ bandhitum anugānāmi ti attho (B.). The word kakkali occurs below, VI, 19, probably in the sense here meant.

³ Vātapāna-bhisī ti vātapāna-pamāṇena bhisim katvā bandhitum anugānāmi ti attho (B.). Probably like the sand-bags used in England to keep out draughts. On the use of the word in other connections, see our note on Mahāvagga VIII, 13, 1, and the Old Commentary on Pāṭi XIV (where five kinds are named) with the Kankhā-vitarāṇi on the last passage quoted by Minayeff, p. 86.

⁴ Midḍhim. See the note on V, 9, 4. Native huts in Ceylon always have such solid benches (of brick or mud covered with plaster) built up against the wall under the verandah: and they are commonly used as sleeping-places for the unmarried males

On the solid bench their limbs ached.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, bedsteads made of laths of split bamboo¹.’

Now at that time a bier-like masâraka² bedstead—a masâraka chair—a bier-like bundikâbaddha³ bedstead—a bundikâbaddha chair—a bier-like kulîra-pâdaka⁴ bedstead—a kulîra-pâdaka chair—a bier-like âhaṭṭa-pâdaka⁵ bedstead—an âhaṭṭa-pâdaka chair—had come into the possession of the Samgha.

in the house. Waskaḍuwa Subhûti has this in his mind in the explanation he gives in English of vedikâ (Abhidhâna-ppadîpikâ, verse 222), though he applies it to the wrong word.

¹ Bidala-mañṇakam nâma vetta-mañṇam, veḷu-vilivâhi vâ vitam (B.). The word occurs in the Gâtaka Commentary I, 9, lines 26, 34. Compare the Sanskrit bidala and vidala.

² Masârako, on which Buddhaghosa says nothing here; but on the Old Commentary to the 14th Pâkittiya, where all the four words in this paragraph also occur, he has the following note (see Minayeff, p. 68): Masârako ti mañṇa-pâde vigghitvâ tattha aṇiyo pavesetvâ kato—just the opposite therefore of âhaṭṭa-pâdako below. On aṇi, compare our note to the 87th Pâkittiya. The four names recur, of chairs only, in the Old Commentary on the 87th and 88th Pâkittiyas.

³ Buddhaghosa, loc. cit., says, Bundikâbaddho ti aṇihi mañṇa-pâde damsâpetvâ pallaṅka-samkhepema kato. The first word, bundika, may mean a small bolt.

⁴ Kulîra-pâdako ti assa-menādinam pâda-sadisehi pâdakehi kato: yo vâ pana koṭi vaṅka-pâdako ayam kulîra-pâdako (B. loc. cit.). A bedstead or chair with curved or carved legs, especially when carved to represent animals' feet. Kulîra is a crab.

⁵ Âhaṭṭa-pâdako ti. Ayam pana âhaṭṭa-pâdako nâma mañṇo aṅge vigghitvâ kato hotiṭi evam parato pâliyam yeva vutto. Tasmâ aṇiyo vigghitvâ tattha pâda-sikham pavesetvâ upari ânim datvâ kata-mañṇo âhaṭṭa-pâdako ti veditabbo (B. loc. cit.). This is in agreement with the Old Commentary on the 18th Pâkittiya in which this word already occurs. Compare âhaṭṭa in the Âyâ-ranga Sûya II, 1, 1, 2, II, 1, 10, 6.

They told this matter (in each case) to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, (each of these things).’

4. Now at that time a rectangular chair¹—an arm-chair²—a sofa³—a sofa with arms to it⁴—a state chair⁵—a cushioned chair⁶—a chair raised on a pedestal⁷—a chair with many legs⁸—a board (to recline on)⁹—a cane-bottomed chair¹⁰—a straw-bottomed chair—had come into the possession of the Samgha.

They told this matter (in each case) to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, (each of these things).’

¹ Âsandiko. Buddhaghosa says, Âsandako (sic) ti katurassa-pîṭham vukkati. An âsandi (cushioned chair) is forbidden at Mahāvagga V, 10, 4.

² Ukkakam pi âsandikan ti vatanato ekato-bhâgena dgha-pîṭham eva hi al/haṅgula-pâdakam vaṭṭati (B.).

³ Sattaṅgo nâma tîsu disâsu apassayam katvâ maṇḍo (B.). On apassayam, compare note 9.

⁴ Ukkako pi sattaṅgo. Compare note 2.

⁵ Bhadda-pîṭhan ti vetta-mayam pîṭham vukkati (B.). We follow Böhrling-Roth sub voce bhadra-pîṭha.

⁶ Pîṭhikâ ti pilotika-baddham pîṭham eva (B.). Childers says ‘bench, stool.’ Compare Sanskrit pîṭhaka (in the addenda to the Petersburg Dictionary).

⁷ Eḷaka-pâdaka-pîṭham nâma dâru-paṭṭikâya upari pâdeḷapetvâ bhogana-phalakam viya kata-pîṭham vukkati (B.).

⁸ Âmaḷaka-vanṭika-pîṭham nâma âmaḷakâkârena yogitam bahu-pâda-pîṭham (B.). Compare tâlavanṭa at V, 22, 2, and tâla-vanṭaka at V, 29, 4.

⁹ Phalakam. Compare apassena-phalakam at Mahāvagga I, 25, 12, and below, Kullavagga VI, 20, 2.

¹⁰ Kokkham nâma vâkamayam vâ usîramayam vâ muṅga-mayam vâ babbagamayam vâ anto samvetṭetvâ baddham hoti, says the Old Commentary on the 14th Pâkittiya. Buddhaghosa gives here the same explanation, omitting vâka.

5. Now at that time the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus slept on lofty beds.

People coming on a visit to the Vihâra, when they saw them, murmured, &c., saying, 'Like those who still live in the pleasure of the world.'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to sleep on lofty beds. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa¹.'

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu, when sleeping on a low couch, was bitten by a snake².

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, supports to your bedsteads³.'

Now at that time the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus used lofty supports to their bedsteads, and rocked themselves with these bedstead supports, backwards and forwards⁴.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to use lofty supports to your bedsteads. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you such supports up to eight inches in length.'

6. Now at that time a quantity of string had come into the possession of the Samgha.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to weave (a texture of string across) the bedstead.'

Much string was taken up by (passing it round) the sides of the bedstead.

¹ Compare the 8th Kūla Sīla (Rh. D.'s 'Buddhist Suttas,' p. 191).

² Compare Kullavagga V, 6.

³ Mañka-paṭipādakam mentioned in Mahāvagga I, 25, 16.

⁴ Pavedhenti. The reading is doubtful, but the suggestion at p. 321 of the text must be withdrawn.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to pierce the sides of the bedstead, and thus to weave the string across and across¹.'

A cloth had come into their possession.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to use it as a carpet².'

A mattress stuffed with cotton³ had come into their possession.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to comb out the cotton, and make the cotton up into pillows⁴ if it be of any of these three kinds—cotton produced on trees, cotton produced on creepers, cotton produced from Potaki-grass.'

Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus made use of pillows half the size of a man's body.

People who came on a visit to the Vihâras murmured, &c., on seeing this, saying, 'Like those who still enjoy the pleasures of the world.'

¹ A//hapadakam vetum. Buddhaghosa says nothing, either here or at Mahāvagga VIII, 21, where the word also occurs. A//hapada-//hâpana at Gâtaka II, 5, 14, is a mode of dressing the hair, probably in broad plaits crossing each other so as to resemble the squares of a chessboard.

² Or 'rug.' Kilimikâ ti nâma parikammakatâya bhûmiyâ kkhavi-samrakkhanatthâya attharanam vukkati (B.). It is probably the same word as, or connected with, kimilikâ, used by Buddhaghosa in note 5 on Mahāvagga VII, 1, 5, and explained by him (in Minayeff, p. 87, line 5) as tâla-pannâdhi katâ. Both words are possibly diminutives of kola, and it is not improbable that the reading should be kilimikâ in both cases, as Buddhaghosa so spells the word again in his note below on VI, 2, 7.

³ Tûlikâ. This is undoubtedly what is meant to be forbidden in § 5 of the Magghima Sîla, although Grimblot, 'Sept Suttas Palis,' p. 9, reads kulikam. See Mahāvagga V, 10, 4.

⁴ Compare IV, 4, 4, VIII, 1, 3, where such pillows are mentioned among the ordinary belongings of a Vihâra. The present rule is repeated below in VI, 14.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to make use of pillows half the size of a man’s body. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to have pillows the size of a man’s head.’

7. Now at that time there was a festival on a high place¹ at Rāgagaha. The people provided for the use of high officials bolsters stuffed with wool, or cotton cloth, or bark, or grass, or leaves. When the festival had been held they tore open the covers of skin and carried them off. And the Bhikkhus saw much wool, and cotton cloth, and bark, and grass, and leaves thrown away on the spot where the festival had been held; and on seeing this, they told the matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, bolsters² of five kinds—those stuffed with wool, or cotton cloth, or bark, or grass, or talipot leaves.’

Now at that time a bed coverlet had come into the possession of the Saṃgha.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to cover a bolster with it.’

Now at that time the Bhikkhus folded up bed bolsters on to chairs³, and chair bolsters on to bedsteads, and the bolsters came to pieces.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, chairs and bedsteads covered (with upholstered cushions to fit them).’

¹ Giragga-samaggo. See our note above on V, 2, 6.

² Bhisi. See the note on this word at Mahāvagga VIII, 13, 1.

³ Buddhaghosa says here mañka-bhisim piṭhe samharantī ti mañka-piṭhe attharanti attharanatthāya harantī ti yuggati (B.). On this use of samharati compare above, V, 11, 7.

They covered the bedsteads and chairs without putting a cloth beneath them¹, and the stuffing came out from below.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, first to spread out a cloth under the bedsteads or chairs, and then to upholster them.'

They tore off the coverings², and took them away.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to bespatter (the coverings with dye)³.'

They still took them away.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to use coverings coloured in patches⁴.'

They still took them away.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to colour the coverings in patches only the size of a man's hand⁵.'

¹ Ullokam akaritvâ hetthâ ñilimikam adatvâ (B.). The word occurs again at Mahāvagga I, 25, 15 = Kullavagga VIII, 1, 3, where cobwebs are to be removed with a cloth (ullokā!).

² Khavim; but perhaps not necessarily of leather. See the commencement of this section.

³ So that the coverings would be useless for other purposes. The Pāli word is positum, which Buddhaghosa explains thus—hesitun ti (so the Berlin MS.) raganena vâ haliddhāya vâ upari pusitāni dātum. The word is evidently connected not with the root push, but with the roots prish and prush, 'to bespatter'; and is the same as phositun at Mahāvagga VI, 14, 5, which is probably the better reading of the two.

⁴ Bhatti-kammam. The meaning is doubtful, because the reading is uncertain. Buddhaghosa says, Bhitti-kamman ti (sic) bhisi-khaviyā upari bhitti-kammam. The word is probably analogous in formation to our English 'patchwork,' though the 'patches' are not of pieces of different coloured stuffs, but of bits of different colour spread over the same stuff, and whatever its meaning, it is probably the same word as bhati-kamma at V, 9, 2.

⁵ Again both reading and interpretation are open to question. Hattha-bhittin ti paññaṅgula-bhittim is all that Buddhaghosa

3.

1. Now at that time the sleeping-rooms of the Tittihayas were whitewashed, the floors of their rooms were coloured black, and the walls coloured with red chalk¹. Much people went to look at their sleeping-rooms.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, the use in your Vihâras of whitewash, black colouring, and red colouring.’

Now at that time the whitewash would not lie on to the rough walls.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to apply the husks of grain made up into little balls; and when you have thus removed the unevenness with your hands², to lay on the whitewash.’

The whitewash would not adhere.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to apply soft clay; and when you have thus removed the unevenness with your hands², to lay on the whitewash.’

(Still) the whitewash would not adhere.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of slime³ (of trees) or of paste⁴.’

says; and we have followed in our translation the reading of the Sinhalese MS. (see p. 321 of the edition of the text), which brings the word into connection with the preceding phrase.

¹ See V, 11, 6, where all these words recur.

² Pāṇikāya. Buddhaghosa says nothing.

³ Ikkāsa, on which we have nothing to add to Buddhaghosa's note at p. 321 of the edition of the text. It recurs below again in this section.

⁴ Piṭṭha-maddan ti piṭṭha-khalam (B.). Compare the Sanskrit mṛid.

Now at that time the colouring matter of red chalk would not lie on the rough walls.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to apply the husks of grain made up into little balls; and when you have thus removed the unevenness with your hands, to lay on the colouring matter of red chalk.’

The red colour would not adhere.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to apply clay mixed with the red powder which adheres to the grain of rice under the husks¹; and when you have so taken off the unevenness with your hands to lay on the red colouring matter.’

Still the red colouring matter would not adhere.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a paste made of mustard seed², and of oil of beeswax³.’

It lay on the wall too thickly in great drops⁴.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to wipe it down with a cloth⁵.’

Now at that time the black colouring matter did not lie on the rough ground.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to apply husks of grain

¹ Kundaka-mattikan ti kundaka-missaka-mattikam (B.). Compare kundaka-pûvam in the Gâtaka Commentary I, 423 (cakes made of flour mixed with this powder).

² Sâsapa-ku//an ti sâsapa-pi//ham. The word has occurred already at Mahâvagga VI, 14, 5, where the reading is ku//a instead of kudda given in the text here. The latter should be altered in accordance with that passage, and with Buddhaghosa here.

³ Sittha-telakan ti vilina-madhu-sithakam (B.). It is mentioned as used for hair-oil at Kullavagga V, 2, 3.

⁴ Akkussannam hotî ti bindum bindum hutvâ ti//hati, says Buddhaghosa.

⁵ Kolakena pakûddharitum. Buddhaghosa says pakûtharitum ti muññitum; but compare for the right form V, 17, 1.

made up into little balls; and when you have thus removed the unevenness with your hands, to lay on the black colouring matter.'

The black colouring matter would not adhere.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to apply clay mixed with. (the excrement of) earth-worms¹; and when you have thus removed the unevenness with your hands, to lay on the black colouring matter.'

Still the black colouring matter would not adhere.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of slime and astringent liquid².'

2. Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus had imaginative drawings³ painted on their Vihâras—figures of men, and figures of women.

People, when they saw them on going to visit the Vihâras, murmured, &c., saying, 'Like those who still enjoy the pleasures of the world.'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to have imaginative drawings painted—figures of men, and figures of women. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, representations of wreaths and creepers and bone hooks and cupboards¹’

¹ Gandū-mattikaṇ ti ganduppāda-gūtha-mattikaṇ (B.).

² Kasāvaṇ ti āmalaka-hari/akānaṃ kasāvaṇ (B.). Compare Mahāvagga VI, 4.

³ Paṭibhāna-kittam. The Bhikkhunis were forbidden by the 41st Pāṭittiya of the Bhikkhunī-vibhaṅga to go and see such paintings. (Sutta-vibhaṅga II, 298, where a picture gallery, Kittāgāra, belonging to King Pasenadi of Kosala, is mentioned.) We are not quite sure of the connotation of the term, which appears to imply some reproach. Perhaps it means 'suggestive.' Figures as such were not forbidden; and remains of statues and bas reliefs erected in the Vihâras, illustrative of every-day life, have been found in great numbers. In the introductory story to the 26th Pāṭittiya it certainly means 'indecent.'

3. Now at that time the Vihâras had too low a basement (&c., as in V, 11, 6 as to roofing, stairs, and balustrade).

Now at that time the Vihâras were crowded with people². The Bhikkhus were ashamed to lie down to sleep.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of curtains.’

They lifted up the curtains and looked in.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to put up a lath and plaster wall half the height of the Vihâra.’

They looked on from over this half-wall.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to make inner chambers of three kinds—chambers in shape like a palankeen³, chambers in shape like a quart measure⁴, and chambers on an upper storey⁵.’

¹ All these words occur above at V, 11, 6, and V, 14, 4. The meaning of the two last is very doubtful. Perhaps it is intended that these should occupy the space on the walls instead of any ornamentation.

² Âlakamandâ, literally, ‘like Kuvera’s city in heaven.’ Buddhaghosa tells us why. Âlakamandâ ti ekaṅganâ manussâbhikkinnâ. Âkinna-yakkhâ, corresponding to this last word, recurs in the standing description of Âlakamandâ at Mahâ-parinibbâna Sutta V, 43 = Mahâ Sudassana Sutta I, 3. The name of the city is spelt in both those passages with / not l.

³ Sivikâ-gabbho ti taturassa-gabbho says Buddhaghosa.

⁴ Nâ/ikâ-gabbho ti vitthârato dviguna-tigun-âyâmo digha-gabbho (B.). That na/ikâ is used like nâ/î for a bushel measure follows from a comparison of Gâtaka I, 124, last lines, with I, 126, line 3.

⁵ Hammiya-gabbho ti âkâsa-tale kuṅgâra-gabbho mudanda-

Now at that time the Bhikkhus made inner chambers in the middle of small Vihâras, and there was no room to move about in.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to make the inner chambers at one side of small Vihâras, and in the middle of large ones¹.'

4. Now at that time the lower part of the lath and plaster wall of the Vihâra decayed.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, buttresses of timber².'

Rain leaked through on to the lath and plaster wall of the Vihâra³.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, a protecting arrangement⁴ and cement⁵.'

Now at that time a snake fell from the roof on to the back of a certain Bhikkhu. He was terrified, and made an outcry⁶. The Bhikkhus, running up, said to that Bhikkhu: 'Why, Sir, do you make an outcry?' Then that Bhikkhu told the matter to kkhadana-gabbho vâ (B.). Compare our note on Mahāvagga I, 30, 4.

¹ There is a similar injunction at V, 14, 3, with respect to fire-places in bath-rooms.

² Kulaṅka-pādakam. See Buddhaghosa's note at p. 321 of the edition of the text. The remedy here is different from that provided in the similar case, at V, 14, 3, with respect to bath-houses.

³ On the use of ovassati compare V, 16, 1, and VIII, 3, 3.

⁴ Parittāna-kiṭṭikan ti tassa parittānattham kiṭṭikam is all that Buddhaghosa says. Compare the end of § 5.

⁵ Uddha-sudhan ti vatthaka-gomayena ka kharikāya ka sad-dhim maddita-mattikam (B.).

⁶ Vissaram akāsi. See the note on Kullavagga VIII, 1, 1, where the whole incident is similar.

the Bhikkhus, and they told the matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, a ceiling-cloth.’

5. Now at that time the Bhikkhus hung their bags at the feet of the bedsteads, and at the feet of the chairs; and they were gnawed by the mice and white ants.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, pins in the wall, and bone hooks¹.’

Now at that time the Bhikkhus laid aside their robes on the bedsteads and on the chairs, and the robes were torn.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, bamboos to hang your robes on, and strings to hang your robes on².’

Now at that time the Vihâras had no verandahs, and no defences³.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, verandahs⁴, covered terraces⁵, inner verandahs⁶, and over-hanging eaves⁷.’

¹ The use of these has been already referred to at V, 9, 5.

² These have already been allowed in Kullavagga V, 11, 6, and V, 14, 3. The license under the present rule extends only to their use in Vihâras.

³ Apaṭissaranā, which must have some special, technical, meaning unknown to us. Buddhaghosa says nothing.

⁴ Ālindo nāma pamukham vuṭṭati (B.). Compare Abhidhāna-ppadīpikā, verse 218.

⁵ Paghanam nāma yam nikkhamantā ka pavisantā ka pâdehi hananti. Tassa vihâra-dvâre ubhato kuḥam (?) niharitvâ kata-padesass’ etam adhivaṭṭanam. Paghânan ti pi vuṭṭati (B.).

⁶ Pakuḥan ti magghe gabbhassa samantâ pariyâgâro vuṭṭati. Pakuḥan ti pi pâḥo (B.).

⁷ Osarako ti anâṇḍake vihâre vamsam datvâ tato dandake

The verandahs were too public; and the Bhikkhus were ashamed to lie down in them to sleep.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, an arrangement in form of a curtain that can be drawn aside¹, or an arrangement in form of a moveable screen².’

6. Now at that time the Bhikkhus, when taking their midday meal in the open air, were troubled by cold and heat.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, a Service Hall.’

The Service Hall had too low a basement (&c., as in V, 11, 6, down to the end).

Now at that time the Bhikkhus spread their robes out on the ground in the open air, and they became dirty.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, bamboos to hang robes on, and strings to hang robes in, in the open air.

7. The water became warm.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a water-room and a water-shed.’

The water-room had too low a basement (&c., as in V, 11, 6, down to the end).

There were no vessels for the water.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, chank shells and saucers for the water.’

8. Now at that time the Vihâras had no fence round them.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to enclose them with osâretvâ katam khadana-pamukham (B.). At Gâtaka III, 446, it is said of a dying man ‘niharithvâ osârake nipaggâpesum.’

¹ Samsarana-kiziko nâma kakkala-yutto kiziko (B.). Kakkala should be compared with kakkhalikâ at VI, 2, 2, and kakkhali at VI, 19.

² Ugghâ/ana-kiziko, on which Buddhaghosa says nothing.

ramparts (Pākāra) of three kinds—brick walls, stone walls, and wooden fences.’

There was no store-room¹.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a store-room.’

The store-room had too low a basement, and it was flooded with water.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to make it with a high basement.’

The store-room had no door.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a door; with door-posts and lintel, with hollows like a mortar for the door to revolve in, with projections to revolve in those hollows, with rings on the door for the bolt to work along in, with a block of wood fixed into the edge of the door-post, and containing a cavity for the bolt to go into (called the Monkey’s Head), with a pin to secure the bolt by, with a connecting bolt, with a key-hole, with a hole for a string with which the door may be closed, and with a string for that purpose².’

Grass and plaster fell from the store-room.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus (&c., as in V, 14, 4, down to the end of V, 14, 5, as to roofing, flooring, drains, &c.).’

9. Now at that time the Bhikkhus made fire-places here and there in the Parivena, and the Parivena was covered with the remains of the fires³.

¹ Koṭṭhaka. See our note above on V, 14, 4, as to the various allied meanings of this word. Perhaps ‘gateway’ should be chosen as the rendering here, as it clearly must be in the closely allied passage in the next section but one (§ 10). As the chamber supposed always to be built over the gateway could be used as a store-room, the difference is not very essential.

² The whole as above in V, 14, 3, where see the note.

³ Uklāpo. On this use of the word compare Kullavagga VIII, 1, 3.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to make a separate room for the fire at one side.’

The fire-room had too low a basement (&c., as in V, 11, 6, as to flooring, stairs, and balustrade, followed by the paragraph as to the door, and the facing, as in V, 14, 3, &c.).

10. Now at that time the Ârâmas had no fences to them, and goats and cattle injured the plantations¹.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to surround them with fencing of three kinds—bamboo fences, thorn fences, and ditches.’

There was no gateway (kottḥaka), and goats and cattle, even so, injured the plantations.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a gateway, with gates made of stakes interlaced with thorny brakes², with fences (across the gateway) made of the akka plant³, with ornamental screen-work over the gateway⁴, and with bars.’

[Then the paragraphs allowing the roofing, &c., of this kottḥaka as in V, 11, 6, and drains for the Ârâma, as in V, 14, 3.]

11. Now at that time Seniya Bimbisâra, the king of Magadha, wanted to build a pâsâda⁵ (residence),

¹ Uparope. Compare Uparopaka at Gâtaka II, 345.

² Apesiyam. See p. 321 of the edition of the text, reading of course kantḥaka.

³ Akkavâṭa, on which Buddhaghosa says nothing. A kind of dress made from the stalks of the akka plant is mentioned in Mahāvagga VIII, 28, 2.

⁴ Tosana, which is the ornamental erection over a gateway of which such excellent examples in stone have been found at the Sānchi and Bharhut Topes.

⁵ The exact meaning of the word Pâsâda at the time when this covered with cement and clay, for the use of the Samgha. And it occurred to the Bhikkhus, 'What kind of roof now has been allowed by the Blessed One, and what kind of roof has not been allowed?'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, roofing of five kinds—brick roofing, stone roofing, cement roofing, straw roofing, and roofing of leaves.'

End of the First Bhānavāra (or Portion for Recitation).

4.

1. Now at that time the householder Anātha Pindika was the husband of the sister of the Rāgagaha Setthi. And Anātha Pindika the householder went to Rāgagaha on some business or other. Now at that time the Samgha, with the Buddha at its head, had been bidden by the Setthi of Rāgagaha for the morrow's meal. And the Setthi of Rāgagaha gave command to his slaves and work-people, saying, 'So get up at early morn, my men, and cook congey, and cook rice, and prepare curries, and prepare delicacies¹!'

book was written has not yet been precisely ascertained. In later times it meant a building of several storeys, each successive storey being smaller in superficial area than the one immediately beneath it. Compare the Mahā-loha-pāsāda so often mentioned in the Mahāvamsa (pp. 161-257), the stone pillars of the lowest stories of which are still one of the sights of Anurādhapura.

¹ Uttari-bhaṅgam. Childers sub voce uttari is in doubt what the meaning of this phrase is. It is no longer uncertain that the word means 'delicacy' of some sort. Whether the term was more

And it occurred to Anâtha Pindîka the householder, 'Now formerly this householder was wont, when I arrived, to lay aside all other business, and exchange the greetings of courtesy with me; but now he appears excited, and is giving orders to his slaves and work-people. How can it be? Is he taking in marriage, or is he giving in marriage, or has he set a great sacrifice on foot, or has he invited the Mâgadhan Seniya Bimbisâra, together with his retinue, for to-morrow's meal?'

2. Now when the Setthi of Râgagaha had given commandment to his slaves and his work-people, he went up to the place where Anâtha Pindîka the householder was, and exchanged with him the greetings of courtesy, and took his seat on one side. And when he was so seated, Anâtha Pindîka the householder [told him the thoughts that had passed through his mind].

'I am neither taking nor giving in marriage, O householder' (was the reply), 'nor have I invited the Mâgadhan Seniya Bimbisâra to to-morrow's meal. But a great sacrifice I have set on foot, for the Samgha, with the Buddha at its head, has been invited for to-morrow's meal at my house.'

'Did you, O householder, say "the Buddha?"'

'Yes, it was "the Buddha" that I said.'

precise, and denoted some particular delicacy or not, is still doubtful. Compare the passages quoted in our note above on Mahâvagga VI, 14, 3 (adding Gâtaka I, 186, and Kullavagga IV, 4, 5, VIII, 4, 4), which show that it was eaten with boiled rice or congey; is mentioned along with ghee and oil; and could be made from the flesh (or other parts) of a sucking-pig. If it were not for the latter circumstance (Gâtaka I, 197) it might well be pickles or chutney.

[And thrice the same question was put, and the same reply was given.]

‘Hard is it, O householder, to meet even with the mere expression in the world—the news, that is, of “a Buddha, a Buddha”¹. Would it be possible for us, at this very time, to go and visit that Blessed One, the Arahāt, the very Buddha²?’

‘It is not now, O householder, the proper time to pay a visit to the Blessed One; but early on the morrow you shall go and visit him.’

Then Anātha Pindāka, pondering of the visit he was about to pay, lay down to sleep with his thoughts so bent upon the Buddha that thrice in the night he arose, thinking the daylight had appeared.

3. And Anātha Pindāka the householder went up to the gate leading to the Sītavana, and celestial beings opened the gate. And as he emerged from the city, the light disappeared and a thick darkness arose, and fear and trembling and consternation sprang up within him, so that a longing came upon him to turn back again from that spot. But Sīvaka the Yakkha, himself the while invisible, caused a sound to be heard, saying :

‘A hundred elephants, a hundred steeds, a hundred chariots with mules³,

‘A hundred thousand virgins with their jewelled earrings on,—

¹ ‘Much more so with the reality’ is to be understood. Compare Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta VI, 63 (at the end).

² On this rendering of Sammā-sambuddham, see Rh. D.’s ‘Hibbert Lectures,’ pp. 145–147.

³ Assatari. Compare vakkhatarī at Mahāvagga V, 9, 1, 3. The word recurs below at VII, 2, 5.

‘These are not worth, O householder, the sixteenth portion of one single stride.

‘Go on, go on, O householder! Advance, and not retreat, shall profit thee.’

Then the darkness disappeared before Anâtha Pindîka the householder, and a bright light arose, and the fear and trembling and consternation that had sprung upon within him were appeased.

[And a second and a third time the same thing happened, and the same words were heard, and with the same result.]

4. And Anâtha Pindîka the householder arrived at the Sîtavana; and at that time the Blessed One, who had arisen at early dawn, was walking up and down (meditating) in the open air. And the Blessed One saw Anâtha Pindîka the householder when he was coming from afar; and the Blessed One left the place where he had been walking up and down, and sat himself down on the seat put out for him. And when he was so seated, he addressed Anâtha Pindîka the householder, and said:

‘Come hither, Sudatta!’

Then Anâtha Pindîka, glad and happy at the thought that the Blessed One had addressed him by his name, went up to the place where the Blessed One was, and bowed down before him, falling at his feet, and said:

‘I trust my lord the Blessed One has slept in peace!’

‘He ever sleeps in peace, the Arahât who is free¹,

¹ Brâhmano parinibbuto. To translate the first of these words by ‘Brahman’ would mislead English readers. It is constantly used in early Buddhist texts for Arahât. On the use of

'Who is not touched by lusts, but calm and free from sin¹,

'Has broken all the bars (to freedom of the mind)², has quenched the anguish in his heart,

'Has fixed peace in his mind, and peaceful, sleeps in peace³.'

5⁴. Then the Blessed One discoursed to Anâtha Pindika the householder in due order; that is to say, he spake to him of giving, of righteousness, of heaven, of the danger, the vanity, and the defilement of lusts, and of the advantages of renunciation. And when the Blessed One saw that Anâtha Pindika the householder had become prepared, softened, unprejudiced, and upraised and believing in heart, then he proclaimed that which is the special doctrine of the Buddhas; that is to say, Suffering, its Origin, its Cessation, and the Path. And just as a clean cloth from which all stain has been washed away will readily take the dye, just even so did Anâtha parinibbuto not in the sense of 'dead,' but of a living man in the sense of 'spiritually free,' compare Dhammapada, verse 89; Sutta Nipâta II, 13, 1, 12, III, 12, 35; and Mahâ-parinibbâna Sutta IV, 3.

¹ Nirûpadhi, i.e. free from Kâma, Kilesa, and Kamma.

² Sabbâ âsattiyo khetvâ. Having cut or broken all the âsatti's (from the root sañg, to hang), the things which hang on to and burden a man in his spiritual progress. Compare the figure of speech at Gâtaka I, 5 (âsattam kunapam khaddetvâ). Buddhaghosa says sabbâ âsattiyo khetvâ ti . . . hadaye daratham kîtte kilesa-daratham ginetvâ.

³ Vineyya and appuya are no doubt gerunds. In a corresponding passage of the Ânguttara Nikâya the Phayre MS. reads appeyya, which smoothes over a difficulty at the expense of the better reading.

⁴ The following section is in identical terms with Mahâvagga I, 7, 5, 10, V, 1, 9, 10, VI, 26, 8, 9.

Pindika the householder obtain, even while sitting there, the pure and spotless Eye of the Truth ; (that is to say, the knowledge that) whatsoever has a beginning, in that is inherent also the necessity of dissolution. Thus did Anâtha Pindika the householder see, and master, and understand, and penetrate the Truth ; and he overcame uncertainty, and dispelled all doubts, and gained full knowledge, becoming dependent upon no one else for his knowledge of the doctrine of the Teacher. And he addressed the Blessed One, and said :

‘Most excellent, Lord (are the words of thy mouth), most excellent ! Just as if a man were to set up that which is thrown down, or were to reveal that which is hidden away, or were to point out the right road to him who has gone astray, or were to bring a light into the darkness so that those who had eyes could see external forms—just even so, Lord, has the Truth been made known to me, in many a figure, by the Blessed One. And I, even I, betake myself, Lord, to the Blessed One as my refuge, to the Truth, and to the Order. May the Blessed One accept me as a disciple, as one who, from this day forth as long as life endures, has taken his refuge in him. And may the Blessed One consent to accept at my hand the to-morrow’s meal for himself and for his Order of Bhikkhus.’

Then the Blessed One, by silence, granted his consent. And when Anâtha Pindika the householder perceived that his request had been granted, he rose from his seat, and bowed down before the Blessed One, and keeping him on his right hand as he passed him, he departed thence.

6. Now the Setthi of Râgagaha heard that the Order of Bhikkhus which has the Buddha at its head had been invited by Anātha Pindika the householder for the morrow's meal. And the Setthi of Rāgagaha said to Anātha Pindika the householder: 'They say, O householder, that you have invited the Bhikkhu-saṃgha, with the Buddha at its head, for the morrow's meal, and you are but a stranger here. I will provide the means¹, O householder, for you to provide the Order of Bhikkhus, which has the Buddha at its head, with food.'

'It is not necessary, O householder; I have means sufficient for the purpose.'

[And the townsman of Rāgagaha², and Seniya Bimbisāra the Rāga of Magadha, made the same offer in the same words, and received the same reply.]

7. Then Anātha Pindika the householder, when the night was far spent, made ready in the house of the Setthi of Rāgagaha sweet food both hard and soft, and had the time announced to the Blessed One, saying, 'The time, Lord, has come; and the meal is ready.'

And the Blessed One, when he had dressed himself in the early morning, went duly bowled and

¹ Veyyāyikam formed from vyaya, expenditure. Veyyāyikan ti vayakaraṇam vuḷḷati (B.).

² Rāgagahako negamo. This person has been already mentioned, and there also in intimate connection with the Setthi of Rāgagaha, in the Mahāvagga VIII, 1, 2, 16. It is tolerably clear from the connection that this is no ordinary citizen, but one holding a distinct and semi-official position. In this respect the word is an exact parallel to its neighbour the Setthi. For instances of the word in its more general sense, see Kakkāyana (ed. Senart), p. 219; and Dāḥāvamsa III, 3.

robed to the house of the Setthi of Rāgagaha, and sat down there on the seat spread out for him, together with the Order of Bhikkhus. And Anātha Pindika the householder offered to the Order of Bhikkhus which had the Buddha at its head the sweet food both hard and soft, waiting upon them with his own hand¹. And when the Blessed One had finished his meal, and had cleansed his hands and his bowl, Anātha Pindika took his seat on one side; and, so seated, he said to the Blessed One: 'May the Blessed One consent to spend the rainy season of Was at Sāvatti, together with the Order of Bhikkhus.'

'The Tathāgatas, O householder, take pleasure in solitude.'

'I understand, O Blessed One; I understand, O Happy One' (was the reply)².

Then the Blessed One, after he had instructed and aroused and incited and gladdened Anātha Pindika the householder with religious discourse, arose from his seat, and departed thence.

8. Now at that time Anātha Pindika the householder had many friends and large acquaintance, and his word was held of weight³. When he had ¹ Compare the note on Mahāvagga I, 8, 4.

² Aññātam bhagavā aññātam sugatā ti. The first word is the standing expression used when the Buddha or a Thera has signified a request, not in so many words, but in some phrase from which the request may be implied, and the person addressed desires to express that he has perceived the intended implication. Compare Dīpavamsa XIV, 65, XV, 5.

³ Ādeyyavāko ti tassa vaṭṭanam bahuganā mānetabbam maññantī ti attho (B.). In Puggala III, 11, we have the phrase tassa vaṭṭanam ādheyyam gaṭṭhati, which the commentary explains by hadaye ādhātabbam /hapitabbam.

brought the business he had in hand at Rāgagaha to its conclusion, he set out towards Sāvatti; and on the way he gave orders to people, saying, 'Build dwellings, my good men, and make rest-houses ready, and prepare gifts. A Buddha has appeared in the world, and that Blessed One has been invited by me, and by this road will he come.' And those people [did all even as they were commanded].

And when Anātha Pindika the householder had arrived at Sāvatti, he examined all the region round about it, saying¹, 'Where now shall I fix the place for the Blessed One to stay in, not too far from the town and not too near, convenient for going and for coming, easily accessible for all who wish to visit him, by day not too crowded, by night not exposed to too much noise and alarm, protected from the wind², hidden from men, well fitted for a retired life?'

9. And Anātha Pindika the householder saw that the garden of Geta the Kumāra had [all these advantages]. And when he saw that, he went to Geta the Kumāra, and said to him, 'Sir, let me have your garden to make an Ārama on it.'

'It is not, Sir, for sale, even for (a sum so great that the pieces of money would be sufficient to cover it if they were) laid side by side.'

'I take, Sir, the garden at the price.'

'No, O householder, there was no bargain meant³.'

¹ The following speech is identical with that put into Bimbisāra's mouth on choosing the Veuvana, above Mahāvagga I, 22, 16, 17.

² Viganavātaṃ, of which neither the reading nor the meaning is certain. See the various forms given from the commentaries in the notes on the text of the passage in the Mahāvagga, loc. cit.

³ Na gahito: literally, 'it is not taken.'

Then they asked the lords of justice whether a bargain of sale had been made or not. And the lords decided thus: 'The Ârâma is taken, Sir, at the price which you fixed.'

And Anâtha Pindîka the householder had gold brought down in carts, and covered the Getavana with (pieces) laid side by side¹.

10. Now the gold that he had brought down the first time did not suffice (after the rest of the garden was covered) to cover one small space close by the gateway. So Anâtha Pindîka the householder told his servants to go back and fetch more gold, saying he would cover that piece also.

Then thought Geta the Kumâra, 'This can be no ordinary matter², for which this householder is ready to lavish so much gold!' And he said to Anâtha Pindîka the householder, 'It is enough, O householder. You need not have that space covered. Let me have that space, and it shall be my gift.'

Then Anâtha Pindîka the householder thought³, 'This Geta the Kumâra is a very distinguished and illustrious person. Great would be the efficacy of the adherence of so well known a man as he to this doctrine and discipline.' And he gave up that space to Geta the Kumâra. And Geta the Prince erected thereon a gateway, with a room over it.

¹ It is evident from the illustration of this story on a bas relief at the Bharhut Tope that these pieces of money were supposed to be square, not round. See Cunningham's 'The Stûpa of Bharhut,' Plate No. LVII and pp. 84-86.

² Na orakam bhavissati. Compare Mahâvagga I, 9, 1, and the commencement of our next chapter below. The idiom recurs in VII, 3, 3.

³ The following phrase is identical with that put into the mouth of Ânanda, at Mahâvagga VI, 36, 3, with respect to Roga the Malla. In the text here there is a slight misprint; the full-stop after ñâtamanusso should be struck out.

And Anâtha Pindîka the householder built¹ dwelling-rooms, and retiring-rooms, and store-rooms (over the gateways), and service halls, and halls with fire-places in them, and storehouses (outside the Vihâra)², and closets, and cloisters, and halls for exercise, and wells, and sheds for the well³, and bath-rooms, and halls attached to the bath-rooms, and ponds, and open-roofed sheds⁴.

5.

1. Now when the Blessed One had stayed at Râgagaha as long as he thought fit, he set out towards Vesâlî; and journeying straight on he in due course arrived there. And there at Vesâlî the Blessed One stayed in the peak-roofed hall at the Mahâvana.

Now at that time the people were zealously engaged in putting up new buildings (for the use of the Order)⁵, and as zealously provided with the ¹ With the following list should be compared the list of things that laymen build for themselves given in Mahâvagga III, 5, 7.

² Kappiya-ku/iyo. See Mahâvagga VI, 33.

³ Udapâna-sâlâyo. See above, V, 16, 2.

⁴ Mandape. See Mahâvagga VIII, 7, 1, and above, Kullavagga VI, 3, 7.

⁵ Navakammam karonti. This idiom always connotes buildings for the use of the Order. See the passages quoted in our note on Kullavagga I, 18, 1. If the buildings were for the Bhikkhus, then a Bhikkhu, if for the Bhikkhunîs, then a Bhikkhunî, was appointed to superintend the works in order to ensure the requisite clothes, and food, and lodging, and medicine for the sick, all such Bhikkhus as superintended their work.

Now a certain poor tailor thought, 'This can be no every-day matter on which the people are so zealously engaged. Let me too set to work on a new building.' And that poor tailor himself kneaded the clay, and laid the bricks, and raised the walls. But by his want of experience the laying was out of line and the wall fell down. And a second and a third time he [repeated his work, and with the same result].

2. Then that poor tailor murmured, was annoyed, and became indignant, saying, 'These Sakyaputtiya Samanas exhort and teach those men who provide them with the requisite clothes, food, lodging, and medicine, and superintend their buildings for them. But I am poor, and no one exhorts or teaches me, or helps me in my building !'

The Bhikkhus heard him so murmuring, and told the matter to the Blessed One. Then the Blessed One on that occasion and in that connection made a religious discourse, and gave command to the Bhikkhus, saying, 'I permit you, O Bhikkhus, to give new buildings in course of erection (for the use of the Order) in charge (to a Bhikkhu who shall superintend¹ the work). And the Bhikkhu who buildings being in accordance with the rules of the Order as to size, form, and object of the various apartments.

The buildings referred to in this section are no doubt intended to be the same as those referred to in Kullavagga V, 13, 3.

¹ Navakammam dātum. For the works which ought not to be included, and for those which might be lawfully included in this term, see below, Kullavagga VI, 17. Hence the overseer is called navakammika.

is overseer shall zealously exert himself to the end that the work on the Vihâra may be brought to a rapid conclusion, and shall afterwards cause repairs to be executed wherever the buildings have become broken or worn out ¹.

3. 'And thus, O Bhikkhus, is the work to be given in charge. In the first place a Bhikkhu is to be asked (whether he will undertake the duty). When he has been asked, some able and discreet Bhikkhu is to lay the matter before the Samgha, saying, "Let the venerable Samgha hear me. If the time seems meet to the Samgha, let the Samgha give in charge to such and such a Bhikkhu the Vihâra of such and such a householder as a navakammam. This is the motion (ñatti). Let the venerable Samgha hear me. The Samgha hereby gives in charge . . . (&c., as before). Whosoever of the venerable ones approves thereof, let him keep silence; whosoever approves not thereof, let him speak. The Samgha has given in charge . . . (&c., as before). Therefore is it silent. Thus do I understand.'"

6².

1. Now when the Blessed One had stayed as long as he thought fit at Vesâli he set out towards Sâvatthi.

¹ Khandan ti bhinnokâso: phullan ti phalitokâso (B.). The expression recurs below at VI, 17, 1.

² The incident related in the following chapter is identical with the 37th Gâtaka (including the Introductory Story there given) already translated by Rh. D. in the 'Buddhist Birth Stories,' pp. 310-314.

Now at that time the pupils of the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus went on in front of the Bhikkhu-saṃgha which had the Buddha at its head, and occupied the rooms, and occupied the sleeping-places, saying, 'This will do for our superiors (upagghāyas), this for our teachers (āḥariyas), this for ourselves.' And the venerable Sāriputta who had followed after the Bhikkhu-saṃgha which had the Buddha at its head, since all the rooms and all the sleeping-places had been occupied, found no place to sleep in, and took his seat at the foot of a certain tree.

Now the Blessed One, at early dawn, after he had risen, coughed. The venerable Sāriputta coughed also.

'Who is this?' (said the Blessed One.)

'It is I, Lord; Sāriputta.'

'How do you come to be sitting here, Sāriputta?'

Then the venerable Sāriputta told the matter to the Blessed One.

2. Then the Blessed One on that occasion and in that connection convened a meeting of the Bhikkhu-saṃgha, and asked, 'Is it true, as I have been told, O Bhikkhus, that the pupils of the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus have (acted in this way)?'

'It is true, Lord.'

Then the Blessed One rebuked them, saying (as usual, see Kullavagga I, 1, 2, 3), and he said to the Bhikkhus, 'Who is it, O Bhikkhus, who is worthy of the best seat, and the best water, and the best food?'

Some of the Bhikkhus said, 'One who belonged to a Kshatriya family before he entered the Order.' Others of the Bhikkhus said, 'One who belonged to a Brahman family before he entered the Order.' Others again said, 'One who belonged to a Gahapati¹ family before he entered the Order—one versed in the Suttas—one versed in the Rules of the Order—an expounder of the Dhamma²—one who has attained the first, second, third, fourth Ghâna—one who has entered the first, second, third Path—an Arahāt—one who has the threefold wisdom³—one who has the six powers⁴.

3. Then the Blessed One addressed the Bhikkhus, and said, 'Long ago, O Bhikkhus, there was a great banyan tree on the lower slopes of the Himālaya range; and near it there dwelt three friends—a partridge, a monkey, and an elephant. And they dwelt together without mutual reverence, confidence, and courtesy⁵. Then, O Bhikkhus, it occurred to those friends, "Come now, let us find out which of us is the elder by birth; and let us agree to honour and reverence and esteem and support him, and by his counsels let us abide." So, Bhikkhus, the partridge and the monkey asked the elephant,

"How far back can you, friend, remember?"

"Friends! when I was little I used to walk over

¹ On this mention of gahapati as the name of a caste or rank, compare the passage in the Tevigga Sutta I, 47 = Sāmaññaphala Sutta, p. 133 (translated by Rh. D. in 'Buddhist Suttas from the Pāli,' S. B. E. vol. xi, p. 187), where the word is opposed to aññatarasmim kule paṭṭhagāto.

² Dhamma is here possibly already used in the special sense to which the term Abhidhamma was afterwards applied. So Purāṇa, who in the Āṅguttara Nikāya I, 14, is called the chief of the expounders of the Dhamma (compare Dīpavamsa IV, 4), says of himself in the Apadāna abhidhammanayaññō 'ham.

³ Teviggo. See Rh. D.'s remarks in 'Buddhist Suttas,' pp. 161, 162.

⁴ This list contains one or two terms which are omitted in the Gāṭaka introduction.

⁵ These terms recur at Mahāvagga I, 25, 6.

this banyan tree, keeping it between my thighs, and its topmost twig brushed against my stomach. So far back, friends, can I remember."

'Then, O Bhikkhus, the partridge and the elephant asked the monkey [the same question],

"Friends! when I was little, sitting once on the ground, I gnawed at the then topmost twig of this banyan. So far back can I remember."

'Then, O Bhikkhus, the monkey and the elephant asked the partridge [the same question],

"Friends! there was formerly a lofty banyan tree in yonder open space. One day after eating one of its fruits, I voided the seed here; and from that this banyan tree grew up. So I must be older than either of you."

'Thereupon, O Bhikkhus, the elephant and the monkey said to the partridge, "You, friend, are the oldest of us all. Henceforth we will honour and reverence and esteem and support you, and by your counsels will we abide."

'Thenceforth, O Bhikkhus, the partridge kept the monkey and the elephant in obedience to the Five Precepts, and observed them also himself. And dwelling together in mutual reverence, confidence, and courtesy, at the dissolution of the body after death they were reborn unto a happy state in heaven. And this (perfect life of theirs) became known as "the good life of the partridge¹."

'Tis those who reverence the old
That are the men who Dhamma know,

¹ Tittiriyaṃ brahmaṇariyaṃ. It is quite possible that a covert sarcasm is here intended to be understood against the Taittirīya Brahmins.

Worthy of praise while in this life
And happy in the life to come.

4. 'So that, O Bhikkhus, since even animals can live together in mutual reverence, confidence, and courtesy, so much more, O Bhikkhus, should you so let your light shine forth¹ that you, who have left the world to follow so well taught a doctrine and discipline, may be seen to dwell in like manner together.' And when he had delivered a religious discourse (as in I, 1, 3), he said to the Bhikkhus:

'I enjoin upon you, O Bhikkhus, that paying of reverence, rising up in reverence, salutation, proper respect, and apportionment of the best seat and water and food, shall be according to seniority. But property belonging to the Samgha shall not be exclusively appropriated according to seniority². Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.

5. 'These ten, O Bhikkhus, are not to be saluted—a Bhikkhu afterwards admitted unto the higher grade of the Order by one previously admitted—a person not admitted—a senior Bhikkhu when he belongs to a different community, and does not speak according to the Dhamma—a woman³—a eunuch⁴—a Bhikkhu who has been placed under probation⁵—one who, having been so placed, is

¹ Tam sobhetha yam . . . On this idiom compare Mahāvagga X, 2, 20.

² Compare chapter 7 and also chapter 12. It would seem from these passages that the prohibition to reserve exclusively according to seniority the use of property belonging to the whole Samgha was held to imply that the temporary use of it was to go according to seniority. Compare X, 18.

³ See Kullavagga X, 3.

⁴ Compare Mahāvagga I, 61, 2.

⁵ See Kullavagga II, 1, 2.

liable to be thrown back to the beginning of his probationary term¹—one who is liable to have a penance (Mānatta) imposed upon him—one who is undergoing a penance—one who, so undergoing a penance, is fit to be rehabilitated.

‘And these three, O Bhikkhus, ought to be saluted—one previously admitted into the higher grade of the Order by one afterwards admitted—the senior in a different community when he speaks according to the Dhamma—and, O Bhikkhus, throughout the worlds of men and gods, of Māras and of Brahmas, by all creatures Samanas and Brāhmans, gods and men, the Arahat Sammā-sambuddha.’

7.

1. Now at that time people provided arbours (mandapas), and couches, and room for the use of the Samgha. And the pupils of the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus, saying, ‘It has been laid down by the Blessed One that that which pertains (wholly) to the Samgha shall be used according to seniority, but not that which is given only for the temporary use of the Samgha,’ went on in front of the Samgha and occupied the mandapas, and occupied the couches, and occupied the room, saying, ‘This shall be for our superiors, and this for our teachers, and this for ourselves.’

And Sāriputta (&c., as in last chapter, §§ 1, 2, down to) Then the Blessed One rebuked them, &c., and said to the Bhikkhus, ‘Even that which has been set aside only for the temporary use of the Samgha is not, O Bhikkhus, to be reserved for exclusive use according to seniority.'

¹ See Kullavagga III, 14.

8.

1. Now at that time people arranged in the eating-rooms, or in the interior courtyards of their houses, lofty and large couches, such as [here follows the list of things forbidden in Mahāvagga V, 10, 4]. The Bhikkhus, fearing to offend, would not sit down upon them.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to sit down on seats arranged by laymen—excepting three, (that is to say) large cushions, divans, mattresses¹—but not to lie down upon them.'

Now at that time people put in the eating-rooms, or in the courtyards, stuffed couches and stuffed chairs. The Bhikkhus, fearing to offend, would not sit down on them.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to sit down on any [such] things arranged by laymen, but not to lie down upon them².'

9.

1. Now the Blessed One, proceeding on his journey, arrived in due course at Sāvatthi; and there,

¹ These are Nos. 1, 2, and 7 in the list just referred to, and may be kept if treated in the way laid down in VI, 14, 2 below.

² This rule has already occurred in identical terms at Mahāvagga V, 11. Probably both here and there the word such, which we have here added in brackets, is to be understood.

at Sâvatthi, the Blessed One stayed in the Getavana, the park of Anâtha Pindîka. Then Anâtha Pindîka the householder [invited the Blessed One for the morrow's meal, and when the meal was over, he said to the Blessed One¹]:

‘What, Lord, shall I do with regard to the Getavana?’

‘You may dedicate it, O householder, to the use of the Samgha of the four directions² either now here present, or hereafter to arrive.’

‘Even so, Lord,’ said Anâtha Pindîka the householder in assent to the Blessed One, and he did so.

2. Then the Blessed One gave thanks to Anâtha Pindîka the householder in these verses. [Here follow the same verses as were used above in VI, 1, 5 on the presentation of the *Getavana*³.]

10.

1. Now at that time it had been settled that a certain high official at court, a follower of the Āgīvakas, should provide the day's meal for the Samgha. And the venerable Upananda the Sâkyan, coming late, but before the meal was over, made the Bhikkhu next (junior to him in seniority⁴) get

¹ The usual terms are here followed throughout: see, for instance, above, VI, 4, 6, 7.

² That is ‘of all the world.’ See our note above on Mahāvagga VIII, 27, 5, where the phrase has already occurred.

³ The verses are quoted in the account of Anâtha Pindîka's gift given in the Gâtaka commentary (Fausböll I, 93; Rh. D.'s ‘Buddhist Birth Stories,’ I, 131).

⁴ Ānantarikaṃ; perhaps ‘the Bhikkhu (who happened to be) up out of his seat; and the dining-hall was thrown into confusion.

Then that minister became indignant, murmured, and was annoyed: 'How can the Sakyaputtiya Samanas behave so! Is it not then lawful for any one, unless he have been seated, to eat as much as he requires?'

And the Bhikkhus heard him murmuring, &c. And they told the matter to the Blessed One.

'Is it true as they say, &c.?'

'It is true, Lord.'

Then the Blessed One rebuked him, &c., and he said to the Bhikkhus, 'A Bhikkhu is not, O Bhikkhus, to be made to get up out of his seat before the meal is over. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. And if any one causes another to get up, and be then invited to partake of the meal, he shall be ordered to go and fetch water. If he shall thus receive the place, it is well; if not, the other one shall first complete his swallowing of the rice, and shall then give up the place to his senior. But in no case, O Bhikkhus, do I say that a place properly belonging to a senior Bhikkhu is to be taken (by a junior). Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa¹.'

2. Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus made sick Bhikkhus get up (from their seats). The sick men said, 'We cannot, Sirs, get up; for we are sick.'

'We insist upon your getting up,' said they; and next (to him). The text reads anantarikaṃ, which is a misprint. Compare Mahāvagga IX, 4, 8, and Kullavagga VII, 3, 9, VIII, 4, 1.

¹ Compare the rule for Bhikkhunis at X, 18. .

seizing them, and pulling them up, they let them go as they were standing. The sick men, as soon as they were let go, fell down.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A sick man, O Bhikkhus, is not to be made to get up. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

Now at that time the Kḷabbaggiya Bhikkhus, saying, ‘We are sick, and cannot be turned out,’ took possession of the best sleeping-places.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I enjoin, O Bhikkhus, that you allot to sick Bhikkhus suitable sleeping-places.’

Now at that time the Kḷabbaggiya Bhikkhus, on pretext of some slight indisposition¹, took exclusive possession of sleeping-places.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to do so. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

11².

1. Now at that time the Sattarasa-vaggiya Bhikkhus made ready a certain large Vihāra in the neighbourhood³, with the intention of dwelling in it. And when the Kḷabbaggiya Bhikkhus saw what they were doing, they said: ‘These venerable ones, the Sattarasa-vaggiya Bhikkhus, are getting a Vihâra ready; come, let us turn them out.' Some of them said: 'Let us stay here¹ whilst they get it ready, and turn them out when it is prepared.' So the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus said to the Sattarasa-vaggiyas: 'Depart, Sirs; the Vihâra has fallen unto us.'

¹ Lesakappenâ ti appakena sṣāsābhādimattena (B.).

² The story in this section forms also the introductory story to the 17th Pāṭṭiya.

³ Pakkantimam; perhaps ‘in the border-country.’ Compare pakkantam nagaram, a frontier fort at Dhammapada, p. 56.

'Why did you not, Sirs, say so sooner; and we would have got some other one ready?'

'Is not, then, this Vihâra the common property of the Samgha ?'

'Yes, Sirs; that is so.'

'Then depart, Sirs; for the Vihâra has fallen unto us.'

'It is large, Sirs, this Vihâra. You can dwell in it, and we as well.'

Then, full of anger and displeasure, they repeated, 'Depart, Sirs; this Vihâra has fallen unto us.' And seizing them by the throat, they cast them out. And the others, being ejected, wept.

The Bhikkhus asked, 'Why, Sirs, do you weep?'

Then they told them; and the moderate Bhikkhus murmured, &c., and told the matter to the Blessed One.

'Is it true, as they say, &c. ?'

'It is true, Lord.'

Then he rebuked them; and when he had delivered a religious discourse, he said to the Bhikkhus:

'A Bhikkhu is not, O Bhikkhus, to be cast out of a Vihâra, the common property of the Samgha, in anger and vexation. Whosoever does so, shall be dealt with according to the law¹. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to allot the lodging-places (common to the Saṃgha to those who have need of them)².'

¹ Âgametha yâva. Compare the introductory story to the 46th Pâṭṭiya.

2. Now the Bhikkhus thought, 'How then shall the lodging-places be allotted?'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to appoint as an apportioner of lodging-places a Bhikkhu possessed of these five qualifications—one who does not walk in partiality, who does not walk in malice, who does not walk in stupidity, who does not walk in fear (and so on, as in Khandhaka IV, chapter 10, down to the end of the Kamma vāṇā).'

3. Now the apportioners of lodging-places thought, 'How then ought the lodging-places to be apportioned?'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, in the first place to count the Bhikkhus, then to count the sleeping-places, then to apportion accordingly³.'

When apportioning according to the number of sleeping-places, some remained unallotted⁴.

¹ That is, under the 17th Pāṭittiya.

² Senâsanam gâhetum. Buddhaghosa has nothing on this idiom, but its meaning is sufficiently clear from the connection.

³ Seyyaggena gâhetum. Buddhaghosa has no special explanation of agga here, but in his explanation of the passage says that this is to be so done that each Bhikkhu receives room for a couch (maññakattiḥānam). Agga must here be agra, to which Böhrling-Roth give, from Indian lexicographers, the subsidiary meaning of 'multitude.' So below in XII, 1, 1, the Vaggiputtakas divide money amongst themselves bhikkhu-aggena, 'according to the number of the Bhikkhus.' Seyyâ is here used in the same meaning as that in which senâsana is used throughout the rest of this chapter and the next. See VIII, 1, 4.

⁴ Ussâdiyimsu. Buddhaghosa says ussârayimsu ti mañ-

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to apportion according to the number of apartments (Vihâras).’

When so apportioning, some apartments (Vihâras) remained unallotted.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to apportion according to the number of buildings (Parivenas)¹.’

When so apportioning, some buildings (Parivenas) remained unallotted.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to give a supplementary share to each Bhikkhu².’

When more than one share had been allotted, another Bhikkhu arrived.

‘In that case a share need not be allotted to him, if the Bhikkhus do not wish to do so³.’

Now at that time they allotted sleeping-places to a Bhikkhu who was then staying outside the boundary (of the district in which the building was situate)⁴.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

kaḷḷhānāni atirekāni ahesum. His reading is in a copy of his work in Burmese characters, and is supported, both here and in Pāṭiṭṭiya XLVI, 2, where the word recurs, by a Burmese copy of the text. The Sinhalese reading is the correct one, but one may compare the idiom ganam, or parisam, ussāreti at Mahāvagga VIII, 1, 22, and Gâtaka I, 419, 434. So at IX, 1, 3, 4, the reading ussāreti given in the text is corrected at p. 363 into ussādeti, in accordance with the reading of the Sinhalese MS.

¹ The relation of the Vihâra to the Parivena is here curious. In the later language parivena means ‘cells.’ Here it evidently includes several vihâras.

² Anubhāgan ti puna aparam pi bhāgam dātum (B.).

³ Na akāmā is used here in a sense precisely parallel to that in which it occurs at Mahāvagga VII, 24, 4. See the passages quoted in our note there.

⁴ Nissīme tthitassa. See on this phrase above, Mahāvagga VII, 1, 5, and VIII, 2, 3. It is repeated below, VI, 17, 2.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to [do so]. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

Now at that time the Bhikkhus, after the lodging-places had been allotted, kept them to the exclusion of others for all time.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to do so. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you to retain them for the three months of the rainy, but not for the dry season.’

4. Then the Bhikkhus thought, ‘What is (it now that constitutes) an allotment of lodging-places?’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘There are these three allotments of lodging-places, O Bhikkhus,—the earlier, the later, and the intermediate. The earlier is to be held on the day after the full moon of Āsāḥa (June—July); the later, a month after that full moon¹; the intermediate (literally that which involves a giving up during the intervening time) is held on the day after the Pavāraṇā ceremony, with reference to the rainy season of the following year. These, O Bhikkhus, are the three allotments of lodging-places.’

Here ends the Second Portion for Recitation.

12.

1. Now the venerable Upananda the Sākyan, after having had a lodging allotted to him in ¹ These first two dates are the days on which the earlier and the later Vassa begins. See Mahāvagga III, 2.

Sāvatti, went to a certain country-place where a community of the Samgha resided, and there also had a lodging allotted to him. Then the Bhikkhus there thought, 'Now this brother, Upananda the Sākyan, is a maker of strife, quarrelsome, a maker of disputes, given to idle talk, a raiser of legal questions in the *Samgha*¹. If he should spend the rainy season here, then shall we all dwell in discomfort. Come, let us question him.' And they asked the venerable Upananda the Sākyan :

'Have not you, friend Upananda, had a lodging allotted to you in Sāvatti?'

'That is so, Sirs.'

'What then do you, friend Upananda, being one, yet take exclusive possession of two (lodging-places)?'

'Well, I do now, Sirs, set (the lodging) here free, and take the one there.'

Those Bhikkhus who were moderate murmured, &c., and they told the matter to the Blessed One.

Then the Blessed One, on that occasion and in that connection, convened a meeting of the Bhikkhu-saṃgha, and asked the venerable Upananda the Sākyan :

'Is it true, Upananda, that you, being one, have taken possession of two places?'

'It is true, Lord.'

Then the Blessed One rebuked him, saying, 'How can you, O foolish one, do such a thing? What you took there, O foolish one, has been lost here; what you took here, has been lost there². Thus, O

¹ These are the acts which render a Bhikkhu liable to the Tagganiya Kamma. See Kullavagga I, 1, 1.

² That is, by taking a lodging here you ipso facto renounced foolish one, you are deprived of both.' And when he had delivered a religious discourse, he said to the Bhikkhus :

'One man is not, O Bhikkhus, to take two lodging-places. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata.'

13.

1. Now at that time the Blessed One spake in many a figure concerning the Vinaya, speaking in praise of the Vinaya, in praise of learning the Vinaya, and again and again in reference thereto in praise of the venerable Upâli. Then said the Bhikkhus : 'The Blessed One speaks (&c., down to) Upâli. Come, let us learn the Vinaya under the venerable Upâli.' And many Bhikkhus, senior and junior, and of medium standing, went to learn the Vinaya under the venerable Upâli. The venerable Upâli taught them standing, out of reverence for the senior Bhikkhus, and the senior Bhikkhus heard him standing, out of reverence for the law ; and thereby both the senior Bhikkhus grew weary, and the venerable Upâli.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, a junior Bhikkhu, when giving instruction, to sit on a seat of equal height, or higher, out of reverence for the law ; and a senior Bhikkhu, when receiving instruction, to sit on a seat your right to a lodging there, and by taking one there you ipso facto renounced your right to get one here.

of equal height, or lower, out of reverence for the law¹.'

2. Now at that time a number of Bhikkhus stood around Upâli, waiting for seats²; and they grew weary.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to sit down together with brethren entitled to sit on seats of equal height.'

Then the Bhikkhus thought, 'How many of us are entitled to sit on seats of equal height?'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to sit on the same seat with those who are within three years of one another in seniority.'

Now at that time a number of Bhikkhus, entitled to sit on the same seat, sat down on a couch, and broke the couch down; or sat down on a chair, and broke the chair down.

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, the use of a couch, or a chair, for three persons.'

Even when three sat on the couch, or chair, it broke.

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, two to sit on a couch or a chair.'

Now at that time Bhikkhus who were not entitled to seats of equal height, were afraid they would offend if they sat together on a long seat.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

¹ Compare the fifteen rules of a similar character, Sekhiyas 57-72, and especially No. 69.

² Onlookers apparently, not strictly learners. On the force of pa'simāneti, compare the Bhikkhunī-vibhaṅga, Pārāgika I, 1, and Gāṭaka II, 423.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to sit together on a long seat with others not entitled to sit on seats of equal height, unless they are women, or eunuchs, or hermaphrodites.’

Then the Bhikkhus thought, ‘What is the limit of length which is included under the term “long seat?”’

‘I allow the term “long seat” to be used, O Bhikkhus, of any seat long enough to accommodate three persons.’

14.

1. Now at that time Visákhâ the mother of Migâra was anxious to have a storeyed building (pâsâda), with a verandah (âlinda) to it, supported on pillars with capitals of elephant heads¹, built for the use of the Saṃgha. Then the Bhikkhus thought, ‘Of things which appertain to a storeyed building, which has been permitted by the Blessed One, and which not²?’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

¹ Hatthi-nakhakam, ‘supported on the frontal globes (kumbhe) of elephants,’ says Buddhaghosa.

² On the meaning of paribhoga here compare VI, 18, 1. The doubt here expressed is curious, as a storeyed building (pâsâda) is one of the five kinds of abodes (lenâni) specially sanctioned by Mahāvagga I, 30, 4, and Kullavagga VI, 1, 2; and a verandah (âlinda) has been also authorised by Kullavagga VI, 3, 5. No doubt the special point here is as to the carved pillars: but, even so, that this rule should be thus separated from the other rules as to buildings, in the commencement of this book (VI, 1-4), is a proof of the unsystematic way in which the Khandhakas have been put together. Even the final redaction which we have now before us contains much similar evidence of the gradual growth of these rules. See note 3 on the next paragraph.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, the use of all appurtenances to a storeyed building.’

Now at that time the grandmother of Pasenadi of Kosala had died, and many unauthorised things had come into the hands of the Saṃgha, such as couches, divans (&c., as in chapter 8 above, and Mahāvagga V, 10, 4).

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to use the stuffed couches (āsandi) after having broken off the legs¹, and the divans (pallaṅka) after having removed the hair, and to comb out the cotton of the mattresses and make pillows of it², and to use all the rest as floor covering³.’

15.

1. Now at that time the Bhikkhus who dwelt in a certain country residence, not far from Sāvatti, were worried by having constantly to provide sleeping accommodation for travelling Bhikkhus who came in (from country-places). And those Bhikkhus

¹ Compare the 87th Pāṭittiya.

² This rule has already been given in VI, 2, 6.

³ It is distinctly laid down without any reservation in Mahāvagga V, 10, 5 (in the paragraph erroneously numbered V, 10, 4 in vol. ii, p. 28, of the present work), that the use of any of these things is a dukkata offence. That this relaxation of that rule should be inserted only here, looks very much like an after-thought, even though the former passage merely refers to the use of these things as seats. This is more especially noteworthy from the fact mentioned in the last note.

The rules as to new rugs or mats to be used for sitting upon, are contained in the 11th to the 15th Nissaggiya Pāṭittiyas.

thought: '[This being so,] let us hand over all the sleeping accommodation which is the property of the Samgha to one (of us), and let us use it as belonging to him.' And they [did so¹].

Then the incoming Bhikkhus said to them: 'Prepare, Sirs, sleeping accommodation for us.'

'There are no beds, Sirs, belonging to the Samgha. We have given them all away to one of us.'

'What, Sirs? Have you then made away with property belonging to the Samgha?'

'That is so, Sirs.'

The moderate Bhikkhus murmured, &c., and told this matter to the Blessed One.

'Is it true, O Bhikkhus, as they say, that Bhikkhus make away with Samgha property?'

'It is true, Lord.'

2. Then the Blessed One rebuked them, &c., and said to the Bhikkhus: 'These five things, O Bhikkhus, are untransferable; and are not to be disposed of either by the Samgha, or by a company of two or three Bhikkhus (a Gana), or by a single individual. And what are the five? A park (Ârâma), or the site for a park—this is the first untransferable thing, that cannot be disposed of by the Samgha, or by a Gana, or by an individual. If it be disposed of, such disposal is void; and whosoever has disposed of it, is guilty of a thullakkaya. A Vihâra, or the site for a Vihâra—this is the second, &c. (as before). A bed, or a chair, or a bolster, or a pillow—this is the third, &c. A brass vessel, or a brass jar, or a brass pot, or a brass vase, or a razor, or an axe, or a hatchet, or a hoe, or a spade—this is the fourth, &c. Creepers, or bamboos, or muṇḍa, or babbaga grass, or common grass, or clay, or things made of wood, or crockery—this is the fifth, &c. (as before, down to) thullaḥkaya.'

¹ This is a direct infringement of the 82nd Pâṭittiya, which forbids property dedicated to the Samgha being diverted to the use of any individual.

16.

1. Now when the Blessed One had dwelt at Sâvatthi as long as he thought fit, he went on on his journey towards the Kiṭṭhā Hill with a great multitude of Bhikkhus—to wit, with about five hundred Bhikkhus, besides Sâriputta and Moggallâna.

And the Bhikkhus who were followers of Assagi and *Punabbasu*¹ hearing the news, said one to another, 'Come, Sirs; let us divide all the sleeping accommodation belonging to the Samgha. Sâriputta and Moggallâna are men of sinful desires, and are under the influence of sinful desires. We will not provide sleeping-places for them.' And they did so.

Now the Blessed One, proceeding on his journey, arrived at the Kiṭṭhā Hill. And he addressed a number of Bhikkhus, saying, 'Do you go, O Bhikkhus, to the followers of Assagi and Punabbasu, and say: "The Blessed One, Sirs, has arrived with a large number of Bhikkhus—to wit, with about five hundred Bhikkhus, besides Sâriputta and Moggallâna. Make ready sleeping-places, Sirs, for the Blessed One, and for the Bhikkhu-samgha, and for Sâriputta and Moggallâna."'

¹ On these Bhikkhus and their relations with Sâriputta and Moggallâna, see above, Kullavagga I, 13-16.

‘Even so, Lord,’ said those Bhikkhus in assent to the Blessed One; and they did so.

‘There is no sleeping accommodation belonging to the Samgha. We have divided it all’ (was the reply). ‘The Blessed One, Sirs, is welcome: and he may stay in whatever Vihâra he chooses. But Sâriputta and Moggallâna are men of sinful desires, and under the influence thereof; for them we will provide no sleeping-places.’

2. ‘What then, Sirs? Have you divided sleeping accommodation that is the property of the Samgha?’

‘That is so, Sirs.’

The moderate Bhikkhus murmured, &c. (down to) The Blessed One said to the Bhikkhus:

‘These five things, O Bhikkhus, are unapportionable, and are not to be divided either by the Samgha, or by a Gana, or by an individual. If divided, the division is void; and whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a thullakkaya. And what are the five (&c., as in VI, 15, 2)¹?’

17.

1. Now when the Blessed One had remained at the Kiâ Hill as long as he thought fit, he proceeded on his journey towards Â/avî; and in due course he arrived at Â/avî, and there, at Â/avî, the Blessed One stayed at the Aggâ/ava Shrine.

Now at that time the Bhikkhus of Â/avî² used to

¹ These expressions ‘untransferable’ (avissaggiyâni) and ‘unapportionable’ (avebhaṅgiyâni) have already occurred above at Mahāvagga VIII, 27, 5.

² The Bhikkhus of Â/avî are frequently mentioned in connection give new building operations in charge (to one or other of their number)¹, such as the following²: when some clay or earth had merely to be put aside in heaps, when a wall had merely to be re-plastered, when a door had merely to be made, when the socket for a bolt had merely to be made, when some joinery-work had merely to be done to a window, when some whitewashing merely had to be done, or some black colouring laid on, or some red colouring³, or some roofing-work, or some joinery, or a bar had to be fixed to a door⁴, when breaches or decay had merely to be repaired⁵, or the flooring to be re-plastered⁶; and they assigned this office to one another for terms of twenty or thirty years, or with offences in relation to the navakammam. See, for instance, Pârâgika III, 5, 30.

¹ For the rule authorising such giving in charge in general cases, see above, VI, 5.

² For most of the following technical terms in building, see our notes above on Kullavagga V, 11, and V, 1, 2.

³ See our note on this phrase above, V, 11, 6.

⁴ Gandikâdhâna-mattenâ ti dvâra-bâhânam upari-kaṇṇa-gandika-yogana-mattena (B.). Gandî is used in this sense at Gâtaka I, 237. Compare the use of Dhamma-gandikâ, 'block of execution,' at Gâtaka I, 150, II, 124. The word gandikâ occurs also at Gâtaka I, 474 (last line), in the sense of 'bunch:' but it is there probably a misprint; for Oldenberg, in the parallel passage at Bhikkhunî-vibhaṅga, Pâkittiya I, 1, reads bhandike. That the two words are easily confused in Burmese writing is shown by the fact that the Berlin (Burmese) copy of Buddhaghosa reads here also bhandikâdhâna-mattenâ ti, &c., and again afterwards bhandika.

⁵ See our note on this phrase above, VI, 5, 2.

⁶ Paribhanda-karâṇa-mattenâ ti gomaya-paribhanda-kasâva-parikarâṇa-mattena (B.). The very same expression is used in a wholly doubtful sense, and of some process of tailoring, in Mahāvagga VII, 1, 5.

for life ; or they gave in charge a completely finished Vihâra to a Bhikkhu for such time as should elapse till the smoke rose (from the funeral pyre on which his body should be burnt¹).

The moderate Bhikkhus murmured, &c. (as usual, down to) The Blessed One said to the Bhikkhus :

‘ You are not, O Bhikkhus, to confer the office of building overseer when clay has merely to be put aside in heaps . . . (&c., as before, down to) body shall be burnt. Whosoever shall so confer it, shall be guilty of a dukkata. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to give a Vihâra not yet begun, or not yet finished², in charge as a new building. And with reference to the work on a small Vihâra, it may be given in charge as a navakamma for a period of five or six years, that on an Addhayoga for a period of seven or eight years, that on a large Vihâra or a Pâsâda for ten or twelve years.’

2. Now at that time the Bhikkhus gave the whole of a Vihâra as a navakamma (to one Bhikkhu to superintend)—or two Vihâras to one Bhikkhu—or the Bhikkhu who had taken the work in charge got another (Bhikkhu to live there and take charge for him)—or the Bhikkhu who had taken in charge a building belonging to the Samgha kept exclusive possession of it—or the Bhikkhus gave work in charge to one not at that time within the boundary¹—or Bhikkhus who had once taken charge kept exclusive possession for all time.

¹ Dhûmakâlikan ti idam yâv’ assa kîta-dhûmo na paññâyâtîti tâva ayam vihâro etass’ evâ ti evam dhûma-kâle apaloketvâ kata-pariyositam vihâram denti (B.). The word recurs below, applied to sikkhâpadam, in XI, 1, 9.

² Vippakatan ti ettha vippakato nâma yâva gopânasiyo na ârohani. Gopânasîsu pana âru/hâsu bahukato nâma hoti : tasmâ tato pañhâya na dâtabbo (B.). The use of bahukato is noteworthy, for in the only other passage where we have found the word (Mahâvagga VI, 36, 2), it has a totally different application. There is possibly a misreading in the one MS. available. (? pakato.)

They told [each of] these matters to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to do [any one of these things]. Whosoever does, he is guilty of a dukkaṭa. And the Bhikkhu in charge may take one good sleeping-place into his exclusive possession for the three months of the rainy, but not during the dry season.’

3. Now at that time Bhikkhus who had taken charge of building operations left the place [or otherwise became incompetent in one or other of the twenty and three ways set out in the next paragraph²].

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘In case that occurs, O Bhikkhus, as soon as he has taken charge, or before the building has been completed, let the office be given to another lest there should be loss to the Samgha. In case the building has been completed, O Bhikkhus, if he then leaves the place, it (the office and its privileges) is still his—if he then returns to the world, or dies, or admits that he is a sāmaṇera, or that he has abandoned the precepts, or that he has become guilty of an extreme offence, the Samgha becomes the owner¹—if he then admits that he is mad, or that his mind is unhinged, or that he is afflicted with bodily pain, or that he has been suspended for his refusal to acknowledge an offence, or to atone for an offence, or to renounce a sinful doctrine, it (the office and its privileges) is still his—if he then admits that he is a eunuch, or that he has furtively attached himself to the Samgha, or that he has gone over to the Titthiyas; or that he is an animal, or that he has murdered his mother, or his father, or an Arahat, or that he has violated a Bhikkhuni, or that he has caused a schism in the Samgha, or that he has shed (a Buddha's) blood, or that he is an hermaphrodite, then the Samgha becomes the owner.'

¹ See above, VI, 11, 3.

² See Mahāvagga II, 22, 3, and II, 36, 1–3. In the latter of these two passages the three cases are omitted. In Mahāvagga IX, 4, 2, and 8, the whole 23 are given.

18.

1. Now at that time the Bhikkhus made use elsewhere of beds which were appurtenances² to the Vihâra of a certain lay-disciple (upâsaka).

Then that upâsaka murmured, &c.

They told the matter to the Blessed One.

'Things appurtenant to one place are not, O Bhikkhus, to be used in another. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time the Bhikkhus, fearing to offend if they took (things to sit upon) even into the ¹ That is, the navakammiko loses his privileges (his lien on the best sleeping-place, &c.).

² Vihâra-paribhogam. 'Meant for use only in that Vihâra.' Compare above, VI, 14, 1.

Uposatha Hall, or the meeting-place, sat on the ground; and their legs and robes got soiled.

They told the matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to take things away for a certain time only¹.'

Now at that time a large Vihâra belonging to the Samgha went to ruin². The Bhikkhus, fearing to offend, did not take the bedding in it away.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to take away things in order to save them from destruction.'

19.

1. Now at that time there was a very valuable rug, and a very valuable piece of cloth, among the bedding furniture belonging to the Samgha.

They told this matter to the Blessed One³.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to barter either of these things in order to increase the stock of legally permissible furniture⁴.'

Now at that time the Samgha had received a

¹ Tâvakâlikam. The word occurs in Gâtaka I, 121, 393 (on which see Rh. D. in 'Buddhist Birth Stories,' p. 170, and 'Buddhist Suttas,' p. 241), in Buddhaghosa's notes on Mahâvagga VII, 5, 1 (above, II, 154, note 7), in the Bhikkhunî-vibhaṅga, Pâṭṭiya XXV, 2, and in Kullavagga X, 16, 1.

² Samghassa vihâro udriyati. The whole phrase has already occurred at Mahâvagga III, 8.

³ Because such things were forbidden by Mahâvagga V, 10, 4, though kambala is not there specially mentioned.

⁴ Phâtikammatthâyâ ti vaddhikammatthâyâ ti. Vaddhikammatthâyâ phâtikammam k' ettha samakam vâ atirekam vâ agghanakam mañka-pi/hâdi-senâsanam eva va/tati (B.).

bear-skin, and a *kakkali*¹ rug, and a kolaka cloth².

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to use them as mats to wipe your feet on³.’

20.

1. Now at that time the Bhikkhus walked over the mats used for sleeping upon with unwashed or wet feet, or with their sandals on; and the matting was soiled.

They told these matters to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to do so. Whosoever does, shall be guilty of a *dukkata*⁴.’

2. Now at that time the Bhikkhus spat on the newly prepared floor⁵, and the colour was spoilt.

¹ According to VI, 2, 2, and VI, 3, 5, this could also be used as a screen or curtain over the space in a wall left for a window.

² According to Mahāvagga VIII, 18, this might be used to wipe faces with; and according to Kullavagga V, 9, 4, VI, 19, to place crockery or furniture on. The word kola means simply cotton cloth, but it is clear from these passages that kolaka has some special connotation.

³ Not to sit upon.

⁴ With this should be compared the other rule in Mahāvagga V, 6, 1, according to which the Bhikkhus were to wear sandals when getting upon bedsteads or chairs, lest these should become soiled. The two passages are parallel in wording throughout.

⁵ Parikammakatāya. The floors were of earth, not of wood, and were restored from time to time by fresh clay or dry cowdung being laid down, and then covered with a whitewash, in which sometimes black or red (geruka) was mixed. See above, V, 11, 6; VI, 3, 1; 17, 1; 27. From the parallel passage at Mahāvagga I, 25, 15, and Kullavagga VIII, 3, 1, it would seem that the red colouring was used rather for walls, and the black one for floors.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to do so. Whosoever does, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow, O Bhikkhus, the use of a spittoon.’

Now at that time the legs of the bedsteads and chairs made scratches on the newly prepared floor.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to cover it up with floor-cloth.’

Now at that time the Bhikkhus leant up against the newly prepared walls¹, and the colouring was spoilt.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to do so. Whosoever does, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, the use of a board to lean up against².’

The board scratched the floor at the bottom, and ruined the wall at the top.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to cover it at the top and bottom with cloth.’

Now at that time, fearing to offend, they would not lie down on places over which it was permissible to walk with washen feet³.

¹ The walls were no doubt usually made with ‘wattle and daub;’ that is, sticks with clay between the interstices. This was treated from time to time like the flooring (see last note).

² Apasena-phalakam. This article of furniture is mentioned, with the spittoon, in Mahāvagga I, 25, 15, 16, and in the parallel passage at Kullavagga VIII, 1, 3. We have rendered it in the Mahāvagga by ‘board to recline on.’ Compare the use of apasayam in Buddhaghosa’s note on Kullavagga VI, 2, 4 (above, p. 153, note 3) of an arm-chair or sofa.

³ Dhotapādakā ti dhotapādakā hutvā dhotēhi pādehi akkamitabbaṭṭhāne nipaggiṭum kukkukāyanti. Dhotapādake ti pi pāṭho. Dhotēhi pādehi akkamitabbaṭṭhānass’ eva etam adhivaṭṭanam (B.).

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to lie down in such a place when you have spread something over it.’

21.

1. Now when the Blessed One had remained at Âḷavi as long as he thought fit, he set out on his journey towards Râgagaha. And proceeding straight on, he arrived in due course at Râgagaha. And there, at Râgagaha, the Blessed One stayed at the Veḷuvana in the Kalandaka Nivâpa.

Now at that time there was a scarcity of food at Râgagaha¹. The people were unable to provide food for the (whole) Samgha; and they were desirous of providing food² (to be sent to the Vihâra) for the use of a special Bhikkhu (designated by the donor)³, or for special Bhikkhus invited (by the donor in his own house)⁴, or for (single Bhikkhus) appointed by ticket (issued by the Samgha)⁵, or of providing food during a fortnight⁶, or on Uposatha

¹ Other special rules for times of scarcity will be found at Mahāvagga VI, 17, 7; 18, 4; 19, 2; 20, 4 (repealed for times of plenty in VI, 32). Compare also Pârâgika IV, 1, 1.

² The above modes of receiving food (instead of collecting in a bowl morsels of food given in alms) are the dispensations allowed by Mahāvagga I, 30, 4.

³ Uddesa-bhattacham kâtum. Compare the story of Upananda at Mahāvagga VI, 19, 1.

⁴ Nimantanam kâtum. The word is only used in this special technical sense. Compare the whole story of Kulla-panthaka at Gâtaka I, 116, and especially the last line.

⁵ Salâka-bhattacham kâtum. See especially above, Kullavagga IV, 9; IV, 10.

⁶ Pakkhikam kâtum. Both Childers sub voce and Frankfurter days (that is, on the last days of each fortnight) or on the first days of each fortnight.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, each of three ways of obtaining food.’

Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus having received good food for themselves, gave over the worse food (which they had also received) to the other Bhikkhus.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to appoint as apportioner of rations¹ a Bhikkhu who is possessed of the following five qualifications—(&c., as in IV, 9, down to the end of the Kammavākā).’

Now the Bhikkhus who were apportioners of rations, thought: ‘How then are the rations to be apportioned?’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to apportion them by arranging the food in small heaps, and fastening tickets or marks upon them².’

2. Now at that time the Samgha had no dis-

(‘Pali Handbook,’ p. 165), in interpreting the passage at Mahāvagga I, 30, 4, take this to mean a feast given on the eighth day of the month. But paksha is the half-month. The expression much more probably means, therefore, to provide food either during the whole of a half-month for one or more specially invited Bhikkhus, or for a larger number on any one day of the half-month to be chosen by the Samgha.

¹ Compare above, Kullavagga IV, 4, 1.

² Buddhaghosa says, Salākāya vā paṭikāya vā upanibandhitvā opuññhitvā uddisitun ti vaṇato rukkhasāramayāya salākāya vā veḷuvilivatālapamādinayāya paṭikāya vā asukassa nāma salākabhattachan ti evaṃ akkharāni upanibandhitvā paṭṭhiyam vā kīvarabhoge vā katvā sabbā salākāyo omuññhitvā [sic] punappunam heṭṭhā-vasena āloetvā . . . dātabbā.

tributor of lodging-places—no overseer of stores—no receiver of robes—no distributor of robes, of congey, or of fruits—and no distributor of dry foods, and through not being distributed it went bad.

They told each of these matters¹ to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to appoint as distributor of lodging-places, &c., a Bhikkhu who has (&c., as in § 1, down to the end of the Kammavâkâ, inserting throughout the appropriate variations in the fifth qualification).

3. Now at that time articles of trifling value had accumulated in the storehouse of the Samgha.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to appoint as disposer of trifles a Bhikkhu who has (&c., as before, down to the end of the Kammavâkâ). Each separate needle, and pair of scissors, and pair of sandals, and girdle, and pair of braces, and filtering cloth, and regulation strainer², and plait³, and half-plait³, and gusset³, and half-gusset³, and binding⁴, and braiding⁴, is to be given away. If the Samgha has any ghee, or oil, or honey, or molasses, he is to give it away for personal consumption only, and if it be wanted, he is to give it a second and a third time⁵.’

¹ There is another officer (âsana-paññâpaka) mentioned at Kullavagga XII, 2, 7, whose omission from the list here is worthy of notice.

² Dhamma-karako. See V, 13, 1.

³ On these words, see Mahâvagga VIII, 12, 2.

⁴ On these two words, see Mahâvagga VIII, 1, 5.

⁵ These things were to be used only as medicines, according to Mahâvagga VI, 1, 1-5, where butter is also added. That would be under the charge of the distributor of dry foods (§ 2), as if kept it would go bad. According to VI, 15, 10, none of these five

Now at that time the Samgha had no receiver of under-garments¹, or of bowls,—no superintendent of those who kept the grounds in order (the Ârâ-mikas), and the Ârâ-mikas not being looked after, the necessary work was not done,—no superintendent of sâmaneras, and the sâmaneras not being looked after did not perform their duties.

They told each of these matters to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to appoint as receiver of under-garments, &c., a Bhikkhu who has (&c., as before, down to the end of the Kammavâkâ).’

End of the Sixth Khandhaka, on Sleeping Arrangements, &c.

kinds of medicine were to be kept for a period exceeding seven days, but that was a rule that was not very probable to be strictly followed.

¹ Sâ/iya; no doubt the same as is spelt elsewhere sâ/ikâ or sâ/akâ, and is used for such purposes as bathing in.

SEVENTH KHANDHAKA.

DISSENSIONS IN THE ORDER.

1¹.

1. Now at that time the Blessed One was staying at Anupiyâ². Anupiyâ is a town belonging to the Mallas³. Now at that time the most distinguished of the young men of the Sâkyan clan had renounced the world in imitation of the Blessed One.

Now there were two brothers, Mahânâma the Sâkyan, and Anuruddha the Sâkyan. Anuruddha the Sâkyan was delicately nurtured; and he had three storeyed residences, one for the cold season, one for the hot season, and one for the season of the rains⁴. During the four months spent in the

¹ With the whole of the following story compare the, in many respects, fuller account given by the commentator on the Dhammapada (Fausböll, pp. 139 and following).

² This was the spot where Gotama spent the first week after his renunciation of the world, before he went on to Râgagaha (Rh. D.'s 'Buddhist Birth Stories,' I, 87). Professor Fausböll there (Gâtaka I, 65) reads Anûpiyam, but all his MSS. have the û short. It is noteworthy that in our text the locative is formed as if the word were feminine, though the neuter form is used for the nominative.

³ The more usual mode of adding this description in similar passages at the commencement of all the Suttas would lead us to expect here Mallânam nigame.

⁴ Compare Mahâvagga I, 7, 1, where the same thing is said of Yasa.

residence for the season of the rains, he was waited upon by women performing music¹, and came not down from the upper storey of his residence.

Then Mahânâma the Sâkyan thought : ' Now the most distinguished of the young men of the Sâkya clan have already renounced the world in imitation of the Blessed One, but from our own family no one has gone forth from the household life into the houseless state. Let therefore either I, or Anuruddha, renounce the world.' And he went to Anuruddha the Sâkyan, and said [so to him, adding], ' Either therefore do you go forth, or I will do so.'

' I am delicate. It is impossible for me to go forth from the household life into the houseless state. Do you do so.'

2. ' But come now, O beloved Anuruddha, I will tell you what is incident to the household life. First, you have to get your fields ploughed. When that is done, you have to get them sown. When that is done, you have to get the water led down over them. When that is done, you have to get the water led off again. When that is done, you have to get the weeds pulled up². When that is done, you have to get the crop reaped. When that is done, you have to get the crop carried away. When that is done, you have to get it arranged.

¹ Nippurisehi turiyehi. That Childers's rendering, ' without men, without people,' is inadequate is clear from the context at the passage which he quotes from Gâtaka I, 53.

² Niddâpeti. Buddhaghosa says, ' Pull up the weeds' (tinâni). The word occurs also at Gâtaka I, 215, where there is a similar list of farming operations, which, though smaller, contains one or two items not given here.

into bundles. When that is done, you have to get it trodden out¹. When that is done, you have to get the straw picked out. When that is done, you have to get all the chaff removed. When that is done, you have to get it winnowed. When that is done, you have to get the harvest garnered². When that is done, you have to do just the same the next year, and the same all over again the year after that.

‘The work is never over: one sees not the end of one’s labours. O! when shall our work be over? When shall we see the end of our labours? When shall we, still possessing and retaining the pleasures of our five senses, yet dwell at rest? Yes! the work, beloved Anuruddha, is never over; no end appears to our labours. Even when our fathers and forefathers had completed their time³, even then was their work unfinished.’

‘Then do you take thought for the household duties. I will go forth from the household life into the houseless state.’

And Anuruddha the Sâkya went to his mother, and said to her: ‘I want, mother, to go forth from the household life into the houseless state. Grant me thy permission to do so.’

And when he had thus spoken, his mother replied

¹ Maddâpeti. There is mention of threshing (prati-han) already in the Vedas. See the passages collected by Zimmer, ‘Altindisches Leben,’ p. 238. But treading out is even still a very common, if not the more usual, process throughout India and Ceylon.

² Atiharâpeti. See Milinda Pañha, p. 66. The simple verb occurs also in a similar connection in the Bhikkhunî-vibhaṅga in the introductory story to Pâṭṭiya VII.

³ That is, had died.

to Anuruddha the Sâkyan, and said: 'You two, O beloved Anuruddha, are my two only sons, near and dear to me, in whom I find no evil. Through death I shall some day, against my will, be separated from you; but how can I be willing, whilst you are still alive, that you should go forth from the household life into the houseless state?'

[And a second time Anuruddha the Sâkyan made the same request, and received the same reply. And a third time Anuruddha the Sâkyan made the same request to his mother.]

3. Now at that time Bhaddiya the Sâkya Râga held rule over the Sâkyas; and he was a friend of Anuruddha the Sâkyan's. And the mother of Anuruddha the Sâkyan, thinking that that being so, the Râga would not be able to renounce the world, said to her son: 'If, beloved Anuruddha, Bhaddiya the Sâkyan Râga will renounce the world, thou also mayest go forth into the houseless state.'

Then Anuruddha the Sâkyan went to Bhaddiya the Sâkyan Râga, and said to him: 'My renunciation of the world, dear friend, is being obstructed by thee.'

'Then let that obstruction, dear friend, be removed. Even with thee will I¹—renounce thou the world according to thy wish.'

'Come, dear friend, let us both renounce the world together!'

¹ Aham tayâ. Buddhaghosa explains that the Râga is beginning to say that he will go with his friend. But a desire for the glory of sovereignty comes over his heart, and he leaves the sentence unfinished. (The Pâli is given in the notes on the text, p. 323.)

‘I am not capable, dear friend, of giving up the household life. Whatsoever else you can ask of me, that I will do¹. Do you go forth (alone).’

‘My mother, dear friend, has told me that if thou dost so, I may. And thou hast even now declared “If thy renunciation be obstructed by me, then let that obstruction be removed. Even with thee will I—renounce thou the world, according to thy wish.” Come, then, dear friend, let us both renounce the world.’

Now at that time men were speakers of truth, and keepers of their word which they had pledged. And Bhaddiya the Sākya Rāga said to Anuruddha the Sākyan: ‘Wait, my friend, for seven years. At the end of seven years we will renounce the world together.’

‘Seven years are too long, dear friend. I am not able to wait for seven years.’

[And the same offer was made successively of six years and so on down to one year, of seven months and so on down to one month, and even of a fortnight, and still there was ever the same reply. At last the Rāga said,]

‘Wait, my friend, for seven days, whilst I hand over the kingdom to my sons and my brothers.’

‘Seven days is not too long. I will wait thus far’ (was the reply).

4. So Bhaddiya the Sākya Rāga, and Anuruddha, and Ānanda, and Bhagu, and Kimbila, and Devadatta—just as they had so often previously gone out to the pleasure-ground with fourfold array—even so did they now go out with fourfold array, and Upâli the barber went with them, making seven in all.

¹ Tyāham. See Dr. Morris’s remarks on this elision in his introduction to the Kariyā Piṭaka (Pāli Text Society, 1882), where he makes it equal to tad aham. This seems to us open to question, at least in this passage, where it may possibly stand for te aham.

And when they had gone some distance, they sent their retinue back, and crossed over into the neighbouring district, and took off their fine things, and wrapped them in their robes, and made a bundle of them, and said to Upâli the barber: ‘Do you now, good Upâli, turn back. These things will be sufficient for you to live upon.’

But as he was going back, Upâli the barber thought: ‘The Sâkyas are fierce. They will think that these young men have been brought by me to destruction, and they will slay me. But since now these young men of the Sâkya clan can go forth from the household life into the houseless state, why indeed should not I?’ And he let down the bundle (from his back), and hung the bundle on a tree, saying, ‘Let whoso finds it, take it, as a gift,’ and returned to the place where the young Sâkyans were.

And the Sâkya youths saw him coming from afar, and on seeing, they said to him: ‘What have you come back for, good Upâli?’

Then he told them [what he had thought, and what he had done with the bundle, and why he was returned].

‘Thou hast done well, good Upâli (was the reply), in that thou didst not return; for the Sâkyas are fierce, and might have killed thee.’

And they took Upâli the barber with them to the place where the Blessed One was. And on arriving there, they bowed down before the Blessed One, and took their seats on one side. And so seated they said to the Blessed One : ' We Sâkyas, Lord, are haughty. And this Upâli the barber has long been an attendant, Lord, upon us. May the Blessed One admit him to the Order before us, so that we may render him respect and reverence, and bow down with outstretched hands before him (as our senior), and thus shall the Sâkya pride be humbled in us Sâkyans¹.'

Then the Blessed One received first Upâli the barber, and afterwards those young men of the Sâkya clan, into the ranks of the Order. And the venerable Bhaddiya, before that rainy season was over, became master of the Threefold Wisdom², and the venerable Anuruddha acquired the Heavenly Vision³, and the venerable Ânanda realised the effect of having entered upon the Stream⁴, and Devadatta attained to that kind of Iddhi which is attainable even by those who have not entered upon the Excellent Way⁵.

¹ This reputation of the Sâkya family for pride is referred to in Gâtaka I, 88, 89.

² Tisso viggâ, see Rh. D.'s remarks at pp. 161, 162 of 'Buddhist Suttas from the Pâli' (S. B. E., vol. xi). They are probably here the three viggas referred to in the Sutta-vibhaṅga, Pârâgika I, 1, 6-8, as the second of those is the Heavenly Vision, here mentioned in the next clause.

³ Dibbañakkhu, a full description of the details of which will be found in the stock paragraph translated by Rh. D. in 'Buddhist Suttas from the Pâli' (S. B. E., vol. xi, pp. 216-218).

⁴ Sotâpatti-phala; that is, he became free from the delusion of self (sakkâyadiññi), from doubt (vitikikkhâ), and from dependence upon ceremonies or works (silabbata-pârâmaṣa). See Rh. D.'s manual, 'Buddhism,' pp. 108-110.

⁵ Pothugganikâ iddhi. What this may be is unknown to us. A fourfold Iddhi is described in detail in the stock passage

5¹. Now at that time the venerable Bhaddiya, who had retired into the forest to the foot of a tree, into solitude, gave utterance over and over again to this ecstatic exclamation: 'O happiness! O happiness!' And a number of Bhikkhus went up to the place where the Blessed One was, and bowed down before him, and took their seats on one side. And, so seated, they [told the Blessed One of this], and added, 'For a certainty, Lord, the venerable Bhaddiya is not contented as he lives the life of purity; but rather it is when calling to mind the happiness of his former sovereignty that he gives vent to this saying.'

Then the Blessed One addressed a certain Bhikkhu, and said: 'Do you go, O Bhikkhu, and in my name call Bhaddiya the Bhikkhu, saying, "The Teacher, venerable Bhaddiya, is calling for you."'

'Even so, Lord,' said that Bhikkhu, in assent to the Blessed One. And he went to Bhaddiya, and called him [in those words].

6. 'Very well,' said the venerable Bhaddiya, in translated by Rh. D. in 'Buddhist Suttas from the Pâli,' S. B. E., vol. xi, p. 214, and the fourfold Iddhi of the ideal king in the similar passage, loc. cit., pp. 259-261. The Iddhi here referred to may be the former of these two, though that list does not include the power ascribed to Devadatta in the next chapter. At Gâtaka I, 140, the expression of our text here is replaced by ghâna, though the account there is otherwise the same.

It is worthy of notice that Devadatta, though a Bhikkhu, is not honoured with the standing epithet, 'venerable,' always used of the other members of the Order, even when they are represented to have been of bad character.

¹ The following incident, with a summary of the preceding sections, forms the introductory story to the 10th Gâtaka (Rh. D.'s 'Buddhist Birth Stories,' i. pp. 190-193). The legend may have first arisen as an explanation of the name Bhaddiya, which means 'the fortunate one.'

assent to that Bhikkhu ; and he came to the Blessed One, and bowed down before him, and took his seat on one side. And when he was so seated, the Blessed One said to the venerable Bhaddiya :

‘ Is it true, as they say, that you Bhaddiya, when retired into the forest to the foot of a tree, into solitude, have given utterance over and over again to this ecstatic exclamation, “O happiness! O happiness!” What circumstance was it, O Bhaddiya, that you had in your mind when you acted thus?’

‘Formerly, Lord, when I was a king, I had a guard completely provided both within and without my private apartments, both within and without the town, and within the (borders of my) country. Yet though, Lord, I was thus guarded and protected, I was fearful, anxious, distrustful, and alarmed. But now, Lord, even when in the forest, at the foot of a tree, in solitude, I am without fear or anxiety, trustful and not alarmed ; I dwell at ease, subdued¹, secure², with mind as peaceful as an antelope’s³. It was when calling this fact to mind, Lord, that I gave utterance over and over again to that cry, “O happiness! O happiness!”’

Then the Blessed One, on hearing that, gave utterance at that time to this song :

¹ Pannalomo. See our note 2 on Kullavagga I, 6, 1 (above, vol. ii, p. 339).

² Paradavutto. This is the reading of the Sinhalese MS., and is the correct one. See Oldenberg’s note at p. 363 of the edition of the text. Our translation is conjectural.

³ Migabhûtena ketasâ. The meaning of miga in this phrase is not certain ; and the figure may be drawn from the careless mind of any animal in its natural state. We have not noticed the idiom elsewhere ; but compare the converse figure, bhanta-miga-sappa/ibhâgo sâsane anabhirato, at Gâtaka I, 303, 6.

‘The man who harbours no harsh thoughts within him,
Who cares not whether things are thus or thus,
His state of joy, freedom from grief or care,
The very gods obtain not to behold!’

2.

1. Now when the Blessed One had stayed at Anupiyâ as long as he thought fit, he set out on his journey towards Kosambî. And journeying straight on he arrived in due course at Kosambî, and there, at Kosambî, he stayed at the Ghosita Ârâma.

Now the following thought occurred to Devadatta, when he had retired into solitude, and was plunged in meditation: ‘Whom now¹ can I so gain over that, he being well pleased with me, much gain and honour may result to me? And it occurred to him, ‘Now this prince Agâtasattu is young, and has a lucky future before him. Let me then gain him over; and he being well pleased with me, much gain and honour will result.’

Then Devadatta folded up his sleeping-mat, and set out, fully bowled and robed, for Râgagaha; and in due course he arrived at Râgagaha. Then he laid aside his own form, and took upon himself the form of a child clad in a girdle of snakes, and appeared on the lap of prince Agâtasattu². Then was prince Agâtasattu terrified, and startled, and anxious, and alarmed.

¹ In the text, for kin nu read kam nu.

² This taking upon oneself another shape is not one of the powers of Iddhi included in the first list referred to at note 5, p. 230.

And Devadatta said to prince Agâtasattu, 'Are you afraid of me, O prince?'

'Yes, I am. Who are you?'

'I am Devadatta.'

'If you, Sir, are really the worthy Devadatta, be good enough to appear in your own shape.'

Then Devadatta, laying aside the form of the child, appeared there before prince Agâtasattu with his inner and outer robes on, and with his bowl in his hand. And prince Agâtasattu was well pleased with Devadatta by reason of this marvel of Iddhi, and morning and evening he used to go in five hundred chariots to wait upon him, and food was brought and laid before him in five hundred dishes.

Then there arose in Devadatta's mind, possessed and vanquished by gain and hospitality and fame¹, some such thought as this: 'It is I who ought to lead the Bhikkhu-saṃgha.' And as the idea rose up within him, (that moment) was Devadatta deprived of that his power of Iddhi.

2. Now at that time a Koliyan, by name Kakudha, who had been (as Bhikkhu) the attendant on Moggallâna, had just died, and had appeared again in a certain spiritual body², possessed of a personality as large as two or three of the common rice-fields of a Mâgadha village, and yet so constituted³ that he was not in the way either of himself or of others¹. And this celestial being, Kakudha, went to the venerable Moggallâna, and bowed down before him, and took his stand on one side. And so standing, he told the venerable Moggallâna [of the thought that had arisen in Devadatta's mind, and of the result thereof]. And when he had told him, he bowed down before the venerable Moggallâna, and keeping him on his right side as he passed him, he vanished away.

¹ Compare Mahāvagga V, 1, 22, on this expression. Also below, § 5.

² Aññataram manomayam kāyam upapanno. Perhaps 'in a mode of existence in which his body was changeable at will.' (See Childers, sub voce manomayo.)

³ Attabhâvo. See IX, 1, 3.

And the venerable Moggallâna went to the place where the Blessed One was, and told him [the whole matter]².

'What then, Moggallâna, have you so penetrated the mind of that celestial being Kakudha, that you know that whatsoever he speaks, that will be accordingly, and not otherwise³?'

'I have, Lord.'

'Keep that saying, Moggallâna, secret; keep that saying secret. Even now that foolish man will himself make himself known.

3⁴. 'There are, Moggallâna, these five kinds of teachers now existing in the world. What are the five?

'In the first place, Moggallâna, there is one kind of teacher whose conduct not being pure, he yet

¹ Vyâbâdheti. He could occupy the same space as other beings without incommoding them. The word occurs in the same sense in the passage quoted from Buddhaghosa in Rh. D.'s note 1 on the Mahâ-parinibbâna Sutta V, 10, but originally occurring in the Ânguttara Nikâya.

² The last paragraph is here repeated in the text.

³ On the use here of ketasâ ketao parikkâ, compare Mahâ-parinibbâna Sutta I, 16, 17.

⁴ The following two sections are repeated below, VII, 3, 10, to all the Bhikkhus.

gives out that he is a person of pure conduct, one whose conduct is pure, and innocent, and without stain. His disciples know that that is so, but they think, "If we announce the fact to the laity, he will not like it. And how can we conduct ourselves towards him in a way that is displeasing to him? And besides he is honoured with gifts of the requisite clothing, food, lodging, and medicine for the sick. He will sooner or later become known by that which he himself will do." Such a teacher, Moggallâna, do his disciples protect in respect of his own conduct. And being as he is, he expects¹ to be protected by his disciples in respect of his own conduct.

4. 'Again, Moggallâna,' &c. [as before, putting successively 'mode of livelihood,' 'preaching of the Dhamma,' 'system of exposition,' &c., 'insight arising from knowledge,' for 'conduct']. 'These, Moggallâna, are the five kinds of teachers now existing in the world. But I being pure in conduct, mode of livelihood, preaching of the Dhamma, system of exposition, and insight arising from knowledge, give out that I am so, that I am pure, innocent, and without stain in all these things. And neither do my disciples protect me in respect of my own conduct, nor do I expect them to do so.'

5. Now when the Blessed One had remained at Kosambi as long as he thought fit, he set out on his journey towards Râgagaha. And journeying straight on, he arrived in due course at Râgagaha; and there, at Râgagaha, he stayed at the Veluvana in the Kalandaka Nivâpa.

¹ Pakkâsimsati. Perhaps this word here means 'he requires, needs.'

And a number of Bhikkhus went to the Blessed One, and bowed down before him, and took their seats on one side. And when so seated, they said to the Blessed One: 'Prince Agâtasattu is in the habit of going morning and evening with five hundred carts to wait upon Devadatta, and food is brought and laid before him in five hundred dishes.'

'Envy not, O Bhikkhus, the gain and hospitality and fame of Devadatta. So long, O Bhikkhus, as Agâtasattu [so waits upon him and gives him alms] so long may we expect Devadatta not to prosper, but to decline in virtuous qualities¹. Just, O Bhikkhus, as if you were to burst a gall (bladder)² before the nose of a fierce dog, the dog would thereby become so much the fiercer, just so long, O Bhikkhus (&c., as before). To his own hurt, O Bhikkhus, has this gain, hospitality, and fame come to Devadatta, to his own destruction. Just, O Bhikkhus, as a plantain, or a bamboo, or a reed gives fruit to its own hurt and its own destruction³, just so to his own hurt (&c., as before). Just as a young she-mule conceives to her own hurt and her own destruction⁴, just so, O Bhikkhus, to his own hurt has this gain, &c., come to Devadatta.

'Its fruit destroys the plantain-tree ; its fruit the bamboo and the reed.

¹ This phrase runs in the same mould as the one so constantly repeated at the commencement of the Mahâ-parinibbâna Sutta (I, §§ 4-11).

² Pittam bhindeyyum. Literally, 'should break a gall.'

³ These three plants die after producing fruit.

⁴ Because she would die if she did. On assatarî, compare above, VI, 4, 3, and our note there.

‘Honour destroys the evil man, just as its foal destroys the young she-mule.’

Here endeth the First Portion for Recitation.

3.

1. Now at that time the Blessed One was seated preaching the Dhamma, and surrounded by a great multitude, including the king and his retinue. And Devadatta rose from his seat, and arranging his upper robe over one shoulder, stretched out his joined hands to the Blessed One, and said to the Blessed One :

‘The Blessed One, Lord, is now grown aged, he is old and stricken in years, he has accomplished a long journey, and his term of life is nearly run¹. Let the Blessed One now dwell at ease in the enjoyment of happiness reached even in this world. Let the Blessed One give up the Bhikkhu-saṃgha to me, I will be its leader.’

‘Thou hast said enough, Devadatta. Desire not to be the leader of the Bhikkhu-saṃgha.’

[And a second time Devadatta made the same request, and received the same reply. And a third time Devadatta made the same request.]

‘I would not give over the Bhikkhu-saṃgha, Devadatta, even to Sâriputta and Moggallâna.

¹ This string of epithets recurs in Pârâgika I, 1, 2, of old and venerable Brâhmans.

How much less, then, to so vile and evil-living a person as you¹.

Then Devadatta thought : ' Before the king and his retinue the Blessed One denies me, calling me "evil-living," and exalts Sâriputta and Moggallâna.' And, angry and displeased, he bowed down before the Blessed One, and keeping him on his right hand as he passed him, he departed thence.

This was the first time that Devadatta bore malice against the Blessed One.

2. And the Blessed One said to the Bhikkhus, ' Let then the Samgha, O Bhikkhus, carry out against Devadatta the Act of Proclamation² in Râgagaha, to the effect that whereas the nature of Devadatta used to be of one kind it is now of another kind, and that whatsoever he shall do, either bodily or verbally, in that neither shall the Buddha be recognised, nor the Dhamma, nor the Samgha, but only Devadatta.

' And thus, O Bhikkhus, shall the Act be carried out. Some discreet and able Bhikkhu (&c.,

¹ In the text read kāhavaṣṣa khe/āpakassa. On the first word, compare V, 2, 8. For the second the Dhammapada commentator (Fausböll, p. 143) reads, as does the Sinhalese MS. in our passage, khe/āsika. Buddhaghosa, explaining it, says, ' In this passage (we should recollect) that those who obtain the requisites (of a Bhikkhu) by an evil mode of life are said by the Noble Ones to be like unto spittle. The Blessed One calls him khe/āpaka (to express that) he eats, (that is, 'gains a living) in sin like that.' (For the Pāli, see the edition of the text, p. 323, where the comma after khe/asaḍḍisā should be before it.)

² Pakāsaniya-kammaṃ. This is not one of the regular official acts of the Samgha, as described in Kullavagga I, and is only mentioned in this passage. It is not referred to by the Dhammapada commentator.

in the same form as in I, 1, 4, down to the end of the Kammavâḥā.)'

And the Blessed One said to the venerable Sâriputta, 'Do you then, Sâriputta, proclaim Devadatta throughout Râgagaha.'

'In former times, Lord, I have sung the praises of Devadatta in Râgagaha, saying, "Great is the power (Iddhi) of the son of Godhi! Great is the might of the son of Godhi!" How can I now proclaim him throughout Râgagaha?'

'Was it not truth that you spoke, Sâriputta, when you [so] sang his praises?'

'Yea, Lord!'

'Even so, Sâriputta, do you now, speaking the truth, proclaim Devadatta throughout Râgagaha.'

'Even so, Lord,' said Sâriputta, in assent to the Blessed One.

3. And the Blessed One said to the Bhikkhus: 'Let then the Samgha appoint Sâriputta to the office of proclaiming Devadatta throughout Râgagaha to the effect (&c., as before, § 2). And thus, O Bhikkhus, should he be appointed. First, Sâriputta should be asked, &c. (as usual in official appointments¹, down to the end of the Kammavâḥā).'

Then Sâriputta, being so appointed, entered Râgagaha with a number of Bhikkhus, and proclaimed Devadatta accordingly. And thereupon those people who were unbelievers, and without devotion or insight, spake thus: 'They are jealous, these Sakyaputtiya Samanas! They are jealous of the gain and hospitality that fall to Devadatta!' But those who were believers, full of devotion, able, and gifted with insight, spake thus: 'This cannot be any ordinary affair¹, in that the Blessed One has had Devadatta proclaimed throughout Rāgagaha!'

¹ See, for instance, I, 22, 2.

4. And Devadatta went to Agātasattu the prince, and said to him: 'In former days, prince, people were long-lived, but now their term of life is short. It is quite possible, therefore, that you may complete your time while you are still a prince. So do you, prince, kill your father, and become the Rāga; and I will kill the Blessed One, and become the Buddha.'

And prince Agātasattu thought, 'This worthy Devadatta has great powers and might; he will know (what is right).' And fastening a dagger² against his thigh, he entered with violence and at an unusual hour³, though fearful, anxious, excited, and alarmed, the royal chamber. And when the ministers who were in attendance in the private chamber saw that, they seized him. And when, on searching him, they found the dagger fastened on his thigh, they asked him:

'What were you going to do, O prince?'

'I wanted to kill my father.'

'Who incited you to this?'

'The worthy Devadatta.'

Then some of the ministers advised 'The prince should be slain, and Devadatta, and all the Bhikkhus.' Others of them advised 'The Bhikkhus ought not to be slain, for they have done no wrong;

¹ Na orakam bhavissati. See Mahāvagga I, 9, 1, and Kullavagga VI, 4, 10, and our note on the latter passage.

² Potthanikam. This word has already occurred at Mahāvagga VI, 23, 3.

³ Divādivassa. See the use of this word at Gāṭaka II, 1.

but only the prince and Devadatta.' Others of them again said, 'Neither should the prince be slain, nor Devadatta, nor the Bhikkhus. But the king should be told of this, and we should do as the king shall command.'

5. So these ministers, taking the prince with them, went to the Râga of Magadha, to Seniya Bimbisâra, and told him what had happened.

'What advice, my friends, did the ministers give?'

[When they had told him all (as before) he said]: 'What, my friends, can the Buddha, or the Saṃgha, or the Dhamma have to do with this? Has not the Blessed One had a proclamation already made throughout Râgagaha concerning Devadatta, to the effect that whereas his nature used to be of one kind, it is now of another; and that whatsoever he shall do, either bodily or verbally, in that shall neither the Buddha, nor the Dhamma, nor the Saṃgha be required, but only Devadatta?'

Then those ministers who had advised that the prince and Devadatta and all the Bhikkhus should be slain, them he made incapable (of ever again holding office). And those ministers who had advised that the prince should be slain, and Devadatta, them he degraded to lower offices. But those ministers who had advised that neither should the prince be slain, nor Devadatta, nor the Bhikkhus, but that the king should be informed of it, and his command be followed, them he advanced to high positions.

And the Râga of Magadha, Seniya Bimbisâra, said to prince Agâtasattu: 'Why did you want to kill me, O prince?'

‘I wanted a kingdom, O king!’

‘If you then want a kingdom, O prince, let this kingdom be thine!’ And he handed over the kingdom to Agâtasattu the prince¹.

6. Then Devadatta went to prince² Agâtasattu, and said, ‘Give such orders, O king, to your men that I may deprive the Samana Gotama of life.’ And Agâtasattu the prince gave orders to his men: ‘Whatsoever the worthy Devadatta tells you, that do!’

Then to one man Devadatta gave command: ‘Go, my friend, the Samana Gotama is staying at such and such a place. Kill him, and come back by this path.’ Then on that path he placed other two men, telling them, ‘Whatever man you see coming alone along this path, kill him, and return by that path.’ Then on that path he placed other four men [and so on up to sixteen men].

7. And that man took his sword and shield, and hung his bow and quiver at his back, and went to the place where the Blessed One was, and when at some little distance from the Blessed One, being

¹ The early literature already mentions that Agâtasattu eventually killed his father. (See, for instance, Sâmañña-phala Sutta, p. 154.) Bigandet I, 261 (3rd edition) adds that the mode adopted was by starving him to death in prison.

² The Buddhist writers being so especially careful in their accurate use of titles, it is particularly noteworthy that Agâtasattu is here called prince (kumâra) and not king (râga). It is almost impossible to avoid the conclusion that this paragraph stood originally in some other connection; and that the events it describes must then have been supposed to have taken place before Agâtasattu actually became king. That the Dhammapada commentator says here (Fausböll, p. 143) tasmim (that is, Agâtasattu) ragge pativhite, is no evidence the other way; for that account is either taken from this, or depends ultimately upon it.

terrified, anxious, excited, and alarmed, he stood stark still and stiff¹.

On the Blessed One seeing him so, he said to the man : ' Come hither, friend, don't be afraid.'

Then that man laid aside his sword and his shield, took off his bow and his quiver, and went up to the Blessed One ; and falling at his feet, he said to the Blessed One : ' Transgression, Lord, has overcome me even according to my folly, my stupidity, and my unrighteousness, in that I have come hither with evil and with murderous intent. May the Blessed One accept the confession I make of my sin in its sinfulness, to the end that in future I may restrain myself therefrom !'

' Verily, my friend, transgression has overcome thee [&c., down to] intent. But since you, my friend, look upon your sin as sin, and duly make amends for it, we do accept (your confession of) it. For this, O friend, is progress in the discipline of the Noble One, that he who has seen his sin to be sin makes amends for it as is meet, and becomes able in future to restrain himself therefrom².'

Then the Blessed One discoursed to that man in due order, that is to say (&c., as usual in conversions³, down to) May the Blessed One accept me as a disciple, as one who, from this day forth as long as life endures, has taken his refuge in him.

And the Blessed One said to the man : ' Do not, my friend, leave me by that path. Go by this path,' and so dismissed him by another way.

¹ Patthaddha; that is, prastabdhā. See Sutta-vibhaṅga, Pārāgika I, 10, 17, 21.

² This confession and acceptance are in a standing form, which occurs, for instance, at Mahāvagga IX, 1, 9 ; Kullavagga V, 20, 5.

³ See, for instance, Kullavagga VI, 4, 5.

8. But the two men thought, 'Where now can that man be who was to come alone? He is delaying long.' And as they were going to meet him, they caught sight of the Blessed One sitting at the foot of a certain tree. On seeing him they went up to the place where he was, and saluted him, and took their seats on one side. To them also the Blessed One discoursed, [and they were converted as the other man had been, and he sent them back by another way. And the same thing occurred as to the four, and the eight, and the sixteen men ¹.]

9. And the one man returned to Devadatta, and said to him: 'I cannot, Lord, deprive the Blessed One of life. Great is the power (Iddhi ²) and might of the Blessed One.'

'That will do, friend. You need not do so. I will slay the Blessed One myself.'

Now at that time the Blessed One was walking up and down (meditating) in the shade below ³ the mountain called the Vulture's Peak. And Devadatta climbed up the Vulture's Peak, and hurled down a mighty rock with the intention of depriving the Blessed One of life. But two mountain peaks came together and stopped that rock, and only a splinter ⁴ falling from it made the foot of the Blessed One to bleed ⁵.

¹ The last two paragraphs of § 7 are repeated in full in the text in each case.

² The Iddhi here must be the power of religious persuasion.

³ Pakkhâyâyam. See Mahāvagga V, 1, 5, and Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta II, 31 (p. 22 of the text).

⁴ Papatikā. In the text, by a misprint, this and the preceding word have been joined together.

⁵ Pâde ruhiraṃ uppâdesi, where ruhira is equal to lohita.

Then the Blessed One, looking upwards, said to Devadatta : 'Great, O foolish one, is the demerit you have brought forth for yourself¹, in that with evil and murderous intent you have caused the blood of the Tathâgata to flow.'

And the Blessed One said to the Bhikkhus : 'This is the first time that Devadatta has heaped up (against himself) a Karma which will work out its effect in the immediate future², in that with evil and murderous intent he has caused the blood of the Tathâgata to flow.'

10. And the Bhikkhus having heard that Devadatta was compassing the death of the Blessed One, walked round and round the Vihâra, making recitation in high and loud tones, for a protection and guard to the Blessed One. On hearing that noise the Blessed One asked the venerable Ânanda what it was. And when Ânanda [told him], the Blessed One said : 'Then, Ânanda, call the Bhikkhus in my

It is so used at Gâtaka II, 275, in the Milinda Pañha, p. 125, and in the account of the present incident in the Dhammapada commentary (p. 144). In Mahâvagga I, 67, where it is said that one who has shed (a Buddha's) blood cannot be received into the Order, the expression is lohitaṃ uppâdeti: and in numerous passages elsewhere it is added that such a lohittuppâdako becomes ipso facto discharged from one or other of the duties and privileges of a member of the Order, just as if he had thrown off the robes.

¹ Pasûtaṃ. By a misprint the text has pasutaṃ. Compare the end of § 16 below.

² Ânantarika-kammaṃ. That is, that will work out its effect, (not in the next birth, as is the case of all other Karma,) but immediately, in the present life. There are five such deeds (see Childers, sub voce paññā, and Milinda Pañha, p. 25). The Bodisats, according to Gâtaka I, 45 (verse 256), are free from such sins.

name, saying, "The Teacher sends for the venerable ones."

And he [did so], and they came, and saluted the Blessed One, and took their seats on one side. And when they were so seated, the Blessed One said to the Bhikkhus: 'This, O Bhikkhus, is an impossible thing, and one that cannot occur, that one should deprive a Tathâgata of life by violence. The Tathâgatas, O Bhikkhus, are extinguished (in death) in due and natural course.

'There are, O Bhikkhus, these five kinds of teachers now living in the world (&c., as in VII, 2, 3, 4, down to the end). And this, O Bhikkhus, is an impossible thing, and one that cannot occur, that a Tathâgata should be slain by any act set on foot by any one besides himself. The Tathâgatas, O Bhikkhus, are extinguished (in death) in due course (of nature). Go, therefore, O Bhikkhus, each one to his Vihâra, for the Tathâgatas require no protection.'

11. Now at that time there was at Râgagaha an elephant named Nâlâgiri, fierce, and a manslayer. And Devadatta went into Râgagaha, and to the elephant stables, and said to the elephant-keepers¹: 'I, my friends, am a relative of the râga's, and am able to advance a man occupying a low position to a high position, and to order increase of rations or of pay. Therefore, my friends, when the Samana Gotama shall have arrived at this carriage-road², then loose the elephant Nâlâgiri, and let him go down the road.'

¹ Hatthi-bhande. See the note on Mahâvagga VI, 37, 2.

² Rakkham; that is, rathyâm. Compare Gâtaka I, 346, and the Old Commentary on the Bhikkhuni-vibhaṅga, Pâṭittiya VII.

‘Even so, Sir,’ said those elephant-keepers in assent to Devadatta.

And when the Blessed One early in the morning had dressed himself, he entered Râgagaha duly bowled and robed, and with a number of Bhikkhus, for alms; and he entered upon that road. On seeing him the elephant-keepers loosed Nâlâgiri, and let it go down the road. And the elephant saw the Blessed One coming from the distance; and as soon as it saw him, it rushed towards the Blessed One with uplifted trunk, and with its tail and ears erect.

When those Bhikkhus saw the elephant Nâlâgiri coming in the distance, they said to the Blessed One: ‘This elephant, Lord, Nâlâgiri, is fierce, and a manslayer, and it has got into this road. Let the Blessed One, Lord, turn back: let the Happy One turn back.’

‘Come on, O Bhikkhus. Be not alarmed. There is, O Bhikkhus, no possibility [&c., as in last section, down to the end].’

[And a second and a third time the Bhikkhus made the same appeal, and received the same reply.]

12. Then at that time the people climbed up on to the upper storeys of the houses, and on to the balconies, and on to the roofs. And those of them who were unbelievers and without faith or insight, said, ‘Truly the countenance of the great Samana is beautiful; but the elephant will do him a hurt¹.’ But those who were believers, full of devotion, able, and gifted with insight, said, 'Twill be long e'er the elephant can fight a fight with the elephant (of men) !'

¹ The setting of this paragraph is parallel to § 3 above in this chapter; the speech of the unbelievers is the same as that of the Gasilas at Mahâvagga I, 15, 4.

And the Blessed One caused the sense of his love to pervade the elephant Nālâgiri¹; and the elephant, touched by the sense of his love, put down his trunk, and went up to the place where the Blessed One was, and stood still before him. And the Blessed One, stroking the elephant's forehead with his right hand, addressed him in these stanzas :

'Touch not, O elephant, the elephant of men; for sad, O elephant, is such attack²,

'For no bliss is there, O elephant, when he is passed from hence, for him who strikes the elephant of men.

'Be not then mad, and neither be thou careless³, for the careless enter not into a state of bliss,

'Rather do thou thyself so act, that to a state of bliss thou mayest go.'

And Nālâgiri the elephant took up with his trunk the dust from off the feet of the Blessed One, and sprinkled it over its head, and retired, bowing backwards the while it gazed upon the Blessed One.

And Nālâgiri the elephant returned to the elephant stables, and stood in its appointed place, and ¹ Mettena kittena phari; literally, 'he suffused him with loving heart.' Compare Rh. D.'s 'Buddhist Birth Stories,' i. p. 112.

² In nâgamâsado the m is inserted for euphony. See the instances given by Kuhn, 'Beiträge zur Pâli-grammatik,' p. 63. Many others might be added; siva-m-añgase, Gâtaka. vol. i, verse 27; samana-m-aḥala, Childers sub voce, &c. Compare the curious use of âsâdeti at Kullavagga I, 27.

³ A play on the words is here lost in English (mâ mado mâ ka pamâdo).

became once more the tame Nālāgiri. And at that time the people sung these verses :

‘They can be tamed by sticks, and goads, and whips,

‘But the great Sage has tamed this elephant without a weapon or a stick.’

13. The people were angry, murmured, and became indignant, saying, ‘How wicked is this Devadatta, and how wretched¹, in that he can go about to slay the Samāṇa Gotama, who is so mighty and so powerful.’ And the gain and honour of Devadatta fell off, while that of the Blessed One increased.

² Now at that time, when the gain and honour of Devadatta had fallen off, he went, surrounded by Bhikkhus, to people’s houses, appealing for alms³.

The people were angry, murmured, and became indignant, saying, ‘How can the Sakyaputtiya Samāṇas live on food that they ask for at people’s houses? Who is not fond of well-cooked food? Who does not like sweet things?’

The Bhikkhus heard (&c., down to) the Blessed One said to the Bhikkhus: ‘Therefore do I lay down this rule, O Bhikkhus, for the Bhikkhus that

¹ Alakkhiko ti ettha na lakkhetṭi alakkhiko na gānāṭṭi attho. Apākata-kammaṃ karomīti na gānāṭṭi na lakkhitabbo ti alakkhaṇo passitabbo ti attho (B.). We venture to differ from both of these explanations, and to follow rather the derivation of the word, and the meaning of the corresponding Sanskrit term alakṣhmīka.

² From here down to the ‘decision’ is identical with the introductory story in the Sutta-vibhaṅga to the 32nd Pāṭṭiya,—a rule the previous existence of which is implied in the decision given here.

³ Viññāpeti is continually used in the Sutta-vibhaṅga in this sense, and even occurs already in the Pātimokkha, Pāṭṭiya 39.

(not more than) three shall enjoy an alms (together) at people's houses—and this for the sake of three reasons; (to wit) for the restraint of the evil-minded, and for the ease of the good¹, lest those who have evil desires should, in reliance upon a particular party (among the Bhikkhus), break up the *Samgha*², and (lastly) out of compassion for the laity³. (A Bhikkhu) who shall enjoy an alms in parties of more than three, shall be dealt with according to law⁴.

14⁵. Now Devadatta went to the place where Kokâlika, and Katamoraka-tissaka, and the son of Khandâ-devî and Samudda-datta were, and said to them, 'Come, Sirs, let us stir up a division in the Samana Gotama's Samgha, and in the body of his adherents⁶.'

When he had thus spoken, Kokâlika said to Devadatta, 'The Samana Gotama, Sir, is mighty and powerful. How can we [do such a thing]?'

'Come, Sirs, let us go to the Samana Gotama, and make the following five demands, saying,

¹ This whole phrase recurs in Sutta-vibhaṅga, Pârâgika I, 5, 11, and in the Ânguttara Nikâya II, 17, 2. In the latter passage Dr. Morris reads dummaññûnam; see his note at pp. 127, 128. But the Sanskrit Buddhist vocabulary Vyutpatti (teste Bôhtlingk-Roth, s. v. mañku) authorises the use of dummañku.

² So the Ânguttara, loc. cit., has, in the same connection, gihînam anukampâya pâpikkhânam pakkhupakkhedâya.

³ See last note. The idea is here, of course, lest any particular layman should be burdened by providing for many Bhikkhus.

⁴ That is, under the 32nd Pâkittiya, on which rule the Sutta-vibhaṅga explains the phrase gana-bhogana.

⁵ Sections 14, 15, and the greater part of 16 recur, word for word, as the introductory story to the 10th Samghâdisesa.

⁶ In kakka-bhedam the first word no doubt connotes 'kingdom, lordship,' as in dhamma-kakka, kakkavatti, &c.

“The Blessed One, Lord, has declared in many a figure the advantages of the man who wishes for little, who is easy to satisfy in the matter of support and nourishment, who has eradicated evil from his mind, has quelled his passions, and is full of faith, of reverence, and of the exercise of zeal¹. The following five things, Lord, conduce to such a condition². It would be good, Lord, if the Bhikkhus should be, their lives long, dwellers in the woods—if whosoever goes to the neighbourhood of a village should thereby commit an offence. It would be good if they should, their lives long, beg for alms—if whosoever should accept an invitation, should thereby commit an offence. It would be good if they should clothe themselves, their lives long, in cast-off rags—if whosoever should accept a gift of robes from a layman³, should thereby commit an offence. It would be good if they should dwell, their lives long, under the trees⁴—if whosoever should (sleep) under a roof, should thereby commit an offence. It would be good if they should, their lives long, abstain from fish⁵—if whosoever should

¹ This is part of the standing ‘religious discourse’ so often ascribed to the Buddha in the Vinaya texts, and given at full in the Kullavagga I, 1–3.

² It was on precisely the same reasoning that a certain Bhikkhu in Mahāvagga VIII, 28, 1, endeavoured to get the Buddha to convert to the rejection of all clothing.

³ At Mahāvagga VIII, 1, 35, it is laid down that a Bhikkhu may either dress in cast-off rags, or accept robes from a layman, according as he likes.

⁴ This dwelling under trees is expressly forbidden, as regards the season of the rains, in Mahāvagga III, 12, 5.

⁵ The rule of the Order is merely that no one may knowingly eat fish which he has seen or heard or suspected to have been caught for that purpose. See Mahāvagga VI, 31, 14.

eat fish, should thereby commit an offence." The Samana Gotama will not grant these things. Then will we gain over the people by means thereof.'

'Yes; it may be possible so to stir up divisions in the Samgha, and in the party of the Samana Gotama. For the people believe in rough measures.'

15. And Devadatta went to the Blessed One, surrounded by his friends, and made these demands [in the words just set out].

'No, Devadatta. Whosoever wishes to do so, let him dwell in the woods; whosoever wishes to do so, let him dwell in the neighbourhood of a village. Whosoever wishes to do so, let him beg for alms; whosoever wishes to do so, let him accept invitations from the laity. Whosoever wishes to do so, let him dress in rags; whosoever wishes to do so, let him receive gifts of robes from laymen. Sleeping under trees has been allowed by me, Devadatta, for eight months in the year; and the eating of fish that is pure in the three points—to wit, that the eater has not seen, or heard, or suspected that it has been caught for that purpose.'

And Devadatta, pleased and delighted that the Blessed One had refused the five demands, arose from his seat, and keeping him on his right hand as he passed him, departed thence with his friends. And he entered into Rāgagaha, and urged his view upon the people by means thereof, saying, 'Such and such things did we ask, Sirs, of the Samana Gotama. He would not allow them, but we live in accordance with them.'

16. Then those of the people who were unbelievers, and without reverence or insight, said, 'These Sakyaputtiya Samanas have eradicated evil from their minds, and have quelled their passions, while on the other hand the Samana Gotama is luxurious, and his mind dwells on abundance¹. But those of the people who were believers, and full of reverence and insight, were indignant, became vexed, and murmured, saying, 'How can Devadatta go about to stir up division in the Samgha of the Blessed One, and in the party that is subject to him.'

The Bhikkhus, hearing them so murmuring, told the matter to the Blessed One.

'Is it true, O Devadatta, as they say, that thou goest about to stir up division in the Samgha, and in the body of my adherents?'

'It is true, Lord.'

'(Thou hast gone far) enough, Devadatta. Let not a division in the Samgha seem good to thee²; —grievous is such division. Whosoever, O Devadatta, breaks up the Samgha, when it is at peace, he gives birth to a fault (the effect of) which endures for a kalpa³, and for a kalpa is he boiled in niraya. But whosoever, O Devadatta, makes peace in the Samgha, when it has been divided, he gives birth to the highest merit, and for a kalpa is he happy in heaven⁴. Thou hast gone far enough,

¹ Bâhulliko bâhullâya keteti. Both these expressions occur above in Mahāvagga VI, 15, 9, 10, and elsewhere (see, for instance, the introductory stories to Gâtaka, Nos. 6 and 32) as the standing expression for the opposite of the state of mind in which a good Bhikkhu ought to live.

² Mâ te rukhî samghabhedo. For the connotation of this phrase, compare below, VII, 4, 4.

³ Kappa//hikam kibbisam. At Gâtaka I, 172, 213, 215, Prof. Fausbøll reads kappa//hiya. In saying that the fault itself (kibbisam) is to endure for a kalpa, the meaning of course is that its effects on the Karma will endure so long.

⁴ Either the text has here preserved (as in other cases elsewhere)

Devadatta. Let not a division in the Samgha, O Devadatta, seem good to thee. Grievous, O Devadatta, is such division.'

17. Now the venerable Ānanda, having dressed himself early in the morning, went duly bowled and robed into Rāgagaha for alms. And Devadatta saw the venerable Ānanda proceeding through Rāgagaha for alms. On seeing that he went up to the venerable Ānanda, and said to him: 'At once, from this day forth, friend Ānanda, I intend to perform Uposatha, and to carry out the formal proceedings of the Order, without either the Blessed One or the Bhikkhu-samgha.'

And when the venerable Ānanda had gone through Rāgagaha for alms, and had returned from his rounds, and had finished his meal, he went to the Blessed One, and bowed down before him, and took his seat on one side. And when he was so seated, he told the Blessed One [what Devadatta had said, and added], 'This very day, Lord, Devadatta will break up the Samgha.'

Then the Blessed One, when he heard that, gave utterance at that time to this expression of strong emotion:

'Easy is a good act to the good, a good act is hard to the wicked;

'Easy is evil to the evil, but evil is hard for the Noble Ones to do.'

Here ends the Second Portion for Recitation.

the fragments of earlier verses, or the poetical forms of the verses below at VII, 5, 4, have crept into the prose here, where we should otherwise expect sagge and niraye.

4.

1. Now Devadatta on that day, which was Upo-satha day, arose from his seat, and gave out voting-tickets¹, saying, 'We went, Sirs, to the Samana Gotama and asked for the Five Points, saying— (&c., as above in VII, 3, 14 and 15). These the Samana Gotama will not allow; but we live in accordance therewith. Whosoever of the venerable ones approves of the Five Things, let him take a ticket.'

Now at that time there were five hundred Bhikkhus, Vesāliyans, and belonging to the Vaggian clan², who had but recently joined the Order, and were ignorant of what he had in hand³. These took the voting-tickets, believing [the Five Points to be according to] the Dhamma, and the Vinaya, and the teaching of the Master. And Devadatta, having thus created a division in the Saṃgha, went out to the hill Gayā-sīsa, taking those five hundred Bhikkhus with him.

Then Sāriputta and Moggallāna went to the Blessed One, and bowed down before him, and took their seats on one side. And when they were so seated, Sāriputta said to the Blessed One: 'Devadatta, Lord, has gone forth to Gayâ-sîsa, taking five hundred Bhikkhus with him.'

¹ It may be noticed that Devadatta here takes upon himself the office of a salāka-gāhāpako without having been appointed to it in the manner required by the rule laid down in Kullavagga IV, 9 and 10. On the process to be followed when voting with tickets, see IV, 4, 26.

² So it is the Vaggians from Vesālī who are represented, below XII, 1, 1, to have put forward those Ten Points which gave rise to the Council and the schism at Vesālī a hundred years after the Buddha's death.

³ Apakataññuno.

'Verily, Sâriputta and Moggallâna, there must be a feeling of kindness towards those young Bhikkhus among you both. Go therefore, both of you, before they have fallen into entire destruction.'

'Even so, Lord,' said Sâriputta and Moggallâna, in assent to the Blessed One. And rising from their seats, they bowed down before him, and keeping him on their right hand as they passed him, they set out for Gayâ-sîsa.

Then at that time a certain Bhikkhu, standing not far from the Blessed One, began to weep. And the Blessed One said to him: 'Why, O Bhikkhu, dost thou weep?'

'Those, Lord, who are the Blessed One's chief disciples, Sâriputta and Moggallâna, even they have gone to Devadatta's side, approving the Dhamma of Devadatta.'

'That, O Bhikkhu, would be impossible, that Sâriputta and Moggallâna should approve his teaching. They are gone only to gain those Bhikkhus over again¹.

2. Now at that time Devadatta, surrounded by a great number of adherents, was seated, preaching the Dhamma. And when he saw from afar Sâriputta and Moggallâna coming towards him, he said to the Bhikkhus: 'See, O Bhikkhus, how well preached must be my doctrine, in that even the two chief disciples of the Samana Gotama—Sâriputta and Moggallâna—are coming to join me, being pleased with my Dhamma.'

¹ Bhikkhu-sa \tilde{n} \tilde{n} attiyâ. The phrase occurs above at IV, 14, 26, and below XII, 2, 8, and corresponds to the expression ganam sa \tilde{n} \tilde{n} âpeti (above, VII, 3, 14), used of Devadatta's trying to gain the people over to his views.

When he had thus spoken Kokâlika said to Devadatta: 'O venerable Devadatta, trust not Sâriputta and Moggallâna, for they are inclined towards evil, and under the influence of evil desires.'

'Nay, my friend, let us bid them welcome since they take pleasure in my teaching (Dhamma).'

And Devadatta invited Sâriputta to share his own seat, saying, 'Come, friend Sâriputta. Sit thou here!'

'Nay (there is no need of that),' said Sâriputta; and taking another seat, he sat down on one side. And Devadatta instructed and incited and aroused and gladdened the Bhikkhus far into the night with religious discourse; and then made request to Sâriputta, saying, 'The assembly, friend Sâriputta, is still alert and sleepless. Will you, friend Sâriputta, be so good as to think of some religious discourse to address to the Bhikkhus¹? My back is tired, and I would stretch myself a little.'

'Even so, friend,' said the venerable Sâriputta, in assent to Devadatta. And Devadatta spread his waist-cloth folded in four on the ground, and lay down on his right side. And in a moment even sleep overcame him who was tired, and had lost his presence of mind and his self-consciousness².

3. Then the venerable Sâriputta taught and exhorted the Bhikkhus in a religious discourse touching the marvels of preaching, and the venerable

¹ Pa/ibhātu tam bhikkhūnam dhammī kathā. See our note above on Mahāvagga V, 13, 9.

² Compare Mahāvagga VIII, 16 = Sutta-vibhaṅga, Saṃghādisesa I, 2, 1.

Moggallâna taught and exhorted the Bhikkhus in a religious discourse touching the marvels of Iddhi. And whilst they were being so taught and exhorted those Bhikkhus obtained the pure and spotless Eye of the Truth ¹—(that is, the knowledge that) whatsoever has a beginning, in that is inherent also the necessity of dissolution. Then the venerable Sâriputta addressed the Bhikkhus, and said: 'Let us go, my friends, to the Blessed One's side. Whosoever approves of his doctrine (Dhamma), let him come.'

And Sâriputta and Moggallâna went back to the Veḷuvana, taking those five hundred Bhikkhus with them. But Kokâlika awoke Devadatta, and said: 'Arise, friend Devadatta! Your Bhikkhus have been led away by Sâriputta and Moggallâna. Did I not tell you, Devadatta, not to trust Sâriputta and Moggallâna, in that they were inclined towards evil, and were under the influence of evil desires?'

Then hot blood came forth from Devadatta's mouth ².

4. But Sâriputta and Moggallâna went to the place where the Blessed One was, and bowed down before him, and took their seats on one side. And when they were so seated, Sâriputta said to the Blessed One:

'It were well, Lord, that Bhikkhus who have turned aside to schism should be received afresh into the higher grade of the Order.'

'Nay, Sâriputta, let not the reordination of schis-

¹ This expression is the standing one in conversions; see, for instance, Mahāvagga I, 7, 6; Kullavagga VI, 4, 5, VII, 3, 6.

² The later legends preserved in Spence Hardy and Bigandet say that Devadatta died on the spot.

matical Bhikkhus seem good to thee. But rather cause such Bhikkhus to confess that they have committed a thullaṅkāya offence. And how, Sâriputta, did Devadatta treat you ?'

'When Devadatta, Lord, had instructed and aroused and incited and gladdened the Bhikkhus far into the night with religious discourse, he then made request to me, saying, "The assembly, friend Sâriputta, is still alert and sleepless. Will you, friend Sâriputta, think of some religious discourse to address to the Bhikkhus? My back is tired, and I would stretch myself a little." This, Lord, was the way in which Devadatta behaved to me.'

5. Then the Blessed One addressed the Bhikkhus, and said: 'Once upon a time, O Bhikkhus, there was a great pond in a forest region. Some elephants dwelt beside it; and they, plunging into the pond, plucked with their trunks the edible stalks of the lotus plants, washed them till they were quite clean¹, masticated them² without any dirt, and so eat them up. And that produced in them both beauty and strength, and by reason thereof they neither went down into death, nor into any sorrow like unto death. Now among those great elephants, O Bhikkhus, there were young elephant calves, who also, in imitation of those others, plunged into that pond, and plucked with their trunks the edible stalks of the lotus plants; but they did not wash them till they were clean, but masticated them, dirt and all, and so eat them up. And that produced in them neither beauty nor strength ; and by reason thereof they went down into death, and into sorrows like unto death. Just so, O Bhikkhus, will Devadatta die who, poor creature, is emulating me.

¹ The last three lines have occurred word for word in Mahāvagga VI, 20, 2.

² Samkhāditvā. Compare the use of this word at Gāṭaka I, 507.

‘Like the elephant calf who eateth mud in imitation of the great beast¹

That shakes the earth, and eats the lotus plant, and watches through the night among the waters’—

So will he, poor creature, die that emulateth me.’

6. ‘A Bhikkhu who is possessed of eight qualifications is worthy, O Bhikkhus, to do the work of an emissary. And what are the eight ? The Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, must be able to hear and to make others listen, able to learn, able to bear in mind, able to discern and to make others discern, skilful to deal with friends and foes, and no maker of quarrels. These are the eight qualifications of which when a Bhikkhu is possessed, he is worthy, O Bhikkhus, to do the work of an emissary.

‘Sâriputta, O Bhikkhus, being possessed of eight qualifications, is worthy to do the work of an emissary. What are the eight (&c., as in last paragraph)?

‘He who on entering a company that is violent of speech,

¹ Mahâ-varâha. At Abhidhânappadîpikâ, verse 1115, varâha is said to mean ‘elephant’ as well as ‘boar ;’ and so here Buddhaghosa says Mahâ-varâhassa mahâ-nâgassa. As this explanation possibly rests only on such passages as the present, we have chosen an ambiguous rendering.

² Nadîsu gaggato ti. Ettha so kira hatthi-nâgo sâyanhasamayam tam nadî-nâmakam pokkharanîm ogâhetvâ kilanto sabbarattim vitinâmesi gâlikam karoti. Tena vuttam nadîsu gaggato ti (B.).

Fears not, forgoes no word, disguises not his message,

Is unambiguous in what he says, and being questioned angers not,

Of such is surely the Bhikkhu worthy to go on a mission¹.

7. 'Devadatta, O Bhikkhus, being overcome, his mind being taken up by eight evil conditions², is irretrievably (doomed to) remain for a Kalpa in states of suffering and woe³. And what are the eight? He is overcome, his mind is taken up by gain, by want of gain, by fame, by want of fame, by honour, by want of honour, by his having wicked desires, and by his having wicked friends. These, O Bhikkhus, are the eight evil conditions by which Devadatta being overcome, and his mind being taken up, he is irretrievably (doomed to) remain for a Kalpa in states of suffering and woe.

'It would be well, O Bhikkhus, that Bhikkhus should continue in complete ascendancy over any gain or loss, any fame or the reverse, any honour or dishonour, any evil longing or evil friendship, that may accrue to them. And for what reason¹? For as much, O Bhikkhus, that bad influences (âsavas) arise, full of vexation and distress², to one who is not continuing in complete ascendancy over each of these eight things, but to one, who is so continuing, such influences arise not. This is the reason, O Bhikkhus, why it would be well (&c., as before). Let us then, O Bhikkhus, continue in complete ascendancy over any gain or loss, any fame or the reverse, any honour or dishonour, any evil longing or evil friendship, that may accrue to us. And thus, O Bhikkhus, should you train yourselves.

¹ On these lines compare some similar expressions at Mahāvagga X, 6, 3.

² Asaddhamma. It is very difficult to find a proper rendering for this expression. Dhamma here means, no doubt, 'quality,' 'condition' (as it does in the title of the Sanskrit work Saddharma-pundarikā, unhappily rendered by Burnouf, 'Lotus de la bonne loi'). But the details of the various particulars suggest rather the rendering 'surrounding occurrences' or 'matters,' for they are objective, external, and not (or only incidentally and secondarily) subjective, internal.

³ Āpâyiko nerayiko. 'Liable to re-birth in apāya and in niraya.' Of these the former includes the latter, and also the states of being an animal, a disembodied ghost (peta), or an asura. Hell, though a convenient, is a misleading translation of the latter of the two words, for the reasons given by Rh. D. on Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta I, 23. All the expressions used here recur below at VII, 5, 4.

‘There are three evil conditions, O Bhikkhus, by which Devadatta being overcome, and his mind being taken up, he is irretrievably doomed to remain for a Kalpa in states of suffering and woe. And what are the three? His having wicked desires, and his having wicked friends, and his having come to a stop on his way (to Nirvâna or Arahatsip) because he had already attained to some lesser thing³. These are the three (&c., as before).’

¹ Kim (read kam) atthavasam paṭikkā. So also above, Mahāvagga VIII, 15, 7; Kullavagga VII, 1, 6, and in the Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta V, 28, and Dhammapada, verse 289. The whole of the previous sentence is here repeated in the text.

² Vighāta-pariāhā. This is a standing epithet of the Âsavas, recurring, for instance, many times in the Sabbāsava Sutta, §§ 18–37 (Rh. D.’s ‘Buddhist Suttas,’ pp. 302 and following). The word ‘influence,’ here chosen as a rendering for âsava, is suggested by Dr. Morris as being similar, both in its derivation and in the history of its meaning, to the Pāli one. The principal objection against it is that it has never acquired the bad connotation of âsava, and requires, therefore, to be supplemented by some epithet.

³ Oramattakena visesādhigamena antarā vosānam āpādi. On this phrase, which recurs in full in the Mahā-parinib-

8. "Verily! let no wicked desire whatever arise within you!

Know rather from this what is the outcome thereof.

'Known was he as wise, reputed to be trained;
Aglow with glory did Devadatta stand' (thus have I heard).

He gave himself to vanity, to attacking¹ the Tathâgata:

He fell into the Avîki hell, guarded fourfold and terrible².

The injurer of the good, of the man who does no wrong,

Him sin pervades, the man of cruel heart, and void of love.

Though one should think the ocean to befoul with but one poison pot,

Yet could he not befoul it, for awful³ is the sea,
and great;

Just so though one should injure the Tathâgata by words,—

bâna Sutta I, 7, see Buddhaghosa's note there, quoted by Rh. D., 'Buddhist Suttas,' p. 7. The 'lesser thing' here referred to is doubtless the pothugganikâ iddhi mentioned above in § 4.

¹ Anukinno âsaggaṇam. On the former of these two words the passages at Dipavamsa I, 18, and Gâtaka I, 20 (verse 126), and below, VII, 5, 2 = Mahāvagga X, 5, 4, may be referred to. The latter seems to bear the same relation to âsâdana, 'attack,' as vikubbana does to vikarana. Buddhaghosa's notes (text, p. 325) presuppose different readings of both words.

² 'Guarded fourfold' is katudvâram, that is, 'having gates and the ramparts (through which they pass) on all four sides.' On the general sentiment of these stanzas, and especially of this line, compare the Kokâliya Sutta in the Sutta Nipâta (III, 10).

³ Bhasmâ is explained by Buddhaghosa as equal to bhayâ-nako.

That perfect one, that peaceful heart,—against him
the words would not avail.

Let the wise Bhikkhu make a friend of, and resort to him

By following whose way he will come to the end of griefs!"

5.

1. Now the venerable Upâli went up to the Blessed One, and bowed down before him, and took his seat on one side. And when he was so seated, the venerable Upâli said to the Blessed One: 'The expressions, Lord, "disunion in the Samgha," and "schism in the Samgha," are used¹. How much, Lord, goes to make disunion and not schism in the Samgha, and how much goes to make both disunion and schism in the Samgha?'

'If one is on one side, Upâli, and two on the other side, and a fourth makes a formal proposition, and gives them voting-tickets, saying, "This is according to the Dhamma, and according to the Vinaya, and according to the teaching of the Master. Take this (ticket) and give your sanction to this (opinion)"—then this, Upâli, is disunion in the Samgha, and not schism.

'If, Upâli, two are on one side, and other two are on the other side, and a fifth . . . (and so on up to) and an eighth tell them something (&c., as before)—then this, Upâli, is disunion in the Samgha, and not schism.

'If, Upâli, four are on one side, and other four ¹ Samgha-râgi and samgha-bhedo. See Mahāvagga X, 1, 6, where other expressions, not here referred to, are also used.

are on the other side, and a ninth tell them (&c., as before)—then this, Upâli, is both disunion in the Samgha, and it is schism¹.

‘(A separation) of nine, Upâli, or of more than nine, is both disunion in the Samgha, and it is schism.

‘A Bhikkhuni, Upâli, cannot make (one of the requisite number to cause) a schism, though she may help to produce a schism—nor a woman novice, nor a Sâmaṇera, male or female, nor a layman, nor a laywoman. It is only a Bhikkhu who is in full possession of all his privileges, and belongs to the same communion, and is domiciled in the same district² who can make (one of the number requisite to form) a schism.’

2. ‘There is the expression, Lord, “schism in the Samgha.” How much, Lord, does it require to constitute a schism in the Samgha?’

‘They put forth³, Upâli, what is not Dhamma as Dhamma (1), or what is Dhamma as not-Dhamma (2), or what is not Vinaya as Vinaya (3), or what is Vinaya as not Vinaya (4), or what has not been taught and spoken by the Tathâgata as taught and spoken by him (5), or what has been taught and spoken by the Tathâgata as not taught and spoken by him (6), or what has not been practised by the Tathâgata as practised by him (7), or what has been practised by the Tathâgata as not practised by him (8), or what has not been ordained by the Tathâgata as ordained by him (9), or what has been ordained by the Tathâgata as not ordained by him (10), or what is no offence as an offence (11), or what is an offence as no offence (12), or what is a slight offence to be a grievous offence (13), or what is a grievous offence to be a slight offence (14), or what is (a rule regarding) an offence to which there is an atonement as without atonement (15), or what is (a rule regarding) an offence to which there is no atonement as admitting of atonement (16), or what is a grave offence as not a grave offence (17), or what is not a grave offence as a grave offence (18). In these Eighteen Points they hinder and mislead (their followers)¹, and perform independently Uposatha, and Pavâranâ, and (official) acts of the Samgha. So much, Upâli, does it require to constitute a schism in the Samgha.'

¹ That is, stated shortly, it requires the breaking up of a body of at the least nine Bhikkhus to make a schism.

² Pakatatto samâna-samvâsako samâna-sîmâya hito. On the two last of these expressions, see our notes on Mahâvagga IX, 4, 8. The first is there wrongly rendered, and should be translated as it is here; see the frequent passages in which the word occurs (e.g. Kullavagga I, 5, 1; I, 6, 1; I, 27, 1; II, 1, &c., where we have rendered it shortly ‘a regular Bhikkhu’).

³ The first ten of the following list recur word for word in the Âṅguttara Nikâya I, 11, 1–20 (Adhammâdi-vagga), and the whole eighteen above in the Mahâvagga X, 5, 4, 5.

3. 'There is the expression, Lord, "concord in the Samgha." What, Lord, does it require to constitute concord in the Samgha ?'

'They put forth, Upâli, what is not Dhamma as not Dhamma' (and so on through the Eighteen Points down to the end).

²4. 'To what (result of Karma), Lord, does that

¹ Both the exact Pâli form and the interpretation of these terms are uncertain. Buddhaghosa's notes will be found at p. 325 of H. O.'s edition of the text, and most probably we should there read parisam in both cases.

² On the whole of the following section, compare above, VII, 3, 16, where much of the phraseology recurs.

man give rise who brings about a schism in the Samgha when it is in concord ?'

'He gives rise, Upâli, to a fault (the result of which) endures for a Kalpa, and for a Kalpa is he boiled in Niraya.'

"He who breaks up the Samgha is (doomed) to remain for a Kalpa in states of suffering and woe¹.

He who delights in party (strife), and adheres not to the Dhamma, is cut off from Arahatsip :

Having broken up the Samgha when it was at peace he is boiled for a Kalpa in Niraya."

'To what (result of Karma), Lord, does that man give rise who brings about reconciliation in the Samgha when it has been split up ?'

'He gives rise, Upâli, to the highest merit, and for a Kalpa is he happy in heaven.

"Blessed is concord in the Samgha, and the support of those who are at peace!

He who delights in peace, adhering to the Dhamma, is not cut off from Arahatsip :

On reconciling the Samgha, when it was at strife, he is happy for a Kalpa in heaven."

5. 'Can it be, Lord, that one who breaks up the Samgha is irretrievably (doomed) to remain for a Kalpa in states of suffering and woe ?'

'Yes, Upâli, that can be.'

'Can it be, Lord, that one who breaks up the Samgha is not doomed to be reborn in states either of suffering or of woe ; that he is not doomed to remain so in such states for a Kalpa ; and that he (his position) is not irretrievable ?'

'Yes, Upâli, that can be.'

¹ On this line see our note above on VII, 4, 7.

‘Who then, Lord, [comes under the first head?]

‘In case, Upâli, a Bhikkhu gives out what is not Dhamma as Dhamma, directing his opinion and his approval and his pleasure and his intention¹ (to what he says and does); and in belief that the doctrine (he propounds) is against the Dhamma, and that the schism resulting therefrom would be against the Dhamma²; and makes publication thereof³, giving out tickets, and saying, “Take this (voting-ticket): approve this (opinion)⁴. This is Dhamma; this is Vinaya; this is the teaching of the Master,”—a man, Upâli, who thus divides the Samgha, is irretrievably doomed to remain for a Kalpa in states of suffering and woe.’

[The above paragraph is then repeated in full, reading successively for ‘in belief that the doctrine (he propounds) is against the Dhamma, and the schism resulting therefrom would be against the Dhamma,’ each of the following clauses :—

(b) . . . in belief that the doctrine is against the Dhamma, but that the schism resulting therefrom would be in accordance with the Dhamma . . .

¹ Vinidhâya diṭṭhim, vinidhâya khantim, vinidhâya rukim, vinidhâya bhâvam. These expressions all recur in the Sutta-vibhaṅga, Pâkittiya I, 2, 2 and following sections, where the question at issue is whether an erroneous statement is, or is not, a conscious lie. The meaning of the whole is clear, though each of the words is used in a rather uncommon sense. On khanti, compare diṭṭhe sute khantim akubbamâno (of the Arahat) at Sutta Nipâta IV, 13, 3, and the standing use of the verb khamati, at the end of the Kammavâtthas.

² Bhede adhamma-diṭṭhi; literally, ‘in the schism (there will be) doctrine that is against the Dhamma.’

³ Anussâveti, which is here equivalent to the technical ‘publication’ required in the English law of libel and slander.

⁴ See the note above on VII, 4, 1.

(c) . . . in belief that the doctrine is against the Dhamma, but in uncertainty whether the schism resulting therefrom would be against the Dhamma or not . . .

(d) . . . in belief that the doctrine is in accordance with the Dhamma, but that the schism resulting therefrom would be against the Dhamma . . .

(e) . . . in belief that the doctrine is in accordance with the Dhamma, but in uncertainty whether the schism resulting therefrom would be against the Dhamma or not . . .

(f) . . . in uncertainty whether the doctrine is against the Dhamma or not, but in the belief that the schism resulting therefrom would be against the Dhamma . . .

(g) . . . in uncertainty whether the doctrine is against the Dhamma or not, and in the belief that the schism resulting therefrom would be against the Dhamma . . .

(h) . . . in uncertainty whether the doctrine would be against the Dhamma, and in uncertainty whether the schism resulting therefrom would be against the Dhamma or not . . .]

[The whole paragraph is then again repeated, reading successively for 'gives out that which is not Dhamma as Dhamma' each of the Eighteen Points given in full in VII, 5, 2.]

6. 'Who then, Lord, is one who breaks up the Samgha, and yet is not doomed to be reborn in states either of suffering or of woe; is not doomed to remain in such states for a Kalpa; and is not so doomed that his position is irretrievable?'

'In case, Upâli, a Bhikkhu gives out what is not Dhamma as Dhamma [and so on successively through the whole Eighteen Points] without directing his opinion and his approval and his pleasure and his intention thereto, and in the belief that the doctrine he propounds is in accordance with the Dhamma, and that the schism resulting therefrom would be so too¹.

Here ends the Third Portion for Recitation.

Here ends the Seventh Khandhaka, on Divisions in the Samgha.

¹ The sum of the last two sections seems to come to this, that practically such a schism as would have the awful effects set out above in § 4 would be impossible in Buddhism. For not only is a formal putting forward and voting on the false doctrine essential to schism as distinct from mere disagreement, but the offending Bhikkhu must also be quite aware that the doctrine so put forth is wrong, or at least doubtful, and also that the schism resulting from his action will be, or will probably be, disastrous to the Dhamma. In other words, the schism must be brought about by deliberately putting forward a doctrine known to be false, or at least doubtful, or with the express intention or hope of thereby injuring the cause of the Dhamma (that is, of the Truth).

THE EIGHTH KHANDHAKA.

REGULATIONS AS TO THE DUTIES OF THE BHIKKHUS TOWARDS ONE ANOTHER.

1.

1. Now at that time the Blessed One was staying at Sâvatthi, in Anâtha Pindîka's Ârâma.

Now at that time incoming Bhikkhus entered the Ârâma with their sandals on¹, or with sunshades held up over them², or with their heads muffled up³, or with their upper robe carried in a bundle on their heads⁴; and they washed their feet in the drinking-water; and they did not salute resident Bhikkhus senior to them, nor ask them where they (the incomers) should sleep.

And a certain incoming Bhikkhu undid the bolt⁵ of an unoccupied room (Vihâra), and opened the door⁶, and so entered by force; and a snake fell ¹ That this was a sign of disrespect is clear from Mahâvagga V, 12, and the 61st and 62nd Sekhîyas.

² See our discussion of the sunshade question in the note on Kullavagga V, 23, 2.

³ Ogunthitâ. See the 23rd and the 67th Sekhîyas.

⁴ Sîse katvâ. Compare VIII, 6, 3.

⁵ Ghaṭikâ. This word is discussed at Kullavagga V, 14, 3.

⁶ Such an act has been already guarded against by the rule laid down at the end of Kullavagga V, 9, 5, where the same expression is made use of.

on to his back from the lintel above¹, and he was terrified, and made an outcry².

The Bhikkhus, running up, asked him why he did so. He told them that matter. Then those Bhikkhus who were moderate in their desires were vexed and indignant, and murmured, saying, 'How can incoming Bhikkhus enter the Ârâma . . . ? (&c., as before, down to) . . . where they should sleep³.'

They told the matter to the Blessed One (&c., as usual, I, 1, 2, 3, down to) he addressed the Bhikkhus, and said, 'Therefore, O Bhikkhus, do I establish a rule of conduct for incoming Bhikkhus, according to which they ought to behave.

2. 'An incoming Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, when he knows he is about to enter an Ârâma, ought to take off his sandals, turn them upside down⁴, beat them (to get the dust) off, take them (up again) in his

¹ Upari-piṭṭhito. On piṭṭha (which we should possibly read here), as the lintel of a door, see our note above at Kullavagga V, 14, 3. It recurs immediately below, VIII, 1, 3.

² Vissaraṃ akâsi. As Childers, sub voce, expresses doubt as to the meaning of this word, it may be well to note that this phrase occurs above, Kullavagga V, 10, 2 and VI, 3, 4, and also in the Bhikkhunî-vibhaṅga, Pâkittiya LX, and always in the sense here given. The meaning of the allied idiom, vissaro me bhavissati, might be just doubtful as used in a peculiar connection at Bhikkhunî-vibhaṅga, Pârâgika I, 1, and Samghâdisesa III, 3, were it not clear from ibid., Pâkittiya LXXXVI, that it means simply 'there will be an outcry against me.'

³ The form of this speech bears very clear testimony to the artificial way in which these introductory stories are put together, for the speech does not arise out of the story. Similar instances are not infrequent. See VIII, 5, 1.

⁴ Niṣam katvâ. So also at VIII, 6, 2. The word is used below and at Mahāvagga I, 25, 11 and 15 of a bedstead and chair, and below, VIII, 4, 4, of a bowl when it is being washed.

hand, put down his sunshade, uncover his head, arrange his upper robe on his back¹, and then carefully and slowly enter the Ârâma.

‘When he enters the Ârâma he ought to notice where the resident Bhikkhus are gone to; and whithersoever they are gone—whether to the service hall, or to the portico (mandapa), or to the foot of a tree—thither he ought to go, and laying his bowl on one side, and his robe on one side, he ought to take a suitable seat, and sit down.

‘He ought to ask as to the drinking-water, and the water for washing², which is appropriated to the one use, and which to the other. If he has need of drinking-water, he ought to fetch it and drink. If he has need of water for washing, he ought to fetch it, and wash his feet. In washing his feet he ought to pour the water over them with one hand, and wash them with the other; he ought not to pour the water over them and wash them with one and the same hand.

‘He ought to ask for the cloths with which sandals are cleaned, and clean his sandals. In cleaning his sandals he ought first to wipe them with a dry cloth, and afterwards with a wet cloth: and then he ought to wash the cloths, and lay them on one side³.

¹ See the note below on VIII, 8, 2.

² On these expressions, compare the note above on Kullavagga IV, 4, 4 (at the end), and Kullavagga VIII, 1, 5 = Mahāvagga I, 25, 19.

³ These cloths (kolakam) are not specially permitted anywhere in the Khandhakas, as cloths for wiping the face and feet are in Mahāvagga VIII, 18, and Kullavagga VI, 19, respectively. The word is used for ‘duster’ below, VIII, 1, 3, and for ‘tinder’ at Milinda Pañha, p. 53.

‘If the resident Bhikkhu be senior, he ought to be saluted; if junior, he ought to be made to salute (the incomer). The incomer ought to ask as to the lodging-place, which has fallen (to his lot)¹, and whether it is occupied or unoccupied. He ought to ask as to lawful and unlawful resorts², and as to what families have been officially declared to be in want³.

‘He ought to ask as to the retiring-places, (where they are), and as to the drinking-water, and as to the water for washing, and as to the staves for walking with, and as to the place for the conferences of the Samgha, (and as to) the time at which he ought to enter (it) and at which he ought to leave it.

3. ‘If the Vihâra be unoccupied, he ought to knock at the door, then to wait a minute, then to undo the bolt, and open the door, and then, still standing outside, to look within.

‘If that Vihâra is covered with dust⁴, or the beds or chairs are piled one upon another, and the bedding put in a heap on the top of them⁵,—then if ¹ See the rules as to the division of lodging-places according to the number of applicants at Kullavagga VI, 21, 2, and especially VI, 11, 3.

² Gokâro agokâro. There were some places or families to which the Bhikkhus of a particular residence were not allowed to resort for alms. See the rule as to ‘turning down the bowl’ with respect to a person at Kullavagga V, 20.

³ Sekha-sammatâni kulâni. See the note on the 3rd Pâṇi-desaniya.

⁴ All the following expressions have occurred together at Kullavagga IV, 4, 4, where an example is given of the course of proceeding here laid down. And they are repeated below, VIII, 2, 2.

⁵ Uklâpo. Compare Kullavagga VI, 3, 9, and below, § 5.

⁶ This was the way in which a Bhikkhu, on going away from it, he can do so he ought to clean up the Vihâra.

¹ And when cleaning the Vihâra, he ought to take the floor matting out and put it down on one side, and the supports of the bedsteads², and the bolsters³ and pillows, and the mat which is used as a seat. Putting the bedsteads and chairs down on to the ground, and carefully avoiding scratching (the floor with them) or knocking them up against (the door-posts), he ought to take them outside the door, and put them down on one side. The spittoon and the board to lean up against⁴ ought to be taken out, and put down on one side⁵.

‘If the Vihâra is covered with cobwebs, they should first be removed with a cloth⁶. The case-ments should be dusted, especially in the corners and joints.

‘If the wall which had been plastered and red-washed, or the floor which had been laid (with earth) and black-washed⁷, has become dirty in the corners⁸, they should be wiped down with a was to leave his Vihâra. See below, VIII, 3, 2, and on the details of the terms used, see our note below on VIII, 1, 4.

¹ The rest of this section is repeated in full below, VIII, 7, 2.

² Paṭipāḍakâ. Doubtless the same as forms part of the âhaṅkā-mañṅka mentioned in the 18th Pākittiya and above, VI, 2, 5.

³ Bhisi. See the note on Mahāvagga VIII, 13.

⁴ Apassena-phalakam. See the note on Kullavagga VI, 20, 2.

⁵ All the expressions in this sentence and the next are the same as those used in a similar connection at Mahāvagga I, 25, 15.

⁶ Ullokâ. See the note at Kullavagga VI, 2, 7, according to which our rendering at Mahāvagga I, 25, 15 should be corrected.

⁷ On this mode of preparing walls and floors, see the notes above on Kullavagga VI, 20.

⁸ Kannakitâ. See our note above on Kullavagga V, 11, 3.

duster¹ that has been first wetted and wrung out. If the floor has not been so prepared, it should be sprinkled over with water and swept², lest the Vihâra should be spoilt³ by dust. The sweepings should be gathered together, and cast aside.

The translation of our present passage at Mahâvagga I, 25, 15, must be corrected accordingly.

¹ Kolaka. See the note on this word in last section.

² Sammagga ti to sweep (not to scrub), as is apparent from Mahâvagga VI, 34, 1.

³ Ūhaññi. So also at Mahâvagga I, 25, 15. At Mahâvagga I, 49, 4, we should have rendered 'defiled their beds' instead of 'threw their bedding about,' correcting uhananti of the text there into ūhadanti. Ūhan (originally 'to throw up,' 'raise,' &c.) seems, like samūhan, to have acquired the meaning of to destroy, injure, spoil. From this meaning of spoiling, ūhan evidently came to be used for, or confounded in the MS. with, ūhad, 'to defile (with excrement).' So the phrase 'ūhananti pi ummihanti pi' (at Mahâvagga I, 49, 4) exactly corresponds in meaning to 'omuttenti pi ūhadayanti pi' in Dhammapada, p. 283. There are other passages showing the same confusion. (1) The gerund, ūhaḍḍa, which occurs in Gâtaka II, p. 71 ('idâni kho (ahan) tam ūhaḍḍa'), is explained by the commentator to mean 'vaḍḍanta sise katva.' (2) ūhanti, in Gâtaka II, p. 73 ('aggihuttañ ka ūhanti, tena bhinnâ kamandalūti'), must mean the same and be = ūhadeti. For the monkey here referred to is said to have been guilty of the following dirty trick:—'kundikâ bhindati, aggisâlâya vaḍḍam karoti.' (3) mutteti ohaneti at Kariyâ Piṭaka II, 5, 4, represents uḍḍâra-pasâvam katvâ at Gâtaka II, 385. In the first of these passages uhaḍḍa may well be a copyist's blunder, arising from the similarity of the words, for uhagga. Dr. Morris, to whom we owe the comparison of these passages and the suggested emendation of Mahâvagga I, 49, 4, is rather of opinion that the words were confounded by the writers. For it is not an uncommon thing to find two words, not very remote in form or meaning, confounded together. It is well known that the English word livelihood properly and originally meant 'liveliness,' and has only afterwards replaced the earlier livelode, to which the sense of livelihood properly belongs. And something of this kind

4. 'The floor coverings¹ should be dried in the sun, cleaned, beaten to get the dust out, taken back, and spread out again in the place to which they belonged². The supports of the bed should be dried in the sun, dusted, taken back, and put in the place to which they belonged. The bed (mañña) and the chairs (pīḥa) should be aired in the sun, cleaned, beaten to get the dust out, turned upside down, taken back, carefully avoiding scratching them against the floor, or knocking them up against the door-posts, and then put in the place to which they belonged³. The bolsters and pillows, and the must have occurred, he thinks, in Pāli in the use of ūhan for ūhad. The past participle ūhata occurs at Kullavagga VIII, 10, 3.

¹ Bhummattharaṇaṃ; usually, no doubt, matting of various kinds, but occasionally also skins or rugs of the kinds specially allowed by VI, 14, 2.

² Yathābhāgaṃ. The use of this word here constitutes the only variation between our passage and that in the Mahāvagga I, 25 = below, VIII, 7, 2, where it is replaced by yathā//hāne or yathāpaññattam.

³ This passage throws a welcome light on the meaning of mañña and pīḥa: for as they were to be beaten to get the dust out, it is clear that they were upholstered. The mañña, or bed, must have been a wooden framework, stuffed (probably with cotton), covered at the top with cotton cloth, and made underneath and at the sides of wood. It had no legs fixed to it, but was supported on movable tressels—the paṭipādakā. When using it, the sleeper covered it with a mat, or a cotton sheet, and had over him a coverlet of some kind; and these articles, which he would also use if he slept on the ground, constituted, together with the bolster and pillows, the senāsanaṃ or bedding,—that is, in the more special and limited use of that term (as, for instance, above, § 3, and perhaps below, 7, 1). In its larger sense the same word is used, putting the part for the whole, for the whole sleeping apparatus, and is nearly equivalent to seyyāyo (so, for instance, in VI, 11 and 12, and below, VIII, 2, 1; 6, 2; and perhaps VIII, 7, 1; whereas the latter term is used in the same connection at VI, 6, mats used as seats, should be aired in the sun, cleaned, beaten to get the dust out, taken back, and put in the place to which they belonged. The spittoon, and the board for leaning up against, should be put in the sun, dusted, taken back, and put in the place to which they belonged.

¹5. '(Then the incoming Bhikkhu) should put away his bowl and his robe. In putting away his bowl, he should hold it in one hand while he feels under the bed or the chair with the other, and then put it away; and he should not put it on a part of the floor which has been left bare. In putting away his robe, he should hold it in one hand while he feels along the bamboo or the rope used for hanging robes on with the other; and then hang it up with the border turned away from him, and the fold turned towards him.

²' If the winds, bearing dust with them ³, blow from the East, West, North, or South, the window spaces⁴ on the side in question should be closed up (with shutters or lattices). If it is cold weather, the lattices should be opened by day, and closed by and VI, 11, 3). Sayana, in VI, 8, is a generic term including bed, couch, sofa, and divan, but probably with special reference to these three latter things used in the day-time.

¹ The following paragraph occurs, word for word, at Mahāvagga I, 25, 11, and below, VIII, 7, 2.

² The following paragraph is the same as Mahāvagga I, 25, 18.

³ Saragā vātā. These are the well-known hot winds (like the sand-bearing simoom that blows from North Africa over Italy), against which modern residents endeavour to protect themselves by the use of 'tats.'

⁴ There were, of course, no windows in our modern sense, but only spaces left in the wall to admit light and air, and covered by lattices of three kinds allowed by VI, 2, 2.

night: if it is hot weather, they should be closed by day, and opened by night.

¹ 'If the cell, or the store-room, or the refectory, or the room where the fire is kept, or the privy, is covered with dust, it should be swept out. If there is no drinking-water, or water for washing, they should be provided. If there is no water in the rinsing-pot², water should be poured into it.

'This, O Bhikkhus, is the rule of conduct for incoming Bhikkhus, according to which they ought to behave.'

2.

1. Now at that time resident Bhikkhus, on seeing incoming Bhikkhus, did not prepare seats for them, nor provide water and footstools and towels for them to wash their feet, nor go to meet them and take charge of their bowls and their robes, nor ask them whether they wanted drinking-water³, nor salute such of the incoming Bhikkhus as were their seniors, nor make beds ready for them.

The moderate Bhikkhus murmured, &c., and told the matter to the Blessed One, &c., (down to) he said to the Bhikkhus: 'Therefore, O Bhikkhus, ¹ The following paragraph is the same as Mahāvagga I, 25, 19, and part of it is repeated below, VIII, 10, 3.

² Āḷamana-kumbhi. This formed part of the sanitary apparatus for use in the privy. See above, Mahāvagga V, 8, 3, and below, Kullavagga VIII, 9 and 10.

³ All the above expressions are used at the opening of Mahāvagga IX.

do I establish a rule of conduct for resident Bhikkhus, according to which they ought to behave.

2. 'A resident Bhikkhu, on seeing an incoming Bhikkhu, who is senior to him, ought to make ready a seat for him, provide water and a footstool and a towel for him to wash his feet, go to meet him, and take charge of his robe and his bowl, ask him if he wants water to drink, and if he can (bring himself to do so), he ought to wipe his sandals. In wiping the sandals, they should be first wiped with a dry cloth, then with a wet one, and the cloths ought then to be washed, and put aside.

¹ 'An incoming Bhikkhu ought to be saluted. A bed should be laid for him, saying, "This bed is for you." He should be informed whether (the bedroom) is occupied or not, what are lawful and what are unlawful resorts, and what families have been officially declared to be in want. He should be told where the retiring-places are, and the drinking and washing water, and the staves, and the place for the conferences of the Samgha, and what is the time when he ought to enter, and ought to leave (it).

3. 'If (the incoming Bhikkhu) be junior to him, then (the resident Bhikkhu), keeping his seat, should tell him where he is to put his bowl and his robe away, and on which mat he is to sit down. The incoming Bhikkhu should be informed where the drinking and washing water are, and the cloths to clean sandals with; he should be allowed to salute the resident Bhikkhu : and he should be told where his bed is, saying, "That bed is for you." He should be informed whether (that bedroom) is occupied or not (and so on, as in last paragraph, down to the end).

¹ This paragraph corresponds to the last paragraph of VIII, 1, 2.

'This, O Bhikkhus, is the rule of conduct for resident Bhikkhus, according to which they ought to behave.'

3.

1. Now at that time Bhikkhus, about to leave, started without setting the wooden articles and crockery in order, leaving doors and lattices open, and without giving the sleeping-places in charge to any one. The wooden articles and crockery were spoilt, and the sleeping-places were unprotected.

The moderate Bhikkhus murmured, &c. told the Blessed One, &c. (down to) He said to the Bhikkhus: 'Therefore, O Bhikkhus, do I establish a rule of conduct for Bhikkhus about to leave, according to which they ought to behave.

2. 'A Bhikkhu about to leave should, O Bhikkhus, put the wooden articles and earthenware in order, close the doorways and lattices, give the sleeping-places in charge¹ (to some one, and only) then set out. If there be no Bhikkhu remaining, a Sâmanera should be put in charge. If there be no Sâmanera remaining, the attendant who keeps the grounds in order² should be put in charge. If there be neither Bhikkhu, nor Sâmañera, nor Ârâmika, the bed frame should be laid on four stones¹, the other bed frames put on the top of it, the chairs should be put one on the top of the other, the bedding piled in a bundle on the top, the wooden articles and the earthenware should be put away in order, and the doorways and lattices should be closed², and then should be set out.

¹ Senâsanam âpuṭṭhā. Compare the Old Commentary on the 14th and 15th Pâṭṭiyas. The lengthening of the last vowel in âpuṭṭhā is noteworthy.

² Ārāmiko. In Mahāvagga VI, 15, the king wishing to present a man for this purpose, it is there laid down that the Bhikkhus

3. 'If the Vihâra leaks, it should be repaired if he can, or he should exert himself to get the Vihâra roofed. If he should thus succeed, it is good. If not, he should put the bed frame on four stones in that part of the Vihâra which does not leak, and then put the other bed frame (&c., as in last paragraph, to the end). If the whole of the Vihâra leaks, he should if he can take all the bedding to the village, or should exert himself to get it taken there. If he should succeed, it is good. If not, he should lay a bed frame on four stones in the open air, put the others on the top of it, put the chairs one on another, pile the bedding on the top, lay the wooden and earthenware utensils in order by them, and cover the whole up with grass or leaves, so that at least the principal articles of furniture might remain (uninjured)³; and (only) then go away.

'This, O Bhikkhus, is the rule of conduct for may accept him ; and at Kullavagga VI, 21, 3, a superintendent of such slaves is mentioned as one of the officials of the Order.

¹ This is the usual method still adopted by native servants as a safeguard against white ants, who would eat up into the legs of furniture left standing on the ground.

² This arrangement is referred to above at VIII, 1, 3.

³ Ângâni pi seseyyum. See Buddhaghosa's note as appended to the edition of the text (p. 325).

Bhikkhus about to leave, according to which they should behave themselves.'

4.

1. Now at that time the Bhikkhus did not give thanks in the place where a meal was served. People murmured, &c.; the Bhikkhus heard, &c.; the Blessed One on that occasion, &c.¹ said to the Bhikkhus:

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, the giving of thanks.'

Then the Bhikkhus thought, 'By whom should the thanks be given?'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, the elder Bhikkhu (present) to give thanks in the place where a meal is served.'

Now at that time (the turn to provide) the Samgha with a meal had fallen to a certain company²; and the venerable Sâriputta was the senior (Bhikkhu in that) Samgha. The Bhikkhus, thinking, 'The Blessed One has permitted the senior Bhikkhu to return thanks in the place where a meal is served,' went away, leaving the venerable Sâriputta alone. And the venerable Sâriputta gave thanks to those people, and then came away alone.

The Blessed One saw the venerable Sâriputta coming from the distance; and on seeing him, he said to him: 'Did the meal, then, Sâriputta, pass off well³?'

¹ For the passages here implied, see I, 1, 2, 3.

² Aññatarassa pûgassa. This sentence has already occurred at V, 5, 2.

³ On this use of iddho, compare ovâdo iddho in the Bhikkhunî-vibhaṅga, Pâkittiya LVI.

‘The meal, Lord, passed off well. But the Bhikkhus went away and left me alone.’

Then the Blessed One, in that connection, having delivered a religious discourse, said to them :

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, four or five of the Bhikkhus, who are senior or next to the seniors, to wait.’

Now at that time a certain elder waited in the dining hall, though he wanted to retire, and through holding himself back, he fainted and fell.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, if necessity should arise, to leave the hall after informing the Bhikkhu sitting immediately next¹ (to the one who wants to go).’

2. Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus went to the place where a meal was to be served with their under-garments or their robes improperly put on, and not decently attired; and turning aside², they pushed on in front of the senior Bhikkhus; and they encroached on (the space intended for) the senior Bhikkhus³ when taking their seats, and they compelled the junior Bhikkhus to give up their seats to them; and spreading out their upper robes

¹ Anantarikam bhikkhum. See the note on this phrase at VI, 10, 1. Ānantarikam in the text (with long ā) is a misprint.

² Vokkamma, which is not, as Childers supposes, equal to okkamma with euphonic v, but to vyavakramya or vyutkramya.

³ Anupakhagga: which is here used, not in the sense it has at IV, 14, 1, but in the sense in which it is used in the 16th and 43rd Pāṭitīyas, in both which passages it is explained by the Old Commentary by anupavisitvā. This clause and the next occur also at Mahāvagga I, 25, 13.

(as mats)¹ they took their seats in the space between the houses².

The moderate Bhikkhus murmured, &c. . . . told the Blessed One, &c. . . . he said to the Bhikkhus :

‘ Therefore, O Bhikkhus, do I establish a rule of conduct for the Bhikkhus at a meal, which they are to observe thereat.

³ 3. ‘ When time has been called in the Ârâma, a Bhikkhu should put on his waistcloth so as to cover himself all round from above the navel to below the knees, tie his belt round his waist, fold⁴ his upper robes and put them on, fasten the block on⁵, wash (his hands), take his alms-bowl, and then slowly and carefully proceed to the village. He is not to turn aside (from the direct route) and push on in front of senior Bhikkhus⁶. He is to go amidst the houses properly clad, with (his limbs) under control, with downcast eye, with (his robes) not tucked up, not laughing, or speaking loudly, not swaying his body or his arms or his head about, not with his arms akimbo, or his robe pulled over his head, and without walking on his heels. And he is to take his

¹ Samghâṭim ottharivâ. This use of the Samghâṭi is referred to at Gâtaka I, 212, and above, I, 13, 2.

² Antaraghare. See Sekhiyas 3-26, repeated in the next section. It is perhaps doubtful whether this word may not mean here (as in Sekhiya 27 = below, § 6) the inner courtyard of a house which is surrounded by buildings; but we follow the interpretation we have adopted, loc. cit.

³ The following section repeats the Sekhiyas, Nos. 3-26, where see further notes. Much of it recurs below in VIII, 5, 2.

⁴ Sagunam katvâ. Compare Mahāvagga I, 25, 9.

⁵ Ganthikam. See the note on V, 29, 3. It was to prevent the robe being blown up by the wind. The word occurs again in VIII, 5, 2.

⁶ The following sentence is repeated, word for word, below, § 6.

seat amidst the houses properly clad (&c., all as before, down to) not with his arms akimbo, or his robes pulled over his head, and without lolling, and without encroaching on (the space intended for) the senior Bhikkhus, or ejecting the junior Bhikkhus from the seats, or spreading his upper robe out (as a mat).

4. 'When the water is being given out (before the meal), he is to hold his bowl with both hands, receive the water (in it), lower the bowl carefully down to the ground so as to avoid scratching the floor, and then wash it. If there be (a person there) whose duty it is to take away the water (which has been so used), (the Bhikkhu) should lower (his bowl on to the ground) and pour the water into the waste tub¹ without splashing the person in question, nor the Bhikkhus near, nor (his own) robes. If there be no such person, he should lower his bowl on to the earth and pour the water away, without splashing the Bhikkhus near or (his own) robes.

'When the boiled rice is being given out, he should hold his bowl with both hands, and receive the rice in it. Room should be left for the curry. If there is ghee, or oil, or delicacies², the senior Bhikkhu should say: "Get an equal quantity for all." The alms (given) are to be accepted with mind alert, paying attention to the bowl, with equal curry, and equally heaped up³. And the senior

¹ Paṭiggahe. See the note on V, 10, 3. Avakkāra-pāṭi, at Mahāvagga IV, 1, 2 = Kullavagga VIII, 5, 3, seems to have very nearly the same meaning. The whole of this paragraph is repeated below, § 6.

² Uttaribhaṅgam. See the note on VI, 4, 1.

³ On the expressions in this sentence, compare the notes on Sekhiyas 27-32.

Bhikkhu is not to begin to eat until the boiled rice has been served out to all.

¹5. 'The alms given are to be eaten with mind alert, paying attention to the bowl, with equal curry, and equally heaped up; without pressing down from the top; without covering up the curry or the condiment with the rice, desiring to make it nicer; and without asking for either rice or curry for the Bhikkhu's own particular use, unless he be sick. Others' bowls are not to be looked at with envious thoughts. The food is not to be rolled up (by the fingers) into balls that are too large, but into round mouthfuls. The door of the mouth is not to be opened till the ball is brought close to it. When eating, the whole hand is not to be put into the mouth. He is not to talk with his mouth full, nor to toss the food into his mouth as he eats, nor to nibble at the balls of food, nor to stuff his cheeks out as he eats, nor to shake (particles of food off) his hands, nor to scatter lumps of rice about, nor to put out his tongue, nor to smack his lips, nor to make a hissing sound as he eats, nor to lick his fingers, or his bowl, or his lips. And the jar containing drinking-water is not to be taken hold of with hands soiled with food.

6. 'The senior Bhikkhu is not to accept water (to rinse out his bowl with) until all Bhikkhus have finished eating. When water is being given out (after the meal . . . &c., as in the first paragraph of § 4, down to the end). The water that has been used for washing the bowl is not to be thrown with the rinsings in it into the inner court².

¹ This paragraph repeats Sekhiyas 31-55, where see our notes.

² This is the 57th Sekhiya.

‘In returning, the junior Bhikkhus are to go back first, and the senior Bhikkhus after them. Each Bhikkhu is to pass amidst the houses properly clad (&c., as above, § 3, down to) without walking on his heels.

‘This, O Bhikkhus, is the rule of conduct that I establish for Bhikkhus at a meal, which they are to observe thereat.’

Here ends the First Portion for Recitation.

5.

1. Now at that time Bhikkhus who were going on their rounds for alms did so with their under garments or their robes improperly put on, and not decently attired, and they entered dwellings without deliberation, and left them without deliberation, and they entered dwellings roughly, and left them roughly, and they stood at too great a distance or too near, and they stood too long or turned back too soon.

And a certain Bhikkhu, on his round for alms, entered a dwelling without noticing where he was going to, and taking (a doorway) for a house-door he passed into an inner chamber. A woman was lying asleep naked on her back in that chamber; and when the Bhikkhu saw her he went out again, perceiving that that was no house-door, but a chamber. Now the husband of that woman, seeing his wife in that position in the chamber, thought: ‘My wife has been defiled by that Bhikkhu.’ And he seized him, and beat him.

But the woman, being woke up by the noise, said to the man, 'Why, Sir, are you beating this Bhikkhu?'

'You have been defiled by this Bhikkhu.'

'Not so, Sir. This Bhikkhu has done nothing' (said she), and had the Bhikkhu set free.

Then the Bhikkhu, on going to the Ârâma, told the matter to the Bhikkhus murmured told the Blessed One he said to the Bhikkhus :

'Therefore, O Bhikkhus, do I establish a rule of conduct for Bhikkhus going their rounds for alms, which they are to observe therein.

2. 'A Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, who intends to go his round for alms, should put on his waistcloth (&c., as in chapter 4, § 3, sentences 1 and 3, down to the end).

'When he enters a dwelling, he should take notice (where he goes, saying to himself), "By this way will I go in, and by this way will I come out." He should not go in, nor come out, roughly. He should not stand too far off, nor too near, nor too long; and he should not turn back too easily.

'As he stands still he should notice where (the people in the house) seem willing or not willing to give (him food). If she lays aside her work, or rises from her seat, or wipes a spoon, or wipes or puts ready a dish, he should stand still, perceiving that she seems willing to give.

'When food is being given to him, he should lift up his robe (Samghâṭī) with his left hand so as to disclose his bowl¹, take the bowl in both his hands, and receive the food into it. And he should not look into the face of the woman who is giving the food.

¹ The bowl is always carried by the left hand under the robe. On paṇāmeti, see the note at V, 9, 5.

‘He should take notice whether she seems willing or not to give curry. If she wipes a spoon, or wipes or puts aside a dish, he should stand still, perceiving that she seems willing to give.

‘After the food has been given, he should cover up the bowl with his robe, and turn back slowly and carefully. He should pass through the houses (on his way back) properly clad . . . (&c., as in § 3, sentence 3, down to the end).

¹ 3. ‘He who comes back first from the village, from his round for alms, should make seats ready, and place the water and footstools and towels ready there for washing feet, and clean the waste-tub² and put it ready, and put ready water to drink and water for washing.

‘He who comes back last from the village, from his round for alms, may eat if there be any food left (from the meal of the other Bhikkhus), if he desires to do so. If he does not desire to do so, he should throw away the leavings on the (ground at a place) which is free from grass, or pour them away into water in which there are no living things. He should put away the water, footstools, and towels used for washing feet, clean the waste-tub and put it away, put away the drinking-water and the water for washing, and sweep the room where the meal was eaten.

¹ The following section is, word for word, parallel to Mahāvagga IV, 1, 2-4.

² Avakkâra-pâtî. We have had paṭiggaha used just above (VIII, 4, 4) in a very similar sense and connection. The present word occurs also at Mahāvagga IV, 1, 2.

‘Whosoever sees a pot for drinking-water or for washing-water, or a chamber utensil empty and void, should put it in its proper place. If he is not able to do so single-handed, he should call some one else, and they should put it away with their united effort, and silence should not be broken on that account¹.

‘This, O Bhikkhus, is the rule of conduct which I establish for Bhikkhus going their rounds for alms, which they are to observe therein.’

6.

1. Now at that time a number of Bhikkhus dwelt in the woods; and they provided neither drinking-water, nor water for washing, nor fire, nor drill sticks nor tinder (for starting a fire)²; nor did they know the stations of the constellations, nor the divisions of the (ten) ‘directions’ (of the sky).

Thieves went there and said to the Bhikkhus, ‘Have you, Sirs, got drinking-water?’

¹ Vâkam bhindati. To break silence by speaking. See Mahāvagga IV, 1, 3, where it makes good sense.

² Arāṇi-sahitaṃ, on which Buddhaghosa merely says arāṇi-sahite sati aggim kâṭum pi vaṭṭati. In the Gâtaka Commentary (I, 212, ed. Fausbøll) we have the phrase arāṇi-sahitaṃ nîharitvâ aggim karonti. At p. 34 of the Assalâyana Sutta (ed. Fischel) we hear of there being an upper and lower stick to the arāṇi; and at p. 53 of the Milinda Pañha (ed. Trenckner) we find the same upper and lower sticks, the thong by which to turn the latter, and the piece of rag for tinder mentioned as the constituent parts of this ancient means of producing fire. The expression in the text is probably a collective term for the whole of these.

‘No, friends, we have not.’

‘Have you, Sirs, got water for washing?’

‘No, friends, we have not.’

‘Have you, Sirs, got fire?’

‘No, friends, we have not.’

‘Have you, Sirs, got sticks and tinder for producing fire?’

‘No, friends, we have not.’

‘With what (constellation is the moon now in conjunction?)’

‘That, friends, we do not know.’

‘Which direction is this?’

‘That, friends, we do not know.’

[On hearing these answers]¹, the thieves said, ‘These are thieves. These men are no Bhikkhus.’ And they beat them, and went away.

The Bhikkhus told this matter to the Bhikkhus. The Bhikkhus told it to the Blessed One. Then the Blessed One, on that occasion and in that connection, after delivering a religious discourse, said to the Bhikkhus :

‘Therefore, O Bhikkhus, do I establish a rule of conduct for Bhikkhus dwelling in the woods, according to which they are to behave themselves therein.

2. ‘A Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, who is dwelling in the woods, should rise betimes, place his bowl in the bag², hang it over his shoulder, arrange his upper robe over his back (over both shoulders)³, get on

¹ They are all repeated in the text.

² Thavikâ. This is possibly one of the bags referred to in the permission granted by Mahāvagga VIII, 20, but it was only to be used when the bowl had to be carried a long distance, and not when passing through a village. (See the beginning of the next section.)

³ K’ivaram khandhe katvâ: either in contradistinction to his sandals, put the utensils of wood and earthenware in order, close the doorway and lattice, and then leave his lodging-place.

‘When he perceives that he is about to enter a village, he should take off his sandals, turn them upside down¹, beat them to get the dust out, put them into a bag, hang it over his shoulder, put on his waistcloth [and so on as laid down for a Bhikkhu entering the village for alms above, VIII, 5, 2, paragraph 1, to the end].

3. ‘On leaving a village he should put the bowl into its bag, hang it over his shoulder, roll his robes up, put them on his head², get on his sandals, and then go.

‘A Bhikkhu living in the woods, O Bhikkhus, should keep drinking-water, and water for washing, and fire, and drill sticks and tinder, and walking staves ready. He should learn the stations (of the moon) in the constellations, either in the whole or in part, and he should know the directions of the sky.

‘This, O Bhikkhus, is the rule of conduct that I lay down for Bhikkhus dwelling in the woods, according to which they should behave themselves therein.’

7.

1. Now at that time a number of Bhikkhus carried on robe-making in the open air. The Khaggaya Bhikkhus beat their bedding to get ekamsam kīvaram katvā (on which question there is a great division among modern Buddhists. Compare Rh. D.’s note on the Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta VI, 47), or possibly ‘put it in a roll on his back.’

¹ On this expression, see above, VIII, 1, 2.

² See Mahāvagga VIII, 13, 1.

the dust out in the open space¹ to windward of them, and covered the Bhikkhus (who were at work) with dust.

The moderate Bhikkhus murmured, &c. . . . told the Blessed One, &c. . . . and he said to the Bhikkhus:

‘Therefore, O Bhikkhus, do I establish a rule of conduct for the Bhikkhus in respect of lodging-places, according to which they are to behave themselves in respect thereof.

2. ‘In whatever Vihâra he is staying, if that Vihâra is dirty, he should, if he can, make it clean. When cleaning the Vihâra, he should first take out his bowl and his robe and the mat used for sitting upon, and the bolster and pillows, and put them down on one side. Taking the bed-frame down (from its stand), he should carry it out [and so on as in VIII, 1, 2, down to the end]².

‘He should not beat the bedding to get the dust out close to the Bhikkhus, or to the Vihâra, or to the drinking-water, or to the water for washing, or in the open space (in front of the Vihâra) to windward of it or the Bhikkhus, but to leeward.

¹ Āṅgana. This is not ‘courtyard,’ as Childers renders it, but a part of the Ārāma, immediately in front of the hut or Vihâra, which is kept as an open space, and daily swept. The Sinhalese name for it is midula; there those who sleep in the hut spend the greater part of the day, and not even grass is allowed to grow upon it. The term is a very common one, and its meaning is not doubtful. Compare the Gâtaka book, I, 124, 151, 421; II, 249, 250, 345. Ekaṅganaṃ bhavati, at ibid. I, 53, 12, is to become one open space, as ekaṅganaṃ karoti at II, 357, is to clear a forest, and turn it into an open space.

² The order is slightly different, but all the details are the same. The only addition is that in speaking of taking out the floor coverings, he is directed to notice where they lay.

3. 'The floor coverings should be dried in the sun [and so on as in VIII, 1, 4, and 5, to the end, reading "in the place where it stood (or lay)" for "in the place to which it belongs"].

4. 'If he is dwelling in the same Vihâra with an older (Bhikkhu), no recitation should be given, nor examination held, nor exhortation made, nor Dhamma spoken¹ (to a pupil), without leave being asked of the senior. Nor should a lamp be lighted or extinguished, nor the lattices opened or closed, without his leave.

'If he is walking up and down on the same Kaṅkama with an older (Bhikkhu), then he should turn back at the spot where his senior turns back; and he should not touch his senior even with the corner of his robe.

'This, O Bhikkhus, is the rule of conduct that I lay down for the Bhikkhus in respect of lodging-places, according to which they are to behave themselves therein.'

8.

1. Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus, on being hindered by the senior Bhikkhus in (their use of) the hot bath-room, out of spite piled up a quantity of sticks (in the fireplace), set fire to them, closed up the doorway, and sat down in the doorway. The Bhikkhus, scorched by the heat, and not being allowed a way out, fell down in a faint.

The sober Bhikkhus murmured, &c. . . . told the Blessed One, &c. . . . He said to the Bhik-khus, 'No one, O Bhikkhus, is to [do so]. Whosoever does, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭṭha.

¹ All the preceding expressions have occurred at Mahāvagga I, 26, 1; see also 32, 1, and 38, 6.

2. 'Therefore, O Bhikkhus, do I establish a rule of conduct for the Bhikkhus, in respect of the hot bath-room¹, according to which they ought to behave themselves therein.

'Whosoever first enters the bath-room, if ashes have accumulated (in the fireplace) should throw the ashes out. If the hot bath-room, or its prepared flooring, or the cell, or the ante-chamber of the bath, or the cooling-room, or the hall are dirty, they should be swept. The chunam should be pounded, the clay moistened with water, and water poured into the water-jar.

'When entering the hot bath-room, the face should be smeared over with clay, and the person well covered up in front and behind before entering. A seat is not to be taken so as to hustle the senior Bhikkhus, and junior Bhikkhus are not to be ousted from their seats. If possible, shampooing is to be performed for the senior Bhikkhus in the hot bath-room.

'When leaving the hot bath-room, the chair (that has been used to sit on before the fire) should be carried off, and the person well covered up before and behind before leaving. If possible, shampooing is to be performed for the senior Bhikkhus in the water also.

'A bath is not to be taken in front of the senior Bhikkhus, nor above them. One who has bathed and is getting up out (of the water) is to make way for one who is getting down into the water.

¹ Gantāghara, not simply bath-room, but room in which hot or steam baths were taken. Most of the following expressions occur in Mahāvagga I, 25, 12, or above at V, 14, 3.

‘Whoso comes last out of the hot bath-room is to wash it, if it be dirty; to wash the vessel in which the clay is kept, to put the chairs used in the hot bath-room in order, to extinguish the fire, to close up the doorway, and then come out.

‘This, O Bhikkhus, is the rule of conduct which I lay down for the Bhikkhus, in respect of the hot bath-room, according to which they are to behave themselves therein.’

9 and 10.

[These chapters deal with the manner of using the privies, and other sanitary arrangements described in V, 35, where see our note.]

11, 12, 13, and 14.

[These chapters simply repeat, word for word, Mahāvagga I, 25, 14-24; I, 26, 1-11; I, 32, 3; and I, 33 respectively.]

Here ends the Eighth Khandhaka, containing the Rules for Conduct.

NINTH KHANDHAKA.

ON EXCLUSION FROM THE PÂTIMOKKHA CEREMONY.

1.

1. Now at that time the Blessed One was staying at Sāvattthi, in the Eastern Ārâma, the mansion of the mother of Migâra. And at that time, it being Uposatha Day, the Blessed One was seated in the midst of the Bhikkhu-saṃgha. And the venerable Ānanda, when the night was far spent, when the first watch was passing away, arose from his seat, arranged his robe over one shoulder, and stretching out his joined hands towards the Blessed One, said to the Blessed One :

‘The night, Lord, is far spent. The first watch is passing away. For a long time has the Bhikkhu-saṃgha been seated here. Let my lord the Blessed One recite to the Bhikkhus the Pâtimokkha.’

When he had thus spoken, the Blessed One remained silent. And a second time, when the second watch was passing away [he made the same request with the same result]. And a third time, when the third watch had begun, and the dawn was breaking¹ [he made the same request].

‘The assembly, Ānanda, is not pure².’

¹ Nandimukhiyâ rattiya ti aruṇadhata-kâle pîti-mukhâ viya ratti khâyati ten’ âha nandimukhiyâ ti (B.). See also our note on this at Mahāvagga VIII, 13, 1.

² That is, there is some one present who is disqualified by some

2. Then the venerable Mahā Moggallāna thought, 'What individual can the Blessed One be referring to in that he says, "The assembly, Ānanda, is not pure."' And the venerable Mahā Moggallāna considered the whole Bhikkhu-saṃgha, penetrating their minds with his. Then the venerable Mahā Moggallāna perceived who was that individual,—evil in conduct, wicked in character, of impure and doubtful¹ behaviour, not a Samāna though he had taken the vows of one, not a religious student though he had taken the vows of one, foul within, full of cravings, a worthless creature,—who had taken his seat amongst the Bhikkhu-saṃgha. On perceiving which it was, he went up to that individual, and said to him, 'Arise, Sir! The Blessed One has found you out. There can be no communion² between you and the Bhikkhus!'

When he had thus spoken, that man kept silence. And a second and a third time the venerable Mahā Moggallāna addressed to him [the same words, and with the same result]. Then the venerable Mahā Moggallāna took that man by the arm and made him go out beyond the porch³, and bolted the door, fault from taking part in the proceedings, which would therefore be invalid.

¹ Samkassara. See the passages quoted by Dr. Morris in the introduction to his edition of the Anguttara (pp. viii, ix), though we cannot accept his conclusions. We may add that the Tibetan rendering of Dhammapada 312, given in Rockhill's 'Udāna-varga,' p. 49, from which we might expect some help, throws no light on the exact meaning of the word, the translator contenting himself with an ambiguous phrase.

² Samvāso. See Mahāvagga, I, 79, 2, and Kullavagga.

³ On these expressions, see the notes above, V, 14, 3, in accordance with which we should read here, in the text sūṭhi, for sūṭi.

and went up to the place where the Blessed One was, and said to him, 'Lord, I have made that man go out. The assembly is now undefiled. May my lord the Blessed One recite the Pâtimokkha to the Bhikkhus.'

'How astonishing and curious a thing it is, Moggallâna, that that foolish fellow should have waited up to the very point when he had to be taken by the arm.'

3. And the Blessed One said to the Bhikkhus: 'There are, O Bhikkhus, in the great ocean, then, eight astonishing and curious qualities, by the constant perception of which the mighty creatures take delight in the great ocean. And what are the eight?

'The great ocean, O Bhikkhus, gets gradually deeper, slope following on slope, hollow succeeding hollow, and the fall is not precipitously abrupt¹. This is the first [of such qualities]².

'Again, O Bhikkhus, the great ocean remains of the same nature³, and passes not beyond the shore. This is the second [of such qualities].

'Again, O Bhikkhus, the great ocean will not brook association with a dead corpse. Whatsoever dead corpse there be in the sea, that will it—and quickly—draw to the shore, and cast it out on the dry ground⁴. This is the third [of such qualities].

'Again, O Bhikkhus, all the great rivers—that is to say, the Gaṅgâ, the Yamunâ, the Akravattî, the

¹ Na âyataken' eva. See Kullavagga V, 3, 1, and V, 17, 2.

² Paragraph 1 is here, and in the succeeding paragraphs, repeated in full.

³ Thita-dhammo, 'has characteristics which are stable.'

⁴ For ussâreti read ussâdeti. See our note on VI, 11, 3.

Sarabhû, and the Maht—they, when they have fallen into the great ocean, renounce their names and lineage, and are reckoned thenceforth as the great ocean. This is the fourth [of such qualities].

‘Again, O Bhikkhus, though all the streams in the world flow on till they reach the great ocean, and all the waters of the sky fall into it, yet does it not thereby seem to be the more empty or more full. This is the fifth [of such qualities].

‘Again, O Bhikkhus, the great ocean has only one taste, the taste of salt. This is the sixth [of such qualities].

‘Again, O Bhikkhus, the great ocean is full of gems, of gems of various kinds; among which are these gems—that is to say, the pearl, the diamond, the catseye, the chank, rock, coral, silver, gold, the ruby, and the cornelian¹. This is the seventh [of such qualities].

‘Again, O Bhikkhus, the great ocean is the dwelling-place of mighty beings, among which are these—that is to say, the Timi, the Timiṅgala, the Timitiṅgala, the Asuras, the Nâgas, and the Gandhabbas. There are in the great ocean creatures so constituted that they stretch from one to five hundred leagues². This is the eighth [of such qualities].

4. ‘And just in the same way, O Bhikkhus, there are in this doctrine and discipline eight marvellous and wonderful qualities, by the constant perception of which the Bhikkhus take delight in this doctrine and discipline. What are the eight ?

¹ On these gems, compare Rh. D.’s note on the Mahâ-sudassana Sutta I, 4, in ‘Buddhist Suttas from the Pâli,’ pp. 249, 250.

² On this belief, compare above, VII, 2, 2, of land creatures, where the same term, attabhâva, is used.

‘Just, O Bhikkhus, as the great ocean gets gradually deeper, slope following on slope, hollow succeeding hollow, and the fall is not precipitately abrupt—just so, O Bhikkhus, in this doctrine and discipline is the training a gradual one, work following on work, and step succeeding step ; and there is no sudden attainment to the insight (of Arahatsip)¹. This is the first [of such qualities].

‘Just, O Bhikkhus, as the great ocean remains of the same nature, and passes not beyond the shore—just so, O Bhikkhus, is the body of precepts which I have established for those who are hearers of my word, and which they, their lives long, do not pass beyond. This is the second [of such qualities].

‘Just, O Bhikkhus, as the great ocean will not brook association with a dead corpse ; but whatsoever dead corpse there be in the sea that will it—and quickly—draw to the shore, and cast it out upon the dry land—just so, O Bhikkhus, if there be any individual evil in conduct, wicked in character, of impure and doubtful behaviour, not a Samana though he have taken the vows of one, not a religious student though he have taken the vows of one, foul within, full of cravings, a worthless creature ; with him will the Samgha brook no association, but quickly, on its meeting together, will it cast him out. And what though that man should himself be seated in the midst of the Bhikkhusamgha, verily, both is he afar off from the Samgha, and the Samgha from him. This is the third [of such qualities].

¹ Aññâ-paṭivedho. On the use of aññâ, standing alone, in this sense, see the note above on Mahāvagga V, 1, 19.

‘Just, O Bhikkhus, as the great rivers—that is to say, the Gaṅgâ, the Yamunâ, the Akiravattî, the Sarabhû, and the Mahtî—when they have fallen into the great ocean, renounce their name and lineage and are thenceforth reckoned as the great ocean—just so, O Bhikkhus, do these four castes—the Khattiyas, the Brahmans, the Vessas, and the Suddas—when they have gone forth from the world under the doctrine and discipline proclaimed by the Tathâgata, renounce their names and lineage, and enter into the number of the Sakyaputtiya Samanas. This is the fourth [of such qualities].

‘Just, O Bhikkhus, as though all the streams in the world flow on till they reach the great ocean, and all the waters of the sky fall into it, yet does it not seem thereby to be either more empty or more full—just so, O Bhikkhus, though many Bhikkhus pass entirely away in that kind of passing away which leaves not a trace behind, yet does not [the Samgha] thereby seem to be either more empty or more full. This is the fifth [of such qualities].

‘Just, O Bhikkhus, as the great ocean has only one taste, the taste of salt—just so, O Bhikkhus, has this doctrine and discipline only one flavour, the flavour of emancipation. This is the sixth [of such qualities].

‘Just, O Bhikkhus, as the great ocean is full of gems, of gems of various kinds—that is to say, the pearl, the diamond, the catseye, the chank, rock, coral, silver, gold, the ruby, and the cornelian—just so, O Bhikkhus, is this doctrine and discipline full of gems, of gems of various kinds, among which are these gems,—that is to say, the four Earnest Meditations, the fourfold Great Struggle, the four Roads to Iddhi, the five Moral Powers, the five Moral Senses, the seven kinds of Wisdom, and the noble eightfold Path. This is the seventh [of such qualities].

‘Just, O Bhikkhus, as the great ocean is the dwelling-place of mighty beings, among which are the Timi, the Timiṅgala, the Timitimiṅgala, the Asuras, the Nāgas, and the Gandhabbas; just as there are in the great ocean creatures so constituted that they stretch from one to five hundred leagues—just so, O Bhikkhus, is this doctrine and discipline the resort of mighty beings, among whom are he who has entered the First Path (the converted man, the Sotâpanno) and he who has realised the fruit thereof, he who has entered the Second Path (the Sakadâgâmin) and he who has realised the fruit thereof, he who has entered the Third Path (the Anâgâmin) and he who has realised the fruit thereof, the Arahât, and he who has realised the fruit of Arahâtship. This is the eighth [of such qualities].

‘These, O Bhikkhus, are the eight marvellous and wonderful qualities in this doctrine and discipline by the constant perception of which the Bhikkhus take delight therein.’

And the Blessed One, on perceiving that matter, gave forth at that time this ecstatic utterance :

‘The rain falls heavily on that which is covered, not upon that which is revealed.

‘Reveal, therefore, what thou hast concealed, and the rain shall touch thee not¹.’

¹ This enigmatical saying amounts apparently to this: ‘As a usual thing, no doubt, the rain falls not on that which is covered

2.

1. Now the Blessed One addressed the Bhikkhus, and said : ‘ Now henceforth I, O Bhikkhus, will not hold Uposatha, nor recite the Pâtimokkha ; let you yourselves, O Bhikkhus, henceforth hold Uposatha and recite the Pâtimokkha. It is, O Bhikkhus, an impossible thing and an inexpedient that the Tathâgata should hold Uposatha and recite the Pâtimokkha before an assembly which is not pure. And the Pâtimokkha, O Bhikkhus, is not to be listened to by one who has committed an offence. Whosoever shall so listen to it, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, for whomsoever shall listen to the Pâtimokkha at a time when he is guilty, to interdict for him the Pâtimokkha¹.

‘ And thus, O Bhikkhus, is it to be interdicted. On the day of Uposatha, on the fourteenth or fifteenth day of the month, and at a time when that individual is present, thus shall it be proposed in the midst of the Saṃgha :

“ Let the venerable Saṃgha hear me. Such and such an individual is guilty of an offence. For him with a roof ; but in morals it is precisely where there is already a fault concealed, unconfessed, that new faults rain in upon him who adds deceit to his fault.’ Buddhaghosa says, Khaṇnam ativasatīti āpattim āpaggitvā paṭikkhādentō aññam navam āpattim āpaggatīti idam etam sandhāya vuttam. Vivaṭam nātivassatīti āpattim āpaggitvā vivaranto aññam n’ āpaggatīti idam etam sandhāya vuttam.

¹ Pâtimokkham thapetum : exactly analogous to pavāraṇam thapetum at Mahāvagga IV, 16, 2. H. O. has already pointed out (in his ‘ Buddha,’ p. 381, note 2) that we have evidently here a later innovation. The whole frame of the Pâtimokkha shows that it was at first intended that a guilty Bhikkhu should confess his offence during the recitation, if he had not done so before.

do I interdict the Pâtimokkha to the effect that it shall not be recited when he is present. The Pâtimokkha is accordingly interdicted.”’

3.

1. Now at that time the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus thinking, ‘No one knows that we are guilty,’ listened to the Pâtimokkha. The Thera Bhikkhus, who understood the thoughts of other men, told the Bhikkhus, saying, ‘Such and such a one, Sirs, and such and such a one, *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus, thinking, “No one knows that we are guilty,” are listening to the Pâtimokkha.’

When the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus heard that, they, thinking ‘the good Bhikkhus will (otherwise) first interdict the Pâtimokkha to us,’ interdicted the Pâtimokkha to the Bhikkhus who were pure and innocent before (they had time to do so to them), and this without ground and without cause.

Those Bhikkhus who were moderate murmured, &c., . . . (as usual, down to) told the matter to the Blessed One.

‘Is it true, O Bhikkhus, that the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus have [acted thus]?’

‘It is true, Lord!’

Then he rebuked them, and when he had delivered a religious discourse, he said: ‘The Pâtimokkha is not, O Bhikkhus, to be interdicted to pure and innocent Bhikkhus without ground and without cause. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.

2. ‘There is one kind of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha, O Bhikkhus, which is illegal, and one which is legal. There are two . . . , three . . . , four (&c., up to) ten kinds of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which are illegal, and one, two (&c., up to) ten which are legal.

3. 'Which is the one kind of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which is illegal? When one inhibits the Pâtimokkha for a breach of morality without ground. This is the one kind, &c.

'And which is the one kind of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which is legal? When one inhibits the Pâtimokkha for a breach of morality with good ground. This is the one kind, &c.

'And which are the two kinds of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which are illegal? When one inhibits the Pâtimokkha for a breach of morality, or for an offence against conduct, and each of them without ground. These are the two kinds, &c.

'And which are the two kinds of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which are legal? When one inhibits the Pâtimokkha for a breach of morality, and for an offence against conduct, and each of them with good ground. These are the two kinds, &c.

'And which are the three kinds, &c.? [as the last two, adding "offence against doctrine."]

'And which are the four kinds, &c.? [as the last, adding "offence against the right mode of livelihood."]

'And which are the five kinds of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which are illegal? When one inhibits the Pâtimokkha for a Pârâgika, or for a Samghâdisesa, or for a Pâkittiya, or for a Pâtidesantiya, or for a Dukkaṭa, and each of them without ground. These are the five kinds, &c.

'And which are the five kinds of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which are legal? [Same as the last, "with good ground."]

'And which are the six kinds of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which are illegal? When one inhibits the Pâtimokkha for an offence against morality conduct doctrine¹ without ground, the offence being one of omission—when one inhibits the Pâtimokkha for an offence against morality conduct doctrine without ground, the offence being one of commission². These are the six, &c.

'And which are the six kinds of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which are legal? [Same as the last, "with good ground."]

'And which are the seven kinds of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which are illegal? When one inhibits the Pâtimokkha for a Pârâgika, or for a Samghâdisesa, or for a Thullaṅkaya, or for a Pâḷittiya, or for a Pâṭidesantya, or for a Dukkata, or for a Dubbhâsita, and each of them without ground. These are the seven kinds, &c.

'And which are the seven kinds of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which are legal? [Same as the last, "with good ground."]

'And which are the eight kinds of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which are illegal? [The same as the six, adding "offence against the right means of livelihood."]

¹ The paragraph is repeated in the section full for each of these cases.

² Kata akatâ katâkatâ we have rendered here and below as offence of omission—of commission—of both, as seems imperatively demanded by the context. Buddhaghosa, however, says, Akatâyâ ti tena puggalena sâ vipatti katâ vâ hotu akatâ vâ pâtimokkha-/hapanakassa saññâ amûlika-vasena amûlikâ hoti. Katâkatâyâ ti katañ ka akatañ ka ubhayam gahetvâ vuttam.

‘And which are the nine kinds of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which are illegal . . . legal? [The same as the six, adding for each kind of offence, “the offence being one both of omission and of commission.”]

‘And which are the ten kinds of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which are illegal? When (a Bhikkhu) who has been guilty of a Pârâgika is not seated in that assembly¹,—when no discussion is still going on (in the assembly) as to a Pârâgika offence (supposed to have been committed by a Bhikkhu then present),—when (a Bhikkhu) who has abandoned the precepts² is not seated in that assembly,—when no discussion is still going on (in the assembly) in respect of (a Bhikkhu then present having been charged with) abandoning the precepts,—when (the person charged) submits himself to the legally prescribed concord (of the assembly)³,—when (the person charged) does not withdraw his acceptance of the legally prescribed concord (of the assembly)⁴,—when no discussion is still going on (in the assembly) in respect of the withdrawal of (any member's) acceptance of the legally (prescribed) concord (of the assembly),—when (the Bhikkhu charged) has not been suspected of an offence against morality, nor seen (to have committed one), nor heard (to have committed one)— . . . of an offence against conduct — . . . of an ¹ This and the following phrase are further enlarged upon in § 4 and the following sections.

² See our note on Mahāvagga II, 22, 3.

³ See Mahāvagga X, 5, 13, &c.

⁴ Paṭṭhādiyati. Buddhaghosa says here, paṭṭhādiyati ti puna kâtabbam kammam paṭṭhādiyati. Tena ukkoṇake pāṭṭiyam āpaggati.

offence against doctrine. . . . These are the ten kinds, &c.

‘And which are the ten kinds of inhibition of the Pâtimokkha which are legal? [The same as the last, positive instead of negative.]

4. ‘And how (can it be legally said that) a Bhikkhu who has been guilty of a Pârâgika offence is seated in the assembly?

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu sees that (another) Bhikkhu is incurring a Pârâgika offence by those means, marks, and signs by which the incurring of a Pârâgika offence is brought about. Or in case a Bhikkhu does not himself see that (another) Bhikkhu is incurring a Pârâgika offence, but another Bhikkhu inform the (first-mentioned) Bhikkhu, saying, “Such and such a Bhikkhu, Sir, has been guilty of a Pârâgika offence.” Or in case a Bhikkhu does not himself see that another Bhikkhu is incurring a Pârâgika offence, but that one himself inform the (first-mentioned) Bhikkhu, saying, “I, Sir, have been guilty of a Pârâgika offence.”

‘(In either of these cases), O Bhikkhus, if he seem to do so, the Bhikkhu may, on the ground of what he has seen and heard and suspected, bring forward the following resolution on an Uposatha day, on the fourteenth or fifteenth day of the month, at a time when that individual is present in the midst of the Samgha: “Let the venerable Samgha hear me. Such and such an individual has been guilty of a Pârâgika offence. I interdict for him the Pâtimokkha, to the effect that the Pâtimokkha ought not to be recited at a time when he is present.” That is a legal inhibition of the Pâtimokkha.

‘If, when the Pâtimokkha has been inhibited for that Bhikkhu, the assembly should rise on account of any one or other of the Ten Dangers¹—danger arising from the king, or from thieves, or from fire, or from water, or from human beings, or from non-human beings, or from beasts of prey, or from creeping things, or danger of life, or danger against chastity—the Bhikkhu may, if he desire to do so, bring forward the following resolution, either in that circle of residence or in another circle of residence, at a time when that individual is present in the midst of the assembly: “Let the venerable Samgha hear me. A discussion had commenced with regard to a Pârâgika offence of such and such a person, but that matter was not decided. If the time seems meet to the Samgha, let the Samgha decide that matter.” If he thus succeed, it is well. If not, then on an Uposatha day, on the fourteenth or fifteenth day of the month, at a time when that individual is present in the midst of the Samgha, let him bring forward the following resolution: “Let the venerable Samgha hear me. A discussion had commenced with regard to a Pârâgika offence of such and such a person, but that matter was not decided. I interdict the Pâtimokkha for him to the effect that the Pâtimokkha ought not to be recited at a time when he is present.” That is a legal inhibition of the Pâtimokkha.

5. ‘And how (can it be legally said that a Bhikkhu) who has abandoned the precepts is seated in the assembly?’

[The same as last, reading ‘abandoned the precepts,’ &c., for ‘Pârâgika offence,’ &c.]

6. ‘And how (can it be legally said that the person charged) does not submit himself to the legally (prescribed) concord (of the assembly)?'

¹ See the rule laid down in Mahāvagga II, 15, 4.

[Same as last, reading 'not submit himself to the legally (prescribed) concord of the assembly,' &c., instead of 'abandon the precepts,' &c.]

7. 'And how (can it be legally said that the person charged) withdraws his acceptance of the legally (established) concord (of the assembly)?'

[Same as last, reading 'withdraws his acceptance,' &c., for 'does not submit,' &c.]

8. 'And how can it be legally said that the person charged has been seen or heard or suspected of having committed an offence against morality an offence against conduct an offence against doctrine?'

[Same as § 4, reading 'offence against morality,' &c., for 'Pârâgika offence.']

These are the ten kinds of the inhibition of Pâtimokkha which are legal.

Here ends the First Portion for Recitation.

4.

1. Now the venerable Upâli¹ went up to the Blessed One, and bowed down before him, and took his seat on one side. And when he was so seated, the venerable Upâli said to the Blessed One :

'When a Bhikkhu, Lord, intends to take upon himself the conduct (of any matter that has to be decided)¹, under what conditions should he take the conduct thereof upon himself²?’

¹ No doubt in his rôle of a chief of the Vinaya-dharas, as in Mahāvagga IX, 6, &c.

‘A Bhikkhu, Upâli, who intends to take upon himself the conduct of any matter, should take such conduct upon himself under five conditions.

‘(In the first place.) A Bhikkhu, Upâli, who intends to take the conduct of any matter upon himself, should thus consider: “The conduct of this matter which I intend to take upon myself, is it now the right time for the taking charge of the conduct thereof, or is it not?” If that Bhikkhu, Upâli, so considering, come to the conclusion that it is not the right time, he should not, Upâli, take charge of it.

‘(Secondly.) If that Bhikkhu, Upâli, so considering, come to the conclusion that it is the right time, he should, Upâli, further consider thus: “The conduct of this matter which I intend to take upon myself, is it just, or is it not?” If that Bhikkhu, Upâli, so considering, come to the conclusion that it would not be just, he should not take charge of it.

‘(Thirdly.) If that Bhikkhu, Upâli, so considering, come to the conclusion that it would be just, he should, Upâli, further consider thus: “The conduct of this matter which I intend to take upon myself, would it tend to advantage, or would it not?” If that Bhikkhu, Upâli, so considering, come to the conclusion that it would not tend to advantage, he should not, Upâli, take charge of it.

‘(Fourthly.) If that Bhikkhu, Upâli, so considering, come to the conclusion that it would tend to profit, he should, Upâli, further consider thus : "While I am taking the conduct of this matter upon myself, shall I find that the Bhikkhus who are my intimates and associates are on my side in accordance with the Dhamma and the Vinaya, or shall I not?" If that Bhikkhu, Upâli, so considering, come to the conclusion that he will not, he should not, Upâli, take charge of it.

¹ As, for instance, in the last chapter (§§ 4 and following) the Bhikkhu who lays the matter before the Saṃgha.

² Attâdânam âdīyati, in our explanation of which we follow Buddhaghosa.

'(Fifthly.) If that Bhikkhu, Upâli, so considering, come to the conclusion that he will find them so, he should further, Upâli, consider thus : "Whilst I am taking the conduct of this matter upon myself, will the Samgha, as a result thereof, fall into strife, quarrel, contention, or dispute, or will there arise a split in the Samgha, disunion in the Samgha, diversity of position in the Samgha, diversity of action in the Samgha¹?" If that Bhikkhu, Upâli, so considering, come to the conclusion that that will happen, he should not take charge of it. But if that Bhikkhu, Upâli, thus considering, should come to the conclusion that that will not happen, he should take charge of it. The taking charge of a matter, Upâli, subject to these five conditions, will not give cause to subsequent remorse.'

5.

1. 'When, Lord, a Bhikkhu who takes upon himself to warn another, is about to do so, of how many qualities should he consider whether they are within himself before he does so?'

(a) 'A Bhikkhu who warns another should, Upâli,

¹ This list has occurred above, Mahāvagga X, 1, 6; X, 5, 13; Kullavagga VII, 5, 1.

when he is about to do so, consider thus : “ Am I pure in the conduct of my body ; pure therein without a flaw, without a fleck ? Is this quality found in me, or is it not ? ” If, Upâli, the Bhikkhu is not so, there will be some who will say to him : “ Come, now, let your reverence continue still to train yourself in matters relating to the body ! ”— thus will they say.

(b) ‘ And further, a Bhikkhu who warns another should, Upâli, when he is about to do so, consider thus : “ Am I pure in the conduct of my speech ; pure therein without a flaw, without a fleck ? Is this quality found in me, or is it not ? ” If, Upâli, the Bhikkhu is not so, there will be some who will say to him : “ Come, now, let your reverence continue still to train yourself in matters relating to speech ! ”— thus will they say.

(c) ‘ And further, a Bhikkhu who warns another should, Upâli, consider thus : “ Is a kindly mind ever present in me, one without anger against those who are my companions in the religious life ? Is this quality found in me, or is it not ? ” If, Upâli, such a mind is not in that Bhikkhu, there will be some who will say to him : “ Come, now, let your reverence continue still to cultivate a friendly feeling towards those who are your companions in the religious life ! ”— thus will they say.

(d) ‘ And further, a Bhikkhu who warns another should, Upâli, consider thus : “ Am I a man versed in the tradition, a custodian of the tradition, a store-house of the tradition ? Whatsoever truths, lovely in their origin, lovely in their progress, lovely in their consummation, magnify the higher life, both in the spirit and in the letter, and in all its points, in all its perfectness,—in such truths am I well versed, of such am I full, are such laid up in my words, dwelt on in my heart, penetrated throughout through right insight¹? Is this quality found in me, or is it not?” If that Bhikkhu, Upâli, is not such a man, there will be some who will say to him: “Come, now, let your reverence continue still to learn the faith!”—thus will they say.

(e) ‘And further, a Bhikkhu who warns another should, Upâli, consider thus: “Have both the Pâtimokkhas been completely handed down to me in their full extent; have I well divided them, well established them, well investigated them, both Rule by Rule², and in every detail? Is this quality found in me, or is it not?” If, Upâli, that is not so, then when he is asked, “Where has this, Sir, been declared by the Blessed One?” he will not be able to explain³, and there will be some who will say to him: “Come, now, let your reverence continue still to learn the Vinaya!”—thus will they say.

‘These are the five qualities, Upâli, of which a Bhikkhu about to warn another should consider before he does so, whether they are within himself or not.’

2. ‘When, Lord, a Bhikkhu who takes upon himself to warn another, is about to do so, how many qualities should he call up (establish) within himself before he does so?’

¹ On the whole of this and of the next paragraph, which have occurred already above at IV, 14, 19, see our notes there.

² That is, ‘Sutta by Sutta.’ On the whole stock phrase, compare our remarks in p. xviii of the Introduction; and above, Mahāvagga I, 36, 14; Kullavagga IV, 14, 19.

³ Read na sampāyati, in accordance with H.O.’s note at p. 364 of the text.

‘ A Bhikkhu, Upâli, who is about to warn another, should call up within himself five qualities before he does so, (saying to himself): “At the right time will I speak, not at the wrong time. In truth will I speak, and not in falsehood. Gently will I speak, and not in harshness. To profit will I speak, and not senselessly. In kindly spirit will I speak, and not in anger¹.

‘ These, Upâli, are the five,’ &c.

3. ‘ In how many ways, Lord, is repentance to be brought home to a Bhikkhu who has wrongfully warned another Bhikkhu ? ’

‘ In five ways, Upâli, is repentance to be brought home to a Bhikkhu who has wrongfully warned another Bhikkhu, (that is to say, by saying to him): “At the wrong time did you warn him, Sir, not at the right time: wherein is need of repentance. Untruthfully did you warn him, Sir, and not according to fact: wherein is need of repentance. In harshness did you warn him, Sir, and not gently: wherein is need of repentance. Senselessly did you warn him, Sir, and not in a way redounding to profit: wherein is need of repentance. In anger did you warn him, Sir, and not in kindly spirit: wherein is need of repentance.

‘ In these five ways, Upâli, should repentance be brought home to a Bhikkhu who has wrongfully warned another Bhikkhu. And why? That no other Bhikkhu may think that warning is to be given not according to fact.’

4. ‘ In how many ways, Lord, is it to be brought about that repentance shall not be brought home to a Bhikkhu who has been wrongfully warned ?'

¹ On these phrases, compare the Kûla Silam, translated by Rh. D. in ‘Buddhist Suttas,’ p. 190.

'In five ways, Upâli, (that is to say, by saying to him): "At the wrong time, Sir, were you warned, and not at the right time : there is no need of repentance,"' [&c., as in § 3, paragraph 2, with similar alterations.]

5. 'In how many ways, Lord, is the contrary of repentance to be brought home to a Bhikkhu who has rightfully warned another Bhikkhu ?'

[The answer is the exact contrary of § 3.]

6. [This section is the contrary of § 5.]

7. 'When, Lord, a Bhikkhu who warns another Bhikkhu, is about to do so, how many things should he call to mind before he does so ?'

'Five things, Upâli—to wit : mercy, seeking the good of others, compassion, the giving up of offences, and deference towards the Vinaya. These are the five,' &c.

'And a Bhikkhu, Lord, who is warned, in how many qualities should he keep himself firm ?'

'In two things, Upâli—to wit : in truth and in freedom from anger.'

Here ends the Ninth Khandhaka, on the Interdiction of the Pâtimokkha.

TENTH KHANDHAKA.

ON THE DUTIES OF BHIKKHUNĪS.

1.

1. Now at that time the Blessed Buddha was staying among the Sākyas in Kapilavatthu, in the Nigrodhārāma. And Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī went to the place where the Blessed One was, and on arriving there, bowed down before the Blessed One, and remained standing on one side. And so standing she spake thus to the Blessed One :

‘It would be well, Lord, if women should be allowed to renounce their homes and enter the homeless state under the doctrine and discipline proclaimed by the Tathāgata.’

‘Enough, O Gotamī! Let it not please thee that women should be allowed to do so.’

[And a second and a third time did Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī make the same request in the same words, and receive the same reply.]

Then Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī sad and sorrowful for that the Blessed One would not permit women to enter the homeless state, bowed down before the Blessed One, and keeping him on her right hand as she passed him, departed thence weeping and in tears.

2. Now when the Blessed One had remained at Kapilavatthu as long as he thought fit, he set out on his journey towards Vesālī; and travelling straight on he in due course arrived thereat. And there at Vesālī the Blessed One stayed, in the Mahāvana, in the Kūṭāgāra Hall.

And Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī cut off her hair, and put on orange-coloured robes, and set out, with a number of women of the Sākya clan, towards Vesālī; and in due course she arrived at Vesālī, at the Mahāvana, at the Kūṭāgāra Hall. And Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī, with swollen feet and covered with dust, sad and sorrowful, weeping and in tears, took her stand outside under the entrance porch.

And the venerable Ānanda saw her so standing there, and on seeing her so, he said to Mahā-pagāpatī: 'Why standest thou there, outside the porch, with swollen feet and covered with dust, sad and sorrowful, weeping and in tears?'

'Inasmuch, O Ānanda, as the Lord, the Blessed One, does not permit women to renounce their homes and enter the homeless state under the doctrine and discipline proclaimed by the Tathāgata.'

3. Then did the venerable Ānanda go up to the place where the Blessed One was, and bow down before the Blessed One, and take his seat on one side. And, so sitting, the venerable Ānanda said to the Blessed One:

'Behold, Lord, Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī is standing outside under the entrance porch, with swollen feet and covered with dust, sad and sorrowful, weeping and in tears, inasmuch as the Blessed One does not permit women to renounce their homes and enter the homeless state under the doctrine and discipline proclaimed by the Blessed One. It were well, Lord, if women were to have permission granted to them to do as she desires.'

‘Enough, Ānanda! Let it not please thee that women should be allowed to do so.’

[And a second and a third time did Ānanda make the same request, in the same words, and receive the same reply.]

Then the venerable Ānanda thought: ‘The Blessed One does not give his permission, let me now ask the Blessed One on another ground.’ And the venerable Ānanda said to the Blessed One:

‘Are women, Lord, capable—when they have gone forth from the household life and entered the homeless state, under the doctrine and discipline proclaimed by the Blessed One—are they capable of realising the fruit of conversion, or of the second Path, or of the third Path, or of Arahatsip?’

‘They are capable, Ānanda.’

‘If then, Lord, they are capable thereof, since Mahā-pagāpati the Gotamī has proved herself of great service to the Blessed One, when as aunt and nurse she nourished him and gave him milk, and on the death of his mother suckled the Blessed One at her own breast, it were well, Lord, that women should have permission to go forth from the household life and enter the homeless state, under the doctrine and discipline proclaimed by the Tathāgata¹.’

4. ‘If then, Ānanda, Mahā-pagāpati the Gotamī take upon herself the Eight Chief Rules², let that be reckoned to her as her initiation.’

³[They are these]: (1) ‘A Bhikkhunī, even if of ¹ Ānanda’s conduct in this matter was afterwards charged against him as a dukkaṭa. See below, XI, 1, 10.

² The Aṭṭha Garudhammā, on which see further our note above on the 21st Pāṭiṭṭiya, and below, X, 9.

³ The whole of the following eight paragraphs recur in the a hundred years standing, shall make salutation to, shall rise up in the presence of, shall bow down before, and shall perform all proper duties towards a Bhikkhu, if only just initiated. This is a rule to be revered and revered, honoured and observed, and her life long never to be transgressed.

(2) 'A Bhikkhunī is not to spend the rainy season (of Was) in a district¹ in which there is no Bhikkhu. This is a rule never to be transgressed.

(3) 'Every half month a Bhikkhunī is to await from the Bhikkhu-saṃgha two things, the asking as to (the date of) the Uposatha ceremony², and the (time when the Bhikkhu) will come to give the Exhortation³. This is a rule never to be transgressed.

(4) 'After keeping the rainy season (of Was), the Bhikkhunī is to hold Pavāraṇā (to enquire whether any fault can be laid to her charge) before both Saṃghas—as well that of Bhikkhus as that of Bhikkhunīs—with respect to three matters, namely, what has been seen, and what has been heard, and what has been suspected⁴. This is a rule never to be transgressed.

Sutta Vibhaṅga, Pāṭiṭṭiya XXI, 3, 1. It is very instructive to notice the curious blunders which the Tibetan writers (translated by Rockhill in his 'Life of the Buddha,' pp. 62, 63) make in the rendering of the difficult technical terms in these Eight Rules.

¹ Āvāsa. Compare Kullavagga I, 18, 1, VI, 15, 1, VIII, 1, 2. This rule is the 56th Bhikkhunī Pāṭiṭṭiya.

² The Bhikkhunīs are to ask two or three days beforehand whether the Uposatha is to be held on the 14th or 15th day of the month, says Buddhaghosa here. Compare also the 59th Bhikkhunī Pāṭiṭṭiya, where the whole passage recurs.

³ Compare the 21st Pāṭiṭṭiya, and our note there.

⁴ See Mahāvagga IV, 1, 13, 14. This rule is the same as the 57th Bhikkhunī Pāṭiṭṭiya. The mode of carrying out this rule is explained in detail below, X, 19.

(5) 'A Bhikkhunī who has been guilty of a serious offence is to undergo the Mānatta discipline towards both the Saṃghas (Bhikkhus and Bhikkhunis). This is a rule never to be transgressed.

(6) 'When a Bhikkhunī, as novice, has been trained for two years in the Six Rules¹, she is to ask leave for the upasampadā initiation from both Saṃghas (as well that of Bhikkhus as that of Bhikkhunis²). This is a rule never to be transgressed.

(7) 'A Bhikkhunī is on no pretext to revile or abuse a Bhikkhu³. This is a rule never to be transgressed.

(8) 'From henceforth official admonition⁴ by Bhikkhunis of Bhikkhus is forbidden, whereas the official admonition of Bhikkhunis by Bhikkhus is not forbidden. This is a rule never to be transgressed. .

'If, Ānanda, Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī take upon herself these Eight Chief Rules, let that be reckoned to her as her initiation.'

5. Then the venerable Ānanda, when he had learnt from the Blessed One these Eight Chief Rules, went to Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī and [told her all that the Blessed One had said].

¹ Kāsu dhammesu. The Six Rules for novices. They are referred to in the Bhikkhunī Vibhaṅga, under Pāṭṭiyas LXIII-LXVII.

² The actual ordination (upasampadā) itself is not complete till it has been conferred by Bhikkhus (see the rule at X, 2, 2). The whole proceeding is fully set out below, X, 17. Compare also the 63rd and 64th Bhikkhunī Pāṭṭitiya.

³ This is the 52nd Bhikkhunī Pāṭṭitiya.

⁴ Vāṇana-patho. That is, literally, speech. But the reference is, no doubt, to the various kinds of official admonitions given in detail in chapter 20 below.

‘Just, Ānanda, as a man or a woman, when young and of tender years, accustomed to adorn himself, would, when he had bathed his head, receive with both hands a garland of lotus flowers, or of jasmine flowers, or of atimuttaka flowers, and place it on the top of his head; even so do I, Ānanda, take upon me these Eight Chief Rules, never to be transgressed my life long.’

6. Then the venerable Ānanda returned to the Blessed One, and bowed down before him, and took his seat on one side. And, so sitting, the venerable Ānanda said to the Blessed One: ‘Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī, Lord, has taken upon herself the Eight Chief Rules, the aunt of the Blessed One has received the upasampadā initiation.’

‘If, Ānanda, women had not received permission to go out from the household life and enter the homeless state, under the doctrine and discipline proclaimed by the Tathāgata, then would the pure religion, Ānanda, have lasted long, the good law would have stood fast for a thousand years. But since, Ānanda, women have now received that permission, the pure religion, Ānanda, will not now last so long, the good law will now stand fast for only five hundred years. Just, Ānanda, as houses in which there are many women¹ and but few men are easily violated² by robber burglars³; just so, Ānanda, under whatever doctrine and discipline women are allowed to go out from the household life into the homeless state, that religion will not last long. And just, Ânanda, as when the disease called mildew falls upon a field of rice in fine condition, that field of rice does not continue long ; just so, Ânanda, under whatsoever doctrine and discipline women are allowed to go forth from the household life into the homeless state, that religion will not last long. And just, Ânanda, as when the disease called blight falls upon a field of sugar-cane in good condition, that field of sugar-cane does not continue long ; just so, Ânanda, under whatsoever doctrine and discipline women are allowed to go forth from the household life into the homeless state, that religion does not last long. And just, Ânanda, as a man would in anticipation build an embankment to a great reservoir, beyond which the water should not overpass ; just even so, Ânanda, have I in anticipation laid down these Eight Chief Rules for the Bhikkhunts, their life long not to be overpassed.'

¹ Bahutthikāni. The context shows that we are to understand itthi and not attha. Compare Rockhill's ‘Life of the Buddha,’ p. 61.

² Suppadhamsiyāni. Compare Bhikkhunī Vibhaṅga, Saṃghādisesa III, 1, 2, and see also Kullavagga VII, 5, 4.

³ Korehi kumbatthenakehi; on which Buddhaghosa has the following note:—Kumbatthenakehi ti kumbhe dīpaṃ gāletvā ena ālokena paraghare bhaṇḍam viñitivā thenakakorehi.

Here end the Eight Chief Rules for the Bhikkhunts.

2.

1. Now Mahâ-pagâpatî the Gotamî went up to the place where the Blessed One was, and bowed down before him, and stood respectfully on one side. And, so standing, Mahâ-pagâpatî the Gotamî spake thus to the Blessed One: 'What course, Lord, should I pursue towards these women of the Sākya clan ?'

Then the Blessed One taught Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī and incited her, and aroused her, and gladdened her with religious discourse ; and she, so taught, incited, aroused, and gladdened, bowed down before the Blessed One, and keeping him on her right hand as she passed him, she departed thence.

Then the Blessed One, in that connexion, delivered a religious discourse, and said to the Bhikkhus, ' I allow Bhikkhunts, O Bhikkhus, to receive the upasampadā initiation from Bhikkhus ¹.'

2. Now those Bhikkhunts said to Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī : ' Neither have you received the upasampadā initiation, nor have we ; for it has thus been laid down by the Blessed One : " Bhikkhunts are to be initiated by Bhikkhus." '

Then Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī went to the venerable Ānanda, and [repeated their words to him]. And the venerable Ānanda went to the Blessed One, and [repeated them to him].

' In that moment, Ānanda, when Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī took upon herself the Eight Chief Rules, that was to her as the upasampadā initiation.'

3.

1. Now Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī went up to the place where the venerable Ānanda was, and bowed down before him, and stood respectfully on one side.

¹ Compare the 6th Garudhamma above, X, 1, 4.

And, so standing, Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī said to the venerable Ānanda: 'One thing, Ānanda, would I ask of the Blessed One. It were well, Sir, if the Blessed One would allow the making of salutations, the rising up in presence of another, the paying of reverence, and the performance of proper duties one towards another, to take place as between both Bhikkhus and Bhikkhunis (equally) according to seniority.'

And the venerable Ānanda went to the Blessed One [and repeated her words to him].

'This is impossible, Ānanda, and unallowable, that I should so order. Even those others, Ānanda, teachers of ill doctrine, allow not such conduct towards women; how much less, then, can the Tathāgata allow it?'

And the Blessed One, on that occasion, having delivered a religious discourse, addressed the Bhikkhus, and said: 'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to bow down before women, to rise up in their presence, to stretch out your joined hands towards them, nor to perform towards them those duties that are proper (from an inferior to a superior). Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

4.

1. Now Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī went up to the place where the Blessed One was, and bowed down before him, and stood respectfully on one side. And, so standing, Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī said to the Blessed One: 'What course, Lord, shall we pursue with reference to those precepts for the Bhikkhuns which are applicable also to the Bhikkhus ?'

'Train yourselves, Gotamī, therein in the same manner as the Bhikkhus do.'

'And what course, Lord, should we pursue in reference to those precepts for the Bhikkhuns which are not applicable also to the Bhikkhus ?'

'Train yourselves, Gotamī, therein according to the substance thereof, as they are laid down.'

5.

1. Now Mahā-pagāpatī the Gotamī went to the Blessed One [&c., as before], and said: 'May the Blessed One preach to me the Dhamma (truth, doctrine) in abstract; so that, having heard the doctrine of the Blessed One, I may remain alone and separate, earnest, zealous, and resolved¹.'

'Of whatsoever doctrines thou shalt be conscious, Gotamī, that they conduce to passion and not to peace, to pride and not to veneration, to wishing for much and not to wishing for little, to love of society and not to seclusion, to sloth and not to the exercise of zeal, to being hard to satisfy and not to content²—verily mayest thou then, Gotamī, bear in mind that that is not Dhamma, that that is not Vinaya, that that is not the teaching of the Master. But of whatsoever doctrines thou shalt be conscious, Gotamī, that they conduce to peace and not to passion, to veneration and not to pride, to wishing for little and not to wishing for much, to seclusion and not to love of society, to the exercise of zeal and not to sloth, to content and not to querulousness—verily mayest thou then bear in mind that that is Dhamma, and that is Vinaya, and that the teaching of the Master.’

¹ These last words are the standing expression for the preparatory stage to Arahatsip. Compare Mahāvagga I, 6, 16; Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta V, 68. The whole speech frequently occurs in the Saṃyutta Nikāya at the commencement of conversations with the Buddha.

² Most of these terms have already occurred in the standing 'religious discourse' which is related to have preceded the enunciation of so many of the rules for Bhikkhus (Kullavagga I, 2, 3).

6.

1. Now at that time the Pâtimokkha was not recited to the Bhikkhunts.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow the Pâtimokkha, O Bhikkhus, to be recited to the Bhikkhunts.’

Now it occurred to the Bhikkhunts: ‘By whom should the Pâtimokkha be recited to the Bhikkhunts?’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, the Pâtimokkha to be recited to Bhikkhunts by Bhikkhus.’

Now at that time Bhikkhus went to the residence of the Bhikkhunts and recited the Pâtimokkha to the Bhikkhunts there. The people murmured, and were indignant, saying: ‘There are their wives, there are their mistresses; now will they take pleasure together.’

The Bhikkhus heard this, and told the matter to the Blessed One.

‘Bhikkhus are not, O Bhikkhus, to recite the Pātimokkha to the Bhikkhunts at their residence. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, to recite the Pātimokkha to the Bhikkhunts.'

The Bhikkhunts did not know how to recite the Pātimokkha. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, to tell Bhikkhunts how to recite the Pātimokkha.'

2. Now at that time the Bhikkhunts did not confess the faults (they had committed).

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'A Bhikkhū, O Bhikkhus, is not to leave a fault unconfessed. . Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

The Bhikkhunts did not know how to confess their faults. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, to tell Bhikkhunts how they should confess their faults.'

Then it occurred to the Bhikkhus: 'By whom ought the confession of a fault to be received from the Bhikkhunts?' They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, to receive the confession of a fault from Bhikkhunts.'

Now at that time Bhikkhunts, on seeing a Bhikkhu on the road, or in a street closed at one end, or at the place where four cross-roads met, would place their bowl on the ground, and arranging their robes over one shoulder, would crouch down on their heels, and stretch forth their joined hands, and confess a fault. The people murmured, were indignant, and complained, saying: 'There are their wives, there are their mistresses; they are asking pardon now after having treated them scornfully overnight.'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'Bhikkhus are not, O Bhikkhus, to receive the confessions of a fault from Bhikkhunts. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow Bhikkhunts, O Bhikkhus, to receive the confession of a fault from Bhikkhunts.'

The Bhikkhunts did not know how to receive the confession of a fault. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, to tell Bhikkhunts how to receive the confession of a fault.'

3. Now at that time disciplinary proceedings (Kammas) were not carried out against Bhikkhunts. They told that matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow disciplinary proceedings, O Bhikkhus, to be carried out against Bhikkhunts.'

Then the Bhikkhus thought: 'By whom ought disciplinary proceedings to be carried out against Bhikkhunts?' They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, to carry out disciplinary proceedings against Bhikkhunts.'

Now at that time Bhikkhunts who had been subjected to disciplinary proceedings, on seeing a Bhikkhu on the road, or in a street closed at one end, or at the place where four cross-roads met, would place their bowls on the ground, and arranging their robes over one shoulder, would crouch down on their heels, and stretching out their joined palms would ask for pardon, thinking that that was the proper time for doing so. The people murmured [&c., as before].

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘Bhikkhus are not, O Bhikkhus, to carry out disciplinary proceedings against the Bhikkhunts. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’ I allow Bhikkhunts, O Bhikkhus, to carry out disciplinary proceedings against Bhikkhunts.’

The Bhikkhunts did not know how to carry out the disciplinary proceedings. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, to tell the Bhikkhunts how to carry out disciplinary proceedings.’

7.

1. Now at that time Bhikkhunts in Samgha assembled, having fallen into quarrel, strife, and dispute, got to blows, and were unable to settle the point at issue. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, to settle for Bhikkhunts a point at issue.’

Now at that time Bhikkhus were settling for Bhikkhunts a point at issue, and as the point at issue was being enquired into, it was found that both Bhikkhunts competent to take part in an official act¹, and Bhikkhunts who had been guilty of an offence (had taken part in the Samgha during the official act (the Kamma) at which the point in issue arose).

The Bhikkhunts said: ‘It would be well if you, Sirs, would carry out disciplinary proceedings against the guilty Bhikkhunts, or absolve their offence: for thus has it been laid down by the Blessed One : “ Bhikkhus are to settle for the Bhikkhuns a point at issue.”

¹ Kammappattā; on which see Parivāra XIX, 6, 7.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘ I allow Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, to set on foot ¹ an official act for Bhikkhuns, and then to give it in charge for Bhikkhuns to carry out the official act against Bhikkhuns. And I allow Bhikkhus to set on foot the (dealing with an) offence for Bhikkhuns, and then to give it in charge for Bhikkhuns to accept the confession thereof.’

8.

1. Now at that time a Bhikkhunī, a pupil of the Bhikkhunī Uppalavannā, followed the Blessed One for seven years, learning the Vinaya ; but she, being forgetful, lost it as fast as she received it. And that Bhikkhunī heard that the Blessed One was about to go to Sāvattthi. Then she thought : ‘ For seven years have I followed the Blessed One, learning the Vinaya ; and, being forgetful, I have lost it as fast as I received it. Hard is it for a woman to follow the Blessed One her life long. What now shall I do ?’

And that Bhikkhunī told this matter to the Bhik-khuns, and they told it to the Bhikkhus, and the Bhikkhus told it to the Blessed One.

‘ I allow Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, to teach the Vinaya to Bhikkhuns.’

Here ends the First Portion for Recitation.

¹ Ropetum, on which Buddhaghosa says : Tagganiyādīsu imam nāma kammam etissā kâtabban ti evam ropetvâ.

9.

1. Now when the Blessed One had stayed at Vesālī as long as he thought fit, he sat out towards Sāvattthi; and, journeying straight on, he in due course arrived thereat. And there, at Sāvattthi, the Blessed One remained in the Getavana, Anātha Pindāka's Park.

Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus threw dirty water over Bhikkhunts, thinking, perhaps, they would fall in love with them¹.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'A Bhikkhu is not, O Bhikkhus, to throw dirty water at a Bhikkhunī. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow a penalty, O Bhikkhus, to be imposed on that Bhikkhu.

Then the Bhikkhus thought: 'What penalty is it that ought to be imposed on him?' They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'That Bhikkhu is to be declared to be one who is not to be saluted by the Bhikkhuni-saṃgha².'

Now at that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus uncovered their bodies, or their thighs, or their private parts, and showed them to Bhikkhunts, or addressed Bhikkhunts with wicked words, or associated with Bhikkhunts, thinking, perhaps, they would fall in love with them³.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

¹ On sāraggeyyun compare sāraggati at V, 3, 1.

² On this decision compare the 'sending to Coventry' of Kḥanna for levity of conduct towards Bhikkhus at Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta VI, 4, and Kullavagga XI, 1, 12 (where the penalty is called Brahma-danda).

³ On sampayogeti compare Kullavagga I, 5, at the end.

‘A Bhikkhu is not, O Bhikkhus, to do [any of these things]. Whosoever does, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow, O Bhikkhus, a penalty to be imposed on that Bhikkhu.’

Then the Bhikkhus thought: ‘What penalty is it that ought to be imposed on him?’ They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘That Bhikkhu is to be declared to be one who is not to be saluted by the Bhikkhū-saṃgha.’

2. [The last section repeated of the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhūnt, the decision being the same down to]

Then the Bhikkhus thought: ‘What penalty is it that ought to be imposed on her?’ They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to prohibit her (from entering a Vihāra)¹.’

When the prohibition was laid upon them, they would not accept it. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to inhibit them from the Exhortation.’

3. Then the Bhikkhus thought: ‘Is it lawful to hold Uposatha with a Bhikkhūnt who has been inhibited from the Exhortation, or is it not lawful?’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘You are not, O Bhikkhus, to hold Uposatha with a Bhikkhūnt who has been inhibited from the Exhortation until such time as her case has been settled.’

Now at that time the venerable Udāyi, after having inhibited the Exhortation (to one or more Bhikkhūnt), went away on a journey. The Bhik-khunts murmured, were indignant, and complained, saying: 'How can the venerable Udāyi [act so]?'

¹ Āvaranan ti vihārapavesane nivāraṇam, says Buddhaghosa.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to go on a journey after having inhibited the Exhortation. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time foolish and incompetent Bhikkhus inhibited the Exhortation.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'The Exhortation is not, O Bhikkhus, to be inhibited by a foolish, incompetent Bhikkhu. When such a one does so, he shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time Bhikkhus inhibited the Exhortation without grounds and without cause.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to inhibit the Exhortation without ground and without cause. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time Bhikkhus, who had inhibited the Exhortation, would not give a decision (on the matter out of which the inhibition arose).

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'When, O Bhikkhus, you have inhibited the Exhortation, you are not to abstain from giving a decision (on the matter out of which the inhibition arose). Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

4. Now at that time Bhikkhunts did not go to the Exhortation. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'A Bhikkhunt, O Bhikkhus, is not to omit going to the Exhortation. Whosoever does so, shall be dealt with according to the rule¹.'

¹ Bhikkhunī Pāṭittiya LVIII.

Now at that time the whole Bhikkhunī-saṃgha went to the Exhortation together. The people murmured, were indignant, and complained, saying : 'There are their wives, there are their mistresses ; now will they take pleasure together.'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'The whole Bhikkhunī-saṃgha is not, O Bhikkhus, to go to the Exhortation together. And if it should so go, it is guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow, O Bhikkhus, four or five Bhikkhunis to go together.'

[The same when four or five went the decision ending,]

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, two or three Bhikkhunis to go together to Exhortation ; and let them go up to some one Bhikkhu, and arrange their robes over one shoulder, and, sitting down on their heels, let them stretch forth their joined palms, and thus address him : "The Bhikkhunī-saṃgha salutes the feet of the Bhikkhu-saṃgha, and requests permission to come for the purpose of the Exhortation being held ; may that be granted, they say, to the Bhikkhunī-saṃgha."

'Then he who is entrusted with the recitation of the Pātimokkha is to ask : "Is there any Bhikkhu who has been appointed to hold the Exhortation of the Bhikkhunis?"

'If a Bhikkhu has been appointed thereto, the reciter of the Pātimokkha is to say : "Such and such a Bhikkhu has been appointed to hold Exhortation to the Bhikkhunis. Let the Bhikkhunī-saṃgha come to him accordingly."

'If no Bhikkhu has been appointed thereto, the reciter of the Pātimokkha is to say : "Which of the venerable ones is able to hold Exhortation to the Bhikkhuns?" If any one is able to do so, and is possessed of the eight qualifications¹, he is to appoint him thereto, and is to say: "Such and such a Bhikkhu is appointed to hold Exhortation to the Bhikkhuns. Let the Bhikkhuns-saṃgha come to him."

'If no one is able to do so, the reciter of the Pātimokkha is to say: "There is no Bhikkhu appointed to hold Exhortation to the Bhikkhuns. May the Bhikkhuns-saṃgha obtain its desire in peace²."'

5. Now at that time Bhikkhus did not accept the (office of holding) Exhortation. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'The Exhortation is not, O Bhikkhus, to be declined. Whosoever shall not accept it, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu was stupid. To him the Bhikkhuns went, and said: 'Sir, please to accept the (duty of holding) Exhortation.'

'I, sister, am stupid. How can I accept the Exhortation?'

'You should take it, Sir; for thus has it been laid down by the Blessed One: "Bhikkhus are to accept the (duty of holding) Exhortation to the Bhikkhuns."'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, all the rest, save the stupid, to accept the Exhortation.'

[The same repeated of a sick Bhikkhu, and a

¹ These are given at length in the Sutta Vibhaṅga, Pāṭiṭṭiya XXI, 2, 1.

² Pāsādikena sampādetu, on which Buddhaghosa has no note. Perhaps 'by means of faith' would be a better rendering.

Bhikkhu on a journey. The same case put of a Bhikkhu living in the jungle. The decision is,]

‘I allow a Bhikkhu living in the jungle, O Bhikkhus, to accept the Exhortation, and to appoint a time and place for the meeting¹, saying: “There will I perform it.”’

Now at that time Bhikkhus accepted the Exhortation, but did not perform it. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘The Exhortation, O Bhikkhus, is not to be neglected. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

Now at that time Bhikkhunts did not attend at the place appointed. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhunt is not, O Bhikkhus, to omit attending at the place appointed. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

10.

1. Now at that time Bhikkhunts wore long girdles, and out of them they arranged fringes². The people murmured, were indignant, and complained, saying: ‘As the women who are still enjoying the pleasures of the world do!’

¹ On samketam, see our note above on Mahāvagga VIII, 23, 3.

² Pāsuke namentiti gihidārikāyo viya ghanapaṭṭakena kāya-bandhanena pāsuke namanatthāya bandhanti, says Buddhaghosa. Pāsuka is probably equal to the Sanskrit pārsvaka, and means a fringe arranged round the body, as shown in Plate LI of Cunningham’s ‘Bharhut Tope,’ being so called from the rib-like arrangement of the strings or cloth or other substance of which it was made. On corresponding girdles worn by men and forbidden to Bhikkhus, see Kullavagga V, 29, 2.

‘A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to wear a long girdle. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow a Bhikkhunī, O Bhikkhus, a girdle that will go once round the body¹, and fringes are not to be arranged in it. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

Now at that time Bhikkhunis arranged fringes in cloth of bambū fibre², or in leather, or in white cotton cloth³, or in plaited cotton cloth⁴, or in fringed cotton cloth⁵, or in white or in plaited or in fringed kola cloth⁶, or in plaits or fringes made of thread. The people murmured, were indignant, and complained, saying: ‘As the women who are still enjoying the pleasures of the world do!’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to wear any of these things. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

2. Now at that time Bhikkhunis had their backs scrubbed with the steak-bone of an ox, or slapped with the jaw-bone of an ox; and had their fore-arms⁷, ¹ Ekapariyākatan ti ekavāram parikkhipanakam, says the Samanta Pāsādikā.

² Vilivena pattenāti (sic) saṇheti veḷuviḷvehi (sic) katapaḷḷena.

³ Dussapaḷḷenāti setavatthapaḷḷena.

⁴ Dussaveniyāti dussena kataveniyā.

⁵ Dussapaḷḷiyāti dussena katapaḷḷiyā.

⁶ Kolapaḷḷādisu kolakāvāsam kolan ti veditabbam.

⁷ Hattham koḷḷāpentīti aggam bāham koḷḷāpetvā morapat-tādīhi kīttakam karonti, says Buddhaghosa. The meaning is not clear. No. 10 of the tattoo marks figured on Plate LII of Cunningham’s ‘Bharhut Tope,’ referred to in the note on the next section, is a representation of a peacock’s feathers. On aḷḷilla, see Buddhaghosa’s note at p. 327 of the text. Compare the prohibition of the use by Bhikkhus of back-scratchers and other like things (Kulavagga V, 1, 1) connected with shampooing or luxurious bathing.

and the backs of their hands¹, and their calves², and the upper part of their feet³, and their thighs, and their faces, and their gums, so slapped. The people murmured, were indignant, and complained, saying: 'As the women who are still enjoying the pleasures of the world do!'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to [do any of these things]. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

3. Now at that time the K/abbaggiya Bhikkhuns [&c., down to]

'A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to anoint her face, nor to rub ointments on to her face⁴, nor to put chunam on to her face, nor to smear red arsenic on to her face, nor to paint her body, nor to paint her face, nor to paint her body and face. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

4. [Similar paragraph concluding,]

'A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to make (tattoo marks) by the corners of her eyes⁵, or on her cheeks⁶, nor to peep out of window⁷, nor to stand in the

¹ Hattha-kokkhan ti piṭṭhi-hattham.

² Pādan ti gaṅgham.

³ Pāda-kokkhan ti piṭṭhi-pādam.

⁴ This paragraph has already occurred above, V, 2, 5 of the Bhikkhus.

⁵ These two injunctions are found also in the 90th and 91st Bhikkhunī Pāṭittiyas.

⁶ Avaṅgam karontīti avanga-dese adhomukham lekham karonti (B.). Avaṅga=Sanskrit apāṅga.

⁷ Visesakam karontīti ganda-padese vikītra-saṇhānam visesakam karonti (B.). A number of tattoo marks on the cheeks are figured in Plate LII of Cunningham's 'Bharhut Tope.'

⁸ Olokontīti vātapānam vivaritvā vīthim olokonti (B.).

light (of a half-opened door)¹, nor to have dances performed, nor to keep courtesans, nor to keep a tavern, nor to keep a slaughter-house, nor to open a shop, nor to practise usury, nor to supply men slaves or women slaves, or men servants or maid servants, or animals, nor to carry on the business of florist and seedsman², nor to carry the razor case³.

[Similar paragraph concluding,]

'A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to wear robes that are all of a blue, light yellow, crimson, black, brownish-yellow, or dark yellow colour : nor to wear robes with skirts to them which are not made of torn pieces of cloth, or are long, or have flowers worked on them, or cobras' hoods; nor to wear jackets, nor dresses made of the fibre of the Tīrītaka plant⁴. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

11.

1. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhunī, when on her death-bed, said: 'After I am gone, let my set of necessities⁵ belong to the Samgha.' Then the

¹ Sâloke tiṭṭhantīti dvārom vivaritvā upaddha-kāyam dassentiyo tiṭṭhanti (B.). Compare Theri-gāthā 73.

² Harītaka-pannikam pakinantīti harītakañ k'eva panninīka pakinanti, pakinnakāpanam pasārentīti vuttam hoti (B.). Compare pannika-upāsako in the Gātaka I, 411 = II, 180.

³ Namatakam dhāreti. See V, 27, 3, and our note above on V, 11, 1. The expression evidently means here 'to be a barber.'

⁴ This paragraph has already occurred above, in respect to the Bhikkhus (Mahāvagga VIII, 29), where see our notes on the various items.

⁵ Parikkhāro; that is, the eight things over which a member

Bhikkhus and the Bhikkhunts disputed as to it, saying: 'It belongs to us; it belongs to us.'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'If, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhuni, or a novice under training to become one (a Sikkhamânâ), when on her death-bed, should say: "After I am gone, let my set of necessities belong to the Samgha," then it is the Bhikkhuni-samgha it belongs to; the Bhikkhu-samgha is not the owner thereof. If a Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, or a novice under training to become one (a Sâmaṇera), when on his death-bed, should say: "After I am gone, let my set of necessities become the property of the Samgha," then it is the Bhikkhu-samgha it belongs to; the Bhikkhuni-samgha is not the owner thereof¹.'

12.

1. Now at that time a certain woman, who had formerly belonged to the clan of the Mallas², had entered the Order of the Bhikkhunts. She, seeing a weakly Bhikkhu on the road, struck up against him with the edge of her shoulder, and knocked him over. The Bhikkhus murmured, were indignant, and complained, saying: 'How can a Bhikkhuni assault a Bhikkhu?'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'A Bhikkhuni is not, O Bhikkhus, to assault a of the Buddhist Order was allowed proprietary rights—the three robes, the alms-bowl, razor, needle, girdle, and water-strainer.

¹ By the rule laid down in the Mahāvagga VIII, 27, the set of robes and the bowl are to be assigned by the Samgha to those that waited on the sick—at least in the case of Bhikkhus,—and the analogy would doubtless hold good of the Bhikkhunīs also.

² Well known as wrestlers.

Bhikkhu. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I prescribe that a Bhikkhunta, O Bhikkhus, on seeing a Bhikkhu, should get out of the way when still at a distance, and make room for him.'

13.

1. Now at that time a certain woman, while her husband was on a journey, became with child by a paramour. She had a premature delivery, and asked a Bhikkhunta, a confederate of hers, to carry away the foetus in her bowl. And that Bhikkhunta put it into her bowl, and, covering it over with her upper robe, went away.

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhu, who was on an alms-pilgrimage, had made a vow not to partake of the first food given to him until he had already given of it either to a Bhikkhu or to a Bhikkhunta. On seeing the Bhikkhunta, that Bhikkhu said: 'Come, sister! take some food.'

'No thank you, Sir.'

[And a second and a third time the Bhikkhu made the same request, and received the same reply. Then he said,]

'Sister! I have made a vow not to partake myself of the first food given to me until I have already given of it either to a Bhikkhu or to a Bhikkhunta. Come, sister! take the food.'

Then that Bhikkhunta, being so pressed by the Bhikkhu, pulled out her bowl, and showed him what was inside of it. And the Bhikkhu was indignant, and annoyed, and remonstrated, saying: 'How can you do such a thing?' And he told the Bhikkhus, and they were indignant, &c., and told the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhant is not, O Bhikkhus, to carry away a foetus in her bowl. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow a Bhikkhant, O Bhikkhus, on seeing a Bhikkhu, to pull out her bowl, and show it to him.’

The following short section will scarcely bear translating into modern English.

15.

1. Now at that time the people gave food to the Bhikkhus, and the Bhikkhus gave to the Bhikkhants. The people murmured, were indignant, and complained, saying: ‘How can their reverences give away to others what was given for them to have—as if we did not know how to give gifts?’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, is not to give away to others what was given for them themselves to have. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

Now at that time the Bhikkhus had come into the possession of some (meat for) food. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to give it to the Samgha.’

Too much came into their possession.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to give away that which was given to special individuals (and to keep that which had come into the possession of the Samgha as a whole¹).’

¹ Puggalikam dātum. On this phrase compare the similar one below at X, 24. Buddhaghosa has no note either here or there.

Now at that time food, which had been stored up for the Bhikkhus, had come into their possession.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow food that has been stored up to be enjoyed by the Bhikkhuns after they have had it given over to them by the Bhikkhus.’

2. [The same repeated, reading Bhikkhuni for Bhikkhu, and vice versâ.]

16.

1. Now at that time the Bhikkhus had come into the possession of some bedding, and the Bhikkhuns had none. The Bhikkhuns sent a messenger to the Bhikkhus, saying: ‘It would be well if their reverences the Bhikkhus would give us some bedding on loan¹.’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to give bedding to the Bhikkhuns on loan.’

2. Now at that time Bhikkhuns, in their courses, sat down or lay down on stuffed bedsteads and chairs, and the stuffing was soiled with blood.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhuni is not, O Bhikkhus, to sit down or lie down on a stuffed bedstead or chair. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow the use, O Bhikkhus, of an indoor’s robe².’

The indoor’s robe got soiled.

¹ Tāvakālikam. See the passages quoted in our note above on Kullavagga VI, 18.

² Āvasatha-kīvaram. See the Old Commentary on this word as occurring in the 47th Bhikkhuni Pāṭittiya.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, the use of a thigh-cloth (a cloth to reach nearly down to the knee¹).’

The thigh-cloth slipped down.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow it, O Bhikkhus, to be fastened by a thread to be tied round the thigh.’

The thread broke.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a loin-cloth, and a string going round the hips (to keep it up)².’

Now at that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhunis used to wear the hip-string always. The people murmured, &c., saying: ‘Like the women who still enjoy the pleasures of the world!’ They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to wear a hip-string for constant use³. I allow its use to one who is in her courses.’

¹ Âni-kolakam. Buddhaghosa has no note on this. Âni must be here ‘that part of the leg immediately above the knee, the front of the thigh.’ Compare Böhrling-Roth s. v. Nö. 2.

² Samvelliyaṃ kaṭi-suttakam. The samvelliyaṃ is the ordinary undress as worn for the sake of decency, even now, by a labourer working in muddy paddy fields, or at any severe task. It is a wedge-shaped strip of cotton cloth about a foot and a half long, about five inches wide at one end, and tapering down to one inch in width at the other. The broad end is fixed on to a string going round the waist (kaṭi-suttakam), and hangs down, when put on, in front of the legs. When worn under other clothes, it remains so; but when the other clothes are taken off for work the narrow end is passed under the body between the legs, and twisted round the hip-string behind (at the small of the back) so as to keep it fast. Its use is forbidden to Bhikkhus at V, 29, 5, where Buddhaghosa says, ‘Such as wrestlers and labourers wear.’

³ Its use is also forbidden to Bhikkhus (above, Kullavagga V, 2, 1).

17.

1. Now at that time there were found among the Bhikkhunis some who were [deformed in one or other of eleven ways]¹.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that a woman on whom the upasampadā initiation is being conferred, is to be questioned as touching the four-and-twenty Disqualifications². And thus, O Bhikkhus, is she to be questioned :

(1-11) “Have you any one or other of the eleven deformities [each repeated as above]?”

(12-16) “Have you any of the following diseases—leprosy, boils, dry leprosy, consumption, or fits?”

(17) “Are you a human being³?”

(18) “Are you a female?”

(19) “Are you a free woman?”

(20) “Are you free from debts?”

(21) “Are you not in the king’s service?”

(22) “Have your father and mother given their consent?”

(23) “Are you full twenty years of age?”

(24) “Are you duly provided with robes and alms-bowl?”

“What is your name?”

. ¹ Here follow a number of abnormities, deformities, or diseases, all of which have reference to the womb or its accessories. Some of them are unintelligible to us. Compare the corresponding section in respect to Bhikkhus at Mahāvagga I, 68.

² Of these twenty-four, eleven are the deformities just referred to, and the rest are the same as those for Bhikkhus at Mahāvagga I, 76. The number of questions is, in fact, twenty-six, but the last two do not refer to Disqualifications.

³ For the reason of this, see Mahāvagga I, 63.

“What is the name of your proposer¹?”

2. Now at that time Bhikkhus put the questions as touching the Disqualifications to Bhikkhuns², and they who were seeking after the upasampadâ initiation became disconcerted and perplexed, and were unable to answer.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that initiation is to be conferred in the Bhikkhu-saṃgha upon a Bhikkhunī who has been initiated on the one side in the Bhikkhunī-saṃgha, and has there cleared herself (from the Disqualifications).’

Now at that time the Bhikkhunis questioned those who desired to receive the upasampadâ initiation about the Disqualifications, without having had them instructed beforehand (how to answer). The persons who desired to be ordained became disconcerted and perplexed, and were not able to answer³.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you first instruct the women about to be initiated (how to answer), and that you then question them as to the Disqualifications.’

Then they instructed the candidates in the midst of the assembly, and they still became disconcerted, and could not answer.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

¹ Pavattinī; corresponding to upagghāya in the case of Bhikkhus.

² This is in accordance with the rule laid down in X, 2, 2, that Bhikkhus, and not Bhikkhunis, are to confer the upasampadâ.

³ This paragraph is word for word the same as Mahāvagga I, 76, 2 of the Bhikkhus.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that they be instructed aside, and then questioned in the midst of the assembly.

‘And thus, O Bhikkhus, ought they to be instructed:—First they ought to be made to choose an instructor¹; when they have chosen an instructor their robes and bowl must be shown to them: “This is your alms-bowl, this is your waist-cloth, this is your upper garment, this is your under garment, this is your vest, this is your bathing dress². Go and stand in such and such a place.”’

3. Ignorant and incompetent (Bhikkhunis) instructed them, and they became disconcerted, perplexed, and unable to answer.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘They are not to be instructed, O Bhikkhus, by unlearned, incompetent Bhikkhunis. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that they be instructed by learned and competent Bhikkhunis.’

4. Bhikkhunis not appointed (to the office of doing so) instructed them.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, instruct them without having been appointed thereto. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that a Bhikkhuni appointed to the office instruct them.

¹ Upaggham. It should be observed that this expression is found only here, and in the corresponding section for the Bhikkhus, at Mahāvagga I, 76, 3. Elsewhere, throughout, Upagghāya is the form used for Bhikkhus, and Pavattinī for Bhikkhunis. The word is probably here also, as in the Mahāvagga I, 76, 3, to be taken as a masculine.

² These last two are omitted in the corresponding section for the Bhikkhus, Mahāvagga I, 76, 3. On Samkaḍḍhikam, see the note of the Old Commentator on the 96th Bhikkhunī Pāṭittiya, and on Udaka-sāṭikā, the same on the 22nd Bhikkhunī Pāṭittiya.

‘And thus, O Bhikkhus, ought she to be appointed—one may either appoint herself, or one may be appointed by another. And how is a Bhikkhuni to appoint herself? Let a learned, competent Bhikkhuni lay the following motion (ñatti) before the Samgha: “Let the Samgha, reverend Ladies, hear me. N. N. desires to receive the upasampadā initiation from the venerable lady, M. M. If it seem meet to the Samgha, I will instruct N. N.” Thus may a Bhikkhuni appoint herself.

‘And how is a Bhikkhuni to be appointed by another? Let a learned, competent Bhikkhuni lay the following resolution before the Samgha: “Let the Samgha, reverend Ladies, hear me. N. N. desires to receive the upasampadā initiation from the venerable lady, M. M. If it seem meet to the Samgha, let A. A. instruct N. N.” Thus may one Bhikkhuni be appointed by another.

5. ‘Then let that so appointed Bhikkhuni go to the person who is seeking to be initiated, and thus address her: “Listen to me, N. N. This is the time for you to speak the truth, to declare that which is. When you are asked about what has happened before the Samgha, you ought, if it is so, to answer: “That is so;” if it is not so, to answer: “That is not so.” Be not perplexed, be not disconcerted. I shall ask you thus: “Are you deformed (&c., down to the end of the twenty-six questions in § 1).”’

(After the instruction was over, the instructor and the candidate) returned together to the assembly.

‘They are not to return together. Let the instructor return first, and lay the following resolution before the Samgha: “Let the Samgha, reverend Ladies, hear me. N. N. desires to receive the upasampadā initiation from the venerable lady, M. M.; and she has been instructed by me. If it seem meet to the Samgha, let N. N. come forward.” Then let her be told to come forward. Then let her be told to adjust her upper robe over one shoulder only, to bow down before the Bhikkhunts, to sit down on her heels, and stretching forth her joined palms, to ask for the upasampadā initiation, saying: “I ask the Samgha, reverend Ladies, for initiation. May the Samgha, reverend Ladies, raise me up (out of the worldly life), having pity on me.” And a second and a third time is she to repeat that request.

6. ‘Then let a learned and competent Bhikkhunt lay the following resolution before the Samgha: “Let the Samgha, reverend Ladies, hear me. This person, N. N., desires to receive the upasampadā initiation from M. M.; and she has been instructed by me. If it seem meet to the Samgha, let me question N. N. as touching the Disqualifications. Listen to me, N. N. [as before, down to the end of the questions].”

7. ‘Then let a learned and competent Bhikkhunt lay the following motion before the Samgha: “Let the Samgha, reverend Ladies, hear me. This person, N. N., desires to receive the upasampadā initiation from the venerable lady, M. M. She is free from the Disqualifications, and is duly provided with alms-bowl and robes. This person, N. N., asks the Samgha for the upasampadā initiation, the venerable lady, M. M., being her proposer. If it seem meet to the Samgha, let the Samgha receive N. N., the venerable lady, M. M., being her proposer. That, then, is the motion.

“Let the Samgha, venerable Ladies, hear me. N. N. desires to receive the upasampadâ, the lady, M. M., being her proposer. The Samgha confers the upasampadâ upon N. N., the lady, M. M., being her proposer. Whosoever of the venerable ones agrees thereto, let her keep silence; whosoever agrees not thereto, let her speak. A second time I say the same thing.” [The whole of this paragraph repeated.] And a third time I say the same thing. [Paragraph repeated.]

‘The Samgha has conferred the upasampadâ upon N. N., the lady, M. M., being her proposer. The Samgha agrees thereto. Therefore is it silent. Thus do I understand.’

8. ‘Then, further, let her be taken before the Bhikkhu-samgha, and there told to arrange her robe over one shoulder only, to bow down before the Bhikkhus, and, sitting down on her heels, to stretch forth her joined palms, and say: “I, Sirs, N. N., who, being desirous of receiving the upasampadâ initiation from M. M., have received it on the one side (of the Samgha, from the Bhikkhunts), and have there been declared free (from the Disqualifications), do hereby ask the Samgha for the upasampadâ.” [The rest of the proceedings are the same as before the Bhikkhunī-samgha.] “May the Samgha, reverend Sirs, raise me up (out of the worldly life), having pity on me.” And a second time do I hereby ask [&c., repeated]. And a third time do I hereby ask [the same repeated].

[The rest of the proceedings are the same as in the last sections 6 and 7, putting 'Bhikkhu' for 'Bhikkhunī,' and 'reverend Sirs' for 'reverend Ladies.']

'Then, further, let them (the Bhikkhus) measure the shadow, tell (the newly-received Bhikkhunī) what season and what date it is, tell her what part of the day it is, tell her the whole formula¹, and tell the Bhikkhunis: "You are to teach her what are the three things allowed², and what are the eight things interdicted³."'

18.

Now at that time Bhikkhunis wasted their time in the dining-hall, doubting as to which should take which seat.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that the senior eight Bhikkhunis shall take their seats according to seniority, and the rest as they happen to come in.'

Now at that time Bhikkhunis, on the ground that the Blessed One had so prescribed, let the eight senior Bhikkhunis in every other place take exclusive possession (of the first eight seats), and the rest arranged themselves as they came in.

¹ Samgāṭi. On the meaning of this curious use of the word, see our note on the corresponding section for the Bhikkhus (Mahāvagga I, 77).

² The three Nissayas, which are doubtless the same as the 1st, 2nd, and 4th of the four Resources mentioned in the corresponding paragraph for Bhikkhus (Mahāvagga I, 77). The third is forbidden to Bhikkhunis, below, X, 23.

³ Aṭṭha akaraṇiyāni. These must bear the same relation to the eight Bhikkhunī Pārāgikas as the four Interdicts in the corresponding paragraph for the Bhikkhus (Mahāvagga I, 78) do to the four Bhikkhu Pārāgikas.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, as above, only in the case of the dining-hall. Everywhere else let there be no exclusive right to seats by seniority.’

19.

1. Now at that time the Bhikkhuns did not hold Pavâranâ.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhunî is not, O Bhikkhus, to omit holding Pavâranâ. Whosoever does so, shall be dealt with according to law¹.’

Now at that time the Bhikkhuns held Pavâranâ by themselves, and not in the Bhikkhu-saṃgha.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhunî is not, O Bhikkhus, to hold Pavâranâ apart, and not in the Bhikkhu-saṃgha. Whosoever does so, shall be dealt with according to law².’

Now at that time Bhikkhuns holding Pavâranâ with the Bhikkhus only, and not apart by themselves, disturbed (the meeting of the Bhikkhu-saṃgha).

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhunî is not, O Bhikkhus, to hold Pavâranâ with the Bhikkhu-saṃgha only. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkata².’

Now at that time Bhikkhuns spent all their time

¹ The 57th Bhikkhunî Pâkittiya, which is the same as the 4th Garudhamma above, X, 1, 4.

² See last note.

before noon holding Pavāraṇā [and so had no time left for the early meal].

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that they hold Pavāraṇā in the afternoon.’

When holding Pavāraṇā in the afternoon, they had not time enough [to conclude their own ceremony that day, and take part in that of the Bhikkhus].

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow them, O Bhikkhus, to hold their own Pavāraṇā one day, and that with the Bhikkhus the next day.’

2. Now at that time the whole of the Bhikkhuni-saṃgha declaring, each one for herself, her Pavāraṇā before the Bhikkhu-saṃgha, disturbed (the proceedings).

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that some one learned and competent Bhikkhuni be deputed to make the Pavāraṇā invitation on behalf of the Bhikkhuni-saṃgha before the Bhikkhu-saṃgha. And thus, O Bhikkhus, is she to be deputed :

“First, the Bhikkhuni is to be asked (whether she be willing to serve). When that has been done, a learned and discreet Bhikkhuni is to lay this motion before the Saṃgha : Let the Saṃgha, venerable Ladies, hear me. If it seem meet to the Saṃgha, let the Saṃgha depute N. N. to make the Pavāraṇā invitation on behalf of the Bhikkhuni-saṃgha before the Bhikkhu-saṃgha. That is the motion.

“Let the Saṃgha, venerable Ladies, hear me. The Saṃgha deposes N. N. to make the Pavāraṇā invitation on behalf of the Bhikkhuni-saṃgha before the Bhikkhu-saṃgha. Whosoever of the venerable ones approves thereof, let her keep silence. Who-soever approves not thereof, let her speak.

“ N. N. is deputed by the Samgha to make the Pavâranâ invitation on behalf of the Bhikkhuni-samgha before the Bhikkhu-samgha. The Samgha approves thereof. Therefore is it silent. Thus do I understand.”

3. ‘When that Bhikkhuni has been deputed, she, accompanied by the Bhikkhuni-samgha, is to go before the Bhikkhu-samgha, arrange her robe over one shoulder, bow down before the Bhikkhus, and sitting on her heels, to stretch forth her joined palms, and say: “The Bhikkhuni-samgha invites the Bhikkhu-samgha (to point out to them any faults they may have committed) in respect of things heard, or seen, or suspected. May the Bhikkhu-samgha speak to the Bhikkhuni-samgha (if there be anything wherein they have offended) out of compassion toward them. Then will they, if they perceive the offence, confess the same. And a second time the Bhikkhuni-samgha [the whole repeated]. And a third time [the whole repeated]¹.”

20.

Now at that time Bhikkhunis inhibited Bhikkhus from the Upasatha, or from the Pavâranâ, or from the Exhortation, or issued commands to them, or asked them to give them leave to rebuke them, or warned them of some offence they supposed they were committing, or called upon them to remember whether or not they had committed an offence¹.

¹ This, of course, is the same form that each separate member of the Order uses before his or her own Samgha. Compare our notes above on the corresponding passage in the Mahāvagga, IV, 1, 4.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to perform any one of these official acts towards a Bhikkhu. Should she do so, the act is itself invalid, and she is guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

Now at that time Bhikkhus inhibited Bhikkhunis [&c., as before, giving the contrary decision].

21.

Now at that time the Kāḍḍaggiya Bhikkhunis had themselves carried in vehicles to which cows were yoked with a bull between them², or bulls were yoked with a cow between them. People were annoyed, murmured, and became indignant, saying: ‘That is what is done at the feast of the Gaṅgā, and the Maḥi³.’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to be carried in a vehicle. Whosoever does so, shall be dealt with according to law⁴.’

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhunī was sick, and unable to go on foot.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow the use of a carriage, O Bhikkhus, to a sick (Bhikkhunī)⁴.’

¹ On all these official acts of a Bhikkhunī, see the notes above on Kullavagga I, 5.

² On all these expressions, see our notes above at Mahāvagga V, 9, 3, where they recur word for word.

³ This is the 85th Bhikkhunī Pāṭittiya.

⁴ This is repeated from the 85th Bhikkhunī Pāṭittiya. The corresponding permission is given to Bhikkhus by Mahāvagga V, 10, 2.

Now the Bhikkhuns thought: 'Should the carts be yoked with cows or bulls?'

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, a cart yoked with cows or bulls, or drawn by hand¹.'

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhun was much distressed by the jolting of the cart.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'I allow, O Bhikkhus, the use of a litter or sedan chair².'

22.

1. Now at that time a courtesan named *Addhakâsî*³ had adopted the religious life under the Bhikkhuns, and she wanted to go to Sâvatthi to be received as full member of the Order (to receive the upasampadâ initiation) by the Blessed One himself. And men of abandoned life heard of it, and beset the road. And when Addhakâsî, the courtesan, heard that they had done so, she sent a messenger to the Blessed One, saying: 'I want to receive the upasampadâ initiation: what course of action should I adopt?'

Then the Blessed One, in that connection, addressed the Bhikkhus, after delivering a religious discourse⁴, and said: 'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to confer the upasampadâ initiation (upon Bhikkhuns) even by a messenger⁵.'

¹ Hattha-vaṭṭakam. See the note on Mahāvagga V, 10, 3.

² So also for Bhikkhus at Mahāvagga V, 10, 3.

³ On the meaning of this nickname or epithet, compare our note on Mahāvagga VIII, 2 (and see also VIII, 1, 1, and 3).

⁴ As set out in Kullavagga I, 1; Mahāvagga I, 35, 6.

⁵ The ordinary rule, no doubt, required, as in the case of Bhik-

2. They conferred it by (sending) a Bhikkhu as the messenger.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'You are not, O Bhikkhus, to confer the upasampadā initiation on a Bhikkhunī by sending a Bhikkhu as messenger. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.'

They conferred it by sending a female student a male novice a female novice an ignorant, incompetent Bhikkhunī, as the messenger.

[Similar decision in each case.]

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to confer the upasampadā initiation by sending a learned, competent Bhikkhunī as a messenger.'

3. 'That Bhikkhunī messenger is to go before the Saṃgha, and arranging her robe over one shoulder, is to bow down before the Saṃgha, and sitting on her heels, to stretch forth her joined palms, and say: "N. N., having been desirous of receiving the upasampadā initiation with the lady, M. M. (as her proposer), has received it on the one hand from the Bhikkhunī-saṃgha, and has there been declared free (from the Disqualifications)¹. But she is prevented by some danger or other from coming before the Saṃgha (to have her initiation confirmed)². N. N. asks the Saṃgha for initiation. Let the Saṃgha raise her up (out of the worldly life) out of compassion upon her.' [To be said thrice.]

khus, a Saṃgha of not less than ten persons (Mahāvagga I, 31, 2, and IX, 4, 1), each of ten years standing or more (Mahāvagga I, 31, 8). But even for Bhikkhus there were, under special circumstances, certain relaxations of this rule (Mahāvagga V, 13, 11).

¹ See above, X, 17, 1, for the twenty-four Disqualifications.

² Compare above, X, 1, 4, and X, 17.

‘ Then let a learned, competent Bhikkhu lay the motion before the Samgha. “ Let the Samgha, venerable Sirs, hear me. N. N., having been desirous [statement of fact, as before]. If it seem meet to the Samgha, let the Samgha confer the upasampadâ initiation upon N. N., M. M. being her proposer. That is the motion.

“ Let the Samgha, venerable Sirs, hear me. N. N., [statement of fact, as before]. The Samgha hereby confers the upasampadâ initiation upon N. N., M. M. being her proposer. Whosoever of the venerable ones approves thereof, let him keep silence. Whosoever approves not thereof, let him speak. And a second time I say the same thing. N. N., (&c., down to) let him speak. And a third time I say the same thing. N. N., (&c., down to) let him speak.

“ The Samgha has hereby conferred the upasampadâ initiation upon N. N., M. M. being her proposer. The Samgha approves thereof. Therefore is it silent. Thus do I understand.”’

‘ Then, further, let them (the Bhikkhus) measure the shadow, tell (the messenger that she may tell the newly-received Bhikkhuni) what season and what date it is, tell her what part of the day it is, tell her the whole formula ; and tell the Bhikkhunis to teach her what are the three things allowed, and what are the eight things interdicted¹.’

23.

Now at that time Bhikkhunis dwelt in the forest, and men of abandoned life violated them.

¹ See above, X, 17, 8.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to adopt the forest life. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa¹.’

24.

1. Now at that time a certain lay disciple had given to the Bhikkhunī-saṃgha a servant’s lodge² (to live in).

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, the use of a stable.’

It did not satisfy (their wants)³. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a separate residence for Bhikkhunts.’

That did not satisfy their wants. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, building operations⁴ (to be carried on for the benefit of Bhikkhunts).’

¹ Compare Mahāvagga I, 30, 4, and I, 77, and our note above on X, 17, 8.

² This word has already occurred, in a list of various buildings, at Mahāvagga III, 5, 9, where we have rendered it stable. Budhaghosa says here uddositan (MS. udosita) ti bhandā-sālā, and as at Mahāvagga I, 61, assa-bhandā and hatthi-bhandā are evidently grooms attending on horses or elephants (compare Gāṭaka I, 62, 3), bhandā-sālā may mean a servant’s hall for the use of that particular class of servants. A lawsuit about an uddosita forms the Introductory Story to the 1st Bhikkhunī Saṃghādisesa, but the passage throws no light on the special meaning of the term. See also the Sutta-vibhaṅga on Nissaggiya II, 3, 5, and Khudda Sikkhā III, 19. The Sanskrit equivalent might perhaps be udavasita, if the reading of the Samanta Pāsādikā had any traditional value; but the dd is not doubtful in the MSS. of the text at any of the passages quoted. Assa-sālā is the word for stable at Gāṭaka I, 62, 3.

³ Na sammati. See the note on V, 13, 3.

⁴ Navakammam. See the note above at V, 13, 3.

That did not satisfy their wants. They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow Bhikkhuns, O Bhikkhus, to assign certain places to live in to individual members of the Order¹.’

25.

1. Now at that time a certain woman who had already conceived, but did not know it, was received into the Order among the Bhikkhuns. Afterwards her womb moved within her². Then that Bhikkhunī thought: ‘How shall I now conduct myself towards this child?’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow her, O Bhikkhus, to bring it up till it have attained to years of discretion³.’

Then the Bhikkhunī thought: ‘It is not permissible for me to live alone, nor for any other Bhikkhunī to live with a male child. What course ought I to pursue?’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow the Bhikkhuns, O Bhikkhus, to depute any one Bhikkhunī, and give her as a companion to that (first-mentioned) Bhikkhunī.’

¹ Puggalikam kâṭum. See the note above on X, 15, 1.

² There is a touching story founded on a similar incident which is given as the Introductory Story to No. 12 of the Gāṭakas, translated in Rh. D.’s ‘Buddhist Birth Stories,’ pp. 199–205. By the 61st Bhikkhunī Pākittiya it is lawful or unlawful to initiate a pregnant woman according as she is unconscious or conscious of the fact of her conception.

³ Viññutam pāpunāti. That is, no doubt, to puberty. Compare the opening phrases of the Introductory Story referred to in the last note (Gāṭaka I, 231) and also Gāṭaka III, 437.

‘And thus, O Bhikkhus, is she to be appointed : First that Bhikkhunī ought to be asked (whether she be willing to undertake the duty). After she has been asked, a learned and competent Bhikkhunī ought to lay the motion before the Saṃgha, saying :

“Let the Saṃgha, venerable Ladies, hear me. If it seem meet to the Saṃgha, let the Saṃgha depute N. N. as a companion to M. M. That is the motion.

“Let the Saṃgha,”’ [&c., as usual, to the end of the Kammavâḍā.]

2. Then that companion Bhikkhunī thought : ‘Now how should I conduct myself towards this child ?’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe that the Bhikkhunis, O Bhikkhus, conduct themselves towards that child precisely as they would towards other men, save only as regards the sleeping under the same roof¹.’

3. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhunī, who had been guilty of a grievous offence, was living subject to the Mānatta penance². Then that Bhikkhunī thought : ‘It is not permissible for me to live alone, and it is not permissible for any other Bhikkhunī to live with me. What now ought I to do ?’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow the Bhikkhunis, O Bhikkhus, to depute any one Bhikkhunī, and to give her as a companion to that Bhikkhunī. And thus, O Bhikkhus, ought ¹ Sāgāram ; on which Buddhaghosa has no note.

² For what this implied, see Kullavagga II, 1, 2, and II, 6, 1, and compare the 5th Garudhamma above, X, 1, 4.

she to be deputed [&c., as in last section but one, down to the end of the Kammavâkâ].'

26.

1. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhuni first abandoned the precepts, and then threw off the robes¹. Afterwards she came back, and asked the Bhikkhunis to admit her into the Order again.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'A Bhikkhuni ought not, O Bhikkhus, to abandon the precepts. But by having thrown off the robes she is ipso facto incapable of being a Bhikkhuni.'

2. Now at that time a certain Bhikkhuni, though still wearing the orange-coloured robe, joined a sect of the Titthiyas. Afterwards she came back, and asked the Bhikkhunis to receive her into the Order again.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

'A Bhikkhuni, O Bhikkhus, who, when still wearing the orange-coloured robe, has gone over to the Titthiyas, is not to be received again².'

27.

1. Now at that time Bhikkhunis, fearing to offend, would not let men salute them, or cut their hair or nails, or dress their wounds.

¹ On the distinction between these two phrases, see the note on Mahāvagga II, 22, 3.

² For the similar rule in the case of Bhikkhus, see Mahāvagga I, 38, 1.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow them, O Bhikkhus, to permit those things.’

2. Now at that time Bhikkhunts, when sitting on a divan, allowed (other people thereon) to touch them with their heels.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to sit on a divan¹. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

Now at that time a certain Bhikkhunī was sick, and without using a divan she could not be at ease.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘I allow Bhikkhunts, O Bhikkhus, to use a half-divan².’

3. [Rule as to construction of privies³.]

4. Now at that time the Bhikkhunts used chunam at their baths.

People murmured, saying, ‘As the women in the world do!’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to use chunam at her bath. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow, O Bhikkhus, the use of clay and the red powder of rice husks⁴.’

¹ Pallaṅkam. Compare Mahāvagga V, 10, 4, 5; Kullavagga V, 37, VI, 8, VI, 14; and the 42nd Bhikkhunī Pāṭittiya.

² Aḍḍha-pallaṅkam. Probably a cushion, which only one person could use at a time.

³ Compare the Rules for the Bhikkhus, Kullavagga VIII, 9, 10, which we have also left untranslated. Buddhaghosa says here, Heṭṭhā-vivaṭe upariḷḷhanne ti ettha saṅge kūpo khato hoti upari pana padaramattam eva sabba-disāsu paññāyati evarūpe pi vaṭṭati.

⁴ Kukkusam. Buddhaghosa says here, Kukkusam mattikan

[Similar paragraph, ending]

‘A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to use scented clay at her bath¹. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow, O Bhikkhus, the use of common clay.’

Now at that time Bhikkhunis bathing together in the steam-bath room made a tumult.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘Bhikkhunis are not, O Bhikkhus, to bathe in a steam-bath. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

Now at that time Bhikkhunis bathing against the stream allowed the rush of water against them.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to bathe against the stream. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

Now at that time Bhikkhunis bathed in a place not a common bathing-place, and men of abandoned life violated them.

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

‘A Bhikkhunī is not, O Bhikkhus, to bathe at a place not a common bathing-place. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa.’

Now at that time Bhikkhunis bathed at a bathing-place used also by men. People murmured, were indignant, and complained, saying, ‘As those women do who are still living in the pleasures of the world¹.’

They told this matter to the Blessed One.

ti kundakañ k eva mattikañ ka. The use of these last two was allowed to Bhikkhus by Kullavagga VI, 3, 1, for building purposes.

¹ This is apparently covered by the 88th and 89th Bhikkhunī Pāṭikkhiya.

‘A Bhikkhū is not, O Bhikkhus, to bathe at a bathing-place used also by men. Whosoever does so, shall be guilty of a dukkaṭa. I allow, Bhikkhuns, O Bhikkhus, to bathe at a bathing-place used by women.’

End of the Third Portion for Recitation.

End of the Tenth Khandhaka, the Bhikkhū-Khandhaka.

ELEVENTH KHANDHAKA.

ON THE COUNCIL OF RĀGAGAHA.

1¹.

1. Now the venerable Mahā Kassapa addressed the Bhikkhus, and said: 'Once I was travelling along the road from Pāvā to Kusinārā with a great company of the Bhikkhus, with about five hundred Bhikkhus. And I left the high road and sat myself down at the foot of a certain tree.

'Just at that time a certain naked ascetic (āgīvaka), who had picked up a Mandārava² flower in Kusinārā, was coming along the road towards Pāvā. And I saw him coming in the distance, and on seeing I said to him:

"O, friend! surely thou knowest our Master?"

"Yea, friend, I know him. This day the Samāna Gotama has been dead a week. That is how I obtained this Mandārava flower."

'Then, Sirs, of those of the Bhikkhus who were not yet free from their passions, some stretched out

¹ The following section differs from the corresponding passage in the 'Book of the Great Decease' (VI, 36-41) in the very curious and instructive way pointed out by H. O. in the Introduction to his edition of the text, p. xxvi, on which see the remarks of Rh. D. at p. xiii of the General Introduction to his 'Buddhist Suttas.'

² This was a flower which was supposed to grow only in heaven, and its appearance on earth showed that the devas, on some special occasion, had been casting down heavenly flowers upon the earth.

their arms and wept; and some fell headlong on the ground; and some reeled to and fro in anguish at the thought: "Too soon has the Blessed One died! Too soon has the Happy One passed away! Too soon has the Light gone out in the world!"

'But those of the Bhikkhus who were free from the passions (the Arahats) bore their grief, collected and composed at the thought: "Impermanent are all component things. How is it possible [that they should not be dissolved]?"

'Then I, Sirs, spake thus to the Bhikkhus: "Enough, Sirs! Weep not, neither lament! Has not the Blessed One already declared to us that it is the very nature of all things near and dear unto us that we must divide ourselves from them, leave them, sever ourselves from them? How then, Sirs, can this be possible—that whereas anything whatever born, brought into being and organised, contains within itself the inherent necessity of dissolution—how then can this be possible that such a being should not be dissolved? No such condition can exist!"

'Then at that time¹, Sirs, one Subhadda, who had gone out from the world in his old age, was seated there in the company of Bhikkhus. And Subhadda, the late-received one, said to the Bhikkhus: "Enough, Sirs! Weep not, neither lament! We are well rid of the great Samāṇa. We used to be annoyed by being told, 'This beseems you, this beseems you not.' But now we shall be able to do whatever we like; and what we do not like, that we shall not have to do¹."

¹ In the 'Book of the Great Decease' the following speech comes before the preceding one.

‘Come, Sirs, let us chant together the Dhamma and the Vinaya before what is not Dhamma is spread abroad, and what is Dhamma is put aside; before what is not Vinaya is spread abroad, and what is Vinaya is put aside; before those who argue against the Dhamma become powerful, and those who hold to the Dhamma become weak; before those who argue against the Vinaya become powerful, and those who hold to the Vinaya become weak!’

2. ‘Let then the venerable Thera choose out Bhikkhus.’

Then the venerable Mahâ Kassapa chose out five hundred Arahats less one. And the Bhikkhus said to the venerable Mahâ Kassapa: ‘Lord, this venerable one, Ānanda, although he have not yet attained [to Nirvāṇa], yet is he incapable of falling into error through partiality, or malice, or stupidity, or fear, and thoroughly have the Dhamma and the Vinaya been learnt by him from the Blessed One himself. Therefore let our Lord choose the venerable Ānanda. And the venerable Mahâ Kassapa chose also the venerable Ānanda.’

3. Then it occurred to the Thera Bhikkhus: ‘In what place shall we now chant over together the Dhamma and the Vinaya?’ And it occurred to the Thera Bhikkhus: ‘In Râgagaha is alms plentiful, and there is abundance of lodging-places. What, now, if we were to spend the rainy season at Râgagaha, and chant the Dhamma and the Vinaya together there: and if no other Bhikkhus were to go up to Râgagaha for the rainy season¹?’

4. Then the venerable Mahâ Kassapa laid the

¹ This last was necessary, for if other Bhikkhus spent the Was at Râgagaha, either they must take part in the council, or its resolution before the Samgha: 'Let the venerable Samgha hear me. If the time seems meet to the Samgha, let the Samgha appoint that these five hundred Bhikkhus take up their residence during the rainy season at Râgagaha, to chant over together the Dhamma and the Vinaya, and that no other Bhikkhus go up to Râgagaha for the rainy season. This is the resolution. Let the venerable Samgha hear. The Samgha appoints accordingly. Whosoever of the venerable ones approves thereof, let him keep silence. Whosoever approves not thereof, let him speak. The Samgha has appointed accordingly. Therefore is it silent. Thus do I understand.'

5. So the Thera Bhikkhus went up to Râgagaha to chant over together the Dhamma and the Vinaya. And the Thera Bhikkhus thought: 'The Blessed One has spoken in praise of the repair of dilapidations. Let us, then, during the first month of the rainy season repair such dilapidations, and during the middle month let us chant over the Dhamma and the Vinaya together.' And during the first month they repaired dilapidation.

6. And the venerable Ânanda—thinking, 'Tomorrow is the assembly, now it beseems me not to go into the assembly while I am still only on the way (towards Arahatsip)'—spent the whole night with mind alert. And at the close of the night, intending to lie down, he inclined his body, but before his head reached the pillow, and while his feet were still far from the ground, in the interval he became decisions would have been invalid through its being incompletely constituted (want of vaggatta).

free from attachment to the world, and his heart was emancipated from the Âsavas (that is to say, from sensuality, individuality, delusion, and ignorance)¹.

7. And the venerable Mahâ Kassapa laid the resolution before the Samgha: 'If the time seem meet to the Samgha, I will question Upâli concerning the Vinaya.' And the venerable Upâli laid a resolution before the Samgha: 'Let the venerable Samgha hear me. If the time seems meet to the Samgha, I, when questioned by the venerable Mahâ Kassapa, will give reply.'

Then the venerable Mahâ Kassapa said to the venerable Upâli: 'Venerable Upâli, where was the first Pârâgika promulgated?'

'In Vesâlî, Sir.'

'Concerning whom was it spoken?'

'Concerning Sudinna, the son of Kalanda.'

'In regard to what matter?'

'Sexual intercourse.'

Thus did the venerable Mahâ Kassapa question the venerable Upâli as to the matter, as to the occasion, as to the individual concerned, as to the (principal) rule, as to the sub-rule², as to who would be guilty, and as to who would be innocent³, of the first Pârâgika.

¹ In other words, he became an Arahat. Some MSS. omit the clause about the feet.

² Anupaññatti. Turnour (Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, 1837, p. 19) translates this word, which is not in Childers, by 'the sequel or application of the exhortation.' We think the paññatti refers to the principal rule (as laid down in the Sutta Vibhaṅga at the close of I, 5, 11), and the anupaññatti to the additions made to it in the following sections.

³ This last clause doubtless refers to the closing words in the account given in the Sutta Vibhaṅga of each rule.

‘Again, venerable Upâli, where was the second Pârâgika promulgated?’

‘At Râgagaha, Sir.’

‘Concerning whom was it spoken?’

‘Dhaniya, the potter’s son.’

‘In regard to what matter?’

‘The taking of that which had not been given¹.’

Thus did the venerable Mahâ Kassapa question the venerable Upâli as to the matter, and as to the occasion, and as to the individual concerned, and as to the (principal) rule, and as to the sub-rule, and as to who would be guilty, and as to who would be innocent of the second Pârâgika.

‘Again, venerable Upâli, where was the third Pârâgika promulgated?’

‘At Vesâlî, Sir.’

‘Concerning whom was it spoken?’

‘A number of Bhikkhus.’

‘In regard to what matter?’

‘Human beings².’

Thus did the venerable Mahâ Kassapa question the venerable Upâli as to [all the particulars, as before] of the third Pârâgika.

‘Again, venerable Upâli, where was the fourth Pârâgika promulgated?’

‘At Vesâlî, Sir.’

‘Concerning whom was it spoken?’

‘The Bhikkhus dwelling on the banks of the Vaggumudâ river.’

‘In regard to what matter?’

¹ That is, ‘theft.’

² That is, murder or manslaughter. ‘The slaying of’ is to be understood.

‘Superhuman conditions.’

Thus did the venerable Mahā Kassapa question the venerable Upāli as to [all the particulars, as before] of the fourth Pārāgika. And in like manner did he question him through both the Vinayas¹; and as he was successively asked, so did Upāli make reply.

8. Then the venerable Mahā Kassapa laid a resolution before the Saṃgha: ‘Let the venerable Saṃgha hear me. If the time seems meet to the Saṃgha, I would question Ānanda concerning the Dhamma.’

And the venerable Ānanda laid a resolution before the Saṃgha: ‘Let the venerable Saṃgha hear me. If the time seems meet to the Saṃgha, I, as questioned by the venerable Mahā Kassapa, will give reply.’

And the venerable Mahā Kassapa said to the venerable Ānanda: ‘Where, venerable Ānanda, was the Brahmaṅgāla spoken?’

‘On the way, Sir, between Rāgagaha and Nalanda, at the royal rest-house at Ambalattikā².’

‘Concerning whom was it spoken?’

‘Suppiya, the wandering ascetic, and Brahmadatta, the young Brāhman.’

Thus did the venerable Mahā Kassapa question

¹ Ubhato-vinaye. That is, relating on the one hand to Bhikkhus, and on the other to Bhikkhunīs (not Sutta Vibhaṅga and Khandhakas). The Burmese MS. at Berlin reads ubhato-vibhaṅge, suggested possibly by Buddhaghosa’s expression in the corresponding part of his accounts of this Council at the commencement of the Sumaṅgala Vilāsinī and the Samanta Pāsādikā (see Turnour, loc. cit., and H. O., Vinaya III, 290.)

² In the text read rāgāgārake, as suggested in the notes at p. 329, and confirmed by the Sutta itself (ed. Grimblot).

the venerable Ânanda as to the occasion of the Brahmagâla, and as to the individuals concerning whom it was spoken.

‘And again, venerable Ânanda, where was the Sâmañña-phala spoken?’

‘At Râgagaha, Sir; in Givaka’s Mango Grove.’

‘And with whom was it spoken?’

‘With Agâtasattu, the son of the Vedeht.’

Thus did the venerable Mahâ Kassapa question the venerable Ânanda as to the occasion of the Sâmañña-phala, and as to the individual concerned. And in like manner did he question him through the five Nikâyas, and as he was successively asked, so did Ânanda make reply.

9. Then the venerable Ânanda spake thus to the Thera Bhikkhus: ‘The Blessed One, Sirs, at the time of his passing away, spake thus to me: “When I am gone, Ânanda, let the Samgha, if it should so wish, revoke all the lesser and minor precepts¹.”’

‘Did you then, venerable Ânanda, ask the Blessed One which were the lesser and minor precepts?’

‘No, Sirs.’

Some Theras then said that all the rules save the four Pârâgikas; others that all save those and the thirteen Samghâdisesas; others that all save those and the two Aniyatas; others that all save those and the thirty Nissaggiyas; others that all save those and the ninety-two Pâkittiyas; others that all save those and the four Pâidesaniyas were lesser and minor precepts.

Then the venerable Mahâ Kassapa laid a resolution before the Samgha: ‘Let the venerable

¹ ‘Book of the Great Decease,’ VI, 3.

Samgha hear me. There are certain of our precepts which relate to matters in which the laity are concerned. Now the laity know of us that "such and such things are proper for you Samanas who are Sakyaputtiyas, and such and such things are not." If we were to revoke the lesser and minor precepts, it will be said to us: "A set of precepts was laid down for his disciples by the Samana Gotama to endure until the smoke should rise from his funeral pyre¹. So long as their teacher remained with these men, so long did they train themselves in the precepts. Since their teacher has passed away from them, no longer do they now train themselves in the precepts.'

'If the time seems meet to the Samgha, not ordaining what has not been ordained, and not revoking what has been ordained, let it take upon itself and ever direct itself in the precepts according as they have been laid down. This is the resolution.

'Let the venerable Samgha hear me. [These things being so²] the Samgha takes upon itself the precepts according as they have been laid down. Whosoever of the venerable ones approves thereof, let him keep silence. Whosoever approves not thereof, let him speak. The Samgha has taken upon itself the precepts according as they were laid down. Therefore does it keep silence. Thus do I understand.'

10. Now the Thera Bhikkhus said to the vener-

¹ Dhūmakālikam. See our note above on VI, 17, 1. Buddhaghosa says here, Dhūmakālikan ti yāva samanassa Gotamassa parinibbāna-kītika-dhūmo paññāyati tāvakālo ti attho.

² The whole repeated.

able Ānanda : 'That was ill done by thee, friend Ānanda, in that thou didst not ask the Blessed One which were the lesser and minor precepts. Confess thy fault.'

'Through forgetfulness was it, Sirs, that I did not ask that of the Blessed One. I see no fault therein. Nevertheless, out of my faith in you, I confess that as a fault¹.'

'This also, friend Ānanda, was ill done by thee, in that thou steppedst upon the Blessed One's rainy-season garment to sew it. Confess thy fault.'

'It was not, Sirs, through any want of respect to the Blessed One that I did so. I see no fault therein. Nevertheless, out of my faith in you, I confess that as a fault.'

'This also, friend Ānanda, was ill done by thee, in that thou causedst the body of the Blessed One to be saluted by women first², so that by their weeping the body of the Blessed One was defiled by tears. Confess that fault.'

'I did so, Sirs, with the intention that they should not be kept beyond due time. I see no fault therein. Nevertheless, out of my faith in you, I confess that as a fault.'

'This too, friend Ānanda, was ill done by thee, in that even when a suggestion so evident and a hint so clear were given thee by the Blessed One, thou didst not beseech him, saying, "Let the Blessed One remain on for a kalpa! Let the Happy One remain on for a kalpa for the good and happiness of the great multitudes, out of pity for the world, for the good and the gain and the weal of gods and men¹!" Confess that fault.'

¹ Compare Mahāvagga X, 1, 8, at the end.

² It is worthy of notice that this episode is not referred to in the 'Book of the Great Decease' (VI, 23-26. Compare V, 46-51).

'I was possessed (by the Evil One)², friends, when I refrained from so beseeching him. I see no fault therein. Nevertheless, out of my faith in you, I confess that as a fault.'

'This also, friend Ānanda, was ill done by thee, in that thou exertedst thyself to procure admission for women into the Dhamma and Vinaya proclaimed by the Tathāgata³. Confess that fault.'

'That did I do, friends, thinking of Mahā Pagāpati the Gotamī, the sister of the Blessed One's mother; his nurse and comforter, who gave him milk; how she, when she who had borne him was dead, herself suckled him as with mother's milk. I see no fault therein. Nevertheless, out of my faith in you, I confess that as a fault.'

11. Now at that time the venerable Purāṇa was wandering through the Southern Hills with a great company of Bhikkhus, with five hundred Bhikkhus. And when the Thera Bhikkhus had completed the chanting over together of the Dhamma and the Vinaya, he, having stayed in the Southern Hills as long as he thought fit, went on to Rāgagaha to the Veḷuvana, to the Kalandaka Nivāpa, where the Thera Bhikkhus were, and having greeted the Thera Bhikkhus, he took his seat on one side.

¹ This refers to the conversations in the 'Book of the Great Decease,' III, 1-4, and 43-60 (especially 56).

² Pariyuḥhita-kitto. The words in parentheses are supplied from the 'Book of the Great Decease,' III, 4, where see Rh. D.'s note on the spelling of the word.

³ Pabbaggam, admission into the Order.

When he was so seated, the Thera Bhikkhus said to him :

‘The Dhamma and the Vinaya, friend Purāṇa, have been chanted over together by the Thera Bhikkhus. Do thou, then, submit thyself to and learn the text so rehearsed by them¹.’

‘The Dhamma and the Vinaya, Sirs, have been well sung by the Theras. Nevertheless, even in such manner as it has been heard by me, and received by me from the very mouth of the Blessed One, in that manner will I bear it in my memory.’

12. Now the venerable Ānanda said to the Thera Bhikkhus : ‘The Blessed One, Sirs, said to me at the time of his death : “Let then the Saṃgha, Ānanda, when I am dead, impose the higher penalty on Kḥanna the Bhikkhu².”’

‘Didst thou then, friend Ānanda, ask the Blessed One what the higher penalty was ?’

‘I did, Sirs, (and the reply was) : ‘Let Kḥanna the Bhikkhu, Ānanda, say whatever he may wish ; but the Bhikkhus should neither speak to him, nor exhort him, nor admonish him.”’

‘Do thou, then, friend Ānanda, let Kḥanna the Bhikkhu know that the higher penalty has been imposed upon him.’

‘How can I, Sirs, do so ? Passionate is that Bhikkhu, and rough.’

‘Go then, friend Ānanda, in company with a number of other Bhikkhus.’

‘Even so, Sirs,’ said Ānanda, in assent to the Thera Bhikkhus. And he took with him a number of Bhikkhus, to wit, five hundred Bhikkhus, and embarked on a boat going up stream, and disembarked at Kosambī, and not far from king Udena's park he took his seat at the foot of a certain tree.

¹ Saṅgātim upēhi.

² See ‘Book of the Great Decease,’ VI, 4.

13. Now at that time king Udena was enjoying himself in the park together with the ladies of his palace. And the ladies heard that their teacher, the venerable Ānanda, was seated at the foot of a tree not far from the park. And they said to king Udena :

‘ They say that our teacher, the venerable Ānanda, is seated at the foot of a tree not far from the park. We desire, Lord, to go and see him.’

‘ Go, then, and see the Samāna Ānanda.’ And they went and saluted the venerable Ānanda, and took their seats on one side. And he instructed, and aroused, and incited, and gladdened them with religious discourse. And when that discourse was concluded, they presented the venerable Ānanda with five hundred robes, and exalted and thanked him for his discourse, and arose from their seats, and saluted him, and keeping him on their right sides as they passed him, they departed thence.

14. And king Udena saw the ladies coming from the distance. And on seeing them he said to them :

‘ Well, did you succeed in seeing the Samāna Ānanda ?’

‘ We saw him, Sire.’

‘ Did you present the Samāna Ānanda with any gift ?’

‘ We gave, Sire, to the venerable Ānanda five hundred robes.’

Then king Udena was indignant and annoyed, and became angry, saying :

‘How can the Samāna Ānanda accept so many robes? Would he set up as a hawker in cloths, or would he open a shop¹?’

And king Udena went to where the venerable Ānanda was, and after exchanging with him the greetings and compliments of friendship and civility, sat down by his side. And when he was so seated, he said to him :

‘Did our ladies come hither, Ānanda?’

‘Yes, great king.’

‘Did they give anything to your reverence?’

‘They gave me, great king, five hundred robes.’

‘And what does your reverence intend to do with those five hundred robes?’

‘I shall divide them, great king, among those of the Bhikkhus whose robes are worn out.’

‘And what do you intend, Ānanda, to do with the worn-out robes?’

‘Of those, great king, we shall make counterpanes.’

‘And what do you intend to do, Ānanda, with the old counterpanes?’

‘Of those, great king, we shall make bolster cases.’

‘And what do you intend to do, Ānanda, with the old bolster cases?’

‘Of those, great king, we shall make carpets.’

‘And what do you intend to do, Ānanda, with the old carpets?’

‘Of those, great king, we shall make towels for the washing of the feet.’

‘And what do you intend to do, Ānanda, with the old towels?’

¹ Paggâhika-sâlâ, on which Buddhaghosa says nothing.

‘Of those, great king, we shall make dusters.’

‘And what do you intend to do, Ānanda, with the old dusters?’

‘Those, great king, we shall tear in shreds, and beat up with mud, and use them for making flooring of clay.’

Then king Udena thought: ‘These Sakyaputtiya Samanas make general use of everything in a conscientious way, and take nothing as one man’s peculiar property¹.’ And he presented other five hundred pieces of cloth to the venerable Ānanda.

15. But Ānanda went on to the Ghosita Ārāma, and sat down then on the seat spread out for him. And the venerable Khanna went to the place where he was and saluted him, and took his seat beside him. And when he was so seated, Ānanda said to him:

‘The Samgha, friend Khanna, has imposed upon you the higher penalty.’

‘What then, friend Ānanda, is the higher penalty?’

‘You, friend Khanna, may say to the Bhikkhus whatever you wish; but the Bhikkhus are neither to speak to you, nor exhort you, nor admonish you.’

‘Shall I not be even a slain man, friend Ānanda, so long as I am neither spoken to, nor exhorted, nor admonished by the Bhikkhus?’ said Khanna, and he fainted and fell.

Then the venerable Khanna, pained, grieved, and seized with remorse through the higher penalty, remained alone and separate, earnest, zealous, and resolved. And ere long he attained to that supreme goal¹ of the higher life for the sake of which men even of good family go out from all and every household gain and comfort to become houseless wanderers—yea, that supreme goal did he, by himself, and while yet in this visible world, bring himself to the knowledge of, and continue to realise, and to see face to face! And he became conscious that rebirth was at an end for him, that the higher life had been fulfilled, that all that should be done had been accomplished, and that, after this present life, there would be no beyond²!

¹ Na kulāvaṃ gāmenti, on which Buddhaghosa says nothing.

So the venerable Khanna became yet another among the Arahats. And after he had attained to Arahatship, the venerable Khanna went to the venerable Ānanda, and said :

‘ Remove from me now, friend Ānanda, the higher penalty.’

‘ From the moment, friend Khanna, that you had realised Arahatship, from that moment was the higher penalty removed from you.’

16. Now whereas five hundred Bhikkhus, without one failing, without one more, took part in this rehearsal of the Vinaya, therefore is that rehearsal of the Vinaya called ‘ that of the five hundred ³.’

Here ends the Eleventh Khandhaka, on the Rehearsal by the Five Hundred.

¹ That is, Arahatsip, Nirvāna.

² This Nirvāna paragraph is constantly recurring (e.g. ‘ Book of the Great Decease,’ V, 68 ; Mahāvagga V, 1, 18 ; Samyutta VII, 1).

³ Compare XII, 2, 9.

TWELFTH KHANDHAKA.

ON THE COUNCIL OF VESÂLÎ.

1.

1. Now at that time, a century¹ after the death of the Blessed One, the Bhikkhus of Vesâlî, Vaggians, promulgated at Vesâlî the ten theses :—(1) that storing salt in a horn vessel was permissible; (2) that the midday meal might be eaten when the sun's shadow showed two finger breadths after noon; (3) that he who intends to go into the village could begin to eat again after he had once left off; (4) that a number of Bhikkhus residing within the same boundary might hold Uposatha separately; (5) that a Samgha not at unity within itself might carry out an official act, undertaking to inform Bhikkhus of it; (6) that it was permissible for a Bhikkhu to do anything adopted as a practice by his Upagghâya; (7) that curds might be eaten by one who had already finished his midday meal; (8) that it was permissible to drink unfermented toddy; (9) that a rug or mat need not be of the limited size prescribed if it had no fringe; (10) that it was permissible to receive gold and silver².

¹ As pointed out at p. xxii of our Introduction, we believe this number ought not to be taken too literally, but to be considered a round number.

² The above terms are explained below, §§ 1, 10, and 2, 8.

Now at that time the venerable Yasa, the son of Kâkandaka, who was wandering through the Vaggian country, arrived at Vesâlî; and there the venerable Yasa stayed at the Mahâvana, in the Kûâgâra Hall.

Now at that time the Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesâlî, on Uposatha day, filled a copper pot with water and placed it in the midst of the Bhikkhu-samgha, and said to such of their Vesâlian lay disciples as came there: 'Give, Sirs, to the Samgha a kahâpana¹, or half a one, or a pâda, or a mâsaka. It will be wanted for the Samgha, for the provision of various utensils.'

When they had thus spoken, the venerable Yasa, the son of Kâkandaka, said to the lay disciples: 'Do, Sirs, nothing of the kind. The use of gold and silver is not allowed to the Sakyaputtiya Samanas. The Sakyaputtiya Samanas neither allow it to be given to them, nor take charge of it. The Sakyaputtiya Samanas are men whose gems and jewelry have been laid aside, and who are without silver and without gold.'

Though the lay disciples from Vesâlî had been thus addressed by the venerable Yasa, the son of Kâkandaka, they gave money to the Samgha. And the Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesâlî, at the close of the night, reserving one portion², divided that money according to the number of the Bhikkhus. And they said to the venerable Yasa, the son of Kâkandaka:

'This, friend Yasa, is thy due portion of the money.'

¹ About a penny; on this and the following terms, see Rh. D.'s 'Ancient Coins and Measures, &c.,' p. 6.

² Pañvîso. See Mahâvagga VIII, 27, 4.

‘I have no due portion in that money. I do not allow any money to be given to me.’

2. Then the Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesālī said one to another: ‘This brother, Yasa, the son of Kākandaka, upbraids and reviles, and renders dissatisfied believing and faithful followers. Come, let us carry out against him the Act of Reconciliation¹.’ And they did so.

Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākandaka, said to them: ‘It has been laid down, Sirs, by the Blessed One, that a companion shall be appointed to go as messenger with a Bhikkhu against whom the Act of Reconciliation has been carried out². Appoint, Sirs, a Bhikkhu, as companion messenger to me.’ And the Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesālī deputed a Bhikkhu to that work, and gave him as a companion messenger to the venerable Yasa.

And the venerable Yasa, taking the companion Bhikkhu with him, entered into Vesālī, and said to the believing laymen there:

‘I am said, Sirs, to be upbraiding and reviling, and rendering dissatisfied believing and faithful followers, thereby that I have said what is against the Dhamma to be against the Dhamma, and what is Dhamma to be Dhamma, and what is against the Vinaya to be against the Vinaya, and what is Vinaya to be Vinaya.

3. ‘Now the Blessed One was once, Sirs, staying at Sāvattthi in the Getavana, Anātha Pindika’s pleasure-ground. And there, Sirs, the Blessed One exhorted the Bhikkhus, and said:

¹ Paṭisāraṇiya-kamma. See Kullavagga I, 18.

² On Anudūta, see Kullavagga I, 20–22.

“ There are, O Bhikkhus, four obstructions of the sun and moon, by which when the sun and moon are affected, they give no heat and they give no light, and they are no longer glorious. And what are the four ? They are clouds and fog and dusty smoke and Râhu¹, by which when the sun and the moon are affected they give neither heat nor light nor sheen. Just so, O Bhikkhus, there are four stains by which when Samanas and Brâhmans are affected they give neither heat nor light nor sheen. And what are the four ? There are some Samanas and Brâhmans who drink strong drink, and things intoxicating, abstaining not therefrom². This is the first of such stains. And further, O Bhikkhus, there are some Samanas and Brâhmans who practise sexual intercourse, and abstain not therefrom. This is the second of such stains. And further, O Bhikkhus, there are some Samanas and Brâhmans who accept silver and gold, abstaining not from the use thereof. This is the third of such stains. And lastly, O Bhikkhus, there are some Samanas and Brâhmans who gain their livelihood by low arts³, abstaining not from such means of life. This is the fourth of such stains.”

‘ Thus spoke, Sirs, the Blessed One : and when the Happy One had thus spoken, the Master further said :

“ Stained by lust and malice, some Samanas and Brâhmans,

¹ That is, eclipse.

² It is curious that this matter is not, like all the following, referred to in the Sîlas. See Rh. D.'s 'Buddhist Suttas,' p. 190.

³ Those, namely, which are set out in the Mahâ Sîla (Rh. D.'s 'Buddhist Suttas,' pp. 196-203).

Men blinded by ignorance, praise things that seem to have delight.

Strong drink they drink and fierce, indulge in sensual acts,

Devoid of wisdom, silver and gold they take.

And by low arts some Samanas and Brâhmans live.

Stains are such actions called by the Buddha
of the Solar race,

Stains—by which defiled some Samanas and Brâhmans,

Impure brutes and unclean, give neither heat nor light.

Covered rather by darkness, purblind, enslaved
by craving lusts,

They enlarge the realm of death¹, and dread rebirth they gain."

'It is for upholding this opinion that I, Sirs, have been said to be upbraiding and reviling and rendering dissatisfied believing and faithful followers, in that I have said what is against the Dhamma to be against the Dhamma, and what is Dhamma to be Dhamma ; what is against the Vinaya to be against the Vinaya, and what is Vinaya to be Vinaya.

4. 'And once the Blessed One was staying, Sirs, at Râgagaha, in the Veluvana, at the Kalandaka Nivâpa. Now at that time among the royal attendants sitting together in the women's apartment in the palace, the following saying was heard : "Silver and gold is allowed to the Sakyaputtiya Samanas.

¹ That is, by being repeatedly reborn they continually die.
Vaddhenti kârasin ti punappunam kalevara-nikkhipamâna-bhûmim vaddhenti, says Buddhaghosa. The word occurs at Gâtaka I, 146.

The Sakyaputtiya Samanas accept it, and take it in charge." Now at that time Manikû/aka, a village headman, was present. And he said to the people there: "Say not so, Sirs. Neither is silver and gold allowed to the Sakyaputtiya Samanas, nor do they accept it, nor take it in charge. The Sakyaputtiya Samanas are men who have laid aside gems and jewelry, and are without silver, and without gold." And the headman, Manikû/aka, succeeded in satisfying them.

'Then the headman, Manikû/aka, went to the place where the Blessed One was and saluted him, and took his seat on one side. And he told the Blessed One the whole matter¹, and said :

"Now am I, Lord, in maintaining as I did, one who speaks according to the word of the Blessed One, one who does not falsely represent the Blessed One, one who does not put forth minor matters in the place of the true Dhamma? And is there anything that leads to blame in such discussion, this way and that, as touching the observance of the rules of the order²?"

"Most certainly, Manikû/aka, in maintaining thus you speak in accordance with my word, and do not represent me falsely, nor put forth minor matters as the true Dhamma. Nor is there anything leading to blame in such discussions. For gold and silver is not allowed, Manikû/aka, to the Sakyaputtiya Samanas, nor ought they to accept it, nor take it in charge. Men who have laid aside gems and jewelry are the Sakyaputtiya Samanas, men without silver and without gold. For to whomsoever, Manikūḷaka, gold and silver are allowed, to him also the five kinds of sensual pleasure¹ are allowed. And to whomsoever these five kinds of pleasure are allowed, him you may know of a certainty to be following neither the rule of the Samanas, nor the rule of the sons of Sākya. Although, Manikūḷaka, I have said that he who is in need of grass may seek for grass, and he who is in need of wood may seek for wood, and he who is in need of a conveyance may seek for a conveyance, and he who is in need of a servant may seek for a servant; yet have I never said in any way whatever that gold or silver may be sought after or accepted."

¹ The whole is repeated in the text.

² The whole of this speech recurs, nearly word for word, in the Mahāvagga VI, 31, 4.

'It is for maintaining this opinion that I, Sirs, have been said to be upbraiding and reviling and rendering dissatisfied believing and faithful followers, in that I have said what is against the Dhamma to be against the Dhamma, and what is Dhamma to be Dhamma; that what is against the Vinaya is against the Vinaya, and what is Vinaya is Vinaya.'

5. 'And once, Sirs, the Blessed One at the same place, at Rāgagaha, on the occasion of the matter of Upananda, the Sākyan, distinctly laid down a precept by which gold and silver were forbidden².

'It is for maintaining this opinion that I, Sirs, have been said to be upbraiding and reviling and rendering dissatisfied believing and faithful followers, in that I have said what is against the

¹ Compare Kullavagga VII, 1, 2.

² This is set out in full in the Sutta Vibhaṅga in the Introduction to the 18th Nissaggiya Pāṭittiya.

Dhamma to be against the Dhamma, and what is Dhamma to be Dhamma ; that what is against the Vinaya is against the Vinaya, and what is Vinaya is Vinaya.'

6. When he had thus spoken, the lay brethren said to Yasa, the son of Kâkandaka : ' There is but one, Sirs¹, who is a Sakyaputtiya Samana, our master, Yasa, the son of Kâkandaka. All the rest are no Samanas, neither Sakyaputtiyas. Let the venerable Yasa, the son of Kâkandaka, dwell among us. We will exert ourselves to provide him with robes, and food, and medicine, and the necessities for the sick.'

Then the venerable Yasa, the son of Kâkandaka, having gained over the lay brethren, returned with the companion Bhikkhu to the Ârâma.

7. And the Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesâlî asked the companion Bhikkhu : ' Did Yasa, the son of Kâkandaka, obtain, Sir, the forgiveness of the lay brethren ?'

' Evil, Sirs, hath been wrought against us. Yasa, the son of Kâkandaka, and he alone has been decided to be a Sakyaputtiya Samana, and all of us neither Samanas nor Sakyaputtiyas.'

Then the Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesâlî said : ' The venerable Yasa, the son of Kâkandaka, without being deputed by us, has proclaimed to laymen (a false doctrine)². Come, let us carry out the Act of Suspension³ against him.' And ¹ They are speaking to Yasa and the anudâta.

² This cannot refer to the 9th Pâkittiya, which only speaks of making known grievous offences. Ânguttara II, 5, 2 refers to laymen as well as to sâmaneras.

³ Ukkhepaniya-kamma. See Kullavagga I, 25.

they assembled together with the intention of doing so.

But the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākandaka, rose up into the sky and descended at Kosambi. And he sent messengers to the Bhikkhus of the Western country, and of Avanti, and of the Southern country¹, saying, 'Let your reverences come! We must take in charge this legal question before what is not Dhamma is spread abroad, and what is Dhamma is put aside; before what is not Vinaya is spread abroad, and what is Vinaya is put aside; before those who argue against the Dhamma become powerful, and those who argue in favour of the Dhamma become weak; before those who argue against the Vinaya become powerful, and those who argue in favour of the Vinaya become weak.'

8. Now at that time the venerable Sambhûta Sāṇavâsî² was dwelling on the Ahogaṅga Hill³. And thither the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākandaka, went; and on his arrival he saluted the venerable Sambhûta Sāṇavâsî, and took his seat on one side: and being so seated he said to him:

'Lord, these Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesālî have

¹ On these terms, compare note on Mahāvagga VII, 1, 1.

² Sāṇavâsî is, literally, he who wears a hempen dress. In the traditions of the Sanskrit Buddhist literature we find mentioned a Sāṇavâsika, said to be a predecessor, in the teacher and pupil line, of Upagupta (Wassilief, p. 44). The Nepalese call him Soṇavâsî (Rajendralâl Mitra, 'Sanskrit Buddhist Literature of Nepâl,' p. 10). He is the hero of the Sāṇavâsî Avadâna part of the Bodhisatva Avadâna Kalpalatâ (Mitra, p. 67, Bendall 'Catalogue of Cambridge MSS.,' p. 42), where the name is explained: 'I wished for an ochre-coloured robe (soṇa); hence I was called Sāṇavâsî.'

³ See, for the position of this mountain, our note last quoted.

put forward ten theses.' And he told him what they were¹, and added: 'Come now, Lord, let us take in charge this last question before what is not Dhamma is spread abroad, and what is Dhamma is put aside; before what is not Vinaya is spread abroad, and what is Vinaya is put aside; before those who argue against the Dhamma become powerful, and those who argue in favour of the Dhamma become weak; before those who argue against the Vinaya become powerful, and those who argue in favour of the Vinaya become weak.'

'Even so, Lord,' said the venerable Sambhûta Sânavâsi, in assent to the venerable Yasa Kâkaṇḍaka-putta.

Then about sixty Bhikkhus from the Western country, all of whom were hermits, all of whom lived only on alms, all of whom dressed only in cast-off clothes, and kept only three robes, and all of whom were Arahats, assembled together at the Ahogaṅga Hill. And about eighty-eight from Avanti and the Southern country, some of whom were hermits, and some of whom lived only on alms, and some of whom dressed only in cast-off clothes, and some of whom kept only three robes, but all of whom were Arahats, met together with them on the Ahogaṅga Hill.

9. And the Thera Bhikkhus, consulting together, came to this conclusion: 'This legal question, now, is hard and subtle. How can we obtain such support that we may have the greater power at the decision thereof²?'

¹ In the text the full words of I, 1 are here repeated.

² Compare below, XII, 2, 1.

Now at that time the venerable Revata was dwelling at Soreyya, and he was wise in the traditions, one who had learned the Âgamas (the four Nikâyas), and knew by heart the Dhamma, the Vinaya, and the Mâtikâs ; intelligent, discreet, and wise, modest, conscientious, devoted to the precepts¹. And the Thera Bhikkhus thought that if they could gain him over to their side, they would attain their end.

And the venerable Revata, by the divine ear, clear and surpassing that of men, heard the Thera Bhikkhus as they were thus consulting together ; and he thought : ' This legal question is both hard and subtle, it would not become me to hold back therefrom. But even now those Bhikkhus (the Vaggians) will be coming. It would be unpleasant travelling for me were I to fall in with them. Let me go on before them.'

So the venerable Revata went from Soreyya to Samkassa. And when the Thera Bhikkhus went to Soreyya, and asked : ' Where is the venerable Revata ?' they said : ' He is gone to Samkassa.'

Now the venerable Revata had gone on from Samkassa to Kannakugga. And when the Thera Bhikkhus came to Samkassa, and asked : ' Where is the venerable Revata ?' they said : ' He is gone on to Kannakugga.' And in the same way they followed him thither, and to Udumbara, and to Aggalapura, and to Sahagâti, and there they met with the venerable Revata.

10. And the venerable Sambhûta Sânavâsi said to the venerable Yasa, the son of Kâkandâka :

¹ These adjectives have occurred above at Mahâvagga X, 1, 2, and Kullavagga I, 11, 1.

‘Friend, the brother Revata is wise in the traditions, has learnt the Âgamas, knows by heart the Dhamma, the Vinaya, and the Mâtikâs, he is intelligent, discreet, and wise, modest, conscientious, and devoted to the precepts. If we ask the venerable Revata a puzzling question, he is capable of spending the whole night on that one question. And even now the venerable Revata will call upon a Bhikkhu who is an intoner¹, and a pupil of his. Do you, therefore, when the Bhikkhu has concluded, go to the venerable Revata and ask him concerning these ten theses (points).’

‘Even so, Sir,’ said the venerable Yasa, the son of Kâkandâka, in assent to the venerable Sambhûta Sânavâsi.

And the venerable Revata called upon the Bhikkhu, the pupil of his, the intoner. And when the Bhikkhu had concluded, the venerable Yasa, the son of Kâkandâka, went to the venerable Revata, and saluted him, and took his seat beside him. And, so seated, he said to the venerable Revata²:

‘Is the horn-salt-license, Lord, allowable?’

‘What, Sir, is this horn-salt-license?’

‘Is it allowable, Lord, to carry about salt in a horn with the intention of putting it into food which has not been salted?’

‘No, Sir, it is not allowable.’

‘Is the two-inch-license, Lord, allowable?’

‘What, Sir, is this two-inch-license?’

‘Is it allowable, Lord, to eat the midday meal

¹ Sarabhâṇakam. See our note above at Kullavagga V, 3, 2.

² The whole of the following questions and answers recur below at XII, 2, 8, where the reasons of the answers also appear.

beyond the right time, provided only that the shadow has not yet turned two inches ?'

'No, Sir, it is not allowable.'

'Is the village-trip-license, Lord, allowable?'

'What, Sir, is this village-trip-license?'

'Is it allowable, Lord, for one who has once finished his meal, and refused any more, to eat food which has not been left over, on the ground that he is about to proceed into the village?'

'No, Sir, it is not allowable.'

'Is the circuit-license, Lord, allowable?'

'What, Sir, is this circuit-license?'

'Is it allowable, Lord, for a number of Bhikkhus who dwell within the same circuit, within the same boundary, to hold separate Uposathas?'

'No, Sir, it is not allowable.'

'Is the indemnity-license, Lord, allowable?'

'What, Sir, is this indemnity-license?'

'Is it allowable, Lord, for a Saṃgha, which is not legally constituted¹, to perform an official act on the ground that they will afterwards obtain the sanction of such Bhikkhus who may subsequently arrive?'

'No, Sir, it is not allowable.'

'Is the precedent-license, Lord, allowable?'

'What, Sir, is this precedent-license?'

'Is it allowable, Lord, to do a thing on the ground that, "My preceptor (upagghâya) has practised this; or my teacher (âkariya) has practised that?"'

'In some cases, Sir, this is allowable, and in some not².'

¹ Vaggena. See our note on the 21st Pâṭittiya, and Kullavagga V, 2, 1.

² That is, of course, according as the thing enjoined is, or is not,

‘Is the churn-license, Lord, allowable?’

‘What, Sir, is this churn-license?’

‘Is it allowable, Lord, for one who has once finished his meal, and has refused any more, to drink milk not left over from the meal, on the ground that it has left the condition of milk, and has not yet reached the condition of curds¹?’

‘No, Sir, it is not allowable.’

‘Is it allowable, Lord, to drink toddy?’

‘What, Sir, is this toddy?’

‘Is it allowable, Lord, to drink spirits which have left the condition of not being spirits, and yet have not acquired intoxicating properties²?’

‘No, Sir, it is not allowable.’

‘Is a rug or mat (when it is beyond the prescribed size) lawful, Lord, because it is unfringed?’

‘No, Sir, it is not allowable.’

‘Is gold and silver, Lord, allowable?’

‘No, Sir, it is not allowable.’

‘These are the ten theses, Lord, which these Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesâlî have put forth. Come, Lord, let us take this legal question in hand before that which is not Dhamma is spread abroad, and that which is Dhamma is put aside; before that which is not Vinaya is spread abroad, and that which is Vinaya is put aside; before those who argue against the Dhamma become powerful, and those lawful. Ekaṅko kappatī ti idaṃ dhammikaṃ ātinnam sandhāya vuttam, says Buddhaghosa.

¹ That is, which is neither liquid nor solid: something apparently like buttermilk.

² It is a question constantly arising under the excise laws in India and Ceylon, whether the liquor in the case has become arrack, or is only arrack in the making, and unfermented. This last is called unfermented toddy.

who argue in favour of the Dhamma become weak ; before those who argue against the Vinaya become powerful, and those who argue in favour of the Vinaya become weak.'

'Even so, Sir,' said the venerable Revata, in assent to the venerable Yasa, the son of Kākandaka.

Here ends the First Portion for Recitation.

2.

1. Now the Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesālī heard the rumour : 'Yasa, they say, the son of Kākandaka, wishing to take this legal question in hand, is seeking about for support, and support they say he is succeeding in getting.' And they thought : 'This legal question, now, is hard and subtle. How can we obtain such support that we may have the greater power at the decision thereof¹ ?'

And they thought : 'The venerable Yasa, who dwells at Soreyya, is wise in the traditions, and is one who has learnt the Āgamas, who knows by heart the Dhamma, the Vinaya, the Mâtikâs, is intelligent, discreet, and wise, modest, conscientious, and devoted to the precepts. If we could gain him over to our side, we should attain our end.'

Then the Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesālī got together much property, requisites, a number of things of the Samanas' life—to wit, bowls and robes, and rugs, and needlecases, and girdles, and filters, and regulation-pots². And, taking this property with them, they went up stream by boat to Sahagâti, and there disembarked, and took their meal at the foot of a certain tree.

¹ Compare above, XII, 1, 9.

² On Dhamma-karaka, see our note at Kullavagga V, 13, 1.

2. Now to the venerable Sâḥa, who retired apart and was plunged in meditation, there occurred this doubtful problem: 'Are the Bhikkhus of the East, or the Bhikkhus of the West, the more in accordance with the Dhamma in the opinion that they hold?' And having gone over the Dhamma and the Vinaya in his mind, he came to the conclusion, 'The Bhikkhus of the East are not, and the Bhikkhus of the West are, in accordance with the Dhamma in the opinion that they hold.'

And a certain one of the deities in the Pure Abode¹ perceived how this doubtful problem had arisen in the venerable Sâḥa's mind, and as quickly as a strong man could stretch forth his bent arm, or draw it in again when it was outstretched, so quickly did that deity vanish from the Pure Abode, and appeared before the venerable Sâḥa; saying to him: 'Thou art quite right, Sâḥa; it is the Eastern Bhikkhus whose opinions are against the Dhamma, and the Western Bhikkhus whose opinions accord therewith. Do thou, therefore, O Sâḥa, even as the Dhamma is, so take thy stand!'

'Both formerly, O deity, and now, also, do I take my stand even as the Dhamma is. Notwithstanding, I shall not make manifest my opinion until (the Saṃgha) shall have appointed me (judge) over this question².'

3. Now the Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesâlî, taking with them the aforesaid property, went to the place

¹ The Heaven, so called.

[20]

D d

² Compare below, § 6.

where the venerable Revata was, and said to him :
 ' Let the venerable Thera receive at our hands these requisites of a Samana's life.'

But he refused to receive it, saying, ' Not so, my friends. I have all the things¹ I want.'

Now at that time a Bhikkhu named Uttara, who had been twenty years admitted into the Order², was the attendant upon the venerable Revata. And the Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesālī went to him, and said : ' Let your reverence receive at our hands these requisites of a Samana's life.'

But he made the same reply.

Then they said : ' People used to offer such requisites to the Blessed One. If he received them, they were happy. If he did not receive them, they used to offer them to the venerable Ānanda, saying,
 " Let the venerable Thera receive these requisites of a Samana's life : that will be just as if the Blessed One had received them." Let the venerable Uttara receive these things : that will be as if the Thera had received them.'

Then the venerable Uttara, being thus importuned by the Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesālī, accepted one robe, saying, ' You may tell me, friends, what you want.'

' Let the venerable Uttara say thus much for us to the Thera : " Let the venerable Thera say thus much in the meeting of the Saṃgha—" It is in the regions of the East that the Buddhas, the Blessed Ones, are born. It is the Bhikkhus of the East who hold opinions in accord with the Dhamma, whereas the Bhikkhus of the West do not.' "'

¹ Literally, 'I have the three robes.'

² Vīsativasso; that is, since his upasampadā.

'Even so, Sirs,' said the venerable Uttara, in assent to the Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesâli. And he went to Revata, and told him what they had said.

'Thou urgest me, O Bhikkhu, to that which is against the Dhamma,' said the Thera, and sent away the venerable Uttara¹.

And the Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesâli said to the venerable Uttara: 'What, friend Uttara, did the Thera say?'

'It is an evil you have wrought me, Sirs. The Thera has sent me away, saying, "Thou urgest me, O Bhikkhu, to what is against the Dhamma."'

'Are you not, Sir, of full age, of twenty years (since your upasampadâ)?'

'Yes, Sirs, I am.'

'Then do we take the nissaya under you as your pupils².'

4. Now the Samgha met together with the intention of deciding the legal question. And the venerable Revata laid a resolution before the Samgha, saying,

'Let the venerable Samgha hear me. If we were to settle this question, it might be that those Bhikkhus who had at first taken the matter in hand might raise it again³. If it seem meet to the Samgha, let the Samgha settle it at that place where it arose.'

¹ Pañâmesi. That is, permanently from attendance upon him. Compare Mahāvagga I, 27, 2, where the word is used of the formal dismissal or turning away of a pupil.

² Garu-nissayaṃ gaṇhâma; on which Buddhaghosa has nothing, though the phrase does not occur elsewhere in the Khandhakas.

³ Compare the 63rd Pāṭiṭṭiya.

Then the Thera Bhikkhus went to Vesālī, with the intention of settling the matter there.

Now at that time the eldest Thera in the world, Sabbakāmi by name, one who was of a hundred and twenty years' standing from the date of his upasam-padā, and who had been a pupil¹ of the venerable Ānanda, was living at Vesālī. And the venerable Revata said to the venerable Sambhūta Sāṇavāsi :

'I shall go to that Vihāra in which the Thera Sabbakāmi dwells. Do you go betimes to the venerable Sabbakāmi, and question him as touching these ten points.'

'Even so, Lord,' said the venerable Sambhūta Sāṇavāsi, in assent to the venerable Revata.

And the venerable Revata came to that Vihāra in which the venerable Sabbakāmi lived ; and a sleeping-place was made ready for the former in the inner chamber, and for the latter in front thereof. And the venerable Revata, thinking, 'This Thera, though so old, does not care to sleep,' did not go to rest. And the venerable Sabbakāmi, thinking, 'This Bhikkhu, though a traveller and tired, does not care to sleep,' did not go to rest.

5. Then when the night was far spent, the venerable Sabbakāmi said to the venerable Revata :

'By what manner of life, beloved one, have you lived now these so many years ?'

'By continuing in the sense of love, honoured friend, have I continued thus so many years.'

'They say that you have continued thus, beloved one, by easiness of life : and that indeed, beloved one, is an easy life, (I mean) the continuing in love.'

¹ Literally, 'had dwelt in the same Vihāra with.'

‘Even long ago, Sir, when I was a layman, was much love laid up in my heart, therefore is it that now also I live much in the sense of love, and indeed since long I have attained to Arahatsip. And by what manner of life have you lived now these many years?’

‘By continuing in the sense of the emptiness (of worldly things) have I, beloved one, lived these many years.’

‘They say that you, honoured friend, have continued thus by the sense of being a man born to greatness¹; and that indeed, honoured friend, is the same feeling, (I mean) the sense of the emptiness of things.’

‘Even long ago, beloved one, when I was a layman, had I a strong sense of the emptiness of things, therefore is it that now also I live much in that feeling, and indeed since long I have attained to Arahatsip.’

6. Now² this conversation between the Thera Bhikkhus was still unfinished when the venerable Sambhûta Sâravâsi arrived there. And he went up to the venerable Sabbakâmi, and saluted him, and took his seat beside him. And, so seated, he said to the venerable Sabbakâmi:

‘These Vaggian Bhikkhus of Vesâlî have put forth in Vesâlî these ten points;’ and he told them all³. ‘Now you, O Thera, have mastered much Dhamma and Vinaya at the feet of your preceptor.

¹ Mahâpurisa. On the subsequent history of which word, see Senart’s Légende du Buddha, pp. 54, 107.

² Karahi. Compare ‘Book of the Great Decease,’ III, 53; Childers, p. 32.

³ The text repeats XII, 1, 1.

What, then, is the conclusion to which you, O Thera, come as you lay over in your mind the Dhamma and the Vinaya ;—whose opinion is in accordance with the Dhamma, that of the Bhikkhus of the East, or that of the Bhikkhus of the West ?'

'You also, Sir, have mastered much Dhamma and Vinaya at the feet of your preceptor. What, then, is the conclusion to which you, Sir, come as you lay over in your mind the Dhamma and the Vinaya ;—whose opinion is in accordance with the Dhamma, that of the Bhikkhus of the East, or that of the Bhikkhus of the West ?'

'The conclusion to which I come, Lord, as I so lay over in my mind the Dhamma and the Vinaya, is this—that the Bhikkhus of the East hold an opinion that is not in accord with the Dhamma, while the Bhikkhus of the West are in accord with the Dhamma. Notwithstanding, I do not intend to make manifest my opinion until (the Samgha) shall have appointed me (referee) over this question¹.'

'The conclusion to which I also have come, Sir, as I lay over in my mind the Dhamma and the Vinaya, is this—that the Bhikkhus of the East hold an opinion that is not in accordance with the Dhamma, while the Bhikkhus of the West are in accord with the Dhamma. Notwithstanding, I do not intend to make manifest my opinion until (the Samgha) shall have appointed me (referee) over this question.'

7. Then the Samgha met together with the intention of enquiring into this legal question. But while they were enquiring into it, both was much pointless speaking brought forth and also the sense in no single speech was clear¹. Then the venerable Revata laid a resolution before the Samgha :

¹ Compare above, § 2.

‘Let the venerable Samgha hear me. Whilst we are discussing this legal question, there is both much pointless speaking, and no sense is clear in any single speech. If it seem meet to the Samgha, let the Samgha settle this legal question by referring it (to a jury)².’

And he chose four Bhikkhus of the East and four Bhikkhus of the West—from the Bhikkhus of the East the venerable Sabbakâmi, and the venerable Sâlha, and the venerable Khugga-sobhita, and the venerable Vâsabha-gâmika—and from the Bhikkhus of the West, the venerable Revata, and the venerable Sambhûta Sânavâsi, and the venerable Yasa, the son of Kâkandâka, and the venerable Sumana. Then the venerable Revata laid a resolution before the Samgha :

‘Let the venerable Samgha hear me. During the enquiry into this matter there has been much pointless talk among us, and in no single utterance is the sense clear. If it seem meet to the Samgha, let the Samgha delegate four Bhikkhus of the East and four Bhikkhus of the West to settle this question by reference. This is the resolution.

‘Let the venerable Samgha hear me. During the enquiry into this matter there has been much pointless talk among us, and the sense in any single utterance is not clear. The Samgha delegates four Bhikkhus of the East and four Bhikkhus of the West to settle this question by reference. Whoso-

¹ So above in Kullavagga IV, 14, 19, where the proceeding adopted in the subsequent sentences is laid down for use on such an occasion.

² Ubbâhikâya. See the passage quoted in the last note.

ever of the venerable ones approves thereof, let him keep silence. Whosoever approves not thereof, let him speak. The delegation is made accordingly. The Samgha approves thereof. Therefore is it silent. Thus do I understand.'

Now at that time a Bhikkhu named Agita, of ten years' standing, was the reciter of the Pâtimokkha to the Samgha. Him did the Samgha appoint as seat regulator¹ to the Thera Bhikkhus.

Then the Thera Bhikkhus thought, 'At what place, now, ought we to settle this legal question?' And it occurred to them: 'This Vâlîka Ârâma is a pleasant place, quiet and undisturbed. Let us settle the matter there.' And thither the Thera Bhikkhus proceeded to enquire into the question.

8. Then the venerable Revata laid a resolution before the *Samgha*²: 'Let the venerable Samgha hear me. If it seem meet to the Samgha, I will question the venerable Sabbakâmt as touching the Vinaya.' And the venerable Sabbakâmt laid a resolution before the Samgha: 'If it seem meet to the Samgha, I, when asked by Revata touching the Vinaya, will give reply.'

And the venerable Revata said to the venerable Sabbakâmt: 'Is the horn-salt-license, Lord, allowable?'

¹ Âsana-paññâpakam. This office is not mentioned in the other Khandhakas. We should expect to find it at Kullavagga VI, 21, 2. The reason of this is that it is no office of authority. The different referees would take their seats in the order of their seniority, and all that the âsana-paññâpaka would have to do would be to see that they were provided with everything they required (it was not much, chiefly mats or rugs to sit upon) in the hall or grove where they met.

² Here, of course, consisting of the eight referees.

‘What, Sir, is this horn-salt-license?’

‘Is it allowable, Lord, to carry about salt in a horn with the intention of putting it into food which has not been salted?’

‘No, Sir, it is not allowable.’

‘Where was such a claim rejected?’

‘At Sâvatthi, in the Sutta Vibhaṅga.’

‘Of what offence is the person, who does so, guilty?’

‘Of Pākittiya, in eating food which has been put by¹.’

‘Let the venerable Saṃgha hear me. This first point, having been examined into by the Saṃgha, has been found to be false Dhamma and false Vinaya, and not contained in the teaching of the Master. Thus do I cast the first vote.’

‘Is the two-inch-license, Lord, allowable?’

‘What, Sir, is this two-inch-license?’

‘Is it allowable, Lord, to eat the midday meal beyond the right time, provided only that the shadow of the sun has not yet turned two inches?’

‘No, Sir, it is not allowable.’

‘Where has such a claim been rejected?’

‘At Râgagaha, in the Sutta Vibhaṅga.’

‘Of what offence is he, who does so, guilty?’

‘Of Pākittiya, in eating at the wrong time².’

‘Let the venerable Saṃgha hear me. This second point, having been examined into by the Saṃgha, has been found to be false Dhamma and false Vinaya, and not contained in the teaching of the Master. Thus do I cast the second vote.’

‘Is the village-trip-license, Lord, allowable?’

¹ Pākittiya XXXVIII.

² Pākittiya XXXVII.

‘What, Sir, is this village-trip-license?’

‘Is it allowable for one who has once finished his meal, and has refused any more, to eat food which has not been left over, on the ground that he is about to proceed into the village?’

‘No, Sir, it is not allowable.’

‘Where was such a claim rejected?’

‘At Sāvatti, in the Sutta Vibhaṅga.’

‘Of what offence is he, who does so, guilty?’

‘Of Pāṭittiya, in eating food which has not been left over¹.’

‘Let the venerable Saṃgha hear me. This third point, having been examined into by the Saṃgha, has been found to be false Dhamma and false Vinaya, and not contained in the teaching of the Master. Thus do I cast the third vote.’

‘Is the circuit-license, Lord, allowable?’

‘What, Sir, is this circuit-license?’

‘Is it allowable, Lord, for a number of Bhikkhus who dwell within the same circuit, within the same boundary, to hold separate Uposathas?’

‘No, Sir, it is not allowable.’

‘Where was such a claim rejected?’

‘At Rāgagaha, in the Uposatha Saṃyutta².’

‘Of what offence is he, who does so, guilty?’

‘Of Dukkata, in neglecting the Vinaya.’

‘Let the venerable Saṃgha hear me. This fourth point, having been examined into by the Saṃgha, has been found to be false Dhamma and false Vinaya, and not contained in the teaching of the Master. Thus do I cast the fourth vote.’

¹ Pāṭittiya XXXV.

² Saṃyutta must here be used for Khandhaka. The passage referred to is Mahāvagga II (the Uposatha Khandhaka), 8, 3.

‘Is the indemnity-license, Lord, allowable?’

‘What, Sir, is this indemnity-license?’

‘Is it allowable, Lord, for a Samgha which is not legally constituted to perform an official act, on the ground that they will afterwards obtain the sanction of such Bhikkhus as subsequently arrive?’

‘No, Sir, it is not allowable.’

‘Where was such a claim rejected?’

‘In the Kampeyyaka section, in the body of the *Vinaya*¹.’

‘Of what offence is he, who does so, guilty?’

‘Of Dukkata, in neglecting the Vinaya.’

‘Let the venerable Samgha hear me. This fifth point, having been examined into by the Samgha, has been found to be false Dhamma and false Vinaya, and not contained in the teaching of the Master. Thus do I cast this fifth vote.’

‘Is the precedent-license, Lord, allowable?’

‘What, Sir, is this precedent-license?’

‘Is it allowable, Lord, to do a thing on the ground that “My preceptor (upaggahâya) has practised this,” or “My teacher (âkariya) has practised that?”’

‘In some cases, Sir, it is allowable, and in some not².’

‘Let the venerable Samgha hear me. This sixth point, having been examined into by the Samgha, has been found to be false Dhamma and false Vinaya, and not contained in the teaching of the Master. Thus do I cast this sixth vote.’

‘Is the churn-license, Lord, allowable?’

‘What, Sir, is this churn-license?’

¹ Vinaya-vatthu. Here used as a title, apparently of the Khandhakas. The passage referred to is in the Kampeyyaka Khandhaka (Mahāvagga IX, 3, 5).

² See the note above on XII, 1, 10.

‘Is it allowable, Lord, for one who has once finished his meal, and has refused any more, to drink milk not left over from the meal, on the ground that it has left the condition of milk and has not yet reached the condition of curds?’

‘No, Sir, it is not allowable.’

‘Where was such a claim rejected?’

‘At Sāvatti, in the Sutta Vibhaṅga.’

‘Of what offence is he, who does so, guilty?’

‘Of Pāṭittiya, in eating food which has not been left over¹.’

‘Let the venerable Saṃgha hear me. This seventh point, having been examined into by the Saṃgha, has been found to be false Dhamma and false Vinaya, and not contained in the teaching of the Master. Thus do I cast this seventh vote.’

‘Is it allowable, Lord, to drink toddy?’

‘What, Sir, is this toddy?’

‘Is it allowable, Lord, to drink spirits which have not yet become spirits and have not yet acquired intoxicating properties?’

‘No, Sir, it is not allowable.’

‘Where was it rejected?’

‘At Kosambi, in the Sutta Vibhaṅga.’

‘Of what offence is he, who does so, guilty?’

‘Of Pāṭittiya, in the drinking of fermented liquors and strong drink².’

‘Let the venerable Saṃgha hear me. The eighth point, having been examined into by the Saṃgha, has been found to be false Dhamma and false Vinaya, and not contained in the teaching of the Master. Thus do I cast this eighth vote.’

¹ Pāṭittiya XXXV.

² Pāṭittiya LI.

'Is the unfringed-seat, Lord, allowable¹ ?'

'No, Sir, it is not allowable.'

'Where has it been rejected ?'

'At Savatthi, in the Sutta Vibhaṅga.'

'Of what offence is he, who uses such a seat, guilty ?'

'Of Pākittiya, in using a thing which ought to be cut down (to the proper size)².'

'Let the venerable Saṃgha hear me. This ninth point, having been examined into by the Saṃgha, has been found to be false Dhamma and false Vinaya, and not contained in the teaching of the Master. Thus do I cast this ninth vote.'

'Is gold and silver, Lord, allowable ?'

'No, Sir, it is not allowable.'

'Where was it forbidden ?'

'At Rāgagaha, in the Sutta Vibhaṅga.'

'Of what offence is he, who takes it, guilty ?'

'Of Pākittiya, in accepting gold and silver³.'

'Let the venerable Saṃgha hear me. This tenth point, having been examined into by the Saṃgha, has been found to be false Dhamma and false Vinaya, and not contained in the teaching of the Master. Thus do I cast this tenth vote.'

'Let the venerable Saṃgha hear me. These ten points, having been examined into by the Saṃgha, have been found to be false Dhamma and false Vinaya, and not contained in the teaching of the Master.'

¹ That is, does the fact of its being unfringed make legal a mat or rug otherwise illegal by reason of its size? See above, XII, 1, 10.

² Pākittiya LXXXIX.

³ The 18th Nissaggiya Pākittiya.

‘¹ This legal question, Sir, has been concluded ; and being settled, it is settled once for all. Nevertheless, Sir, do you question me on these ten points in the midst also of the Samgha ², in order to persuade those Bhikkhus ³.’

So the venerable Revata questioned the venerable Sabbakâmi on the ten points also in the midst of the Samgha, and as he was questioned on one after the other, the venerable Sabbakâmi gave reply.

9. Now whereas at this rehearsal of the Vinaya seven hundred Bhikkhus, without one more, without one being wanting, took part, therefore is that rehearsal of the Vinaya called ‘That of the seven hundred ⁴.’

Here ends the Twelfth Khandhaka, on the Rehearsal by the Seven Hundred.

¹ It is clear from the word tvam âvuso, that Sabbakâmi is here addressing Revata.

² That is not only of the referees, but of all the Bhikkhus there at Vesâli.

³ Bhikkhûnam saññattiyâ. See the use of this phrase at Kullavagga IV, 14, 26, and VII, 4, 1, and our note on the latter of those two passages.

⁴ Compare XI, 1, 15.

NOTE ON THE BHĀNAVĀRAS.

As the division into Bhānavāras or Portions for Recitation is of some value in the history of the way in which the books were handed down, and is now overshadowed by the more practical division for modern purposes adopted in this translation into chapters and sections, the following table may be of use :—

MAHĀVAGGA.

Present division.	Pāli title.	Page in text.	Extent in text.
KHANDHAKA I.
Chapter 6.	Paṭhama-bhānavāram	14	14
„ 14.	Dutiyaka-bhānavāram	24	10
„ 21.	Uruvela-pāśihāriyam tatiyaka-bhānavāram niṭṭhitam	35	11
„ 24.	Katutthaka-bh. niṭṭhitam	44	9
„ 30.	Upagghāya - vatta - bh. niṭṭhitam pañkamam	58	14
„ 33.	Khaṭṭham bhānavāram	61	3
„ 38.	Sattamam bhānavāram	71	10
„ 53.	Abhayūvara-bh. niṭṭhitam	81	10
„ 79.	98	? 17
KHANDHAKA II.
Chapter 16.	Añña-titthiya-bh. niṭṭhitam	115	16
„ 27.	Kodanā-vatthu-bh. niṭṭhitam	128	13
„ 36.	Uposatha-khandhake tatiyam bhānavāram	136	8
KHANDHAKA III.
Chapter 8.	Vassāvāsa-bh. niṭṭhitam	148	11
„ 14.	155	7
KHANDHAKA IV.
Chapter 6.	Paṭhama-bh. niṭṭhitam	164	9
„ 18.	178	14
KHANDHAKA V has no Bhānavāras, and ends in the text on page	198	20

KHANDHAKA VI.

Chapter 15.	Bhesagga-anuññāta-bh. paṭhamam	209	10
„ 30.	Likkhavi-bh. niṭṭhitam	233	24
„ 33.	Katu-vīsati-bh. niṭṭhitam	240	7
„ 40.	251	11

KHANDHAKA VII.

Chapter 7.	Ādāya-bh. niṭṭhitam	259	7
„ 13.	265	6

KHANDHAKA VIII.

Chapter 1.	Paṭhamaka-bh. niṭṭhitam	281	14
„ 15.	Visākhā-bhānavāram	294	13
„ 32.	310	16

KHANDHAKA IX.

Chapter 4.	Vāsabha-gāma-bhānavāram paṭhamam	322	11
„ 6.	Upāli-pukkā-bhānavāram dutiyam	328	6
„ 7.	333	5

KHANDHAKA X.

Chapter 2.	Dīghāvu-bhānavāram paṭhamam	349	13
„ 6.	359	10

KULLAVAGGA.

KHANDHAKA I-IV. None.

KHANDHAKA V.

Chapter 21.	Dutiya-bhānavāram	129	25
„ 37.	143	14

KHANDHAKA VI.

Chapter 3.	Bhānavāram niṭṭhitam paṭhamam	154	9
„ 11.	Dutiya-bhānavāram	167	13
„ 21.	177	10

KHANDHAKA VII.

Chapter 2.	Paṭhamaka-bhānavāram niṭṭhitam	188	9
„ 3.	Bhānavāram niṭṭhitam dutiyam .	198	10
„ 5.	Bhānavāram niṭṭhitam tatiyam .	206	8

KHANDHAKA VIII.

Chapter 4.	Bhānavāram paṭhamam	215	8
„ 12.	Dutiya-bhānavāram	231	16
„ 14.	231	—

KHANDHAKA IX.

Chapter 3. Paṭṭhama bhānavāro ¹	247	12
„ 5.	251	4

KHANDHAKA X.

Chapter 8. Paṭṭhama-bhānavāram	261	9
„ 16. Duttiya-bhānavāram	271	10
„ 27. Tatiya-bhānavāram	281	10

KHANDHAKA XI has none	292	9
---------------------------------	-----	---

KHANDHAKA XII.

Chapter 1. Paṭṭhama-bhānavāram	301	8
„ 2.	307	6

On this it may be observed—

1. The last Bhānavāra in each Khandhaka is not referred to either by name or by number, except in Mahāvagga II, and in Kullavagga VII and X. In the Mahāvagga fourteen of the Bhānavāras have special titles, independent of their number in the particular Khandhaka.

2. Probably two Bhānavāras in Mahāvagga V, all the Bhānavāras in Kullavagga I–IV, and the first in Kullavagga V, are not noticed in the printed text.

3. Making allowance for these we have in the Mahāvagga 31 (? 32) Bhānavāras, occupying about 350 pages of Pāli text, and about 610 pages in our translation. In books V–XII of the Kullavagga we have 20 Bhānavāras, occupying about 200 pages of Pāli text, and about 350 pages in our translation. Total 51 (? 52) Bhānavāras, occupying about 550 pages of Pāli, and about 960 pages of translation.

4. As in the printed text repetitions have been avoided by a mode of reference to former passages which was impossible in the MSS., the average length of the matter contained in a Bhānavāra, as written much more in full in the MSS., would be somewhat greater than its average length as actually printed. It would probably amount to what, if printed verbatim, would occupy in space not much less than a sheet of the size and type used in the edition of the text. Thus the three Bhānavāras in Mahāvagga VIII, which owing to the subject-matter are printed with only a few such contractions, occupy respectively 14, 13, and 16 pages of the text.

¹ Sic. This is the only instance in the Vinaya of a masculine use of the word.

5. The recital in the usual sara-bhañña (or intonation, see Kullavagga V, 3) of such a 'portion for recitation' would occupy in time about half-an-hour.

6. Spence Hardy informs us in his 'Eastern Monachism' (p. 168) that the Dīgha Nikāya contains 64, the Magghima Nikāya 80, the Samyutta Nikāya 100, and the Āṅguttara Nikāya 120 Bhāṇavāras. In fact it is only a few of the longer Suttas in the first two collections which are actually divided into Bhāṇavāras in the MSS.; and only the longer Nipātas in the Āṅguttara. There are no Bhāṇavāras in the Eka- and Duka-Nipātas of that collection; and there are also none in the Samyutta Nikāya, and none in any of the books of the later literature contained in the Abhidhamma Piṭaka (including all those in the Khuddaka Nikāya) as yet published.

7. The division into Bhāṇavāras is not made use of in many books of the Piṭakas themselves, or in the fifth-century commentaries of Buddhaghosa and others. In the Sutta-vibhaṅga it is only used in Pārāgikas I-III, and in the Parivāra not at all. When Spence Hardy says therefore (loc. cit. p. 172) that the Piṭakas and commentaries combined contain 5347 Bhāṇavāras, he must be referring to a mere calculation and not to the actual use of the MSS. On the other hand, the fact of Bhāṇavāras being used in the Dīpavamsa and the Khudda-sikkhā may possibly afford some clue to the age in which those works were composed.

INDEX TO VINAYA TEXTS,

PARTS I, II, III,

VOLUMES XIII, XVII, XX.

INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

References to the Introduction are in Roman numerals only, those to the Text have P., M., or K. prefixed, according as they occur in the Pâtimokkha, the Mahāvagga, or the Kullavagga, respectively. The numerals refer after P. to the pages, after M. and K. to the chapters and sections.

- Absolution, M. ii, 27; K. iv, 14, 30-32; v, 20, 5; vii, 37.
 Abuse, P. 32; K. x, 22, 1.
 Accoucheur, M. viii, 1, 4.
 Acquittal of the consciously innocent, K. i, 4.
 Age, when it begins to run, M. i, 75.
 Agriculture forbidden to Bhikkhus, P. 33.
 — blight and mildew, K. x, 1, 6.
 — scare-crows, M. i, 50.
 — ploughshares, M. vi, 26, 7.
 — gleaning, M. vi, 32, 1.
 — shape of rice-fields, M. viii, 12.
 — list of farming operations, K. vii, 1, 2.
 Ague, intermittent, M. vi, 14, 4; M. i, 6, 1, 2.
 Alligator's fat, as medicine, M. vi, 2, 2.
 Ambrosia of Arahats, M. i, 5, 7, 12; 6, 8, 12.
 Animals, conduct towards, P. 46; M. iii, 1.
 — not to be members of the order, M. i, 63; ii, 22, 3.
 — not to be killed, M. v, 9, 2; 10, 9; vi, 31, 14.
 — various, not to be eaten, M. vi, 23.
 — song of love to, K. v, 6.
 Annihilation, sense in which Buddha teaches, M. vi, 31, 7.
 Aperient myrobolan, M. viii, 1, 28.
 Arahats, M. v, 1, 18-28; K. i, 4, 1; xii, 2, 5.
 Architecture (see also Rest-house).
 Buddhist Vihāra, size of, P. 8, 9.
 — building of, P. 35; K. vi, 4, 10; vi, 5; vi, 17.
 — cleansing of, M. i, 25, 15.
 — rooms, various, M. i, 25, 19; K. vi, 33, 6.
 — buildings, list of various, M. iii, 5, 6; K. vi, 10, 4.
 — the five kinds of, M. i, 30, 4; ii, 8, 1; vi, 33, 2; viii, 7; K. vi, 1, 2.
 — earthenware huts, M. iii, 12, 9; K. v, 37.
 — loomsheds, K. v, 11, 6.
 — roofs of skins, K. v, 11, 6; 14, 2; vi, 2, 2; other kinds, K. vi, 3, 11.
 — doors, drains, chimneys, K. v, 14, 3; vi, 1, 2; 3, 8.
 — wells, building and machinery of, K. v, 16, 2.
 — artificial lakes, K. v, 17.
 — windows, K. vi, 22; viii, 3, 5.
 — plastering, &c., of walls, K. vi, 3, 1.
 — ceiling cloth, K. vi, 3, 5.
 — entrance porch, K. v, 14, 4; vi, 3, 9, 10.
 — verandahs, K. vi, 14.
 Arithmetic, M. i, 49.
 Asceticism, definition of Buddhist, M. vi, 31, 8.
 Assemblies, fortnightly, duty of attending, M. ii, 1.

- Astringent herbs, list of, M. vi, 4.
 Astrology condemned, K. v, 33, 2.
 Astronomy, elementary, to be learned, K. viii, 6, 3.
- Back scratcher, K. v, 1, 4.
 Banishment of guilty Bhikkhus, K. i, 13-17.
 Barbers, M. vi, 37; K. v, 27, 3; Bhikkhunis not to be, K. x, 10, 4.
 Bark garments forbidden, M. viii, 28, 2.
 Barter, P. 21-24, when allowed to Bhikkhus, K. vi, 19.
 Bathing, P. 44; M. i, 25, 12; v, 13, 6; K. viii, 4, 2.
 Shampooing, K. v, 1.
 Steam baths, M. vi, 14, 3; K. v, 14, 1, 3.
 — etiquette in, K. viii, 8; forbidden to Bhikkhunis, K. x, 27, 4.
 Bathing dresses for nuns, M. viii, 15, 11.
 Rules for Bhikkhunis at the bath, K. x, 27.
 Forbidden methods of, K. v, 1.
 — in the open air, K. v, 17.
 Beans, eating of, M. vi, 16.
 Bears' fat as medicine, M. vi, 2, 2.
 Beasts of prey, M. iii, 9, 1.
 Bedsteads, K. vi, 2, 3; form of, K. viii, 1, 4.
 Bewitched, cure for those, M. vi, 14, 7.
 Bhikkhunis, eight chief rules for, K. x, 1, 4; six rules for novices, ibid.; rules for reciting the Pâtimokkha before, x, 6, 1; disciplinary proceedings against, x, 6, 3; settlement of disputes among, x, 7; inhibition of, x, 9, 2; exhortation of, x, 9, 3; girdles, x, 10; shampooing, x, 2; dress of, x, 4, x, 16; devotion of property of, x, 11; disqualifications for initiation as, x, 17, 1; rules for initiation, x, 17, x, 20; rules for Pavâranâ of, x, 19; children of, x, 25, 1, 2; reinitiation of, x, 26.
 Bladder, rice-milk good for the, M. vi, 24, 5.
 Bleeding, surgical, M. vi, 14, 4.
 Bolsters, K. vi, 2, 7.
- Boots, various forbidden kinds of, M. v, 2, 3.
 Border countries, list of, M. v, 13, 12.
 Bowls, wooden, forbidden, K. v, 8, 2.
 — of iron and clay allowed, K. v, 9, 1.
 — not to be painted, K. v, 9, 2.
 — 'turning down' of, K. v, 20.
 — proper modes of carrying, K. viii, 5, 2; 6, 3.
 Boy-Bhikkhus, M. i, 49.
 Brahman used for Arahat, M. i, 1, 3, 7; M. i, 2, 3.
 Brass, K. v, 37, 1.
 Brooms, K. v, 22.
 Buddha, a, description of, M. i, 22, 2; vi, 34, 11.
- Cannibalism, M. vi, 23, 9.
 Castration forbidden, K. v, 7.
 Casuistry, K. v, 33, 2.
 Chain of Causation, M. i, 1, 2.
 Chairs, M. v, 11; K. vi, 2, 4; vi, 8.
 Chapter of five Bhikkhus, M. ix, 4.
 — of ten, M. i, 31, 4.
 — of twenty, P. 14.
 Chicken, fable of, K. i, 18, 4.
 Chunam, M. vi, 9, 2; K. v, 1-2; not to be used at the bath by Bhikkhunis, K. x, 27, 4.
 Civil law, M. vi, 3, 9; K. iv, 9; vi, 4, 10.
 Cloister, use of, for exercise, K. v, 14, 1.
 Cloths, not to be walked on, K. v, 21, 2, 3.
 Clyster, use of, forbidden, M. vi, 22, 4.
 Cobras' hoods as ornament, M. viii, 29.
 Cobwebs, M. i, 25, 15.
 Commentary, the Old, xvi.
 Common property of the order, K. vi, 15.
 Concealing offences, K. iii, passim.
 Conscience, K. i, 4, 9.
 Conversion, M. i, 7, 10.
 Corpse, belief that the sea always throws out a, K. viii, 1, 3.
 Council of Râgagaha, K. xi, passim.
 — Vesâlî, K. xii, passim.
 Covering over as with grass, K. i, 13.

- Coverlets, used in South India, M. v, 13, 6.
 Cow and calf, story of, M. v, 10.
 Crocodiles' teeth as pins, K. v, 1, 4; v, 9, 2.
 Cupping, for fever, M. vi, 14, 4.
 Curds, not to be eaten after mid-day, K. xii, 1, 10.
 Cuttle-fish bones for soup, K. v, 22.
- Dangers, the ten, M. ii, 15, 4; ii, 35; K. ix, 3, 4.
 Date of the Vinaya, xxi.
 Debtors, imprisonment of, M. i, 46.
 Dedication by water, M. i, 22, 18.
 Demons troubling Bhikkhus, M. iii, 9, 2.
 Devil-worshippers, K. v, 10, 2; v, 27, 5.
 Disabilities, the eighteen, of a Bhikkhu, K. i, 5.
 Discourse, to laymen, M. i, 75, 6.
 — to the Bhikkhus, M. i, 25, 6; v, 1, 9; K. vi, 4, 5; i, 1, 3.
 Diseases, the five, M. i, 39; i, 76, 1.
 Disqualifications, the twenty-three, after initiation, M. ii, 36; iv, 14; viii, 30.
 — for initiation of men, M. i, 76.
 — of women, K. x, 17, 1.
 Dogs, not to be eaten, M. vi, 23, 12.
 Doubts of conscience, M. iii, 6, 4.
 Drains for water, K. v, 14; v, 16; v, 17.
 Dress, P. 18-24, 28-30, 45, 54; M. vii, viii, passim; viii, 4, n.; K. v, 29; of women, K. x, 10.
 Drinks, list of, allowable, M. vi, 35, 6.
 Dung, medical use of, M. vi, 9; vi, 14, 6.
 Dwarfs, K. iv, 14, 5.
 Dyeing robes, M. i, 26, 11; viii, 10.
- Earth, diving into the, M. v, 1, 5.
 Elephants, speaking, M. vi, 20, 2.
 — not to be eaten, M. vi, 23, 10.
 — fable of the old and young, K. vii, 4, 5.
 — story of the rogue, K. vii, 3, 11.
 — of men = Buddha, K. vii, 3, 12.
 Embryo, consciousness of, M. i, 75.
 Emissary, eight qualifications of a good, K. vii, 3, 6.
- Emptiness of worldly things, K. xii, 2, 5.
 Etiquette, rules of, P. 59-67; M. vi, 36, 4; K. vi, 13; on arrival at a Vihâra, viii, 1; at meals, viii, 4; when on begging rounds, viii, 5; towards fellow-lodgers, viii, 7.
 Eunuchs, M. i, 38, 5; i, 61; iii, 11, 4; K. v, 7.
 Exhortation of Bhikkhunis, P. 35, 36.
 Expulsion of Bhikkhus, M. i, 60.
 — of a nun, K. i, 4, 9.
 Extremes, the two, M. i, 617.
 Eye of the Truth, M. i, 7, 6.
 — ointments, M. vi, 11.
- Fairies, curious belief as to, M. vi, 28, 8.
 Faith, works, and insight, M. v, 1, 21-25.
 False charges, P. 9, 10.
 False pretensions, P. 5.
 Famine, M. vi, 19, 2; vi, 32, 2; K. vi, 21.
 Fat, as medicine, M. vi, 2.
 Feathers, not to be used for dress, M. viii, 28, 2.
 Feet, washing of, M. i, 25, 11.
 — the Buddha washes disciples, M. x, 4, 3.
 Festivals, the ashvaka, M. i, 20, 15.
 Fever, M. vi, 14, 4; cure for, M. vi, 20.
 Fines of money, M. vi, 36, 1.
 Fire, sacred, M. i, 15, 2.
 — sacrifice to, M. i, 20, 19; vi, 35, 8.
 — sermon on, M. i, 21.
 — by friction, K. viii, 6, 1.
 Fistula, M. vi, 22; viii, 1, 14, K. v, 27, 4.
 Flowers, right and wrong use of, K. v, 18.
 Fly whisks, three kinds of, allowed, K. v, 23.
 Food, P. 37-42, 56, 57; K. v, 5; vii, 5-7.
 Freedom, M. i, 6, 46; i, 7, 11; i, 11, 1; K. vi, 4, 4.
 Frescoes, K. vi, 3, 2.
 Fruits, which, may be eaten, K. vi, 5.
 Furniture, P. 34, 53, 54; M. i, 25, 16; K. v, 19; v, 37; vi, passim.
 — list of, in a Vihâra, K. viii, 1, 3; 3, 3.
 Future life, M. v, 1, 20.

- Gall bladder, K. vii, 2, 5.
 Games, list of, forbidden to Bhikkhus, K. i, 13, 2.
 Gems, list of the ten, K. ix, 1, 3.
 Ghost stories, M. v, 6, 3.
 Gift of a Vihāra, M. i, 22, 18.
 Girdles, rules for, K. v, 29.
 Gleaning, M. vi, 32, 1.
 Goblins in hollow trees, M. iii, 12, 2.
 Gods envy the Arahats, K. vii, 1, 6.
 Gold and silver, the Bhikkhus not to accept, P. 26; K. xii, 1-7, 10.
 Gotamaka Ketiya, M. viii, 13, 2.
 Gotama's Ford, M. vi, 28, 12.
 Gotama's Gate, M. vi, 28, 12.
 Gotamī, M. x, 5, 7; K. x, 1, 1; xi, 1, 9.
 Gourds as water-pots, K. v, 10, 1.
 Gravel, K. v, 14, 3; v, 22.
 Grindstone, M. vi, 3, 2.
 Gums, medical, list of, M. vi, 7.
- Hair on the soles of the feet, M. v, 1.
 Hair-garments, forbidden, M. viii, 28, 2.
 Hair, modes of wearing, forbidden, K. v, 2, 3; v, 27, 4.
 Handicraft allowed to Bhikkhus, K. v, 28.
 Happiness, the highest, M. i, 3, 4.
 Harmony of mental powers, M. v, 1, 17.
 Headache, cures for, M. vi, 13.
 Heresy of Bhikkhus, punishment of, K. i, 32.
 — of laymen, how to be treated, K. v, 20.
 Hermaphrodites, M. i, 69.
 High places, worship on, K. v, 2, 6; vi, 2, 7.
 High treason, punishment for, M. ix, 2, 9; K. vii, 3, 4.
 Horns to carry salt in, K. xii, 1, 10.
 Horse-flesh not to be eaten, M. vi, 23, 11.
 House-warming, K. v, 21.
 Humours, of the body, M. vi, 14; 24, 5; viii, 1, 30; K. v, 14, 1.
- Iddhi, M. v, 1, 5, 7; vi, 15, 8; of laymen, vi, 34; K. i, 4, 4; v, 8; vii, 1, 4; 2, 1; 3, 2; of the Buddha, vii, 3, 9; sermon on, vii, 4, 3; a lesser thing than Arahatsip, vii, 4, 7; flying, K. xii, 1, 7.
 Ill-will, P. 33.
 Impurity, P. 7.
 Initiation into the order, M. i, 12, 4; i, 28 and foll.
 Insane offender, treatment of, K. i, 5.
 Insects, destruction of, M. v, 6, 3.
 Insubordination, P. 12.
 Interdictions, the form, M. i, 78.
 Intoning, K. v, 3.
 Inward struggles, M. iii, 6, 3.
 Iron, M. vi, 26, 7.
 Itch-cloth, M. viii, 17.
- Jails, public, M. i, 42.
 Jains, xi.
 Jaundice, M. vi, 1; vi, 14, 7; viii, 1, 23.
 Jewelry for men, K. v, 2, 1.
 Judges, what four things they should avoid, K. iv, 9.
 — what ten characteristics they should have, K. iv, 14, 19.
 Judicial office, four qualifications for, K. i, 9.
 Jury in different cases, K. iv, 14, 19.
- Karma, K. vii, 3, 9.
 Kingdom of Righteousness, M. i, 6, 30.
 Knives, K. v, 11, 1.
- Lamps, etiquette as to lighting, K. viii, 7, 4.
 Landmarks, M. ii, 6.
 Language, each Buddhist to learn the word in his own, K. v, 33.
 Lattices for windows, K. vi, 2, 2; etiquette as to, K. viii, 7, 4.
 Legal questions, settlement of, P. 68, 69; K. i, 14.
 Legend of Buddha, growth of, M. i, 7, 1.
 Lever used at wells, K. v, 16, 2.
 Licenses, the ten, disallowed at Vesālī, K. xii, 1, 10.
 Lies, P. 2, 32; M. ii, 7.
 Life begins in the womb, M. i, 75.
 Light (so let your light shine forth), M. v, 4, 2; ix, 2, 20; K. vi, 6, 4.

- Lions' flesh not to be eaten, M. vi, 23, 14.
 Litigiousness, P. 46.
 Lodging-places, regulation of, K. i, 4; vi, 11.
 Longing of pregnant women, M. ix, 2, 4.
 Looms, K. v, 11.
 Love, power of, M. vi, 36, 4; sense of, K. xii, 2, 5.
 Luck, walking over cloths for good, K. v, 21, 4.
 Luck in sneezing, K. v, 33, 3.
 Lunacy (?), M. vi, 10.
 Lusts, K. i, 32, 2.
 Lute, parable of the, M. v, 1, 15, 16.
- Madness, rules in case of, M. ii, 25.
 Magical powers (of laymen), M. vi, 34, 1, 2.
 Matricide, M. i, 64, 69.
 Measures of capacity, M. viii, 1, 11.
 Medicaments, the five ordinary, M. vi, 1, 3.
 Medicine, P. 27; M. vi, passim; school of, M. viii, 1.
 Mice, K. vi, 12.
 Middle country, the boundaries of, M. v, 13, 12.
 Miracles by the Buddha, M. i, 15-21; vi, 23, 6.
 Miraculous powers. See Iddhi.
 Mission of the sixty-one disciples, M. i, 11.
 Money changing, M. i, 49.
 — pieces of, M. vi, 35, 1; viii, 1, 1, 3, 13; K. v, 8, 2.
 Mosquito curtains, K. v, 13.
 — fans, K. v, 23, 1.
 Mules, cannot produce young, K. vii, 2, 5.
 Murder, P. 4.
- Nails, to be cut short, K. v, 27.
 — custom of polishing, K. v, 27.
 Nakedness forbidden, M. i, 70; viii, 28.
 Names too venerable to be uttered, M. i, 74, 1.
 Needles, K. v, 11, 2.
 Needle-cases, P. 86; K. v, 11.
 Nirvāṇa, M. i, 5, 2; i, 6, 8, 17, 18; v, 1, 18, 28; K. xi, 1, 15 (see also Arahatship).
- Noble eightfold path, xii; M. i, 6, 18.
 Noble ones, discipline of, M. ix, 1, 9.
 Noble states, the ten, M. i, 22, 13.
 Noble truths, xii; M. i, 6, 19-22; vi, 29.
 Non-human beings, M. i, 7, 3; ii, 15, 4.
 — disease, M. vi, 10.
 Nose, giving of medicine through the, M. vi, 13; viii, 1, 13.
 Novices, rules for, M. i, 56.
 — punishment of, M. i, 57-70.
 Nuns (see Bhikkhunīs).
- Ocean, parable of the, K. ix, 1, 3.
 Offences, five kinds of and seven kinds of, K. ix, 3, 3.
 Onions, not to be eaten, K. v, 34.
- Painting the face, K. v, 2, 5.
 — bowls, K. v, 9, 2.
 — walls, K. vi, 3, 2.
 Paricide, M. i, 65, 69.
 Parishes or districts, M. ii, 6-8.
 Partridge, fable of, K. vi, 6, 3.
 Pasenadi, king, story of, M. iii, 14.
 Patchwork coverlets, K. vi, 2, 7.
 Pātimokkha, x-xxiii; P. 2, 51; M. i, 36, 14; ii, 3-5, 15-21; K. ix, 2.
 Pavāraṇā ceremony, M. iv, passim.
 Penance and probation, distinctions between, K. ii, 6.
 Perfumes, list of, permitted, M. vi, 11.
 Pestle and mortar, M. vi, 9, 2.
 Pingoes, K. v, 30.
 Pins and needles in one's limbs, K. v, 14, 3.
 Plants, injury of, M. iv, 1; v, 7, 1.
 — seeds of, not to be destroyed, K. v, 5.
 Practical joking, P. 44, 46.
 Precedent, no ground for change of rules, K. xii, 1-10.
 Precepts, the ten, M. i, 56.
 Present, who must be, at a judicial proceeding before the Chapter, K. iv, 14, 16.
 Prevarication, P. 33.
 Probation, P. 14; M. i, 38; K. ii, iii.
 Property in a robe, when it passes, M. viii, 31.

- Propriety of demeanour, P. 59-61.
 Punishments, M. i, 40, 3; i, 44; ix, 2, 9.
 Pupils and preceptors, duties of, M. i, 25-27.
- Rations, apportioner of, K. i, 4; vi, 21.
 Rebuke of guilty Bhikkhus, K. i, 1-8.
 Reconciliation, act of, K. i, 18-24.
 Refuges, the three, M. i, 4, 5; i, 38, 2.
 Requisites, the four, P. 43.
 Reservoirs, K. v, 17.
 Res judicata, K. iv, 14, 25.
 Respect, want of, P. 33.
 Rest-house, public, P. 37; M. vi, 28, 3.
 Reviews not to be witnessed by Bhikkhus, P. 43.
 Rice-milk, praise of, M. vi, 24, 5.
 Riddles in casuistry, K. i, 14, 15.
 Rishis, Vedic, list of, M. vi, 35, 2.
 Rivers, ancient worship of, M. v, 9, 3; K. x, 21.
 — list of principal, K. ix, 1, 3.
 Robes, donation of, eight grounds for, M. viii, 32.
 Roots, medical, lists of, M. vi, 3, 4.
 Rugs, P. 24-27; M. v, 10; K. vi, 19.
 Ruminator, story of the human, K. v, 26.
- Sabbath (see Uposatha).
 Salt, M. x, 4, 1.
 — various kinds of, M. vi, 8.
 Samānas, xii.
 Sandals, P. 66; K. viii, 1, 3; 6, 2.
 Sanitary arrangements, K. v, 35.
 Savages, M. iv, 15.
 Sāvatti (the hymn), M. vi, 35, 8.
 Scabs, cure for, M. vi, 9.
 Schism, P. 10, 11; distinguished from disunion, K. vii, 5, 1.
 — eighteen kinds of, K. vii, 5, 2.
 Schismatics, conduct towards, M. x, 5, 8; K. i, 4; vii, 4, 4.
 Scissors, K. vi, 21, 3.
 Sects, non-Buddhistic, P. 41.
 Seedlings, ancient law of, M. vi, 39.
 Seeds, fruits containing life, not to be eaten, K. v, 5.
- Self (or soul), M. i, 6, 38-41.
 Sexual intercourse, P. 4; M. i, 78.
 Shampooing, K. v, 1.
 Shoes, M. i, 25, 8; v, 1, 29; 8, 3; v, 12; v, 13, 13; K. v, 12.
 Sick Bhikkhus, M. ii, 23; iii, 6; iv, 3; 17, 7; viii, 26, 27; K. vi, 10.
 — relatives, M. iii, 7.
 — Bhikkhu, story of the Buddha nursing a, M. viii, 26.
 Silence, vow of, forbidden, M. iv, 1.
 Singing the Dhamma forbidden, K. v, 3.
 Skins, not to be used for dress, M. viii, 28, 2.
 — to be used for roofing, K. v, 11, 6; 14, 3.
 — for water-vessels, K. v, 16, 2.
 Skulls as bowls, K. v, 10, 2.
 Sky, walking in the, M. v, 1, 7.
 Slander, P. 32.
 Slaughter-house for oxen, M. v, 1, 13.
 Slaves, runaway, M. i, 47.
 Snakes in form of men, M. i, 3, 3; i, 63; vi, 23, 13.
 — of supernatural power, M. i, 15.
 — girdle of, K. vii, 2, 1.
 — bite of, cure for, M. vi, 14, 6.
 — — charm against, K. v, 6.
 — not to be eaten, M. vi, 23, 13.
 — in houses, K. vi, 2, 5; vi, 3, 4; viii, 1, 1.
 Sneezing, curious custom connected with, K. v, 33, 3.
 Snow, M. i, 20, 15.
 Sodomy, M. i, 52.
 Soldiers may not enter the order, M. i, 40.
 Sorcery, M. vi, 14, 7.
 Spittoon, K. viii, 1.
 Spoons, K. viii, 5, 2.
 Sporting in water, P. 44.
 Staves, K. v, 24.
 Subordination of guilty Bhikkhus, K. i, 9-12.
 Suffering, M. i, 6, 20-22.
 Sugar, M. vi, 26.
 Sunshades, K. v, 9, 5; v, 23; etiquette as to, P. 65; K. viii, 1, 3.
 Suspension of Bhikkhus, M. i, 79; K. i, 25.
- Tailor, story of his building, K. vi, 5.
 Tanks, K. v, 17.

- Tathâgatas (= Buddhas), habits of, M. i, 4, 4.
 — death of, K. vii, 3, 10.
 Teetotalism, P. 44.
 Theft, P. 4.
 Thimbles, K. v, 11, 5.
 Thoughts, understanding their, M. i, 22, 4; v, i, 7.
 Titthiyas, M. i, 38; vi, 31; 34, 12; 35, 1; viii, 28.
 Toddy drinking forbidden, K. xii, 1, 10.
 Toleration, duty of, M. vi, 31, 11.
 Tooth-sticks, rules for, K. v, 31.
 Treasure trove, P. 53.
 Upanishads, x.
 Uposatha (seventh day), x; M. ii, passim.
 Validity of official acts of the Sam-gha, M. ix, passim.
 Vedas, sacred verses of, M. vi, 35, 2, 8.
 Vehicles, use of, forbidden, M. v, 9.
 Vihâra = cave, M. v, 1, 5.
 Voting in the Chapters of the Order, K. iv, 9-10; 14, 25; vii, 4.
 Vultures, training of, K. i, 32.
 Walking up and down thinking, M. v, 1, 14; K. ii, 1, 4; v, 14, 1.
 Wandering ascetics, non-Buddhistic, M. i, 23.
 Was, keeping of, M. i, 13, 1; iii, passim.
 Waste tub, K. viii, 4, 4.
 Water, pouring out of, as dedication ceremony, M. i, 22, 18;
 viii, 30, 4; used as lookingglass, K. v, 2, 4; strainers, K.
 v, 13.
 Weapons, P. 65; K. v, 37, 1; vii,
 3, 4, 7.
 Wells, K. v, 16, 2.
 Wheel and axle machinery, K. v,
 16, 2.
 White ants, K. v, 9, 4; vi, 1, 2; viii,
 3, 2.
 Wind in the stomach, M. vi, 14, 1;
 16, 3; 17; K. v, 34.
 Window spaces, M. i, 25, 15, 18;
K. viii, 1, 5; three kinds of lat-tices for, K. vi, 2, 2.
 Winter, M. i, 20, 15.
 Wishing-gift, what it is, K. i, 4, 5.
 Women, first disciples, M. i, 8, 3.
 — See Bhikkhunî.
 — story of the lost, M. i, 14.
 Worldly talk, specimens of, M. v,
 6, 3.
 Worms in the head, M. viii, 1, 18.
 Writing, xxxii-xxxv; M. i, 49.

INDEX OF PROPER NAMES.

- Abhaya, M. viii, 1, 4 seq., 13 seq.
Addakāsī, K. x, 22, 1.
 Agapālanigrodha, M. i, 2, 1; 3, 1; 5, 1.
 Agātasattu, K. vii, 2, 1, 5; 3, 4 seq.;
 xi, 1, 7.
 Agga/apura, K. xii, 1, 9.
 Aggā/ava ketiya, K. vi, 17, 1.
 Agita, K. xii, 2, 7.
 Agita Kesakambālī, K. v, 8, 1.
 Ahirāgakulāni, K. v, 6.
 Ahogaṅga pabbata, K. xii, 1, 8.
 Ākāsagotta, M. vi, 22, 1.
 Akiravattī, M. v, 9, 1; viii, 15, 11;
 K. ix, 1, 3 seq.
 Ālāra Kālāma, M. i, 6, 1, 2.
 Ālavakā bhikkhū, K. vi, 17, 1.
 Ālavī, K. vi, 17, 1; 21, 1.
 Amanussa, M. i, 6, 3; vii, 1, 26.
 Ambalattbikā, K. xi, 1, 7.
 Ambapālī (*pālīkā), M. vi, 30; viii,
 1, 1 seq.
 Ambapālivana, M. vi, 30, 6.
 Ānanda, M. i, 4, 9, 5; 51; 53; v,
 13, 8; 9, 1; 17; 24, passim.
 Anāthapīṇḍika, M. x, 5, 8; K. vi, 4;
 9. See Sudatta and Getavana.
 Andhakavinda, M. ii, 12, 1; vi, 24, 1;
 26, 1; viii, 15, 10.
 Andhavana, M. viii, 23, 3.
 Aṅgā, M. i, 19, 1, 3.
 Aṅgīrasa, M. i, 15, 7; vi, 35, 2.
 Aṅguttarāpa, M. vi, 34, 17.
 Aññākondañña, M. i, 6, 31 seq.
 Anotattadaha, M. i, 19, 2, 4.
 Antaka, M. i, 11, 2; 13, 2. See Māra.
 Anupiyā, K. vii, 1, 1; 2, 1.
 Anuruddha, M. x, 4; 5, 6; K. i, 18,
 1; vii, 1, 1 seq.
 Āpanam, M. vi, 35, 1; 36, 1.
 Ārāmikagāma, M. vi, 15, 4.
 Arittba, K. i, 32 seq.
 Ariyam āyatanam, M. vi, 28, 8.
 Assagi, M. i, 6, 36; 23.
 Assagipunabbasukā bhikkhū, K. i, 1;
 seq.; vi, 16.
 Asurā, K. ix, 1, 3.
 Attbaka, M. vi, 35, 2.
 Ātumā, M. vi, 37; 38.
 Avantī, M. v, 13, 1.
 Avantiakkhināpatha, M. v, 13.
 Avantiakkhināpathakā bhikkhū, K.
 xii, 1, 7, 8.
 Bālakalonakāragāma, M. x, 4, 1.
 Bārānasī, M. i, 6, 6, 10, 30; 7, 1; 9,
 1, 2; 14, 1; v, 7, 1; 8, 1; vi,
 23, 1 seq.; 24, 1; viii, 1, 22;
 14, 1; 15, 1; x, 2, 3.
 Belattba Kakkāna, M. vi, 26.
 Belattbasīsa, M. vi, 9, 1; viii, 17.
 Belattbiputta. See Saṅgaya.
 Bhaddasālā, M. x, 4, 6 seq.
 Bhaddavaggiyā, M. i, 14.
 Bhaddiya (the place), M. v, 8, 1; 9,
 1; vi, 3, 4.
 Bhaddiya (the Bhikkhu), M. i, 6, 33;
 K. vii, 1, 3 seq.
 Bhaggā, K. v, 21, 1; 22, 1.
 Bhagu, M. vi, 35, 2; viii, 24, 6; x, 4,
 1; K. vii, 1, 4.
 Bhalika, M. i, 4.
 Bhāradvāga, M. vi, 35, 2; K. v, 8.
 Bhesakā/āvana, K. v, 21, 1.
 Bhumā devā, M. i, 6, 30.
 Bhummagaka. See Mettiyabhummagakā.
 Bhūṣāgāra, M. vi, 37, 4.
 Bimbisāra (rāgā Māgadha Seniya),
 M. i, 22; 39; 40; 42; 46; ii, 1;
 iii, 4, 3, passim; K. v, 5; vi, 3, 11;
 vii, 3, 5.
 Bodhi, K. v, 21.
 Brahma, K. vii, 3, 16.
 Brahmaddatta, M. x, 2, 3 seq.; K. xi,
 1, 7.
 Brahmakāyikā devā, M. i, 6, 30.
 Brahmā Sahampati, M. i, 5, 18; 6, 30.
 Dabba Mallaputta, K. iv, 4; v, 20.

- Dakkhināgiri, M. i, 5, 3; viii, 12, 1;
 K. xi, 1, 10.
 Dakkhināpatha. See Avantidakkh°.
 Dakkhināpathaka, K. i, 18, 3.
 Devadatta, M. ii, 16, 8; K. vii, 1, 4;
 2 seq. See Godhiputta.
 Devaputta, K. vii, 2, 2.
 Devatā, M. i, 4; 6, 2, 4; 20; vi, 28,
 7; 11; viii, 16, 3.
 Dhaniya, K. xi, 1, 6.
 Dighāvu, M. x, 2, 8 seq.

 Erāpatha, K. v, 6.

 Gagga, M. ii, 25; K. iv, 5.
 Gaggara, M. ix, 1, 1.
 Gandhabbā, K. ix, 1, 3.
 Gaṅgā, M. v, 9, 4; vi, 28, 12 seq.;
 K. ix, 1, 3 seq.
 Gavampati, M. i, 91, 2.
 Gayā, M. i, 6, 7; 21, 1.
 Gayākassapa, M. i, 15, 1; 20, 22.
 Gayāsisa, M. i, 21, 1; 22, 1; K. vii,
 4, 1.
 Ghositārāma, M. x, 1, 1; K. i, 25, 1;
 31; vii, 2, 1; xi, 1, 14.
 Giggakūṭa, M. ii, 1, 1; 5, 4; v, 1, 1,
 3, 14, 17; K. iv, 4, 4; viii, 3, 9.
 Giṇṇakāvāsatha, M. vi, 30, 6.
 Giribbaga, M. i, 24, 5, 6, 7. See Rā-gagaha.
 Godhiputta, K. vii, 3, 2. See Devadatta.
 Gomarakandarā, K. iv, 4, 4.
 Gopaka, M. viii, 24, 6.
 Gosāla. See Makkhali.
 Gotama (Buddha), M. i, 2, 2, 6, 10, 15; 22, 2, passim; (Buddha's father), M. i, 54, 4.
 Gotamadvāra, M. vi, 28, 12.
 Gotamaka Ketiya, M. viii, 13, 2.
 Gotamatittha, M. vi, 28, 12.
 Gotamī. See Mahāpagāpati.

 Gambudīpa, M. i, 20, 7 seq.
 Gātiyāvana, M. v, 8, 1; vi, 34, 10.
 Geta, K. vi, 4, 9 seq.
 Getavana, M. i, 55; iii, 5, 1, passim;
 K. i, 1, 1; 13, 5; 18, 5, passim.
 Gīvaka Komārabhakkā, M. i, 39;
 viii, 1, 4 seq.; 2; K. v, 14, 1.
 Gīvakambavana, K. iv, 4, 4; xi, 1, 7.

 Himavanta, K. vi, 6, 3.

 Inda. See Sakka.

 Isibhatta, M. viii, 24, 5.
 Isidāsa, M. viii, 24, 5.
 Isigili, K. iv, 4, 4.
 Isipatana, M. i, 6, 6, 10, 30; 7, 7;
 v, 7, 1; vi, 23, 1; viii, 14, 1.

 Kagaṅgala, M. v, 13, 12.
 Kāka, M. viii, 1, 26 seq.
 Kākandaka putta, K. xii, 1, 1 seq.;
 2, 1 seq.
 Kakkāna, Kakkāyana. See Pakudha,
 Belattaba, Mahākakkāna.
 Kakudha, K. vii, 2, 2; (Devaputta),
 K. vii, 2, 2.
 Kālāma. See Ālāra.
 Kalandakanivāpa. See Ve/uvana.
 Kalandaputta, K. xi, 1, 6.
 Kālasilā, K. iv, 4, 4.
 Kandaka, M. i, 52; 60.
 Kandakā, M. i, 60.
 Kanhāgotamā, K. v, 6.
 Kaṅkhārevata, M. vi, 16.
 Kannakugga, K. xii, 1, 9.
 Kapilavatthu, M. i, 54, 1; 55, 1; K.
 x, 1, 1.
 Kāsi, M. i, 6, 8; vi, 17, 8 seq.; ix,
 1, 1, 5, 7; K. i, 13, 3; 18, 1.
 Kāsirāgā, M. viii, 2; x, 2, 3 seq.
 Kassapa, M. i, 15 seq.; 22, 5; vi, 35, 2.
 Kassapagotta, M. ix, 1.
 Karamorakatissaka, K. vii, 3, 14.
 Keniya, M. vi, 35.
 Kesakambali. See Agita.
 Khandadevī, K. viii, 3, 14.
 Khuggasobhita, K. xii, 2, 7.
 Kimbila, M. x, 4; K. vii, 1, 4.
 Kirāgiri, K. i, 13 seq.; vi, 16; 17, 1.
 Kokālika, K. vii, 3, 14; 4, 2 seq.
 Kokanada, K. v, 21.
 Kolita, M. i, 24, 3.
 Koḷivisa. See Sona.
 Koliyaputta, K. viii, 2, 2.
 Komārabhakkā. See Gīvaka.
 Kondāṇṇa, M. i, 6, 29, 31.
 Kosalā, M. i, 73, 1, 2; ii, 15, 3; iii,
 5, 1; 9, 1; 11, passim; K. v, 13,
 2; 32, 2.
 Kosalarāgā, M. x, 2, 3 seq.
 Kosambakā bhikkhū (upāsakā), M.
 x, 4, 6; 5.
 Kosambī, M. viii, 1, 27; x, 1, 1; 3;
 K. i, 25, 1; 28, 1; vii, 2, 1, 5;
 xi, 1, 11; xii, 1, 7; 2, 8.
 Kosinārakā Mallā, M. vi, 36, 1.
 Korīgāma, M. vi, 29 seq.
 Kukkurārāma, M. viii, 24, 6.

Kumâarakassapa, M. i, 75.
 Kuraraghara, M. v, 13, 1.
 Kuru. See Uttarakuru.
 Kusinârâ, M. vi, 36, 1, 6; 37, 1; K. xi, 1, 1.
 Kuṛikanna. See Sona.
 Kampâ, M. v, 1, 1; ix, 1; 2.
 Kampeyyaka, K. xii, 2, 8.
 Kâtumahârâgikâ devâ, M. i, 6, 30.
 Kḥabyâputtâ, K. v, 6.
 Kbanna, K. i, 25; 28; 30; 31; iv, 14; xi, 1, 11, 14.
 Kitta, K. i, 18; 22 seq.
 Kodanâvatthu, M. ii, 17, 1; 18, 1.
 Korapapâta, K. iv, 4, 4.
 Lattbivanuyyâna, M. i, 22, 1, 2.
 Liḁḁbavi, M. vi, 30; 31, 1; K. v, 20.
 Lohitaka. See Pandukalohitaka.
 Maddakukkḁi, M. ii, 5, 3; K. iv, 4, 4.
 Magadhâ, M. i, 5, 7; 19, 1, 3; 24, 5, 6, 7; 39, 1.
 Mâgadha. See Bimbisâra.
 Mâgadha, M. i, 22, 3 seq.; 24, 5; K. vii, 2, 2.
 Magadha-khetta, M. viii, 12, 1.
 Magadha-mahâmatta, M. vi, 28, 7 seq.
 Maggimâ ganapadâ, K. i, 18; 22 seq.
 Mahaka, M. i, 52.
 Mahâkakkâna, M. v, 13; x, 5, 6; K. i, 18, 1.
 Mahâkappina, M. v, 13; x, 5, 6; K. i, 18, 1.
 Mahâkassapa, M. i, 74; ii, 12, 1; viii, 21, 1; x, 5, 6; K. xi, 1, 1 seq.
 Mahâkottbita, M. x, 5, 6; K. i, 18, 1.
 Mahâkunda, M. x, 5, 6; K. i, 18, 1.
 Mahâmogallâna, M. i, 23; 24; vi, 20; K. i, 18, 1; v, 8, 1; 34, 2; vii, 2, 2; 4, 2; ix, 1. See Sâriputtamogallânâ.
 Mahânâma, M. i, 6, 36; K. vii, 1, 1.
 Mahâpagâpatî Gotamî, M. x, 5, 7; K. xi, 1 seq.; xi, 1, 9.
 Mahârâgâno, M. i, 4, 4; 16.
 Mahâsâlâ, M. v, 13, 12.
 Mahâvana, M. vi, 30, 6; K. v, 13, 3; vi, 5, 1; x, 1, 2; xii, 1, 1.
 Mahî, K. ix, 1, 3 seq.
 Makkhali Gosâla, K. v, 8, 1.
 Makkhikâsanda, K. i, 18; 22 seq.
 Malla, M. vi, 36; viii, 19; K. vii, 1, 1.
 Mallaputta. See Dabba.

Mallî, K. x, 12.
 Mandâkinî, M. vi, 20.
 Manikû/aka, K. xii, 1, 4.
 Mâra, M. i, 6, 30; 11, 2; 13, 2; K. xi, 1, 9. See Antaka.
 Mârasenâ, M. i, 1, 7.
 Mendaka, M. vi, 34.
 Mettiya, K. iv, 4, 8.
 Mettiyabhummagakkâ, K. iv, 4, 5 seq.; v, 20.
 Migâramâtâ, K. ix, 1, 1. See Visâkhâ.
 Moggallâna. See Mahâmogallâna.
 Mukalinda, M. i, 3; 4, 1.
 Nadî Kassapa, M. i, 15, 1; 20, 30.
 Nâga, M. i, 15; 63; K. ix, 1, 3.
 Nâlandâ, K. xi, 1, 7.
 Nanda, M. i, 54, 5.
 Nâtaputta, M. vi, 31; K. v, 8, 1.
 Nâtikâ, M. vi, 30, 6.
 Neraṅgarâ, M. i, 1, 1; 15, 6; 20, 15.
 Nigrodhârâma, M. i, 54, 1; K. x, 1, 1.
 Nilavâsî, M. viii, 24, 25.
 Nimmânaratî devâ, M. i, 6, 30.
 Paggota (râgâ), M. viii, 1, 23 seq.; 24.
 Pâṭinakâ (bhikkhû), K. xii, 2, 2 seq.
 Pâṭinavamsadâya, M. x, 4, 1 seq.
 Pakkantimâ ganapadâ, M. v, 13, 16 seq.
 Pakudha Kakkâyaana, K. v, 8, 1.
 Pandukalohitaka, K. i, 1; 6, 8.
 Paranimmitavasavatî devâ, M. i, 6, 30.
 Pârileyayaka, M. x, 4, 6 seq.; 5, 1.
 Pasenadi (râgâ Kosala), M. iii, 14.
 Pâraligâma, M. vi, 28.
 Pâraliputta, M. vi, 28, 8; viii, 24, 6.
 Pâṭibeyyakâ bhikkhû, M. vii, 1, 1 seq.; K. xii, 1, 7, 8; 2, 2 seq.
 Pāvâ, K. xi, 1, 1.
 Phalikasandâna, M. viii, 24, 6.
 Pilinda-gâma, M. vi, 15, 4, 7.
 Pilindavakkha, M. vi, 13 seq.
 Pindolabhâradvâga, K. v, 8.
 Pisâṭillika, K. v, 10, 3; 27, 5.
 Pubbârâma, K. ix, 1, 1.
 Punabbasuka. See Assagipunabbasukâ.
 Punnagi, M. i, 9, 1, 2.
 Purâna, K. xi, 1, 10.
 Pûrana Kassapa, K. v, 8, 1.
 Puratthimâ ganapadâ, K. i, 18, 3; xii, 2, 3.

- Rāgagaha, M. i, 22, 1, 2, 13; 23, 1 seq.; 28, 2; 30, 1; 49, 1; 53, 1, passim; K. iv, 4, 15; v, 1, 1; 2, 6, passim.
- Rāgagahaka, M. viii, 1, 2, 16 seq.; K. v, 8; vi, 1; 4, 1, 6 seq.
- Rāgāyatana, M. i, 4, 1, 2; 5, 1.
- Rāhu asurinda, K. xii, 13.
- Rāhula, M. i, 54; 55; x, 5, 6; K. i, 18, 1.
- Rāhulamātā, M. i, 54.
- Rakkhitavanasanda, M. x, 4, 6 seq.
- Rāmaputta. See Uddaka.
- Revata, M. viii, 31, 1; x, 5, 6; K. i, 18, 1; xii, 1, 9 seq.; 2, 1 seq. See Kanhkārevata.
- Roga, M. vi, 36; viii, 19.
- Sabbakāmī, K. xii, 2, 4 seq.
- Sāgata, M. v, 1, 3 seq.
- Sahagāti, K. xii, 1, 9; 2, 1.
- Sāketa, M. i, 66, 1; vii, 1, 1; viii, 1, 8; 13, 7.
- Sākiya, M. i, 38, 11; K. vii, 1, 4; x, 1, 2; 2, 1.
- Sakka, M. i, 17; 20; 22, 13 seq.
- Sakkā, M. i, 54; K. vii, 1, 1 seq.; x, 1, 1, 2.
- Sakya, K. vii, 1, 3.
- Sakyakula, M. i, 22, 2; 23, 4; vi, 34, 11; 35, 1.
- Sakyakumarā, K. vii, 1, 1 seq.
- Sakyaputta. See Upananda.
- Sākyaputtiya, M. i, 24, 7 seq., passim.
- Sakya-rāgā, K. vii, 1, 3 seq.
- Sālavatī, M. viii, 1, 3 seq.
- Sālavatī, K. xii, 2, 2 seq.
- Sallavatī, M. v, 13, 12.
- Sambhūta, K. xii, 1, 8 seq.; 2, 4 seq.
- Samkassa, K. xii, 1, 9.
- Samuddadatta, K. vii, 3, 14.
- Sāna, M. viii, 24, 6.
- Sānavāsī, M. viii, 24, 6; K. xii, 1, 8 seq.; 2, 4 seq.
- Saṅgaya, M. i, 23; 24; K. v, 8, 1.
- Saṅgikāputta, K. vi, 21, 1 seq.
- Sappasonḍikapabbhāra, K. iv, 4, 4.
- Sarabhū, K. ix, 1, 3 seq.
- Sāriputta, M. i, 23; 24; 28, 2, 3; 54, passim; K. i, 18, 1; v, 34; 2; vi, 6, 1; 7; vii, 3, 2 seq.; 4; viii, 4, 1. See Sāriputtamoggallānā.
- Sāriputtamoggallānā, K. i, 13, 16; 16; vi, 16, 1; vii, 3, 1; 4, 1 seq.
- Sattapanniguhā, K. iv, 4, 4.
- Sāvatti, M. i, 55; 66, 1; 67; iii, 5, 1, passim; K. i, 1, 1; 13, 3, 5; 18, 4, passim.
- Senānigama, M. i, 11, 1.
- Seniya. See Bimbisāra.
- Setakannika, M. v, 13, 12.
- Seyyasaka, K. i, 9 seq.
- Sīha, M. vi, 31.
- Sītavana, M. v, 1, 12 seq.; 17; K. iv, 4, 4; vi, 4, 3 seq.
- Sīvaka (yakkha), K. vi, 4, 3.
- Siveyyaka, M. viii, 1, 29, 34.
- Sona Koḷivisa, M. v, 1.
- Sona Kuḷikanna, M. v, 13.
- Soreyya, K. xii, 1, 9.
- Sudatta, K. vi, 4, 4. Cf. Anātha-pindika.
- Suddhāvāsā devā, Suddhāvāsakāyikā devatā, K. xii, 2, 2.
- Suddhodana, M. i, 54.
- Sudhamma, K. i, 18; 22 seq.
- Sudinna, K. xi, 1, 6.
- Sumana, K. xii, 2, 7.
- Sumsumāragira, K. v, 21, 1.
- Sunidha, M. vi, 28, 7 seq.
- Supassa nāgarāgā, M. vi, 23, 13.
- Supatittha Ketiya, M. i, 22, 1, 2.
- Takkasilā, M. viii, 1, 5 seq.
- Tapodakandarā, K. iv, 4, 4.
- Tapodārāma, K. iv, 4, 4.
- Tapussa, M. i, 4.
- Tāvattimsa, M. i, 6, 30; 20, 10; vi, 28, 8; 30, 5.
- Tekula. See Yame/utekulā.
- Thūna, M. v, 13, 12.
- Tissaka. See Kasamorakatissaka.
- Tusitā devā, M. i, 6, 30.
- Udāyi, M. ii, 16, 7; K. iii, 1; x, 9, 3 seq.
- Uddaka Rāmaputta, M. i, 6, 3, 4.
- Udena, M. iii, 5; K. xi, 1, 11 seq.
- Udumbara, K. xii, 1, 9.
- Uggenī, M. viii, 1, 23.
- Ukkala, M. i, 4, 2.
- Upaka, M. i, 6, 7 seq.
- Upālī, M. i, 62; 64; ix, 6; K. i, 18, 1; ii, 2; 7, passim.
- Upālī (of Rāgagaha), M. i, 49.
- Upananda, M. i, 52; 60; iii, 14; vi, 19; viii, 25; K. vi, 10, 1; 12; xii, 1, 5.
- Upasena Vahgantaputta, M. i, 31.
- Upatissa, M. i, 24, 3.
- Uppalavannā, K. x, 8.

- Uruvelā, M. i, 1, 1; 6, 6; 11, 1; 14, 1; 15, 1; 22, 4.
 Uruvelakassapa, M. i, 15; 22, 4; K. v, 37.
 Usiraddhaja, M. v, 13, 2.
 Uttara, K. xii, 2, 3.
 Uttarakuru, M. i, 19, 2, 4.
 Uvāla, K. iv, 11; 12, 5.
 Vaddha, K. v, 20.
 Vaggi, M. vi, 28.
 Vaggiputtaka, K. vii, 4, 1; xii, 1, 1 seq.; 2, 1 seq.
 Vaggumudātīriya, K. xi, 1, 6.
 Vālikārāma, K. xii, 2, 7.
 Vāmadeva, M. vi, 35, 2.
 Vāmaka, M. vi, 35, 2.
 Vaṅgantaputta, M. i, 31.
 Vappa, M. i, 6, 33.
 Vāsabhagāma, M. ix, 1, 1, 5, 7.
 Vāsabhagāmika, K. xii, 2, 7.
 Vāsetṭha, M. vi, 35, 2.
 Vassakāra, M. vi, 28, 7 seq.
 Vebhāra, K. iv, 4, 4.
 Vedehiputta, K. xi, 1, 7.
 Veḷuvana, M. i, 22, 18; 24, 3; iii, 1, 1; vi, 17, 1, 8; 22, 1; 27; viii, 1, 1; K. iv, 4, 1, 4; v, 1, 1; vi, 1, 1; 21, 1; vii, 2, 5; 4, 3; xi, 1, 11; xii, 1, 4.
 Vesālī, M. vi, 30, 31, 4, 10 seq.; 32, 1; viii, 1, 1 seq.; 13; 14, 1; K. v, 12, 1; 13, 3; 14, 1; 21, 1; vi, 5, 1; 6, 1; x, 1, 2; 9, 1; xi, 1, 6; xii, 1, 1 seq.; 2, 4 seq.
 Vesālīka, K. vii, 4, 1; xii, 1, 1 seq.
 Vessāmitta, M. vi, 35, 2.
 Videha. See Vedehiputta.
 Vimala, M. i, 9, 1, 2.
 Virūpakkhā, K. v, 6.
 Visākhā Migāramâtā, M. iii, 13; viii, 15; 18; x, 5, 9; K. v, 22; vi, 14.
 Yakkha, K. vi, 4, 3.
 Yāmā devā, M. i, 6, 30.
 Yamataggi, M. vi, 35, 2.
 Yame/utekulā, K. v, 33, 1.
 Yamunā, K. ix, 1, 3 seq.
 Yasa, M. i, 7 seq.; K. xii, 1, 1 seq.; 2, 1 seq.
 Yasoga, M. vi, 33, 5.

INDEX OF PĀLI WORDS

EXPLAINED OR REFERRED TO IN THE NOTES.

The references are to parts i, ii, iii, and pages.

akappakata, part ii, p. 155.
 akaraṇīya, iii, 355.
 akuppa, ii, 435.
 akkanāla, ii, 247.
 akkavāra, iii, 178.
 agga, iii, 202.
 agga/a, ii, 215.
 agga/avatti, iii, 106.
 angana, iii, 295.
 akakkhussa, iii, 147.
 akelaka, i, 41.
 akkibaddha, ii, 207.
 akkekāvara, i, 29.
 akkibupiyati, iii, 83.
 aginakkhipa, ii, 247.
 añjana, ii, 50.
 añjani, iii, 141.
 aññā, ii, 10; iii, 303.
 aññāta, iii, 186.
 aññāna, iii, 67.
 Attbaka, ii, 130.
 attbakavagga, ii, 37.
 attbapadaka, iii, 167.
 attbilla, iii, 341.
 addbakāsika, ii, 195 seq.
 addbakusi, ii, 209.
 addbapallāhka, iii, 367.
 addbamandala, ii, 209.
 addbayoga, i, 174.
 addbarūka, iii, 138.
 attakāmapārikariyā, i, 8.
 attādāna, iii, 313.
 atthavasa, iii, 263.
 atthāra, ii, 148 seq.
 atthāraka, ii, 155.
 adesanaḡgāmi, ii, 333.
 addhāna, i, 26.
 adhittabhati, iii, 101, 117.
 adhittabita, ii, 40, 151, 152.
 adhisiḡa, ii, 23.
 anakkbariya, i, 85.

anantarika, iii, 285.
 anapadāna, ii, 272.
 anabhāva, ii, 113.
 anabhirati, iii, 77.
 anavasesa, ii, 316; iii, 35.
 anādariya, i, 44.
 anāmantaāra, ii, 150.
 anīka, ii, 13.
 anupakhagga, i, 42; iii, 285.
 anupaññatti, iii, 374.
 anupadaggeyya, i, 29.
 anubhāga, iii, 203.
 anullapanā, iii, 36.
 anuvāta, ii, 154; ii, 231; iii, 93.
 anuvivatta, ii, 209.
 anusampavaḡkatā, iii, 36.
 ane/agala, ii, 37.
 antaggāhika, i, 344.
 antaraghara, i, 56, 59, 65; iii, 286.
 antaravāsaka, ii, 212.
 antarākāga, iii, 146.
 antimavatthu, i, 276.
 apagabbha, ii, 111, 112.
 apatissarana, iii, 175.
 apalokana, iii, 37.
 apassenaphalaka, iii, 219.
 appuyya, iii, 183.
 appotbeti, ii, 349.
 abbhussahanatā, iii, 36.
 abhayūvara, i, 207.
 abhisamkhārika, iii, 9.
 abhisanna, ii, 60.
 abhisannakāya, iii, 102.
 abbihaḡḡum, i, 21; ii, 440.
 ambakā, ii, 107.
 aranisaḡita, iii, 292.
 ariyavāsa, i, 141.
 alakkhika, iii, 250.
 alamkammaniya, i, 16.
 avakkārapāḡi, iii, 287.
 avagandakārakam, i, 64.

avañga, iii, 342.
 avippavāsa, i, 20, 255.
 asaddhamma, iii, 262.
 asamādāna-kāra, ii, 151.
 asambhoga, iii, 120.
 ahivātakaroga, i, 204.
 Ahogaṅga, ii, 146.
 āgamma, ii, 237.
 ātamanakumbhi, iii, 280.
 ātariya, i, 178 seq.
 ātariyaka, ii, 140.
 ākāra, i, 184.
 ānikolaka, iii, 348.
 ādeyyavāta, iii, 186.
 ānantarika, iii, 198, 246.
 āpāyika, iii, 262.
 āmaḥakavāntikapīṭha, iii, 165.
 āmisa, i, 36.
 āmisakhāra, ii, 60.
 āyataka, iii, 72.
 āyatikā, iii, 115.
 āyoga, iii, 141.
 ārāma, i, 23.
 ārāmika, iii, 282.
 ālambanabāhā, iii, 96.
 ālinda, iii, 175.
 āvaraṇa, iii, 336.
 āvasathapinda, i, 37.
 āvāsaparamparā, ii, 371.
 āvikkhāna, iii, 106.
 āsaggaṇam, iii, 264.
 āsatti, iii, 183.
 āsanantarikā, ii, 292.
 āsanapaṭṭhāpaka, iii, 408.
 āsandi, ii, 27.
 āsandika, iii, 165.
 āsādeti, ii, 373.
 āsittakūpadhāna, iii, 117.
 āsevanavittthaka, iii, 95.
 āhaḥkappādaka, iii, 164.
 āhunderika, i, 205.
 ikkāsa, iii, 171.
 iddhi, i, 119; ii, 136; iii, 230.
 indakhila, i, 52.
 ukkapindaka, ii, 70.
 ukkāśika, iii, 68.
 ukkukāma, iii, 16.
 ukkukā, i, 62.
 ukkinatha, i, 194.
 ukkbedavāda, ii, 111.
 uṇhisa, iii, 97.
 utu, ii, 236.
 uttarakkhāda, ii, 27.

uttarapāsaka, iii, 106.
 uttarāsaṅga, ii, 212; iii, 123.
 uttaribhaṅga, iii, 9, 179.
 uttiṭṭhapatta, i, 152.
 udakaniddhamana, iii, 108.
 udakasamgaha, ii, 147.
 udakasārīka, ii, 225.
 udukkhalika, iii, 105.
 udda, ii, 16.
 uddesa, i, 12.
 uddosita, iii, 363.
 uddhasudhā, iii, 174.
 upagga, iii, 351.
 upaggbāya, i, 178 seq.
 upaṭṭhapeti, i, 49.
 upadhi, i, 85, 138.
 upanandhati, iii, 100.
 upanikkhitta, i, 26.
 upariṭṭhita, iii, 273.
 upalāpeti, i, 49.
 uposathapamukha, i, 252.
 ubbāḥa, ii, 314.
 ubbāhikā, iii, 49.
 ubbhanda, ii, 210.
 ubbhāra, i, 19; ii, 157.
 ubbhida, ii, 48.
 ubhatolohitakūpa, dhāna, ii, 28.
 ubhatovinaya, iii, 376.
 ubhatovibhaṅga, iii, 376.
 ummattakālaya, iii, 21.
 urakkhāda, ii, 348.
 ullikhita, ii, 153.
 ulloka, iii, 169.
 ussādeti, iii, 202, 301.
 ussāvanā, ii, 120.
 ussira, ii, 23.
 usselbeti, ii, 349.
 ūhaṇṇi, iii, 277.
 ekakkīya, ii, 212.
 ekapariyākata, iii, 341.
 ekapalāsika, ii, 13.
 ekuddesa, i, 11.
 eragu, ii, 35.
 eḥakapādakapīṭha, iii, 165.
 okirati, ii, 231.
 okosimaka, iii, 40.
 ogumphiyati, ii, 31.
 otinna, i, 7.
 ottharaka, iii, 102.
 onīta, i, 83.
 onogana, ii, 386.
 opāna, ii, 115.
 obhoga, i, 156.

- ovattika, iii, 69.
 ovattiyakarana, ii, 153.
 ovaddeyya, ii, 154.
 ovāda, i, 35.
 osaraka, iii, 175.

 kamsapatttharikā, iii, 140.
 kakka, ii, 58.
 katakkbuparissāvana, iii, 100.
 katasi, iii, 390.
 karisuttaka, iii, 69, 142, 348.
 katbina, i, 18 seq.; ii, 148 seqq.; iii, 92 seq.
 kanāgaka, iii, 9.
 kanḍusakarana, ii, 153.
 kannakita, iii, 91.
 katākata, iii, 309.
 katikasantbāna, iii, 8.
 kattaradanda, ii, 20.
 kattari, iii, 138.
 kattarikā, iii, 139.
 kattika, i, 29 seq.
 kapalla, ii, 50.
 kapisisaka, iii, 106.
 kappattbika, iii, 254.
 kappiyakāraka, ii, 59.
 kappiyakurū, i, 303.
 kabaḥkā, ii, 58.
 kamala, ii, 23.
 kambala, ii, 23.
 kambalamaddana, ii, 154.
 kammārabhandu, i, 200.
 karakaḥaka, iii, 112.
 kalābuka, iii, 143.
 kaṅṅara, iii, 127.
 kaṅṅabhaka, iii, 94.
 kavāṭa, iii, 88, 160.
 kavāṭapittbā, iii, 105.
 kasāva, iii, 172.
 kākā, iii, 82.
 kāya, ii, 224.
 kāyura, iii, 69.
 kāḥaka, i, 25.
 kiṅṅana, i, 139.
 kiṅṅika, iii, 174, 176.
 kukkukata, ii, 154.
 kukkusa, iii, 367.
 kuddapāda, iii, 107.
 kundakamattikā, iii, 171.
 kuttaka, ii, 27.
 kupita, i, 309.
 kumbhakārīkā, iii, 156.
 kumbhatthena, iii, 325.
 kuruvindakasutti, iii, 67.
 kulāṅkapādaka, iii, 174.
 kulāva, iii, 384.

 kulīrapādaka, iii, 164.
 kusi, ii, 208.
 ko, i, 138.
 kokkba, i, 34; iii, 165.
 kottāpeti, iii, 341.
 kottbāka, ii, 219; iii, 11, 109, 177.
 kopeti, ii, 435.
 komudī, i, 324.

 khaṇḍa, iii, 191.
 khandhakavatta, i, 185.
 khallaka, ii, 15.
 khādaniya, i, 39.
 khārikāga, i, 132.
 khuddānukhuddaka, i, 50.
 khurabhandā, ii, 141.
 khurasipāsikā, iii, 138.
 kheḥpaka, iii, 239.

 gawamagga, i, 269.
 gantbika, iii, 144.
 gandikādhāna, iii, 213.
 gāṇḍumattikā, iii, 172.
 gatigata, iii, 26.
 gandhabbahatthaka, iii, 67.
 gabbha, iii, 173.
 gahapatiṭṭhara, ii, 194.
 gāmapoddava, iii, 66.
 gāṇḍupakāra, i, 256.
 giraggasamagga, iii, 71.
 gīveyyaka, ii, 209.
 guṇaka, iii, 143.
 guhā, i, 174.
 geruka, ii, 50.
 gerukaparikamma, iii, 97.
 gokanṭṭhaka, ii, 34.
 goghamsikā, iii, 98.
 goḥara, iii, 275.
 gonisādika, ii, 121.
 golomika, iii, 138.

 gharaka, iii, 130.
 gharikarāha, iii, 88.
 gharikā, iii, 106.
 gharadinnaka, ii, 60.

 ākakkabheda, iii, 251.
 ākakkalikā, iii, 163.
 ākakkavattaka, iii, 112.
 ākaṅkama, ii, 7; iii, 103.
 ātukanṇaka, iii, 145.
 āndanagantbī, iii, 78.
 āmammakhandā, iii, 113.
 āḷeti, ii, 49.
 āṭṭa, ii, 224.
 āṭṭimilikā, iii, 167.

ñivara, ii, 199.
ketāpeti, i, 22.
kelapaṭṭikā, iii, 128.
koḥa, ii, 132.
kolaka, iii, 86.

kbakana, ii, 49.
kbatta, iii, 133.
kbadana, i, 35.
kbanda, i, 277.
kbandaso, iii, 150.
kbava, iii, 239.
kbavi, iii, 169.
kbādeti, ii, 42; iii, 147.
kbinniriyāpatha, i, 225.
kbeppā, ii, 24.

gaṅgheyyaka, ii, 209.
gaṭṭa, i, 118; ii, 129, 134.
ganatā, iii, 72.
gantāghara, i, 157; iii, 103.
gantū, ii, 35.
gāla, iii, 162.
ge, ii, 217.

gbāyī, iii, 7.

ñatti, i, 169.
ñattikatuttha, i, 169.
ñattidutiya, i, 169.

tattikā, ii, 35.
tathāgata, i, 82.
tantibaddha, ii, 256.
talasattikā, i, 51.
tassapāpiyyasikā, iii, 28.
tālakābidda, iii, 106.
tālavanta, iii, 131, 145.
tāvakālika, iii, 217.
tiñivara, i, 20; i, 255.
tinagahana, iii, 148.
tinasantāraka, iii, 86.
tittirapattika, ii, 15.
Tittiriya, iii, 194.
tirakkānāviggā, iii, 152.
tiritaka, ii, 248.
tumbakaraḥa, iii, 88.
tulā, iii, 112.
tulikā, iii, 167.
tūla, i, 54.
tūlapunnika, ii, 15.
torana, iii, 178.

thakīyati, iii, 161.
thavikā, iii, 293.
thinna, ii, 206.

thullakkaya, i, xxv.
thūpato, i, 63.
theyyasamkhāta, i, 4.

dakakottbaka, ii, 57.
dandakatbina, iii, 93.
dandaparissāvana, iii, 102.
dandasatthaka, iii, 90.
dantakattba, iii, 146.
dantapona, i, 40.
damaka, ii, 71.
da/bikarana, ii, 153.
dāstrikā, iii, 138.
diṭṭhāvikamma, iii, 34.
dukkata, i, xxv.
dukkha, ii, 224.
duṭṭhagahanika, ii, 60.
duṭṭhulla, ii, 316.
dubbaka, i, 12.
dubbalya, i, 4.
dummañku, iii, 251.
dummaññu, iii, 251.
deddubhaka, iii, 143.
dvāra, iii, 160.
dvārakosa, i, 35.

dhamanisantata, ii, 41.
dhamma, iii, 193, 262.
dhammakaraka, iii, 100.
dhāna, ii, 28.
dhuvakāra, ii, 254.
dhūmakālika, iii, 214, 378.
dhūmanetta, iii, 107.
dhotaṭṭāḍaka, iii, 219.

nam, iii, 19.
natthukamma, ii, 53.
natthukaraṇi, ii, 54.
nandimukhī, ii, 211; iii, 299.
namataka, iii, 90, 343.
nalārika, ii, 349.
navakamma, iii, 101, 189 seq.
navakammika, ii, 359.
nāgadanta, iii, 68, 98.
nāḷikāgabbha, iii, 173.
nāsanā, i, 236.
nāseti, ii, 377.
nigantba, i, 41.
niggāpeti, iii, 2.
niddāpeti, iii, 225.
nippurisa, iii, 225.
nibbuggati, ii, 349.
nimitta, ii, 9.
nimittakata, ii, 154.
nillekhagantāghara, iii, 115.
nissaggiya, ii, 155.

nissaya, ii, 337; iii, 355.
 nekkhamma, i, 104.
 negama, iii, 185.
 netthā, ii, 339.
 nerayika, iii, 262.

pamsukūla, ii, 157.
 pakata, ii, 343.
 pakatatta, ii, 340; iii, 266.
 pakāsaniyakamma, iii, 239.
 pakutta, iii, 175.
 pakkhasamkanta, i, 178.
 pakkhika, iii, 220.
 paggāhikasālā, iii, 383.
 paghana, iii, 175.
 pakkakkhāta, i, 275.
 pakkakkhāti, i, 4.
 pakkaya, i, 146.
 pakkuddharati, ii, 152.
 paṭṭaka, ii, 155.
 paṭṭakapāṭika, iii, 97.
 parikā, ii, 3, 27.
 pariggaha, iii, 90, 95.
 parikkhādāniya, ii, 81.
 parikkhādi, iii, 111.
 paribhāna, iii, 13.
 paribhānakitta, iii, 172.
 paribhāneyyaka, ii, 140.
 parisāraṇīya, ii, 364.
 parā, iii, 341.
 paṇāmeti, iii, 403.
 pattakandolika, iii, 86.
 pattakkhandha, iii, 13.
 pattamāka, iii, 86.
 patthaddha, iii, 244.
 pannaloma, iii, 232.
 para, ii, 307.
 paradavutta, iii, 232.
 paramparabhogana, i, 38.
 parikathākata, ii, 154.
 parikammakata, iii, 218.
 parikkhāra, iii, 343.
 parigita, iii, 75.
 parittānakiriika, iii, 174.
 parinibbuta, iii, 183.
 paribbāgaka, i, 41.
 paribhanda, ii, 154, 231; iii, 85, 93.
 paribhandakarana, iii, 213.
 paribhoga, iii, 208.
 paribhoganīya, iii, 8.
 parimandalam, i, 59.
 parimāna, ii, 421.
 parimukha, iii, 138.
 parimuttā, ii, 307.
 pariyanta, ii, 386.
 pariyāya, i, 47.

pariyutthitakitta, iii, 380.
 parivena, iii, 109; iii, 203.
 parisā, i, 12.
 pala, ii, 178.
 palāsi, iii, 38.
 palibodha, ii, 157.
 pallaṅka, iii, 367.
 pallatthikā, i, 62; iii, 141.
 pavattamamsa, ii, 81.
 pavattinī, iii, 350.
 pavananta, iii, 143.
 pavāraṇāsangaha, i, 353.
 pavārita, i, 39.
 pavāreti, i, 21.
 pasata, ii, 178.
 paharam, iii, 156.
 pākittiya, i, 32.
 Pātibeyyaka, ii, 146.
 pātimokkha, i, xxvii seq.
 pādakathalika, i, 92; ii, 373.
 pādakhilābādha, iii, 19.
 pādapīṭha, i, 92.
 pāpanika, ii, 157.
 pāmaṅga, iii, 69.
 pārāgika, i, 3.
 pārissuddhi, i, 242, 274.
 pāliguntbima, ii, 15.
 pālibaddha, ii, 208.
 pāsaka, iii, 144.
 pāsāda, i, 174; iii, 178.
 pāsādika, iii, 339.
 pāsuka, iii, 340.
 piṭṭabhādāniya, ii, 139.
 piṭṭamadda, iii, 171.
 piṭṭasamghāsa, iii, 105.
 piṇḍukkhepakam, i, 64.
 pitta, iii, 237.
 pidalaka, iii, 94.
 pilorikā, ii, 157.
 piṣāṭṭillika, i, 318; iii, 139.
 piṭṭa, iii, 278.
 piṭṭikā, iii, 165.
 puṭṭabati (vassam), i, 310.
 puṭṭabāṇi, iii, 114.
 purabaddha, ii, 15.
 puthupāniya, iii, 68.
 pūva, i, 39.
 peyyāla, i, 291.
 potthaka, ii, 247.
 pothugganika, iii, 230.
 positum, iii, 169.
 phanaka, iii, 70.
 phalaka, ii, 246; iii, 165.
 phāṭikammattha, iii, 217.
 phulla, iii, 191.

bandhana, ii, 153.
 bandhanamatta, iii, 141.
 bahukata, ii, 135; iii, 214.
 bāhanta, ii, 209.
 bāhullika, iii, 254.
 bidalamāṅṅaka, iii, 164.
 bila, ii, 48.
 bilaṅga, iii, 9.
 bundikābaddha, iii, 164.
 byā, ii, 378.

bhaṅga, ii, 57.
 bhaṅgodaka, ii, 57.
 bhaṅḍāgāra, ii, 201.
 bhaṅḍika, iii, 213.
 bhatikamma, iii, 83.
 bhattikamma, iii, 169.
 bhaddapitṭha, iii, 165.
 bhasmā, iii, 264.
 bhikkhugatika, i, 312.
 bhisi, ii, 210; iii, 163.
 bhummattharava, iii, 278.
 bhoganiya, i, 39.
 bhoggayāgu, ii, 89.

makaradantaka, iii, 68.
 makasakurikā, iii, 102.
 makḅavāḷaka, iii, 145.
 maggāru, ii, 35.
 maṅḅka, iii, 278.
 maṅḅkuka, ii, 140.
 maṅḅgarikā, ii, 347.
 maṅḅgu, ii, 140.
 mandala, ii, 209.
 mandalikā, iii, 107.
 matakakivara, ii, 151.
 mattikādonikā, iii, 107.
 maddavīna, iii, 143.
 madhusitthaka, iii, 92.
 manam, i, 254.
 mantha, i, 39.
 mandāmukhī, i, 130.
 marumba, iii, 109.
 mallaka, iii, 68.
 mallamuttika, iii, 66.
 ma/orikā, iii, 117.
 masāraka, iii, 164.
 mahānāma, ii, 14.
 mahāraṅga, ii, 14.
 mahāṣeḍa, ii, 56.
 Mahī, ii, 25.
 mātikā, i, 273; ii, 157; iii, 2.
 māsakarūpa, iii, 80.
 migabbūta, iii, 232.
 midbanta, iii, 85.
 midbi, iii, 163.

missaka, ii, 432.
 mukhamattikā, iii, 107.
 muttahaṛitaka, ii, 60.
 mendavisāṅṅabandhika, ii, 15.
 mokkhaṅḅikā, ii, 184.
 moghasuttaka, iii, 94.
 moḅka, ii, 132.
 moragu, ii, 35.

yathādhhammo, i, 203.
 yantaka, iii, 162.
 yāgu, ii, 89.

raganapakka, ii, 49.
 ratanasammata, i, 53.
 rūpa, i, 201.
 rūpiyakḅbaddaka, i, 27.
 rūḅhati, ii, 414.
 ropeti, iii, 334.

labbivana, i, 136.
 luggati, iii, 111.
 lūka, ii, 16.
 lekha, iii, 78.
 lesakappa, iii, 200.
 lona, ii, 48.
 loma, ii, 339.

vagga, iii, 27.
 vaggulī, iii, 163.
 vāṅanapatha, iii, 324.
 vāḅkapāduka, ii, 24.
 vatamsaka, ii, 347.
 vatti, iii, 341.
 vanta, ii, 347.
 vatthikamma, ii, 80.
 varāha, iii, 261.
 vallikā, iii, 69.
 vassupanāyikā, i, xxxvii.
 vāṅapāna, iii, 162.
 vāṅamandalikā, iii, 85.
 Vāmaka, ii, 130.
 vāraka, iii, 113.
 vāha, ii, 13.
 vikanna, ii, 230; iii, 92.
 vikappanā, i, 45.
 vikāla, i, 53.
 vikāṣika, ii, 59.
 vigayha, iii, 68.
 viḅḅikāḅlika, ii, 16.
 viṅḅu, i, 33.
 vidha, iii, 143.
 vidhutikā, ii, 347.
 vinandhana, iii, 94.
 vinayapāmokkha, i, xiii.
 vinayavatthu, iii, 411.

vinidhāya, iii, 269.
vineyya, iii, 183.
vipakkatāya, iii, 36.
viparinata, i, 7.
vipāreti, iii, 90.
vippakata, iii, 214.
vibbhamati, i, 275.
vibhaṅga, ii, 325.
vivatta, ii, 209.
visibbanā, i, 44. visesaka, iii, 342.
visesādhigama, iii, 263.
vissara, iii, 273.
vihāra, ii, 386.
vihesaka, i, 33.
vinā, ii, 8.
vuddhapabbagita, ii, 140.
vūpakāseti, i, 161.
vokkamma, iii, 285.
vodaka, iii, 84.
veni, iii, 341.
vedikā, iii, 162.
veyyāyika, iii, 185.
ve/uriya, iii, 82.
vyābādheti, iii, 235.

samvelliya, iii, 348.
samsaranakirika, iii, 176. samharati, iii, 168.
saguna, i, 155.
samkakkhika, iii, 351.
samkassara, iii, 300.
samkāpayati, i, 298.
samketa, ii, 234.
saṅkhanābhi, ii, 51.
samkhāra, i, 76.
samgāti, iii, 355.
samghāri, ii, 212.
samghāripallatthikā, iii, 12.
samghādisesa, i, 7.
saṅgātti, iii, 257.
sandāsa, iii, 140.
satavallikā, iii, 145.
sati, i, 119.
satiepullappatta, iii, 16.
sattaṅga, iii, 165.
sattalūkha, ii, 209.
satthahāraka, i, 4 seq.
satthu, iii, 92.
santaruttara, i, 21; ii, 233.
sannidhikata, ii, 154.
sapaḍāna, i, 63.
sabhogana, i, 41.
samanuddesa, i, 48.
samattittika, i, 62; ii, 104.
samanubhāsati, i, 11.

samasūpaka, i, 62.
samukase, i, xxvi.
samuddaphenaka, iii, 131.
samodhāna, ii, 405, 409.
sampavāreti, i, 110.
sambhāraseda, ii, 56.
sambhinna, ii, 145.
sambhūṇāti, ii, 159.
sammukha, ii, 332.
sammukhāvinaya, iii, 3.
sammosa, iii, 87.
sayana, iii, 279.
sarakutti, iii, 72.
sarati, iii, 14.
sarabhaṅgā, iii, 73.
sarāvaka, iii, 108.
saritaka, iii, 92.
saritasārita, iii, 26.
saritasipārikā, iii, 92.
salāka, iii, 162.
salākabhatta, iii, 220 seq.
salākodhāniya, iii, 53.
savaṇāniya, ii, 338, 386.
sahadhammikam, i, 12.
Sahampati, i, 86.
sāriya, iii, 223.
Sānavāsi, iii, 394.
sāradika, ii, 41.
sārāniya, ii, 364.
sālōka, iii, 343.
sāvasesa, ii, 316; iii, 35.
sāsapakussa, iii, 171.
sikkhāsāgāva, i, 4.
sitthatelaka, iii, 171.
sindhava, ii, 48.
sivārikā, ii, 47.
sivikāgabbha, iii, 173.
siveyyaka, ii, 190.
sītālo/i, ii, 60.
sīla, i, 184.
sukha, ii, 224.
sugata, i, 54 seq.
sugatavidatthi, i, 8.
suṅgāgāra, ii, 101.
sutta, i, xxix.
suttadhara, i, xxviii.
suttanta, i, xxix seq.
suttalūkha, ii, 209, 230.
suttavibhaṅga, i, xxix seq.
suddhaka, ii, 433.
suddhanta, ii, 417.
suppavāyita, i, 28.
sūkarantaka, iii, 143.
sūti, iii, 97.
sūtikā, iii, 106, 162.
sūtinā/ikā, iii, 91.

sekha, i, 185; ii, 138.
 sekhasammata, i, 57.
 settbi, i, 102.
 seda, ii, 56.
 senesika, ii, 42.
 seyyagga, iii, 202.
 sotāpattiphala, iii, 230.
 sobhana, iii, 143.
 hatthabhitti, iii, 169.
 hatthavassaka, ii, 27.

hatthavikāra, i, 326.
 hatthavilaṅghaka, i, 326.
 hatthinakhaka, iii, 208.
 hatthisondaka, iii, 145.
 hammiya, i, 174.
 hammiyagabbha, iii, 173.
 haritaka, ii, 60.
 haritakapannikā, iii, 343.
 hintāla, ii, 23.
 huhuṅkagātika, i, 79.
 hetu, i, 146.

TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS ADOPTED FOR THE TRANSLATIONS
OF THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

CONSONANTS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
Gutturales.
1 Tenuis	k	.	.	क	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	k
2 " aspirata	kh	.	.	ख	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	kh
3 Media	g	.	.	ग	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	.
4 " aspirata	gh	.	.	घ	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	.
5 Gutturo-labialis	q	.	.	.	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	.
6 Nasalis	h (ng)	.	.	ङ	{ 3 (ng) } { 𐬚 (N) }
7 Spiritus asper	h	.	.	ह	𐬛 (ḥ hr)	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	h, hs
8 " lenis	,
9 " asper faucalis	'h
10 " lenis faucalis	'h
11 " asper fricatus	'h
12 " lenis fricatus	'h
Gutturales modificatae (palatales, &c.)
13 Tenuis	k	.	च	𐬜	𐬜	𐬜	𐬜	𐬜	k
14 " aspirata	kh	.	छ	kh
15 Media	g	.	ज
16 " aspirata	gh	.	झ
17 " Nasalis	ñ	.	.	ञ

CONSONANTS (continued).	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlevi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
18 Semivocalis	y	य	𐬶 𐬷 𐬸 init.	𐬶	ي	ي	,	y
19 Spiritus asper	(y)
20 " lenis	(y)
21 " asper assibilatus	s	. . .	श	𐬶𐬵	𐬶𐬵	ش	ش
22 " lenis assibilatus	z	𐬶𐬵	𐬶𐬵	ز	ز	. . .	z
Dentales.
23 Tenuis	t	त	𐬵	𐬵	ت	ت	ת	t
24 " aspirata	th	थ	𐬵𐬶	𐬵𐬶	تھ	تھ	ת	th
25 " assibilata	TH
26 Media	d	द	𐬵𐬶𐬵	𐬵𐬶𐬵	د	د
27 " aspirata	dh	ध
28 " assibilata	DH
29 Nasalis	n	न	𐬵𐬶𐬶	𐬵𐬶𐬶	ن	ن	. . .	n
30 Semivocalis	l	ल	𐬵𐬶𐬶𐬶	𐬵𐬶𐬶𐬶	ل	ل	. . .	l
31 " mollis 1	l	. . .	ळ
32 " mollis 2	L
33 Spiritus asper 1	s	स	𐬶	𐬶	س	س	ס	s
34 " asper 2	s (ʃ)
35 " lenis	z	ز	ز	ז	z
36 " asperimus 1	z (ʒ)	zh
37 " asperimus 2	z (ʒ)

Dentales modificatae
(linguales, &c.)

Dentales modificatas (linguales, &c.)		Labiales.
38 Tenuis	t	38 Tenuis	p
39 " aspirata	th	39 " aspirata	ph
40 Media	d	40 Media	b
41 " aspirata	dh	41 " aspirata	bh
42 Nasalis	n	42 Tenuissima	m
43 Semivocalis	r	43 Nasalis	w
44 " fricata	r	44 Semivocalis	hw
45 " diacritica	z	45 " aspirata	f
46 Spiritus asper	z	46 Spiritus asper	v
47 " lenis	z	47 " lenis	m
		48 Tenuis	h
		49 " aspirata
		50 Media
		51 " aspirata
		52 Tenuissima
		53 Nasalis
		54 Semivocalis
		55 " aspirata
		56 Spiritus asper
		57 " lenis
		58 Anusvāra
		59 Visarga

Labiales.

[illegible]

VOWELS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
1 Neutralis	o									ā
2 Laryngo-palatalis	ö									ā
3 " labialis	ö									ā
4 Gutturalis brevis	a			अ	𐬀	𐬀	𐬀	ا	א	ā
5 " longa	ā	(a)		आ	𐬁	𐬁	𐬁	آ	א	ā
6 Palatalis brevis	i			इ	𐬂	𐬂	𐬂	ي	י	i
7 " longa	ī	(i)		ई	𐬃	𐬃	𐬃	ی	י	ī
8 Dentalis brevis	ē			ए
9 " longa	ē			ऐ
10 Lingualis brevis	ri			रि
11 " longa	ri			रि
12 Labialis brevis	u			उ
13 " longa	ū	(u)		ऊ	𐬄	𐬄	𐬄	و	ו	u
14 Gutturo-palatalis brevis	e			ए	𐬅	𐬅	𐬅	ه	ה	e
15 " longa	ē (ai)	(e)		ऐ	𐬆	𐬆	𐬆	ه	ה	ē
16 Diphthongus gutturo-palatalis	āi	(ai)		आइ	𐬇	𐬇	𐬇	اي	א	āi
17 " "	ei (ēi)			ऐ	𐬈	𐬈	𐬈	ه	ה	ei, ēi
18 " "	oi (ōu)			औ	𐬉	𐬉	𐬉	و	ו	oi, ōi
19 Gutturo-labialis brevis	o			ओ
20 " longa	ō (au)	(o)		औ	𐬊	𐬊	𐬊	او	א	ō
21 Diphthongus gutturo-labialis	āu	(au)		आउ	𐬋	𐬋	𐬋	او	א	āu
22 " "	eu (ēu)			ऐ	𐬌	𐬌	𐬌
23 " "	ou (ōu)			औ	𐬍	𐬍	𐬍
24 Gutturalis fracta	ä			अ
25 Palatalis fracta	i			इ
26 Labialis fracta	ü			उ
27 Gutturo-labialis fracta	ö			ओ

RETURN TO →

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT
202 Main Library

LOAN PERIOD 1

HOME USE

2

3

4

5

6

ALL BOOKS MAY BE RECALLED AFTER 7 DAYS

1-month loans may be renewed by calling 642-3405

6-month loans may be recharged by bringing books to Circulation Desk

Renewals and recharges may be made 4 days prior to due date

DUE AS STAMPED BELOW

SEP 25 1977

REC. CIR. AUG 25 '77

FORM NO. DD 6,

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, BERKELEY
BERKELEY, CA 94720

© 1

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

REESE LIBRARY OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA.

Received

Aug. 1885

Accessions No.

34636

Shelf No.

685

17946

v. 25

THE
SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

London
HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE
AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

TRANSLATED

BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS

AND EDITED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER

VOL. XXV

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1886

[All rights reserved]

BL1010
53
V.25
main

THE LAWS OF MANU

TRANSLATED

WITH EXTRACTS FROM SEVEN COMMENTARIES

BY

G. BÜHLER

Ⓔxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1886

[All rights reserved]

685
17946
v. 25

311636

CONTENTS.

INTRODUCTION.

	PAGE
I. The origin of the Manu-smṛiti according to the Hindus .	xi
The Manu-smṛiti based on a Dharma-sūtra of the Mānavas	xviii
II. The Mānava Dh. S. converted into a metrical Smṛiti by a special school of lawyers	xl
The Mānava Dh. S. chosen for conversion on account of the myths current regarding Manu	lvi
Old and new parts of the work	lxvi
The sources of the additions made by the editor of the metrical version'	lxxiv
The position of Bhṛigu's Samhitā among the various metrical recensions	xcii
The probable date of Bhṛigu's Samhitā	cvi
III. The commentaries of Manu and principles of translation	cxviii

THE LAWS OF MANU.

The Creation	I
Summary of Contents	26
Sources of the Law	29
Sacraments	33
Initiation	37
Studentship	43
Householder	74
Marriage	75

	PAGE
Daily Rites	87
Śrāddhas	97
Mode of Subsistence	129
Rules for a Snātaka	131
Veda-Study	143
Rules for a Snātaka	149
Lawful and Forbidden Food	169
Impurity	177
Purification	187
Duties of Women	195
Hermits in the Forest	199
Ascetics	205
The King	216
Civil and Criminal Law :—
Titles of	253
Judicial Procedure	254
Recovery of Debts	262
Witnesses	264
Weights of Gold, &c.	277
Recovery of Debts	278
Deposits	286
Sale without Ownership	289
Concerns among Partners	291
Subtraction of Gifts	292
Non-payment of Wages	293
Non-performance of Agreement	293
Rescission of Sale and Purchase	294
Masters and Herdsmen	295
Disputes concerning Boundaries	298
Defamation	301
Assault and Hurt	303
Theft	306
Violence (Sâhasa)	314
Adultery	315

	PAGE
Miscellaneous Rules	321
Duties of Husband and Wife	327
Inheritance and Partition	345
Gambling and Betting	380
Miscellaneous Rules	382
Times of Distress:—
Mixed Castes	401
Occupations and Livelihood	419
Gifts	430
Sacrifices	432
Necessity of Penances	439
Classification of Crimes	441
Penances	445
Transmigration	483
Supreme Bliss	502
Doubtful Points of Law	508
Conclusion	511
APPENDIX :—
Quotations from Manu in the translated Law-Books	515
Synopsis of Parallel Passages	533
INDEX	583
Additions and Corrections	613

Transliteration of Oriental Alphabets adopted for the Translations of the Sacred Books of the East	617

INTRODUCTION.

I.

DIFFICULT as the historical problems are which the Dharma-sûtras translated in vols. ii and xiv of this Series offer, they are infinitely less complicated than those connected with the metrical law-books and especially with the Manu-smṛiti, or, to speak more exactly, with Bṛigu's version of the Institutes of the Sacred Law proclaimed by Manu. Though mostly the materials available for the inquiry into the history of the Dharma-sûtras are scanty, and in part at least belong to the floating traditions which are generally current among the learned, but of uncertain origin, they not only exhibit no extravagancies, but agree fully with the facts known from strictly historical sources. Moreover, and this is the most important point, though the text of the Dharma-sûtras has not always been preserved with perfect purity, they have evidently retained their original character. They do not pretend to be anything more than the compositions of ordinary mortals, based on the teaching of the Vedas, on the decisions of those who are acquainted with the law, and on the customs of virtuous Āryas. In some cases their authors say as much in plain words. Thus Āpastamba repeatedly laments the sinfulness and the weakness of 'the men of later times,' and Gautama warns against an imitation of the irregular conduct of the ancients whose great 'lustre' preserved them from falling. It is, further, still possible to recognise, even on a superficial examination, for what purpose the Dharma-sûtras were originally composed. Nobody can doubt for a moment that they are manuals written by the teachers of the Vedic schools for the guidance of their pupils, that at first they were held to be authoritative in restricted circles, and that they were later only acknowledged as sources of the sacred law applicable to all Âryas. This fact is fully acknowledged by the Hindu tradition, even in cases where the Dharma-sûtras no longer are the property of particular Vedic schools.

The metrical Smṛitis, on the other hand, are surrounded by clearly fictitious traditions, by mythological legends which either may have grown up spontaneously, because the real origin had been forgotten, or may have been fabricated intentionally in order to show that these works possess divine authority and, hence, have a claim to implicit obedience on the part of all Âryas. Nay, what is more, such legends or portions of them have been introduced into the text, and obscure the real character of the Smṛitis. These peculiarities are particularly marked in the Mānava Dharmaśāstra, where the whole first chapter is devoted to the purpose of showing the mighty scope of the book, and of setting forth its divine origin as well as the manner in which it was revealed to mankind. Its opening verses narrate how the great sages approached Manu, the descendant of self-existent Brahman, and asked him to explain the sacred law. Manu agrees to their request, and gives to them an account of the creation as well as of his own origin from Brahman. After mentioning that he learnt 'these Institutes of the Sacred Law' from the creator who himself produced them, and that he taught them to the ten sages whom he created in the beginning, he transfers the work of expounding them to Bhrigu, one of his ten mind-born sons. The latter begins his task by completing, as the commentators call it, Manu's account of the creation. First he gives the theory of the seven Manvantaras, the Yugas, and other divisions of time, as well as an incidental description of the order of the creation. Next he briefly describes the duties of the four principal castes, passes then to an encomium of the Brāhmaṇas and of the Institutes of Manu, and winds up with an enumeration of the contents of all the twelve chapters of the work, which he promises to expound 'exactly as it was revealed to him.' In the following chapters we find frequent allusions to the situation which the first describes. In about forty passages a new topic is introduced by a prefatory verse which contains phrases like 'such and such a matter has been explained to you, now listen to,' &c., or 'I will next declare,' &c.

Twice (V, 1-3 and XII, 1-2) the sages are represented as interrupting Bhrigu's discourse and expressing their desire to be instructed on particular points, and on both occasions Bhrigu is again named as the narrator. Moreover in a number of verses¹ Manu is particularly mentioned as the author of certain rules, and II, 7 the authoritative-ness of Manu's teaching is emphatically asserted, 'because he was omniscient.' In two other passages Manu appears, however, in different characters. VII, 42 he is enumerated among the kings who gained sovereignty by their humility, and XII, 123 he is identified with the supreme Brahman.

This account of the origin of our Manu-smṛiti would have to be slightly modified by those who accept as genuine the verse² which stands at the beginning of the Smṛiti according to the commentators Govindarāga, Nārāyaṇa, and Rāghavānanda, as well as according to the Kasmīr copy and other MSS. As this verse contains an invocation of the self-existent Brahman, and a promise to explain the laws which Manu taught, it indicates, as Govindarāga says³, that 'some pupil of Bhrigu recites the work which had descended to him through an unbroken line of teachers.' According to this version we have, therefore, a triple exordium instead of a double one, and our Manu-smṛiti does not contain the original words of Bhrigu, but a recension of his recension such as it had been handed down among his pupils. The additional verse is apparently intended to make the story more plausible.

The remarks which the commentators make on this narrative are scanty, and, though they are meant to support its credibility, they are, partly at least, calculated to discredit it. Medhātithi states in his remarks on Manu I, 1, that the Pragāpati Manu was 'a particular individual, perfect

¹ See the index s. v. Manu.

² See note on Manu I, 1.

³ इह भृगुशिष्यः कश्चिद्विद्विज्जपरंपरायात्स्मृत्यर्थप्रवक्ष्यमिदमाह ॥ in the study of many branches of the Veda, in the knowledge (of its meaning) and in the performance (of its precepts), and known through the sacred tradition which has been handed down in regular succession¹. Govindarāga closely agrees, and says that Manu is 'a great sage, who received his name on account of his acquaintance with the meaning of the whole Veda, who is known to all learned men through the tradition handed down in regular succession, and who is entrusted with causing the creation, preservation, and destruction (of the world)²'. Kullūka, on the other hand, though he agrees with respect to the etymology and explanation of Manu's name, deriving it from man, 'to know (the meaning of the Veda),' and though he admits the human character of his Śāstra, somewhat differs in the description of the person. Referring to XII, 123, he declares Manu to be a manifestation or incarnation of the supreme Soul. Further, Medhātithi and Kullūka adduce in their remarks on the same verse various passages from the Śruti and the Smṛiti, tending to prove the authoritative-ness of the Manu-smṛiti. Both quote slightly varying versions of the famous Vedic passage which declares that 'All Manu said is medicine.' Medhātithi adds only one more anonymous verse, to the effect that 'the Vedas were proclaimed by the great sages, but the Smārta or traditional lore by Manu³.' Kullūka gives two other passages, one from the Bṛhaspati-smṛiti which places Manu's Śāstra at the head of all works of the same class, and another from the Mahābhārata which declares that 'the Purāṇas, Manu's laws, the Vedas, and the medical works must not be opposed by (adverse) reasoning.' Both commentators mention also that the pre-eminence of Manu's teaching is admitted in other passages of the Vedas, the Purāṇas, the

¹ मनुर्नाम कश्चिन्मनुर्विशेषोनेकवेदशास्त्राध्ययनविज्ञानानुष्ठानसंपन्नः स्मृतिपरंपराप्रसिद्धः ॥

² मनुर्नाम महर्षिरशेषवेदार्थज्ञानेन प्राप्तमनुसंज्ञ आगमपरंपरया सकलविद्वज्जनकर्णगोचरीभूतः सर्गस्थितिप्रलयकारणेधिकृतः ॥

³ अथो यजुषि सामानि मन्त्रा आपर्वशाश्च ये । महर्षिभिस्तु तत्प्रोक्तं स्मार्तिं तु मनुर्वब्रवीत् ॥

Itihâsas, and the Smṛitis. Finally, in the notes on Manu I, 58, they discuss the question, how the Smṛiti can be called the Mânava Dharmasâstra, though, as is admitted in the work itself, Brahman was its real author. Medhâtithi offers two explanations. First he contends that Brahman produced only 'the multitude of injunctions and prohibitions,' while the work itself was composed by Manu. Next he says that, according to others, the Sâstra may be called Manu's, even if it were first composed by Brahman. In proof of this assertion he points to the analogous case of the river Ganges, which, though originating elsewhere, i.e. in heaven, is called Haimavatî, because it is first seen in the Himavat or Himâlaya, and to that of the Kâthaka Sâkhâ, which, though studied and taught by many others, is named after Kâtha. In conclusion, he adds, 'Nârada also records, "This work, consisting of one hundred thousand verses, was composed by Pragâpati (Brahman); it was successively abridged by Manu and others¹."' Kullûka, who gives a somewhat insufficient abstract of Medhâtithi's discussion, refers to the same passage of Nârada, and bases on it his own explanation of I, 58, according to which it means that Brahman first composed the law-book, and that Manu condensed its contents in his own language and taught it in that form to his pupils.

This is, as far as I know, all that the commentaries say about Manu and the history of the Mânava Dharmasâstra, and their remarks contain also the substance of all that has been brought forward in other discussions on the same subject, with which we meet elsewhere². Important as they may appear to a Hindu who views the question of the origin of the Manu-smṛiti with the eye of faith, they are of little value for the historical student who stands outside the circle of the Brâhmanical doctrines. The statements regarding the person of Manu can, at the best, only furnish materials

¹ नारदश्च स्मरति । शतसाहस्रो ग्रन्थः प्रजापतिना कृतः स मन्वादिभिः
क्रमेण संक्षिप्त इति ॥

² See e. g. the passages translated in Professor Max Müller's Ancient Sanskrit Literature, pp. 87-94.

for mythological research. The arguments in support of the authenticity and authoritativeness of the Manu-smṛiti are extremely weak. For the Vedic passage which the commentators adduce is, strictly speaking, a misquotation. It occurs in four slightly differing versions in three Samhitās and in one *Brāhmaṇa*¹. But in all the four places it refers, in the first instance, to Vedic Mantras which Manu is said to have revealed or seen. As, however, the assertion of the wholesomeness of Manu's teaching is couched in general terms, it may probably be inferred that many sayings, attributed to the father of mankind, were known to the authors of the four Vedic works, and it is not improbable that legal maxims were included amongst them². But Medhātithi's and Kullūka's assumption that our Manu-smṛiti is meant in the passages quoted would require very strong special proof, as its language and part of its doctrines by no means agree with those of the Vedic times. Of course, no such proof is offered, and it is not probable that it ever will be offered. The quotations made by the commentators from the Mahābhārata and from the Bṛhaspati-smṛiti, as well as their well-founded assertion that in the Purāṇas and in many Smṛitis Manu is frequently referred to as an authority on the sacred law, are of greater importance. It is undoubtedly true that the two works mentioned by Kullūka refer to a particular Dharmasāstra attributed to Manu, and the same remark holds good with respect to those passages of the Purāṇas and of the Smṛitis where, in enumerations of the authors of Dharmasāstras, Manu is placed at the head of the list. Yet even this evidence is of little use, because on the one hand the antiquity of many of the works in which Manu's name occurs is extremely doubtful, and on the other hand the existence of several recensions of Manu's laws is admitted, and can be shown to have been a fact. Hence a reference to a Manu-smṛiti in a ¹ Kāṇva XI, 5 (apparently quoted by Medhātithi); Maitrāyaṇīyā Samhitā I, 1, 5; Taittirīyā Samhitā II, 2, 10, 2; and Tāndya Brāhmaṇa XXIII, 16, 7 (quoted by Kullūka).

² I would not infer with Professor Max Müller, India, what can it teach us? p. 364, that a legal work ascribed to a Manu was known to the authors of the four works; see also below, p. lx.

Purâṇa or a Smṛiti does not prove much for Bhrigu's Samhitâ, if, at the same time, it is not made evident that the latter is really meant, and that the work in which it is contained really has a claim to be considered ancient. In illustration of this point it may suffice to remark here that the Brîhaspati-smṛiti, which Kullûka adduces as a witness, is by no means an ancient work, but considerably later than the beginning of our era, because it gives a definition of golden dinâras, an Indian coin struck in imitation of and called after the Roman denarii¹. Regarding Manu and the Mahâbhârata more will be said below. Medhâtithi's quotation from Nârada is very unlucky; for it is inexact, and worded in such a manner as to veil the serious discrepancy which exists between the stories told in the Mânava Dharmasâstra and in the Nârada-smṛiti. The introduction to the latter, as read in the MSS. of the vulgata, does not state that the original law-book of one hundred thousand verses was composed by Pragâpati and abridged by Manu and others, but alleges that its author was Manu Pragâpati, and that Nârada and Sumati the son of Bhrigu summarised it². The text of Nârada, which is accompanied by Kalyânabhatta's edition of Asahâya's commentary, names one more sage, Mârkandeya, who also tried his hand at Manu Pragâpati's enormous work. Whichever of the two versions may be the original one, it is evident that Medhâtithi's representation of Nârada's statement is inexact, and that the latter differs considerably from the story in our Manu-smṛiti, which asserts that it is the original work composed by Brahman, and revealed by Manu to Bhrigu, who explains it to the great sages 'exactly as he received it.' Hence Nârada's story discredits the details of the account given in the Mânava Dharmasâstra. It might, at the best, be only quoted to prove the existence of the general belief that Manu was the first lawgiver of India. These remarks will suffice to show that the explanatory notes offered by the Indian commentators on the origin and history of the Manu-smṛiti are not suited to furnish a basis for a critical discussion of these questions, and that hence they have been deservedly set aside by most modern Sanskritists who have written on the subject. As regards the theories of the latter, it would be useless to enumerate those preceding Professor Max Müller's now generally accepted view, according to which our Manu-smṛiti is based on, or is in fact a recast of an ancient Dharma-sûtra. But, well known as are his hypotheses and the later discoveries confirming them, an introduction to the laws of Manu would, I think, be incomplete without a full restatement of his arguments and of their additional supports furnished by others.

¹ West and Bühler, Digest, p. 48, third edition.

² See Jolly, Nârada, p. 2, and Tagore Lectures of 1883, p. 46. My conjecture that the introduction to Nârada belongs to Asahâya, not to the Smṛiti itself (West and Bühler, Digest, p. 49), is not tenable.

The considerations on which Professor Max Müller based his explanation of the origin of the Manu-smṛiti may be briefly stated as follows¹. The systematic cultivation of the sacred sciences of the Brâhmans began and for a long time had its centre in the ancient Sûtraśāstras, the schools which first collected the fragmentary doctrines, scattered in the older Vedic works, and arranged them for the convenience of oral instruction in Sûtras or strings of aphorisms. To the subjects which these schools chiefly cultivated, belongs besides the ritual, grammar, phonetics, and the other so-called Aṅgas of the Veda, the sacred law also. The latter includes not only the precepts for the moral duties of all Âryas, but also the special rules regarding the conduct of kings and the administration of justice. The Sûtra treatises on law thus cover the whole range of topics, contained in the metrical Smṛitis attributed to Manu, Yâgyñavalkya, and other sages. Though only one Dharma-sûtra, that of the Âpastambîyas, actually remains connected with the aphorisms on the ritual and other sacred subjects, the existence of the Dharmasâstras of Gautama, Vasishṭha, and Vishṇu, which are likewise composed in Sûtras, proves that formerly they were more numerous. The perfectly credible tradition of the Mīmāṃsā school, which declares that originally each Vedic school or Karana possessed a peculiar work on Dharma, confirms this assumption. While the Dharma-sūtras possess a considerable antiquity, dating between 600–200 B. C., the metrical Smṛitis cannot be equally ancient, because there is much in their form that is modern, and especially because the epic Anuṣṭubh Sloka, in which they are written, was not used for continuous composition during the Sūtra period. As the metrical Smṛitis are later than the Dharma-sūtras, it is, under the circumstances stated, very probable that each of them is based on a particular Dharma-sūtra. The Mānava Dharmaśāstra in particular may be considered as a recast and versification of the Dharma-sūtra of the Mānava Sūtrakara, a subdivision of the Maitrāyaṇīya school, which adheres to a redaction of the Black Yagur-veda.

¹ See his letter to Mr. Morley, reprinted in Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, pp. ix-xi, and Hist. Anc. Sansk. Lit. pp. 132-134. Compare also the analogous views formed independently by Professors Weber and Stenzler, Indische Studien, vol. i, pp. 69, 143, 243-4.

Considering the state of our knowledge of Vedic literature thirty years ago, the enunciation of this hypothesis was certainly a bold step. The facts on which it rested were few, and the want of important links in the premises laid it open to weighty objections. No proof was or could be furnished that the Sūtras of Gautama, Vasishṭha, and Viṣṇu originally were manuals of Vedic schools, not codes promulgated for the guidance of all Āryas, as the Hindu tradition, then known, asserted. The assumption that it was so, rested solely on the resemblance of their form and contents to those of the Āpastambīya Dharma-sūtra. No trace of a Mānava Dharma-sūtra could be shown, nor could any connexion between the Mānava Dharmaśāstra and the school of the Mānavas, except through their titles, be established. The assertion that the Brāhmins had turned older Sūtras, and especially Dharma-sūtras, into metrical works, written in epic Slokas, had to be left without any illustration, and no cause was assigned which would explain this remarkable change. As a set off against these undeniable weaknesses, Professor Max Müller's hypothesis possessed two strong points which secured for it from the outset a favourable reception on the part of all Sanskritists of the historical school. First, it substituted a rational theory of historical development for the fantastic fables of the Hindu tradition and for the hopeless uncertainty which characterised the earlier speculations of European scholars concerning the origin of the so-called Indian codes of law. Secondly, it fully agreed with many facts which the beginning exploration of Vedic literature had brought to light, and which, taken as a whole, forced on all serious students the conviction that the systematic cultivation of all the Indian Sâstras had begun in the Vedic schools. Subsequent events have shown that Professor Max Müller was right to rely on these two leading ideas, and that his fellow Sanskritists did well to follow him, instead of taking umbrage at the minor flaws. Slowly but steadily a great number of the missing links in the chain of evidence has been brought to light by subsequent investigations. We now know that the Sûtra works of other schools than the Âpastambîyas included or still include treatises on the sacred law. The Dharma-sûtra of the Baudhâyanîyas, the oldest Sûtra-karana of the Taittiriya Veda, has been recovered. Though the connexion between the several parts of the great body of Sûtras has been severed, it is yet possible to recognise that it once was closely joined to the *Grihya-sûtra*¹. The recovery of the entire collection of Hiranyakeśi-sûtras has proved that these too include a Dharma-sûtra, which in this instance has been borrowed from the earlier Âpastambîyas². The mystery which surrounded the position of the Dharma-sâstras of Gautama, Viṣṇu, and Vasishṭha has been cleared up. To the assertion that they were composed by ancient Rishis for the welfare of mankind, we can at present oppose another tradition according to which they were at first studied and recognised as authoritative by particular schools only, adhering respectively to the Sâma-veda, Black Yagur-veda, and the Rig-veda³. Internal evidence confirming this tradition has been found in the case of Gautama's Dharma-sâstra and of the Viṣṇu-smṛiti, or, more correctly,

¹ Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. xxxi.

² Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. xxiii.

³ Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, pp. xlv-xlviii; vol. vii, pp. x-xvi; vol. xiv, pp. xl-xlv.

of the Kāthaka Sūtras. These latter discoveries are of particularly great importance, because they fully establish the truth of the assumption, underlying Professor Max Müller's theory, that in post-Vedic times the Brāhmins did not hesitate to change the character of ancient school-books and to convert them into generally binding law-codes, either by simply taking them out of their connexion with the Srauta and Gr̥hya-sūtras or by adding besides matter which, in the eyes of orthodox Hindus, must greatly increase the sentiment of reverence felt for them. It is especially the case of the so-called Vishnu-smṛiti, which deserves the most careful attention. The beginning and the end of the work distinctly characterise it as a revelation of the god Vishnu. Vishnu, Vaishnava worship and philosophy are on various occasions praised and recommended in the course of the discussions. Yet the difference in the style of the introductory and concluding chapters leaves no doubt that they are later additions, and the perfectly credible tradition of the Pandits of Puna and Benares, the occurrence of particular sacred texts known to the Kāthakas alone, as well as the special resemblance of its contents to those of the Kāthaka Gr̥hya-sūtra, make it perfectly certain that the work is only a Vaishnava recast of the *Kāthaka Dharma-sūtra*¹. We thus obtain in this case the confirmation of almost every fact which the conversion of the Dharma-sūtra of the Mānavas into the revealed code of the Pragāpati Manu presupposes, with the sole exception of the substitution of epic Slokas for aphoristic prose. With respect to the last point, the further exploration of the Smṛiti literature has furnished numerous analogies. As an instance to the point we can now cite the fragments of the so-called Bṛihat Saṅkha Dharmasāstra, which, as the quotations show, must formerly have consisted of prose and verse, while the available MSS. show Sûtras and Anushṭubhs in one chapter only, and Slokas alone in the remainder¹. There are, further, such works like the two Âśvalāyana Smṛitis and the Saunaka-smṛiti, evidently versifications of the corresponding Gr̥hya-sûtras, with or without the additions of extraneous matter². In short, among all the general propositions concerning the origin of the metrical Smṛitis, which Professor Max Müller advanced, only one, the assertion that during the Sûtra period of 600–200 B.C. works written in continuous epic verse were unknown, has proved untenable in its full extent. It seems no longer advisable to limit the production of Sûtras to so short and so late a period as 600–200 B.C., and the existence of metrical school-manuals at a much earlier date has been clearly demonstrated³. It is now evident that the use of the heroic metre for such works did not begin all of a sudden and at a certain given date. But it seems, nevertheless, indisputable that the use of aphoristic prose was adopted earlier than that of verse. For in all known cases a Sûtra, not a metrical Samgraha, Vārttika, or Kārikā, stands at the head of each series of school-books, and some of the most salient peculiarities of the Sûtra style reappear in that of the metrical manuals⁴. With respect to the conjectures specially affecting the Mānava Dharmaśāstra, the former existence of a Mānava Dharma-sûtra, consisting of prose mixed with verses in several metres, has been established by the discovery of some quotations in the Vāsishṭha Dharma-sûtra, and their contents show that the work known to the author of the latter Śāstra was closely related to our Manu-smṛiti. As regards the connexion of this Dharma-sûtra, and consequently of our Manu-smṛiti with the Sûtrakaraṇa of the Mānavas, the results of the late researches have not been equally satisfactory. The recovery of the writings of the Mānavas has not only not furnished any facts in support of the supposed connexion, but, on the contrary, has raised difficulties, as it

¹ A quotation in Govindarāga's Smṛitimaṅgarī, fol. 12^b, l. 8 (India Office Collection, No. 1736), contains a very small portion of this work. When explaining the penance for the murder of a Brāhmana, mentioned Manu XI, 74, Govindarāga says, अथस्यानं कठसूत्रकृता व्याख्यानं [तं] । त्वत्प्रागो भक्त्यागो वस्त्रत्याग इति ॥ त्वग् [त्वत्प्रागो] क्षुरादिना देहत्यागम् ॥ The quotation shows that the Dharma-sūtra of the Kaṭhas mentioned the fanciful expiations ending in death, which are given in all the ancient law-books, but omitted in the Vishnu-smṛiti.

¹ West and Bühler, Digest of H. L. p. 40, third edition.

² West and Bühler, loc. cit. p. 51.

³ Goldstücker, Mānavakalpa-sûtra, p. 78.

⁴ West and Bühler, loc. cit. pp. 42. 44.

appears that the doctrines of the Mānava Gr̥hya-sūtra differ very considerably from those of our Mānava Dharmasāstra. All that has been brought forward in substantiation of this portion of Professor Max Müller's hypothesis is that as close an affinity exists between the Vishṇu-smṛiti, the modern recension of the Kāthaka Dharma-sūtra, and our Manu-smṛiti, as is found between the Kāthaka and Mānava Gr̥hya-sūtras and between the Kāthaka and Mānava Samhitās, and that hence the Vedic original of the Manu-smṛiti may be supposed to have belonged to the Mānava school¹. The conclusive force of this argument is no doubt somewhat weakened, as Dr. von Bradke has pointed out, by the fact that the Vishṇu-smṛiti is not the original Kāthaka Dharma-sūtra. But to reject it altogether on account of this circumstance would be going too far. For the agreement between the Smṛitis of Manu and Vishṇu extends to many subjects where the latter shows no traces of recasting, and may be reasonably supposed to faithfully represent the original Dharma-sūtra. Nevertheless a full reconsideration of this point is indispensable. Before we proceed to that, it will, however, be advisable first to supplement Professor Max Müller's arguments against the antiquity of our Manu-smṛiti by the discussion of some of its passages which clearly admit an acquaintance with a large body of older legal literature and particularly with Dharma-sūtras, and, secondly, to re-examine and complete the proof for the former existence of a Mānava Dharma-sūtra and for its having been the precursor of the metrical law-book.

Among the passages of the Manu-smṛiti which disprove the claim, set up by its author, to be the first legislator, and which show that he had many predecessors, the first place must be allotted to its statements regarding controversies and conflicting decisions on certain points of the ritual and of the law. Such cases are by no means rare. Thus the observances of 'some,' with respect to the order of the several ceremonies at a *Srâddha*² and to the disposal of the funeral cakes, are mentioned Manu III, 261. Discussions of the ancient sages, exactly resembling those met with in the Dharma-sûtras¹, are given IX, 31-55 regarding the long-disputed question whether a son begotten on a wife by a stranger, but with the husband's consent, belongs to the natural parent or to 'the owner of the soil.' In the same chapter it is stated, just as in Gautama's Dharma-sûtra², that 'some' permit the procreation of a second son with an appointed widow. Manu X, 70-71, we find a decision on the question whether, as 'some' assert, the seed be more important, or, as 'others' state, the soil, or, as 'again others' maintain, the seed and the soil have equal importance, and, XI, 45, we are told that the sages, i. e. all sages, are convinced of the efficacy of penances for atoning unintentional offences, while 'some' declare that they even destroy the guilt of him who sinned intentionally. The latter point is discussed in exactly the same manner Gaut. XIX, 3-6. In other cases the author is less explicit. He merely places conflicting opinions side by side without indicating that they belong to different authorities, and hence he has mostly succeeded in misleading the commentators as to his real meaning. Thus we read Manu II, 145, that the teacher is less venerable than the father and the mother, while the next following verses teach exactly the contrary doctrine. The commentators are much perplexed by this contradiction. But if we turn to Gautama II, 50-51, where it is said, 'The teacher is chief among all Gurus; some say (that) the mother (holds the first place),' it is not doubtful that the Manu-smṛiti gives in the first verse the opinion of Gautama's 'some' as the pûrvapaksha, and adduces the following one in order to prove its incorrectness. A similar case occurs Manu III, 23-25, where three opinions regarding the permissibility of certain marriage-rites are enumerated, the last of which is the siddhânta or the author's own view.

¹ Professor Jolly, Sacred Books of the East, vol. vii, pp. xxvi-xxvii; and Dr. von Bradke, Jour. Germ. Or. Soc. vol. xxxii, pp. 438-441.

² The same difference of opinion is mentioned in Sāṅkhāyana Gr̥hya-sūtra IV, 1, 10.

It might be contended that these passages, the list of

¹ See especially Vas. XVII, 6-9, where one of the verses of the Manu-smṛiti occurs.

² Gaut. XVIII, 8.

which might be considerably enlarged, do not necessarily force on us the conviction that they refer to actual law-books which preceded our Manu-smṛiti. If they stood by themselves, they might possibly be explained as showing nothing more than that legal and ritual questions had long engaged the attention of the learned. But this subterfuge becomes impossible, as we find in other verses the explicit confession that the author of the Manu-smṛiti knew Dharmasāstras. Three passages allude to their existence in general terms. The first occurs in the definition of the terms Sruti and Smṛiti, Manu II, 10, 'But by Sruti (revelation) is meant the Veda, and by Smṛiti (tradition) the Institutes of the sacred law.' In the text the last word, dharmaśāstram, stands in the singular. But it must doubtlessly be taken, as *Kullūka*¹ and *Nārāyaṇa*² indicate, in a collective sense. Another mention of law-books is found Manu XII, 111, where a dharma-pāṭhakaḥ, 'one who recites (the Institutes of) the sacred law,' is named among the members of a parishad or assembly entitled to decide difficult points of law. The commentators are unanimous in explaining dharma, literally 'the sacred law,' by 'the Institutes of the sacred law' or 'the Smṛitis of Manu and others,' and it is indeed impossible to take the word in any other sense than that of 'law-books'.³ The third passage is perfectly explicit, as the word Dharmasāstra is used in the plural. It occurs in the section on funeral sacrifices, Manu III, 232, 'At a (sacrifice in honour) of the manes he must let (his guests) hear the Veda, the Institutes of the sacred law (dharmaśāstrāṇi),' &c.⁴ Here the existence of many earlier law-books is plainly acknowledged. The character of the Institutes of the sacred law, known to the author of our Manu, may be inferred

¹ मन्वादिशास्त्रं स्मृतिः ॥

² धर्मशास्त्रं प्राधान्येन । यन्मानुशासनीयं तद्धर्मशास्त्रम् ॥

³ Medh. धर्मपाठको मन्वादिस्मृतिशास्त्राणामध्येता ॥ Gov. मानवादिधर्मध्येता ॥

Kull. मानवादिधर्मशास्त्रवेदी ॥ Nand. धर्मशास्त्रपाठकः ॥ The full significance of this passage will be shown below, p. lii.

⁴ See also Professor Stenzler in the Indische Studien, vol. i, p. 245; Dr. Jöhannngen, Das Gesetzbuch des Manu, p. 76.

from some other passages which reveal an acquaintance with the Āṅgas of the *Veda*¹. Manu II, 141, and IV, 98, these auxiliary sciences are mentioned in a general way. From Manu III, 185, where it is said that a Brāhmaṇa who knows the six Āṅgas sanctifies the company at a Srāddha dinner, we learn that their number, as known to our author, did not differ from that mentioned in all Vedic works. Further, the name of the first Āṅga, the Kalpa, occurs III, 185, and the mention of a Nairukta among the members of a parishad shows that the fourth, the Nirukta, was also known. With the latter and the remaining four, which the author of the Manu-smṛiti in all probability also knew, we are not immediately concerned. But the first, the Kalpa, possesses a very great interest for our purposes. This term, as is well known, denotes collectively those Sūtras of the Vedic schools which teach the performance of the Srauta sacrifices, the rites especially described in the Sruti. Hence both Srauta-sūtras and, of course, also Sūtra-kāraṇas must have preceded the Manu-smṛiti. If it is now borne in mind that according to the Hindu tradition, mentioned above, all Sūtra-kāraṇas formerly possessed Dharma-sūtras, and that in some existing Kalpas the Dharma-sūtras are closely connected with the Srauta-sūtras, it becomes exceedingly probable, nay, certain, that our Mānava Dharmasāstra is later than some of the Dharma-sūtras. This conclusion is further corroborated by those passages of the Manu-smṛiti where the author quotes the opinions of individual predecessors. Manu III, 16 we read, 'According to Atri and (Gautama) the son of *Utathya*² he who weds a Sūdra woman becomes an out-cast, according to Saunaka on the birth of a son, and according to Bhrigu he who has (male) offspring from a (Sūdra female alone).' Under the above explanation, which is adopted by the majority of the commentators, and is confirmed by an analogous passage of the aphoristic Dharmaśāstra of Uśanas¹, the author adduces there the opinions of four older authorities, all of which are credited by the Hindu tradition with the revelation of law-books. We still possess several Smṛitis attributed to Atri, Saunaka, and to Gautama, as well as one said to belong to Bṛigu. With the exception of the aphoristic Gautamiya Dharmaśāstra all these works are modern, some being metrical recensions of older Sūtras, and some of very doubtful origin. It is, therefore, impossible that any of the existing Dharmaśāstras, Atri, Saunaka, and Bṛigu, can be referred to by Manu, and, as a matter of fact, the opinions quoted cannot be traced in them. But if we turn to Gautama's Sūtra we find among those persons who defile the company at a Srāddha dinner, and who are thus excluded from the community of the virtuous, the sūdrāpati, literally 'the husband of a Sūdra female².' The real signification of the compound seems, however, to be, as Haradatta suggests, 'he whose only wife or dharmapatnī is a Sūdrā.' As it appears from Manu III, 17-19, that the opinion attributed to the son Utathya was the same, it is not at all unlikely that the Manu-smṛiti actually quotes the still existing Sūtra of Gautama. Another reference to a lost Sūtra occurs at Manu VI, 21, where it is said of the hermit in the forest, 'Or he may constantly subsist on flowers, roots, and fruit alone, following the rule of the (Institutes) of Vikhanas.' The original Sanskrit of the participial clause is 'vaikhānasamate sthitaḥ,' and means literally 'abiding by the Vaikhānasa opinion.' The commentators, with the exception of Nārāyaṇa, are unanimous in declaring that the word Vaikhānasa here denotes a Sāstra or Sūtra promulgated by Vikhanas, in which the duties of hermits were described at length¹. The correctness of this opinion seems to me indisputable. For the word mata, 'opinion,' in Manu's verse, requires that the preceding part of the compound should denote either a person, or a school, or a work. If we take vaikhānasa in the sense of hermit in the forest, we obtain the meaningless translation, 'a hermit may subsist on flowers, &c., following the opinion of hermits.' It is, therefore, necessary to interpret vaikhānasa with the commentators in the sense of vaikhānasa sâstra, and to refer it to a particular work which taught the duties of hermits. The existence of such a book is attested not only by Manu's commentators, but also by other ancient and modern authors. Baudhāyana mentions it explicitly², and seems to give a short summary of its contents in the third chapter of the third Prasna of his Dharmasâstra. Haradatta, the commentator of Āpastamba and Gautama, also appears to have known it. In his notes on Gautama III, 2, he gives the derivation of vaikhānasa, a hermit in the forest, saying, 'The vânaprastha is called vaikhānasa, because he lives according to the rule promulgated by Vikhanas,' and adds, 'For that (sage) chiefly taught that order³.' If the statements made to me by Indian Pandits are to be trusted, we may even hope to recover the work in course of time. It must be an exceedingly ancient book, as the secondary meaning of vaikhānasa, a hermit, which can have arisen only in the manner suggested by *Haradatta*⁴, occurs in the

¹ See also Professor Stenzler, loc. cit. ; Dr. Jöhäntgen, loc. cit. p. 74.

² The form Utathya is a corruption of the Vedic Ukathya, and shows the substitution of a dental for a palatal, which is not uncommon in the Prākṛit dialects. Hence it possesses a certain value as an additional proof for the post-Vedic origin of the Manu-smṛiti.

¹ Uś. Dharmaśāstra, chap. III, पतितो वृषलीपतिः । न पततीत्येके । ब्राह्मणस्य कृत्यविहिताश्चतस्रोनुपूर्वेण भार्या भवतीति वसिष्ठ आह । पतति न पततीति संज्ञयः । वृषल्यां पततीति हारीतः । जननात्यततीति शौनकः । तदपत्यः पततीति गोतमः ॥ Though Uśanas' statements regarding the opinions of the ancient lawyers do not agree with those of the Manu-smṛiti, except in the case of Saunaka, they are yet important, because they show that differences of opinion regarding the effects of a marriage with a Sūdrā did occur. See also Jolly, Tagore Lectures, p. 53.

² Gautama XV, 18; Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. 255.

¹ Medh. वैखानसं नाम शास्त्रं यत्र वानप्रस्थस्य धर्मो विहितास्तेषां मते स्थितः ॥ Gov. वैखानसाख्ये वानप्रस्थशास्त्रदर्शने स्थितः ॥ Kull. वैखानसो वानप्रस्थः । तद्धर्मप्रतिपादकशास्त्रदर्शने स्थितः ॥ Nand. वैद्या[खा]नसमतं विद्य[ख]मसा प्रोक्तं सूक्तं [च] तत्र हि वानप्रस्थधर्मस्य पूर्वोपदेशः क्रियते ॥ Nâr. वैखानसमते वानप्रस्थमते ॥

² Baudh. Dharma. II, 11, 14; Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. 259.

³ वैखानसो वानप्रस्थः । विखनसा प्रोक्तेन मार्गेण वर्तते इति । तेन हि स आश्रमः प्राधान्येन प्रतिपादितः ॥ oldest known Dharma-sûtra. Under these circumstances it is not advisable to assume that it had any connexion with the Vaikhānasa Sûtra¹, a subdivision of the Taittiriya, which seems to have been one of the youngest schools adhering to the Black Yagur-veda¹. But it is evident that the ancient Vaikhānasa Sûtra, which treated of an important portion of the sacred law, preceded our Manu-smṛiti.

⁴ The double vṛiddhi in vaikhānasa is according to the analogy of the words enumerated in the âkṛiti-gaṇa anuratikâdi, Pân. VII, 3, 20.

Another reference to the opinion of a person who is the reputed author of a still existing Dharma-sûtra is found at Manu VIII, 140, where the rate of legal interest on secured loans is thus described: 'A money-lender may stipulate, as an increase on his capital, for the interest allowed by Vasishtha, and take monthly the eightieth part of a hundred.' If we turn to the Vāsishtha Dharmasāstra, we read, III, 51², 'Hear the interest for a money-lender, declared by Vasishtha, five māshas (may be taken every month) for twenty (kārshāpasas).' Though the wording of the Manu-smṛiti differs from that adopted in the Vāsishtha Dharmasāstra, the meaning of both passages is the same. The eightieth part of one hundred is one and a quarter per cent, and the same rate is obtained if five māshas are charged for twenty kārshāpasas, i. e. for four hundred māshas³. Both law-books, therefore, evidently refer to the same rule of Vasishtha. But the correctness of the further inference that the author of the Manu-smṛiti used the Vāsishtha Dharmasāstra is not so easily demonstrable as might seem from the extracts given above. For Vas. III, 51 itself is a quotation, marked as such by its final iti (left untranslated) and the phrase, 'Now they quote also,' which is prefixed to Sûtra 48. Hence it might be argued that the agreement of the two passages furnishes no stringent proof for the posteriority of the Manu-smṛiti to that which bears Vasishṭha's name, that, on the contrary, it perhaps merely indicates the dependence of both works on a common source, be it on some older work or on the tradition current in the Brāhmaṇical schools. Such an objection would in most similar cases be perfectly legitimate, but in the present one it is, I think, barred by some peculiar circumstances. From the above-mentioned Hindu tradition, preserved by Govindasvāmin¹, we learn that the Vāsishṭha Dharmaśāstra originally belonged to a school of Rig-vedins who ascribed the settlement of their laws to the famous Vedic Rishi Vasishṭha. The rule limiting the monthly interest on secured loans to one and a quarter per cent is found also in Gautama's Dharma-sūtra XII, 29, a work which, as has been shown elsewhere², is older than the Vasishṭha-smṛiti. But neither there nor in any other work where it occurs³ is its enunciation attributed to Vasishṭha. Hence it is most probable that this addition was made by those who attributed their laws to Vasishṭha, and who, therefore, had an interest in vindicating the invention of an important legal maxim for their spiritual head. If their law-book gives the rule in the form of a quotation, they probably do not mean to indicate that an older verse ascribing it to Vasishṭha existed, but that the rule itself was an ancient one, and had been taken from a law-book or from the tradition of the Brāhmaṇical schools. With this explanation the mention of Vasishṭha's name, made in Manu VIII, 140, still remains an indication that its author knew and referred to the existing Vāsishṭha Dharmaśāstra.

¹ See Professor Max Müller, Anc. Sansk. Lit. p. 199; Professor Weber, Indische Studien, vol. i, p. 83. A portion of the Vaikhānasa Srauta-sûtra is preserved in the modern transcripts, belonging to the Bombay University and the Munich Royal Libraries, which Professor Haug had made from a Barodâ MS.

² Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. 16; according to Dr. Führer's edition, Vas. III, 50.

³ Gagannātha, in Col. Dig. I, 25, gives a somewhat different calculation. But the general sense remains the same. I follow Krishnapandita and Hara-datta on Gautama XII, 29.

These passages are far too numerous to be set aside as possibly later interpolations, and there is, indeed, no circumstance connected with any of them which could lead to such a supposition. We must, therefore, admit that they clearly disprove the claim of the Manu-smṛiti to the first place among Indian law-books which the first chapter sets up, and that they furnish a strong support to the view according to which the Manu-smṛiti belongs to a later stage of literary development than the Dharma-sūtras.

¹ See above, p. xx.

² Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, pp. liii, liv.

³ See e. g. Yāgy. II, 37, and the texts of Bṛhaspati and Vyāsa quoted in Col. Dig. I, 26-27.

In turning to the second point of our supplement, it will be advisable to reconsider in detail the passages of the Vasishṭha-smṛiti, which prove the former existence of a Mānava Dharma-sūtra, and which, as the preceding discussion has established the priority of the Vasishṭha-smṛiti to our Manu, possess a particularly great importance. The chief passage occurs Vasishṭha IV, 5-8¹, where we read :

5. The Mānava (Sūtra states), 'Only when worshipping the manes and the gods, or when honouring guests, he may certainly do injury to animals.'

6. 'On offering the honey-mixture (to a guest), at a sacrifice and at the rites in honour of the manes, but on these occasions only, may an animal be slain; that (rule) Manu proclaimed.'

7. 'Meat can never be obtained without injury to living beings, and injury to living beings does not procure heavenly bliss: hence (the sages declare) the slaughter (of beasts) at a sacrifice not (to be) slaughter (in the ordinary sense of the word).'

8. 'Now he may also cook a full-grown ox or a full-grown he-goat for a Brāhmaṇa or a Kshatriya guest; in this manner they offer hospitality to such (a man).'

As has been stated in the introduction to *Vasishṭha*², all the four Sūtras must be taken as a quotation, because the particle iti, 'thus,' occurs at the end of IV, 8, and because the identity of Sūtra 6 with Manu V, 41, as well as the close resemblance of Sūtra 7 to Manu V, 48, shows that the quotation is not finished with Sūtra 5. If we accept this explanation we have in our passage the usual arrangement followed in the Dharma-sûtras. First comes the prose rule, next the verses which confirm it, and finally a Vedic passage on which both the rule and the verses rest. It may be added that the explanation of the passage given by Krishnapandita Dharmâdhikârin in his commentary on Vasishtha, according to which the word Mânavam, explained above by 'the Mânava (Sûtra),' is to mean 'the (opinion) of Manu' (manumatam), cannot be upheld, for several reasons. First, the wording of the text of Sûtra 5 looks like a real quotation, not like a summary of Manu's views by Vasishtha. This becomes quite clear, if we compare Vasishtha I, 17, where undoubtedly a rule of Manu, corresponding to Mânava Dh. VII, 203, and VIII, 41, is given in Vasishtha's words, 'Manu has declared (that) the (peculiar) laws of countries, castes, and families (may be followed) in the absence of (rules of) the revealed texts¹.' Secondly, the great differences between several other passages, quoted by Vasishtha as Manu's, and the corresponding passages of the text of our Manu-smṛiti, as well as the fact that the latter, as we have seen, refers to the Vâsishtha Dharmaśāstra, do not permit us to assume, with Krishnapandita, that Vasishtha knew and referred to our Manu.

¹ पितृदेवातिथिपूजायामप्येव पशुं हिंस्यादिति मानवम् ॥ ५ ॥ मधुपर्के च यज्ञे च पितृदेवतकर्मणि । अत्रैव च पशुं हिंस्यान्नायप्येत्यत्र ब्रवीन्मनुः ॥ ६ ॥ नाकृत्वा प्राणिनां हिंसां मांसमुत्पद्यते क्लृप्तिम् । न च प्राणिवधः स्वर्गस्तस्माद्भाग्ये बधोवधः ॥ ७ ॥ अथापि ब्राह्मणाय वा राजन्याय वाभ्यागताय महोद्वाणं वा महाजं वा पच्येदेवमस्मात्प्रातिथ्यं कुर्वन्तीति ॥ ८ ॥

² Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, pp. xviii-xix.

If it is thus necessary to admit that Vasishtha's quotation is taken from a Mânava Dharma-sûtra, the agreement of the doctrine taught in the quotation and of a portion of the text with those of our Manu-smṛiti show further that this Dharma-sûtra must have been the forerunner of our metrical law-book. An examination of the other quotations from Manu, which occur in the Vasishtha-smṛiti, will show that this agreement was, though pretty close, not complete. The identity of the view, ascribed to Manu by Vasishtha I, 17, with the contents of Manu VII, 203, and VIII, 41, has already been mentioned. Vasishtha III, 2, a Mânava Sloka is quoted which agrees literally with Manu II, 168. The same remark applies to the quotation at Vasishtha XX, 18, which is found Manu XI, 152. Another passage,

¹ देशधर्मजातिधर्मकुलधर्माम्बुतभावादब्रवीन्नुः ॥

Vas. XIII, 16, shows considerable verbal differences. According to Vasishṭha, Manu's verse is: 'Be it fruit, or water, or sesamum, or food, or whatever be (the gift) at a Srāddha, let him not, having just accepted it, recite the Veda; for it is declared in the Smṛiti that the hands of Brāhmaṇas are their mouths,' while we read Manu IV, 117, 'Be it an animal or a thing inanimate, whatever be the (gift) at a Srāddha, let him not, having just accepted it, recite the Veda; for it is declared in the Smṛiti that the hand of a Brāhmaṇa is his mouth¹.' The last quotation which occurs Vas. XIX, 37, and refers to the sulka, (exemptions from) taxes and duties², is in the Trishūbh metre, and, hence, cannot have a place in our Manu-smṛiti. But it is remarkable that the latter does not even show a corresponding Anushūbh verse, and that the contents of the quotation do not quite agree with the teaching of our Manu. The latter mentions the exemption of a sum less than a kārshāpāna incidentally X, 120. It agrees also with Manu's doctrines that Srotriyas, ascetics, alms, and sacrifices should not be taxed. But there are no indications that infants, messengers, and ambassadors, or the remnant left to a plundered trader, should go free. With respect to those living by arts (silpa), our Manu teaches, VII, 138, and X, 120, just like most other ancient authors, that artisans are to do monthly one piece of work for the king. Though this corvée amounts to a pretty severe tax, it is, of course, possible to contend that Manu's rule does not exactly contradict that quoted by Vasishṭha. Besides these passages, there are some other verses³ which contain the well-known phrase, 'manur abravīt, thus Manu spoke,'

¹ Vas. मानवं वात्र श्लोकमुदाहरन्ति । फलान्यापस्तिलान्मन्त्रान्यन्नान्यष्टाद्विकं भवेत् । प्रतिगृह्णाप्यनभ्यायः पायसास्या ब्राह्मणाः स्मृता इति ॥ Manu, प्राणि वा यदि वाप्राणि यत्किञ्चिष्ट्वाद्विकं भवेत् । तदालभ्याप्यनभ्यायः पायसास्यो हि द्विजः स्मृतः ॥

² 'No duty (is paid) on a sum less than a kārshāpāna, there is no tax on a livelihood gained by arts, nor on an infant, nor on a messenger, nor on what has been received as alms, nor on the remnants of property left after a robbery, nor on a Srotriya, nor on an ascetic, nor on a sacrifice.'

³ Vas. XI, 23; XII, 16; XXIII, 43; XXVI, 8.

and mention Manu as the authority for the rule taught. With respect to these references it seems to me not probable that they have been taken from the Mānava Dharma-sūtra. We shall see below¹ that from the earliest times the mythical Manu, the father of mankind, was considered as the founder of the social and moral order, and that he was considered to have first taught or revealed religious rites and legal maxims. Hence I believe that these four verses give nothing more than an expression of the belief that their doctrines go back to the first progenitor of men². The first three among them either contradict or find no counterpart in our Manu-smṛiti. The fourth agrees in substance with Manu XI, 260–261. But it occurs in a chapter which is probably spurious, or, at least, full of interpolations. Whatever view may be taken concerning these passages, the allegation that the Mānava Dharma-sūtra, known to Vasishṭha, closely resembled, but was not identical with our Manu, need not be modified.

If we look for other traces of the Sūtra, quoted by Vasishṭha, it is possible that Gautama, who mentions an opinion of Manu, XXI, 7, refers to it. His Dharma-sūtra is even older than Vasishṭha's, and long anterior to our Manu-smṛiti. But the possibility that Gautama refers not to a rule of the Mānava Dharma-sūtra, but to a maxim generally attributed to the mythical Manu, is not altogether excluded. Gautama says, 'Manu (declares that) the first three (crimes, the intentional murder of a Brāhmaṇa, drinking Surā, and the violation of a Guru's bed) cannot be expiated³.' The wording of the Sūtra shows that it is not a quotation, but a summary of Manu's opinion. Our Manu-smṛiti explicitly teaches, XI, 90, the same doctrine with respect to the intentional murder of a Brāhmaṇa, and, if my explanation of XI, 147 is accepted, also with respect to the intentional drinking of Surā. As regards the third offence, there is no direct statement. But the expiations, prescribed XI, 104-105, amount to a sentence of death. Hence our Manu-smṛiti, too, practically declares the crime to be inextinguishable during the offender's lifetime. Its original, the Dharma-sūtra, may, therefore, be supposed to have had the rule which Gautama attributes to Manu. Nevertheless, owing to the circumstances mentioned above, Gautama's passage cannot be adduced as a perfectly certain proof of the early existence of the Mānava Dharma-sūtra.

¹ See p. lviii.

² The meaning of the phrase in the verse, occurring in the quotation from the Mānava Dharma-sūtra, is probably the same.

³ ऋषि प्रथमान्यनिर्देश्यानि मनुः ॥ The same opinion is expressed in the Mahābhārata XII, 165, 34, but not attributed to Manu.

Among the remaining Dharma-sūtras¹ there is only the fragment attributed to Uśanas which seems to quote a Sūtra of Manu. At the beginning of the first chapter² we find a very corrupt passage containing a prose-quotation which according to two of my MSS. belongs to Manu, but according to a third to Sumantu. As the latter copy is, however, clearly more incorrect than the other two, and as a Sūtra by Sumantu is not known from other sources, the reading of the first two seems to be preferable. The contents of the quotation which apparently prescribes that on the death of an infant, of an emigrant, of one who keeps no sacred fires, of one who kills himself by starvation or by self-cremation, and of one slain in battle, no period of impurity need be kept, agree with the teaching of our Manu-smṛiti, V, 78, 89, 94, 98.

There is, further, one among the Vedic books on the ritual, the Sāṅkhāyana Gr̥hya-sūtra, which possibly refers to the Mānava Dharma-sūtra. This work quotes the verse, Manu V, 41, which, as has been shown above, occurred also in the Dharma-sūtra as well as several other Ślokas of our Manu-smṛiti, partly in better versions¹. As the Grihya-sûtra agrees also in a number of its rules very characteristically with Manu, it is not improbable that its author may have drawn on the original of the latter. But before one can be perfectly confident on this point, it is necessary that some difficult questions regarding the critical condition of Sāṅkhâya's text should be cleared up more fully than has been done hitherto. More important than the passages from the last work is the evidence which the Kāmandakiya Nitisâra furnishes, where twice opinions of the Mānavâh and once an opinion of Manu are quoted, but rejected in favour of the views of the author's teacher, Kānakya Kauṣilya. In one case the doctrine, attributed to the Mānavâh, agrees with the teaching of our Manu-smṛiti. We read in the discussion on the number of the prakritis, the constituent elements of the mandala or political circle to which a king must pay attention, Kām. Nīt. VII, 24-25, 'With respect to this (question) the Mānavas record that five constituent elements, the ministers and the rest, belong severally to each of the twelve kings. But those original twelve (kings) and those (others), the ministers and the rest, (are) seventy-two (in number, and form) the whole circle of constituent elements².' Our Manu-smṛiti states, VII, 155-156, that twelve kings belong to the mandala, and adds ver. 157, 'The minister, the kingdom, the fortress, the treasury, and the army are five other (constituent elements of the circle); for these are mentioned in connexion with each (of the first twelve); thus the whole circle (consists), briefly (speaking, of) seventy-two (constituent parts).' The other two passages differ. According to Kāmandaki II, 3, the Mānavas teach that the sciences, which a king must study, are three only, the threefold (Veda), the theory of professions and trades, and the science of government, 'because the science of dialectics or reasoning is a subdivision of the threefold (Vedic lore¹),' while Manu VII, 43 enumerates five branches of learning, or at least four, if either Medhâtithi's or Nârâyana's explanation of the term âtmavidyâ, rendered in the translation by 'the knowledge of the (supreme) Soul,' is accepted². Again, we hear, Kâmandaki XI, 67, that Manu fixed the number of ministers (amâtya), which the king must appoint, at twelve. But according to Manu VII, 54, no more than seven or eight are required. These quotations show that Kâmandaki knew a work, attributed to Manu, which contained rules on the duties of kings, and in some respects agreed with the seventh chapter of our Manu-smṛiti. If I conclude that this must have been the old Mânava Dharma-sûtra, it is because Kâmandaki twice alludes to it by the title Mânavaś, literally 'those who study a work proclaimed by Manu,' or, more freely rendered, 'the Mânava school.' It is a very common practice of Indian authors to refer in this manner to the books restricted to special schools. But I know of no case where the doctrines of the Mânava Dharmasâstra, or of any other work which is destined for all Âryans and acknowledged as authoritative by all, are cited in the same or in a similar way. Nor is it usual to contrast, as Kâmandaki does, the rules taught by Manu with those of other teachers and afterwards to reject them³. If a Hindu writer on law finds it necessary to set aside an opinion of Manu, he either passes by it in silence or he interprets the passage where it occurs in accordance with the principles of some other Smṛiti with

¹ Regarding the passage of Āpastamba II, 16, 1, which ascribes the revelation of the Śrāddhas to Manu, see below, p. lix.

² I transcribe the whole beginning of the work, तत्र जन्ममरणयोः काले देशान्तरयोः शौचं दशरात्रं मातापितृभ्यः सूतके मातुरित्येके ॥ उपस्युष्य ---- मनुराह ॥ बाले देशान्तरस्यैवानग्निं चोराध्वाने (?) अनाशकेग्निप्रवेशे युज्यते च सद्यः ॥ शौचान्न पतितान्नमिद्विनाशैर्न सह संवसेत् ॥ Thus two MSS.; the third reads, उपस्युष्य तु सुमन्तुराह । and further on, शौचान्नमिद्विनाशैर्न सह संवसेत् ॥ It is impossible to restore the whole passage. The end of the quotation may have been सद्यः शौचमिद्विनाशैर्न सह संवसेत् ॥

¹ Oldenberg, Sāṅkh. Gri. S. in the Indische Studien, vol. xv, p. 11.

² द्वादशानां नरेन्द्राणां पञ्च पञ्च पृथक्पृथक् । अनायासात् प्रकृतीरामनन्तीह मानवाः ॥ २३ ॥ मौला द्वादश यास्वेता अनायासात्तथा च याः । समतिश्रद्धिका ह्येताः सर्वे प्रकृतिमखिलम् ॥ २५ ॥ I read according to the commentary समतिश्रद्धिका instead of the senseless समतिश्रद्धिका of the text.

¹ अथैवास्मिन् दृष्टानीतिरिति विद्या हि मानवाः । अथैवास्मिन् विभागोऽयं
सेयमान्वीक्षिकी नता ॥ ३ ॥

² With respect to Medhâtithi's and Nârâyana's explanations, see the note to the translation. I will add that Kâm. Nt. II, 7, आन्वीक्षिक्यान्विज्ञानम् 'The science of dialectics (is) a means of fully recognising the Soul or Self,' speaks in favour of Nârâyana's explanation, and that it would perhaps have been better if I had placed the latter in the text.

³ As the learned editor of the Nitisâra (Preface, p. 2) asserts that its author was a Buddhist, it might be conjectured that the latter treated Manu with small respect, because he belonged to a heterodox sect. But it ought to be noted that no proof is offered for the above assertion, and that the work contains no trace of Buddhism.

which he himself agrees. Hence it is not doubtful that Kāmandaki's references point to a work of Manu which, though highly esteemed, did not hold the same paramount position as Bṛiṅgu's version of Manu's laws. In other words, Kāmandaki's Manu must have been the property of a particular school, and that was just the case with the Mānava Dharma-sūtra. The fact that all the known Dharma-sūtras contain a more or less detailed description of the duties of kings agrees well with this supposition, and so does the circumstance that Kāmandaki's Nītisāra is either really an ancient work, composed long before the beginning of our era, or at least a later recension of such an old book¹. These are all the certain indications of the former existence of a Mānava Dharma-sūtra which I have been able to find. It is possible that the same work is also alluded to in some verses of the twelfth and thirteenth Parvans of the Mahābhārata. But this question is, as we shall see below, surrounded with great difficulties, and its solution somewhat doubtful. Among the passages, discussed above, none are so important as Vasishṭha's quotations. The remainder contribute, however, to give a more definite idea of the range of subjects included in the lost work, and they confirm the conclusion, drawn from the former, that the Mānava Dharma-sūtra closely resembled our Manu-smṛiti.

The investigations concerning the last point, the question if any traces of a connexion of our Manu-smṛiti with the writings of the Mānava school are discoverable, have hitherto led, as stated above, to a negative result. They were, of course, directed to a comparison of the Mānava Gr̥hya-sūtra with the Dharmasāstra, as both works of necessity frequently treat of the same subjects. On comparing the corresponding portions of the two works, Professor Jolly¹ found no special agreement with respect to the ages prescribed for the performance of the Samskâras, with respect to the marriage-rites and to the rules for the conduct of students and of Snâtakas. Nor was he able to discover in the Manu-smṛiti any of the curious technical terms and phrases used in the Gṛihya-sûtra, while the somewhat closer resemblance in the Mantras of the Vaisva-deva ceremony and in a few other points turned out to be without conclusiveness on account of the concurrent agreement of other Gṛihya-sûtras. Dr. von Bradke's re-examination of the question² did not yield any other result. I can only bear witness to the general correctness of these remarks. Though it is possible to adduce some passages, not mentioned by Professor Jolly³, in which the Gṛihya-sûtra shows a special affinity with the Smṛiti, the very great differences which occur in other sections⁴, the absence of an agreement in particularly characteristic rules⁵, and the

¹ The work claims to be the composition of a pupil of Kāndragupta's famous minister, Kāṇakya Kauṇḍilya or Kauṇḍalya, to whom a portion of the Maṅgalā-karavaṇa is dedicated, and who is frequently referred to as the Guru or teacher. Though there is no clear evidence corroborating this statement, there is also none to rebut it. In favour of this claim speaks the fact that the name of the author is a nomen gentile. For among the ancient writers the practice of signing their books with the family-name is almost universal. Later it seems to have fallen into disuse. The Nītisāra is quoted by the oldest commentator of Manu, Medhātithi.

¹ On the Vishnu Dharma-sûtra and the Kâtaka; Transactions of the Royal Bavarian Academy, 1879, ii, p. 82 seq.

² Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. xxxii, p. 438.

³ Among the rules which specially agree, I may mention one from the section on the Initiation, Mân. Gṛi. Sû. I, 22 (end), चप भेषं चरते [चरेत्] । मातरनेवाये । याद्यान्याः सुहृदो यावत्यो वा संनिहिताः स्युः ॥ 'Next he shall go out to beg, first, to his mother and to other females who are friendly, or to as many as may be near.' These Sûtras correspond to Manu II, 50, 'Let him first beg food of his mother, or of his sister, or of his own maternal aunt, or of (some other) female who will not disgrace him (by a refusal).' I am not aware that this rule occurs in any other Smṛiti.

⁴ Among the very great discrepancies I would point to such as those occurring in the section on the marriage-rites. The Manu-smṛiti III, 20-34, describes the well-known eight modes by which a woman may be obtained from her family. But the Mânava Gṛihya-sûtra I, 7-8, knows two only, the Brâhma and the Saulka rites, the latter of which corresponds to the Âsura or Mânusha rite of the other Smṛitis, and sanctions the purchase of the bride from her parents.

⁵ The absence of an agreement in characteristic rules is particularly noticeable in the chapter on the study of the Veda and the stoppages of the Veda study. There the general rules, e. g. regarding the beginning, length, and ending of the school-term, which are found also in other Smṛitis, agree in both works. But none of those special prescriptions which the Mânava Gṛihya-sûtra gives for the time when and the ceremonies with which particular portions of the Maitrâyaṇi Samhitâ are to be learnt can be traced in the Manu-smṛiti.

non-occurrence of Mantras, peculiar to the Maitrāyaṇīya-Mānava school in the Manu-smṛiti, do not permit us to consider them as decisive for the settlement of the question. On the other hand, this negative result does not preclude the possibility that the supposed connexion between the original of the Manu-smṛiti and the Mānava school may nevertheless have existed. For the examples of the Hairanyakesas and Mādhyamdinas show that the Sūtras, adopted by a school, are not always composed by one and the same teacher, but sometimes are made up of fragments originally belonging to different authors. In the case of the Mādhyamdinas the author of the Srauta-sūtra is a Kātyāyana, while the Grīhya-sūtra bears the name of a Pāraskara. In the case of the Hairanyakesas the Dharma-sūtra, though it is ascribed to Hiranyakesin Satyāśhādha, is in reality the work of Āpastamba, and differs both in its language and in its contents very much from the Grīhya-sūtra¹. Moreover, the Hairanyakesa Kayana-sūtra has been taken over, as its colophon clearly proves, from the Bhāradvāgas. It is, therefore, still possible that the ancient Mānava Dharma-sūtra was considered as the special property of the Mānavas, but was not composed by the same teacher as the Grīhya-sūtra, or that, though both works had the same author, the materials for their composition were borrowed from different sources. Either supposition would explain the discrepancies between the two works. If we now could show that some other work belonging to the Mānava Karana shows a special affinity to the Manu-smṛiti, the view that the original of the latter was first the property of that school might be still upheld. A renewed examination of the various treatises, studied and claimed as their own by the Mānavas, has convinced me that such a connecting link is actually found among them. This is the Srāddhakalpa, a description of the ordinary funeral sacrifices which the Mānava Grīhya-sūtra does not treat in detail, but barely touches in the sections on the Ashṭakā rites (II, 8-9). If this treatise has not been taken into consideration by Professor Jolly and

¹ Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. xxiii.

Dr. von Bradke, the reason is that it is not contained in Professor Haug's collection of the Mānava Sūtras, the only one which has hitherto been accessible to European students. In my copy of the works of the Mānava school it stands after the *Pravarādhyāya*¹. It consists of four short Khandas. The first begins with the words, 'Now we will explain the rules for the funeral sacrifices,' and treats of the following points: the invitation of qualified Brāhmaṇas, their hospitable reception with the Arghya in the house of the sacrificer, the invocations asking the Visvedevas and the manes to attend, and the burnt oblations offered to Soma, Yama, and Agni. The Mantras which are to be used seem, if not all, at least for the greater part, to have been taken from the Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā. This section shows hardly any special agreement with the Manu-smṛiti, except in the rule, known also from other Dharma-sūtras, which prescribes the entertainment of two guests at the rite in honour of the gods, and of three at the offering to the manes or of one on either occasion, as well as in the number and the deities of the burnt oblations which precede the Srāddha (Manu III, 123, 211). But the second Kanda, which contains the description of the Srāddha ceremony, opens with a couple of verses, the first of which corresponds almost literally² with Manu III, 274. The only important difference is that at the end the words 'in the rainy season and under (the constellation) Maghāḥ' take the place of Manu's 'when the shadow of the elephant falls towards the east.' It must be noted that, though Vishṇu LXXVIII, 52-53 and Vasishṭha XI, 40 have passages which contain similar prayers of the manes, their wording differs very considerably from that of the Srāddhakalpa and of

¹ My MS. of the writings of the Mānava Kāṇva, which was copied in 1864-65 at Nāsik, includes, besides the Samhitā and the Upanishad, counted as the fifth Kānda, all the portions of the Srauta-sūtra, known from Professor Haug's MSS. together with the Kumāra or Kumārila Bhāṣya and portions of a later vṛtti by Mirra Bālakṛishṇa, as well as the Gṛhya-sūtra with its Bhāṣya, the Pūranā-khya, by Bhaṭṭa Ashṭāvakra (not by Kumārila, as I conjectured in West and Bühler's Digest, p. 46, note a), and the Srāddhakalpa.

² अग्निं नः स्वकुले भूयाद्यो नो दद्यान्नयोदशीम् । पायसं मधुसर्पिण्यां वर्षासु च मघासु च ॥ the Manu-smṛiti. The second verse¹ bears a faint resemblance to Manu III, 202, as it declares that water offered in vessels of gold, silver, or Udumbara 'becomes imperishable.' The following prose portion has little in common with Manu's rules. Curiously enough, it prescribes that the funeral cakes are to be offered after the guests have finished their meal, a custom which Manu III, 261 attributes to 'some.' The section closes with some Slokas², the last of which is nearly identical with Manu III, 283. The chief difference is, that in the first line the word Srāddhe, 'at a Srāddha,' occurs instead of snātvā, 'after his bath.' The second var.lect. samāhitaḥ, 'with a concentrated mind,' instead of dvigottamaḥ, 'a Brāhmaṇa,' is found in the Southern MSS. of Manu. The next section, which is not numbered in the colophon as Khandā 3, but separately, treats of the Abhyudaya, or Vriddhi-srāddha, the funeral oblations which must be offered on all joyful occasions, such as the celebration of the birth of a son, a wedding, and so forth³. As Manu mentions this variety of the Srāddha only incidentally, III, 254, the contents of this Khandā find no counterpart in the Smṛiti. But among its numerous Slokas one line agrees literally with Manu IX, 186 a⁴. The fourth and last section of the Kalpa, which is marked as the Parisishta, the addenda, gives miscellaneous rules regarding the times when Srāddhas may be performed, the manner in which the fulfilment of certain special wishes may be secured, and the persons to be entertained on such occasions. It consists chiefly of

¹ सौवर्णेषु च पात्रेषु राजतौदुम्बरेषु च । दत्तमक्षय्यतां याति सङ्गो नार्थकृतेन च (sic) ॥

² दश पूर्वोद्देशापरात्मनश्चेकविंशतिम् (sic) । आङ्गकुम्भोचयेत्पापाम्बह-
तोप्येनसः पितृन् ॥ आङ्गं च यो न दद्यात्पितृभ्यश्च कदाचन (sic) । षड्विधसह-
स्राणि विहायां जायते कृमिः ॥ यदेव तर्पयत्यङ्घ्रिः पितृभ्याङ्गे समाहितः । तेनैव
सर्वमाप्नोति पितृयज्ञक्रियाफलमिति ॥ इति मानवश्चाङ्गकले द्वितीयः खण्डः
समाप्तः ॥

³ Beginning अथ वृद्धिश्चाङ्गं व्याख्यास्यामः ॥ Colophon, इति मानवसूत्रे
अभ्युदयश्चाङ्गम् ॥

⁴ त्रयाणामुदकं कार्यं त्रिषु पिंडः प्रवर्तते ॥ verses, seven¹ of which are either quite or nearly identical with passages of the Manu-smṛiti III, 82, 125-126, 145, 185, 148, and 186, while another, which teaches that the invited Brāhmaṇas and the sacrificer must remain chaste 'because the manes dwell with them²,' agrees in substance with Manu III, 189. Two among the seven Slokas, those corresponding to Manu III, 125-126, occur also in the Vāsishtika and Baudhāyana Dharmasāstras. The remainder are not traceable in the ancient Sūtras.

These remarks show that the Mānava Srāddhakalpa consists, like many other handbooks of Vedic schools, of several pieces, which probably have been composed successively at different times. Even the whole treatise may be possibly later than the Gr̥hya-sūtra, and may have been added in order to supplement its too curt rules on funeral sacrifices. But in spite of these admissions, the fact that it contains so many verses partly or wholly agreeing with the Manu-smṛiti, keeps its importance for the point under consideration. If an adherent of the Mānava school found it necessary to compose a treatise on a subject like the Srāddhas, he would, as a matter of course, base it on the usage and the teaching of his school. Hence it may be assumed that the verses which he inserted were current in the latter, and it is not improbable that they may have occurred in one of its written works. As, further, the Manu-smṛiti rests on a Mānava Dharma-sūtra, and has derived from the latter a number of its verses, the most natural explanation of the partial agreement between the Śrāddhakalpa and the Smṛiti is that both have drawn on the same source, the Mānava Dharma-sūtra. If that is so, the latter must have been considered as authoritative by the Mānavas, and have been their peculiar property. Though several links in this chain of arguments must unfortunately remain hypothetical, it seems to me, especially if taken together with Professor Jolly's and Dr. von Schröder's above-mentioned discoveries regarding the relation of the books of the Kāthaka school to those of the Maitrāyaṇīya-Mānavas and of the Vishṇu-smṛiti to the Manu-smṛiti, sufficiently strong to show that also this part of Professor Max Müller's hypothesis is more than an ingenious conjecture.

¹ a. कुर्यादहरहः आहवन्नाद्येनोदकेन वा । पयोमूलफलैर्वीर्यं पितृभ्यः प्रीतिमाहरेत् ॥ In the corresponding verse of Manu, Medh. and Gov. read आहरन् instead of Kullūka's आहहन् ॥ b. द्वौ देवे चीन्यत्रे [च] एकैकमुभयत्र वा । भोजयेत्सुखमुदोपि न प्रसज्येत विस्रारं [रे] ॥ सतिश्रयां देशकालौ च दूष्यं ब्राह्मणसंपदः । पंचैतानि [तानि] स्तरो हन्ति तस्माच्चैह तु [वेह तु] विस्रारं [रे] ॥ c. यत्नेन भोजयेन्नाद्ये बद्धं च वेदपारगं । शास्त्रांतगमश्चैव हृदोगं वा समाप्तिगम् ॥ d. पञ्चाग्निं वि [ग्निस्त्रि] सुपर्शं च [च] त्रिणाचिकेतः षडंगवित् । ब्रह्मदेयानुसंतानो ज्येष्ठसामग एव च ॥ e. मातामहं मातुलं च स्त्रीयं ऋशुरं गुरुं । दौहित्रं पिदपतिं बंधु [धुम्] क्षत्रियाज्यौ च भोजयेत् ॥ f. वेदार्थी विप्रवक्ता च ब्रह्मचारि [चर्ये] सदा स्थिताः [तः] । शतायुश्चैव विज्ञेया ब्राह्मणाः पंक्तिपावनाः ॥ The fifth and sixth verses have been transposed by a mistake of the copyist.

² पूर्वेषुरामंत्रितो विप्रैः [त्रैविं] पितरः संवसंति वै । यजमानश्च ता रात्रिं चसेयुर्ब्रह्मचारिणः (sic) ॥

In conclusion, I may mention that two other circumstances—a certain agreement between the Maitrāyaṇa-brāhmaṇopaniṣad and the Manu-smṛiti, as well as the preference which the latter shows for North-western India in its description of the countries where pure Āryan customs prevail (II, 17–22)—may also point to a connexion of the Manu-smṛiti and of its original with the Mānava school. In the Upaniṣad VI, 37, we find quoted, as a generally known maxim, a verse which occurs Manu III, 76. Two other verses, Manu VI, 76–77, agree in substance with Maitr. Up. III, 4¹, and some of Manu's statements regarding the Ātman and the results of the guṇas or qualities closely correspond to the doctrines taught in the *Upaniṣad*². On a closer examination these resemblances lose, however, a good deal of their significance. For the ideas expressed in Manu III, 76 are likewise traceable in a Vedic passage quoted in Vasishṭha's Dharma-sūtra. The comparison of the human body to an impure dwelling (Manu VI, 76–77) reappears even in Buddhistic works³. The corresponding philosophical tenets, finally, occur in a portion of the Manu-smṛiti which probably is not ancient¹, and they are held by several of the special schools of philosophy. As regards the passages in Manu's second chapter which praise the holiness of the districts between the Drishadvatī and the Sarasvatī, and between the Yamunā and the Gaṅgā, they may indicate, as Dr. Johānntgen thinks², that the home of the school which produced the Mānava Dharma-sūtra lies in those districts. If that were certain, it would agree well enough with the facts known regarding the ancient seats of the Mānavas. The latter are a North-western sect, and extended, as the Mahārṇava asserts³, from the Mayūra hill to Gūgarat. Unfortunately, however, the Dharma-sūtras of Vasishṭha and Baudhāyana contain almost exactly the same statements as Manu, and hence the verses of the latter possibly mean nothing more than that the Mānavas, like many other Vedic schools, considered India north of the *Vindhya*s, and especially the districts adjoining the sacred rivers, as the true home of Brāhmanism and of Āryan purity.

¹ Sacred Books of the East, vol. xv, p. 298, note 1. ² See below, p. lxxiii.

³ Dhammapada, 147–150; Johāntgen, Das Gesetzbuch des Manu, p. 93.

II.

While the preceding discussion has shown that our Mānava Dharmasāstra is based on a Mānava Dharma-sūtra which probably was the exclusive property of the Maitrāyaṇīya-Mānava school, we have now to consider some questions connected with the conversion of the locally authoritative Sūtra into a law-book claiming the allegiance of all Āryans and generally acknowledged by them. The problems which now have to be solved, or at least to be attempted, are the following: 1. what circumstances led to the substitution of a universally binding Mānava Dharma-sāstra for the manual of the Vedic school? 2. why was so prominent a position allotted to the remodelled Smṛiti?

¹ See below, p. lxix.

² Loc. cit. pp. 109-110.

³ Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. xxxi; and L. von Schröder, Maitrāyaṇīya Smṛti, I, pp. xxiv-xxviii. The ancient inscriptions name Maitrāyaṇīya Brāhmanas as donees in the Central India Agency and Gūgarat. The Mānava school still exists in the latter country and in Khāndesh.

3. how was the conversion effected? and 4. when did it probably take place?

Though the absence of all historical information, and even of a trustworthy tradition, makes it impossible to give full and precise details in answering the first question, it is yet, I think, possible to recognise the general cause which led to the production of that class of secondary Smṛitis to which the Mānava Dharmaśāstra belongs¹. This cause lies, it seems to me, in the establishment of special law schools which were independent of any particular Sākhā of the Veda, and which supplanted the Vedic Karanas as far as the teaching of the sacred law is concerned. Evident as it is that the Vedic schools first systematised and cultivated the six sciences which, on account of their close connexion with the Veda, are called its Āṅgas or limbs, it is no less apparent that, as the materials for each of these subjects accumulated and the method of their treatment was perfected, the enormous quantity of the matter to be learnt, and the difficulty of its acquisition depressed the Vedic schools from their high position as centres of the intellectual life of the Āryas, and caused the establishment of new special schools of science, which, while they restricted the range of their teaching, taught their curriculum thoroughly and intelligently. In the Vedic schools a full and accurate knowledge of the sacred texts was, of course, always the primary object. In order to gain that the pupils had to learn not only the Samhitā text of the Mantras and Brāhmaṇas, but also their Pada, Krama, and perhaps still more difficult pāṭhas or modes of recitation. This task no doubt required a considerable time, and must have fully occupied the twelve terms of four and a half or five and a half months which the Smṛitis give as the average duration of the studentship for the acquisition of one Veda². As long as the Āṅgas consisted of short simple treatises, it was also possible to commit them to memory and to master their contents in the twelve terms, consisting of the seven or eight dark fortnights from the month Pausha to Vaisākha¹. But when the Kalpa or ritual alone reached dimensions as in the Sûtras of the Baudhâyanîyas and Âpastambîyas, while the grammar developed into as artificial a system as that of Pāṇini, it became a matter of sheer impossibility for one man to commit to memory and to fully understand the sacred texts together with the auxiliary sciences, especially as the number of the latter was increased in early times by the addition of the Nyāya or Pûrvā Mîmāṃsā, the art of interpreting the rules of the Veda². The members of the Vedic schools were then placed before two alternatives. They might either commit to memory all the Vedic texts of their Sākhās together with the Ângas, renouncing the attempt at understanding what they learnt, or they had to restrict the number of the treatises which they learnt by heart, while they thoroughly mastered those which they acquired. Those who adhered to the former course became living libraries, but were unable to make any real use of their learning. Those who adopted the second alternative might become great scholars in the science of the sacrifice, grammar, law or astronomy, but they could not rival with the others in the extent of the verbal knowledge of the sacred books. Thus the Vedic schools ceased to be the centres of intellectual, and were supplanted by the special, schools of science.

¹ Regarding the various classes of secondary Smṛitis, see West and Bühler, Digest, p. 32, third edition.

² See Manu III, 1, and IV, 95, as well as the parallel passages quoted in the notes.

The present state of learning in India proves beyond doubt that this change actually took place in the manner described, and direct statements in the ancient text-books, as well as their condition, allow us to recognise the various stages which led up to it. The true modern representatives of the ancient Karāṇas are the so-called Vaidiks, men who, mostly living on charity, devote their energy exclusively to the acquisition of a verbal knowledge of the ¹ See Manu IV, 98, and the parallel passages quoted in the note. According to some Smṛitis the Ângas might be studied at any time out of term (Vas. XIII, 7).

² Regarding the early existence of the Pûrvā Mîmāṃsā, see Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. xxvii; and the verse on the constitution of a Parishad, quoted Baudh. I, 1, 8; Vas. III, 20.

sacred texts and of the Āṅgas of their Sākhās as well as of some other works, more or less closely connected with the Veda. A perfect Vaidik of the Āśvalāyana school knows the Rig-veda according to the Samhitā, Pada, Krama, Garā and Ghana Pāthas, the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa and Āraṇyaka, the ritualistic Sūtras of Āśvalāyana, Saunaka's Prātisākhya and the Sikshā, Yāska's Nirukta, the grammar of Pāṇini, the Vedic calendar or Gyotisha, the metrical treatise called the Khandas, Yāgyavalkya's Dharmasāstra, portions of the Mahābhārata, and the philosophical Sūtras of Kaṇvāda, Gaimini, and Bādarāyana. Similarly the Vaidiks of the Yagus, Sāman, and Atharvan schools are able to recite, more or less perfectly, the whole of the works of their respective Sākhās as well as some other non-Vedic books¹. But it would be in vain to expect from such men an explanation of the literary treasures which they possess. It is not the professional Vaidik who can perform the great sacrifices according to the Srauta-sūtras, interpret the intricate system of Pāṇini's grammar, or decide a knotty point of law according to the Dharma-sūtra or the secondary Smṛiti which he knows by heart. For these purposes one must go to quite different classes of men. The performance of the great Srauta sacrifices lies in the hands of the Srottriya or Srautī, who unites with a thoroughly verbal knowledge of the sacred texts of his Sākhā a full acquaintance with the meaning of the Srauta-sūtras and with the actual kriyā or manual work, described in the Prayogas. The Srautī, as well as his humbler fellow-worker, the so-called Yāgyūka or Bhattachāgi, who knows the Grihya-sūtras and performs the rites prescribed for domestic occurrences, likewise both belong to the representatives of the Vedic schools. They make, however, no pretence to a knowledge of the whole range of the Āṅgas, but content themselves with studying the Kalpa, or parts of it, and perhaps the *Sikshā*². Real

¹ Regarding the necessity for a Vaidik to learn non-Vedic books, see Vas. XXVII, 6.

² Regarding the present condition of the Vedic schools and of Vedic learning, see Haug, Brahma und die Brahmanen, p. 47; and R. G. Bhāṇḍārkar's careful paper, 'The Veda in India' (Ind. Ant. III, 132 sqq.). From personal observaproficiency in the other still surviving Āṅgas, grammar, law, and astronomy is to be found only with those Pandits who fulfil their duty of studying the Veda by committing to memory a few particularly important sections, such as the Pāvamāni-hymns of the Rig-veda or the Satarudriya of the Yagur-veda, or by confining themselves to the few verses which occur in the Brahmayagñā and the *Samdhyā-vandana*¹. Their chief aim is to be perfect in one or more of the special sciences which they study, without reference to a particular Vedic school. Thus, though a Pandit who chiefly devotes himself to the sacred law may belong to the Vedic school of Baudhāyana or Āpastamba, he will not make Baudhāyana's or Āpastamba's Dharma-sūtra the starting-point of his studies. On the contrary, it will frequently happen that he possesses no knowledge of the Dharma-sūtra of his school, except a few passages quoted in the commentaries and digests. If he has read the whole work, he will consult it only as one of the many utterances of the ancient sages. He will not attribute to it a higher authority than to other Smṛitis, but interpret it in accordance with the rules of the secondary Dharmasāstras of Manu or Yāgñavalkya. A good illustration of this state of things is furnished by Sāyana-Mādhava's treatment of Baudhāyana in his Vyavahāramādhava, a treatise on civil and criminal law supplementing his commentary on Parāśara's Smṛiti. Though he himself tells us, in the introduction to the *Parāśara-smṛiti-vyākhyā*², that he belonged to the school of Baudhāyana, and though he seems to have written a commentary on Baudhāyana's Sūtras, he relies, e. g. for the law of Inheritance, not on Baudhāyana's Dharma-sūtra, but on Vigñānesvara's exposition of Yāgñavalkya. He quotes Baudhāyana only in three places³. As far as the law is concerned, Sāyana follows the theories of the tion I can add to Professor Bhāṇḍārkar's statements that Vaidiks of the White Yagur-veda are found also in Northern India. I have also heard of Vaidiks of the Sāma-veda among the Parvatīyas in the Panjab, and of the Atharva-veda in the Central India Agency.

¹ Bhāṇḍārkar, loc. cit. p. 132 note.

² Parāśara-smṛiti-vyākhyā, p. 3, ver. 7 (Calcutta edition).

³ Burnell, Dāyavibhāga, pp. 9, 39, 41.

special law school of his time and of his country, without particular reference to the teaching of his Vedic Karana.

This depression of the Vedic Karanas through special schools, which took over the scientific cultivation of a most important portion of the Aṅgas, is not of modern date. It goes back to a time which lies long before the beginning of the historical period of India. We have various indications in the ancient books which force us towards this conclusion. Thus Yāska's Nirukta, a work which undoubtedly belongs to a very early period, quotes Vaiyākaranas, grammarians; Nairuktas, etymological exegetes; and Yāgñikas, ritualists; and contrasts their conflicting opinions¹. If these schools were at issue with respect to grammatical or exegetical questions, it follows that the subjects which they taught were no longer cultivated by the same persons as auxiliary branches of the Vedic lore, but that each had received in a special school a separate development as an independent science. The actual condition in which the various Aṅgas have been preserved, fully agrees with this view. It shows that two at least, grammar and astronomy, slipped away from the control of the Vedic Karanas in very early times. For not one of those schools, the text-books of which have survived, possesses a grammatical or an astronomical handbook of its own. Pāṇini's Ashṭādhyāyī is the sole representative of the Vyākaraṇa class of the Aṅgas, and is equally acknowledged by the followers of all Vedas. But grammar, as taught by Pāṇini, is no longer a mere handmaiden of the Vedavidyā. It is an independent science which lays down the laws, applicable to the whole Sanskrit language, and treats what we now call the classical Sanskrit as the standard of Āryan speech, the Vedic forms as anomalies. As the numerous quotations of older schools and older teachers in Pāṇini's own work, in the *Prātisākhya*s, and in Yāska's Nirukta clearly show, a very considerable number of more ancient works did precede the Ashṭādhyāyī, and the latter is undoubtedly the final outgrowth of a long scientific development². A good many of the lost works seem to have treated grammar from the same standpoint as Pāṇini's book. But it may be reasonably supposed that the earliest among them mainly or even exclusively taught the rules applicable to the Vedic texts, studied by the several Karāṇas to which the authors belonged. This stage of grammatical research belongs, however, to a remote past. Indian grammar, as it first becomes known to us, is no longer entirely subservient to the wants of the Veda-study, but works, though it still takes account of the Veda, for its own ends.

¹ Nirukta I, 12; V, 11; VII, 4; XIII, 9.

² See Max Müller, History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 150, who says

The science of astronomy is still more loosely connected with the Vedic schools. All the traces of its really having been an Aṅga consist in the small treatise, entitled Gyotisha, of which two slightly different recensions are extant, one belonging to the Rig-veda and one to the Yagur-veda. All the other works on this subject, even the ancient ones such as the Gārgī Samhitā, as well as the Vāsishtā Samhitā and Siddhānta, show no connexion with the Veda or Vedic schools, except that their authorship is ascribed to Rishis or descendants of the families of Rishis.

As regards the sacred law, the fact that such late offshoots of the Vedic tree, as the Āpastambīyas and the Hairanyakesas, possess Dharma-sūtras, proves that this subject much longer formed part of the curriculum of the Vedic schools. But already one of the most ancient grammarians of the historical period of India, Patañjali, hints that in his times the Dharma was taught not only in the Vedic but also in special schools. For on the one hand he refers to the *Dharma-sūtras*¹, on the other he teaches the formation of a special word, dharmavidyā, which denotes 'a person who studies or knows the dharmavidyā, the science of the sacred law².' Possibly the word dharmasāstra, the Institutes of the sacred law, which occurs most appropriately that the Hindus ought to speak not of the Pāṇinīyādya vaiyākaraṇāḥ, but of the Pāṇinīyāntāḥ.

¹ See the remarks on Pāṇini I, 1, 47.

² See the remarks on Pāṇini IV, 2, 60 (vol. ii, p. 248, Kielhorn). I follow Dr. Kielhorn, who prints the words 'vidyā ānaṅgakshatradharmatripūrvā' as a remark of Patañjali, not as a Vārttika of Kātyāyana.

occasionally in his Bhâshya¹, may also point to manuals, studied by the special schools, which differed from the Dharma-sûtras. But it is not absolutely conclusive, as a Dharma-sûtra too may be called a Dharmaśāstra, because it teaches the sacred law. If we go back to still earlier times we find the existence of special law schools clearly indicated even in some of the Dharma-sûtras. The passages which are most explicit on this point are those which describe the constitution of a Parishad or an assembly of learned men, entitled to decide doubtful law cases. For we read, Vasishṭha III, 20, and Baudhâya I, 1, 8, 'Four men who each know one of the four Vedas, a student of the Mīmāṃsā, one who knows the Āṅgas, one who recites (the works on) the sacred law (dharmapāṭhaka), and three Brâhmanas belonging to (three different) orders (constitute) an assembly consisting of, at least, ten (members)².' Here the reciter or teacher of the sacred law is named side by side with him who knows the Āṅgas. As the two works in which the verse occurs are Dharma-sûtras belonging to the Kalpa section of the Āṅgas, it is evident that the teacher of the sacred law must be a person who specially devotes himself to the study of that subject, and knows more than one Dharma-sûtra. Hence it follows that special law schools must have existed at the time when these two Dharma-sûtras were composed³. It may also be that already then these special schools had elaborated

¹ See Kâtyâyana's Vârttika 39 on Pâṇini I, 2, 64, and Patañjali's remarks thereon (Kielhorn, Mah. vol. i, p. 242).

² See also Manu XII, 111; and above, p. xxv.

³ The significance of the passage quoted comes out still stronger, if we compare Gautama's rule (XXVIII, 49), which differs very considerably: 'They declare that an assembly (parishad, shall consist) at least (of) the ten following (members, viz.) four men who have completely studied the four Vedas, three men belonging to the (three) orders enumerated first, (and) three men who know (three) different (institutes of) law.' Gautama says nothing of men specially devoted to the study of the sacred law. He requires three persons, knowing three different Dharma-sûtras. He and Āpastamba are perfectly aware of the fragmentary character of their rules, and particularly refer their pupils (Gaut. XVI, 49; Āp. I, 3, 11, 38) in certain cases to the teaching of other schools, which, being comprised under the general term Smṛiti, have authority, provided the teachers were orthodox Sishṭas (Gaut. I, 2; Āp. I, 1, 1, 2; Vas. I, 4; Baudh. I, 1, 1, 3).

manuals of their own which differed from the Dharma-sûtras. In favour of this opinion the metrical quotation at Baudhâyana II, 4, 14-15 may be adduced, as it seems to have been taken from a work in Anushâubh-Slokas¹. Though the unsatisfactory state of the text of Baudhâyana does not allow us to insist too strongly on this passage, it is undeniable that the formation of special law schools must inevitably lead after a short time to the composition of manuals for their use. It is, no doubt, true that their founders possessed in the Dharma-sûtras, the number of which, to judge from the quotations, must have been very great, plentiful materials on which they could base their investigations. But the treatment of a science from a new point of view was in itself an incentive to the production of new manuals, and there were in the case of the special law schools also other reasons which made such a course desirable. Minute as the Dharma-sûtras generally are on the majority of the topics connected with the moral duties of Âryas, their arrangement of the rules is frequently unsystematic, and their treatment of the legal procedure, the civil and the criminal law, with the exception of one single title, the dâvavibhâga, i. e. the law of inheritance and partition, extremely unsatisfactory. With respect to the other titles, the Dharma-sûtras give nothing more than a few hints, intended to indicate the general principles, but they never proceed systematically, and always show most embarrassing omissions. From the standpoint of the Vedic schools, a more detailed and orderly treatment of these matters was, of course, irrelevant, as their chief aim was to point out the road to the acquisition of spiritual merit, and to guard their pupils against committing sin. Though some of their members might be called upon, and no doubt actually were destined in later life, to become practical lawyers, as Dharmâdhikârin, i. e. legal advisers of kings and chiefs, or as judges, and to settle the law between man and man, the few general principles which they had learnt during their course of instruction would suffice for their wants. For the details were settled according to the law of custom, which, as the Dharma-sûtras themselves indicate, was in ancient times even a greater power in India than it is in our days. When the sacred law became a separate science to which men devoted all or the best part of their energy, the case became different. However much the specialists might be convinced of the supreme importance of the moral side of the Dharma, they could not possibly shut their eyes against the glaring deficiencies of the old text-books, and they were, of a necessity, driven to remedy them. In order to effect this, two courses were open to them. They might either remodel the old existing works or compose entirely new ones. As might be expected from the universal tendency, observable throughout the whole of the sacred literature of India, they gave preference to the former alternative, and the result of their work was that class of the secondary Smritis, the chief surviving representatives of which are the Dharmasâstras of Manu and Yâgñavalkya. These works reveal their origin by the following marks. They are the exclusive property of the special law schools, and they show a fuller and more systematic treatment of all legal topics, while, at the same time, more or less clear traces of older redactions, connected with the Vedic schools, are to be found. They are free from all signs of sectarian influence, or of having been composed, like many of the later Digests, at royal command. They, finally, exhibit unmistakable marks of being school-books. If we examine our Manu-smṛiti with respect to these points, its connexion with an older Vedic work has been shown above, and the fact that it is, and has been ever since we have any information regarding its existence, in the keeping of the Pandîts, who especially devote themselves to the study of law, will be patent to every student of the Dharmasâstras. That it treats all legal topics more fully and more systematically than the Dharma-sûtras, and especially devotes much more space to those subjects which are briefly noticed in the latter works, is no less evident. It will suffice here to point out the fact that the description of the duties of the king, including the administration of justice and the civil and criminal law, occupies considerably more than one-third of the whole. For chapters vii-ix contain no less than 982 verses, while the total number amounts to 2,684¹. None of the older law-books devotes more than one-fifth of its text to such matters². The freedom of the Manu-smṛiti from all sectarian influence is perfect. It nowhere teaches the performance of other rites than those prescribed in the Vedic writings, and it nowhere inculcates the exclusive worship of one of the deities of the Paurāṇik sects as we find it recommended, for instance, in the Vishṇu-smṛiti. Nor is there any hint that it was written by order of some king or chief with the purpose of serving as a Digest of the sacred law. Finally, the marks of its being a school-book, intended for the instruction of all Āryas, are unmistakable. We are told, Manu I, 103, that 'a learned Brāhmaṇa must carefully study these (Institutes), and must duly instruct his pupils in them,' but that 'nobody else (shall do it).' Who the pupils, entitled to learn the work, are, is explained II, 16. There it is said that 'he for whom (the performance of) the rites, beginning with the Garbhādhâna and ending with the Antyeshî, is ordained together with recitation of sacred formulas, is entitled to study it, but no other man whatsoever.' Hence Brāhmanas are to teach the Sâstra, and all Āryas may learn it. It further agrees with its character as a school-book, if the phalasruti or statement of the rewards to be gained by its study, Manu XII, 126, asserts that a twice-born man, who is able to recite 'these Institutes, will be always virtuous in conduct, and will reach (i. e. after death) whatever condition he desires.' The first object which the student may gain is self-improvement, and the second happiness after death³.

¹ Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. xli.

¹ About the same ratio, 367 : 1009 is found in Yâgñavalkya's Smṛiti.

² Thus in the Gautamîya, seven pages of the text out of thirty-four are filled with legal matters; in the Vâsishṭha, twelve pages out of eighty-one; in the Āpastambîya, ten out of ninety-eight; and in the Baudhâyanîya, about seven out of a hundred and fifteen.

³ Other secondary Smṛitis, e. g. Yâgñavalkya's (III, 330-334), give much more detailed statements regarding the rewards to be obtained. But in substance they always agree with Manu.

If we accept the conclusion which the preceding discussion tends to establish, that the special law schools produced the first and the most ancient division of the secondary Smṛitis on the basis of older Dharma-sūtras, and that one among these schools, which, however, cannot be further specified, turned the Mānava Dharma-sūtra into our metrical *Smṛiti*¹, we obtain also satisfactory answers to two other questions. First, it becomes explicable why the latter work shows so little connexion with the special doctrines and usages of the Mānavas. If adherents of the Vedic Mānava school, as Professor E. Hopkins conjectures², had undertaken the revision of their Dharma-sūtra, they would not have forgotten to mention such ceremonies as those which, according to their Gṛihya-sūtra, must be performed on beginning the study of particular portions of their *Samhitā*³, and, above all, they would have allowed Mantras belonging to the Maitrāyaṇī Sākhā to stand. Again, if the task had fallen to the share of the members of some other Vedic school, we should find some points mentioned which were of special interest to them. The entire absence of all distinctive marks of any Vedic school which the Manu-smṛiti exhibits can only be explained on the hypothesis that it was remodelled by persons for whom such minute distinctions had no interest, and who concentrated their attention on those rules which they considered essential for all Āryas. Secondly, the view expressed above furnishes us with an answer to the question why the Manu-smṛiti, like all other works of its class, emphatically claims the allegiance of all Hindus. It is obvious that every special law school must assert, if its labour is not to be in vain, the general applicability of its doctrines and rules to all mankind.

If we now turn to the second point, what reasons induced the special law schools to select just the Mānava Dharma-sūtra among the large number of similar works for the basis of their studies and to recast it, the answer is not difficult to find. The reason for this selection, and for the high veneration in which the Manu-smṛiti has been held and is still held by Hindus, lies, without doubt, in the myths which, since very early times, have clustered round the name of Manu, and in progress of time have been more and more developed and brought into a system.

¹ This view, which I first taught in my lectures on the Hindu law, delivered in the Vienna University during the winter, 1881-82, has been accepted by Professor J. Jolly, Tagore Lectures, p. 41, and Lecture II passim, as well as p. 347 (end).

² Proceedings of the American Oriental Society, October, 1883, p. xix.

³ See above, p. xxxix, note 5.

In Vedic mythology, Manu, or Manus, as he is also called in the Rig-veda, is the heros eponymos of the human race, and by his nature belongs both to gods and to men. As a divine being he is described as the son of the Âditya Vivasvat and of 'the female of equal colour,' whom Vivasvat's wife, Saranyû, made to take her place¹, or as the offspring of Svayambhû, self-existent Brahman². In the same quality he is invoked at the sacrifices as pragâpati, the Lord of created beings³, and in Kutsâ-yana's hymn of praise, which is quoted in the Maitrâyana Brâhmaṇopaniṣad (V, 1), he is identified with Brahman, the supreme Soul⁴. In the systematised theology of the Nairuktas he appears as one of the deities residing in heaven⁵. His human character comes out still more frequently. He is named in the Rig-veda together with other sages of a remote antiquity⁶, the Taittiriya-saṃhitâ speaks of him as of the father of a family who divides his estate among his sons⁷, and the Satapatha-brâhmaṇa opens one of its legends regarding him with a passage which represents him as following the usual daily customs of men⁸.

Manu's position as the progenitor of mankind is usually

¹ Vâḷakhilya IV, 1; Atharva-veda VIII, 10, 24; Sat. Br. XIII, 4, 3, 3; and Nirukta XII, 10.

² See the Vedic sloka quoted Nirukta III, 4, about which more will be said below. A third account, Vâḷakhilya III, 1, makes him the son of Samvarana, who possibly may be identical with the Rishi mentioned RV. V, 33, 10.

³ Taitt. Saṃh. III, 2, 8, 1; IV, 1, 9, 1; Vâg. Saṃh. XI, 66; Maitr. Saṃh. II, 7, 7.

⁴ The edition reads annam, food. But Professor Max Müller's MS. has correctly Manu (S. B. E. XV, p. 303 note). My copy has मनुः.

⁵ Nirukta XII, 33-34.

⁶ RV. I, 80, 16; I, 112, 16, &c.

⁷ Taitt. Saṃh. III, 1, 9, 4.

⁸ Sat. Br. I, 8, 1; Sacred Books of the East, vol. xii, p. 216, 'In the morning they brought to Manu water for washing, just as they (are wont to) bring (water) for washing the hands.'

indicated in general terms only. In the Rig-veda he is repeatedly called 'Father Manu'.¹ In other passages we meet frequently with the assertion that 'the five tribes,' or 'these created beings,' or 'the races of men' are his offspring.² But in the famous legend of the flood, given by the *Satapatha-brāhmaṇa*³, we have a circumstantial account of the manner in which he produced the human race. According to that Brāhmaṇa, Manu alone was saved by the advice of a fish from a great flood which destroyed all created beings. Being desirous of offspring he engaged in worshipping and in performing austerities. During this time he offered a Pāka-yagñā. His oblations produced a woman, Idā or Iā, a personification of the idā ceremony and of 'the blessing of the sacrifice.' Though solicited by Mitra and Varuṇa to become theirs, she acknowledged herself Manu's daughter, and stayed with him. 'With her,' the Brāhmaṇa concludes in somewhat ambiguous terms, 'he went on worshipping and performing austerities. Through her he generated this race, which is called the race of Manu.' Though this legend is alluded to in another *Brāhmaṇa*⁴, and repeated in later Sanskrit works, it may be reasonably doubted whether it contains the original version of the production of mankind through Manu. It seems more probable that an older myth ascribed to him not a reproduction, but the first creation or procreation of the human race.

Being the father of mankind, Manu is naturally considered as the founder of social and moral order, as a ruler of men, and as a Rishi to whom sacred texts were revealed, as the inventor of sacrificial rites, and the author of legal maxims. We find, therefore, passages which assert that he was a king⁵, which speak of his coronation, or make him

¹ RV. I, 80, 16; I, 124, 2; II, 33, 13, &c.

² RV. III, 24, 3; Taitt. Samh. I, 5, 1, 3; I, 5, 6, 1; III, 4, 22; III, 4, 3, 7; VI, 1, 5, 6, &c.; Sat. Br. XIII, 4, 3, 3.

³ Sacred Books of the East, vol. xii, pp. 216-219.

⁴ Weber, Indische Streifen, vol. i, p. 11, note 3.

⁵ See e.g. Satapatha-brāhmaṇa XIII, 4, 3, 3, and RV. I, 112, 8. In the latter passage the epithet sūra, the hero, characterises Manu as a royal personage.

the ancestor of kings. Thus a Mantra, recited at the Abhisheka of a king¹, asserts that Pragâpati formerly anointed Indra, Soma, Varuṇa, Yama, and Manu, and among the mythical kings Saryâta is called Manu's son², while Purûravas is the offspring of Manu's daughter, Idâ or Iâ³. In later times this ancient idea, which makes Manu the first king of men and the ancestor of kings, has led to his being placed at the head of mythical and of partly historical genealogies. From him springs Ikshvâku, the first king of the solar dynasty and the historical Kalukya, and Kola kings name Manu as the founder of their families.

Much more frequently the Veda alludes to, or explicitly mentions, Manu as the inventor of sacrificial rites. The Rig-veda contains a very large number of passages⁴ which speak of Manu's sacrifices, and of his having kindled the sacred fire, or invoked the gods to accept the offerings of the Rîshis just as they accepted those of Manu. The same assertions are repeated in the Yagur-veda⁵, and the Sata-patha-brâhmaṇa (I, 5, 1-7) says very explicitly, 'Manu, indeed, worshipped with sacrifices in the beginning; imitating that, this progeny (of his now) sacrifices.' In addition to the fire-worship, Manu is also said to have invented the Srâddhas or funeral sacrifices. The chief passage bearing on this point occurs in Âpastamba's Dharma-sûtra II, 18, 1, where it is stated that the gods went to heaven in reward of their sacrifices, and that Manu, seeing men left behind, 'revealed this ceremony, which is designated by the word Srâddha.' Though this passage is not marked as a quotation, its style clearly shows that it has either been borrowed from a Brâhmaṇa, or that it gives a summary of

¹ Ait. Br. VIII, 8, 1.

² Sat. Br. IV, 1, 5, 2; compare also Ait. Br. IV, 32; VIII, 21, where the name is Sâryâta.

³ RV. I, 31, 4; X, 95; and Sat. Br. XI, 5, 1, 1. In the first passage I take manave in the sense of mânavâya.

⁴ See Bergaigne, Religion Védique, I, 62-70, where, it seems to me, a great many difficult passages have been explained more successfully than in the translations of other Vedists, who take the word manu too freely in the sense of man.

⁵ See e. g. Taitt. Samh. I, 7, 1, 3; II, 5, 9, 1; III, 3, 2, 1; V, 4, 10, 5.

a longer story contained in such a work¹. It is probably on account of this legend that 'Manu, the offspring of the Sun,' receives in the Mahâbhârata² the epithet Śrâddha-deva, which may be rendered either 'the deity of the Śrâddha,' or, perhaps better, 'he whose deity is the Śrâddha, i. e. the Śrâddha-worshipper.' Closely connected with Manu's position as inventor of sacrifices is the ancient myth, mentioned above, which makes him the father of Idâ; and from the same idea spring probably the legends regarding his bull, whose voice destroyed the demons, and regarding the sacrifice of his wife, *Manâvî*³.

That Manu was credited with the revelation of Mantras has been stated above⁴ in the remarks on the passages from the three redactions of the Yagur-veda and of the Tândya-brâhmana. The older works, however, nowhere attribute to him entire hymns, but mostly small numbers of verses only. The same is the case in the Index of the Rishis of the White Yagur-veda, while the Sarvânukramanî of the Rig-veda ascribes five entire Sûktas, VIII, 27-31, to Manu Vaivasvata, as well as a few verses to Manu Âpsava and to Manu Sâṃvarana. An interesting passage in the beginning of the last section of the *Khândogyaopaniṣad*⁵ informs us that that work was revealed by Brahmâ (Hiraṇyagarbha) to Pragâpati (Kasyapa), by Pragâpati to Manu, and by Manu to mankind. This legend proves that the ancient Vedic schools believed Manu to have taught more than a few verses and hymns. It also helps us to understand better the phrase of the four Vedic books quoted, 'All ¹ If Professor Max Müller, India, What can it teach us? pp. 234-235 and 365, thinks that Âpastamba's passage betrays a consciousness of the later origin of the Śrâddha rites, I am unable to follow him. It seems to me more probable that it is only intended to explain the holiness and efficacy of the funeral sacrifices, and why they secure heaven for the worshipper and the worshipped ancestor. In the Brâhmanas similar introductions, in which the Devas play the part of Manu, are prefixed to the descriptions of most sacrifices. As the Śrâddhas specially concern men, the father of mankind is very appropriately represented as their inventor.

² Mah. XII, 121, 29.

³ Sacred Books of the East, vol. xii, pp. 29-30; see also the passages and essays quoted there in note 1.

⁴ See p. xvi.

⁵ Sacred Books of the East, vol. i, p. 144.

Manu said is medicine.' As has been pointed out above, the assertion contained in this sentence is so general that it makes us suspect the existence of many sayings of Manu on religious subjects. Though the Khândogya is probably not as ancient as the Samhitās of the Yagur-veda, or even as the Tândya, and though it hence would be more than hazardous to assume that this very passage is alluded to in the latter, the idea that Manu acted as mediator between Brahman and mankind, and that he taught the way to final liberation, may yet belong to very early times, and may have been one of the causes which led to the sweeping generalisation. The same passages probably testify also to the early existence of the belief that Manu first settled the Dharma, which, as the preceding discussion shows, is but a natural outgrowth from the conceptions which make him the founder of the moral and social order of the world. The published Samhitās and Brāhmaṇas contain, as far as I know, no explicit statement on this subject. But an allusion to it seems to occur in the passage of the Taittirīya-samhitā which declares that Manu divided his estate among his sons. Baudhāyana¹, at least, has taken it in this sense, as he places it at the head of his rules on inheritance. The oldest direct testimony on this point is the Sloka quoted in Yāska's Nirukta III, 4, which says, 'According to the sacred law the inheritance goes without a distinction to the children of both sexes, (that) Manu, the offspring of the Self-existent (Svāyambhuva), has declared at the beginning of the creation².' The text shows the Vedic accents, the use of which appears to be confined to the Samhitās and Brāhmaṇas. As the verse is emphatically called a Sloka, it cannot have been taken from a work of the former class. It probably belongs to one of the lost accented Brâhmaṇas. That it did not form part of the Mânava Dharma-sûtra follows, not only from the use of the accents, but also from its contents. Its doctrine does not agree with that of our Manu-smṛiti, which, with respect to the greater part of the rules on inheritance, may be considered as a faithful representative of the original Dharma-sûtra. Though Manu IX, 131-139 strongly insists on the right of an appointed daughter, and, indeed, of every daughter who has no brothers, to succeed to the paternal estate, he nowhere lays down the rule, which, according to Yâska, is taught in our verse, that daughters under all circumstances share equally with sons. To daughters who have brothers Manu allots one-fourth of a share.

¹ Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. 224.

² I do not share Professor von Roth's misgivings (Nirukta, Notes, pp. 24-26) regarding the genuineness of this verse, and of the whole legal discussion in sections 4-6 of the third book of the Nirukta. We know now that the views of the ancient authors on the succession of daughters differed very considerably. Hence the incidental discussion of this vexed question in the Nirukta need not raise any suspicion. Similar digressions are not uncommon in other Vedic works. The difficulty with respect to the compound ṛkslokābhyām, in the words introducing the verse, disappears if it is taken as a Dvandva, and not, as Professor von Roth seems to do, as a Karmadhāraya.

In the Dharma-sûtras the verses which contain the phrase 'manur abravîṭ, thus Manu has said,' or equivalents thereof, become more frequent. The passages of Vasishṭha and of Sâṅkhâyaṇa in which it occurs have been discussed above. Two verses of this description are found in Baudhâyaṇa's Dharma-sûtra (IV, 1, 13; 2, 15), and a considerable number in Usanas' aphoristic Dharmasâstra¹. In the Mahâbhârata², in our Manu-smṛiti itself, in the Nârada-smṛiti³, and in other secondary law-books it is also of common occurrence. Its real meaning is, as Professor Hopkins (loc. cit.) has pointed out, no other than that the rule to which it is appended was thought to be ancient and indisputable. Hence it is sometimes used vicariously for appeals to the teaching of the Veda⁴ and of Pragâpati. That the cause of

¹ Instances of this kind occur, especially in the Śrâddhakalpa, chapter IV, भवति चात्र श्लोकः । दक्षानुयोगाद्धनहेतोः पतिताम्नुरवधीत् (sic) ॥ ---- असमानयाजकाश्च क्षुतिविक्रयिकाश्च ये । अस्य पूर्वप्रजातानां पतिताम्नुरवधीत् (sic) ॥ and in chapter VI, नष्टः रूपतडागास्तु सरांसि सजितस्तथा । असंपृक्त-न्यदोषाणि मनुः स्वार्यभुवोवधीत् ॥ अशृताङ्गानि मूलानि धान्यकाः सक्तवश्च ताः । परपाकनिवृत्तानां भोज्यासं मनुवधीत् ॥ ---- स्त्रीमुखे च सुरागन्धमदो-यमनुवधीत् ॥

² Proceedings of the American Oriental Society, October, 1883, p. xix.

³ J. Jolly, Tagore Lectures, p. 46.

⁴ Compare e. g. Vas. XVII, 10-11, and Manu IX, 182-3.

its adoption was not the existence of a primeval Mānava Dharma-sūtra or Sāstra, but the belief in the revelation of the law by Manu is proved also by the wide divergence of the doctrines attributed to the father of mankind from each other and from the teaching of the Manu-smṛiti.

These legends and mythological conceptions are amply sufficient to show why the special law schools should have directed their attention to the Mānava Dharma-sūtra, and should have chosen that in preference to other similar works as the basis of one of their text-books. Even if the author of the Sūtra, who in the tradition of the Mānavas¹ is sometimes called Manvâkârya and sometimes Mānavâkârya, really was a historical personage named after the progenitor of men, and was considered as such by the adherents of his own school, yet a confusion between him and his mythical namesake was in course of time inevitable. Even Āpastamba, who himself claims to be no more than a common sinful mortal, has not escaped the fate of being turned into a half-divine being by the authors of the Mahābhārata² and of the Purāṇas.

¹ All I can adduce regarding the tradition of the Mānavas is found in some not very clear verses of the Maṅgalāraṇas, prefixed to the two books of Ashvâakra's commentary on the Gr̥hya-sūtra. In the beginning of the prathamapurushabhāṣya he says, according to Professor Haug's MS. (Munich Roy. Lib. Sansk. MSS., No. 51), नमो भाष्यकाराय मानवाचार्योय नमः । यस्याः प्रसादान्मनुना शब्दशास्त्रमिदं (?) कृतम् । सरस्वत्युपनामानि (?) सा नः पातु सरस्वती ॥ My MS. omits the invocation of the Bhāṣyakāra and of Mānavâkârya and reads in the last line सरस्वतूपनानि कल्पयतु सा ॥ The dvitīyapurushabhāṣya begins, according to my MS., सरस्वत्याः प्रसादेन यचैतन्मृतवानुरा । भगवान्मानवाचार्यः पूरयास्व प्रयत्नतः ॥ १ ॥ अष्टावक्त्रेण देवेन तां तुष्टा तु (?) सरस्वतीम् । शनो पूर्णं तु वर्षाणामृतौ शिशिरसंश्ले ॥ २ ॥ नमस्कृतोमि तां देवीं यस्या एव प्रभावतः प्राप्तं यत्तन्महातुष्य [यत्तन्महापुष्य?] बृहद्वर्माभिधायकम् ॥ ३ ॥

In the first line of the second verse I propose to read अष्टावक्त्रेण देवेन कृतं तुष्टा सरस्वतीम् and to translate, 'As the venerable Mānavâkârya composed this (Sūtra) by the favour of Sarasvatī, (even so) the (commentary) called Pūraṇa was carefully written by Ashvâkradeva after he had pleased Sarasvatī, when one hundred years (of the Lokakāla) were completed, in the season called the dewy one.' These verses seem to indicate that, according to the tradition of the Mānavas, a historical Mānavâkârya or Manvâkârya composed the Gr̥hya-sūtra, which was also called Br̥haddharma, by the special favour of the goddess Sarasvatī.

² See Mah. XIII, 66, 12.

A Manu who composed a treatise on the sacred law which gained some notoriety was, therefore, sure of divine honours. As soon as the identification of the author of the Sûtra with the father of mankind was made, it was a matter of course that the Manu-smṛiti obtained a particularly high position, and was accepted as the paramount authority on the sacred law.

The legends given above render us yet another service. They explain the origin of the seemingly contradictory statements of the Smṛiti regarding Manu. When he is represented there as a descendant of self-existent Brahman and a Pragâpati who takes a prominent part in the creation, or as identical with the supreme Brahman¹, and on the other hand as a Rîshi and as a king of the remotest antiquity, it is now patent that these conceptions have been taken over from Vedic literature and that, different as they are, they have all grown out of the one fundamental idea which makes the first man and progenitor a half-divine and half-human being, an assistant in the work of creation, and the founder of moral and social order among men. Some of the remaining elements of the myth of Manu, as told in the Smṛiti, are likewise clearly developments of Vedic ideas. Thus the interposition of the androgynous Virâg in Manu's genealogy (I, 32-33) is foreshadowed by a curious passage of the Atharva-veda, VIII, 10, where the female Virâg is said to have been 'in the beginning this (whole world),' and to have yielded blessings to various classes of beings. According to verse 24, 'Manu, the son of Vivasvat, was her calf², when Prîthi Vainya milked from her agriculture and grain-bearing plants.' It would, therefore, seem that Virâg, who repeatedly plays a part in Vedic cosmogony, was already there connected with Manu. Further, the substitution of seven or more Manus for one, has probably been caused, as the Petersburg Dictionary (s. v. manu) suggests, by the diversity of the genealogies found in the various Vedic passages. It is even not improbable that the Vedic schools believed, when Kâtyâ-

¹ The same identification occurs Mah. I, 1, 32.

² This statement alludes to the fact that Indian cows do not allow themselves to be milked, except when their calves stand by.

yana composed his Sarvānukramanikā of the Rig-veda, in the existence of several distinct Manus. Finally, the association of the ten great sages whom Manu Svāyam-bhuva created, and who in turn created other Manus (I, 34-36), in the work of creation, rests on such passages as those quoted by Āpastamba II, 24, 3-6, 13, where successive destructions of the world are mentioned, and 'this creation is declared to be the work of Praṇapati and of the sages.' But the complete development of the myth of Manu belongs to the schools of the Paurāṇikas and Aitihāsikas, and we find in the Purāṇas and in the Mahābhārata many legends which are partly identical with or closely related to that told in our *Smṛiti*¹.

The third problem, to say how the conversion of the Mānava Dharma-sūtra into our Manu-smṛiti was effected, presents very considerable difficulties, and admits of an approximative solution only. It involves the consideration of three questions. First, which portions of our Manu-smṛiti are ancient and which are later additions? secondly, whence have the additions been derived? and thirdly, whether they have been added at one time or successively? In our attempts to distinguish between the old and the modern elements in our Manu-saṃhitā we must be guided, except where we have quotations from the old Dharma-sūtra, by the analogies which the other existing Dharma-sūtras furnish. For it may be assumed as a general maxim, that rules and other statements of our Manu, which find counterparts in the critically unsuspecting portions of the Sūtras of Gautama, Baudhāyana, Āpastamba, and Vasishṭha, probably occurred also in the Mānava Dharma-sūtra. Single exceptions are, of course, possible, because, though the Dharma-sūtras show a very decided class-affinity, they yet differ in the details. The one devotes greater attention to one subject, and the other to others. Hence it may be, that occasionally a rule which is found in the Dharma-sūtras, nevertheless did not occur in the Mānava-sūtra, but was added on its revision. To a certain extent we may also avail ourselves of the Vishnu-smṛiti for the same purpose. But a greater degree of caution will be necessary, as this work, though in the main a representative of the Kāthaka Dharma-sūtra, contains also an admixture of modern elements. On the other hand, those rules and discussions which cannot be traced in one of the old Sūtras, are at least suspicious, and require careful consideration. The ultimate decision, if such passages have indeed to be considered as additions, must depend on various collateral circumstances. The safest criterion will always be the character of the ideas which they express. If these are entirely foreign to the Sūtras or to Vedic literature, they may be confidently rejected as interpolations. A good deal depends also on their position and on the manner in which they fit into the context. Numerous cases will, however, remain doubtful.

¹ See H. H. Wilson, Vishnu-purāṇa, vol. i, pp. 104-5 (ed. Hall); Professor Hopkins, Journal of the American Oriental Society, vol. xi, pp. 247-256.

If we examine Manu's text according to these principles, the more important results will be as follows:—The whole first chapter must be considered as a later addition. No Dharma-sūtra begins with a description of its own origin, much less with an account of the creation. The former, which would be absurd in a Dharma-sūtra, has been added in order to give authority to a remodelled version. The latter has been dragged in, because the myths connected with Manu presented a good opportunity 'to show the greatness of the scope of the work,' as Medhātithi says. The table of contents, given at the end of chapter I, was, of course, also foreign to the original Sūtra. Chapters II–VI, on the other hand, seem to represent with tolerable faithfulness the contents of the corresponding sections of the Mānava Dharma-sūtra. Nearly all the rules are found in the other Dharma-sūtras and in the Vishnu-smṛiti, and more than three-fourths of the verses find counterparts in the aphorisms and verses of the older law-books. Nevertheless, the hand of the remodeller is not rarely visible. There are, besides the verses which announce the transition from one subject to the other¹, a considerable number of smaller and some larger interpolations. To the latter belong, in the second chapter, vv. 1-11 and vv. 88-100. The first passage gives a philosophical account of the origin of actions (1-5), such as is not found in any older law-book; further, a verse (v. 6) stating the sources of the sacred law, which is unnecessary on account of v. 12, and suspicious on account of the double description of the third source of the law, by the synonymous terms śīla and *ākāra*¹. The contents of the remaining verses, the praise of the Manu-smṛiti (v. 7), the advice how the different authorities are to be studied (v. 8), the declaration of the reward for obedience to the revealed texts (v. 9), the definition of the terms Sruti and Smṛiti, and the declaration of their authoritativeness, are likewise superfluous, and clearly later enlargements. The second passage (vv. 88-100), which enumerates the organs of sensation and action and teaches the necessity of controlling them, interrupts the continuity of the text very needlessly, and has nothing whatsoever to do with the matter treated of. Among the smaller interpolations in this chapter, vv. 13, 16, 27, 28, 142, 143, 213-215, 221, and 239 must certainly be reckoned. It also seems probable that the passage on the importance of the syllable Om, of the Vyâhr̥tis, and of the Sāvitrī (vv. 76-87), as well as that on the humility and meekness required of a Brāhmaṇa (vv. 160-163), and that on the worship due to parents and a teacher (vv. 225-237), have been enlarged, though in each case something of the kind may have occurred in the Dharma-sūtra. In the third chapter, there is one longer passage (vv. 192-201) which, beyond all doubt, has been added by a later hand. For the classification of the Manes, which it contains, is in this form foreign to Vedic literature. More doubtful are the discussions on the duty of conjugal intercourse (vv. 46-50), on the honour due to women (vv. 55-60), on the excellence of the order of householders (vv. 79-80), and on the results of inviting sinners and men of bad conduct to Srāddhas (vv. 169-182). Possibly the ancient Sūtra contained hints on some of these subjects, but it is most improbable that it should have entered into all the details which our text gives. The passage on the householders has probably been placed wrongly. Most of its verses ought to stand in the discussion on the relative importance of the orders at the end of chapter VI. In the fourth chapter the first section on the means by which a Brâhmana may subsist (vv. 1-24) is exceedingly suspicious. The Dharma-sûtras, e.g. Vasishtha XII, 2-4, no doubt sometimes prefix brief hints on the manner in which a Snâtaka may support himself, to the rules regarding his behaviour. But they do not mention the curious classification of the means of subsistence, Rîta, Amrita, Mrita, Pramrita, and Svavritti (vv. 5, 6), which, though common in the Purânas and other later works, is unknown in Vedic literature. As, moreover, Vasishtha's rules, which enumerate the persons by whom a Snâtaka may be supported, occur further on (IV, 33-34), it is not improbable that the whole section consisting of the first twenty-four verses is a later addition. With still greater certainty the same may be said of vv. 85-91, which describe the heinousness of the offence committed by him who accepts gifts from a royal usurper and other wicked persons, and enumerate the twenty-one hells which will be the offender's portion. For it is not doubtful that, even if the Sûtrakâras were acquainted with a classification of the regions of punishment, their enumeration ought not to stand here, but, as in the Vishnu-smṛiti, at the beginning of the section on crimes and penances. Other probable interpolations are vv. 172-174 on the results of sin, vv. 180-185 on the reasons why quarrels with near relatives should be avoided, vv. 238-243 on the reasons why spiritual merit should be accumulated. Finally, the section on gifts and the acceptance of gifts (vv. 186-197) seems to be strongly mixed with modern elements. The next following two chapters present fewer suspicious passages. Nevertheless, the preamble to the section on forbidden food, V, 1-4, the verses 19-21, which prescribe the penances for eating mushrooms, onions, leeks, and so forth, must be certainly rejected. For the former belong to the artificial framework which has been placed round the old Sûtra, and the latter ought to stand in chapter XI. From the quotation in Vasishṭha IV, 5-8, it is further evident that the rules on the permissibility of meat have been much altered and enlarged in accordance with the growing repugnance against the slaughter of animals. The last section of the same chapter, on the duties of women, has probably had the same fate. The example of the Vāsisṭha Dharmasāstra shows that some of the old Sūtrakāras treated the duties of women in two separate sections¹. But it also proves that they did not, as our Manu-smṛiti does, go twice over the same matter. It is evident that either here or in the beginning of the ninth chapter the same verses have been needlessly repeated by the author of the remodelled version. In the sixth chapter there is only one passage, vv. 61-82, which goes beyond the range of the Dharma-sūtras. None of the latter enters into such details regarding the meditations to which an ascetic must give himself up in order to attain salvation. The subject naturally tempted the remodeller of the Smṛiti to expand the shorter notes of the original. Very different is the case of the next three chapters, VII-IX, which treat of the duties of a king, and of civil and criminal law. These sections probably bear only a faint resemblance to the corresponding portions of the original work. Among the 226 verses of the seventh chapter there are only fifty-four to which passages of the Dharma-sūtras and the Viṣṇu-smṛiti correspond. If one pays attention to the rules regarding the king's duties, given in the Dharma-sūtras of Gautama, Āpastamba, and Vasiṣṭha, as well as to the references to the opinions of the Mānavas and of Manu, made in the Kāmandakiya Nitisāra², it would seem probable that the contents of this section of the Mānava Dharma-sūtra cannot have differed very much from those of the third chapter of Viṣṇu, and that about two-thirds of the seventh Adhyāya of our Manu-smṛiti have been added when it was recast. With respect to the eighth chapter and the first 224 verses of the ninth, which give the rules regarding the eighteen titles of the law, the remodeller seems to have been equally active. We must ascribe to him the systematic arrangement of the legal rules, which is not found in any of the ancient Dharma-sûtras, and is even neglected in the Vishnu-smṛiti. He is most probably also responsible for more than one-half of the verses of these chapters. In the eighth Adhyâya only three-sevenths of the rules of our Manu can be traced in the Dharma-sûtras or in the Vishnu-smṛiti, which latter, as far as these topics are concerned, may be considered a faithful representative of the Kâthaka Dharma-sûtra¹. Two of Manu's titles, concerns among partners² and the resumption of gifts, are not mentioned in the older works; and the rules under a third, rescission of purchase and sale, have no resemblance to those of Vishnu. In the ninth chapter the chief topics, treated under the head, duties of husband and wife, are discussed or at least touched on in the Sûtras. But the latter place them differently, and give them much more concisely. The notes to the translation show that only one-fourth of Manu's verses corresponds to utterances of the ancient teachers. The section on inheritance has probably suffered much less, since upwards of eighty verses out of one hundred and seventeen agree with the teaching of the Sûtras, and since among those, the contents of which are not represented in the older works, only eleven, vv. 108-110, 128-129, 133, 138, 147, 184, 215, and 217, are really suspicious or clearly interpolated. Most of these latter contain clumsy repetitions of matters discussed in other places, and v. 217 gives a supplementary rule which but ill agrees with the spirit pervading the remainder of the section. Some of the other, apparently unsuspicious, verses may, of course, possibly be interpolations. But their contents are in harmony with the spirit of the Dharma-sûtras, and with the eliminations, proposed above, Manu's theory of inheritance and partition is self-consistent. The views, expressed under the eighteenth title, on gambling and betting, agree with those of Gautama and Baudhâyana, who both strongly disapprove of these practices. The former enumerates the gambler among the men who defile the company at a Srâddha, and the latter names gambling among the crimes which render men impure. Though Âpastamba and Vishnu are less puritanical, and permit gambling under royal, i.e. police-supervision, or provide only punishments for cheating (Vishnu V, 134-135), the teaching of our Smṛiti is, nevertheless, probably ancient. But the section has been enlarged by the addition of miscellaneous rules and by the allusion to the evil results of gambling 'in former ages,' i.e. to those exemplified by the fate of Yudhishthira and Nala. The last 106 verses of the ninth chapter which, according to the table of contents in the first chapter, teach the removal of (men noxious like) thorns (kantakoddharana), correspond to a part of the prakîrnaka or miscellaneous rules of Yâgñavalkya and Nârada. This section seems to have grown out of those legal rules in the Mânava Dharma-sûtra which did not fit into the system of the eighteen titles. But, as very few verses only correspond to rules of the Dharma-sûtras, its ancient portion is probably small. The greater part of its contents is made up of repetitions and additions inserted by the author of the remodelled version.

¹ These verses probably mark the subdivisions of the Adhyāyas, the Kaṇḍikās or Khaṇḍas of the ancient Sūtra.

¹ See note to the translation.

¹ See Vas. V and XVII, 55-80.

² See above, p. xxxvi.

¹ To this conclusion points the absence of systematic arrangement in Vishnu III-V.

² Manu's rules on this subject have probably been borrowed from a Śrauta-sûtra, where the distribution of the sacrificial fees is usually explained.

The rules on times of distress, given in chapter X, differ considerably from those of the Dharma-sûtras, as they include also the theory of the descent of the mixed castes. The older works treat this subject either in connexion with the law of marriage or with the rules of inheritance. Considering the great inequality which the Sûtras show in the arrangement of the various topics, it is, however, not impossible that the Mânava Dharma-sûtra placed the section on the mixed castes just before the âpaddharmas, and that the author of the metrical version combined both in one chapter and gave them a common title. But it is not in the least doubtful that the treatment of the subject in the former work must have been very different from that which it receives in vv. 1-74. The Dharma-sûtras enumerate either one or two sets of mixed castes, briefly indicating their origin, and, sometimes, their modes of life. They also add a few verses or rules regarding the changes to be attained in successive generations, as well as regarding the manner in which men of low descent may be detected. Our Manu-smṛiti, on the other hand, is much more minute in its details, and introduces a good many new names of which the Sûtras know nothing. These additions have probably expanded the section to three times its original extent. The immediately following rules, vv. 75-100, on the occupations of the castes and their manner of subsisting in times of distress, agree, in the main, with the Sûtras, and seem to have been changed very little. But the supplementary notes on the same subject, vv. 101-131, are probably additions made on the revision of the work. The few ancient rules which they contain are partly repetitions of matters already discussed (e. g. vv. 113-114) and partly misplaced (e. g. vv. 111, 115-117, 119)¹.

The eleventh chapter is again, like chapters II-VI, in all probability a faithful representative of the corresponding portion of the Mânava Dharma-sûtra. We find here again that the great majority of the rules corresponds to those of the Dharma-sûtras and of the Vishnu-smṛiti. The agreement with the latter is particularly close, and appears especially in the classification of crimes, the enumeration of the diseases caused by offences committed in a former life, and in many details referring to penances. Curious and against the practice of the older works is the combination of the rules on gifts and the performance of sacrifices, vv. 1-43, with the section on penances. The excuses which the commentators offer for this anomaly² are, I fear, insufficient to explain it. It seems more probable that here, as in the preceding chapter, two separate sections of the original work have been welded together into one Adhyâya. In favour of this view it may be pointed out that in Gautama's Dharma-sûtra, XVIII, 28-32, a number of rules, corresponding to Manu XI, 11-23, stand just before the Prâya-skittakānda. A passage of the Mahābhārata, which will be discussed below, shows exactly the same combination as our Smṛiti.

¹ A characteristic sign of the great changes which chapters VII-X have undergone consists in the allusions to legends famous in the Purāṇas and the Mahābhārata; see also below, p. lxxix.

² See note on Manu XI, 1.

The twelfth chapter, finally, is certainly almost entirely due to the author of the metrical version. Its contents are partly foreign to the Dharma-sūtras and partly repetitions. The classification of actions and existences as sāttvika, rāgasa, and tāmasa, i. e. as modified by the three qualities of Goodness, Activity, and Darkness, finds no place in the older law-books. It is based on the doctrines which are taught in the Sāṃkhya, Yoga, and Vedānta systems, and some traces of which are found in the *Maitrāyaṇabrāhmaṇopaniṣad*¹. Equally or similarly minute details are, however, to be met with only in the Purāṇas, the Mahābhārata, and some of the metrical Smṛitis, which blend philosophical ideas with the sacred law. The next following discussion on the karmavipāka, the results of sinful acts in future births, vv. 51-81, is altogether wrongly placed. It evidently ought to stand in the beginning of the section on penances, where Vishṇu and Yāgyavalkya have a number of corresponding Sūtras and verses. As it is found in the Manu-smṛiti in a different position, it is most probably an addition made on the revision of the work. The section on the means of attaining supreme bliss, vv. 82-104, returns to the questions which have already been discussed in the fourth and sixth chapters, and adds nothing that is new. The long peroration at the end, vv. 116-126, cannot have formed part of the Dharma-sūtra, as it again refers to the myth concerning the origin of the Sāstra, narrated in the spurious first chapter. But the small piece on the manner of deciding doubtful legal questions, vv. 105-115, belonged probably to the original work. To this conclusion point its close agreement with the rules of the Dharma-sūtras, and the circumstance that Gautama also places the corresponding Sūtras just at the end of his work.

If thus it is extremely probable that the contents of more than half the verses in our Manu-smṛiti cannot have been derived from the ancient Mānava Dharma-sūtra, we have now to face the question whence this large amount of additional matter has been taken. A clue to the solution of this problem is furnished by the peculiar relation of the Manu-smṛiti to the Mahābhārata, which undoubtedly is one of the most ancient metrical works of Indian literature, and the great storehouse of the earliest forms of post-Vedic mythology and doctrine. The connexion existing between these two works, and its importance for the history of the Institutes of Manu, has been recognised by most Sanskritists who have directed their attention to the investigation of the origin of the secondary Smṛitis. Many years ago Professor Weber¹ pointed out that the Mahābhārata contains not only a number of quotations from Manu, some of which are found either with or without variations in the existing Smṛiti, while others are not traceable, but also a considerable number of verses, not attributed to Manu, which, nevertheless, are included in the Dharmasāstra. He inferred from these facts that the existing Manu-smṛiti cannot have been extant in its present shape even at the period to which the later portions of the Mahābhārata belong, and that the author or authors of the latter work must have known and used an older redaction of Manu's law-book. Another conclusion, based on the agreement of numerous Slokas, especially in the twelfth and thirteenth Parvans of the great epic with verses of the Manu-smṛiti, has been drawn by Rao Saheb V. N. Mandlik², who is convinced that the editor of the latter has drawn, to a large extent, on the former work. Of late Professor Hopkins³ has made a careful analysis of the quotations from Manu found in the Mahābhārata. According to him, their number is thirty-three, among which seventeen are traceable, five being verbal quotations, the rest agreeing in doctrine only. His explanation for the untraceable quotations is not that they have been taken from an older recension of the Manu-smṛiti, but that a floating mass of unwritten sayings of Manu existed, some of which were incorporated with the Dharma-sûtra of the Mānavas in its revision, while others were not. He also notices the fact that our Manu-smṛiti contains many verses which occur also in the Mahābhārata without being attributed to Manu, as well as some which are ascribed to other authorities.

¹ Maitr. Up. III, 3, 5, 6; compare Manu XII, xii, 32-33.

¹ History of Indian Literature, p. 279; compare also Professor Stenzler in the Indische Studien, vol. i, p. 245.

² The Mayūkha and Yāgyavalkya, introd. to Yāgy. p. xlvii.

³ Proceedings of the American Oriental Society, October, 1883, pp. xix-xx, and now Journal of the American Oriental Society, vol. xi, p. 257 seqq.

These somewhat divergent results of my predecessors show very clearly that the Mahābhārata may be expected to render some assistance for the solution of our problem. But they indicate also that the utilisation of the facts which it offers requires some caution.

In resuming the enquiry into the relation of the two works and its bearing on the history of our Manu text, the first point to be ascertained is, whether the Mahābhārata really mentions a law-book of Manu, and whether this work is identical either with the ancient Dharma-sûtra or with the existing Smṛiti, or if it differed from both. According to what has been said above¹ regarding the ancient belief ascribing the settlement of social and religious institutions to the Father of mankind, and the real meaning of the phrase 'thus Manu has spoken,' it is evident that Professor Hopkins has correctly distinguished between sayings of Manu on religious and legal matters, and law-books attributed to him, and that he is right in refusing to recognise in every mention of Manu's name a reference to a Smṛiti of his. Hence the number of passages useful for comparison is very much restricted. Those only which explicitly mention a Sāstra of Manu are really indisputable evidence. The estimation of the value of the remainder must depend on collateral circumstances. Quotations of the former kind are not numerous in the Mahābhārata. Nevertheless, some do occur in the twelfth and thirteenth Parvans, and they clearly prove that the authors of these books knew a Mānava Dharmaśāstra not identical but closely connected with our Smṛiti. Thus we read, Mah. XII, 56, 23-25, where the power of Brāhmaṇas is being described, 'High-minded Manu likewise, O king of kings, sang two Slokas in his Laws (sveshu dharmeshu), those, O descendant of Kuru, thou shouldst keep in thy heart (23). Fire sprang from water, Kshatriyas from Brāhmaṇas, iron from stone, the all-penetrating power of these (three) has no effect on that whence they were produced (24). When iron strikes stone, when fire meets water, when a Kshatriya shows hostility to a Brāhmaṇa, then these (three assailants) perish.' Again, Mah. XIII, 46, 30-36, in a discussion on the prerogatives of a Brāhmaṇa's Brāhmaṇī wife who, we are told, is alone entitled to attend her husband and to assist him in the performance of his religious duties, the conclusion runs as follows: 'And in those Institutes which Manu proclaimed (manunābhihitam sâstram), O great king, descended from Kuru, this same eternal law is found (35). Now if (a man) out of love acts differently, O Yudhishtîra, he is declared to be (as despicable as) a Kândâla (sprung from the) Brāhmaṇa (caste 36).' Nothing can be clearer than these two passages. The second speaks plainly of a Sâstra proclaimed by Manu, and the first of his Dharmâṣṭ, a word in the plural, very commonly used to denote a book on the sacred law. Moreover, the second is clearly a paraphrase of Manu IX, 87, and reproduces its second line to the letter. Of the two verses quoted in the first, one agrees with Manu IX, 321, but the other one is not traceable. While these two quotations would seem to indicate a very close connexion between the Mânava Sâstra of the Mahābhārata and our Smṛiti, a third from the Râgadharmaś of Manu Prâketasa—i. e. from the section on the duties of kings belonging to the Mânava¹—reveals a greater discrepancy. We read, Mah. XII, 57, 43-45, 'And the following two verses are pronounced¹ by Manu Prâkṛtasa in the Law of kings, listen to them attentively, O lord of kings! (43.) A man should abandon, like a leaky ship in the ocean, the following six persons,—a teacher who does not instruct, a priest unable to recite the Veda, a king who affords no protection, a quarrelsome wife, a herdsman who loves to stay in the village, and a barber who seeks the forest.' Neither of these verses is found in our Manu, though the latter inveighs against kings who do not protect their subjects (VII, 143-144).

¹ See p. lx.

¹ Though I will not deny that some show of argument might be made for the supposition that the Râgadharmaś of Manu Prâketasa were a separate work, different from the Sâstra referred to in the preceding quotations, because the epithet Prâketasa is here added to Manu's name, and because at Mah. XII, 38, 2, we find Manu Prâketasa named as the author of a Râgasâstra in company with Brîhaspati and Usanas, to whom separate Nîtiśâstras were attributed, I yet hold this to be improbable. For the legends regarding the descent of the lawgiver Manu vary in the Mahābhārata. He is in other passages sometimes called Svâyambhuva, and sometimes (e. g. XII, 349, 51) Vaivasvata. Further, a separate Nîtiśâstra of Manu is not quoted elsewhere. On the other hand, the section on the duties of kings bears in every law-book the separate title Râgadharmaś, and the commentators of our Manu-smṛiti call its seventh chapter expressly by this name.

If we turn to the passages in which Manu—not his Sâstra—is named as an authority, I know only of one that may be confidently considered to contain a reference to a law-book. In the Sakuntalopâkhyâna, Mah. I, 73, 8-13, king Dushyanta tries to persuade the reluctant object of his affections to consent to a Gândharva union by a discussion of the law of marriage. He first briefly mentions the number of the marriage-rites (v. 8^a) and their names (vv. 8^b-9^a) in the same order as Manu, and then goes on, 'Learn that among these (rites), as Manu Svâyambhuva has formerly declared, the first four are lawful and recommended for a Brâhmaṇa; know, O blameless one, that six, according to their order, are lawful for a Kṣatriya (9^b-10). But the Rākshasa rite also is ordained for men of the royal caste, and the Âsura rite is prescribed for Vaisyas and Sûdras. But among the (last) five, three are declared lawful and two unlawful (v. 11). The Paisâka and Âsura (rites) must never be used. According to this rule (marriages) must be concluded, this is the path of duty (v. 12). Do not question the legality of the Gândharva and Rākshasa (rites) for Kshatriyas. Without a doubt they may be used, be it separate or mixed' (v. 13).

The close verbal agreement of this passage with Manu III, 20-26, on the one hand, and its serious discrepancy with respect to a portion of the doctrine, make it, I think, very probable that it is a paraphrase or adaptation of a part of a Mānava Dharmasāstra which closely resembled, but was not quite identical with, the existing text. Verse 8^b-9^a agrees literally with Manu III, 21; and vv. 11^b-13 come close to Manu III, 25-26. But vv. 9^b-11^a, though they have a certain affinity to Manu III, 23-24, show, nevertheless, a considerable difference in doctrine. For Manu declares (v. 23) the first six rites to be lawful for a Brāhmaṇa, the four following ones for a Kshatriya, and the same four, with the exception of the Rākshasa rite, for Sūdras and Vaisyas, while v. 24 says that the first four rites are recommended, and that the Rākshasa rite alone is permissible to Kshatriyas, and the Âsura to the two lowest classes. According to the Mahābhārata, on the other hand, Manu approved of the first four rites in the case of Brāhmaṇas, and of the first six in case of Kshatriyas. To the latter he allowed also the seventh, the Rākshasa rite, and confined Vaisyas and Sūdras to the purchase of their brides, the Âsura rite. The most probable explanation of this contradiction seems to me the assumption that the text of Manu, known to the author of the Upākhyāna, slightly differed from that which we find at present.

¹ The original has udâhṛta, which is ambiguous and may also mean 'quoted.'

Another passage is more doubtful. Mah. XIII, 61, 34-35, various opinions are enumerated with respect to the question how large a share of the guilt incurred by ill-protected and ill-governed subjects falls on the king¹. The decision is that, according to the teaching of Manu, the negligent ruler is loaded with a fourth share. This doctrine, which is found also in other passages of the Mahābhārata, contradicts that taught in our Manu-smṛiti as well as in the older Dharma-sūtras, where a sixth part of the sins committed by subjects is said to fall on their lord. The circumstance that several opinions are contrasted may be used as an argument for the opinion that here, too, an individual law-book of Manu's is referred to. If that were so, the passage would reveal another remarkable discrepancy between the older and the present texts. But to my mind it seems, just because the teaching of our Manu agrees with the Dharma-sûtras, more probable that the author of the Mahâbhârata makes here, as in other cases, a random appeal to Manu's name merely in order to give weight to his peculiar opinion.

¹ ऋतुर्थे तस्य पापस्य राजा विन्दति भारत ॥ ३३ ॥ अथाहुः सर्वमेवैति भूयोर्धेमिति निश्चयः । ऋतुर्थे मत्तमस्माकं मनोः शुत्नानुशासनम् ॥ ३५ ॥

There are two other longer pieces in the Mahâbhârata which are ascribed to Manu. In one case it is perfectly evident that there exists no connexion with our Smṛiti. The philosophical conversation between Manu and Bṛihaspati, which fills chapters 200–206 of Mah. XII, has neither any distinctive doctrines nor any verses in common with the Mânava Dharmasâstra. On the contrary, it shows a leaning towards the Vaishnava creed.

With respect to the second passage, Mah. XII, 36, 3–50, a doubt is at least possible. It contains an 'ancient legend' (purâna itihâsa), narrating how Manu revealed in the beginning to the sages the law regarding food, and some miscellaneous rules concerning worthy recipients, gifts, Veda-study, and penances. Manu's speech consists of forty-five verses, among which two agree fully and five partly with Slokas of our *Smṛiti*¹. But one of the fully agreeing verses (v. 46) occurs also in two Dharma-sûtras, and belongs, therefore, to the traditional lore of the Vedic schools. Though the remainder is not traceable in the older works, the faintness of the resemblance makes it, I think, more probable that the Mahâbhârata accidentally attributes to Manu verses now read in his Smṛiti, than that its author extracted them and the whole piece from a Mânava Sâstra.

But whatever may be the correct interpretation of the mention of Manu in these passages, it remains indisputable that the author or authors of the first, twelfth, and thirteenth Parvans of the Mahâbhârata knew a Mânava Dharmasâstra which was closely connected, but not identical with the existing text. The latter must, therefore, as Professor Weber has pointed out, be considered later than these 'latest portions of the epic.' The latter conclusion is, it seems to me, confirmed by some indications in the Smṛiti which point to an acquaintance with the Mahābhārata. The warning regarding the consequences of gambling, Manu IX, 227, certainly presupposes a knowledge of the legend of the Kurus and Pāṇḍavas. When it is stated there that 'in a former Kalpa the vice of gambling has been seen to cause great enmity,' this assertion can only point in the first instance to the match played between Yudhishthira and Duryodhana, which was the immediate cause of the great war. It may also contain, as some commentators think, an allusion to the fate of king Nala, but that can only be a secondary meaning, because war was not the result of his gambling. More significant than this passage is the fact that in chapters VII-X of the Manu-smṛiti a number of legends are quoted in illustration or in support of rules which, as the commentators repeatedly assert¹, are taken from the Mahābhārata, and that in one case just those which are mentioned in one verse of Manu (IX, 314) are found close together in the same chapter of the Mahābhārata.

¹ Mah. XII, 36, 27 = Manu IV, 218; first pâda of ver. 28^a = first pâda of Manu IV, 220; ver. 28^b = Manu IV, 217^a; first pâda of ver. 29^a = first pâda of Manu IV, 210^b; ver. 46 = Manu II, 157; ver. 47^a = Manu II, 158^a.

This relative position of the two works might induce us to assume with Rao Saheb V.N. Mandlik that the Mahābhārata had a direct influence on the final redaction of the Manu-smṛiti, and that the author of the latter appropriated from the former the very large number of identical verses which in the Mahābhārata are not ascribed to Manu.

Tempting as the hypothesis of the dependence of the Smṛiti on the epic is, because it would account for the adoption of the Anuṣṭubh metre in the latter, a careful examination of the corresponding passages leads to a very different result. On going over the third, twelfth, and thirteenth Parvans of the Mahābhārata I have succeeded in identifying upwards of 260 verses or portions of verses, not attributed to Manu, with Slokas of the Manu-smṛiti. This number, which corresponds to about one-tenth of the bulk of the latter work, would no doubt be considerably swelled by a comparison of the remaining portions of the epic, and it may be that even in the Parvans examined some identical pieces have escaped my notice. The number of the verses which has to be compared is so enormous that mistakes are easily possible; but the identifications made are amply sufficient for the purpose of illustrating the relation between the two works. The corresponding passages vary considerably in extent, from a single pāda or a single line to sections of twenty to forty verses. Where larger sections agree, it is rare that more than half-a-dozen verses stand in the same order in both works, and it happens not rarely that a series of identical Slokas is interrupted by the expansion of one verse into two, or by a contraction of two into one. Further, the purpose which an identical line or verse is made to serve sometimes differs, and sometimes a various reading alters its sense entirely. The various readings are exceedingly numerous, and the better one is sometimes found in the Mahābhārata and sometimes in Manu. If we enter on a more detailed analysis of the corresponding passages, there are three cases in which one or two consecutive chapters of the Mahābhārata contain from twenty to forty verses which occur in our Manu. Mah. XII, 232-233 include the greater portion of Bhrigu's account of the creation and some of the verses, said to have been enunciated by Manu himself on the same subject, i. e. Manu I, 18^b, 20, 28-29, 64-78, 81-86.

¹ See notes to VII, 41; VIII, 110; IX, 23, 129, 314-315, &c.

Further, Mah. XIII, 48, 14-44 gives a portion of Manu's definitions of and rules regarding the mixed castes, and contains the verses X, 27-32, 33^a, 34-37, 38^a, 39-40, 50, 52^b, 58-60, and 62, mostly with considerable variations, and Slokas resembling Manu X, 42-43 are found Mah. XIII, 33, 21-22, and 35, 17-18.

Finally, Mah. XII, 165, which treats of gifts, sacrifices, and penances much in the same manner as the eleventh chapter of Manu, exhibits, mostly in the beginning, the following verses, partly in somewhat different versions, XI, 2^b, 3^b, 4^a, 7, 11-17, 20, 22^b, 23^a, 27^a, 29-31, 34-40, 91^b, 105, 150, 177^b, 181, 207. The general sense of some other Slokas corresponds without a real agreement in words, and the same chapter of the Mah. contains also vv. 31^a and 32^a, three-quarters of Manu II, 238, and v. 68^a the first half of Manu III, 172. Equivalents of Manu XI, 44, 74, 76^a, 77, 84 are found Mah. XII, 34, 2; 35, 4-6; 263, 45^b-46^a. Among other somewhat longer corresponding passages the following are the most noteworthy. Portions of the discussion on the reverence due to parents and teachers, Manu II, 229-234, occur Mah. XII, 108, 5-12. The rules regarding the disposal of the fee at an Ārsha wedding and the respect to be shown to females are found Mah. XIII, 45, 20; 46, 1-7, and some verses, Manu III, 134-135, 140-142, 158-159, 172, 180-181, 184-185, from the section on Srāddhas, Mah. XIII, 90, as well as fragments of III, 267-274 in the beginning of Mah. XIII, 88. The warning against quarrels with relatives, Manu IV, 179-185, is repeated Mah. XII, 244, 14^b-21^a. A number of the rules applicable to the ascetic, Manu VI, 42-48, 57^b, 58^a, reappears in the beginning of Mah. XII, 246 and 279, while Manu VI, 49 is read Mah. XII, 331, 30. The sketch of the state administration, Manu VII, 115-122, is given mostly in the same words, Mah. XII, 87, 3-11^a, and the same chapter contains also closely agreeing precepts regarding taxation together with the verses Manu VII, 127 and 139^a. The remainder of the corresponding passages ranges between triplets and single feet of Slokas, and is scattered over all the twelve chapters of Manu. The portions of the Mahābhārata where we chiefly meet with them, are III, 94, 180; XII, 15, 244-245, 265; XIII, 44-46, 90, 104-105, 115, 152¹.

In order to complete this sketch of the relation in which the two works stand towards each other, it will be advisable to give one of the three longest corresponding passages in full, and to carefully note both the points of contact and of difference. The piece most suitable for such a comparison is that from the first book of Manu. For the latter doubtlessly belongs to the additions made by the editor of the metrical version, and its account of the creation presents numerous problems which have sorely puzzled the commentators. The solution of some of these difficulties is furnished by the corresponding passage of the Mahābhārata. This passage occurs in an account of the creation, communicated by Vyāsa-Kṛishṇa-Dvaipāyana to his son Suka, which Bhīshma narrates to Yudhishtīra.

¹ It is impossible to give here more than these general indications. A more complete list of the verses of the Manu-smṛiti occurring in the Mah. will be found in the Appendix.

MAHĀBHĀRATA XII, 232.

MANU I.

11. Vyāsa said: In the commencement exists the Brahman without beginning or end, unborn, luminous, free from decay, immutable, eternal, unfathomable by reasoning, not to be fully known.

12. Fifteen nimeshas (twinklings of the eye are) one kâsh/hâ¹, but thirty kâsh/hâs one should reckon as one kalâ; moreover, thirty kalâs and that which may amount to the tenth part of a kalâ shall be one muhūrta;

13. Thirty muhūrtas shall make a day and a night—that number has been fixed by the sages; a month is declared (to consist of) thirty nights and days, and a year of twelve months.

14. But those acquainted with calculations call two progresses of the sun, the southern and the northern one, a year².

15. The sun divides the days and nights of the world of men³, the night (being intended)

64. Eighteen nimeshas (twinklings of the eye are one kâsh/hâ¹), thirty kâsh/hâs one kalâ, thirty kalâs one muhūrta, and as many (muhūrtas) one day and night.

65. The sun divides days and nights, both human and divine, the night (being intended)

¹ Regarding the difference between the two computations, see Wilson, Vishṇu-purāṇa I, 47 (ed. Hall).

² The verse marked as 14 in the Bombay edition consists of a single line only.

³ The reading of the Mahābhārata, mānushalaaukike for mānushadaivike, seems the better one.

for the repose of created beings and the day for exertion.

16. A month is a day and a night of the manes, but their division (is as follows): the bright (fortnight)¹ is their day for active exertion, the dark (fortnight) their night for sleep.

17. A year is a day and a night of the gods; the division is (as follows): the half year during which the sun progresses to the north will be the day, that during which it goes southwards the night.

18. Counting the sum of years (consisting) of those human days and nights which have been mentioned above, I will declare (the duration of) a day and night of Brahman.

19. I will declare severally and in due order the totals of the years in the Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara, and Kali ages².

20. They declare that the Kṛta age (consists of) four thousand years (of the gods); the twilight preceding it consists of as many hundreds, and the twilight following it of the same number.

21. In the (other) three ages, for the repose of created beings and the day for exertion.

66. A month is a day and a night of the manes, but the division is according to fortnights. The dark (fortnight) is their day for active exertion, the bright (fortnight) their night for sleep.

67. A year is a day and a night of the gods; the division is (as follows): the half year during which the sun progresses to the north will be the day, that during which it goes southwards the night.

68. But hear now the brief (description of) the duration of a night and day of Brahman and of the several ages (of the world) according to their order.

69. They declare that the Kṛta age (consists of) four thousand years of the gods; the twilight preceding it consists of as many hundreds, and the twilight following it of the same number.

70. In the (other) three ages,

¹ The reading of the Mahābhārata is obviously faulty, as it is well known that the dark fortnight is, according to the Hindus, the day of the manes. The fault has probably arisen by an accidental transposition of the words suklaḥ and kṛṣṇaḥ. The second var. lect. of the Mah. tayoḥ punaḥ for tu pakshayoḥ is less intelligible than Manu's, because a substantive is required to which suklaḥ and kṛṣṇaḥ can be referred.

² It is a particularly significant fact that in spite of the great difference between the two works, both show the intercalation of a fresh exordium.

with the preceding twilights and in the twilights following them, the thousands and hundreds are diminished by one-fourth (in each)¹.

22. These support the eternal, everlasting worlds; this is known as the eternal Brahman to those who know Brahman.

23. In the Kṛita age Dharma is four-footed and entire, and (so is) Truth; nor does any gain which is opposed to that (spirit of justice) accrue by unrighteousness².

24. In the other (three ages), by reason of (unjust) gains, Dharma is deprived successively of one foot, and unrighteousness increases through theft, falsehood, and fraud.

25. (Men are) free from disease, accomplish all their aims, and live four hundred years in the Kṛita (age); but in the Tretâ age (and the following ones) their life is lessened by one quarter in each³;

26. And the doctrines of the Veda decrease, as we with their twilights preceding and following, the thousands and hundreds are diminished by one (in each).

81. In the Kṛita age Dharma is four-footed and entire, and (so is) Truth; nor does any gain accrue to men by unrighteousness.

82. In the other (three ages), by reason of (unjust) gains, Dharma is deprived successively of one foot, and through (the prevalence of) theft, falsehood, and fraud the merit (gained by men) is diminished by one-fourth (in each).

83. (Men are) free from disease, accomplish all their aims, and live four hundred years in the Kṛita (age), but in the Tretâ and (in each of) the succeeding (ages) their life is lessened by one quarter.

84. The life of mortals, mentioned in the Veda, the de-

¹ The reading of Manu, sasamdhyaṃreshu ka for samdhāṃreshu tatah, seems preferable, but his ekāpāyena is inferior to the ekapādēna of the Mahābhārata.

² Nīlakantha explains āgama in this verse and the next by 'doctrine.' I translate it by 'gain,' in accordance with the rendering adopted for Manu, but willingly acknowledge that the other rendering is possible in both works, and that the meaning may be 'nor does any unrighteous doctrine, opposed to that (Dharma), prevail' (Mah.), 'nor is any unrighteous doctrine spread among men' (Manu).

³ The reading kṛite tretāyuge tveshām instead of Manu's kṛite tretādishu hyeshām is more archaic.

hear, in each successive age, as well as the lives (of men), their blessings (ârishah), and the rewards which the Veda yields¹.

27. One set of duties (is prescribed) for men in the Kṛita age, different ones in the Tretâ and in the Dvâpara, and (again) another (set) in the Kali age, in proportion as (those) ages decrease in length.

28. In the Kṛita age the chief (virtue is the performance of) austerities, in the Tretâ (divine) knowledge is most excellent, in the Dvâpara they declare sacrifices (to be best), in the Kali liberality alone.

29. The wise know such (a period of) twelve thousand (divine) years (to be understood by) the term an age (of the gods); that (period) being multiplied by one thousand is called a day of Brahman.

30. (Know his) night to be as long². At the beginning of that (day) the lord who is the Universe finally awakes, after having entered deep meditation sired results (ârishah) of sacrificial rites, and the (supernatural) power of embodied (spirits) are fruits proportioned among men according to (the character of) the age¹.

85. One set of duties (is prescribed) for men in the Kṛita age, different ones in the Tretâ and in the Dvâpara, and again another (set) in the Kali age, in proportion as (those) ages decrease in length.

86. In the Kṛita age the chief (virtue) is declared to be (the performance of) austerities, in the Tretâ (divine) knowledge, in the Dvâpara (the performance of) sacrifices, in the Kali liberality alone.

71-72. These twelve thousand (years), which thus have been mentioned above as the total of four (human) ages, are called one age of the gods. But know that the sum of one thousand ages of the gods (makes) one day of Brahman, and that his night has the same length².

¹ The Sanskrit text of the two Slokas agrees somewhat better than the translation. It looks as if neither of them was the original version, which probably declared that the age of men, their blessings, and the rewards of deeds, such as they are promised in the Veda, diminish in each successive age. Another version, which almost exactly agrees with Manu's, occurs Mah. III, 200, 115.

² Both the Mah. and Manu have the accusative case râtrim, which does not agree with the preceding verb gṛheyam (Manu) uṣyate (Mah.). It would seem that both give adaptations of an older verse, where a word like âhuḥ, which governed the accusative, occurred. Though the verb was changed, the further alteration of the case was forgotten.

and having slept during the period of destruction.

31. Those (only) who know that Brahman's day ends after (the completion of) one thousand ages (of the gods) and that his night lasts a thousand ages, are (really) men acquainted with (the length of) days and nights.

32. When imperishable Brahman awakes at the end of his night, he modifies himself and creates the element (called) the Great One (and) from that mind which is discrete.

MAHÂBHÂRATA II, 233.

1. Luminous Brahman is the seed from which single element this whole twofold creation, the immovable and the movable, has been produced.

2. Awaking at the beginning of his day, he creates the world by means of Ignorance—even first the element, (called) the Great One, (next) speedily mind which is discrete;

3. And conquering here resplendent (mind) which goes far, enters many paths, and has the nature of desire and doubt, creates the seven mind-born ones.

4. Mind, impelled by the desire to create, performs the work of creation by modifying itself; thence ether is produced; they declare that sound is the quality of the latter.

73. Those (only) who know that the holy day of Brahman, indeed, ends after (the completion of) one thousand ages (of the gods), and that his night lasts as long, are (really) men acquainted with (the length of) days and nights.

75. Mind, impelled by the desire to create, performs the work of creation by modifying itself; thence ether is produced; they declare that sound is the quality of the latter.

5. But from ether, modifying itself, springs the pure, powerful wind, the vehicle of all perfumes; touch is considered to be its quality.

6. Next from wind, modifying itself, proceeds the brilliant light which illuminates and is white; that is declared to possess the quality of colour;

7. And from light, modifying itself, (comes) water which possesses taste; from water smell and earth; (such) is declared (to be) the creation of (them) all.

8. The qualities of each earlier-named (element) enter each of the later-named ones, and whatever place (in the sequence) each of them occupies, even so many qualities it is declared to possess¹.

9. If some, perceiving a smell in water through a want of care, attribute (that quality to water), one must know that it belongs to earth alone, (and that it is) adventitious in water and wind.

10. Those Âtmans of seven kinds², which possess various powers, were severally unable to create beings without fully uniting themselves.

11. These great Âtmans, uniting and mutually combining

76. But from ether, modifying itself, springs the pure, powerful wind, the vehicle of all perfumes; that is held to possess the quality of touch.

77. Next from wind, modifying itself, proceeds the brilliant light which illuminates and dispels darkness; that is declared to possess the quality of colour.

78. And from light, modifying itself, (is produced) water, declared to possess the quality of taste; from water earth, which has the quality of smell; such is the creation in the beginning.

20. Among them each succeeding (element) acquires the quality of the preceding one, and whatever place (in the sequence) each of them occupies, even so many qualities it is declared to possess.

¹ The position of this verse in the Mahâbhârata makes the conjecture, put forward in the note to the translation, that the correct position of Manu I, 20 is after verse 78, exceedingly probable.

² According to Nîlakantha, the seven Âtmans, called above, ver. 3, the seven mind-born ones, are Mahat, Ahaṁkāra, and the five subtile elements.

with each other, entered the body; hence one speaks of Purusha [i.e. him who resides (usha) in a fortress (pur)].

12. In consequence of that entering (śrayana), the body (śarīra) becomes endowed with a (perceptible) form, and consists of sixteen¹ (constituent parts).

That the great elements² enter together with the karman (merit and demerit).

13. Taking with him all the elements, that first creator of created beings (enters it) in order to perform austerities; him they call the lord of created beings.

14. He, indeed, creates the creatures, both the immovable and the movable; then that Brahmā creates gods, sages, manes, and men,

15. The worlds, rivers, oceans, the quarters of the compass, mountains, trees, men, Kinnaras, Rakshas, birds, tame and wild beasts, and snakes, the imperishable and the perishable, both the immovable and the movable.

16. Whatever course of action they adopted in a former creation, even that 18^b. That the great elements enter together with their functions (karman)³.

28. But to whatever course of action the Lord at first appointed each (kind of

¹ The sixteen constituent parts are, according to Nilakaṇṭha, the five gross elements and the eleven organs.

² Nilakaṇṭha takes mahānti bhūtāni, 'the great elements,' in the sense of 'the subtle elements, and the great ones, the mahattattvas' (bhūtāni sūkṣmāni mahānti mahattattvāni).

³ This line is a good example, showing how the same words of the ancient school-tradition were made to serve different purposes.

alone they adopt in each succeeding creation.

17. They turn to noxiousness or harmlessness, gentleness or ferocity, virtue or sin, truth or falsehood, according to the disposition with which they were (first) created; hence that (particular course of action) pleases each.

beings), that alone it has spontaneously adopted in each succeeding creation.

29. Whatever he assigned to each at the (first) creation, noxiousness or harmlessness, gentleness or ferocity, virtue or sin, truth or falsehood, that clung (afterwards) spontaneously to it.

The remainder of Vyâsa's narrative, which continues through the following twenty-six verses, may be omitted, as, further on, it presents few points of contact with our Smṛiti. It must, however, be noticed that, according to verses 25-26, 'the Lord assigned to his creatures their names and conditions, in accordance with the words of the Veda.' This idea agrees with Manu I, 21, but the wording of the two passages differs very considerably.

The lesson which the facts, revealed by the above discussion, teach, is a double one. First, they clearly show that the editor of our metrical Manu-smṛiti has not drawn on the Mahābhārata, but that the authors of both works have utilised the same materials. Secondly, they make it highly probable that the materials, on which both works are based, were not systematic treatises on law and philosophy, but the floating proverbial wisdom of the philosophical and legal schools which already existed in metrical form. The first point is so evident that it seems to me unnecessary to waste any more words on it. With respect to the second conclusion, I would point out that it is made unavoidable by the peculiar character of the differences found in closely connected Slokas, by the occurrence of identical lines and pādas in verses whereof the general sense differs, and by the faint, shadowy resemblance in words and ideas, observable in other pieces. I may add, further, that the supposition that each special school possessed such a body of metrical maxims is perfectly well founded.

As has been repeatedly stated, the text-books of the ancient Vedic schools, the Sûtras and the Upanishads, contain already a not inconsiderable proportion of Anushûbh verses which sometimes recur in identical or slightly varying forms. Hence it is no more than might be expected that the teachers of the special schools should have continued in the path of their predecessors, and should have gradually augmented the stock of their 'Spruchweisheit,' until it extended to all legal and philosophical topics, and the accumulation of these detached verses made it easy and tempting to convert the old aphoristic handbooks into metrical treatises¹. The answer, which we are thus obliged to give to the question whence the editor of our Manu-smṛiti took his additional materials, agrees very closely with Professor Hopkins' hypothesis, who, as mentioned above, considers the law-book to be a conglomerate of the Mānava Dharma-sûtra and of the floating sayings attributed to Manu, the father of mankind. The latter restriction seems to me unadvisable, because among the mass of corresponding pieces found in the Mahābhārata comparatively few are attributed to the Pragâpati, and because a Hindu who was ¹ The probability of the existence of such a body of metrical maxims would become still more apparent, if it were possible to enter here on a comparison of portions of the older Purāṇas with the Mahābhārata and the metrical Smṛitis, as well as on a detailed consideration of the ancient Buddhist literature. Though the difficulty and magnitude of such a task forbid its being attempted in this Introduction, I cannot refrain from inserting a few general hints. The Purāṇas contain a good deal that is identical with or similar to passages of the Mahābhārata and Manu, and it is in many cases impossible to assume that the corresponding verses have been borrowed from the latter works. The Purāṇas, some of which, like the Vāyu, even in their present shape, go back to a very respectable antiquity, are popular sectarian compilations of mythology, philosophy, history, and the sacred law, intended, as they are now used, for the instruction of the unlettered classes, including the upper divisions of the Śūdra varṇa, the so-called Sakṣhūdras. It was only natural that their authors should have appropriated suitable portions of the floating metrical wisdom of the philosophical and legal schools.

The comparison of the ancient Buddhist literature is particularly instructive, because the Buddhists are a special philosophical school, and because their oldest works, though mostly consisting of prose, include a considerable number of Ślokas, among which a certain number, as, for instance, in the Dhammapada, shows affinities to verses of the Mahābhārata and even of Manu. They probably took over a certain stock of ancient metrical maxims, and added a great number of new ones.

thoroughly convinced of the truth of the dogma that Manu first taught the sacred law, would not hesitate to ascribe to that sage all the maxims which seemed to him to bear the stamp of authenticity, even if others attributed them to different authorities.

The answer to the next question, whether the conversion of the Mānava Dharma-sūtra was effected at one time or by degrees, and whether Bhrigu's recension has to be considered as the immediate offspring or as a remoter descendant of the Sūtra, must, I think, be answered, as has been tacitly assumed in the preceding discussion, in the sense of the first alternative. Not long ago it seemed that the contrary opinion was the more probable one. But the closer one examines the facts which at first sight seem to lead up to the inference that Bhrigu's Manu-saṃhitā forms the last link in a long chain of metrical Manu-smṛitis, the more one sees that they possess no, or very little, importance. On the other hand, those arguments which speak in favour of our text being, if not the first, at least one of the first attempts at a conversion of a Vedic school-book into a special law-book, gain by the same process in force and increase in number. The points which have been brought forward in order to prove that the existing text of Manu has suffered many recasts are, first, its numerous contradictory passages; secondly, the explicit statement of the Hindu tradition in the preface to the Nārada-smṛiti; thirdly, the quotations from a Bṛihat Manu and a Vṛiddha Manu met with in the medieval Digests of law; and fourthly, the untraceable or partly traceable quotations from Manu's Dharmasāstra found in some of the older Sanskrit works. The existence of these facts is undeniable. But it is not difficult to show that they are partly useless as arguments, and partly, under a better interpretation, lead to quite other conclusions. Thus in weighing the value of the argument drawn from the occurrence of contradictory passages, two circumstances, which mostly have been left out of account, must be kept in mind: first, that it is a common habit of Indian authors to place conflicting opinions, supported by authorities of equal weight, side by side, and to allow an option, or to mention time-honoured rules, legal customs, and social institutions, and afterwards to disapprove of them; and secondly, that, as our Smṛiti is in any case a recast of an earlier Sūtra, that fact alone is sufficient to account for contradictions. It has been shown above¹, that some contradictory passages, such as those concerning the respective rank of the mother and the teacher, or regarding the permissibility of certain marriage-rites, express conflicting views, mentioned also in the Dharma-sūtras. The Manu-smṛiti only reproduces the ancient opinions, but omits, possibly for metrical reasons, to mark them as belonging to different authors or schools. In other cases we may hesitate between two explanations. If we find, for instance, that our text in the third and ninth chapters² violently inveighs against Āsura marriages, and in the eighth and ninth³ lays down rules which presuppose the legality of the sale or purchase of a bride, we may assume that the first utterance is due to the editor of the metrical version, and that the second represents the more archaic doctrine of the Dharma-sūtra. In favour of this supposition it may be urged that the Mānava Gr̥hya-sūtra unhesitatingly admits the acquisition of a bride by purchase⁴. But it is also possible that the Dharma-sūtra itself contained both the condemnation of the custom and the rules regulating it. For similar contradictions occur also in other Sūtras. Thus Āpastamba expressly forbids, in his sections on Dharma, the sale and gift of children and the procreation of Kshetraga sons⁵. Yet, in his Srauta-sūtra I, 9, 7, he gives a rule showing how the Pindapitriyagñā is to be performed by the son of two fathers (dvipitā). Such a person can only be a Kshetraga, a Dvyāmushyāyana Dattaka, or a Putrikāputra. If it is borne in mind that Baudhāyana, on whose works Āpastamba's Sūtras are based, admits the affiliation which the later member of his vidyāvamsa rejects, the obvious explanation of the contradiction is that Āpastamba, in spite of his disapproval of other than Aurasa sons, did not venture to change the prescriptions which he found in the older Srauta-sûtra. Similarly, the supposition that the author of the Mânava Dharma-sûtra, though condemning Âsura marriages, was unwilling to expunge the rules regulating the sale, is not at all improbable. It seems to be even better than the explanation proposed first. For the prohibition of the Âsura rite occurs in the quotation found in the Sakuntalopâkhyâna, and the latter, as we shall see presently, in all probability refers to the Mânava Dharma-sûtra. Hence I think that at least the remarks made Manu III, 26 did stand in the ancient text. The other repetitions of the same sentiments may have been added on the revision. Another famous instance of a contradiction, Manu IX, 58-70, where the appointment of a widow is first permitted and next forbidden, has probably to be explained in the same manner. If I here differ from Professor Jolly¹ and others, who ascribe the prohibition to the remodeller of the Dharma-sûtra, and if I adhere to the view expressed by Bṛihaspati and some Indian commentators, my reasons are that, as the conflicting statements of the Dharma-sûtras show, the propriety of the Niyoga was not generally acknowledged even in ancient times, and that the medieval Nibandhakâras frequently follow the strange method of teaching adopted by Manu. They, too, describe various antiquated customs, and afterwards add the remark that the matter taught is forbidden in the Kali age. Among the clear cases where a conflict of statements has been caused by additions of the editor, I may mention the rule, Manu IV, 222, prescribing a penance for an unlawful acceptance of food, which differs from that given XI, 153. Here the former must be considered spurious, because it occurs in a chapter which has nothing to do with penances. It is evident that neither the instances just mentioned, nor indeed any other, where our Smṛiti exhibits either two ancient conflicting rules or a modern precept contradicting an ancient one, can be used as arguments showing that the Mânava Dharma-sûtra underwent more than one revision. Under these circumstances it might appear advisable to rely on those contradictions which occur in the decidedly modern portions of our text, in the additions to the ancient Dharma-sûtra, and to maintain that e.g. the differences in the two accounts of the creation¹, Manu I, 7-58 and 62-86, indicate that the first chapter owes its present shape to two different authors. Such a mode of reasoning would, no doubt, be correct if the additions to the Dharma-sûtra were independent, original productions. But as the preceding discussion on the sources of this additional matter has shown that the first chapter is a compilation from older versus memoriales, which certainly contained portions and possibly even the whole of both accounts, it becomes inconclusive. The contradictory verses may either have been strung together, as Medhâtithi seems to suggest², merely because they really are or were considered paraphrases of Vedic passages, or they may have been reconciled with each other by one of those ingenious methods of interpretation of which the Indian schoolmen are such great masters.

¹ See p. xxiv.² Manu III, 25, 51-54; IX, 98-100.³ Manu VIII, 204, 224-225; IX, 97.⁴ See above, p. xxxix.⁵ Āp. Dh. S. II, 13, 11; 27, 2.

¹ Tagore Lectures, pp. 48, 61.

As regards the second argument, the assertion of the Nārada-smṛiti³, that Manu composed a Dharmasāstra in 100,000 verses arranged in 1080 chapters, which was successively reduced by Nārada to 12,000, by Mārkaṇḍeya to 8,000, and by Bhrigu's son, Sumati, to 4,000 verses, is so circumstantial that, in spite of its obvious exaggerations, it might be considered to have a substratum of truth, and to be important for the history of Manu's law-book. Abridgments of larger works⁴ are in literature as common as expansions of shorter ones. Yet the only assertion in the above account, which we can test, is certainly not true, that Nārada's version of Manu's laws is more ancient than that by Sumati Bhārgava or Bhrigu. The actual position of the

¹ See also Dr. Johāntgen, Über das Gesetzbuch des Manu, p. 15.

² In his discussion on the aim of the first chapter Medhâtithi says (comm. on I, 6): - - - - निरतिशयैश्वर्यहेतुधर्माद्विपरीतश्चाधर्मः । तदूपापरिज्ञानार्थमिदं शास्त्रं महाप्रयोजनमध्येतव्यमित्यध्यायतात्यर्थम् । मूलं तत्र मन्त्रार्थवादाः सामान्यतो दृष्टं च । तथा च मन्त्रः । तत्र आसीदित्यादि ॥

³ See above, p. xvii; and Jolly, Tagore Lectures, p. 57.

⁴ The two versions of Nārada furnish an interesting instance; see Jolly, loc. cit. p. 57.

two works has been inverted. Nārada's Vyavahāramātrikā shows a far more advanced development of the judicial theories than Bhrigu's Samhitā, and contains matter which conclusively proves that it cannot date from an earlier time than the fourth or fifth century of our era¹. As this test fails, Nārada's statement cannot be used for the determination of the order in which the various versions of Manu's laws were composed. It becomes more probable that it has been framed, with a view to enhance the importance of the Nārada-smṛiti, on the model of such purely fictitious stories respecting the origin of the Dharma, as that given in the Mahābhārata XII, 59, 22, and 80 seqq., where we are told that Brahman, assisted by the gods, first produced a Dharmasāstra in 100,000 chapters, which was successively abridged by Samkara in 10,000, by Indra in 5,000, by Bṛhaspati in 3,000, and by Kāvya in 1,000 Adhyāyas. Against the genuineness of Nārada's story we may also adduce the Paurāṇik statement, according to which Manu's laws were remodelled first by Bhrigu, secondly by Nārada, thirdly by Bṛhaspati, and fourthly by Āngiras².

The third argument, drawn from the fact that the medieval Nibandhas and commentaries quote passages from a Bṛhat (great) and Vṛiddha (old) Manu, has still less value. Professor Jolly has of late asserted in his able discussion³ of the quotations from these works that they are later, not earlier, than the existing text of Manu, because some of their rules resemble the advanced teaching of Yāgyavalkya and Nārada, while others contradict our Manu on points where he holds archaic views. Moreover, a passage of Vṛiddha Manu, to which Professor Max Müller has first called attention⁴, possibly indicates an acquaintance with Greek astrology. I can only agree with Professor Jolly's conclusions, and add that a comparison of the quotations from Bṛhat and Vṛiddha Manu with Bhrigu's Samhitā produces the impression that both works—if indeed the titles refer

¹ West and Bühler, Digest, pp. 48–50, third edition; Jolly, Tagore Lectures, p. 56; Preface to the Translation of Nārada, pp. xv–xvii.

² Mandlik, the Vyavahāramayūkha and Yāgy., p. xlvi; Jolly, Tagore Lectures, p. 44.

³ Tagore Lectures, pp. 65–66.

⁴ India, what can it teach us? p. 366.

to two and not to one—must have been enlarged versions of the latter¹. As it thus appears that there existed recensions posterior to our Manu-smṛiti, the existence of untraceable or partly traceable quotations from Manu's Dharmasāstra in *Asvaghosha's Vagrasūktī*² and from Manu in *Varāhamihira's Brīhat-saṃhitā*³ possesses no great significance. With respect to Varāhamihira's reference, it must be noted that, according to Albīrūnī's Indica, two astrological Samhitās, called after Manu, existed in the eleventh century A.D., the smaller of which was an abridgment made by a perfectly well-known human author⁴. Hence Varāhamihira may have taken his verses on the character of women from the latter. In both quotations the Slokas, not found in our Smṛiti, have a very modern look. The case is, however, different with the quotations from Manu, which, as has been shown above, occur in the Mahābhārata. We have been compelled to admit that the existing text of our Smṛiti is younger than the epic. If, therefore, the law-book referred to in the latter is not the ancient Dharma-sūtra, we must also concede the existence of a secondary recension which preceded Bhṛigu's Samhitā. The solution of this question is, owing to the ¹ In order to enable the reader to form his own judgment on this point, I add a list of the quotations which I have noted. Those from Brīhat Manu occur, 1. Col. Dig. II, 3, 26; 2. Col. Dig. V, 428 = Gī. Dāy. XI, 6, 34; 3. Datt. Mīm. II, 8; 4. May. IV, 5, 53;—those from Vṛiddha Manu, 1. Col. Dig. III, 1, 69; 2. Col. Dig. III, 1, 83 = May. XI, 5 = Viv. K'int. p. 99; 3. Col. Dig. III, 1, 86 = Viv. K'int. p. 89; 4. Col. Dig. III, 1, 90 = May. XI, 5 = Viv. K'int. p. 100; 5. Col. Dig. III, 1, 93 = Viv. K'int. p. 103; 6. Col. Dig. V, 162 = Viv. K'int. p. 272 = Varad. p. 21 = Gī. Dāy. IX, 17 (where attrib. to Brīhat M.); 7. Col. Dig. V, 408 = Smṛi. K'and. XI, 1, 15 = Sar. Vil. 504 = Varad. pp. 33, 40 = Vīram. III, 1, 2 = Gī. Dāy. XI, 1, 7 and Viv. K'int. p. 289 (where attrib. to Brīhat M.); 8. Mit. II, 5, 6 = Viv. K'int. p. 289 and Varad. p. 37 (where attrib. to Brīhat M.) = Sar. Vil. 591 (where attrib. to M.); 9. Viv. K'int. pp. 126–7; 10. Viv. K'int. p. 180; 11. Varad. p. 50; 12. Varad. p. 28, where in reality Manu IX, 206 seems to be quoted.

² Weber, Indische Streifen, vol. i, pp. 190, 192, 198.

³ Kern, Brīhat-saṃhitā, chapter 74, vv. 7–15, and Preface, p. 43.

⁴ Albīrūnī, Indica, chapter xiv; see also Kern, loc. cit. p. 42, where the probability of the existence of a Mānavī Samhitā has been shown. Albīrūnī says that the title of the two works was Mānasa (Mānavī?), and that the shorter one had been composed by one PNK'L, a native of Southern India. I owe these notes to the kindness of Professor Sachau, the learned editor and translator of Albīrūnī's important work.

shortness of the extracts, very difficult. But, considering all things, I feel inclined to assume that the author or authors of the Mahābhārata knew only the Dharma-sūtra. The character of the four verses and a half, quoted verbally, as well as of the paraphrase in the Sakuntalopākhyāna agrees well enough with this assumption, because the Mānava Dharma-sūtra, as we have seen, certainly did contain numerous Slokas. It is further corroborated by the fact that the Mahābhārata does not differ in its arrangement, or rather in its want of an arrangement of the civil and criminal law, from the Dharma-sūtras. Though the epic contains numerous verses on these topics, it nowhere shows an acquaintance with the eighteen titles of the law which are so characteristic of the secondary Smṛitis, the hand-books of the special law schools. On the other side it may be urged that the Mahābhārata says nothing of Dharma-sūtras, and that its general view of the origin of the sacred law coincides with that expressed in the later law-books. It holds that the moral and legal doctrines were revealed for the benefit of the human race, first by Brahman to various mythical Rishis, and by them to mankind. This objection may, however, be met by the not unreasonable assumption that at the time when the Mahābhārata was composed, the real origin of the old Sūtras had been forgotten, while the text had not yet been materially altered. What has been said above regarding the rise of the special law schools, and the facts known regarding the change in the tradition concerning the Sūtras of Gautama and Vasishṭha, make the hypothesis of such a transitional period not at all improbable. Should, nevertheless, the possibility of the existence of a metrical redaction of the Mānava-sūtra, preceding that ascribed to Bhṛigu, be considered as not altogether excluded, it would at least be necessary to concede that it could not have contained the present arrangement of the Vyavahāra portion under titles.

While there is thus no proof for the opinion that the modern portions of the Manu-smṛiti have been gradually added one to the other, or that the present text is one of the last links in a long chain of metrical recensions, there are several points which tend to show that our Manu-saṃhitā is one of the first attempts at remodelling a Dharma-sūtra. The most important argument for its comparatively early date is furnished by the incompleteness and awkwardness of its rules on judicial procedure and on civil law¹. If we compare these rules with those of the Dharma-sūtras and with those of the other metrical Smṛitis, they are somewhat more explicit than the former, but very much inferior to the latter. As regards procedure, the Manu-smṛiti pays more attention to the moral side of the duties, incumbent on the judge and the other persons concerned, than to the technicalities, which are much more clearly and minutely described in the Dharmasāstras of Yāgyavalkya and Nārada. In this respect it comes close to the Dharma-sūtras, with which it particularly agrees in the absence of all mention of written plaints and of documentary evidence, as well as in the shortness of its remarks on ordeals. Among the ancient law-books the Vāsishṭha Dharmasāstra is the only one which has allusions to written documents, and names them, XVI, 10, 14-15, as one of the means of legal proof. In the other Dharma-sūtras there is no indication that their authors were acquainted with the art of writing. I have already pointed out in the Introduction to my translation of *Vasishṭha*² that most probably this omission has to be explained not by the assumption that in the times of Gautama, Baudhāyana, and Āpastamba writing was unknown or little used in India, but by the consideration that the general character of the Dharma-sūtras, which principally pay attention to the moral side of the law, does not require the introduction of matters belonging more properly to the customs of the country or to the Arthasāstra. Whatever may be thought of the prevalence of writing during the earlier times and of the value of my explanation, it may be regarded as perfectly certain that ¹ See on this subject and the following discussion, Weber, History of Indian Literature, pp. 279-281; Stenzler, Yāgyavalkya, pp. vii-x; Journal of the German Or. Soc. vol. ix, on the Indian Ordeals; and Jolly, Tagore Lectures, pp. 45-49.

² Sacred Books of the East, vol. xvi, p. xxvi.

Bhrigu's Manu-saṃhitā belongs to a period when the art of writing was known and generally practised. For, first, we find two clear references to written documents, 'what has been caused to be written by force' (lekḥita, VIII, 168) and royal edicts (śāsana, IX, 232). Secondly, we have the expression nibandh, 'to record,' in a passage (VIII, 255) where the context leaves no doubt that a written entry is referred to. When it is said there, that in a boundary-dispute the king shall record the boundary, according to the unanimous declaration of the witnesses, together with their names, it is impossible to imagine how he can do so without drawing up a written document, which, of a necessity, must have legal force for the future. This use of the verb nibandh makes it further probable that Medhātithi is not altogether wrong, when he explains (VIII, 76) the compound anibaddha, 'a person not appointed (to be a witness to a transaction),' by 'a person not entered (as a witness in the document),' and refers the rule to cases of loans and other commercial transactions. Thirdly, there is the term karaṇa (VIII, 54 and 154), which, though less explicit, likewise points to the use of written bonds for loans. The former passage declares that 'a debt which is proved by karaṇa' (karaṇena vibhāvitam) must be paid, and the commentators explain karaṇa to mean 'written bonds, witnesses, and so forth.' Hence it has been rendered in the translation by 'good evidence.' Verse 154 prescribes that a debtor 'who, unable to pay a debt (at the fixed time), wishes to make a new contract, may renew (lit. change) the karaṇam (karaṇam parivartayet¹).' Two commentators, Kullūka and Rāghava, take the word here in the sense of 'a written bond,' while the older ones, Govinda, Nārāyaṇa, and probably also Medhātithi, explain it by 'bonds and so forth,' and make it include agreements before witnesses. From these explanations and the use of the word karaṇa in other legal works it would appear that karaṇa may also be cited as a witness for the acquaintance of our author with the art of writing. To the conclusion that writing must have been extensively used in business-dealings points, finally, the whole state of civilisation to which Manu's rules are adapted. The highly developed trade by land and by sea¹, on which ad valorem duties were imposed², the existence of official lists of prices which were renewed periodically³, the complicated system of calculations of interest, among which we find compound interest⁴, and the occurrence of mortgages⁵, would be impossible without written documents. These facts appear to me so eloquent that even though all the passages adduced above, which explicitly mention written documents, could be proved to be late interpolations, the general aspect of this question would remain unchanged. If, under these circumstances, Manu's rules on evidence contain nothing definite on the admissibility of documents, and if he agrees in this particular with the Dharma-sûtras and differs strongly from the Dharmasâstras of Yâgñavalkya and Nârada as well as other metrical Smṛitis, this omission gains a great importance for the historical position of the Samhitâ. Whether we explain it by an oversight of the editor or by the assumption that he left the determination of the value of written documents to custom or to another Sâstra, it shows that he was acquainted with the Dharma-sûtras alone or with Dharma-sûtras and such metrical Smṛitis as excluded the section on documents. As he certainly was an adherent of a special law school, and bent on making his work as complete as possible, he would not have omitted so important a point if he had known law-books like the Yâgñavalkya-smṛiti.

¹ Nandana's reading kāraṇam is clearly erroneous; see below, p. cxxiv.

The omission of the details regarding ordeals is no less significant. Manu VIII, 109-116 describes only the administration of oaths more fully, and mentions the ordeals by fire and water in a cursory manner. Among the Dharma-sûtras there is only the Âpastambiya which (II, 29, 6) recommends the employment of divine proof (daiva) or ordeals in a general way without adding any particulars. The secondary law-books of Yâgñavalkya and Nârada describe five kinds of ordeals, and enter, the second more fully than the first, on descriptions of the manner in which they must be performed. Even the Vishnu-smṛiti agrees with them, and the fragments of the lost metrical Smṛitis show that most of the latter, too, contained sections resembling those of Yāgñavalkya and Nārada. It would be, in my opinion, a mistake to infer from the silence of Gautama, Baudhāyana, and Vasishṭha that in ancient times ordeals were unknown in India. Traces of such practices, which were formerly prevalent in various forms also among other Indo-European races, are found, as might be expected, even in Vedic works. If the authors of the Dharma-sūtras ignore them or just indicate their existence, the correct explanation of this fact, too, is that they considered the subject not important enough for giving details, and left it to custom. The authors of the secondary Smṛitis, as a matter of course, were anxious to fill up the blank left by their predecessors. But they probably did nothing more than bring the various local customs into a system which gradually was made more and more complete. Under these circumstances the fact that Manu's rules stand midway between those of the Dharma-sūtras and of the other metrical law-books is another argument for allotting the first place to his Samhitā. In the treatment of the civil and criminal law the inferiority of the Manu-smṛiti to the other Dharmaśāstras of the same class, even to Yāgñavalkya's, which contains a much smaller number of verses on Vyavahāra, manifests itself in various ways. In spite of the attempt at a scientific classification of the rules under certain heads, the arrangement of these sections is cumbrous and disorderly. Twice, at the end of the eighth and ninth chapters, we find collections of miscellaneous rules, which, as a comparison of the works of Yāgñavalkya and Nārada shows, might for the greater part have been easily fitted in to the one or the other of the eighteen titles. Under the single titles the rules are sometimes badly arranged. This is particularly visible in the chapter on inheritance, where, to mention only one most conspicuous instance of this want of care, the verse asserting the right of the mother and grandmother to take the estate of a predeceased son or grandson, is placed so awkwardly that it is absolutely impossible to guess which place in the sequence of heirs the author meant to allot to them. As stated above, the verse most probably was inserted by the editor of the ancient Dharma-sûtra. If he had cared at all for order and intelligibility, he ought not to have contented himself with the enunciation of the maxim that these persons do inherit, but he ought to have indicated where the preceding close series of heirs has to be broken in order to admit them. Very significant, too, are the constant mingling of moral exhortations with the legal rules and the occasional recommendation of quaint judicial devices which are common in the earlier stages of the development of the law. Though the duty of kings to protect their subjects and to restrain the wicked has been fully explained in the seventh chapter, yet in the sections on theft (VIII, 302-311), on violence (VIII, 343-347), and on adultery (VIII, 386-387), the author expatiates again and again on the necessity of eradicating such offences. In the second case the specific rules, providing for the punishment of sâhasa crimes, are left out, the omission being repaired at the end of the ninth chapter. Both Yâgñavalkya and Nârada think it unnecessary to recur to the moral obligations of the king after pointing them out once. Both refrain also from mentioning the curious expedient which Manu recommends (VIII, 182-184) for the decision of doubtful disputes regarding deposits. Another important point is that Manu's rules on some titles are exceedingly incomplete, and touch one particular case only, from which it is not always easy to deduce the general principle. Thus, in treating of the subtraction or resumption of gifts, Manu (VIII, 212-213) confines his remarks to pious gifts which are not applied in the manner stipulated. Yâgñavalkya (II, 175-177) gives under this head at least some general principles, showing what is required for the validity of gifts; while Nârada¹ offers a fairly full and systematic treatment of the whole law of gifts. A similarly gradual development is visible under other heads, especially concerns among partners and rescission of sale and purchase, the rules under which latter head Manu gives partly in their proper place and partly among the miscellaneous precepts at the end of the eighth chapter. A third point, finally, which deserves to be noted here, is the fact that legal definitions are almost entirely wanting in the Manu-smṛiti, become more frequent in Yāgñavalkya's work, and are regularly given by Nārada, as well as that many single rules which are common to Manu and Yāgñavalkya, or to Manu, Yāgñavalkya, and Nārada, are framed in the latter works with much greater precision than in the former¹. The inferiority of the Manu-smṛiti in all these points can only be explained by the assumption that it was composed at a time when the systematic treatment of the law had been begun, but had not reached a high state of perfection, while the superiority of the other metrical Smṛitis permits us to infer that they belong to a much later period when the special law schools had made a considerable progress in the elaboration of their theories. This argument is, it seems to me, the strongest which can be brought forward as a firm basis for the universally prevalent belief of all European and Indian Sanskritists in the priority of our Manu to all other known secondary law-books. For wherever we are able to trace larger portions of the history of a special Brāhmanical science, as e.g. in the case of grammar, we find that the later authors, though belonging to different schools and creeds, and though differing in the actual doctrines, invariably avail themselves of the method of their predecessors, developing and refining it more and more. Retrogressive steps, examples of which seem to occur in the handbooks of the Vedic schools², have hitherto not been found³. All the other arguments which have been or can be adduced to prove the antiquity of our Manu-smṛiti are less conclusive. If it has been said that this work contains some very archaic doctrines¹ which are not found in the other secondary law-books, that is perfectly true. But the inference regarding its age becomes doubtful, because on other subjects Manu is ahead of the other *Smṛitis*², and because in general the development of the actual doctrines seems to have been not quite steady and continuous. Still more precarious are the arguments, based on the language of the Manu-smṛiti, on its not mentioning the Greek astrology or Greek coinage and similar points. As we have to deal with a recast of a very ancient book, and as its editor has utilised a good many ancient verses in compiling his recension, it is only to be expected that a number of archaic forms and phrases should be found. But it is evident that they prove nothing with respect to the period when the compilation was made, because it is impossible to decide in each case to which of its component parts the archaism belongs. As regards the remaining argumenta a silentio, they are equally inconclusive. Even if we grant, for argument's sake, the correctness of the assertion that our Manu contains no allusion to the Greek order of the planets, to the zodiac, to judicial astrology, and to Greek or Scythian dīnāras, drammas, and nānakas, while all the other secondary law-books mention one or the other of these foreign importations, the omission may be purely accidental. These and similar points can be used for no other purpose than to show that there is nothing in Manu's text that compels us to place it in or after the period between 300–500 A.D., during which Greek influence made itself strongly felt in India. They possess a certain importance only as auxiliaries to the chief argument derived from the imperfect development of the method or formal treatment of the law. But considering all that has been said in the preceding discussion, it is, I think, not too much to say that there is no obstacle against, and some reason for, our accepting as true the assertion, which is made in the Manu-smṛiti itself and supported by the tradition preserved in the Skanda-purāṇa, that Bhrigu's¹ Samhitā is the first and most ancient recast of a Dharmasāstra attributed to Manu, which latter, owing to the facts pointed out in the first part of this Introduction, must be identified with the Mānava Dharma-sūtra. Though this recast must be considered the work of one hand, the possibility that single verses may have been added later or altered, is of course not excluded. A perfectly intact preservation of an Indian work which has been much studied, is a priori improbable, and the divergence of the commentators with respect to certain verses shows that some of those contained in our text were suspected by the one or the other of them. But the number of Slokas with regard to which real doubts can be entertained is comparatively small, and hardly amounts to more than a dozen².

¹ VIII, 156-157.² VII, 127-128; VIII, 348.³ VIII, 401-402.⁴ VIII, 139-142, 151-153.⁵ VIII, 165.

¹ Professor Jolly's Translation, pp. 59-60.

¹ Compare e. g. the rules regarding lawful interest, Manu VIII, 140-142, and Yāgñ. II, 34.

² Compare e. g. the case of the Gautamīya and Baudhāyanīya Dharma-sūtras, where the second and later work is inferior in method to the earlier one.

³ Should it be objected that the Vishnu-smṛiti, though certainly younger than Manu's and Yāgñavalkya's Dharmaśāstras, is deficient in a systematic arrangement of the rules on civil and criminal law, the answer would be that the editor of this work appears to have been a Vaishṇava sectarian, not an adherent of a school which made the law its special object of study.

¹ One of the clearest instances of this kind is Manu's doctrine with regard to the succession of females to the estate of males, where the exclusion of the wife agrees with the teaching of the Dharma-sūtras (Jolly, Tagore Lectures, p. 48). The assertion of Professor Hopkins (Castes according to the M. Dh. p. 108 seqq.), that the prerogatives of Brāhmaṇas are greater according to Yāgñ. than according to Manu, seems to me erroneous, and chiefly based on an inadmissible interpretation of some passages of Manu. In my opinion the mutual relations of the castes, as described in the two law-books, cannot be used to prove a priority of the one to the other.

² E. g. in the doctrine concerning the Niyoga.

The above discussion has also to a certain extent defined the relative position of our Manu-smṛiti in Brāhmanical literature, and has thus opened the way for the consideration of the last remaining problem, the question when the conversion of the Mānava Dharma-sūtra into a metrical law-book may have taken place. The terminus a quo which has been gained for the composition of Bhrigu's Samhitâ is the age of the Mahâbhârata, and the terminus ad quem the dates of the metrical Smritis of Yâgñavalkya and Nârada. Though we are at present not in a position to assert anything positive regarding the period when the Mahâbhârata and especially its twelfth and thirteenth Parvans were written, and though the date of Yâgñavalkya's Dharmaśâstra is very doubtful, yet some facts known regarding the Nârada-smṛiti are not without importance for framing our answer to the difficult question now proposed. Both Professor Jolly and myself¹ have lately discussed the significance of the mention of golden dinâras or denarii in the longer and more authentic version of Nârada and of the circumstance that Asahâya, a predecessor of Manu's earliest commentator, Medhâtithi, explained it and have arrived at a very similar conclusion, viz. that the Nârada-smṛiti dates either shortly before or shortly after the middle of the first thousand years of our era. If that is so, Bhrigu's Samhitâ must, in consideration of the arguments just stated, be placed not only earlier, but considerably earlier, and the assertion that it must have existed at least in the second century of our era is not unwarranted. This latter inference is also made inevitable by the discovery that we have to admit the former existence of very ancient commentaries, and of at least one ancient Vârttika or Kârikâ which referred to the text of Manu, known to us. With respect to the commentaries, Medhâtithi, the author of the Manubhâshya, is a most valuable and clear witness. This author, who probably wrote in the ninth century A.D.², very frequently quotes opinions and various readings, expressed or mentioned by his predecessors, and shows by the number of the conflicting explanations which he sometimes adduces for a passage of the text, that in his time a very large number of commentaries on the Manu-smṛiti existed. Among the persons thus quoted, he designates some by the terms Pūrva and Kīramtana. Pūrva, which means both 'former' and 'ancient,' is an ambiguous word. It can be applied to all persons who wrote before the author, though it frequently is used in speaking of those who lived centuries ago. Kīramtana, 'long previous or ancient,' is much stronger, and, according to the usage of Indian authors, denotes a predecessor belonging to a remote antiquity. As Medhātithi, writing in the ninth century, knew of commentaries to which he was compelled to assign a remote antiquity, it is only a moderate estimate if we assume that the earliest among them were in his time from three to four hundred years old. But if in the sixth or even in the fifth century A.D. glosses on our text existed, its composition must go back to much earlier times. For the widely divergent and frequently very questionable explanations of the more difficult passages, which Medhātithi adduces from his predecessors, indicate that even the earliest among them were separated by a considerable interval from the compiler of the Manu-saṃhitā, an interval so great that the real meaning of the text had been forgotten.

¹ A clear and definite explanation of the question why the Hindu tradition ascribes the promulgation of Manu's laws to Bhrigu has hitherto not been traced. Bhrigu's only connexion with Manu is that mentioned in the text, according to which he is one of the mind-born sons or creatures of the father of mankind. This version of the legend of his origin is, however, by no means common. In the Mahābhārata XII, 182-192, we find 'a condensed Dharmasāstra,' which is said to have been revealed by Bhrigu to Bharadvāja. It includes an account of the creation, but makes no mention of Manu. As Bhrigu appears also elsewhere as the author of a Dharmasāstra, it is just possible that the legend may be based on Bhrigu's fame as a legislator and as the offspring of Manu.

² Many more verses are left out partly in Medhātithi's Bhāṣya and partly in Nandana's commentary. But see below, pp. cxxvi and cxxv, where it has been shown that omissions in the accessible MSS. of these two works alone do not mean much.

¹ Jolly, Tagore Lectures, p. 56; West and Bühler, Digest, p. 48. To the arguments adduced there I would add that Bâna, the friend of Śrīharsha-Harshavardhana (606-7-648 A.D.), makes a pretty clear allusion to the Nârada's Dharmaśâstra in the Kâdambarī, p. 91, l. 13 (Peterson's edition), where he calls a royal palace nâradyam ivâvarṇyamânarâgadharmam, 'similar to the Nâradya (Dharmaśâstra), because there the duties of kings were taught (by the conduct of the ruler) just as they are taught (in the law-book).'

² For the details, see below, pp. cxxi-cxxiii.

The merit of the discovery that one of the lost metrical Dharmasāstras, the Bṛihaspati-smṛiti, was a Vārttika on our text of Manu, belongs to Professor Jolly, whose careful investigation of the fragments of the lost law-books, contained in the modern Digests, has contributed very materially to the elucidation of a difficult chapter in the history of Indian legal literature. He shows¹ that Bṛihaspati not only allots to Manu's Smṛiti the first place among all law-books, but that he explains, amplifies, and occasionally corrects its rules on various portions of the Vyavahāra. The particulars from Manu which Bṛihaspati mentions are such as to leave no doubt that the text which he knew in no way differed from that known to us. He explains, as Professor Jolly points out, the curious terms, used Manu VIII, 49, for the various modes by which a creditor may recover a debt, as well as the expression asvâmin, which occurs in the title of law, called Asvâmivikraya. He further mentions that Manu IX, 57-68 first teaches and afterwards forbids the practice of Niyoga, and gives, as it seems to me¹, the correct explanation of this contradiction. He also notes that Manu IX, 221-228 forbids gambling, which other writers on law permit under due supervision, and he corrects Manu's rules regarding the indivisibility of clothes and other objects enumerated IX, 219. An apparent contradiction in Brîhaspati's rules with respect to subsidiary sons² proves that he knew and accepted Manu's teaching on this subject. He declares that the substitutes for a legitimate son of the body are forbidden in the Kaliyuga, and yet admits the rights of a Putrikâ or appointed daughter, who mostly is reckoned among the substitutes. This difficulty is easily solved, if it is borne in mind that Manu, differing from the other ancient law-books, does not reckon the Putrikâ among the subsidiary sons. He separates her, IX, 127-140, from the Gauṇa Putras, IX, 158-181, and strongly insists on her rights, while he restricts those of the others very much. The list of instances where Brîhaspati alludes to, annotates, or amplifies rules of Manu might, I think, be enlarged still further, and it seems to me that a comparison of those verses of his, which Colebrooke's Digest contains, with Manu gives one the impression that Brîhaspati's work is throughout a revised and enlarged edition of the Bhrigu-saṃhitâ, or, to use the Indian expression, a Manuvârttika or Manukârikâ. Professor Jolly, finally, has pointed out that this evidence concerning the relation between Manu and Brîhaspati agrees with and gives some weight to the tradition preserved in the Skanda-purâna, according to which Brîhaspati composed the third of the four versions of Manu's Dharmaśāstra. The age of the Brîhaspati-smṛiti is circumscribed by its definition of the value of golden dinâras, and by the quotations from it which occur already in the oldest commentaries and Nibandhas from the ninth century A.D. downwards. Since the latter period it has been considered as a work of divine origin, revealed by the teacher of the gods. Hence Professor Jolly's supposition, that it must have existed some two or three hundred years earlier, places it not too early, but, in my opinion, rather too late. But even if the Bṛihaspati-smṛiti dates only about 600 A.D., its statements regarding the high authority of Manu's teaching show that our version of the latter must have preceded it by many centuries.

¹ Tagore Lectures, pp. 60-62; see also above, p. xvi.

¹ See also above, p. xciv.

² Jolly, Tagore Lectures, p. 158.

The three points just discussed are, in my opinion, the only ones that are really useful for fixing the lower date of our Manu-smṛiti. All the other facts known to me which bear on the question are made valueless by flaws of one kind or the other. Thus if we find that another metrical Dharmasâstra, the Kâtyâyana-smṛiti, which probably belongs to the same period as the Bṛihaspati-smṛiti, repeatedly quotes doctrines of Manu or Bhrigu found in our text, it is nevertheless not permissible to assume confidently with Kullûka on Manu VIII, 350¹, that its author knew and explained our text. For, as Professor Jolly has shown², there are other cases in which the teaching attributed by Kâtyâyana to Bhrigu or Manu differs from the opinion advanced in our Smṛiti. It is, of course, possible that the author, who assumes the name of Kâtyâyana, may have made a slip, or may have known several Manu-smṛitis or Bhrigu-smṛitis, and have referred in different places to different works. But, making every allowance for such possibilities, it cannot be said that his references furnish a really conclusive argument. Again, it has been pointed out³ that the author of the Bhaviṣya-purâna has largely drawn on the first three chapters of our Manu, whom he also names, and nobody who carefully compares the two texts can have any doubt who the borrower is, as the Purāṇa regularly substitutes easy readings for difficult ones, and adds numerous explanatory verses. Besides, Nārāyaṇa, as well as Kullūka¹, quotes verses of the Bhaviṣhya-purāṇa from a section on penances not found in the accessible MSS., which likewise are clearly intended to explain the text of our Samhitā. All this is however useless, as for the present it is impossible to determine the date of the Purāṇa even approximatively. Professor H. H. Wilson², who has a very mean opinion of the book, declares that it cannot lay claim to a high antiquity, and seems to consider it a production of the ninth or tenth century A.D. Professor Aufrecht's discovery³ that the Matsya-purāṇa, which mentions a Bhaviṣhya-purāṇa in 14,500 verses, contains actually several sections which have been borrowed from the portions of the latter work preserved in the MSS., makes Professor Wilson's estimate improbable. For the Matsya-purāṇa was considered a canonical work about the year 1000 A. D., and used by Albîrûnî for his work on India⁴. Though it, therefore, becomes probable that the Bhaviṣhya-purāṇa is much older than Professor Wilson was inclined to assume, the data thus gained are much too vague for inferences regarding the age of our Manu-smṛiti.

¹ कात्यायनश्च भृगुशब्दोल्लेखेन मनूकं श्लोकं व्यक्तं व्याख्यातवान् ॥

² Tagore Lectures, p. 62, ll. 22 and 24, Bṛihaspati has been printed twice by mistake for Kâtyâyana.

³ Professor Aufrecht's Catal. Sansk. MSS. Bodl. Libr. p. 30.

Equally unsatisfactory are the results which an examination of the quotations from the Manu-smṛiti, found in various Sanskrit works, yields us. Perfectly indisputable quotations are not very common, and they occur mostly in works of comparatively recent date, e. g. in the Yasastilaka of the Digambara-Gaina poet Somadeva, 959 A. D.⁵, in Śaṅkarācārya's Sâṁpradāyabhāṣya, 804 A. D.⁶, and in Kṣhî-

¹ See e. g. his remarks on Manu XI, 101, and Nārāyaṇa's on XI, 131.

² Vishṇu-purāṇa, vol. i, pp. lxii-lxiv, and Renaud, Mémoire sur l'Inde, p. 396.

³ Catalogue, p. 43.

⁴ I owe the knowledge of this fact also to the kindness of Professor Sachau.

⁵ See Professor Peterson's Report on the Search for Sanskrit MSS., 1883-84, pp. 42-43.

⁶ Deussen, Vedānta, p. 36. With respect to the date of Śaṅkarācārya's work, I follow the Hindu tradition, which places the birth of the author in 788 A. D. According to the statement of the late Yāgyavalkya Sâstrî, with whom I discussed the passages which he adduces in the Āryavidyāsudhâkara, p. 226, the sampra-rasvâmin's Amarakoshodghâṭana¹. Other cases, where we find verses from the Manu-saṃhitâ quoted in ancient works, are made inconclusive by the vagueness of the reference or by the circumstance that the same passages occur also in other works. Thus we find Manu VIII, 416, with a slight verbal difference at the end of the first line², in the Sabara-bhâṣhya on Mîm. Sû. VI, 1, 12. Though the exact date of the latter work is uncertain, we know that it preceded Kumârilabhata's Tantravârttika, and its style, which closely resembles that of Patañjali's Mahâbhâṣhya, makes it probable that its author lived not much later than the beginning of our era. Hence its testimony would be of the greatest interest, provided it were perfectly clear. Unfortunately the Bhâṣhya introduces the verse merely by the words evam ka smarati, 'and thus he records or states in the Smṛiti,' without specifying the author. As the doctrine of the verse which declares a wife, a son, and a slave to be incapable of holding and acquiring property is found, though expressed differently, also in the Nârada-smṛiti, Vivâdapada V, 39, it may be that Sabara took the passage from some other work than the Manu-smṛiti. Again, though Patañjali in the Vyākaraṇamahâbhâṣhya on Pāṇini VI, 1, 84 adduces Manu II, 120 without any variant³, it would be extremely hazardous to conclude that he quotes from our text of Manu. For the Mahâbhârata (XIII, 104, 64^b–65^a) has exactly the same words.

dâya, referred to in his work, is that of Srîṅgeri, where also documentary evidence for its correctness is said to exist. Hence I hesitate to accept Mr. Telang's conclusions, who places Saṅkara in the latter half of the sixth century, Mudrâ-râkshasa, Appendix, and Ind. Ant. vol. xiii, p. 95 seqq.

¹ Aufrecht, Journal of the Germ. Or. Soc. vol. xxviii, p. 107. The date of this author, who used to be identified with the teacher of Gayâpîḍa of Kaśmir (779–813 A. D.), seems, according to the latest researches, more recent.

² See the edition in the Bibl. Ind. vol. i, p. 611: भावी दासश्च पुत्रश्च निर्धनाः सर्वे एव ते । यत्ने समधिगच्छन्ति यस्य ते तस्य तद्धनम् ॥ At the end of the first line Manu has त्रय एवाधनाः स्मृताः ॥

³ See vol. iii, p. 58 of Professor Kielhorn's edition. I may add that the same work on Pāṇini II, 3, 35 (vol. i, p. 457, Kielhorn) quotes another verse, the first line of which agrees with Manu IV, 151^a, while the second entirely differs. In this case, too, the Mahâbhârata XIII, 104, 82 has a version closely resembling that of Manu.

More important are some allusions to the laws of Manu found in several works of considerable antiquity, and in inscriptions. Taken by themselves they would, indeed, not prove much. But considered in conjunction with the results of the three chief arguments, they certainly furnish a confirmation of the latter. The clearest case, perhaps, occurs in the Kirâtârguṇīya of Bhâravi, a poet, whose fame on the evidence of the Aihole inscription was well established in 634 A. D., and who, therefore, cannot possibly have lived later than in the beginning of the sixth century, but may be considerably older. He makes (Kir. I, 9) Yudhishtira's spy say, 'He (Duryodhana), conquering the six (internal) foes, desiring to enter on the path, taught by Manu, that is difficult to tread, and casting off (all) sloth, since by day and by night he adheres to the (prescribed) division (of the royal duties), shows increased manly energy in accordance with the Nîti.' At first sight it might seem as if this passage contained nothing more than an expression of the ancient belief according to which Manu settled the duties of mankind, and among them also those of kings. But if we keep in mind the inferences made unavoidable by Medhâtithi's statements regarding the ancient commentaries and by the character of the Bṛihaspati-smṛiti, it becomes more probable that Bhâravi alludes to the seventh chapter of Bhṛigu's version of the Manu-smṛiti, which declares vinaya, humility or self-conquest, i. e. the conquest of the six internal foes, to be one of the chief qualities requisite for a king, and which carefully and minutely describes the employment of each watch of the day and the night. Other much less explicit allusions occur in the land-grants. It will suffice to adduce those found in the commencement of the Valabhi inscriptions of Dhruvasena I, Guhasena, and Dharasena II, to which I have called attention some time ago¹. The oldest of them is dated Samvat 207, i. e. not later than 526 A. D.² There it is said in the description of Dronasimha, the first Mahârâga of Valabhî and the immediate predecessor of Dhruvasena I, that 'like Dharmarâga (Yudhishthira) he observed as his law the rules and ordinances taught by Manu and other (sages).' Strictly interpreted, the passage says nothing more than that in Dronasimha's times various law-books existed, one and the chief of which was attributed. But, considering what we know from other sources, it is not improbable that it refers to our Samhitâ, which is acknowledged by Bṛihaspati as the paramount authority. This is all I am able to bring forward in order to fix the lower limit of the Manu-smṛiti. But the facts stated are, I think, sufficient to permit the inference that the work, such as we know it, existed in the second century A. D.

¹ See West and Bühler, Digest, p. 46, and for the inscriptions, Indian Antiquary, vols. iv, p. 104; v, 28; vi, 11; vii, 67, 69, 71; viii, 302. For other passages, see Hopkins, Journal of the American Oriental Society, vol. xi, pp. 243-246.

² This is on the supposition that the era of the Valabhi plates began in 319 A. D., the latest date ever assigned to it.

For an answer to the question whether our Manu-smṛiti can go back to a higher antiquity, and how much older it may be, we have at present very scant data. Its posteriority to the twelfth and thirteenth Parvans of the Mahâbhârata teaches us, as already stated, nothing definite. But there is a passage in its tenth chapter, vv. 43-44, which has been frequently supposed to convey, and probably does contain, a hint regarding its lower limit. There the Kâmbogas, Yavanas, Sakas, and Pahlavas are enumerated among the races which, originally of Kshatriya descent, were degraded to the condition of Sûdras in consequence of their neglect of the *Brâhmanas*¹. As the Yavanas are named together with the Kâmbogas or Kâbulis exactly in the same manner as in the edicts of *Asoka*², it is highly probable that Greek subjects of Alexander's successors, and especially the Bactrian Greeks, are meant. This point, as well as the mention of the *Sakas*³ or Scythians, would ¹ The verse contains also the name of the Kînas, which formerly has been taken to be valuable as a chronological landmark. More modern researches have proved this view to be untenable; see A. von Gutschmid, Journal of the German Or. Soc. vol. xxxiv, pp. 202-208; Max Müller, India, what can it teach us? p. 131; Rig-veda, vol. iv, p. li.

² See e. g. the fifth rock-edict, where the Yona-Kamboga-Gamdhâra or Gamdhâra are mentioned as Asoka's neighbours, the most distant being placed first.

³ The earliest mention of the Sakas probably occurs in a Vârttika of Kâtyâyana on Pân. VI, 1, 94, where sakandhu is explained by saka + andhu. According to the traditional explanation the compound means 'the well of the Saka king.'

indicate that the Slokas could in no case have been written before the third century B. C. This limit would be still further and very considerably contracted if the mention of the Pahlavas were quite above suspicion, and if the deductions of my learned friend, Professor Nöldeke¹, regarding the age of this word were perfectly certain. Pahlava and its Iranian prototype Pahlav are, according to the concurrent testimony of the most distinguished Orientalists, corruptions of Parthava, the indigenous name of the Parthians². Relying on the fact that the change of the Iranian th to h is first traceable in the name Meherdates, mentioned by Tacitus, and in the word Miïro, i. e. Mihira, on the coins of Kanishka or Kanerki³, Professor Nöldeke concludes that the form Pahlav cannot have originated among the Iranians earlier than in the first century A. D., and that it cannot have been introduced into India before the second century of our era. If this inference were unassailable, the remoter limit of the Manu-smṛiti would fall together with its lower one. But, with all due deference to the weight of Professor Nöldeke's name, I must confess that it appears to me very hazardous. For, first, the foundations of his theory are very narrow: secondly, one of his own facts is not quite in harmony with his assertions. However late we may place Kanishka, he cannot be later than the last quarter of the first century A. D. Kanishka was not a Parthian, and his coins probably were struck in the North of India. Hence it would appear that Iranian word-forms with the softening of th to h were known in India towards the end of the first century. Moreover, the word Pahlava occurs in the Girnâr inscription of Rudradâman⁴, which was incised shortly before the year 72 of the era of the Western Kshatrapas. This era, as has been long ago conjectured, and is now incontestably proved by Mr. Fleet's important discoveries, is

¹ Weber, History of Indian Literature, pp. 187-8, note 201^a.

² Olshausen, Parthava und Pahlav, Mâda und Mâh (Monatsberichte der Berliner Akademie, 1877), and Nöldeke, Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. xxxi, p. 557.

³ Sallet, Die Nachfolger Alexanders des Gr. p. 197.

⁴ Ind. Ant. vol. vii, p. 261. Rudradâman's lieutenant at Girnâr was the Pahlava Kulaipa (Khorab?), son of Suvirâkha.

the so-called Vikramasamvat or, more correctly, the Samvat of the Málaveras, the lords of Málava, which began in 57 B. C. Rudradâman's inscription consequently dates from the year 21-22 A. D., and it is thus certain that the word Pahlava was used in India at the beginning of the first century A. D. These circumstances make it impossible to accept Professor Nöldeke's inferences from the occurrence of the softened Iranian forms. But the mere mention of the Pahlavas would show that Manu's verse cannot have been composed before the beginning of the first century B. C. The Parthian dynasty of the Arsacides was founded in the middle of the third century B. C., and its sixth ruler, Mithradates I, according to some classical authors, invaded India about the middle of the second century¹. Coins of an Arsaces Theos and of an Arsaces Dikaïos, who uses also the Prakrit language and the North-Indian alphabet, have been found in the Panjâb, and belong to the same or a little later times². As the Brâhmans are ever ready to give foreign nations, with which they come into contact, a place in their ethnological system, it is quite possible that about the beginning of the first century B. C. an Indian origin might have been invented for the Pahlavas. But even this reduction of the remoter limit of the Manu-smṛiti is, in my opinion, not quite safe. For though the evidence for the genuineness of Manu X, 43-44 is as complete as possible, and though the varia lectio for Pahlava, which Govinda offers, probably deserves no credit³, there is yet a circumstance which raises a suspicion against the latter reading. Parallel passages, closely resembling Manu's two verses, are found in the Mahâbhârata XIII, 33, 21-23^a and XIII, 35, 17-18, where the names of the degraded Kshatriya races are likewise enumerated, and the cause of their degradation is stated in exactly the same or similar words. Both passages name the Yavanas, and one also the Sakas. But neither mentions the Pahlavas. Hence it becomes doubtful if the original version of these Slokas really did contain the latter name. It is further not impossible that its insertion is not due to the first remodeller of the Mānava Dharma-sūtra, but has crept in later accidentally, in the place of some other name. The Indian Pandits are not strong in ethnology and history, and habitually careless with respect to the names of peoples and countries, which they frequently alter, or substitute in their works one for the other. I have, therefore, not the courage to reduce the terminus a quo by more than a hundred years on the strength of this single word, which occurs in a verse that evidently has had originally a different form. I think it safer to rely more on the mention of the Yavanas, Kāmbogas, and Sakas, and to fix the remoter limit of the work about the beginning of the second century A. D., or somewhat earlier.

¹ Lassen, Indische Alterthumskunde, II², 334.

² Sallet, Die Nachfolger Alexanders des Gr. pp. 51, 156-157.

³ The commentators and MSS. all give the two verses. If some MSS. of Medhâtithi read Pahnava for Pahlava, that is a clerical mistake caused by the similarity of the subscribed Devanâgarî la and na. Govinda's var. lect. Pallava is improbable, because the other races mentioned in the second line of verse 44 all belong to the North of India, while the Pallavas are, as far as we know, confined to the South.

This estimate of the age of the Bṛigu Samhitā, according to which it certainly existed in the second century A. D., and seems to have been composed between that date and the second century B. C., agrees very closely with the views of Professor Cowell¹ and Mr. Talboys Wheeler². It differs considerably from that lately expressed by Professor Max Müller, who considers our Manu to be later than the fourth century³, apparently because a passage quoted from Vṛiddha Manu, which he takes to be a predecessor of our Samhitā, mentions the twelve signs of the zodiac. I do not think that it has been proved that every work which enumerates the râsis must be later than the period when Ptolemy's astronomy and astrology were introduced into India. But irrespective of this objection, Professor Max Müller's opinion seems to me untenable, because, according to Professor Jolly's and my own researches⁴, the Vṛiddha or Bṛihat Manu, quoted in the digests and commentaries, is not earlier, but later than Bṛigu's Samhitā. Whatever may be thought

¹ Elphinstone, History of India, p. 249 (edition of 1874).

² History of India, vol. ii, p. 422.

³ India, what can it teach us? p. 366.

⁴ See above, p. xcvi.

of the details of my inferences and conclusions, I believe that the rudimentary state of the legal theories in our Samhitâ, as compared with Yâgñavalkya and Nârada (fourth or fifth century A. D.), the fact that the Bṛhaspati-smṛiti of the sixth or seventh century A. D. was a Vārttika on our text, and the assertion of Medhâtithi, that he knew in the ninth century commentaries belonging to a remote antiquity, force us to place it considerably before the term mentioned by Professor Max Müller.

III.

It now remains to give an account of the materials on which my translation is based, and of the manner in which they have been used. Among Sanskrit works the commentaries of Medhâtithi, Govindarâga, Sarvagñā-Nârâyana, Kullûkabhaṭṭa, Râghavânanda, and Nandanâkârya, as well as an anonymous Tippaṇa, contained in a Kasmîr MS. of the Manu-samhitâ, are the sources on which I have chiefly relied. Among the earlier translations, Sir William Jones' famous versio princeps and Professor J. Jolly's annotated German translation¹ of chapter VIII and chapter IX, 1-102 have been carefully used. Occasionally Mr. Loiseleur Deslongchamps' well-known edition of the text, the English translation of chapters I-III, 33 by Târâkand Kakravartî (Kuckerbutty)², and the Mârâtî translation of *Ganârdan Vâsudev Gurgar*³ have been consulted. Sir G. C. Haughton's edition and various Indian reprints of the text have been left aside, because they mostly repeat Kullûka's readings or give variae lectiones for which no sufficient authority is shown.

Among the Sanskrit commentaries on the Manu-smṛiti the oldest extant is the voluminous Manubhâshya of Bhaṭṭa

¹ Published in the Zeitschrift für vergleichende Rechtswissenschaft, vol. iii.

² I have used the copy of the India Office Library, 19-27, 17. The name of the author is given by Professor Goldstücker, On the Deficiencies, &c., p. 5, note.

³ Published with the text of Manu, at the Nirmayasâgar Press, Bombay, 1877.

Medhâtithi, the son of Bhaṭṭa Virasvāmin. As its title, bhāshya, indicates, it is not a gloss which paraphrases every word of the text. Its aim is to show the general sense of Manu's dicta, to elucidate all really difficult passages, and to settle all doubtful points by a full discussion of the various possible interpretations, and of the opinions advanced by others. In carrying out this plan Medhâtithi displays a great amount of learning and not inconsiderable ability. He carefully uses a number of more ancient commentaries on Manu, and shows a full acquaintance with the Sāstras requisite for the successful explanation of his text, with Vedic literature, grammar, Mīmāṃsā, the *Dharma-sūtras*¹ and other Smṛitis, Vedānta, and the Mahābhārata. At the same time he avoids the common fault of Sanskrit commentators,—an undue copiousness in quotations which bear only remotely on the subject under consideration. Moreover, he frequently enhances the value of his explanations by illustrating Manu's rules by instances taken from every-day life, a point which most Hindu writers on law and on kindred subjects entirely neglect. Finally, he frequently takes up a much more independent position towards his author than the other commentators dare to assume. Thus he does not shrink from declaring that many verses are arthavādas, without legal force, and that many single words have been inserted merely vṛttapūranārtham, 'in order to make up the verse.' His chief weakness, on the other hand, which is not unfrequently observable, and which has drawn on him Kullūka's stricture² that he brings forward 'both valuable and valueless' remarks, consists in a disinclination to decide between conflicting interpretations and in his sometimes placing side

¹ Medhâtithi quotes the Dharma-sūtras in general, and Gautama, Baudhāyana, Āpastamba, and Vasishṭha, as well as some other lost works, in particular. Among the lost Dharma-sūtras which he used, is a Kātyāyanīya-sūtra, quoted on Manu VIII, 215, which seems to have treated the civil law in detail, and probably is the original of the metrical Kātyāyana-smṛiti, from which the digests give so numerous extracts.

² See the concluding verses of Kullūka's commentary. Sir W. Jones' statement that Medhâtithi's work is reckoned 'prolix and unequal' (Preface to the Translation, p. xvii, St. Grady) is probably based on this remark of Kullūka.

by side, as equally admissible, widely divergent opinions. This vacillation is perhaps justified in a restricted number of passages, where the text is really ambiguous or very obscure. But more commonly it seems to be due solely to an excessive veneration for the views of his predecessors¹, whose commentaries, in part at least, possessed a high antiquity and a great reputation, or whom he had personal reasons to respect. On several occasions he mentions certain explanations as those of the Pûrvas or Kīramtanās, i. e. of the ancient commentators. Thus he remarks on Manu IV, 223, 'But the exposition given above is the view of the Ancients; hence it has also been given by us².' In another case, when explaining Manu IX, 141 and 147, he notes that his interpretation is that of upādhyāya, i. e. of his own teacher from whom he learnt the Manu-saṃhitā. Disagreeable as this want of decision may be to those who look to a commentary for a concise and authoritative explanation of its text, yet it is not without advantages. His copiousness in quoting the opinions of his predecessors makes his work extremely important for the student of the history of the Manu-smṛiti and of the Hindu law. The Bhāshya clearly proves that Manu's text had been made for centuries an object of deep research, and that many of its verses had given rise to widely different interpretations. It shows, further, that a good many various readings existed. Finally, a comparison of the later still extant commentaries leaves no doubt that these in general are based on the Manubhāshya, and that even their divergent opinions and readings are frequently derived from the earlier work. Under these circumstances the question of

¹ Though the opinions of 'others' are mentioned very frequently, and though sometimes those of three or four predecessors are contrasted, Medhātithi gives only once the name of an earlier commentator, Manu IX, 253, अथ यावती काचित्कालश्रुतिः सा सर्वार्थवाद इति कावर (?) [v. l. कार (?)] विष्णुस्वामी । यदत्र तत्त्वं तद्वर्तिनमथस्तात् ॥ The name seems to be Vishṇusvāmin. But it is uncertain what the corrupt word, preceding it, may hide.

² यद्बु प्राग्ब्याख्यातं तत्पूर्वेषां दर्शनमित्यस्माभिरपि वर्णितम् ॥ Compare also the remark on Manu V, 128, तत्र चिरंतनेष्व्याख्यातम् ॥

Medhâtithi's date acquires great importance. It is a matter of regret that in this, as in so many other cases, we do not possess any trustworthy historical information, but have to depend on such circumstantial evidence as can be collected from Medhâtithi's own quotations and from the quotations made by other authors from the Bhâshya. If we begin with the latter, the lower limit for the composition of Medhâtithi's work is fixed by Vigñânesvara's reference to his explanation of Manu IX, 118¹. Vigñânesvara wrote his commentary on Yâgyñavalkya in the reign of the Kâlukya king, Vikramâditya VI, who ruled at Kalyâna from Sakasamvat 997-1048, or 1073-1126-7 A.D.² The manner in which Vigñânesvara's reference is made, shows that in his times the Bhâshya possessed an established reputation. Hence it may be inferred that it was then not of recent date. To the same conclusion points also a passage in Kullûka's commentary on Manu VIII, 184³, where, in a remark on the arrangement of verses 181-184, Medhâtithi's name is placed before that of Bhogarâga. As in enumerating their predecessors the commentators usually adhere to the natural order, and place the oldest name first, it is very probable that Kullûka means to indicate that Medhâtithi preceded Bhogarâga. If, as again is most likely, the latter is identical with the royal polyhistor who reigned at Dhârâ during the first half of the eleventh century A. D., it follows that Medhâtithi cannot have written later than in the tenth century. With respect to the remoter limit for the composition of the Bhâshya, I have formerly stated⁴ that Medhâtithi quotes Kumârila and Saṅkarâçârya, the great authorities on Mīmāṃsâ and Vedânta. The former is mentioned by name in the remarks on Manu I, 3, and by his usual title Bhattachapâdâh, ¹ Colebrooke, Mit. I, 7, 13.

² See Journ. Bo. Br. Roy. As. Soc. vol. ix, pp. 134-138, and West and Bühler, Digest of Hindu Law, pp. 15-17, third edition.

³ यो निषेपमित्रादिह्योक्तचतुष्टयस्य चेदृश एव पाठकम् नो मेधातिथिभोजरादि- भिर्निश्चितः ॥ See also Jolly, Tagore Lectures, p. 8.

⁴ West and Bühler, Digest, p. v, first edition.

'the venerable Bhaṭṭa,' in the commentary on Manu II, 18¹. As regards Saṅkarācārya, I find that Medhātithi's acquaintance with his writings is by no means as certain as I formerly thought. For in the passage where my own copy, a transcript of a Puna MS., makes Medhātithi quote the Sârirakabhâshya, the older and better MSS. of the India Office read Sâriraka, which probably implies a reference to the *Sâriraka-sûtras*². Under these circumstances it is no longer possible to assert that the Bhâshya is later than the works of the great Vedântist, who wrote in the beginning of the ninth century A. D. We have now only the quotations from Kumârila to fall back upon, whose date is much less certain. We know that Kumârila preceded Saṅkarācārya³, but the length of time which lies between them has hitherto not been exactly ascertained. Mr. Colebrooke, Dr. Burnell, and Professor Max Müller believe, for various reasons, that he lived in the seventh century or not later than 700 A. D.⁴ Though, as far as his quotations go, Medhātithi might have written earlier than the ninth century A. D., I still feel inclined to adhere to my former opinion. For a closer examination of the Bhâshya has revealed some other points which speak in favour of my view. Medhātithi repeatedly quotes the metrical law-books of Yâgñavalkya, Nârada, and Parâsara, as well as the version of the Kâthaka Dharma-sûtra, known as the Vishnu-smṛiti, and considers all as canonical. None of these works has, however, a claim to a high antiquity; and the Vishnu-smṛiti, in particular, which mentions the Greek name of a weekday, cannot be older than the fifth or sixth century A. D.

¹ I, 5, इति कुमारिलपक्षः ॥ II, 18, उक्तं च भट्टपादेः । विरुद्धा च विगीता च दृष्टाया दृष्टकारणे [जाः] । स्मृतिनै शुतिमूला ह्यस्या [स्याद्या] चैवा [वा] संभवश्रुतिः ॥

² Manu XII, 19, ननु च धर्माधर्मयोरिच्छां प्रति नियन्त्रित्वे [त्वं] हेमचर्ये हीयते । तथा दर्शितं शारीरके [v. l. of my MS. शारीरकभाष्ये] यथेह राजा सेवानुरूपं ददाति न च तस्येष्टरत्नमयैति । अतो महापरमात्मानौ पश्यत इति व्यपदिश्यते ॥

³ See Professor Cowell's note to Colebrooke's Essays, I, p. 323.

⁴ See Professor Max Müller, India, what can it teach us? p. 308, note.

If Medhâtithi, nevertheless, considers it to be an inspired work, revealed by the god Vishṇu, it is only reasonable to assume that a very considerable interval lies between the date of its composition and his own times. This is so much more probable, as the Vishṇu-smṛiti was probably written in Kasmîr, which, as will be shown presently, was also Medhâtithi's home. A more definite result with respect to Medhâtithi's date is, I fear, at present not obtainable. His references to other works, such as a Vākyapradîpa by one—rimisra¹, an Abhidhânakosha², Piṅgala's treatise on metrics³, a work of the ancient writer on Sâmkhya, Vindhyavâsin, and so forth, are, in the present state of our knowledge of the history of Sanskrit literature, not particularly useful. The Bhâshya furnishes, however, two interesting details regarding Medhâtithi's personal history. First, we hear that he wrote a metrical treatise on the sacred law, called Smṛitiviveka. Secondly, it appears that the valley of Kasmîr, which has produced so many Indian men of letters, was his native country. The Smṛitiviveka is mentioned repeatedly in the Bhâshya as a comprehensive work in which difficult legal questions were fully discussed⁴. As regards the other point, there is no direct statement in the Bhâshya which mentions Medhâtithi's birthplace. But the author refers so frequently to Kasmîr, its laws, its Vedic Sâkhâ, and even to its language, that the inference that it was his native country becomes unavoidable. Thus in explaining the word svarâshṭre, 'in his own kingdom' (Manu VII, 32), and the term ganapada, 'country or province' (Manu VIII, 41), he introduces the

¹ Manu XII, 118, प्रमाणान्तरमप्येकत्वप्रतिपादनपरत्वादेव ग्राहिणः प्रत्यक्षस्य-
रिमिश्रेः कृत एव क्लेशः । उक्तं च वाक्यप्रदीपे । न तदस्ति च तन्मास्तीत्यादि ॥
Professor Kielhorn informs me that the verse does not occur in Hari's Vākyapa-dîya, which sometimes is called Vākyapradîpa.

² Manu IX, 185-6; the words quoted are, दायादं धनमिष्यते ॥

³ Manu IX, 42, यथोक्तं पिङ्गलेन । अत्रासिद्धिं [इ] गाथेति ॥ Piṅgala VIII, 1; see Weber, Indische Studien, VIII, 147.

⁴ See e.g. comm. on II, 6, निपुणतश्चैव तन्निर्णीतमस्माभिः स्मृतिविषेके । and ibidem, तदेतन्नेतन्तोस्माभिरुक्तम् । विस्तरस्तु स्मृतिविषेके द्रष्टव्यः ॥ name of Kasmîr as an illustration¹. Again, in giving examples of royal monopolies in the remarks on Manu VIII, 399, he states correctly that the sale of saffron is a prerogative of the king of Kasmîr. Further, he repeatedly refers to the Kâthaka Sâkhâ of the Black Yagur-veda, which for a long time has been confined to Kasmîr alone; and, when trying to prove in the notes on Manu I, 58, that the Mânava Dharmasâstra may be called Manu's, though it was first taught by Hiranyagarbha, he adduces as an analogous instance the Kâthaka, which, though studied and taught by many others, is named after Kâtha. Such an illustration would hardly occur to anybody but a student of the Kâthaka Sâkhâ. Still more decisive, finally, is his remark in the commentary on Manu IV, 59, where he says that the rainbow is called in Kasmîr *vinakhâyâ*².

As regards the history of the text of Medhâtithi's commentary, Mr. Colebrooke states in the preface to the Digest, p. xv (Madras edition), that 'the Bhâshya' having been partly lost, has been completed by other hands at the court of Madanapâla, a prince of Dîgh. This assertion probably rests on the authority of a stanza in the Sârdûla-vikrîḍita measure, found in a number of copies at the end of a good many chapters, which says that 'the Bhâshya being mutilated, prince Madanapâla, the son of Sahâraṇa, brought a MS. from another country and made a gîrnod-dhâra, or restoration of the ruin, by causing copies to be taken from that'³. Considering the wording of the verse,

¹ VII, 22, पितृपितामहादिक्कमागतो देशो व्यपदेशहेतुः । काश्मीरकस्य कश्मीराः पंचालानां पंचालाः ॥ VIII, 41, कुरुकाशिकाश्मीरादिदेशनियमावधिर्जनपदः ॥

² इन्द्रायुषं शरधनुर्विनच्छायेति या कश्मीरेषु कथ्यते ॥ I must note that Professor Jolly, Tagore Lectures, p. 6, offers a different opinion, and takes Medhâtithi to be a southerner. His reasons—the termination svâmin in the name of Medhâtithi's father's name, Vīrasvâmin, and the attention paid by the ancient southern authors to the Bhâshya—do not seem to me sufficiently strong. For, as the Kasmirian name Kshîrasvâmin and scores of Svâmins in the northern inscriptions show, the title was, at least, formerly not confined to the south. Further, the intercourse between Kasmîr and southern India in the time of Bilhana and of Harshadeva accounts for the introduction of a Kasmirian work to the notice of the southern Pandits.

³ Professor Jolly states, Tagore Lectures, p. 7, that he has found the verse,

I can only agree with Professor Jolly (loc. cit.) that Madanapāla did not cause portions of the Bhāṣhya to be recomposed, but merely completed the defective MS. of his library from a copy purchased in some other part of India. The place where this gṛnoddhāra was made, was Kāshī/hā, near Delhi. For as the verse says that Madana was the son of Sahāraṇa, it is not doubtful that this person is identical with Madana or Madanapāla, the patron of Viśveśvarabhaṭṭa, who wrote the Subodhinī on the Mitāksharā and the Prayoga- or Madanapārigāta. Viśveśvara gives, in the introduction to the latter work, a portion of his patron's genealogy¹, and states that Madana belonged to the family of the chiefs of Kāshī/hā, and was the second son of one Sādhāraṇa. It is easy to see that in the verse quoted above the Prakritic form Sahāraṇa has been used instead of Sādhāraṇa for metrical reasons. This Madana has been identified by Mr. Colebrooke with the homonymous author of the Madanavinoda, which is dated in Vikramasamvat 1431 or 1375 A.D., and Mr. Sarvādhikāri² confirms this identification, by telling us that the Madanavinoda contains the same pedigree of Madana as the Pārigāta. Hence 'the restoration' of the Bhāṣhya must have occurred about five hundred years ago.

more or less correctly given, in seven old MSS. from various parts of India. In my opinion it should be read as follows: मान्या कापि मनुस्मृतिस्तदुचिता व्याख्या मेधातिथेः सा लुप्तेव विधिवशात्कचिदपि प्राप्यानयत्युस्तकम्। खोजीन्द्रो मदनः सहारणसुतो देशान्तरादाहृतं जीर्णोद्धारमचीकरोत्त इतस्तत्पुस्तकेर्लक्षिते ॥ I differ from Professor Jolly at the end of the second pāda, where he reads with a Benares MS. प्राप्यं न यत्युस्तकम्, and at the end of the third pāda, where he changes the reading of the MSS. आहृते or आहृतो to आहृतेः.

¹ Aufrecht, Cat. Sansk. MSS. of the Bodleian Library, p. 274.

² Tagore Lectures of 1880, p. 389. Mr. Sarvādhikāri wishes to read the date brahma (1) gāgāt (3) yuga (4) indu (1), (Māgha sudi 6, Monday,) as 1231. He thinks that yuga may also denote the figure 2, and that the reading Vikramasamvat 1231 is necessary, because the Pārigāta is quoted by Kāṇḍeśvara, who wrote in the thirteenth century. He is, however, mistaken, as the astronomical calculation shows that Māgha sudi 6 of Vikramasamvat 1431 did fall on a Monday (Jan. 8, 1375), while the same day in V. S. 1231 was a Thursday. The Pārigāta quoted by Kāṇḍeśvara must, therefore, be some other work on law. The title is a not uncommon one.

It would, however, seem that it either was not thorough, or that its effects were not lasting. For all the copies of Medhâtithi's commentary which I have seen or used are throughout more or less corrupt, and in some parts, especially in chapters VIII and IX, as well as at the end of chapter XII, in a desperate condition. The latter portion is in great confusion, some pieces being missing, and others being given twice over. In chapters VIII and IX many verses are left out, though it is evident from cross-references, or from remarks made by Kullûka, that they must have been explained by Medhâtithi. In the parts of the commentary still extant, the corruptions are often very bad, and the sense frequently doubtful or only to be made out conjecturally. Under these circumstances I believe that it would be unwise to attach too much weight to the omission of verses with respect to which the Bhâshya stands alone. Before we can attempt to come to a decision regarding the exact state of the Manu-smṛiti in Medhâtithi's times, we require, I think, better MSS. of his work. The officers in charge of the search for Sanskrit MSS. in India could render a very great service to the history of the Indian law, if they would direct their efforts to the acquisition of really good MSS. of the Bhâshya, and if thus a competent scholar were enabled to publish a trustworthy edition. The MSS. used for the notes to my translation are, my own apograph of chapters I-VI and X-XII, made in 1864 from a Puna MS., and the copies of the India Office Library, Nos. 934-935, 1407-1409, 1414, 1551-1552. All of them go back to one codex archetypus, derived from Madana's restored copy, and the best is that contained in the Indian Office Library, Nos. 1551-1552, which is dated Samvat 1648, mârgasīrsha sudi 3, somavāsare, or Monday, November 18, 1591 A.D.¹

Next, after the Manubhâshya, but probably at a considerable interval, follows the Manuśikā of Govindarâga, ¹ For this and some other calculations of dates I have to thank Dr. Schram, Privat-Docent of astronomical chronology in the University of Vienna.

the son of Bhaṭṭa Mādhava. The exact date of this author is likewise not ascertainable. He is extremely reticent about himself and his predecessors, and quotes, with the exception of Smṛitis, not a single work on law except his own Smṛiti-maṅgarī or Smṛiti-maṅgarīpāṅgikā, a compilation of rules on penances¹, derived from various Dharmaśāstras. The remoter limit of his age can, however, be deduced from Kullūka's remarks on Manu VIII, 184, whence it appears that Govindarāga was later than Bhoga of Dhârâ (first half of the eleventh century). The lower limit is fixed by the mention of his name in Gimûtavāhana's *Dâyabhāga*² and in Sûlapāni's work on penances³. I can only agree with Professor Jolly, who thinks that he lived in the twelfth or thirteenth century⁴. The termination of Govindarāga's name has induced several scholars (see Jolly, loc. cit.) to assume that he was a prince, and it has been proposed to identify him with a Govindakāndra of Benares or with a homonymous king of Kānōg. But the son of a Bhaṭṭa can only be a Brāhmaṇa, and it must not be forgotten that Govindarāga is the equivalent of Govindrāo, a name very common among the Marāṭhā Brāhmaṇas.

The Manuśikā is a very concise, but by no means obscure⁵

¹ Commentary on Manu III, 247 and 248; see also Kullūka on Manu IV, 212. A copy of this work, written at Vasurāvi in Samvat 1467, ārvina badi -- sanau, during the reign of Mahārāna Udayasimha, is preserved in the India Office Library, No. 1736. Colebrooke thought that the date had to be referred to the Vikrama era, and the editors of the series of facsimiles issued by the Palaeographical Society, No. III, have followed him. But it is not doubtful that the prince mentioned in the colophon is Mahārāna Udayasimha of Mevād, who ascended the throne in 1541 A. D. Hence the date of the MS. refers to the Saka era, and corresponds to 1545 A. D. The Smṛiti-maṅgarī contains no quotations from other law-books than Smṛitis. The name of Govindarāga's father, Bhaṭṭa Mādhava, occurs frequently in the colophons of the several sections.

² Colebrooke, Dây. XI, 2, 31, where Govinda's name is also placed after Bhogarāga's.

³ Aufrecht, Cat. Sansk. MSS. of the Bodleian Library, p. 283^a.

⁴ Jolly, Tagore Lectures, p. 9.

⁵ 'Obscure' is the epithet applied to it by Sir W. Jones, Pref. to the trans. of Manu, p. xvii. (St. Grady). This estimate is probably derived from Kullūka's utterance in the concluding verses of his commentary, स्तोके वस्तु निगूढं मत्पुत्रवचनाद्भोविन्दराजो जगौ. It is only what might be expected from a plagiarist who bitterly hated the man whose work he wished to supersede.

verbal paraphrase of Manu's text. In the main it is an abstract of Medhâtithi's Bhâshya from which Govinda has appropriated whatever seemed to him most valuable. He has discarded the greater number of his predecessor's optional explanations, as well as his lengthy controversial disquisitions on difficult points of law, while he has greatly condensed others. He has added explanations of those words on which Medhâtithi does not comment, and he sometimes also puts forward opinions, not traceable in the earlier work, which may be either his own or derived from sources inaccessible to us. But in such cases he is occasionally unlucky, and arrives at results which his successor Kullûka ridicules, not without reason. Thus in his remarks on Manu III, 50, where the text says that a man who restricts conjugal intercourse to a minimum, is equal in chastity to a student 'in whichever order he may live,' Govinda takes the last words in too literal a sense and enunciates the, for a Hindu, monstrous doctrine that Manu intends to permit ascetics, whose children have all died, to return to conjugal life and to repair the loss which they have suffered. Some other strange errors have been pointed out by Professor Jolly in his Tagore Lectures, p. 9, note 1. These occasional eccentricities do not, however, seriously diminish the usefulness of the Manuśikā. It remains not only the earliest, but the best complete explanation of Manu's text. It frequently assists the student to find his way through the tangled forest of the Bhâshya, and it contains many valuable interpretations of words left unexplained by Medhâtithi. The MS. used for the notes is the unique copy, acquired by myself for the Government of Bombay (Deccan College Library, Coll. of 1879-1880, No. 239). It is in a very fair condition, and contains the whole text and the commentary, excepting that on IX, 71-336. It was written at Stambhatirtha or Cambay, probably about 250-300 years ago.

The chronological position of the next commentary on our list, Sarvagña-Nârâyana's Manvarthavivṛiti or Manvarthanibandha, is fixed, as Professor Jolly has first pointed out, by a passage in the introduction to Râghavânanda's commentary¹. The latter author says there that 'he has taken cognisance of (the opinions) approved by Kullôka and Nârâyana, and of those entertained in their hearts by Govinda and Medhâtithi.' As it is evident that in the second group the later author has been placed first, the assumption that the same order has been observed with respect to the first pair, and that Râghavânanda, applying the principle of uttarottaragariyastva, i. e. naming the more important persons later, intends the whole series to be read backwards², is not unreasonable. In its favour speaks also the fact that Nârâyana quotes Govindarâga on Manu VIII, 123. In order to fix the date when Nârâyana wrote, we have to rely chiefly on some quotations. His opinions on law are first quoted by Kamalâkara, who wrote in the beginning of the seventeenth century³. But a Nâmanidhâna by Nârâyana Sarvagña is mentioned by Râyamukûta in his commentary on the Amarakosha, which was composed in 1431 A.D.⁴ The only MS. of the Manvarthavivṛiti⁵ hitherto found (Deccan College Collection of 1879-1880, No. 238) bears at the end of Adhyâya VIII, the date Sam. 1544 kaitra badi 9 ravau, which corresponds to Sunday, March 27, 1497 A.D. Hence it follows that Nârâyana cannot have written later than in the last half of the fourteenth century. Possibly he may be somewhat older.

The Manvarthavivṛiti is not a running commentary which explains every word of the text. It confines itself to the elucidation of selected difficult passages and words. It was written with the avowed intention of undoing the work of the author's predecessors. At the end of chapters

¹ Jolly, Tagore Lectures, p. 11; the passage has been printed in Dr. Burnell's Tanjore Catalogue, p. 126.

² This manner of enumerating a series of persons or of arguments is also found occasionally in older Sanskrit works; see e.g. Vasishṭha XIII, 58.

³ Aufrecht, Catalogue Sansk. MSS. Bodl. Libr. p. 279.

⁴ See Professor Aufrecht's Analysis in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, vol. xxviii, p. 114.

⁵ This MS., which has been used for the notes to the translation, is a very fair copy, containing the commentary alone. Fols. 1-8 have been half eaten by rats. Fols. 192-3 have been lost.

I, VI, and VIII we find a verse, apparently belonging to Nārāyaṇa, which says, 'This commentary of the Manu-smṛiti, composed by the illustrious Nārāyaṇa Sarvagña, thrusts far away the exposition given in contemptible compilations ¹.' Again, at the end of chapter IV we read, 'Direct your attention to the good words of Nārāyaṇa Sarvagña, which propound the real meaning of Manu and repel the exposition given in contemptible compilations ².' As might be expected from these utterances, Nārāyaṇa shows a great anxiety to find explanations differing from those of Medhātithi and Govinda. Sometimes he attains this aim by returning to views which Medhātithi mentions and rejects; but more frequently his explanations have been either taken from commentaries inaccessible to us, or represent opinions formed by him independently. All his peculiar interpretations deserve careful attention. In many cases they are decidedly preferable to those of the other commentators, and have therefore been not rarely followed in the translation. Nārāyaṇa seems to have been not only deeply versed in the sacred law, but to have possessed also a knowledge of various other Śāstras. As we learn from his commentary on Manu V, 56, 80, 104, XI, 72, he also wrote two other works on Dharma, a Kāmadhenudīpikā and a Suddhidīpikā. His Kosha has been mentioned above. Commentaries of his on parts of the Mahābhārata, e. g. on the Udyogaparvan, on the Svargārohanaparvan ³, and on the Sanatsugātiya, are still extant ⁴.

¹ श्रीनारायणसर्वज्ञकृता वृत्तिः मनुस्मृतेः । कुनिबन्धकृतव्याख्यानमियं दूरे निरस्यति ॥ Thus at the end of chapter I; in the other two passages the MS. has the faulty form निरस्यते.

² व्याहृतमनुतात्पर्यप्रतिहतकुनिबन्धदर्शितव्याख्याम् । नारायणस्य सूक्तिं सर्वज्ञस्यानुसंधत्त ॥ Three other boastful verses occur at the end, 1. of chapter III, श्रीनारायणसर्वज्ञवृत्तिसंदर्शितानयाः । मनुस्मृतिगिराचार्ये [१] मधिगच्छत सूरयः ॥ 2. of chapter V, श्रीनारायणसर्वज्ञनिर्मितां वीक्ष्य भारतीम् । धर्मस्य निर्णयं ब्रूत पदवाक्यसुनिश्चितम् ॥ 3. of chapter IX, श्रीनारायणसर्वज्ञोक्तं मन्वरेणिवन्धनम् । वीक्ष्य धर्मे त्वरा ब्रूत वे[दि]त्य सर्वे कृते [ता] कृतम् ॥

³ Weber, Berlin Catalogue, Nos. 304, 399; Aufrecht. Catalogue, Bodl. Libr. p. 2.

⁴ Telang, Sacred Books of the East, vol. viii, p. 148.

The fourth work on our list, the well-known Manvarthamuktâvali of Kullûkabhaṭṭa, the son of Divâkarabhaṭṭa, was considered until lately the most trustworthy guide for the exposition of Manu. In the introductory verses to his commentary Kullûka informs us that he was a Gauda or Bengali by birth, his father residing in Nandana in Varendrî¹, and that he wrote his work at Benares with the assistance of other Pandîts. As regards his times, we only know that Nârâyana Sarvagña and another commentator, Dharañidhara², stood between him and Govindarâga, and that Raghunandana, who wrote in the beginning of the sixteenth century, is the earliest author who quotes him³. He, therefore, lived probably in the fifteenth century.

The Manvarthamuktâvali is, as Professor Jolly has been the first to recognise⁴, little more than an improved edition of Govindarâga's Manuṣikâ. In spite of the asperity with which Kullûka repeatedly inveighs against his predecessor, he has not disdained to copy very large portions of the Manuṣikâ, sometimes verbatim and sometimes in very insufficient extracts, where the omissions make the meaning obscure. Moreover, even where the wording of the two commentaries differs, the influence of Govinda is distinctly visible. Under these circumstances the value of the Muktâvali is, since the recovery of the Manuṣikâ, not very great, though it is undeniable that in certain cases Kullûka's independent remarks or criticisms of the earlier works are useful. Its great fame in India and its frequent occurrence in the libraries of native lawyers in all parts of the Peninsula may be explained by the fact that it was written and approved at Benares, which town has, since remote times, been a most important literary centre and the chief source from which the Pandîts draw their supplies of books. For the notes I

¹ In the colophon of chapter XII, the place is called Vârendranandana. The district of Varendra lies between Dinâjpur and the Ganges, Cunningham, Arch. Reports, XV, Plate 1, and p. 40.

² See concluding verses at the end of chapter XII.

³ Aufrecht, loc. cit. p. 292.

⁴ Die Juristischen Abschnitte aus dem Gesetzbuche des Manu, p. 3, des Separatabdrucks; Tagore Lectures, p. 10.

have used no MSS. of the Muktāvali; but two editions, Gībānand's reprint of the earlier Calcutta edition¹ and the Bombay lithographed edition of Sakasamvat 1780. The latter is by far the better one, but leaves, like all other editions which I have seen, much to desire from a critical point of view. There are a good many passages in which the text does not agree with the commentary.

On the Manvarthamuktāvali rests the Manvarthakāndrikā, written by Rāghavānanda Sarasvatī, an ascetic of Śaṅkarācārya's school², and a pupil of one Viśveśvarabhagavatpāda. Though the author asserts, as stated above, that he used four older commentaries, he mostly adheres to Kullūka's opinions. It is only rarely that he prefers Nārāyaṇa's interpretations or recurs to views of Govindarāga and Medhātithi, which Kullūka refuted or left unnoticed. His exposition of the philosophical portions of the text is, however, mostly independent, and he interprets them throughout in such a manner as to agree with the Vedānta doctrines of his school. The Kāndrikā is not a running commentary which paraphrases every word of Manu, but gives mostly, besides a short summary of the general meaning, merely remarks on difficult words and passages. It is probably a modern work, dating from the sixteenth or the beginning of the seventeenth century³. I have not met with any quotations from it in other law-books. The oldest known MS. is that brought by Anquetil from Gugarāt and deposited in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris (Devanāgarī 49, fonds d'Anquetil, No. 16). Its date, Samvat 1706 varshe kārttika badi 10 somadine, corresponds, according to Dr. Schram's calculation, to Monday, November 29, 1649. Another old MS. of about the same date is mentioned by Dr. Burnell, Tanjore Catalogue, p. 126. For the notes I have used the Paris MS., which was kindly lent to me by the French Government, as far as Manu IX, 187. It contains both the commentary and the text, the former being, however, left out on I, 45-78. For the remaining portion I have consulted a very old, but much damaged copy of the Deccan College Collection of 1882-1883, acquired by Professor Bhândarkar for the Government of Bombay.

¹ The reason why I used this very incorrect text, was that Professor Jolly kindly lent me his copy in which he has entered the various readings of Medh., Gov., Nār., Rāgh., of the Kāsmīr copy and other MSS.

² According to H. H. Wilson, Works, I, pp. 202-3 (ed. Rost), the ascetics, bearing the title Sarasvatī, follow the sampradāya of Śaṅkarācārya. See also Aufrecht, Catalogue Sansk. MSS. Bodl. Libr. p. 227.

³ Mr. Loiseleur Deslongchamps' attempt (Lois de Manou, p. xvi) to identify Rāghavānanda with Raghunandana, the bhāṣyācārya of the sixteenth century, is an unlucky guess. It seems to me that the author of the Kāndrikā is identical with the ascetic Rāghavānanda, pupil of Advayānanda, pupil of Viśveśvara, who is mentioned as an author on Sāṃkhya and Vedānta philosophy by Dr. F. E. Hall, Catalogue, pp. 6, 91, &c.

The name of the sixth commentary is, according to the MS., the loan of which I owe to the courtesy of Divân Bahâdur Raghunâthrâo of Madras, Manuvyâkhyâna, but according to Dr. Burnell, Tanjore Catalogue, p. 126, Nandinî. Its author calls himself Nandana (Nandanâtârya according to Dr. Burnell), the son of Lakshmana, a member of the Bhâradvâga gotra, and the dear friend of the illustrious Vîramalla¹. In all probability he was a native of Southern India. For his work is, as far as I am aware, known in Southern India alone; its MSS. are met with only in the Madras Presidency, and Professor Jolly (loc. cit., p. 12) has found that many of his peculiar readings agree with those found in Southern MSS. of the Manu-smṛiti. As his name is not quoted in any commentary on Manu or in any work on law, known to me, it would seem that he is either of very modern date or that his opinions were not held in any great esteem. Mr. Raghunâthrâo's MS. is dated Sakasamvat 1724, Mâgha sudi pratipad, or 1803 A.D. The Manuvyâkhyâna is a very short commentary, which mostly repeats and explains only a few words or phrases of the text. It dismisses many verses which stand in need of elucidation with the curt remark spashṭaḥ, 'clear,' and

¹ The colophon of chapter XII runs as follows: इति श्रीभारद्वाजगोषेय
श्रीलक्ष्मणभजेन श्रीवीरभट्टप्रियसत्तेन श्रीनन्दनेन विरचिते मनुव्याख्याने
भृगुप्रोक्तायां संहितायां द्वादशोऽध्यायः ॥ Vîramalla was probably a prince or chief, and the mention of his name will eventually aid to ascertain Nandana's time. A third variety of the latter's name occurs in the Madras edition of Colebrooke's Digest, p. xv, note 6, where the editor speaks of a commentary on Manu, Nandaragkrit (?) by Nandarâga.

passes by others without any note. Though no names are ever quoted, most of the explanations have been taken on purely eclectic principles from the earlier commentaries, among which the first four of our list must certainly be reckoned. The favourite among them is the Manvartha-vivṛiti. The notes to the translation show a considerable number of cases where 'Nār. and Nand.' form a separate group, and on important points advocate opinions opposed to those of Medhâtithi, Govinda, and Kullûka. But there are also other passages, concerning which Nandana agrees either with Medhâtithi alone, or with 'others,' quoted by Medhâtithi, with Kullûka or even with Govinda. Finally, he offers in a certain number of cases expositions not traceable elsewhere, some of which, especially those on the philosophical pieces, deserve attention. The text which Nandana follows, differs not inconsiderably from the vulgata. It shows, besides very numerous, more or less important variae lectiones, some omissions, additions, and transpositions of entire verses. Many of Nandana's various readings are derived from Medhâtithi, Nârâyana, and other older commentators, who either themselves follow them or at least mention their existence. As regards those which Nandana alone offers, the majority seem to be either corruptelae or conjectures, and sometimes very unlucky ones¹. The transpositions, which partly occur in passages regarding the order of which the other commentators agree, appear to have sometimes at least no better authority than guesses made by Nandana. Thus if he places Manu I, 27 after verse 19, and X, 14 after verse 6, and adds in each case that, 'if some read the verses further on, that must be due to an error of the copyists,' I can only see in this remark a confession of his having done violence to the traditional text. The verses which Nandana adds are, I think, all interpolations, some of which perhaps go back to early times, as they occur also in the Southern MSS. and in the Kasmîr copy. With respect to the omissions, Nandana sometimes follows one or several of the other commentators. In other cases he agrees with the Southern MSS. alone, and again in others he stands quite by himself. One of the omissions of the last class, Manu V, 61, is, as has been pointed out in the notes, purely due to an accidental lacuna in the MS. which Nandana used. With respect to numerous other cases it must be noted that the two copies of the Manuvyākhyāna which European scholars have examined, Mr. Raghunāthrao's and Dr. Burnell's (chapters VIII-IX, now in the India Office Library), differ very considerably. Thus in chapter VIII, Dr. Burnell's copy omits, according to Professor Jolly's collation¹, verses 8, 11, 14, 74, 81, 103, 227-228, 231, 332, while Mr. Raghunāthrao's MS. has them all excepting verses 8, 228, and 231, and gives even notes on 11, 14, 81, 103, 227. These differences between the two copies seem to extend also to readings in Manu's text and to explanations. But it is not rarely difficult to give a definite opinion on these points, because Mr. Raghunāthrao's MS. sometimes gives only the Pratikas of the verses, and is often so corrupt that the sense can be made out only by means of conjectural emendations.

¹ To the first class belongs स्ववासिनी: for सुवासिनी: M. III, 114, the senseless कारणम् for करणम् M. VIII, 154 (not given in the notes), अभ्यङ्गम् for अत्यन्तम् IX, 202, and so forth; to the second, दारकर्मण्यमैषुनी for दारकर्मणि मैषुने M. III, 5, परीक्षकान् for परीक्षितान् M. VII, 54, अलक्षितः for अलंघनः M. VIII, 162, नास्ति कायाः for दाढिकायाः M. VIII, 283 (not given in the notes), यमयोश्चैकगर्भेषु for यमयोश्चैव गर्भेषु M. IX, 126, अननयाम् (loc. sing. of अननारी) for अननयार्थम् M. X, 28, and so forth.

Under these circumstances it will not be advisable to attach too much weight to variae lectiones, derived from the Manuvyākhyāna, which are not supported by the authority of other commentaries.

The anonymous Tippāna, or collection of detached explanatory remarks, in the Kasmîr birch bark MS.² is of very small importance. It looks as if it owed its origin to the marginal notes of some learned Pandit, which, later, were copied with the text and placed after the verses to which they refer. Professor Jolly¹ has pointed out that in one case it characteristically agrees with Govindarâga ; and other instances, e.g. the remarks on Manu I, 52, may be added. There are also some cases (see e.g. the explanation of Āimbha, Manu V, 91) where the Kasmîr commentary agrees with curious explanations given by Nandana. The text also agrees occasionally with peculiar readings adopted by Nandana or by Nârâyana and Nandana². But I should consider it hazardous to draw from these instances any conclusions regarding the sources of the Tippāna. The Kasmîr MS., which has been very carefully written and corrected, is mutilated at the end, about one-third of each of the last dozen leaves being torn off. The loss falls on Manu XI, 218–XII, 126.

¹ Compare also Professor Hopkins, Notes on the Nandini, Proceedings of the American Oriental Society, October, 1883, p. xviii, where, however, only verses 8, 11, 74, 81, and 332 are enumerated as missing.

² Deccan College Collection of 1876-1877, No. 355.

The above remarks on the materials which I had at my disposal show that, in spite of their undeniable importance, they were insufficient for a radical change in the treatment of Manu's text. As the recension, given by Kullûka, was the only one accessible in its entirety and in tolerably trustworthy copies, I could not do anything else than take that for the basis of my translation. Practical reasons, too, especially the consideration that the Indian public has been accustomed to Kullûka's text, and that the numerous references in the translations of Hindu law-books point to the Manu of Kullûka, made the adoption of this principle highly desirable. I have, therefore, retained every verse which Kullûka explains, though the weight of the authorities might be against its genuineness, and I have refrained from receiving into the text any verse which he omits. In cases of the former kind the names of the dissenting commentators have been given in the notes, where also translations of the best accredited and more important additional verses, given by other commentators, will be found³. I have, moreover,

¹ Tagore Lectures, p. 11.

² See e.g. notes on Manu I, 2 ; III, 59, 73, 195.

³ I may add that I have paid no attention to those verses which the medieval Nibandhas on law quote as Manu's, but which are not traceable in the recension approved of by the commentators. These verses are in my opinion all spurious. In most cases we have simply to deal with misquotations caused by the careless-adhered to Kullûka's order of the verses, except in some cases where he is evidently in the wrong, and the transposition causes no great inconvenience. On the other hand, I have tried to remove the numerous palpable blunders in the readings of the editions, which are mostly due, not to Kullûka himself, but to the editors of his text. The notes show what has been changed, and on whose authority it has been done. I have, finally, added a selection of the more important various readings given in the other commentaries.

With respect to the translation, my proceeding has been somewhat different. Though I should have liked to follow in the text Kullûka's commentary alone, and to give the renderings of the other commentators in the notes, I found that to be impracticable. The bulk of my volume would have become enormous, and in very many passages I should have been compelled to declare the rendering placed in the text to be utterly erroneous. In order to escape these difficulties I have generally, except in very doubtful passages, translated in accordance with that exposition which seemed to me most reasonable, and have placed some of the other particularly noteworthy explanations in the notes. In a certain number of verses where the real meaning of the text is very doubtful, I have not gone beyond a literal rendering of Manu's words, which, like the original, may be interpreted in different ways. In such cases the notes exhibit all the various interpretations found in the commentaries. In a very small number of verses the explanations of the commentators have been set aside altogether for reasons duly stated in the notes. The length of my notes varies very much, according to the interest or difficulty of the subject treated in the text. Thus the summary of the opinions of the commentators on the practically important titles of the Hindu law, Manu IX, 1-219, is as complete as the state of the MSS. allowed me to make it. Almost all the explanations of the difficult philosophical portions of chapters I and XII have likewise ness of the Nibandhakâras, who are as little to be depended upon for accuracy as Indian writers on other scientific subjects or as the European medieval writers on classical philology. They quoted mostly, if not invariably, from memory.

been given. But the extracts from the commentaries on the easier sections referring to the duties of students, householders, Snâtakas, and so forth, have been made very short, as for the right understanding of the greater part of their verses little more is wanted than the parallel passages of the other ancient Smṛitis. Among the latter, those translated in vols. ii, vii, and xiv of this series have been quoted everywhere. If Nârada has been excluded, the reason is that the new translation, which Professor Jolly will soon publish according to recently discovered materials, would have made the references useless. The quotations from Manu, which occur in the translated Nibandhas on Hindu law, have been collected, for the convenience of practical lawyers, in the Appendix. As regards the relation of my version to those of earlier translators, it will be evident to everybody how much I am indebted to Sir William Jones' great work, which, in spite of the progress made by Sanskrit philology during the last hundred years, still possesses a very high value. I have also to acknowledge my obligation to the German translation of chapter VIII and of vv. 1-102 of chapter IX by Professor Jolly, which is based on the materials used by myself. If no reference has been made to the translation lately published by Drs. Burnell and Hopkins, the reason is that the printing of mine was complete some time before its appearance.

In conclusion, I must express my thanks to several colleagues, especially to Professors Jolly and Kielhorn, for assistance rendered in various ways, as well as to Dr. R. Rost, Chief Librarian at the India Office; to K. M. Chatfield, Esq., Director of Public Instruction, Bombay; to the Director of the Bibliothèque Nationale of France; and to Divân Bahâdur Raghunâth Râo of Mylapur, Madras, for liberal loans of MSS.

LAWS OF MANU.

LAWS OF MANU.

CHAPTER I.

1. THE great sages approached Manu, who was seated with a collected mind, and, having duly worshipped him, spoke as follows :

2. 'Deign, divine one, to declare to us precisely and in due order the sacred laws of each of the (four chief) castes (varṇa) and of the intermediate ones.

3. 'For thou, O Lord, alone knowest the purport, (i. e.) the rites, and the knowledge of the soul, (taught) in this whole ordinance of the Self-existent (Svayambhū), which is unknowable and unfathomable.'

I. 1. Kull. thinks that pratipūgya, 'having worshipped,' may also mean 'after mutual salutations,' and he connects, against the opinion of the other commentators, 'duly' with 'spoke.' Gov., Nār., Rāgh., and K., as well as various MSS. (Loiseleur I, p. 313; Bikaner Cat. p. 419), begin the Samhitā with the following verse, omitted by Medh., Kull., and Nand.: 'Having adored the self-existent Brahman, possessing immeasurable power, I will declare the various eternal laws which Manu promulgated.'

2. After this verse Nand. inserts four lines, the first and last of which are also found in K.: (a) 'The origin of the whole multitude of created beings, of those born from the womb, of those born from eggs, of those produced from exudations and from germinating seeds, and their destruction;' (b) 'The settled rule of all customs and rites deign to describe at large, according to their times and fitness.'

3. 'The ordinance of the Self-existent,' i. e. 'the Veda' (Kull., Nār., and Rāgh.), or 'the Veda or the prescriptive rules (vidhi)

4. He, whose power is measureless, being thus asked by the high-minded great sages, duly honoured them, and answered, 'Listen !'

5. This (universe) existed in the shape of Darkness, unperceived, destitute of distinctive marks, unattainable by reasoning, unknowable, wholly immersed, as it were, in deep sleep.

contained in it' (Medh.), or 'the institutes' (Gov.). Añintya, 'unknowable,' i.e. 'the extent of which is unknowable' (Kull. and Râgh.), or 'unknowable on account of its depth' (Gov.), or 'the meaning of which cannot be known by reasoning' (Nâr.), or 'not perceptible by the senses' (Medh.), or 'difficult to understand' (Nand.). Aprameya, 'unfathomable,' i.e. 'not to be understood without the help of the Mîmāṃsā and other methods of reasoning' (Kull.), or 'unfathomable on account of its extent' (Gov., Nand.), or 'unfathomable on account of its extent, or not directly knowable but to be inferred as the foundation of the Smṛiti' (Medh.), or 'difficult to understand' (Râgh.). Kull. and Râgh. explain kārya-tattvārtha by 'the purport, i.e. the rites, and the nature of the soul;' Medh., Gov., and Nand. by 'the true purport, i.e. the rites.' Nand. takes sarvasya, 'whole,' as depending on 'ordinance,' and in the sense of 'prescribed for all created beings.'

In the commentary on verse 11 Medh. gives still another explanation of this verse, according to which it has to be translated as follows: 'For thou, O Lord, alone knowest the nature and the object of the products employed in the creation of this universe, which is unthinkable on account of its greatness, and unknowable.' This version belongs to 'other' commentators, who explain Manu's whole account of the creation purely on Sāṃkhya principles.

5. The account of the creation given in verses 5-13 bears, as Dr. Muir remarks (Sanskrit Texts, IV, p. 26), some resemblance to that contained in some passages of the Satapatha-brāhmaṇa, especially XI, 1, 6, 1 seqq., and is probably founded on some Vedic work, 'with an intermixture of more modern doctrines.' In explanation of the wording of verse 5, Medh. and Kull. point to passages like Rv. X, 129, 3, and Taittirīya-brāhmaṇa II, 8, 9, 4. Sāyana, too, quotes the verse in his commentary on the latter passage.

The commentators Medh. and Gov. explain the fact that Manu, being asked to expound the law, gives an account of the creation,

6. Then the divine Self-existent (Svayambhū, himself) indiscernible, (but) making (all) this, the great elements and the rest, discernible, appeared with irresistible (creative) power, dispelling the darkness.

by the supposition that it is intended to show what a great scope the work has, and how necessary its study is, as the production of the various created beings depends on merit and demerit. Kull., on the other hand, tries to prove that the account of the creation, which belongs to the knowledge of the supreme soul, is part of the sacred law, and hence properly finds its place here. All the commentators, with the exception of Rāgh., explain tamaḥ, 'darkness,' by mūlaprakṛtiḥ, 'the root-evolvent' of the Sāṃkhya philosophy, and tamobhūtam, 'in the shape of darkness,' by 'absorbed in the root-evolvent.' Rāgh., who throughout explains Manu's sayings in the sense of the Vedānta school, takes it for an equivalent of avidyā, 'ignorance.' The explanation of the four adjectives, which express in different terms the impossibility of knowing the mūlaprakṛti, differs very much in the six commentaries. The most reasonable appears to be Kullūka's view, who assumes that the four words refer to the impossibility of attaining a knowledge of the prakṛti by the three means mentioned below, XII, 105, and 'by reasoning' (tarka). He paraphrases apragñāta, 'unperceived,' by 'imperceptible by the senses;' alakṣhaṇa, 'destitute of marks,' by 'uninferrible;' avigñeya, 'unknowable,' by 'undefinable by words or authoritative statement.'

6. The above translation follows Gov., Nār., and Kull. The other three commentators take mahābhūtādīvrītaugāḥ as a relative compound. On this supposition the translation would run as follows: 'Then the divine Self-existent, (himself) undiscernible, (but) making this (universe) discernible, appeared,—he whose (creative) power works in the great elements and the rest, and who dispels the darkness.'

'Then,' i. e. at the end of the period of destruction. Avyaktaḥ, '(himself) undiscernible,' i. e. 'not to be known except by Yogins' (Medh.), or 'not perceptible by the external senses' (Gov., Kull., Nār.), or 'not to be known except through the texts of the Upanishads' (Rāgh.), or 'difficult to know' (Nand.). Medh. would prefer to read avyaktam, 'this indiscernible (universe).' 'The great elements and the rest,' i. e. 'the other principles, the great one and so forth'

7. He who can be perceived by the internal organ (alone), who is subtle, indiscernible, and eternal, who contains all created beings and is inconceivable, shone forth of his own (will).

(Medh., Gov., Nâr., Kull., Nand.), or 'egoism' (Râgh.). 'Appeared,' i.e. 'assumed a body of his own free will, not in consequence of his karman, his acts in a former existence' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nand.), or 'became discernible' (vyakta), (Nâr.), or 'became ready to create' (kâryonmukha), (Râgh.). Gov. explains vṛitauḡâḥ, 'with irresistible power,' by 'who obtained power' (prâptam balam yena). Kull. explains tamonudaḥ, 'dispelling the darkness (i. e. of destruction),' by 'giving an impulse to the root-evolvent,' and Râgh. takes it in a similar way.

The commentators whose opinion Medh. adduces under verse 11, explained this verse also as a description of the self-evolution which the prakṛiti performs according to the Sâmkhyas. They took svayambhûḥ, 'the self-existent,' in the sense of 'which modifies itself of its own accord;' bhagavân, 'divine,' in the sense of 'which is powerful enough to perform its business' (svavyâpâra īśvaraḥ). The other words presented, of course, no great difficulties.

7. 'By the two pronouns yo 'sau, "he who," he indicates the supreme soul, known in the whole world, in the Vedas, Purâṇas, Itihâsas, and so forth' (Kull. in accordance with Medh.). The latter proposes, besides the explanation of atîndriyagrâhyaḥ, 'who can be perceived by the internal organ (or the mind alone),' which Gov., Kull., and Nand. adopt, another one, 'who, being beyond the cognisance of the senses, can be perceived by Yoga-knowledge alone.' Nâr. and Râgh., too, differ from the interpretation given above. 'Subtile,' i.e. 'who is beyond all distinctions, such as small and great' (Medh.), or 'who is unperceivable by the external senses' (Kull.), or 'who is perceivable by subtile understanding only' (Gov.), or 'who is without limbs or parts' (Râgh.). Nand. points to the common epithet of the supreme soul, 'smaller than small' (Kâṭh. Up. II, 20; Bhagavadgîtâ VIII, 9). Avyaktaḥ, 'indiscernible,' is taken by Kull. to mean 'destitute of limbs or parts.' Sarvabhûta-mayaḥ, 'who contains all created beings,' means, according to Medh., either 'that he conceives the idea of creating all beings,' or 'that, in accordance with the Advaita Vedânta, all beings are illusory modifications of him.' The latter view seems to be the one adopted by all the other commentators. 'Shone forth,' i.e. either 'assumed

8. He, desiring to produce beings of many kinds from his own body, first with a thought created the waters, and placed his seed in them.

9. That (seed) became a golden egg, in brilliancy equal to the sun ; in that (egg) he himself was born as Brahman, the progenitor of the whole world.

10. The waters are called nârâh, (for) the waters are, indeed, the offspring of Nara ; as they were his first residence (ayana), he thence is named Nârâyana.

a visible body' or 'was self-luminous' (Medh.), 'assumed a body' (Gov.), 'appeared in the form of the evolutes, the great one, and so forth' (Kull.), 'became discernible' (Nand.).

8. Besides the passages quoted under verse 5, compare also the Paurânîk story of the mundane egg, Wilson, Vishnu-purâna I, pp. 39-40 (ed. Hall). 'He' is according to Medh. and Râgh. 'Hira-nyagarbha,' according to the other commentators, 'the supreme soul.' Medh. refers to Rig-veda X, 121, 1. According to Medh. (verse 11) those who understood the whole passage to refer to the unintelligent prakṛti, explained abhidhyâya, 'with a thought,' to mean 'independently of all external action, just as a man performs an act merely by a thought.' They also asserted that the waters were produced as the first element only, but not before the great one and the other principles. Kull., on the other hand, sees in the expressions, used in this verse, the proof that Manu was an adherent of the non-dualistic Vedânta.

9. Medh., Kull., and Râghava take the epithet 'golden' figuratively, and consider it to be intended to convey the idea of purity or, as Râgh. also proposes, of brilliancy. Instead of 'he himself was born as Brahman (masc.),' the translation may also be 'Brahmâ himself was born.' Medh. gives both explanations. The other commentators adopt that given in the text. The being produced is, according to all except Râgh., Hiraṇyagarbha. Râgh., as a strict Vedântin, thinks that it is Virâh. All the commentators point out that pitāmaha, 'the progenitor,' lit. the grandfather, is a common name of Brahman (masc.).

10. This punning explanation of Brahman's name Nârâyana occurs in most of the Purâṇas, see Wilson, Vishnu-purâna I, p. 56 (ed. Hall). Both Medh. and Gov. seem to have read âpo narâh, 11. From that (first) cause, which is indiscernible, eternal, and both real and unreal, was produced that male (Purusha), who is famed in this world (under the appellation of) Brahman.

12. The divine one resided in that egg during a whole year, then he himself by his thought (alone) divided it into two halves;

13. And out of those two halves he formed heaven and earth, between them the middle sphere, the eight points of the horizon, and the eternal abode of the waters.

14. From himself (âtmanaḥ) he also drew forth the mind, which is both real and unreal, likewise from the mind egoism, which possesses the function of self-consciousness (and is) lordly;

15. Moreover, the great one, the soul, and all

‘the waters are called narâḥ.’ Nara is another name of the supreme soul.

11. All our commentators except Râgh., whose explanation is wide off the mark, understand by the ‘(First) cause’ the supreme soul. Sadasadâtmake, ‘who is both real and unreal,’ means according to Medh., Gov., and Kull. ‘who is existent or real, because he can be known through the Veda and Vedânta, but non-existent or unreal, as it were, because he cannot be perceived by the senses.’ Nand.’s explanation, ‘who is both the real, the efficient cause and the unreal the products, matter and the rest,’ seems, however, preferable. He says, sad iti kâranam asad iti prakṛityâdi kâryam. Regarding the ancient Vedic term Purusha, ‘the male’ or ‘spirit,’ see Muir, Sanskrit Texts, V, pp. 367–377.

12. Kull. explains the term ‘a year’ by ‘a year of Brahman.’ But Medh. and Gov., who say that a human year is meant, are in accordance with Satapatha-brâhmana XI, 1, 6, 2.

13. The number ‘eight’ is obtained by adding to the four cardinal points, ‘the intermediate ones,’ north-east, south-east, &c.

14–15. The commentators offer two entirely different explanations of these two difficult verses. According to Medh., Gov., Kull., and Râgh. they describe the production of the Tattvas, the (products) affected by the three qualities, and, in their order, the five organs which perceive the objects of sensation.

principles of the Sâmkhya system, the first three of which, Mahat, Ahankâra, and Manas, have been placed in an inverted order. Though Manu clearly states (verse 14) that the creator drew the Manas (which they take to mean the internal organ) from the âtman (i. e. according to Medh. and Gov. 'from the Pradhâna,' which is his own shape [tatpradhânâd âtmanaḥ svasvarûpât, Medh.], or according to Gov., Kull., and Râgh. 'from the Paramâtmân,' the supreme soul, or according to another explanation of Râgh. 'from himself' [svasmât | gîvasyâ bhogârtham vâ]), that he drew the Ahankâra, egoism, from the Manas, and that he afterwards created the mahântam âtmânâman, 'the great one, the soul;' (i. e. according to Medh. the Mahat which is called the soul because like the soul it is found in all bodies, or according to Kull. the Mahat which is called the soul because it is produced from the soul or is useful to the soul), yet they think that it must be understood that the Mahat was produced first, from it the Ahankâra, and from the latter the Manas. The next term sarvâṇi triguṇâṇi, 'all the products modified by the three qualities,' they refer to all products or evolutes named and to be named hereafter. They are thus obliged to disregard the ka, 'and,' at the end of verse 15 a, and Râgh. states distinctly that ka indicates there a stress to be laid on the preceding word (kakâro 'vadhâraṇârthaḥ'). Finally, Gov., Kull., and Râgh. are of opinion that the third ka, 'and,' at the end of verse 15 b indicates that the organs of action and the subtle elements have to be added in accordance with the doctrine of the Sâmkhya, while Medh. holds that the subtle elements alone have to be understood.

Nand. and, to judge from the fragments of his commentary, Nâr. also give a far different explanation. According to them the first created Manas is another name for the principle usually called Mahat. In proof of this assertion Nand. adduces a passage from a Purâṇa, which Medh. quotes on verse 74, where Manas is given as a synonym of Mahat (see also Cowell, Sarvadarsana-saṃgraha, p. 222, note 1). They farther take mahântam âtmânâman, 'the great one, the soul,' to denote the Manas or internal organ ([mahântam] ka mano nâma tattvam âtmânâman âtmano gîvasyâ-vakṣedakatvâd vyapadesaḥ, Râgh.). By the expression sarvâṇi triguṇâṇi Nand. seems to understand the subtle elements (tanmâtra), 16. But, joining minute particles even of those six, which possess measureless power, with particles of himself, he created all beings.

and he too believes that the particle ka at the end of verse 15 b shows that the organs of action have to be understood. The object of the two verses is, according to Nand., not to give an account of the actual order of creation, but to show that the material cause of all created beings consists of portions of the creator's body, of the Mahat, Ahaṁkāra, the Manas, the Tanmātras, and the organs of sensation and action which belong to him; (anena slokadva-yenaitad uktam bhavati | ātmīyānām mahadahāṁkāramanastan-mātragñānakarmendriyānām amsāḥ sarvabhūtopādānam iti ||) It would seem that Nand. and Nār.'s view, as regards the explanation of Manas (verse 14), is correct, but it may be doubted whether, with respect to the terms in verse 15, mahān ātmā and sarvāṇi trigunāni, they have been equally lucky. The explanation of the first four commentators seems altogether inadmissible. In conclusion, it may be stated that Nand. gives also the most acceptable explanation of the epithet of the Manas, sadasadātmakam, which, he says, means 'partaking of the nature of an evolvent and of an evolute' (prakṛtīvikṛtyātmakam), and of īśvaram, 'lordly,' 'which causes all actions to be done' (sarva-karmapravartakam).

16. The translation follows Nand., Rāgh., and Vigñānabhikṣhu (Sāṁkhyasāra, p. 19, ed. Hall), who agree that the verse derives the subtle or rudimentary bodies of individual beings from the subtle body of the creator, and the individual souls from his soul. They explain ātmamātrāsu by aparikkṣinnasyaikaśyātmana upādhiḥ avayavatpratīyamāneṣu ātmasu (Rāgh.), svagīvāmeṣu (Nand.), and svāmsakētanēṣu (Vigñ.). But they differ with respect to the meaning of 'the particles of those six.' 'Those six' are, according to Rāgh. and Vigñ., 'the six senses,' i.e. the five organs of sensation and the mind (which by implication indicate the whole subtle body, Vigñ.); according to Nand., the six classes of tattvas, which he believes to be mentioned in the preceding two verses, viz. (1) the great one, (2) egoism, (3) mind, (4) the subtle or rudimentary elements, (5, 6) the organs of sensation and action.

Medh., Gov., and Kull., on the other hand, take the verse as follows: 'Joining minute particles of those six (i.e. of egoism and of the five subtle elements) which possess immeasurable power to particles of the same (i.e. of evolutes from the same six [Gov., Kull.], i.e. of the gross elements produced from the Tanmātras and the organs produced from egoism [Medh.]), he framed all beings.' It would seem that Nand.'s explanation comes nearest to the truth, though, as stated above, his manner of showing that six principles or classes of principles are mentioned in the preceding verses is not altogether satisfactory. But, at all events, he has seen that the expression 'those six' must refer to the enumeration in the preceding two verses.

17. Because those six (kinds of) minute particles, which form the (creator's) frame, enter (â-sri) these (creatures), therefore the wise call his frame sarîra, (the body.)

17. The translation again follows Nand., with whom Nâr. seems to have agreed. He says, 'Because six (kinds of) particles of his frame, i.e. the six before-mentioned portions of the body of Brahman, the Mahat, and the rest, enter, i.e. pervade these—all the creatures mentioned in the preceding verse are referred to—on account of that entering (srayanât), they call the body of that, i.e. of Brahman, sarîra. The meaning is as follows: The body of Hiranyagarbha is called sarîra, because it enters (srayati) all beings by means of its portions, being (their) material cause; but it is not destroyed (siryate) like a common body.' Nand. thinks, therefore, that the punning explanation of the word sarîra from śad'âsri, or sri, is given in order to show that the other etymology, which derives it from śrî, 'to destroy,' is not applicable to the body of Brahman.

Medh., Gov., and Kull. take the verse very differently. They agree in supposing that the body is called sarîra, because the six elements mentioned enter into or produce the gross elements and the organs. Medh. reads tânîmani for tasyemâni, and according to his interpretation the translation would be, 'Because the six (kinds of) minute particles producing the body enter into (being their cause) or produce these (i.e. because egoism, the before-mentioned organs and the subtle elements enter the gross elements which will be mentioned hereafter), therefore the wise call the body, which is the visible shape of that (Pradhâna), sarîra.' Kull., who reads tasya, differs from this version only therein that he refers tasya to Brahman. Râgh. finally gives, in accordance with his explanation of 'those six,' the following version, 'Because the six (kinds of) fine particles constituting the subtle frame of that (Hiranyagarbha, i.e. the mind and the rest) enter these (gross bodies as their place of enjoyment), therefore the wise call the visible frame of that (i.e. of the individual soul) the sarîra.' He agrees, therefore, with Medh., Gov., and Kull. so far that he, too, refers the verse to the gross bodies.

18. That the great elements enter, together with their functions and the mind, through its minute parts the framer of all beings, the imperishable one.

18. The commentators give five different versions of this verse : (1) Medh., 'That (i.e. the Pradhâna is) the producer of all beings and imperishable, because these, (viz.) the gross elements with their functions (and before them) the mind with its minute particles (i.e. the subtle elements, intelligence, egoism, and the organs), enter it.' (2) Gov. and Kull., 'From that (i.e. the Brahman, which has the form of the subtle elements and of egoism) are produced the gross elements, together with their functions and the mind, which is the producer of all beings through its minute (i.e. imperceptible) portions (i.e. its products, good and bad thoughts, pleasure and pain, and so forth, the world being produced by the good and evil actions originating in the mind) and imperishable.' (3) Râgh., 'That (i.e. the gross body) the gross elements enter (as producers [or produce]) and the mind, which is the producer of all beings and imperishable, together with the actions (i.e. merit and so forth) and with the (organs which are chiefly) limbs.' (4) Nand., '(As) that (body of Hiranyagarbha), though through its small portions it produces all beings, yet is imperishable, (even thus) the great beings (egoism, mind, the trigunâs, the organs of sensation and action) and the mind (i.e. the principle, called the great one), with the actions (i.e. the individual souls) enter it.' (5) Nâr.'s explanation is mutilated, but seems to have been as follows, 'That (i.e. the subtle body) the gross elements (which produce the gross body) enter, together with the karman (i.e. merit and demerit) and the mind, (which is) the producer of all beings and imperishable, together with (its functions, knowledge, desire, hatred, &c., which are, as it were, its) minute portions.'

It seems to me that not one of the above explanations can be accepted in its entirety. I agree with Nâr. in thinking that the word 'that' refers to the subtle body and that the verse describes the origin of the gross body as the result of the union of the great, i.e. the gross elements and of the manas with the subtle body. If the mahânti bhûtâni are the gross elements, it will, however, be necessary to understand by karmabhiḥ, 'their functions,' which, as Medh. and Kull. mention, are 'the function of supporting for the earth, of ripening or cooking for fire and so forth.' By manas I understand here the internal organ which forms the connecting link between the gross senses or the gross body and the individual soul, and thus may be said to frame or fashion all beings. As its nature is atomic, it is necessary to connect avayavaîḥ sūkshmaîḥ with sarvabhūtaḥ and to take avayava either in the manner proposed by Kull., or to assume that the several mind-atoms are referred to, which belong each to a different individual.

19. But from minute body(-framing) particles of these seven very powerful Purushas springs this (world), the perishable from the imperishable.

20. Among them each succeeding (element) acquires the quality of the preceding one, and whatever place (in the sequence) each of them occupies, even so many qualities it is declared to possess.

19. With respect to the explanation of the expression 'the seven Purushas,' the commentators differ as much as regarding 'the six' in ver. 16. Medh., Gov., and Kull. add 'the great one' or the Mahat to their previous enumeration, 'egoism and the five subtle elements,' while Nâr. and Nand. add the 'portions of the Âtman' (ver. 16) to those elements which they understand to be comprised by 'the six.' That is, probably, the meaning of Râgh. also, who says, purushânâm manaâdipurushântânâm saptânâm, 'of the Purushas, i. e. of those seven, the first of which is the mind, and the last of which is the Purusha.' All the commentators agree that the term Purusha, 'male or spirit,' is applied to the principles in a metaphorical sense, but they give various reasons for the fact, 'because they are for the sake of the soul,' purusha (Medh.), or 'because they were produced by the Purusha, the Âtman' (Kull.). Nâr. understands 'and' with avyayât and says, 'and from the imperishable, i. e. from Prakṛti.' 'The perishable' designates, of course, 'the gross bodies.'

20. This verse expresses the doctrine that the first element ether (âkâra) possesses one quality, sound, alone; the next, wind two, sound and tangibility; the third, fire or light, three and so forth; see also Sâmkhyasâra, p. 18. Nand. places ver. 27 before this verse, and asserts that 'if some read the latter seven verses further on, that is only due to an error of the copyists.' Though vers. 20 and 27 are without any connexion with what precedes and follows, I do not think it advisable to adopt Nand.'s proposal, which I fear is based on nothing but a clever guess, against the authority of all the other commentators. If it were permissible to transpose the

21. But in the beginning he assigned their several names, actions, and conditions to all (created beings), even according to the words of the Veda.

22. He, the Lord, also created the class of the gods, who are endowed with life, and whose nature is action; and the subtile class of the Sâdhya, and the eternal sacrifice.

23. But from fire, wind, and the sun he drew forth the threefold eternal Veda, called Rik, Yagus, and Sâman, for the due performance of the sacrifice.

24. Time and the divisions of time, the lunar mansions and the planets, the rivers, the oceans, the mountains, plains, and uneven ground,

25. Austerity, speech, pleasure, desire, and anger, this whole creation he likewise produced, as he desired to call these beings into existence.

verses, I would propose to insert here ver. 27 and to place this verse (20) after ver. 78.

22. The commentators differ very much regarding the explanation of this verse. Medh. proposes, 'And the Lord created (for the sake) of men who are intent on performing sacrificial rites (the multitude) of the gods, the subtile class of the Sâdhya and the eternal sacrifice.' 'Others' mentioned by him, Gov. and Kull., insert another 'and' between karmâtmanâm and prâñinâm, and explain, 'The Lord created the multitude of the gods whose nature is the sacrifice and of those endowed with life.' By the 'gods whose nature is the sacrifice' they understand the inanimate implements, used at sacrifices, but frequently addressed in the Veda as divine beings, while the gods endowed with life are said to be Indra, and so forth. Râgh., with whom Nâr. seems to have agreed, says, 'And the Lord created among beings endowed with life the to us invisible multitude of the gods, who by the results of their actions have obtained their divine station, or who subsist on offerings.' None of these speculations is of much use. But it may be that karman means 'sacrificial rites,' and karmâtmanâm may be translated by 'whose nature is the sacrifice,' or 'whose divinity depends on the performance of sacrifices.' Regarding the Sâdhya, see Wilson, Vishnu-purâna II, p. 22 (ed. Hall).

26. Moreover, in order to distinguish actions, he separated merit from demerit, and he caused the creatures to be affected by the pairs (of opposites), such as pain and pleasure.

27. But with the minute perishable particles of the five (elements) which have been mentioned, this whole (world) is framed in due order.

28. But to whatever course of action the Lord at first appointed each (kind of beings), that alone it has spontaneously adopted in each succeeding creation.

29. Whatever he assigned to each at the (first) creation, noxiousness or harmlessness, gentleness or ferocity, virtue or sin, truth or falsehood, that clung (afterwards) spontaneously to it.

30. As at the change of the seasons each season of its own accord assumes its distinctive marks, even so corporeal beings (resume in new births) their (appointed) course of action.

31. But for the sake of the prosperity of the

26. Other pairs of opposites are desire and anger, passionate attachment and hatred, hunger and thirst, sorrow and delusion, and so forth (Kull.).

27. 'The minute perishable particles of the five (elements)' are according to Medh., Gov., and Kull. the subtle or rudimentary elements which may be called 'perishable,' because they are changed to gross elements. Râgh. explains the epithet 'perishable' by adding 'because they have been produced.' The commentators offer various explanations in order to account for the insertion of this verse which interrupts the continuity of the text. Medh. thinks that it is a résumé. Gov. and Kull. state that it is meant to remove the doubt, whether Brahman's mental creation was effected without the help of the 'principles,' and Nâr. asserts that it is meant to teach that atoms are not eternal. Nand., as stated above, note on ver. 20, places the verse immediately after ver. 19.

31. Nâr. explains lokavivṛiddhyartham, 'for the sake of the worlds, he caused the Brāhmaṇa, the Kshatriya, the Vaisya, and the Sūdra to proceed from his mouth, his arms, his thighs, and his feet.

32. Dividing his own body, the Lord became half male and half female; with that (female) he produced Virāḡ.

33. But know me, O most holy among the twice-born, to be the creator of this whole (world), whom that male, Virāḡ, himself produced, having performed austerities.

34. Then I, desiring to produce created beings, performed very difficult austerities, and (thereby) called into existence ten great sages, lords of created beings,

35. Marīci, Atri, Aṅgiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Prakētas, Vasishṭha, Bhrīgu, and Nārada.

36. They created seven other Manus possessing great brilliancy, gods and classes of gods and great sages of measureless power, prosperity of the worlds,' by varṇair lokarakṣaṇasamvardhanārtham, 'in order to protect the world by means of the castes and to make it prosperous.' Medh., Gov., and Kull., who interpret the compound by 'in order that (the inhabitants of) the worlds might multiply,' point to the benefits conferred by sacrifices of householders, III, 76. Nand. says with reference to the bearing of the verse, 'Now he speaks of the creation of the deities representing the four castes.' Regarding the origin of the castes, see Rig-veda X, 90, 12.

32-33. 'Produced,' i. e. 'begat' (Medh., Kull.), Wilson, Vishṇu-purāṇa I, p. 104, note 2 (ed. Hall).

34-35. Wilson, Vishṇu-purāṇa I, p. 100, note 2 (ed. Hall).

36. 'Manus,' i. e. 'creators in the several Manvantaras' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Rāgh.). 'Gods,' i. e. 'such gods as had not been created by Brahman' (verse 22, Medh., Kull.); devanikāyān, 'classes of gods' (Nand., Nār.), means according to Medh., Kull., and Rāgh. 'the abodes of the gods' (devasthānāni). Rāgh. gives also the meaning 'the servants of the gods.'

37. Yakshas (the servants of Kubera, the demons called) Rākshasas and Pisākas, Gandharvas (or musicians of the gods), Apsarases (the dancers of the gods), Asuras, (the snake-deities called) Nāgas and Sarpas, (the bird-deities called) Suparnas and the several classes of the manes,

38. Lightnings, thunderbolts and clouds, imperfect (rohita) and perfect rainbows, falling meteors, supernatural noises, comets, and heavenly lights of many kinds,

39. (Horse-faced) Kinnaras, monkeys, fishes, birds of many kinds, cattle, deer, men, and carnivorous beasts with two rows of teeth,

40. Small and large worms and beetles, moths, lice, flies, bugs, all stinging and biting insects and the several kinds of immovable things.

41. Thus was this whole (creation), both the immovable and the movable, produced by those high-minded ones by means of austerities and at my command, (each being) according to (the results of) its actions.

42. But whatever act is stated (to belong) to (each of) those creatures here below, that I will truly declare to you, as well as their order in respect to birth.

43. Cattle, deer, carnivorous beasts with two rows of teeth, Rākshasas, Pisākas, and men are born from the womb.

44. From eggs are born birds, snakes, crocodiles,

37. The several classes of manes are enumerated below, III, 194-199.

38. Rohita is said to be an imperfect rainbow which appears to be straight, known according to Gov. by the name sastrotpāta.

fishes, tortoises, as well as similar terrestrial and aquatic (animals).

45. From hot moisture spring stinging and biting insects, lice, flies, bugs, and all other (creatures) of that kind which are produced by heat.

46. All plants, propagated by seed or by slips, grow from shoots; annual plants (are those) which, bearing many flowers and fruits, perish after the ripening of their fruit;

47. (Those trees) which bear fruit without flowers are called vanaspati (lords of the forest); but those which bear both flowers and fruit are called vṛksha.

48. But the various plants with many stalks, growing from one or several roots, the different kinds of grasses, the climbing plants and the creepers spring all from seed or from slips.

49. These (plants) which are surrounded by multi-form Darkness, the result of their acts (in former existences), possess internal consciousness and experience pleasure and pain.

50. The (various) conditions in this always terrible and constantly changing circle of births and deaths to which created beings are subject, are stated to

46. I read, with Medh., Gov., Nand., and Kull, taravaḥ instead of the sthāvarāḥ of the editions, and translate it, as required by the context, by 'plants.'

47. My translation of ubhayataḥ, 'both,' is based on Gov.'s comment 'vṛkshāḥ punaḥ pushpaphalenobhayaṇāpi yuktā bhavanti,' with which Nār. and Nand. agree. The latter, however, proposes to read 'ubhayathā.'

49. 'Multiform Darkness,' see below, XII, 42.

50. Bhūta, 'created beings,' means according to Gov. and Kull. kshetragṇā, 'embodied souls.' According to Gov. and Nār. nityam, 'always,' must be construed with ghore, 'terrible.' Nār., however, considers nitye, 'in this eternal,' to be a better reading, which Nand. also gives.

begin with (that of) Brahman, and to end with (that of) these (just mentioned immovable creatures).

51. When he whose power is incomprehensible, had thus produced the universe and me, he disappeared in himself, repeatedly suppressing one period by means of the other.

52. When that divine one wakes, then this world stirs ; when he slumbers tranquilly, then the universe sinks to sleep.

53. But when he reposes in calm sleep, the corporeal beings whose nature is action, desist from their actions and mind becomes inert.

54. When they are absorbed all at once in that great soul, then he who is the soul of all beings sweetly slumbers, free from all care and occupation.

55. When this (soul) has entered darkness, it remains for a long time united with the organs (of

51. 'Disappeared in himself,' i.e. 'he divested himself of the body which he had assumed at his own will' (Medh., Gov., Kull.). 'One period by means of the other,' i.e. 'the period of creation by means of the period of destruction' (Medh., Gov., Kull.).

52. Instead of the figurative nimilati, 'closes the eyes, sinks to sleep,' Gov. and K., read praliyate, 'is absorbed.'

53. Sarīrinah, 'corporeal beings,' means according to Medh., Gov., and Kull. 'embodied souls.' Karmâtmânaḥ, 'whose nature is action,' i.e. who are endowed with actions (Nand., Nâr.), means according to Medh., Gov., and Kull. 'who in consequence of their actions became incorporate.'

54. According to Gov. and Kull., this verse describes the mahâ-pralaya, the great or total destruction at the end of a kalpa, while the preceding referred to the antarâlapralaya, the intermediate or incomplete destruction. Medh. explains 'he who is the soul of all beings' by the Sâmkhya term Pradhâna, 'the chief cause or Nature,' while Gov. and Kull. refer this expression as well as mahâtman 'to the supreme soul or supreme lord' of the Vedânta.

55-56. The commentators offer three different explanations of these two verses. Medh., Gov., and Kull., whom the translation sensation), but performs not its functions; it then leaves the corporeal frame.

56. When, being clothed with minute particles (only), it enters into vegetable or animal seed, it then assumes, united (with the fine body), a (new) corporeal frame.

57. Thus he, the imperishable one, by (alternately) waking and slumbering, incessantly revivifies and destroys this whole movable and immovable (creation).

given above follows, think that ayam, 'this (soul),' refers to the individual soul, and that the two verses incidentally mention what happens to it on the death of the individual in which it resides. First, they say, it enters darkness, i.e. knowledge (gñāna) ceases, and, though for some time the soul's connection with the organs continues, it does not perform its functions of breathing, and so forth. Next it leaves the old body. It then is enveloped by the elementary body, consisting of the puryash/aka, the eight constituents, i.e. the rudimentary elements (bhûta) and organs (indriya), mind (manas), intelligence (buddhi), memory of past actions (vâsanâ), merit or demerit (karman), the vital airs (vâyu), and avidyâ. In this condition it enters the seed of some plant or the embryo of some animal and then assumes a new gross body. Nâr., on the other hand, considers that the first verse gives a description of the fate of the individual soul during a swoon (mûrkhâ), and the second alone refers to its migration after death. Under this supposition verse 56 must be translated as follows: 'Being of atomic size (the soul) enters vegetable or animal seed and, united (with the rudimental body), leaves its (former) corporeal frame.' Nand. finally understands by ayam, 'this (soul),' the creator (bhagavân), and thinks that the first verse describes his behaviour during the time of destruction, while the second refers to a new creation. He says, 'When he has entered darkness,' i.e. the root-evolvent or nature, 'and has remained there for a long time,' i.e. as long as the period of destruction lasts, 'then, endowed with organs, he assumes a visible shape,' i.e. he appears in the shape of the creation. His note on verse 56, where he reads samsrîsh/au for samsrîsh/ah, is too short to make it intelligible how he gets over the difficulties opposed to his interpretation.

58. But he having composed these Institutes (of the sacred law), himself taught them, according to the rule, to me alone in the beginning; next I (taught them) to Marîki and the other sages.

59. Bhrigu, here, will fully recite to you these Institutes; for that sage learned the whole in its entirety from me.

60. Then that great sage Bhrigu, being thus addressed by Manu, spoke, pleased in his heart, to all the sages, 'Listen!'

61. Six other high-minded, very powerful Manus, who belong to the race of this Manu, the descendant of the Self-existent (Svayambhû), and who have severally produced created beings,

62. (Are) Svâroḥisha, Auttami, Tâmasa, Raivata, Kâkshusha, possessing great lustre, and the son of Vivasvat.

63. These seven very glorious Manus, the first among whom is Svâyambhuva, produced and protected this whole movable and immovable (creation), each during the period (allotted to him).

64. Eighteen nimeshas (twinklings of the eye, are one kâshthâ), thirty kâshthâs one kalâ, thirty kalâs one muhûrta, and as many (muhûrtas) one day and night.

58. 'According to the rule,' i.e. 'with the subsidiary ceremonies enjoined in the Sâstra' (Kull.), or 'with due attention, carefully' (Medh., Gov.).

61. 'Who belong to the race of this Manu Svâyambhuva,' i.e. 'who were born in the same race or family, for they were all immediately created by Brahman and thus belong to one race' (Medh.).

64. As tâvataḥ, 'as many,' stands in the accusative, Medh., Gov., and Kull. understand vidyât 'one should know to be.' But Nâr. is probably right in assuming a vibhaktivatyaya, i.e. that the author used the accusative because the nominative did not suit the metre.

65. The sun divides days and nights, both human and divine, the night (being intended) for the repose of created beings and the day for exertion.

66. A month is a day and a night of the manes, but the division is according to fortnights. The dark (fortnight) is their day for active exertion, the bright (fortnight) their night for sleep.

67. A year is a day and a night of the gods; their division is (as follows): the half year during which the sun progresses to the north will be the day, that during which it goes southwards the night.

68. But hear now the brief (description of) the duration of a night and a day of Brahman and of the several ages (of the world, yuga) according to their order.

69. They declare that the Kṛita age (consists of) four thousand years (of the gods); the twilight preceding it consists of as many hundreds, and the twilight following it of the same number.

70. In the other three ages with their twilights preceding and following, the thousands and hundreds are diminished by one (in each).

71. These twelve thousand (years) which thus have been just mentioned as the total of four (human) ages, are called one age of the gods.

72. But know that the sum of one thousand ages of the gods (makes) one day of Brahman, and that his night has the same length.

73. Those (only, who) know that the holy day of Nand., who merely substitutes 'tāvantaḥ' for 'tavataḥ,' seems to have held the same opinion.

66. Thus the moon regulates time for the manes.

69-71. Wilson, Vishṇu-purāṇa I, pp. 49-50 (ed. Hall).

73. According to the commentators the word punya, 'holy,' is Brahman, indeed, ends after (the completion of) one thousand ages (of the gods) and that his night lasts as long, (are really) men acquainted with (the length of) days and nights.

74. At the end of that day and night he who was asleep, awakes and, after awaking, creates mind, which is both real and unreal.

75. Mind, impelled by (Brahman's) desire to create, performs the work of creation by modifying itself, thence ether is produced; they declare that sound is the quality of the latter.

76. But from ether, modifying itself, springs the pure, powerful wind, the vehicle of all perfumes; that is held to possess the quality of touch.

77. Next from wind, modifying itself, proceeds the brilliant light, which illuminates and dispels used in order to indicate that the knowledge of the duration of Brahman's day is 'meritorious.'

74. Two explanations of the second half of the verse are offered by the commentators. It may mean either that Brahman on awaking from his sleep first creates the great principle (mahat), which here, as elsewhere, is called manas, 'mind,' or that he appoints (sṛigati) his own internal organ or mind (manas), which at an intermediate destruction (avântara or antarâlapralaya) remains in existence, to create the world. Medh. and Kull. give both explanations, and prefer the former. Gov. gives the second alone, while Nâr. and Nand. adhere to the first. The latter takes manas as denoting the three principles, the great one, egoism, and mind, and explains sadasadâtmakam, 'which is both real and unreal,' as in verse 14, by prakṛtīvīkṛtīyâtmakam, 'being both an evolvent and an evolute.'

75. 'Thence,' i.e. 'from mind changed to egoism,' Nâr. (similarly Kull.), or 'from Brahman.'

76. As the Sâmkhya doctrine (Sâmkhyakârikâ, ver. 25) makes all the rudimentary elements proceed from egoism, Medh. takes the first words of the verse to mean, 'But from egoism which modifies itself, wind springs next after ether.' He, of course, adopts the same trick of interpretation in the following three verses.

darkness; that is declared to possess the quality of colour;

78. And from light, modifying itself, (is produced) water, possessing the quality of taste, from water earth which has the quality of smell; such is the creation in the beginning.

79. The before-mentioned age of the gods, (or) twelve thousand (of their years), being multiplied by seventy-one, (constitutes what) is here named the period of a Manu (Manvantara).

80. The Manvantaras, the creations and destructions (of the world, are) numberless; sporting, as it were, Brahman repeats this again and again.

81. In the Kṛita age Dharma is four-footed and entire, and (so is) Truth; nor does any gain accrue to men by unrighteousness.

82. In the other (three ages), by reason of (unjust) gains (âgama), Dharma is deprived successively of

78. 'In the beginning,' i.e. 'after a total destruction' (mahâ-pralaya), (Kull.); 'after an intermediate destruction' (Gov., Nâr.); 'before the creation of the mundane egg' (Nand.).

81. The reason why Dharma, 'justice or law,' is said to be Ātushpât is explained, as Kull. points out, by Manu VIII, 16. Regarding the ulterior signification of the myth which represents Dharma as a four-footed animal, the following opinions are advanced: 1. The four feet represent the four principal priests at the sacrifice (Medh.); 2. or the four chief castes (Medh., Nand.); 3. or the four chief means of gaining merit, austerities, knowledge, sacrifices, and liberality, see below, verse 86 (Medh., Kull., Nâr., K.); 4. or finally the four kinds of speech, mentioned Rig-veda I, 164, 45 (Medh.). All the commentators agree in stating that Truth, though comprised in the Dharma, is mentioned specially in order to show its paramount importance. Nand. reads the last words nâdharma nâgama kaskin, &c., and explains, 'Neither any demerit nor any sacred lore, Sâstra, approached men, i. e. no Institutes of the law were necessary.'

82. Medh. explains the first half-verse differently, 'In the other three ages, Dharma, the sacred law, (which is derived) from the one foot, and through (the prevalence of) theft, falsehood, and fraud the merit (gained by men) is diminished by one fourth (in each).

83. (Men are) free from disease, accomplish all their aims, and live four hundred years in the Kṛita age, but in the Tretâ and (in each of) the succeeding (ages) their life is lessened by one quarter.

84. The life of mortals, mentioned in the Veda, the desired results of sacrificial rites and the (super-natural) power of embodied (spirits) are fruits proportioned among men according to (the character of) the age.

85. One set of duties (is prescribed) for men in the Kṛita age, different ones in the Tretâ and in the sacred lore (âgama), i.e. the Veda, is made to withdraw one foot after the other, one foot in each age, i.e. disappears (gradually) because the power of men to learn and to remember the sacred texts diminishes.' Gov. says, 'But in the Tretâ and the other ages, Dharma, the sacred law, (derived) from the sacred lore (âgama), the Sâstra, i.e. the performance of sacrifices and so forth, is made to withdraw, i.e. is diminished successively by one quarter in each age, through (the prevalence of) theft, falsehood, and fraud.' Nand. finally differs still more, 'In the other three ages, i.e. the Tretâ and the rest, Dharma, (virtue or justice is determined) by means of the sacred lore (âgama),' the Sâstra, but this Dharma is lessened by one quarter in each; 'lessening the Dharma' is intended to convey the meaning of 'lessening the determination of the Dharma.' The translation follows Kull., Nâr., and Râgh.

83. In order to reconcile this statement regarding the age of men in the Kṛita age with various passages of the Mahâbhârata and the Purâṇas, which attribute to certain heroes and sages lives of many thousand years, the commentators explain our passage as meaning that four hundred years were the natural term of life, which, however, might be lengthened through the performance of austerities. They further assert that in the passage Kâṭhaka 34, 5, which names one hundred years as the term of human existence, the numeral is used in the sense of 'many.'

Dvâpara, and (again) another (set) in the Kali, in proportion as (those) ages decrease in length.

86. In the Kṛita age the chief (virtue) is declared to be (the performance of) austerities, in the Tretâ (divine) knowledge, in the Dvâpara (the performance of) sacrifices, in the Kali liberality alone.

87. But in order to protect this universe He, the most resplendent one, assigned separate (duties and) occupations to those who sprang from his mouth, arms, thighs, and feet.

88. To Brâhmaṇas he assigned teaching and studying (the Veda), sacrificing for their own benefit and for others, giving and accepting (of alms).

89. The Kshatriya he commanded to protect the people, to bestow gifts, to offer sacrifices, to study (the Veda), and to abstain from attaching himself to sensual pleasures ;

90. The Vaisya to tend cattle, to bestow gifts, to offer sacrifices, to study (the Veda), to trade, to lend money, and to cultivate land.

91. One occupation only the lord prescribed to the Sûdra, to serve meekly even these (other) three castes.

92. Man is stated to be purer above the navel (than below) ; hence the Self-existent (Svayambhû) has declared the purest (part) of him (to be) his mouth.

93. As the Brâhmaṇa sprang from (Brahman's)

87. See above, verse 31.

88-91. See below, X, 75-79, 99.

89. I read with Medh., Râgh., and K. saṃâdisat, 'he commanded,' for saṃâsataḥ, 'briefly.' Nand. reads akalpayat.

92. See below, V, 132.

93. Dharmataḥ prabhuḥ, 'by right the lord,' agrees with Nâr.'s and Nand.'s glosses. Medh., Gov., Kull., and Râgh. say, 'he is with mouth, as he was the first-born, and as he possesses the Veda, he is by right the lord of this whole creation.

94. For the Self-existent (Svayambhū), having performed austerities, produced him first from his own mouth, in order that the offerings might be conveyed to the gods and manes and that this universe might be preserved.

95. What created being can surpass him, through whose mouth the gods continually consume the sacrificial viands and the manes the offerings to the dead?

96. Of created beings the most excellent are said to be those which are animated; of the animated, those which subsist by intelligence; of the intelligent, mankind; and of men, the Brāhmanas;

97. Of Brāhmanas, those learned (in the Veda); of the learned, those who recognise (the necessity and the manner of performing the prescribed duties); of those who possess this knowledge, those who perform them; of the performers, those who know the Brahman.

98. The very birth of a Brāhmaṇa is an eternal incarnation of the sacred law; for he is born to (fulfil) the sacred law, and becomes one with Brahman.

respect to the law the lord, i.e. entitled to prescribe their duties to this whole creation.'

94. Tapas taptvā, 'having performed austerities,' is added, as Nand. says, in order to show 'particularly great consideration' (tapas taptvety ādarātisayaḥ). See above, verses 33, 34, 41.

97. Medh., Nār., and Nand. explain krītabuddhayaḥ, 'who recognise (the necessity and the manner of performing the prescribed duties),' by 'who know the meaning of the Veda.' 'Those who know the Brahman,' i.e. 'the sacred lore which leads to final emancipation.'

99. A Brâhmana, coming into existence, is born as the highest on earth, the lord of all created beings, for the protection of the treasury of the law.

100. Whatever exists in the world is the property of the Brâhmana; on account of the excellence of his origin the Brâhmana is, indeed, entitled to it all.

✓ 101. The Brâhmana eats but his own food, wears but his own apparel, bestows but his own in alms; other mortals subsist through the benevolence of the Brâhmana.

102. In order to clearly settle his duties and those of the other (castes) according to their order, wise Manu sprung from the Self-existent, composed these Institutes (of the sacred law).

✓ 103. A learned Brâhmana must carefully study them, and he must duly instruct his pupils in them, but nobody else (shall do it).

✓ 104. A Brâhmana who studies these Institutes (and) faithfully fulfils the duties (prescribed therein), is never tainted by sins, arising from thoughts, words, or deeds.

✓ 105. He sanctifies any company (which he may enter), seven ancestors and seven descendants, and he alone deserves (to possess) this whole earth.

106. (To study) this (work) is the best means of securing welfare, it increases understanding, it procures fame and long life, it (leads to) supreme bliss.

100. 'On account of the excellence of his origin,' i.e. because he sprang from Brahman's mouth.

103. The verse is not intended to exclude Kshatriyas and Vairyas from the right of studying the Manusamhitâ, but merely from teaching it.

104. Samsitavratâh, 'who faithfully fulfils the duties,' is based on Gov.'s full explanation etadarthâvabodhena samsitavrato visish/a-yamaniyamañ san, with which Medh. closely agrees.

107. In this (work) the sacred law has been fully stated as well as the good and bad qualities of (human) actions and the immemorial rule of conduct, (to be followed) by all the four castes (varna).

✓ 108. The rule of conduct is transcendent law, whether it be taught in the revealed texts or in the sacred tradition; hence a twice-born man who possesses regard for himself, should be always careful to (follow) it.

✓ 109. A Brāhmaṇa who departs from the rule of conduct, does not reap the fruit of the Veda, but he who duly follows it, will obtain the full reward.

110. The sages who saw that the sacred law is thus grounded on the rule of conduct, have taken good conduct to be the most excellent root of all austerity.

111. The creation of the universe, the rule of the sacraments, the ordinances of studentship, and the respectful behaviour (towards Gurus), the most excellent rule of bathing (on return from the teacher's house),

107. 'The good and bad qualities of (human) actions,' i.e. according to Medh., Gov., Kull., and Nand. 'the good and the bad results of actions,' or according to Rāgh. and Nār. 'the prescribed actions which are good and the forbidden ones which are bad.'

108. My translation of ātmavân, 'who possesses regard for himself,' follows Medh. and Kull. Gov. explains it by 'of excellent disposition,' Nār. by 'endowed with firmness,' and Rāgh. by 'who believes in a life after death.'

109. Vedaphalam, 'the fruit of the Veda,' i.e. 'the rewards for the acts prescribed by the Veda' (Medh., Gov., Kull., and Nār.).

110. Vas. VI, 1-8. 'The rule of conduct or good conduct' (âkâra), mentioned here and in the preceding verses, comprises the numerous usages prescribed partly in the Veda and partly in the Dharmaśāstras, such as anointing oneself with butter on the occasion of particular sacrifices or sipping water on certain occasions.

112. (The law of) marriage and the description of the (various) marriage-rites, the regulations for the great sacrifices and the eternal rule of the funeral sacrifices,

113. The description of the modes of (gaining) subsistence and the duties of a Snâtaka, (the rules regarding) lawful and forbidden food, the purification of men and of things,

114. The laws concerning women, (the law) of hermits, (the manner of gaining) final emancipation and (of) renouncing the world, the whole duty of a king and the manner of deciding lawsuits,

115. The rules for the examination of witnesses, the laws concerning husband and wife, the law of (inheritance and) division, (the law concerning) gambling and the removal of (men noxious like) thorns,

✓ 116. (The law concerning) the behaviour of Vaisyas and Sûdras, the origin of the mixed castes, the law for all castes in times of distress and the law of penances,

117. The threefold course of transmigrations, the result of (good or bad) actions, (the manner of attaining) supreme bliss and the examination of the good and bad qualities of actions,

118. The primeval laws of countries, of castes (gâti), of families, and the rules concerning heretics and companies (of traders and the like)—(all that) Manu has declared in these Institutes.

119. As Manu, in reply to my questions, formerly promulgated these Institutes, even so learn ye also the (whole work) from me.

CHAPTER II.

1. Learn that sacred law which is followed by men learned (in the Veda) and assented to in their hearts by the virtuous, who are ever exempt from hatred and inordinate affection.

2. To act solely from a desire for rewards is not laudable, yet an exemption from that desire is not (to be found) in this (world): for on (that) desire is grounded the study of the Veda and the performance of the actions, prescribed by the Veda.

3. The desire (for rewards), indeed, has its root in the conception that an act can yield them, and in consequence of (that) conception sacrifices are performed; vows and the laws prescribing restraints are all stated to be kept through the idea that they will bear fruit.

4. Not a single act here (below) appears ever to be done by a man free from desire; for whatever (man) does, it is (the result of) the impulse of desire.

5. He who persists in discharging these (prescribed duties) in the right manner, reaches the deathless

II. 2. Âp. I, 6, 20, 1-4. 'Is not laudable,' because such a disposition leads not to final liberation, but to new births' (Gov., Kull.).

3. Nand. takes the beginning of the verse differently, 'The desire for rewards is the root of the resolve to perform an act' (saṃkalpa). 'Vows,' i.e. 'acts to be performed during one's whole lifetime, like those of the Snâtaka' (chap. IV), Medh., Gov., Nâr.; 'the vows of a student,' Nand.; 'the laws prescribing restraints,' i.e. 'the prohibitive rules, e.g. those forbidding to injure living beings,' Medh., Gov., Nâr.; 'the rules affecting hermits and Saṃnyâsins,' Nand. Kull. refers both terms to the rules in chap. IV.

5. 'In the right manner,' i.e. 'as they are prescribed in the Vedas and without expecting rewards.' 'The deathless state,' i.e. 'final liberation.'

state and even in this (life) obtains (the fulfilment of) all the desires that he may have conceived.

6. The whole Veda is the (first) source of the sacred law, next the tradition and the virtuous conduct of those who know the (Veda further), also the customs of holy men, and (finally) self-satisfaction.

7. Whatever law has been ordained for any (person) by Manu, that has been fully declared in the Veda : for that (sage was) omniscient.

8. But a learned man after fully scrutinising all this with the eye of knowledge, should, in accordance with the authority of the revealed texts, be intent on (the performance of) his duties.

6. Âp. I, 1, 1, 1-3; Gaut. I, 1-4; XXVIII, 48; Vas. I, 4-6; Baudh. I, 1, 1, 1-6; Yâgñ. I, 7.

Śīla, 'virtuous conduct,' i.e. 'the suppression of inordinate affection and hatred,' Medh., Gov.; 'the thirteenfold śīla, behaving as becomes a Brāhmaṇa, devotedness to gods and parents, kindness,' &c., Kull.; 'that towards which many men who know the Veda naturally incline,' Nār.; 'that which makes one honoured by good men,' Nand. 'Customs,' e.g. such as tying at marriages a thread round the wrist of the bride (Medh., Gov.), wearing a blanket or a garment of bark (Kull.). Though the commentators try to find a difference between śīla and âkâra, it may be that both terms are used here, because in some Dharma-sûtras, e.g. Gaut. I, 2, the former and in some the latter (e.g. Vas. I, 5) is mentioned. The 'self-satisfaction,' i.e. of the virtuous (Medh., Gov., Nand.), is the rule for cases not to be settled by any of the other authorities (Nār., Nand.), or for cases where an option is permitted (Medh., Gov., Kull.).

7. The last clause is taken differently by Gov., who explains it, 'for that (Veda) is made up, as it were, of all knowledge.' Medh. gives substantially the same explanation.

8. 'All this,' i.e. 'the Sâstras' (Medh., Gov., Kull.); 'these Institutes of Manu' (Nār.); 'these different authorities' (Nand.). 'With the eye of knowledge,' i.e. 'with the help of grammar, of the Mîmāṃsâ, &c.' (Medh., Kull.).

9. For that man who obeys the law prescribed in the revealed texts and in the sacred tradition, gains fame in this (world) and after death unsurpassable bliss.

10. But by Sruti (revelation) is meant the Veda, and by Smṛiti (tradition) the Institutes of the sacred law: those two must not be called into question in any matter, since from those two the sacred law shone forth.

11. Every twice-born man, who, relying on the Institutes of dialectics, treats with contempt those two sources (of the law), must be cast out by the virtuous, as an atheist and a scorner of the Veda.

12. The Veda, the sacred tradition, the customs of virtuous men, and one's own pleasure, they declare to be visibly the fourfold means of defining the sacred law.

13. The knowledge of the sacred law is prescribed for those who are not given to the acquisition of wealth and to the gratification of their desires; to those who seek the knowledge of the sacred law the supreme authority is the revelation (Sruti).

14. But when two sacred texts (Sruti) are con-

11. 'Relying on the Institutes of dialectics,' i.e. 'relying on the atheistic institutes of reasoning, such as those of the Bauddhas and Kārvākas' (Medh.); 'relying on methods of reasoning, directed against the Veda' (Kull., Nār.).

12. The first half of this verse agrees literally with Yāgñ. I, 7.

13. According to 'another' commentator, quoted by Medh., and according to Gov., Kull., and Nār., the meaning of the first half is, 'the exhortation to learn the sacred law applies to those only who do not pursue worldly objects, because those who obey (or learn, Nār.) the sacred law merely in order to gain worldly advantages, such as wealth, fame, &c., derive no spiritual advantage from it (because they will not really obey it,' Nār.). Medh., on the other hand, thinks that vidhiyate, 'is prescribed,' means 'is found with.'

flicting, both are held to be law; for both are pronounced by the wise (to be) valid law.

15. (Thus) the (Agnihotra) sacrifice may be (optionally) performed, at any time after the sun has risen, before he has risen, or when neither sun nor stars are visible; that (is declared) by Vedic texts.

16. Know that he for whom (the performance of) the ceremonies beginning with the rite of impregnation (Garbhâdhâna) and ending with the funeral rite (Antyeshî) is prescribed, while sacred formulas are being recited, is entitled (to study) these Institutes, but no other man whatsoever.

17. That land, created by the gods, which lies between the two divine rivers Sarasvati and Dri-shadvati, the (sages) call Brahmâvarta.

18. The custom handed down in regular succession (since time immemorial) among the (four chief) castes (varna) and the mixed (races) of that country, is called the conduct of virtuous men.

19. The plain of the Kurus, the (country of the) Matsyas, Pañkâlas, and Sûrasenakas, these (form), indeed, the country of the Brahmarshis (Brâhmanical sages, which ranks) immediately after Brahmâvarta.

15. The Agnihotra, here referred to, consists of two sets of oblations, one of which is offered in the morning and the other in the evening. The expression samayâdhyushite, rendered in accordance with Kull.'s gloss, 'when neither sun nor stars are visible,' is explained by Medh. as 'the time of dawn' (ushasâ kâlâ), or 'as the time when the night disappears,' with which latter interpretation Gov. agrees.

16. The persons meant are the males of the three Âryan varṇas. The sacraments may be performed for women and Sûdras also, but without the recitation of mantras (II, 66; X, 127).

19. This tract comprises the Doab from the neighbourhood of Delhi as far as Mathurâ, the capital of the ancient Sûrasenakas.

20. From a Brāhmaṇa, born in that country, let all men on earth learn their several usages.

21. That (country) which (lies) between the Himavat and the Vindhya (mountains) to the east of Prayāga and to the west of Vinasana (the place where the river Sarasvatī disappears) is called Madhyadesa (the central region).

22. But (the tract) between those two mountains (just mentioned), which (extends) as far as the eastern and the western oceans, the wise call Āryāvarta (the country of the Āryans).

23. That land where the black antelope naturally roams, one must know to be fit for the performance of sacrifices; (the tract) different from that (is) the country of the Mlekkhas (barbarians).

24. Let twice-born men seek to dwell in those (above-mentioned countries); but a Sūdra, distressed for subsistence, may reside anywhere.

25. Thus has the origin of the sacred law been succinctly described to you and the origin of this universe; learn (now) the duties of the castes (varṇa).

26. With holy rites, prescribed by the Veda, must the ceremony on conception and other sacraments be performed for twice-born men, which sanctify the body and purify (from sin) in this (life) and after death.

21. The place where the river Sarasvatī disappears lies in the Hissār districts. Prayāga, i.e. Allahābād.

22. Vas. I, 9; Baudh. I, 2, 10.

23. Vas. I, 13-15; Baudh. I, 2, 12-15; Yāgñ. I, 2.

25. Gov. explains dharma, 'the sacred law,' by 'spiritual merit.'

26-35. Gaut. VIII, 14-20; Vi. XXVII, 1-12; Yāgñ. I, 10-13.

26. Medh. mentions another explanation for the first words, 'With holy rites, accompanied by the recitation of Vedic texts,' and Gov. thinks that 'vaidika' is to be taken in both meanings.

27. By burnt oblations during (the mother's) pregnancy, by the Gâtakarman (the ceremony after birth), the Kauda (tonsure), and the Mauñgibandhana (the tying of the sacred girdle of Muñga grass) is the taint, derived from both parents, removed from twice-born men.

28. By the study of the Veda, by vows, by burnt oblations, by (the recitation of) sacred texts, by the (acquisition of the) threefold sacred science, by offering (to the gods, Rishis, and manes), by (the procreation of) sons, by the great sacrifices, and by (Srauta) rites this (human) body is made fit for (union with) Brahman.

29. Before the navel-string is cut, the Gâtakarman (birth-rite) must be performed for a male (child); and while sacred formulas are being recited, he must be fed with gold, honey, and butter.

27. 'The burnt oblations during the mother's pregnancy' are the Pumsavana, Sîmantonnayana, and so forth; see Âsv. Grîhya-sûtra I, 13-14.

28. 'By vows,' i.e. 'the vows undertaken by the student when he learns particular portions of the Vedas, such as the Sâvitrvrata' (Medh., Gov., Nâr.); 'voluntary restraints, such as the abstention from honey, meat, &c.' (Kull., Râgh.); 'vows such as the Prâgâpatya penance' (Nand.). 'By burnt oblations,' i.e. 'the daily offerings of fuel' (II, 108). Traividya, 'by the acquisition of the threefold sacred science,' i.e. 'by learning the meaning of the three Vedas' (Medh., Nand.); 'by undertaking the vow to study the three Vedas during thirty-six years' (III, 1; Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). Igyayâ, 'by offering to the gods, Rishis, and manes,' i.e. by performing the so-called Tarpana (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'by offering the Pâkayagñas' (Nâr., Nand.). Medh. takes brâhmî, 'fit for union with Brahman,' to mean 'connected with Brahman,' but gives our version, which all the other commentators adopt, as the opinion of 'others.'

29. Âsv. Grîhya-sûtra I, 15, 1; Mânava Grîhya-sûtra I, 17, 1; Pâraskara Grîhya-sûtra I, 16, 4. Though the text clearly says that the child is to be fed with gold, honey, and butter, it appears from the Grîhya-sûtras, as also some of the commentators point out,

30. But let (the father perform or) cause to be performed the Nâmadheya (the rite of naming the child), on the tenth or twelfth (day after birth), or on a lucky lunar day, in a lucky muhûrta, under an auspicious constellation.

31. Let (the first part of) a Brâhmaṇa's name (denote something) auspicious, a Kshatriya's be connected with power, and a Vaisya's with wealth, but a Sûdra's (express something) contemptible.

32. (The second part of) a Brâhmaṇa's (name) shall be (a word) implying happiness, of a Kshatriya's (a word) implying protection, of a Vaisya's (a term) expressive of thriving, and of a Sûdra's (an expression) denoting service.

33. The names of women should be easy to pronounce, not imply anything dreadful, possess a plain meaning, be pleasing and auspicious, end in long vowels, and contain a word of benediction.

that the last two substances only are to be given to the child, after they have been touched with a piece of gold, or a golden ring.

30. Âsv. Grihya-sûtra I, 15, 4-10; Pâraskara I, 17, 1-6. Nâr. and Nand. are in doubt whether the numerals 'the tenth or twelfth' refer to lunar or solar days, because they stand in the feminine gender and either tithi or râtri may be supplied. Kull. gives an alternative version of the date, 'after the tenth (the last day of impurity, i. e.) on the eleventh or twelfth,' which Medh. also mentions, but rejects. Kull. considers that the third and fourth vâ, 'or,' which stand after muhûrta and nakshatra, have the sense of 'just,' and do not introduce a third alternative.

31-32. K. omits 31b and 32a. Nâr. and Râgh. think that the second part of a Brâhmaṇa's name must contain the word śarman and no other, while the general opinion of the others is that it may be śarman or some synonym, implying 'happiness or refuge.' Medh. expressly rejects the former view, and gives as examples of correct formations, Svâmidatta, Bhavabhûti, Indrasvâmin, Indrâśrama, Indradatta.

33. Medh. irreverently, but pertinently, remarks that there is no

34. In the fourth month the Nishkramana (the first leaving of the house) of the child should be performed, in the sixth month the Annaprâsana (first feeding with rice), and optionally (any other) auspicious ceremony required by (the custom of) the family.

35. According to the teaching of the revealed texts, the Kûdâkarman (tonsure) must be performed, for the sake of spiritual merit, by all twice-born men in the first or third year.

36. In the eighth year after conception, one should perform the initiation (upanâyana) of a Brâhmaṇa, in the eleventh after conception (that) of a Kshatriya, but in the twelfth that of a Vaisya.

37. (The initiation) of a Brâhmaṇa who desires proficiency in sacred learning should take place in the fifth (year after conception), (that) of a Kshatriya who wishes to become powerful in the sixth, (and that) of a Vaisya who longs for (success in his) business in the eighth,

38. The (time for the) Sâvitṛī (initiation) of a difference between 'auspiciousness' (maṅgala) and 'benediction' (âśīrvâda), and that the latter word has been added merely in order to complete the verse.

34. Âsv. Grîhya-sûtra I, 16; Pâraskara I, 17, 5; 19, 1-6. The last clause, which permits the adoption of particular family-customs, refers, according to Medh., Gov., and Kull., to all sacraments.

35. Âsv. Grîhya-sûtra I, 17, 1; Pâraskara II, 1. Nâr. and Nand. explain dharmataḥ, 'for the sake of spiritual merit,' by 'according to the law of the family' (see Âsv. Grîhya-sûtra, loc. cit.).

36-37. Âp. I, 1, 5, 8-21; Gaut. I, 5-14; Vas. II, 3; XI, 49-73; Baudh. I, 3, 7-12; Vi. XXVII, 15-28; Yâgyñ. I, 14.

37. As the commentators point out, the person who has the particular wish is not the boy, but his father.

38-40. Âp. I, 1, 22-2, 10; Gaut. XXI, 11; Vas. XI, 74-79;

Brâhmaṇa does not pass until the completion of the sixteenth year (after conception), of a Kshatriya until the completion of the twenty-second, and of a Vaisya until the completion of the twenty-fourth.

39. After those (periods men of) these three (castes) who have not received the sacrament at the proper time, become Vrâtyas (outcasts), excluded from the Sâvitṛī (initiation) and despised by the Âryans.

40. With such men, if they have not been purified according to the rule, let no Brâhmaṇa ever, even in times of distress, form a connexion either through the Veda or by marriage.

41. Let students, according to the order (of their castes), wear (as upper dresses) the skins of black antelopes, spotted deer, and he-goats, and (lower garments) made of hemp, flax or wool.

42. The girdle of a Brâhmaṇa shall consist of a triple cord of Muñga grass, smooth and soft ; (that) of a Kshatriya, of a bowstring, made of Mûrvâ fibres ; (that) of a Vaisya, of hempen threads.

Baudh. I, 16, 16 ; Vi., loc. cit., and LIV, 26 ; Yâgñ. I, 37-38. 'Some' take the preposition â, 'until,' in the sense of 'until the beginning of,' Kull.

40. 'Connexion through the Veda,' i.e. teaching them or studying under them, sacrificing for them, or electing them to be priests, accepting religious gifts from them or giving them. Râgh. omits verse 40.

41. Âp. I, 2, 39-3, 9 ; Gaut. I, 16, 21 ; Vas. XI, 61-67 ; Baudh. I, 3, 14 ; Vi. XXVII, 19-20. Râgh. explains ruru, 'a spotted deer,' by 'a tiger.'

42. Âp. I, 2, 33-37 ; Gaut. I, 15 ; Vas. XI, 58-60 ; Baudh. I, 3, 13 ; Vi. XXVII, 18 ; Yâgñ. I, 29. Medh. and Gov. think that the girdle of a Kshatriya is not to consist of three separate strings twisted together, and Kull. apparently holds the same opinion. Râgh. and Nâr. say that every bowstring naturally consists of three strings.

43. If Muñga grass (and so forth) be not procurable, (the girdles) may be made of Kusa, Asman-taka, and Balbaga (fibres), with a single threefold knot, or with three or five (knots according to the custom of the family).

44. The sacrificial string of a Brāhmaṇa shall be made of cotton, (shall be) twisted to the right, (and consist) of three threads, that of a Kshatriya of hempen threads, (and) that of a Vaiśya of woollen threads.

45. A Brāhmaṇa shall (carry), according to the sacred law, a staff of Bilva or Palāśa; a Kshatriya, of Vatā or Khadira; (and) a Vaiśya, of Pīlu or Udumbara.

46. The staff of a Brāhmaṇa shall be made of such length as to reach the end of his hair; that of a Kshatriya, to reach his forehead; (and) that of a Vaiśya, to reach (the tip of his) nose.

47. Let all the staves be straight, without a blemish, handsome to look at, not likely to terrify men, with their bark perfect, unhurt by fire.

48. Having taken a staff according to his choice, having worshipped the sun and walked round the

43. 'With a single threefold knot' seems to mean that each of the strings of the girdle shall first be knotted, and the three knots be afterwards tied together in one. Nār. and Rāgh., however, take trivṛtā, 'threefold,' separately, and refer it to the string. They thus support Sir W. Jones' translation, 'in triple strings, with one, &c.'

44. Âp. II, 4, 22; Gaut. I, 36; Vas. XII, 14; Baudh. I, 5, 5; Vi. XXVII, 19.

45-47. Âp. I, 2, 38; Gaut. I, 22; Vas. XI, 52-57; Baudh. I, 3, 15; Vi. XXVII, 22-24; Yâgñ. I, 29.

47. Anudvegakarâḥ, 'not likely to terrify anybody' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), means according to Nār. 'not causing displeasure (to the wearer) by faults such as roughness.'

48-57. Âp. I, 3, 25-4, 4; Gaut. II, 35-41; Vas. XI, 68-70; Baudh. I, 3, 16-18; Vi. XXVII, 25; Yâgñ. I, 30; 51-57. Âp. II, fire, turning his right hand towards it, (the student) should beg alms according to the prescribed rule.

49. An initiated Brâhmana should beg, beginning (his request with the word) lady (bhavati); a Kshatriya, placing (the word) lady in the middle, but a Vaisya, placing it at the end (of the formula).

50. Let him first beg food of his mother, or of his sister, or of his own maternal aunt, or of (some other) female who will not disgrace him (by a refusal).

51. Having collected as much food as is required (from several persons), and having announced it without guile to his teacher, let him eat, turning his face towards the east, and having purified himself by sipping water.

52. (His meal will procure) long life, if he eats facing the east; fame, if he turns to the south; prosperity, if he turns to the west; truthfulness, if he faces the east.

53. Let a twice-born man always eat his food with concentrated mind, after performing an ablution; and after he has eaten, let him duly cleanse himself with water and sprinkle the cavities (of his head).

54. Let him always worship his food, and eat it without contempt; when he sees it, let him rejoice,

1, 2-3; 3, 11; Gaut. IX, 59; Vas. III, 69; XII, 18-20; Baudh. II, 5, 18, 21-6, 2; 13, 12; Vi. LVIII, 34-35, 40-44; Yâgñ. I, 27, 31, 112.

52. Medh. and Nâr. propose for ritam, 'truthfulness,' an alternative explanation, 'the sacrifice.'

53. The word nityam, 'always,' indicates that this rule refers to householders also (Gov., Kull., Nâr., Nand.).

54. 'Worship,' i.e. 'consider as a deity' (Medh., Gov., Nand.), or 'meditate on its being required to sustain life' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), or 'praise it with the verse,' Rig-veda I, 187, 1 (Nâr.).

show a pleased face, and pray that he may always obtain it.

55. Food, that is always worshipped, gives strength and manly vigour; but eaten irreverently, it destroys them both.

56. Let him not give to any man what he leaves, and beware of eating between (the two meal-times); let him not over-eat himself, nor go anywhere without having purified himself (after his meal).

57. Excessive eating is prejudicial to health, to fame, and to (bliss in) heaven; it prevents (the acquisition of) spiritual merit, and is odious among men; one ought, for these reasons, to avoid it carefully.

58. Let a Brâhmaṇa always sip water out of the part of the hand (tīrtha) sacred to Brahman, or out of that sacred to Ka (Pragâpati), or out of (that) sacred to the gods, never out of that sacred to the manes.

59. They call (the part) at the root of the thumb the tīrtha sacred to Brahman, that at the root of the

55. Ūgam, 'manly vigour' (Gov., Kull.), or 'energy' (Nâr., Nand.), or 'bulk' (Medh.).

56. Medh. reads nâdyâd etat tathântarâ, and gives, besides the explanation adopted in the translation, two alternative interpretations: (1) 'let him not eat after interrupting his meal;' (2) 'let him not eat taking away his left hand from the dish.' Nand. reads nâdyâk kaitat tathântarâ, 'and let him not eat such a (remnant) given to him during (a meal by one of the company).'

58-62. Âp. I, 15, 1-16; Vas. III, 26-34; Baudh. I, 8, 12-23; Vi. LXII, 1-9; Yâgyñ. I, 18-21.

58. Though the text speaks of the Brâhmaṇa only, the rule refers, as the commentators remark, to other Âryans too.

59. Aṅgulimûle, 'at the root of the little finger' (Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), means according to Medh. and Nand. 'at the root of the fingers.'

(little) finger (the tīrtha) sacred to Ka (Pragâpati), (that) at the tips (of the fingers, the tīrtha) sacred to the gods, and that below (between the index and the thumb, the tīrtha) sacred to the manes.

60. Let him first sip water thrice ; next twice wipe his mouth ; and, lastly, touch with water the cavities (of the head), (the seat of) the soul and the head.

61. He who knows the sacred law and seeks purity shall always perform the rite of sipping with water neither hot nor frothy, with the (prescribed) tīrtha, in a lonely place, and turning to the east or to the north.

62. A Brāhmaṇa is purified by water that reaches his heart, a Kshatriya by water reaching his throat, a Vaisya by water taken into his mouth, (and) a Sūdra by water touched with the extremity (of his lips).

63. A twice-born man is called upavṛtin when his right arm is raised (and the sacrificial string or the dress, passed under it, rests on the left shoulder) ; (when his) left (arm) is raised (and the string, or the dress, passed under it, rests on the right shoulder, he is called) prâṭnâvṛtin ; and nivṛtin when it hangs down (straight) from the neck.

64. His girdle, the skin (which serves as his upper garment), his staff, his sacrificial thread, (and) his water-pot he must throw into water, when they have been damaged, and take others, reciting sacred formulas.

60. '(The seat of) the soul,' i. e. 'the heart' (all except Medh., who adds, or 'the navel').

61. 'Neither hot,' i. e. 'not boiled or heated on the fire' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Nand.).

63. Baudh. I, 8, 5-10.

64. Baudh. I, 6, 7 ; Vi. XXVII, 29.

65. (The ceremony called) Kesânta (clipping the hair) is ordained for a Brâhmaṇa in the sixteenth year (from conception); for a Kshatriya, in the twenty-second; and for a Vaisya, two (years) later than that.

66. This whole series (of ceremonies) must be performed for females (also), in order to sanctify the body, at the proper time and in the proper order, but without (the recitation of) sacred texts.

67. The nuptial ceremony is stated to be the Vedic sacrament for women (and to be equal to the initiation), serving the husband (equivalent to) the residence in (the house of the) teacher, and the household duties (the same) as the (daily) worship of the sacred fire.

68. Thus has been described the rule for the initiation of the twice-born, which indicates a (new) birth, and sanctifies; learn (now) to what duties they must afterwards apply themselves.

69. Having performed the (rite of) initiation, the teacher must first instruct the (pupil) in (the rules of) personal purification, of conduct, of the fire-worship, and of the twilight devotions.

65. Yâgñ. I, 36. This is the ceremony also called Godâna; Âsv. Gṛihya-sûtra I, 18; Pâraskara II, 1, 3-7.

66-67. Âsv. Gṛihya-sûtra I, 16, 16; Vi. XXVII, 13-14; Yâgñ. I, 13. 'The Vedic sacrament,' i.e. 'the sacrament performed with sacred texts' (Nand., Râgh.), or 'having for its object the study of Vedic texts' (Medh., Nâr.). Hence women must not be initiated. As the parallel passage of Âsv. shows, the sacraments preceding the tonsure alone are to be given to them.

68. 'Which indicates their (real) birth, because an uninitiated man is equal to one unborn' (Medh., Gov.).

69-73. Gaut. I, 46-56; Vi. XXX, 32; Yâgñ. I, 15, 27.

70. But (a student) who is about to begin the study (of the Veda), shall receive instruction, after he has sipped water in accordance with the Institutes (of the sacred law), has made the Brahmâñgali, (has put on) a clean dress, and has brought his organs under due control.

71. At the beginning and at the end of (a lesson in the) Veda he must always clasp both the feet of his teacher, (and) he must study, joining his hands; that is called the Brahmâñgali (joining the palms for the sake of the Veda).

72. With crossed hands he must clasp (the feet) of the teacher, and touch the left (foot) with his left (hand), the right (foot) with his right (hand).

73. But to him who is about to begin studying, the teacher, always unwearied, must say: Ho, recite! He shall leave off (when the teacher says): Let a stoppage take place!

74. Let him always pronounce the syllable Om at the beginning and at the end of (a lesson in) the Veda; (for) unless the syllable Om precede (the lesson) will slip away (from him), and unless it follow it will fade away.

70. Laghuvâsâh, '(has put on) a clean dress' (Medh., Kull.), or 'a dress which is not gorgeous' (Gov., Nâr., Nand.), i.e. less valuable than the teacher's (Râgh.).

71-72. Âp. I, 5, 19-23; Baudh. I, 3, 28; Vi. XXVIII, 14-16.

73. Nâr. and Nand. read adhyeshyamânas tu gurum, &c. 'But the pupil, desiring to study, shall say to his teacher, Venerable Sir, recite! &c.' and this agrees with Gaut. I, 46. Nâr. mentions also the reading translated above, which the other commentators give.

74. Âp. I, 13, 6-7; Gaut. I, 57; Vi. XXX, 33. Visîryate, translated according to Kull. by 'will fade away,' means according to Medh. 'will become useless for practical purposes;' according to Gov. and Nâr. 'will not be properly understood during the lesson.' Medh. adds that the two terms contain similes, taken from boiling milk,

75. Seated on (blades of Kusa grass) with their points to the east, purified by Pavitras (blades of Kusa grass), and sanctified by three suppressions of the breath (Prânâyâma), he is worthy (to pronounce) the syllable Om.

76. Pragâpati (the lord of creatures) milked out (as it were) from the three Vedas the sounds A, U, and M, and (the Vyâhr̥itis) Bhûh, Bhuvah, Svah.

77. Moreover from the three Vedas Pragâpati, who dwells in the highest heaven (Parameshthin), milked out (as it were) that R̥ik-verse, sacred to Savitrî (Sâvitri), which begins with the word tad, one foot from each.

78. A Brâhmaṇa, learned in the Veda, who recites during both twilights that syllable and that (verse), preceded by the Vyâhr̥itis, gains the (whole) merit which (the recitation of) the Vedas confers.

79. A twice-born man who (daily) repeats those three one thousand times outside (the village), will be freed after a month even from great guilt, as a snake from its slough.

80. The Brâhmaṇa, the Kshatriya, and the Vaisya who neglect (the recitation of) that R̥ik-verse and the

and that one speaks also of the visarṇa, i.e. the spoiling of boiled milk.

75. Gaut. I, 48-50; Yâgñ. I, 23. 'Purified by Pavitras,' i.e. 'having touched the seat of the vital airs with blades of Kusa grass' (Medh., Gov., Nâr.); see Gaut. I, 48. Medh. mentions another explanation of Pavitra, adopted by Nand. also, according to which it means 'purificatory texts.' Regarding the term 'suppression of the breath,' see Vas. XXV, 13; Vi. LV, 9.

76. Vi. LV, 10.

77. Vi. LV, 11. The Sâvitri, i.e. the verse tat savitur vareṇyam, Rig-veda III, 62, 10.

78. Vi. LV, 12; Baudh. II, 11, 6.

79. Vi. LV, 13; Baudh. IV, 1, 29; Vas. XXVI, 4.

80. Vi. LV, 14.

timely (performance of the) rites (prescribed for) them, will be blamed among virtuous men.

81. Know that the three imperishable Mahāvya-hr̥tis, preceded by the syllable Om, and (followed) by the three-footed Sāvitrī are the portal of the Veda and the gate leading (to union with) Brahman.

82. He who daily recites that (verse), untired, during three years, will enter (after death) the highest Brahman, move as free as air, and assume an ethereal form.

83. The monosyllable (Om) is the highest Brahman, (three) suppressions of the breath are the best (form of) austerity, but nothing surpasses the Sāvitrī; truthfulness is better than silence.

84. All rites ordained in the Veda, burnt oblations and (other) sacrifices, pass away; but know that the syllable (Om) is imperishable, and (it is) Brahman, (and) the Lord of creatures (Pragâpati).

85. An offering, consisting of muttered prayers, is ten times more efficacious than a sacrifice performed

81. Vi. LV, 15. Brahmano mukham, literally, 'the mouth of Brahman,' is probably meant to convey the double sense given in the translation. Both interpretations are given by Medh., Kull., and Râgh., while Gov., Nâr., and Nand. explain it merely by 'the beginning or portal of the Veda;' see also Âp. I, 13, 6.

82. Vi. LV, 16.

83. Vi. LV, 17.

84. Vi. LVI, 18. 'Pass away,' i.e. 'as far as their results are concerned' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr.), 'as far as their form and their results are concerned' (Nand.). Sacrifices procure only the perishable bliss of heaven, while the constant recitation of the syllable Om secures union with Brahman. According to Medh., Gov., Kull., and Râgh., Brahman is here a neuter; according to Nâr. and Nand., a masculine. The words 'and (it is) Brahman (and) Pragâpati' (Medh., Gov., Nâr., Râgh.) are taken by Kull. as 'since it is Brahman (and) Pragâpati,' by Nand. as 'just like Brahman, the Lord of creatures.'

85. Vi. LVI, 19; Vas. XXVI, 9. The sacred texts meant are, of course, Om, the Vyâhr̥tis, and the Gâyatrī.

according to the rules (of the Veda); a (prayer) which is inaudible (to others) surpasses it a hundred times, and the mental (recitation of sacred texts) a thousand times.

86. The four Pākayagñas and those sacrifices which are enjoined by the rules (of the Veda) are all together not equal in value to a sixteenth part of the sacrifice consisting of muttered prayers.

87. But, undoubtedly, a Brāhmaṇa reaches the highest goal by muttering prayers only; (whether) he perform other (rites) or neglect them, he who befriends (all creatures) is declared (to be) a (true) Brāhmaṇa.

88. A wise man should strive to restrain his organs which run wild among alluring sensual objects, like a charioteer his horses.

89. Those eleven organs which former sages have named, I will properly (and) precisely enumerate in due order,

90. (Viz.) the ear, the skin, the eyes, the tongue, and the nose as the fifth, the anus, the organ of generation, hands and feet, and the (organ of) speech, named as the tenth.

86. Vi. LVI, 20; Vas. XXVI, 10. 'The Pākayagñas,' i.e. 'the so-called great sacrifices to gods, manes, goblins, and men (III, 70) excluding the Brahmayagña' (Medh., Kull., Nār., Nand.). Gov. and Rāgh. understand the term as indicating 'all Smārta and Śrauta rites;' see also Jolly on Vishṇu, loc. cit.

87. Vi. LVI, 21; Vas. XXVI, 11. Maitraḥ, 'one who befriends (all creatures),' i.e. 'does not offer animal sacrifices.' Rāgh. proposes also the interpretation 'he who worships Mitra, the Sun.' Brāhmaṇaḥ, 'a (true) Brāhmaṇa,' i.e. 'one connected with Brahman,' 'one who will be absorbed in Brahman' (Kull.), 'the best of Brāhmaṇas' (brahmish/haḥ, Rāgh.). Medh. and Gov. take the last clause differently, 'it is declared (in the Veda that) a Brāhmaṇa (shall be) a friend (of all creatures).'

91. Five of them, the ear and the rest according to their order, they call organs of sense, and five of them, the anus and the rest, organs of action.

92. Know that the internal organ (manas) is the eleventh, which by its quality belongs to both (sets); when that has been subdued, both those sets of five have been conquered.

93. Through the attachment of his organs (to sensual pleasure) a man doubtlessly will incur guilt; but if he keep them under complete control, he will obtain success (in gaining all his aims).

94. Desire is never extinguished by the enjoyment of desired objects; it only grows stronger like a fire (fed) with clarified butter.

95. If one man should obtain all those (sensual enjoyments) and another should renounce them all, the renunciation of all pleasure is far better than the attainment of them.

96. Those (organs) which are strongly attached to sensual pleasures, cannot so effectually be restrained by abstinence (from enjoyments) as by a constant (pursuit of true) knowledge.

97. Neither (the study of) the Vedas, nor libera-

92. 'By its quality,' i.e. by the quality called samkalpa, the power of determining or shaping the impressions of the senses.

93. Dosham, 'guilt' (Nâr.), is taken by Medh., Gov., and Kull. in the sense of drishṭvâdrishṭam dosham, 'misery and guilt;' by Râgh. as samsârâkhyam, 'the misery of repeated births.' 'Success (in gaining all his aims),' i.e. 'the rewards of all good works and rites' (Medh.), or 'final liberation' (Nâr., Râgh.), or 'all the aims of men, final liberation and the rest' (Gov., Kull.).

96. Asevayâ, 'by abstinence from enjoyments' (Gov., Nâr., Nand.), means according to Medh. and Kull. 'by avoiding places where enjoyments are to be obtained,' i.e. 'by dwelling in the forest' (Medh.).

lity, nor sacrifices, nor any (self-imposed) restraint, nor austerities, ever procure the attainment (of rewards) to a man whose heart is contaminated (by sensuality).

98. That man may be considered to have (really) subdued his organs, who on hearing and touching and seeing, on tasting and smelling (anything) neither rejoices nor repines.

99. But when one among all the organs slips away (from control), thereby (man's) wisdom slips away from him, even as the water (flows) through the one (open) foot of a (water-carrier's) skin.

100. If he keeps all the (ten) organs as well as the mind in subjection, he may gain all his aims, without reducing his body by (the practice) of Yoga.

101. Let him stand during the morning twilight, muttering the Sâvitri until the sun appears, but (let him recite it), seated, in the evening until the constellations can be seen distinctly.

102. He who stands during the morning twilight muttering (the Sâvitri), removes the guilt contracted during the (previous) night; but he who (recites it),

99. 'Wisdom,' i.e. 'power of control over the senses' (Medh., Gov., Râgh.), or 'knowledge of the truth' (Kull.). I read with Medh., Gov., Nâr., Nand., Râgh., K., and the Bombay edition pâdât, instead of pâtrât. The explanation of the simile has been given correctly by Haughton in his note on Sir W. Jones' translation.

100. Nâr. and Nand. take yogatah, 'by the practice of Yoga,' with the chief clause, and Medh. mentions this construction too.

101. Âp. I, 30, 8; Gaut. II, 10-11; Vas. VII, 16; Baudh. II, 7, Vi. XXVIII, 2-3; Yâgyñ. I, 24-25.

102. Vas. XXVI, 2-3; Baudh. II, 7, 18, 20. Medh. and Gov. point out that only trifling faults can be expiated in this manner, otherwise the chapter on penances would be useless.

seated, in the evening, destroys the sin he committed during the day.

103. But he who does not (worship) standing in the morning, nor sitting in the evening, shall be excluded, just like a Sûdra, from all the duties and rights of an Āryan.

104. He who (desires to) perform the ceremony (of the) daily (recitation), may even recite the Sāvitrī near water, retiring into the forest, controlling his organs and concentrating his mind.

105. Both when (one studies) the supplementary treatises of the Veda, and when (one recites) the daily portion of the Veda, no regard need be paid to forbidden days, likewise when (one repeats) the sacred texts required for a burnt oblation.

106. There are no forbidden days for the daily recitation, since that is declared to be a Brahmasattra (an everlasting sacrifice offered to Brahman); at that the Veda takes the place of the burnt oblations, and it is meritorious (even), when (natural phenomena, requiring) a cessation of the Veda-study, take the place of the exclamation Vasha!

107. For him who, being pure and controlling his organs, during a year daily recites the Veda according to the rule, that (daily recitation) will ever cause sweet and sour milk, clarified butter and honey to flow.

103. Baudh. II, 17, 15.

104. Baudh. II, 11, 6. 'Even,' i.e. 'if he is unable to recite other Vedic texts.'

105-106. Āp. I, 12, 1-9; Vas. XIII, 7. The last clause of verse 106 finds its explanation by the passage from the Satapatha-brāhmaṇa, quoted by Āp. I, 12, 3. Anadhyāyaḥ ('not studying') means 'a cause for the interruption of the study, such as thunder or a violent wind, which takes the place of the exclamation Vasha!'

107. Vi. XXX, 34-38; Yāgñ. I, 41-46. Nār. and Nand. explain the four terms 'sweet and sour milk, clarified butter and

108. Let an Âryan who has been initiated, (daily) offer fuel in the sacred fire, beg food, sleep on the ground and do what is beneficial to his teacher, until (he performs the ceremony of) Samâvartana (on returning home).

109. According to the sacred law the (following) ten (persons, viz.) the teacher's son, one who desires to do service, one who imparts knowledge, one who is intent on fulfilling the law, one who is pure, a person connected by marriage or friendship, one who possesses (mental) ability, one who makes presents of money, one who is honest, and a relative, may be instructed (in the Veda).

110. Unless one be asked, one must not explain (anything) to anybody, nor (must one answer) a person who asks improperly; let a wise man, though he knows (the answer), behave among men as (if he were) an idiot.

111. Of the two persons, him who illegally explains (anything), and him who illegally asks (a question), one (or both) will die or incur (the other's) enmity.

honey,' as symbolical of the four objects of human existence, merit, wealth, pleasure, and liberation. Medh. quotes this interpretation as the opinion of 'others.'

108. Âp. I, 4, 16, 23, 25, 28, 32; Gaut. II, 8, 30, 35; Vas. VII, 9, 15; Vi. XXVIII, 4, 7, 9, 12; Baudh. I, 3, 16, 4, 4-8; Yâgñ. I, 25. Regarding the Samâvartana, see below, III, 3-4.

109. Yâgñ. I, 28. Dharmatah, 'according to the sacred law' (Kull., Nand.), means according to Medh., Gov., and Nâr. 'for the sake of spiritual merit.'

110. Âp. I, 32, 22-24; Vas. II, 12; Baudh. I, 4, 2; Vi. XXIX, 7. Gadah, 'an idiot,' means according to Medh. and Kull. 'dumb.'

111. Vi. XXIX, 7. The person who will die is in either case the offender. If both offend, both will die. Vidvesham vâdhigakkhati, 'will incur (the other's) enmity,' means according to Medh. and Gov. 'will incur odium among men;' according to Râgh. 'will lose the reward.'

112. Where merit and wealth are not (obtained by teaching) nor (at least) due obedience, in such (soil) sacred knowledge must not be sown, just as good seed (must) not (be thrown) on barren land.

113. Even in times of dire distress a teacher of the Veda should rather die with his knowledge than sow it in barren soil.

114. Sacred Learning approached a Brâhmaṇa and said to him: 'I am thy treasure, preserve me, deliver me not to a scorner; so (preserved) I shall become supremely strong.'

115. 'But deliver me, as to the keeper of thy treasure, to a Brâhmaṇa whom thou shalt know to be pure, of subdued senses, chaste and attentive.'

116. But he who acquires without permission the Veda from one who recites it, incurs the guilt of stealing the Veda, and shall sink into hell.

117. (A student) shall first reverentially salute that (teacher) from whom he receives (knowledge), referring to worldly affairs, to the Veda, or to the Brahman.

118. A Brâhmaṇa who completely governs himself, though he know the Sâvitṛī only, is better than he who knows the three Vedas, (but) does not control himself, eats all (sorts of) food, and sells all (sorts of goods).

119. One must not sit down on a couch or seat

112. Baudh. I, 4, 1; Vi. XXIX, 8.

113. This verse shows, as Medh. and Gov. point out, that under ordinary circumstances a learned man must teach what he knows.

114-115. Vas. II, 8-10; Vi. XXIX, 9-10; Nirukta II, 4.

116. Vi. XXX, 41-42.

117. Âp. I, 14, 7-9; Gaut. VI, 1-3, 5; Vas. XIII, 41-43; Baudh. I, 3, 25-28; Vi. XXXII, 1-4. This rule refers to any casual meeting.

119. Âp. I, 8, 11, 14, 17; Gaut. II, 21, 25.

which a superior occupies; and he who occupies a couch or seat shall rise to meet a (superior), and (afterwards) salute him.

120. For the vital airs of a young man mount upwards to leave his body when an elder approaches; but by rising to meet him and saluting he recovers them.

121. He who habitually salutes and constantly pays reverence to the aged obtains an increase of four (things), (viz.) length of life, knowledge, fame, (and) strength.

122. After the (word of) salutation, a Brâhmana who greets an elder must pronounce his name, saying, 'I am N. N.'

123. To those (persons) who, when a name is pronounced, do not understand (the meaning of) the salutation, a wise man should say, 'It is I;' and (he should address) in the same manner all women.

124. In saluting he should pronounce after his name the word bhoḥ; for the sages have declared that the nature of bhoḥ is the same as that of (all proper) names.

125. A Brâhmana should thus be saluted in return, 'May'st thou be long-lived, O gentle one!'

121. Âp. I, 5, 15; Baudh. I, 3, 26. Instead of vidyâ or pragñâ, 'knowledge,' Medh. reads dharmaḥ, 'spiritual merit,' and the same reading is given sec. man. in the text of Gov.

122. Âp. I, 5, 12; Gaut. VI, 5; Vas. XIII, 45; Baudh. I, 3, 27; Vi. XXVIII, 17; Yâgñ. I, 26. 'After the word of salutation,' i. e. after the word abhivâdaye, 'I salute' (Gov., Kull., Nâr., Nand.).

123. Vas. XIII, 46. I. e. to those who either are unacquainted with grammar or with the Dharmasâstra (Medh.). Nand. places this verse after versé 126.

124. Vi. XXVIII, 17.

125. Âp. I, 5, 18; Vas. XIII, 46. The translation of the second half of the verse is based on the reading 'pûrvâksharaplutaḥ,' which and the vowel 'a' must be added at the end of the name (of the person addressed), the syllable preceding it being drawn out to the length of three moras.

126. A Brâhmana who does not know the form of returning a salutation, must not be saluted by a learned man ; as a Sûdra, even so is he.

127. Let him ask a Brâhmana, on meeting him, after (his health, with the word) kusala, a Kshatriya (with the word) anâmaya, a Vaisya (with the word) kshema, and a Sûdra (with the word) anârogya.

128. He who has been initiated (to perform a Srauta sacrifice) must not be addressed by his name, even though he be a younger man ; he who knows

Nand. gives, and Nâr. mentions as adopted by 'some.' It follows the interpretation of these two commentators which agrees in substance with the rule of Vasishṭha. The meaning is that Devadatta is to be pronounced 'Devadattâ3a,' Harabhûte, 'Harabhûtâ3ya,' &c.

Medh. and Kull. take the passage as follows : 'and the vowel (i.e.) "a" (and so forth) at the end of the name, (or in case the word ends in a consonant) that of the preceding syllable, must be drawn out the length of the three moras.' According to this interpretation, which requires the reading 'pûrvâksharaḥ plutaḥ,' Manu's rule agrees with Âp. and Pânini VIII, 2, 83. The obvious objection is that Medh. and Kull. are forced to take akâra, 'the vowel a,' in the sense of 'a vowel such as a,' and to understand with pûrvâksharaḥ the word svaraḥ, which does not occur in the verse. Gov. and Râgh. go far off the mark. Most commentators think that the word vipraḥ, 'a Brâhmana,' is meant to include other Âryans also ; but see Âp. I, 14, 23.

126. It follows from this verse that Sûdras must never be greeted in the manner prescribed in the preceding rule.

127. Âp. I, 24, 26-29. The rule refers to friends or relatives meeting, not to every one who returns a salute (Gov.).

128. Gaut. VI, 19. The rule refers to the time between the performance of the Dikshazîyesh/i or initiatory ceremony and the final bath on completion of the sacrifice (Medh., Kull.). Besides bhoḥ and bhavat, the titles dikshita or yagamâna are to be used.

the sacred law must use in speaking to such (a man the particle) bho and (the pronoun) bhavat (your worship).

129. But to a female who is the wife of another man, and not a blood-relation, he must say, 'Lady' (bhavati) or 'Beloved sister!'

130. To his maternal and paternal uncles, fathers-in-law, officiating priests, (and other) venerable persons, he must say, 'I am N. N.,' and rise (to meet them), even though they be younger (than himself).

131. A maternal aunt, the wife of a maternal uncle, a mother-in-law, and a paternal aunt must be honoured like the wife of one's teacher; they are equal to the wife of one's teacher.

132. (The feet of the) wife of one's brother, if she be of the same caste (varṇa), must be clasped every day; but (the feet of) wives of (other) paternal and maternal relatives need only be embraced on one's return from a journey.

133. Towards a sister of one's father and of one's mother, and towards one's own elder sister, one must behave as towards one's mother; (but) the mother is more venerable than they.

134. Fellow-citizens are called friends (and equals though one be) ten years (older than the other), men

129. Vi. XXXII, 7.

130. Âp. I, 14, 11; Gaut. VI, 9; Vas. XIII, 41; Baudh. I, 4, 45; Vi. XXXII, 4. Gurūn, '(other) venerable persons, i.e. those venerable on account of their learning and austerities' (Kull., Râgh.), or 'his betters, because they are richer and so forth, e.g. the son of a sister' (Medh.), or 'the husband of a maternal aunt and so forth, but not those more learned than himself' (Gov.), or 'the teacher and the rest' (Nand.), or the 'sub-teachers' (upādhyāya, Nâr.).

131-132. Gaut. VI, 9; Âp. I, 14; Vi. XXXII, 2-3.

134. Âp. I, 14, 13; Gaut. VI, 14-17. Those who are 'friends' practising (the same) fine art (though one be) five years (older than the other), Srottriyas (though) three years (intervene between their ages), but blood-relations only (if the) difference of age be very small.

135. Know that a Brâhmana of ten years and Kshatriya of a hundred years stand to each other in the relation of father and son ; but between those two the Brâhmana is the father.

136. Wealth, kindred, age, (the due performance of) rites, and, fifthly, sacred learning are titles to respect ; but each later-named (cause) is more weighty (than the preceding ones).

137. Whatever man of the three (highest) castes possesses most of those five, both in number and degree, that man is worthy of honour among them ; and (so is) also a Sûdra who has entered the tenth (decade of his life).

138. Way must be made for a man in a carriage, for one who is above ninety years old, for one diseased, for the carrier of a burden, for a woman, for a Snâtaka, for the king, and for a bridegroom.

139. Among all those, if they meet (at one time), a Snâtaka and the king must be (most) honoured ; and equals may address each other with the words bho, bhavat, or vayasya, 'friend.' The explanation of the verse, which is substantially the same in all the commentaries, is based on Gaut.'s passage, while Haradatta's interpretation of Âp. somewhat differs.

135. Âp. I, 14, 25 ; Vi. XXXII, 17.

136. Gaut. VI, 20 ; Vas. XIII, 56-57 ; Vi. XXXII, 16 ; Yâgñ. I, 116.

137. Gaut. VI, 10 ; Yâgñ. I, 116.

138-139. Âp. II, 11, 5-7 ; Gaut. VI, 24-25 ; Vas. XIII, 58-60 ; Baudh. II, 6, 30 ; Vi. LXIII, 51 ; Yâgñ. I, 117. For the explanation of the term Snâtaka, see below, IV, 31.

and if the king and a Snâtaka (meet), the latter receives respect from the king.

✓ 140. They call that Brâhmana who initiates a pupil and teaches him the Veda together with the Kalpa and the Rahasyas, the teacher (âkârya, of the latter).

141. But he who for his livelihood teaches a portion only of the Veda, or also the Ângas of the Veda, is called the sub-teacher (upâdhyâya).

142. That Brâhmana, who performs in accordance with the rules (of the Veda) the rites, the Garbhâdhâna (conception-rite), and so forth, and gives food (to the child), is called the Guru (the venerable one).

143. He who, being (duly) chosen (for the purpose), performs the Agnyâdheya, the Pâkayagñas, (and) the (Srauta) sacrifices, such as the Agnish-toma (for another man), is called (his) officiating priest.

144. That (man) who truthfully fills both his ears with the Veda, (the pupil) shall consider as his father and mother; he must never offend him.

✓ 145. The teacher (âkârya) is ten times more

140-141. Âp. I, 1, 13; Gaut. I, 9-10; Vas. III, 21-23; Vi. XXIX, 1-2; Yâgñ. I, 34-35. Kalpa, i. e. the Sûtras referring to sacrifices. Rahasyas, lit. 'the secret portions,' i. e. the Upanishads and their explanation (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nand., Râgh.), or 'the extremely secret explanation of the Veda and Ângas, not the Upanishads, because they are included in the term Veda' (Nâr).

142. Yâgñ. I, 34. The person meant is the natural father.

143. Vi. XXIX, 3; Yâgñ. I, 35.

144. Âp. I, 1, 14; Vas. II, 10; Vi. XXX, 47. 'Truthfully,' i. e. in such a manner that there is no mistake in the pronunciation or in the text of the Veda.

145. Vas. XIII, 48; Yâgñ. I, 35. The commentators try to reconcile the meaning of this verse and the next following one by venerable than a sub-teacher (upâdhyâya), the father a hundred times more than the teacher, but the mother a thousand times more than the father.

146. Of him who gives natural birth and him who gives (the knowledge of) the Veda, the giver of the Veda is the more venerable father; for the birth for the sake of the Veda (ensures) eternal (rewards) both in this (life) and after death.

147. Let him consider that (he received) a (mere animal) existence, when his parents begat him through mutual affection, and when he was born from the womb (of his mother).

148. But that birth which a teacher acquainted with the whole Veda, in accordance with the law, procures for him through the Sâvitṛī, is real, exempt from age and death.

149. (The pupil) must know that that man also who benefits him by (instruction in) the Veda, be it little or much, is called in these (Institutes) his Guru, in consequence of that benefit (conferred by instruction in) the Veda.

150. That Brâhmaṇa who is the giver of the birth assuming, either that the term âtârya refers in this case to one who merely performs the rite of initiation and teaches the Gâyatrī only (Medh., Kull.), or that the word 'father' denotes a father who initiates his own child and teaches it the Veda (Gov., Nâr.). But it is more probable that two conflicting opinions are here placed side by side, because both are based on an ancient tradition; see Gaut. II, 50-51.

146-148. Âp. I, 1, 15-17; Gaut. I, 8; Vas. II, 3-5; Vi. XXX, 44-45. Nâr. and Nand. read utpâdakabrahmapitroh, 'of the two fathers, i. e. him who procreates the body and him who (gives the birth) for the Veda.'

149. Iha, lit. 'here,' i. e. in these Institutes (Kull.), or 'in the chapter on saluting' (Gov.). But it may also mean 'in this world.'

for the sake of the Veda and the teacher of the prescribed duties becomes by law the father of an aged man, even though he himself be a child.

151. Young Kavi, the son of Aṅgiras, taught his (relatives who were old enough to be) fathers, and, as he excelled them in (sacred) knowledge, he called them 'Little sons.'

152. They, moved with resentment, asked the gods concerning that matter, and the gods, having assembled, answered, 'The child has addressed you properly.'

153. 'For (a man) destitute of (sacred) knowledge is indeed a child, and he who teaches him the Veda is his father; for (the sages) have always said "child" to an ignorant man, and "father" to a teacher of the Veda.'

154. Neither through years, nor through white (hairs), nor through wealth, nor through (powerful) kinsmen (comes greatness). The sages have made this law, 'He who has learnt the Veda together with the Aṅgas (Anûkāṇa) is (considered) great by us.'

155. The seniority of Brāhmaṇas is from (sacred) knowledge, that of Kshatriyas from valour, that of Vaisyas from wealth in grain (and other goods), but that of Sūdras alone from age.

151. Baudh. I, 3, 42. Sisu, 'young,' seems to be a name or nickname in Baudh.'s passage. Parigr̥hya, 'as he excelled them' (Nand.), means according to Medh., Gov., Kull., Nār., and Rāgh. 'as on account of his learning he had received them (as his) pupils.' Pitr̥n, lit. 'fathers,' means according to Nār. 'the manes, i.e. the Agnishvāttas and the rest.'

154. Anûkāṇa, 'who has learnt the Veda and the Aṅgas' (Kull., Nār., Nand., Rāgh.), means according to Medh. and Gov. 'who teaches the Veda and the Aṅgas.'

155. Vi. XXXII, 18.

156. A man is not therefore (considered) venerable because his head is gray; him who, though young, has learned the Veda, the gods consider to be venerable.

157. As an elephant made of wood, as an antelope made of leather, such is an unlearned Brâhmana; those three have nothing but the names (of their kind).

158. As a eunuch is unproductive with women, as a cow with a cow is unprolific, and as a gift made to an ignorant man yields no reward, even so is a Brâhmana useless, who (does) not (know) the Rik̐as.

159. Created beings must be instructed in (what concerns) their welfare without giving them pain, and sweet and gentle speech must be used by (a teacher) who desires (to abide by) the sacred law.

160. He, forsooth, whose speech and thoughts are pure and ever perfectly guarded, gains the whole reward which is conferred by the Vedânta.

161. Let him not, even though in pain, (speak words) cutting (others) to the quick; let him not injure others in thought or deed; let him not utter speeches which make (others) afraid of him, since that will prevent him from gaining heaven.

156. Nâr. and Nand. read sthaviro bhavati, K. sthaviro gñeyo for vṛiddho, 'venerable.'

157. Vas. III, 11; Baudh. I, 1, 10.

158. Rik̐as, i.e. the Veda (Gov., Nâr.).

159. Âp. I, 8, 25-30; Gaut. II, 42. This and the following verses refer in the first instance to the behaviour of the teacher towards his pupils; see also below, VIII, 299-300.

160. The Vedânta are the Upanishads, and the reward meant is 'final liberation' (Gov., Kull., Nâr., Nand., Râgh.). Medh., however, prefers to take Vedânta in the sense of 'the maxims or teaching of the Veda,' and thinks that the reward includes all rewards for Vedic rites.

162. A Brâhmaṇa should always fear homage as if it were poison ; and constantly desire (to suffer) scorn as (he would long for) nectar.

163. For he who is scorned (nevertheless may) sleep with an easy mind, awake with an easy mind, and with an easy mind walk here among men ; but the scorner utterly perishes.

164. A twice-born man who has been sanctified by the (employment of) the means, (described above) in due order, shall gradually and cumulatively perform the various austerities prescribed for (those who) study the Veda.

165. An Âryan must study the whole Veda together with the Rahasyas, performing at the same time various kinds of austerities and the vows prescribed by the rules (of the Veda).

166. Let a Brâhmaṇa who desires to perform austerities, constantly repeat the Veda ; for the study

162. This verse contains an advice to the pupil who must go begging (Medh.).

164. 'The means (described above),' i.e. 'the various sacraments.' Vedâdhigamikam tapaḥ, 'the (various) austerities (prescribed) for (those who study) the Veda,' means according to Nâr. and Nand. 'the austerities, consisting in the study of the Veda ;' see also Âp. I, 12, 1-2.

165. 'The whole Veda,' i.e. 'the Veda with the Aṅgas' (Medh., 'others,' Nâr.), or 'one entire Sâkhâ consisting of the Mantras and the Brâhmaṇa' (Medh., Gov., Kull.). 'Rahasyas,' i.e. 'the Upa-nishads' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nand.), or 'the secret explanation of the Veda' (Nâr.). 'Various kinds of austerities,' i.e. 'fasting, Krikkhras, &c.' (Medh., Nâr., Nand.), or 'the restrictive rules applicable to students' (Medh., 'others,' Gov., Kull.), or 'particular observances, such as feeding a horse while one reads the Asvamedha texts' (Râgh.). 'The vows,' i.e. the Mahânâmnivrata, &c. ; see Sâṅkhâyana Grîhya-sûtra II, 11-13.

166. Âp. I, 12, 1-2 ; Yâgñ. I, 40.

of the Veda is declared (to be) in this world the highest austerity for a Brâhmaṇa.

167. Verily, that twice-born man performs the highest austerity up to the extremities of his nails, who, though wearing a garland, daily recites the Veda in private to the utmost of his ability.

168. A twice-born man who, not having studied the Veda, applies himself to other (and worldly study), soon falls, even while living, to the condition of a Sûdra and his descendants (after him).

169. According to the injunction of the revealed texts the first birth of an Āryan is from (his natural) mother, the second (happens) on the tying of the girdle of Muñga grass, and the third on the initiation to (the performance of) a (Srauta) sacrifice.

170. Among those (three) the birth which is symbolised by the investiture with the girdle of Muñga grass, is his birth for the sake of the Veda; they declare that in that (birth) the Sâvitṛī (verse) is his mother and the teacher his father.

171. They call the teacher (the pupil's) father because he gives the Veda; for nobody can perform a (sacred) rite before the investiture with the girdle of Muñga grass.

172. (He who has not been initiated) should not pronounce (any) Vedic text excepting (those required for) the performance of funeral rites, since he is on a level with a Sûdra before his birth from the Veda.

167. Satapatha-brâhmaṇa XI, 5, 7, 4.

168. Vas. III, 2; Vi. XXVIII, 36.

169-170. Vi. XXVIII, 37-38; Vas. II, 3; Yâgy. I, 39; Aitareya-brâhmaṇa I, 1; Max Müller, Hist. Anc. Sansk. Lit., p. 390 seq.

171-172. Âp. II, 15, 19; Gaut. I, 10; II, 4-5; Vas. II, 4, 6-7; Baudh. I, 3, 6; Vi. XXVIII, 40.

173. The (student) who has been initiated must be instructed in the performance of the vows, and gradually learn the Veda, observing the prescribed rules.

174. Whatever dress of skin, sacred thread, girdle, staff, and lower garment are prescribed for a (student at the initiation), the like (must again be used) at the (performance of the) vows.

175. But a student who resides with his teacher must observe the following restrictive rules, duly controlling all his organs, in order to increase his spiritual merit.

176. Every day, having bathed, and being purified, he must offer libations of water to the gods, sages and manes, worship (the images of) the gods, and place fuel on (the sacred fire).

177. Let him abstain from honey, meat, perfumes, garlands, substances (used for) flavouring (food), women, all substances turned acid, and from doing injury to living creatures,

178. From anointing (his body), applying colly-

173-174. Vi. XXVII, 28. 'The vows,' i.e. 'the observances and the restrictive rules, such as offering fuel, the prohibition of sleeping in the day-time' (Kull., Nâr.), or 'the Veda-vows, the Godâna, &c.' (Medh., Gov., Râgh.), or 'penances, such as the Prâgâpatya' (Nand. and Nâr.). In the second verse Kull. also adopts the explanation of Medh. and Gov.

176-182. Âp. I, 2, 17, 23-30; 3, 11-25; 4, 13-23; Gaut. II, 8-9, 12-17; Vas. VII, 15, 17; Baudh. I, 3, 19-20, 23-24; Vi. XXVIII, 4-5, 11, 48-51; Yâgyñ. I, 25, 33.

177. Rasân, 'substances (used for) flavouring,' i.e. 'molasses and the like' (Gov., Kull., Nâr.), 'clarified butter, oil, and the like' (Nand.). Nâr. adds that others interpret rasân to mean the poetical rasas or sentiments. Medh. mentions the same explanation and two more: (1) spices; (2) juicy fruits and canes like sugar-cane.

rium to his eyes, from the use of shoes and of an umbrella (or parasol), from (sensual) desire, anger, covetousness, dancing, singing, and playing (musical instruments),

179. From gambling, idle disputes, backbiting, and lying, from looking at and touching women, and from hurting others.

180. Let him always sleep alone, let him never waste his manhood; for he who voluntarily wastes his manhood, breaks his vow.

181. A twice-born student, who has involuntarily wasted his manly strength during sleep, must bathe, worship the sun, and afterwards thrice mutter the Rîk-verse (which begins), 'Again let my strength return to me.'

182. Let him fetch a pot full of water, flowers, cowdung, earth, and Kusa grass, as much as may be required (by his teacher), and daily go to beg food.

183. A student, being pure, shall daily bring food from the houses of men who are not deficient in (the knowledge of) the Veda and in (performing) sacrifices, and who are famous for (following their lawful) occupations.

184. Let him not beg from the relatives of his teacher, nor from his own or his mother's blood-relations; but if there are no houses belonging to

179. Ganavâda, 'idle disputes' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'gossiping' (Medh., Nâr.).

180. Vi. XXVIII, 48. Regarding the consequences of committing such an offence, see below, XI, 119-124.

181. Vi. XXVIII, 51. The verse occurs Taitt. Âr. I, 30.

182. Nand. reads udakumbhân, 'pots filled with water.'

183. Baudh. I, 3, 18; Vi. XXVIII, 9; Âp. I, 3, 25; Gaut. II, 35.

184. Gaut. II, 37-38.

strangers, let him go to one of those named above, taking the last-named first ;

185. Or, if there are no (virtuous men of the kind) mentioned above, he may go to each (house in the) village, being pure and remaining silent ; but let him avoid Abhisastas (those accused of mortal sin).

186. Having brought sacred fuel from a distance, let him place it anywhere but on the ground, and let him, unwearied, make with it burnt oblations to the sacred fire, both evening and morning.

187. He who, without being sick, neglects during seven (successive) days to go out begging, and to offer fuel in the sacred fire, shall perform the penance of an Avakīrṇin (one who has broken his vow).

188. He who performs the vow (of studentship) shall constantly subsist on alms, (but) not eat the food of one (person only); the subsistence of a student on begged food is declared to be equal (in merit) to fasting.

189. At his pleasure he may eat, when invited, the food of one man at (a rite) in honour of the

186. 'From a distance,' i.e. 'from a lonely place in the forest not defiled by any impurities.' Vihāyasi, 'anywhere but on the ground,' means lit. 'in the air,' and is explained variously by 'on the roof of the house' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), 'on a platform and the like' (Nār.), 'in the open air' (Nand.), 'in any pure place except on the ground' (Rāgh.). The purpose is, as most commentators think, to preserve the wood from defilement. But, according to 'others,' quoted by Medh., with whom Nand. seems to agree, the object is to let it become dry in the open air.

187. Vi. XXVIII, 52; Yâgñ. III, 281. The penance for an Avakīrṇin is mentioned below, XI, 119-120.

188. Yâgñ. I, 32.

189. Yâgñ. I, 32. 'Observing the conditions of his vow,' i.e. 'avoiding honey, meat, and the like.' Rishivat, 'like a hermit' (Medh., Gov., Nār., Nand.), or 'like an ascetic' (yati, Kull.).

gods, observing (however the conditions of) his vow, or at a (funeral meal) in honour of the manes, behaving (however) like a hermit.

190. This duty is prescribed by the wise for a Brâhmaṇa only; but no such duty is ordained for a Kshatriya and a Vaisya.

191. Both when ordered by his teacher, and without a (special) command, (a student) shall always exert himself in studying (the Veda), and in doing what is serviceable to his teacher.

192. Controlling his body, his speech, his organs (of sense), and his mind, let him stand with joined hands, looking at the face of his teacher.

193. Let him always keep his right arm uncovered, behave decently and keep his body well covered, and when he is addressed (with the words), 'Be seated,' he shall sit down, facing his teacher.

194. In the presence of his teacher let him always eat less, wear a less valuable dress and ornaments

According to Gov., Nâr., and Nand., the last phrase means that the student is to eat at a funeral dinner a little wild-growing rice and other food fit for a hermit (munyanna), while Medh. and Kull. think that the two phrases prohibit the eating of forbidden food only.

190. 'This duty' refers to the permission given in verse 189. According to Nâr. 'others,' however, thought that this verse annulled the rule given in verse 188.

191. Âp. I, 5, 27, 4, 23; Gaut. I, 54; II, 29-30; Vi. XXVIII, 6-7; Yâgy. I, 27.

193. Âp. I, 6, 18-20. I read, with Medh., Kull., and Râgh., susamvriṭaḥ, and translate it according to the latter two, 'keep his body well covered.' Medh. explains it, 'well guarding himself (in his speech).' Nâr. and K. read like the editions, susamyataḥ, and Nand. samâhitaḥ, 'concentrating his mind.' Gov. seems to have had the same reading as Nâr.

194. Âp. I, 4, 22, 28; Gaut. II, 21; Baudh. I, 3, 21; Vi. XXVIII, 13.

(than the former), and let him rise earlier (from his bed), and go to rest later.

195. Let him not answer or converse with (his teacher), reclining on a bed, nor sitting, nor eating, nor standing, nor with an averted face.

196. Let him do (that), standing up, if (his teacher) is seated, advancing towards him when he stands, going to meet him if he advances, and running after him when he runs;

197. Going (round) to face (the teacher), if his face is averted, approaching him if he stands at a distance, but bending towards him if he lies on a bed, and if he stands in a lower place.

198. When his teacher is nigh, let his bed or seat be low; but within sight of his teacher he shall not sit carelessly at ease.

199. Let him not pronounce the mere name of his teacher (without adding an honorific title) behind his back even, and let him not mimic his gait, speech, and deportment.

200. Wherever (people) justly censure or falsely defame his teacher, there he must cover his ears or depart thence to another place.

201. By censuring (his teacher), though justly, he

195-197. Âp. I, 6, 5-9; Gaut. II, 25-28; Vas. VII, 12; Baudh. I, 3, 38; Vi. XXVIII, 18-22.

197. Nidese tish/hatah, 'if he stands in a lower place' (Nâr., Nand.), means according to Medh., Gov., Kull., and Râgh. 'if he stands close.'

198. Âp. I, 2, 21, 6, 13-17; Gaut. II, 14-15, 21; Vi. XXVIII, 12, 23.

199. Gaut. II, 23; Vi. XXVIII, 24-25. The epithets to be added to the teacher's name are upâdhyâya, bha/ta (Medh.), âtârya (Kull.), or karana and the like (Nâr.).

200. Vi. XXVIII, 26.

201. Paribhoktâ, 'he who lives on his teacher's substance,' means will become (in his next birth) an ass, by falsely defaming him, a dog; he who lives on his teacher's substance, will become a worm, and he who is envious (of his merit), a (larger) insect.

202. He must not serve the (teacher by the intervention of another) while he himself stands aloof, nor when he (himself) is angry, nor when a woman is near; if he is seated in a carriage or on a (raised) seat, he must descend and afterwards salute his (teacher).

203. Let him not sit with his teacher, to the leeward or to the windward (of him); nor let him say anything which his teacher cannot hear.

204. He may sit with his teacher in a carriage drawn by oxen, horses, or camels, on a terrace, on a bed of grass or leaves, on a mat, on a rock, on a wooden bench, or in a boat.

205. If his teacher's teacher is near, let him behave (towards him) as towards his own teacher; but let him, unless he has received permission from his teacher, not salute venerable persons of his own (family).

206. This is likewise (ordained as) his constant behaviour towards (other) instructors in science, towards his relatives (to whom honour is due), according to Nâr. and Nand. 'he who eats without the teacher's permission the best food, obtained by begging.' The latter explanation is supported by the meaning of the preposition 'pari' in parivettâ and paryâdhâtâ.

202. 'Nor when a woman is near,' i.e. 'if the teacher is in the company of his wife.'

203. Âp. I, 6, 15.

204. Âp. I, 7, 7, 12-13; Vi. XXVIII, 27-28.

205. Âp. I, 7, 29-30, 8, 19-20; Vi. XXVIII, 29-30.

206. Âp. I, 8, 28.

the teacher; but those who belong to a different caste, must be honoured by rising and salutation.

211. Let him not perform for a wife of his teacher (the offices of) anointing her, assisting her in the bath, shampooing her limbs, or arranging her hair.

212. (A pupil) who is full twenty years old, and knows what is becoming and unbecoming, shall not salute a young wife of his teacher (by clasping) her feet.

213. It is the nature of women to seduce men in this (world); for that reason the wise are never unguarded in (the company of) females.

214. For women are able to lead astray in (this) world not only a fool, but even a learned man, and (to make) him a slave of desire and anger.

215. One should not sit in a lonely place with one's mother, sister, or daughter; for the senses are powerful, and master even a learned man.

216. But at his pleasure a young student may prostrate himself on the ground before the young wife of a teacher, in accordance with the rule, and say, 'I, N. N., (worship thee, O lady).'

217. On returning from a journey he must clasp the feet of his teacher's wife and daily salute her (in the manner just mentioned), remembering the duty of the virtuous.

218. As the man who digs with a spade (into the ground) obtains water, even so an obedient (pupil) obtains the knowledge which lies (hidden) in his teacher.

219. A (student) may either shave his head, or

216-217. Vi. XXXII, 13-15.

219. Gaut. I, 27; Vas. VII, 11; Vi. XXVIII, 41; Âp. I, 30, 8; Gaut. II, 10. Instead of 'while (he sleeps) in the village' (Medh.

wear his hair in braids, or braid one lock on the crown of his head; the sun must never set or rise while he (lies asleep) in the village.

220. If the sun should rise or set while he is sleeping, be it (that he offended) intentionally or unintentionally, he shall fast during the (next) day, muttering (the Sâvitri).

221. For he who lies (sleeping), while the sun sets or rises, and does not perform (that) penance, is tainted by great guilt.

222. Purified by sipping water, he shall daily worship during both twilights with a concentrated mind in a pure place, muttering the prescribed text according to the rule.

223. If a woman or a man of low caste perform anything (leading to) happiness, let him diligently practise it, as well as (any other permitted act) in which his heart finds pleasure.

224. (Some declare that) the chief good consists in (the acquisition of) spiritual merit and wealth, (others place it) in (the gratification of) desire and (the acquisition of) wealth, (others) in (the acqui-

'others,' Kull., Râgh.). Medh., Gov., Nâr., and Nand. give 'while (he stays) in the village.' The former explanation is, however, more probable on account of the following verse.

220. Âp. II, 12, 13-14; Gaut. XXIII, 21; Vas. XX, 4; Baudh. II, 7, 16; Vi. XXVIII, 53. The translation of the last words follows Gov. and Kull., while Medh., Nâr., and Râgh. state that the penance shall be performed during 'the (next) day (or night),' and that he who neglects the evening prayer, shall fast in the evening and repeat the Gâyatri during the night. The parallel passages show that a difference of opinion existed with respect to the performance of this penance.

221. Vas. I, 18; Âp. II, 12, 22.

222. Âp. I, 30, 8; Gaut. II, 11; Baudh. II, 7; Vi. XXVIII, 2.

223. Âp. II, 29, 11.

sition of) spiritual merit alone, and (others say that the acquisition of) wealth alone is the chief good here (below); but the (correct) decision is that it consists of the aggregate of (those) three.

225. The teacher, the father, the mother, and an elder brother must not be treated with disrespect, especially by a Brâhmaṇa, though one be grievously offended (by them).

226. The teacher is the image of Brahman, the father the image of Praṇapati (the lord of created beings), the mother the image of the earth, and an (elder) full brother the image of oneself.

227. That trouble (and pain) which the parents undergo on the birth of (their) children, cannot be compensated even in a hundred years.

228. Let him always do what is agreeable to those (two) and always (what may please) his teacher; when those three are pleased, he obtains all (those rewards which) austerities (yield).

229. Obedience towards those three is declared to be the best (form of) austerity; let him not perform other meritorious acts without their permission.

230. For they are declared to be the three worlds, they the three (principal) orders, they the three Vedas, and they the three sacred fires.

231. The father, forsooth, is stated to be the Gârhapatya fire, the mother the Dakshinâgni, but

225. Âp. I, 14, 6; Vi. XXXI, 1-3. This verse is placed by Kull. alone after the following one, while all the other commentators as well as K. observe the order followed above.

229. Vi. XXXI, 6.

230. Vi. XXXI, 7. 'The three worlds,' i.e. 'the earth, the middle sphere, and the sky;' 'the three orders,' i.e. 'the first three orders' (Kull., Nâr., Nand.), 'the last three orders' (Medh., Gov.).

231. Âp. I, 3, 44; Vi. XXXI, 8.

the teacher the Âhavanîya fire ; this triad of fires is most venerable.

232. He who neglects not those three, (even after he has become) a householder, will conquer the three worlds and, radiant in body like a god, he will enjoy bliss in heaven.

✓ 233. By honouring his mother he gains this (nether) world, by honouring his father the middle sphere, but by obedience to his teacher the world of Brahman.

234. All duties have been fulfilled by him who honours those three ; but to him who honours them not, all rites remain fruitless.

235. As long as those three live, so long let him not (independently) perform any other (meritorious acts) ; let him always serve them, rejoicing (to do what is) agreeable and beneficial (to them).

236. He shall inform them of everything that with their consent he may perform in thought, word, or deed for the sake of the next world.

237. By (honouring) these three all that ought to be done by man, is accomplished ; that is clearly the highest duty, every other (act) is a subordinate duty.

✓ 238. He who possesses faith may receive pure learning even from a man of lower caste, the highest

232. Vi. XXXI, 9.

233. Vi. XXXI, 10.

238. Âp. II, 29, 11. 'The highest law,' i.e. 'the means of obtaining final liberation' (Kull.) ; but Medh., Gov., and Râgh. refer the expression to advice in worldly matters. 'From a base family,' i.e. 'from a family where the sacred rites are neglected' (Medh.), 'from one that is lower than oneself' (Kull.), 'from the family of a potter or a similar (low caste),' (Gov.) But probably the rule refers to the practice to take particularly desirable brides even from the families of outcasts ; see Vas. XIII, 51-53.

law even from the lowest, and an excellent wife even from a base family.

239. Even from poison nectar may be taken, even from a child good advice, even from a foe (a lesson in) good conduct, and even from an impure (substance) gold.

240. Excellent wives, learning, (the knowledge of) the law, (the rules of) purity, good advice, and various arts may be acquired from anybody.

241. It is prescribed that in times of distress (a student) may learn (the Veda) from one who is not a Brâhmana; and that he shall walk behind and serve (such a) teacher, as long as the instruction lasts. ✓

242. He who desires incomparable bliss (in heaven) shall not dwell during his whole life in (the house of) a non-Brâhmanical teacher, nor with a Brâhmana who does not know the whole Veda and the Ângas.

243. But if (a student) desires to pass his whole life in the teacher's house, he must diligently serve him, until he is freed from this body.

244. A Brâhmana who serves his teacher till the dissolution of his body, reaches forthwith the eternal mansion of Brahman.

245. He who knows the sacred law must not present any gift to his teacher before (the Samâvar-tana); but when, with the permission of his teacher, he is about to take the (final) bath, let him procure

240. Striyo ratnâni, 'excellent wives' (Kull., Râgh.), means according to Medh. and Gov. 'wives and gems.'

241. Âp. II, 4, 25; Gaut. VII, 1-3; Baudh. I, 3, 41-43.

243. Âp. II, 21, 6; Gaut. III. 5-6; Vas. VII, 4; Baudh. II, 11, 13; Vi. XXVIII, 43; Yâgñ. I, 49.

245. Âp. I, 7, 19; Gaut. II, 48-49; Vi. XXVIII, 42; Yâgñ. I, 51.

(a present) for the venerable man according to his ability,

246. (Viz.) a field, gold, a cow, a horse, a parasol and shoes, a seat, grain, (even) vegetables, (and thus) give pleasure to his teacher.

247. (A perpetual student) must, if his teacher dies, serve his son (provided he be) endowed with good qualities, or his widow, or his Sapinda, in the same manner as the teacher.

248. Should none of these be alive, he must serve the sacred fire, standing (by day) and sitting (during the night), and thus finish his life.

249. A Brāhmaṇa who thus passes his life as a student without breaking his vow, reaches (after death) the highest abode and will not be born again in this world.

CHAPTER III.

1. The vow (of studying) the three Vedas under a teacher must be kept for thirty-six years, or for

246. Most commentators read pritimāharet for āvahet, and with this reading the translation must be, 'A field, gold . . . he should give to the teacher in order to please him.'

247. Gaut. III, 7; Vi. XXVIII, 44-45; Yâgñ. I, 49. Regarding the term Sapinda, see below, V, 60.

248. Gaut. III, 8; Vas. VII, 5-6; Vi. XXVIII, 46; Yâgñ. I, 49. Sarīram sādhayet, 'shall finish his life' (Medh., Gov.), means according to Kull. 'shall make the soul connected with his body perfect, i.e. fit for the union with Brahman.' Nâr. and Râgh. take the word similarly.

249. Vi. XXVIII, 49; Yâgñ. I, 50.

III. 1. Âp. I, 2, 12-16; Gaut. II, 45-47; Vas. VIII, 1; Baudh. I, 3, 1-4; Vi. XXVIII, 42; Yâgñ. I, 36.

The three Vedas meant are the Rig-veda, Yagur-veda, and Sâma-veda. The Atharva-veda is here, as in most of the ancient Dharma-sûtras, left out altogether. Baudhâyana, alone, states that half that time, or for a quarter, or until the (student) has perfectly learnt them.

2. (A student) who has studied in due order the three Vedas, or two, or even one only, without breaking the (rules of) studentship, shall enter the order of householders.

3. He who is famous for (the strict performance of) his duties and has received his heritage, the Veda, from his father, shall be honoured, sitting on a couch and adorned with a garland, with (the present of) a cow (and the honey-mixture).

4. Having bathed, with the permission of his teacher, and performed according to the rule the Samâvartana (the rite on returning home), a twice-born man shall marry a wife of equal caste who is endowed with auspicious (bodily) marks.

5. A (damsel) who is neither a Sapindâ on the mother's side, nor belongs to the same family on the term of studentship extends over forty-eight years, and that rule includes the Atharva-veda.

2. Yâgñ. I, 52.

3. The meaning is, that the student who, after completing his term, has become a Snâtaka, shall receive first, i.e. before his marriage, the honour of the Madhuparka (Âp. II, 8, 5-9) from the person who instructed him. The phrase 'who has received his heritage, the Veda, from his father,' indicates, according to the commentators, that, as a rule, the father is to teach his son. As, however, the teacher is considered the spiritual father of his pupil, pituḥ might also be translated 'from his (spiritual) father.'

4. Gaut. IV, 1; Vas. VIII, 1; Yâgñ. I, 52. Regarding the 'auspicious bodily marks,' see Sâṅkhâya, Gṛhya-sûtra I, 5, 10. See also below, vers. 7-10.

5. Âp. II, 11, 15-16; Gaut. IV, 2-5; Vas. VIII, 1-2; Baudh. II, 1, 32-38; Vi. XXIV, 9-10; Yâgñ. I, 53.

Asagotrâ ka yâ pituḥ, 'who does not belong to the same family on the father's side,' means according to Medh. and Kull. 'between whose father's and the bridegroom's family no blood-relationship is the father's side, is recommended to twice-born men for wedlock and conjugal union.

6. In connecting himself with a wife, let him carefully avoid the ten following families, be they ever so great, or rich in kine, horses, sheep, grain, or (other) property,

7. (Viz.) one which neglects the sacred rites, one in which no male children (are born), one in which the Veda is not studied, one (the members of) which have thick hair on the body, those which are subject to hemorrhoids, phthisis, weakness of digestion, epilepsy, or white and black leprosy.

8. Let him not marry a maiden (with) reddish (hair), nor one who has a redundant member, nor one who is sickly, nor one either with no hair (on the body) or too much, nor one who is garrulous or has red (eyes),

9. Nor one named after a constellation, a tree, or a river, nor one bearing the name of a low caste, or of a mountain, nor one named after a bird, a traceable.' It is, however, very probable that gotra has a double meaning, vaidika and laukika gotra, and that, in the case of Brâhmanas, intermarriages between families descended from the same Rîshi, and, in the case of other Âryans, between families bearing the same name or known to be connected, are forbidden. Kull., Nâr., and Râgh. hold that the first ka, 'and,' indicates that asagotrâ refers to the mother's side also, and Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., and Râgh. think that on account of the second ka, the word asapindâ must be taken to refer to the father's side also, and that thus intermarriages with the daughter of a paternal aunt or with the paternal grandfather's sister's descendants are forbidden. Maithune, 'for conjugal union' (Medh., Gov., Nâr.), means according to Kull. and Râgh. 'for the holy rites to be performed by the husband and wife together.' Nand. reads amaithuni, 'one who is a virgin.' Regarding the term Sapinda, see below, V, 60.

7. Vi. XXIV, 11; Yâgñ. I, 54.

8. Yâgñ. I, 53; Vi. XXIV, 12-16.

snake, or a slave, nor one whose name inspires terror.

10. Let him wed a female free from bodily defects, who has an agreeable name, the (graceful) gait of a Hamsa or of an elephant, a moderate (quantity of) hair on the body and on the head, small teeth, and soft limbs.

11. But a prudent man should not marry (a maiden) who has no brother, nor one whose father is not known, through fear lest (in the former case she be made) an appointed daughter (and in the latter) lest (he should commit) sin.

12. For the first marriage of twice-born men (wives) of equal caste are recommended; but for those who through desire proceed (to marry again) the following females, (chosen) according to the (direct) order (of the castes), are most approved.

13. It is declared that a Sûdra woman alone (can be) the wife of a Sûdra, she and one of his own caste (the wives) of a Vaisya, those two and one of his own caste (the wives) of a Kshatriya, those three and one of his own caste (the wives) of a Brâhmaṇa.

11. Yâgñ. I, 53. 'Lest he should commit sin,' i.e. marry a Sagotrâ or one sprung from an illicit union. The translation follows Kull., Nâr., Râgh., and 'others' mentioned by Medh. But Medh. himself takes the verse differently, 'A prudent man should not marry a (maiden) who has no brother, if her father is not known (i.e. is dead or absent), through fear lest she be made an appointed daughter;' while Gov. explains it as follows, 'A prudent man should not marry a (maiden) who has no brother or whose father is not known, through fear lest she be made an appointed daughter.' According to the latter it would be possible, in case the father is not known, that she might be only the half-sister of her brother, and her real father, having no children, might make her an appointed daughter.

12. Vi. XXIV, 1-4; Baudh. I, 16, 2-5.

13. Yâgñ. I, 56; Vas. I, 25-26.

14. A Sûdra woman is not mentioned even in any (ancient) story as the (first) wife of a Brâhmaṇa or of a Kṣatriya, though they lived in the (greatest) distress.

15. Twice-born men who, in their folly, wed wives of the low (Sûdra) caste, soon degrade their families and their children to the state of Sûdras.

16. According to Atri and to (Gautama) the son of Utathya, he who weds a Sûdra woman becomes an outcast, according to Saunaka on the birth of a son, and according to Bhrigu he who has (male) offspring from a (Sûdra female, alone).

17. A Brâhmaṇa who takes a Sûdra wife to his bed, will (after death) sink into hell; if he begets a child by her, he will lose the rank of a Brâhmaṇa.

18. The manes and the gods will not eat the (offerings) of that man who performs the rites in

14. Vas. I, 27; Gaut. XV, 18; Âp. I, 18, 33.

15. Vi. XXV, 6.

16. Baudh. II, 2-7. The above translation follows Medh., Gov., Nand., and Râgh. But Kull. takes the last clause differently, 'according to Bhrigu on the birth of a son's son.' This version is supported, as a quotation given by Nâr. shows, by the Bhaviṣya-purâṇa, which, as usual, paraphrases Manu's text, putrasya putram âsâdya Saunakaḥ sûdratâm gataḥ | bhrigvâdayo 'py evam eva patitatvam avâpnuyuh || There was, moreover, as this passage shows, an ancient explanation of our verse, according to which the various names of Rîshis do not refer to authors of law-books, but to founders of Gotras. This view is adopted by Nâr., and, according to him, the translation should run as follows: '(A man of the family) of Atri who weds a Sûdra female, becomes an outcast, (one of the race) of Utathya's son, on the birth of a son, and (one of) Saunaka's or Bhrigu's (Gotras) by having no other but Sûdra offspring.' It ought to be noted that, according to Kull. alone, the three clauses refer to Brâhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas, and Vaiśyas respectively. Râgh. particularly objects to this opinion, which, according to him, 'some' hold.

18. Vas. XIV, 11; Vi. XXV, 7.

honour of the gods, of the manes, and of guests chiefly with a (Sûdra wife's) assistance, and such (a man) will not go to heaven.

19. For him who drinks the moisture of a Sûdra's lips, who is tainted by her breath, and who begets a son on her, no expiation is prescribed.

20. Now listen to (the) brief (description of) the following eight marriage-rites used by the four castes (varṇa) which partly secure benefits and partly produce evil both in this life and after death.

21. (They are) the rite of Brahman (Brâhma), that of the gods (Daiva), that of the Rishis (Ârsha), that of Pragâpati (Prâgâpatya), that of the Asuras (Âsura), that of the Gandharvas (Gândharva), that of the Râkshasas (Râkshasa), and that of the Pisâkas (Paisâka).

22. Which is lawful for each caste (varṇa) and which are the virtues or faults of each (rite), all this I will declare to you, as well as their good and evil results with respect to the offspring.

23. One may know that the first six according to the order (followed above) are lawful for a Brâhmaṇa, the four last for a Kshatriya, and the same four, excepting the Râkshasa rite, for a Vaisya and a Sûdra.

24. The sages state that the first four are approved (in the case) of a Brâhmaṇa, one, the Râkshasa (rite

21-34. Âp. II, 11, 17-21; Gaut. IV, 6-15; Vas. I, 17-35; Baudh. I, 20, 1-21, 23; Vi. XXIV, 18-28; Yâgñ. I, 58-61.

23. It seems extremely probable that this and the next three verses contain, as Sir W. Jones thinks, several conflicting opinions on the permissibility of the different marriage rites. The commentators, however, try to reconcile them by various tricks of interpretation.

in the case) of a Kshatriya, and the Âsura (marriage in that) of a Vaisya and of a Sûdra.

25. But in these (Institutes of the sacred law) three of the five (last) are declared to be lawful and two unlawful; the Paisâka and the Âsura (rites) must never be used.

26. For Kshatriyas those before-mentioned two rites, the Gândharva and the Râkshasa, whether separate or mixed, are permitted by the sacred tradition.

27. The gift of a daughter, after decking her (with costly garments) and honouring (her by presents of jewels), to a man learned in the Veda and of good conduct, whom (the father) himself invites, is called the Brâhma rite.

28. The gift of a daughter who has been decked with ornaments, to a priest who duly officiates at a sacrifice, during the course of its performance, they call the Daiva rite.

29. When (the father) gives away his daughter according to the rule, after receiving from the bridegroom, for (the fulfilment of) the sacred law, a cow and a bull or two pairs, that is named the Ârsha rite.

30. The gift of a daughter (by her father) after

26. 'Mixed,' i. e. when a girl is forcibly abducted from her father's house after a previous understanding with her lover.

27. Nâr. and Râgh. refer arṇayitvâ, 'after honouring,' to the bridegroom, and take it in the sense of 'after honouring (the bridegroom with the honey-mixture).'

29. 'For the (fulfilment of) the sacred law,' i. e. 'not with the intention of selling his child' (Medh.); see also below, vers. 51-54. 'According to the rule,' i. e. 'pronouncing the words prescribed for making a gift' (Nâr.).

30. 'Has shown honour,' i. e. 'to the bridegroom by the honey-mixture' (Nâr., Nand.).

he has addressed (the couple) with the text, 'May both of you perform together your duties,' and has shown honour (to the bridegroom), is called in the Smṛiti the Prāgāpatya rite.

31. When (the bridegroom) receives a maiden, after having given as much wealth as he can afford, to the kinsmen and to the bride herself, according to his own will, that is called the Āsura rite.

32. The voluntary union of a maiden and her lover one must know (to be) the Gāndharva rite, which springs from desire and has sexual intercourse for its purpose.

33. The forcible abduction of a maiden from her home, while she cries out and weeps, after (her kinsmen) have been slain or wounded and (their houses) broken open, is called the Rākshasa rite.

34. When (a man) by stealth seduces a girl who is sleeping, intoxicated, or disordered in intellect, that is the eighth, the most base and sinful rite of the Pisākas.

31. 'According to his own will,' i. e. 'not in accordance with the injunction of the sacred law, as in the case of the Ārsha rite' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Nand.).

32. Gov. and Nâr. here enter on a discussion of the question whether the prescribed offerings and wedding ceremonies are to be performed in the case of the Gāndharva, Rākshasa, and Paisāka rites. Relying on a passage of Devala and of the Bahvṛika Gr̥hya-pariśiṣṭa (Saunaka) they are of opinion that the homas must be performed, at least in the case of Āryan couples. But they hold on the strength of Manu's dictum, VIII, 226, which restricts the use of the Mantras to women, married as virgins, that the Vedic nuptial texts must not be recited. From the comment of Medh. on verse 34 it would appear that the opinions on the subject were divided, and that some held weddings with the recitation of Mantras to be permissible, while others denied the necessity of any wedding.

35. The gift of daughters among Brâhmanas is most approved, (if it is preceded) by (a libation of) water; but in the case of other castes (it may be performed) by (the expression of) mutual consent.

36. Listen now to me, ye Brâhmanas, while I fully declare what quality has been ascribed by Manu to each of these marriage-rites.

37. The son of a wife wedded according to the Brâhma rite, if he performs meritorious acts, liberates from sin ten ancestors, ten descendants and himself as the twenty-first.

38. The son born of a wife, wedded according to the Daiva rite, likewise (saves) seven ancestors and seven descendants, the son of a wife married by the Ârsha rite three (in the ascending and descending lines), and the son of a wife married by the rite of Ka (Pragâpati) six (in either line).

39. From the four marriages, (enumerated) successively, which begin with the Brâhma rite spring sons, radiant with knowledge of the Veda and honoured by the Śish/as (good men).

40. Endowed with the qualities of beauty and goodness, possessing wealth and fame, obtaining as

35. Itaretarakâmyayâ, 'by (the expression of) mutual consent,' i.e. by the parents, means according to Medh. 'in consequence of the mutual desire of the bride and the bridegroom.' He mentions, however, the other explanation too. The text refers probably to customs like the sending of a cocoa-nut, which is usually adopted by Kshatriyas.

37-42. Vi. XXIV, 29-32; Gaut. IV, 29-33; Baudh. I, 21, 1; Âp. II, 12, 4; Yâgñ. I, 58-60, 90.

39. Regarding the explanation of the term Śish/as, see below, XII, 109.

40. Gov. and Kull. take the first adjective differently, 'endowed with beauty, goodness, and other excellent qualities.' Regarding the term 'goodness' (sattva), see below, XII, 31.

many enjoyments as they desire and being most righteous, they will live a hundred years.

41. But from the remaining (four) blamable marriages spring sons who are cruel and speakers of untruth, who hate the Veda and the sacred law.

42. In the blameless marriages blameless children are born to men, in blamable (marriages) blamable (offspring); one should therefore avoid the blamable (forms of marriage).

43. The ceremony of joining the hands is prescribed for (marriages with) women of equal caste (varṇa); know that the following rule (applies) to weddings with females of a different caste (varṇa).

44. On marrying a man of a higher caste a Kshatriya bride must take hold of an arrow, a Vaisya bride of a goad, and a Sūdra female of the hem of the (bridegroom's) garment.

45. Let (the husband) approach his wife in due season, being constantly satisfied with her (alone); he may also, being intent on pleasing her, approach her with a desire for conjugal union (on any day) excepting the Parvans.

46. Sixteen (days and) nights (in each month),

43. Vi. XXIV, 5-8; Yâgñ. I, 62.

44. The bridegroom takes hold of the other end of the arrow or of the goad, pronouncing the same texts which are recited on taking the hand of a bride of equal caste (Nâr.).

45. Yâgñ. I, 80-81; Âp. II, 1, 17-18; Gaut. V, 1-2; Vas. XII, 21-24; Vi. LXIX, 1; Baudh. IV, 17-19. Tadvratah, 'being intent on pleasing her' (Medh., Kull.), means according to Nâr. 'being careful to keep that rule (regarding the Parvans).' With respect to the Parvans, see below, IV, 128.

46. Yâgñ. I, 79. The days which the virtuous declared to be unfit for conjugal intercourse are the first four after the appearance of the menses.

including four days which differ from the rest and are censured by the virtuous, (are called) the natural season of women.

47. But among these the first four, the eleventh and the thirteenth are (declared to be) forbidden; the remaining nights are recommended.

48. On the even nights sons are conceived and daughters on the uneven ones; hence a man who desires to have sons should approach his wife in due season on the even (nights).

49. A male child is produced by a greater quantity of male seed, a female child by the prevalence of the female; if (both are) equal, a hermaphrodite or a boy and a girl; if (both are) weak or deficient in quantity, a failure of conception (results).

50. He who avoids women on the six forbidden nights and on eight others, is (equal in chastity to) a student, in whichever order he may live.

51. No father who knows (the law) must take even the smallest gratuity for his daughter; for a man who, through avarice, takes a gratuity, is a seller of his offspring.

52. But those (male) relations who, in their folly, live on the separate property of women, (e. g. appropriate) the beasts of burden, carriages, and clothes of women, commit sin and will sink into hell.

48. Yâgñ. I, 79.

50. 'In whichever order he may live,' i.e. 'whether he be a householder or a hermit in the woods' (Kull., Nâr.). Medh. thinks that it is merely an arthavâda, and refers to no other order but that of householders, while Govinda thinks that the verse permits even to an ascetic who has lost all his children, to approach his wife during two nights in each month. Kull. justly ridicules the last opinion.

51. Âp. II, 13, 11; Vas. I, 37-38; Baudh. I, 21, 2-3.

52. Medh. gives in the first place another explanation of this

53. Some call the cow and the bull (given) at an Ârsha wedding 'a gratuity;' (but) that is wrong, since (the acceptance of) a fee, be it small or great, is a sale (of the daughter).

54. When the relatives do not appropriate (for their use) the gratuity (given), it is not a sale; (in that case) the (gift) is only a token of respect and of kindness towards the maidens.

55. Women must be honoured and adorned by their fathers, brothers, husbands, and brothers-in-law, who desire (their own) welfare.

56. Where women are honoured, there the gods are pleased; but where they are not honoured, no sacred rite yields rewards.

57. Where the female relations live in grief, the family soon wholly perishes; but that family where they are not unhappy ever prospers.

58. The houses on which female relations, not being duly honoured, pronounce a curse, perish completely, as if destroyed by magic.

59. Hence men who seek (their own) welfare, should always honour women on holidays and festivals with (gifts of) ornaments, clothes, and (dainty) food.

verse, which Nâr. and Nand. consider the only admissible one: 'But those (male) relations who, in their folly, live on property obtained by (the sale of) women, (e. g.) carriages or beasts of burden and clothes (received for) females, commit sin, &c.' Nand. and K. read nârîr yânâni, 'female slaves, carriages, &c.' The objection to Nâr.'s explanation is that nârîyânâni can hardly mean 'carriages received for females.' The reading 'nârîh' is obviously a conjectural emendation.

53. Âp. II, 13, 12; Vas. I, 36.

55-60. Yâgñ. I, 82.

58. Some copies of Medh. omit verses 58-66.

59. Instead of satkāreshu (saṃkāreshu, Gov.), 'on holidays,' like the Kaumudî, the Mahânâmni, and so forth (Gov., Kull., Râgh.),

60. In that family, where the husband is pleased with his wife and the wife with her husband, happiness will assuredly be lasting.

61. For if the wife is not radiant with beauty, she will not attract her husband; but if she has no attractions for him, no children will be born.

62. If the wife is radiant with beauty, the whole house is bright; but if she is destitute of beauty, all will appear dismal.

63. By low marriages, by omitting (the performance of) sacred rites, by neglecting the study of the Veda, and by irreverence towards Brâhmanas, (great) families sink low.

64. By (practising) handicrafts, by pecuniary transactions, by (begetting) children on Sûdra females only, by (trading in) cows, horses, and carriages, by (the pursuit of) agriculture and by taking service under a king,

65. By sacrificing for men unworthy to offer sacrifices and by denying (the future rewards for good) works, families, deficient in the (knowledge of the) Veda, quickly perish.

66. But families that are rich in the knowledge of the Veda, though possessing little wealth, are numbered among the great, and acquire great fame.

Nâr. and Nand. read satkâreṇa, which, according to the former, means 'by kind speech.'

64. Baudh. I, 10, 28. Nâr. says, 'by (keeping) beasts of burden, such as bullocks and horses.'

65. Baudh. I, 10, 26. Instead of kuḷâny âsu vinyasyanti, 'families . . . perish quickly' (Gov., Kull.), Nâr., Nand., and Râgh. read kuḷâny akulatâm yânti, '(great) families lose their rank.'

66. Baudh. I, 10, 29.

67. With the sacred fire, kindled at the wedding, a householder shall perform according to the law the domestic ceremonies and the five (great) sacrifices, and (with that) he shall daily cook his food.

68. A householder has five slaughter-houses (as it were, viz.) the hearth, the grinding-stone, the broom, the pestle and mortar, the water-vessel, by using which he is bound (with the fetters of sin).

69. In order to successively expiate (the offences committed by means) of all these (five) the great sages have prescribed for householders the daily (performance of the five) great sacrifices.

70. Teaching (and studying) is the sacrifice (offered) to Brahman, the (offerings of water and food called) Tarpaṇa the sacrifice to the manes, the burnt oblation the sacrifice offered to the gods, the

67. Yâgñ. I, 97; Gaut. V, 7; Vi. LIX, 1; Baudh. II, 4, 22. 'The domestic ceremonies,' i.e. 'all the rites prescribed in the Gṛihya-sūtras.'

68. Vi. LIX, 19. The translation of upaskaraḥ, 'the broom,' rests on the authority of Nâr., who says, peshanena upakiraty asuddhânîty upaskaro 'vaskarahetuḥ ; sammârganî bhūyish/hapipîlikâdihimsâhetuḥ || The other commentators seem to take upaskaraḥ in its usual sense, 'a household implement,' as they explain it by kundaka/âhâdi, 'a pot, a kettle, and the like' (Medh.), kundasammârganyâdi, 'a pot, a broom, and the like' (Kull.), sammârganyâdi, 'a broom and the like' (Râgh.), ulûkhalamusalâdi, 'a mortar and pestle and the like' (K.). But it is clear from the context that one implement only is meant.

69. Vi. LIX, 20.

70. Âp. I, 12, 15-13, 1; Gaut. V, 3, 9; Baudh. II, 5, 11; II, 11, 1-6; Vi. LIX, 21-25; Yâgñ. I, 102. By Bhûtas either 'the goblins' or 'the living creatures' may be understood. Medh. takes it in the former sense. Nand. reads adhyâyanam for adhyâpanam, and adds adhyâyanam evâ 'dhyayanam, 'adhyâyana is the same as adhyayana, studying.'

Bali offering that offered to the Bhûtas, and the hospitable reception of guests the offering to men.

71. He who neglects not these five great sacrifices, while he is able (to perform them), is not tainted by the sins (committed) in the five places of slaughter, though he constantly lives in the (order of) house(-holders).

72. But he who does not feed these five, the gods, his guests, those whom he is bound to maintain, the manes, and himself, lives not, though he breathes.

73. They call (these) five sacrifices also, Ahuta, Huta, Prahuta, Brâhmya-huta, and Prâsita.

74. Ahuta (not offered in the fire) is the muttering (of Vedic texts), Huta the burnt oblation (offered to the gods), Prahuta (offered by scattering it on the ground) the Bali offering given to the Bhûtas, Brâhmya-huta (offered in the digestive fire of Brâhmaṇas), the respectful reception of Brâhmaṇa (guests), and Prâsita (eaten) the (daily oblation to the manes, called) Tarpaya.

75. Let (every man) in this (second order, at least) daily apply himself to the private recitation of the Veda, and also to the performance of the offering to the gods; for he who is diligent in the performance of sacrifices, supports both the movable and the immovable creation.

72. 'Those whom he is bound to maintain,' i. e. 'aged parents and so forth' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), or 'animals unfit for work' (Medh.), or 'the Bhûtas, goblins or living beings' (Nâr., Râgh.). Nand. reads bhûtânâm for bhrityânâm, as Nâr. and Râgh. seem to have done.

73. Medh. remarks that these technical terms must belong to some particular Sâkhâ of the Veda. Two of them occur in the beginning of Baudhâyana's Grihya-sûtra, Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. xxxi, and four in Pâraskara's Grihya-sûtra I, 4, 1, as well as in Sâṅkhâyana's, I, 5, 1. Nâr., Nand., and K. read Brâhmahuta in this and the next verses.

76. An oblation duly thrown into the fire, reaches the sun ; from the sun comes rain, from rain food, therefrom the living creatures (derive their subsistence).

77. As all living creatures subsist by receiving support from air, even so (the members of) all orders subsist by receiving support from the householder.

78. Because men of the three (other) orders are daily supported by the householder with (gifts of) sacred knowledge and food, therefore (the order of) householders is the most excellent order.

79. (The duties of) this order, which cannot be practised by men with weak organs, must be carefully observed by him who desires imperishable (bliss in) heaven, and constant happiness in this (life).

80. The sages, the manes, the gods, the Bhûtas, and guests ask the householders (for offerings and gifts); hence he who knows (the law), must give to them (what is due to each).

81. Let him worship, according to the rule, the sages by the private recitation of the Veda, the gods by burnt oblations, the manes by funeral offerings

76. Vas. XI, 13.

77-78. Vas. VIII, 14-16 ; Vi. LIX, 27-28.

78. Medh. points out that this verse indicates that householders alone are, as a rule, to be the teachers of the Veda, not hermits or ascetics. He adds, however, that the Institutes of the Bhikshus prescribe that men of the latter two orders, too, shall teach. Similarly Nâr. and Nand. point out that householders alone shall be teachers, 'except in times of distress' (Nand.).

79. 'Of weak organs,' i.e. 'of uncontrolled organs' (Medh., Gov., Kull.). Some MSS. of Medh. and Nand. read atyantam, 'excessive,' for nityam, 'constant.'

80. Vi. LIX, 29.

81. Yâgñ. I, 104.

(Srâddha), men by (gifts of) food, and the Bhûtas by the Bali offering.

82. Let him daily perform a funeral sacrifice with food, or with water, or also with milk, roots, and fruits, and (thus) please the manes.

83. Let him feed even one Brâhmaṇa in honour of the manes at (the Srâddha), which belongs to the five great sacrifices; but let him not feed on that (occasion) any Brâhmaṇa on account of the Vaisvadeva offering.

84. A Brâhmaṇa shall offer according to the rule (of his Gṛhya-sûtra a portion) of the cooked food destined for the Vaisvadeva in the sacred domestic fire to the following deities :

85. First to Agni, and (next) to Soma, then to both these gods conjointly, further to all the gods (Visve Devâḥ), and (then) to Dhanvantari,

86. Further to Kuhû (the goddess of the new-moon day), to Anumati (the goddess of the full-moon day), to Pragâpati (the lord of creatures), to heaven and earth conjointly, and finally to Agni Svishtakṛit (the fire which performs the sacrifice well).

82. Vi. LXVII, 23-25.

83. The object of the second part of the verse is to forbid that two sets of Brâhmaṇas are to be fed at the daily Srâddha, as is done at the Pârvana Srâddha, see below, verse 125 seq. Nâr. adds, visveshâm devânâm nityasrâddhe prīṇanam nâstīti darsitam || 'It is indicated (hereby) that the Visvedevas are not gladdened at the daily Srâddha.' Medh., Nand., and Râgh. read kimṛit, 'any (food),' for kaṁṛit, 'any (Brâhmaṇa).'

84. Âp. II, 3, 16; Gaut. V, 10; Vi. LXVII, 3 (see also the Gṛhya-sûtras, quoted by Professor Jolly on the last passage). The term 'a Brâhmaṇa' is not intended to exclude other Âryans (Medh., Nand., Kull., Râgh.).

85. Each offering must be presented with a mantra, consisting of the name of the deity in the dative case and the word 'svâhâ.'

87. After having thus duly offered the sacrificial food, let him throw Bali offerings in all directions of the compass, proceeding (from the east) to the south, to Indra, Yama, Varuṇa, and Soma, as well as to the servants (of these deities).

88. Saying, '(Adoration) to the Maruts,' he shall scatter (some food) near the door, and (some) in water, saying, '(Adoration to the waters;' he shall throw (some) on the pestle and the mortar, speaking thus, '(Adoration) to the trees.'

89. Near the head (of the bed) he shall make an offering to Śrī (fortune), and near the foot (of his bed) to Bhadrakālī; in the centre of the house let him place a Bali for Brahman and for Vāstoshpati (the lord of the dwelling) conjointly.

90. Let him throw up into the air a Bali for all the gods, and (in the day-time one) for the goblins roaming about by day, (and in the evening one) for the goblins that walk at night.

91. In the upper story let him offer a Bali to Sarvātmabhūti; but let him throw what remains (from these offerings) in a southerly direction for the manes.

87-92. Âp. II, 3, 12-15, 18-4, 9; Gaut. V, 11-17; Vi. LXVII, 4-22, 26.

89. Uḁkīrshake, 'near the head of the bed' (Medh., 'others,' Nār., Nand.), means according to Gov., Kull., and Rāgh. 'in the north-eastern portion of the house, where the head of the Vāstupurusha, "the Lar," is situated.' Medh. says that the spot is known as the devasarāṇa. The same authorities refer pādātāḥ, 'at the foot,' to a spot in the south-west part of the building where the Lar keeps his feet.

91. Prishṭhāvāstuni, 'in the upper story,' or (if the house has only one) 'on the top of the house' (Medh.), may also mean according to Gov. and Nār. 'behind the house,' or according to Nand. 'outside the house.' Instead of 'Sarvātmabhūti' (Kull.,

92. Let him gently place on the ground (some food) for dogs, outcasts, Kandâlas (Svapak), those afflicted with diseases that are punishments of former sins, crows, and insects.

93. That Brâhmaṇa who thus daily honours all beings, goes, endowed with a resplendent body, by a straight road to the highest dwelling-place (i. e. Brahman).

94. Having performed this Bali offering, he shall first feed his guest and, according to the rule, give alms to an ascetic (and) to a student.

95. A twice-born householder gains, by giving alms, the same reward for his meritorious act which (a student) obtains for presenting, in accordance with the rule, a cow to his teacher.

Râgh.), Nâr. and Nand. have 'Sarvânubhûti,' Gov. 'Sarvânnabhûti.' Nâr. mentions a various reading 'Sarvânnabhûta,' which seems to have been also Medh.'s version. The same deity occurs Sâṅkhâyaṇa Grîhya-sûtra II, 14, where Professor Oldenberg has Sarvânnabhûti, while the Petersburg Dict. gives Sarvânubhûti. Probably one of the last two readings is the original one, but without further parallel passages it is difficult to say which has to be chosen.

93. Instead of tegomûrtiḥ, 'endowed with a resplendent body,' Kull. and Râgh. read tegomûrti, '(to the highest) resplendent (dwelling-place, i. e. Brahman).'

94. Vi. LIX, 14; LXVII, 27; Vas. XI, 5; Baudh. II, 5, 15; Yâgñ. I, 107. Bhikshave brahmaṣârize, 'to an ascetic and to a student' (Kull., Râgh.), may mean according to Medh. (who gives Kull.'s view also), either 'to a begging student' or 'to an ascetic who is chaste.' Gov. adopts the former explanation. 'According to the rule,' i. e. 'making him wish welfare' (Medh., Nand.); see also Gaut. V, 18.

95. For vidhivad gurau or guroḥ, 'according to the rule, to his teacher,' Nand. reads agor yathâvidhi, 'according to the rule to one who has no cow.' The var. lect. is mentioned by Medh. also. The 'rule' referred to is, according to Gov. and Kull., that given Yâgñ. I, 204.

96. Let him give, in accordance with the rule, to a Brâhmaṇa who knows the true meaning of the Veda, even (a small portion of food as) alms, or a pot full of water, having garnished (the food with seasoning, or the pot with flowers and fruit).

97. The oblations to gods and manes, made by men ignorant (of the law of gifts), are lost, if the givers in their folly present (shares of them) to Brâhmaṇas who are mere ashes.

98. An offering made in the mouth-fire of Brâhmaṇas rich in sacred learning and austerities, saves from misfortune and from great guilt.

99. But let him offer, in accordance with the rule, to a guest who has come (of his own accord) a seat and water, as well as food, garnished (with seasoning), according to his ability.

100. A Brâhmaṇa who stays unhonoured (in the house), takes away (with him) all the spiritual merit even of a man who subsists by gleanings of ears of corn, or offers oblations in five fires.

101. Grass, room (for resting), water, and fourthly a kind word ; these (things) never fail in the houses of good men.

102. But a Brâhmaṇa who stays one night only is declared to be a guest (atithi) ; for because he stays (sthita) not long (anityam), he is called atithi (a guest).

96. Satkrîtya, 'having garnished, &c.' (Kull., Râgh.), means according to Medh. and Gov. 'having honoured the recipient' (with fruits and flowers, Gov.).

97. Vas. III, 8.

99-118. Âp. II, 4, 11, 13-20 ; 6, 5-9 ; Gaut. V, 25-45 ; Vas. VIII, 4-5, 11-15 ; Baudh. II, 5, 11-18 ; 6, 36-37 ; Vi. LXVII, 28-46 ; Yâgñ. I, 104-109, 112-113.

103. One must not consider as a guest a Brâhmana who dwells in the same village, nor one who seeks his livelihood by social intercourse, even though he has come to a house where (there is) a wife, and where sacred fires (are kept).

104. Those foolish householders who constantly seek (to live on) the food of others, become, in consequence of that (baseness), after death the cattle of those who give them food.

105. A guest who is sent by the (setting) sun in the evening, must not be driven away by a householder; whether he have come at (supper-)time or at an inopportune moment, he must not stay in the house without entertainment.

106. Let him not eat any (dainty) food which he does not offer to his guest; the hospitable reception of guests procures wealth, fame, long life, and heavenly bliss.

107. Let him offer (to his guests) seats, rooms,

103. *Sâmgatika*ñ, 'one who seeks his livelihood by social intercourse,' is, according to Gov., Kull., and Râgh., 'one who makes his living by telling wonderful or laughable stories and the like.' Medh. explains the word first by 'he who stays being a fellow-student (sahâdhyâyî),' and afterwards by 'a Vaisya, or Sûdra, or a friend who makes friends with everybody, possessing wonderful or laughable stories and the like, which are indicated by the word samgati.' Nâr. says that samgati means sambandha, 'connexion,' that sâmgatika is 'one who comes for such a reason.' Perhaps the term might be rendered 'a visitor on business or pleasure.' According to Kull. and Râgh., the last clause, 'where (there is) a wife and sacred fires (are kept),' indicates, that a householder who has neither, need not entertain guests. But the words are taken differently by Gov. and Nâr., 'nor him who travels with his wife or his fires' (tathâ yatra yasya pravâsino 'pi bhâryâgnayo vâ saha gakkhanti | etadanyatamam svagrîha upasthitam âgatam apyathi atithim na vidyât | nâtitidharmenârîkayet || Nâr.).

107. Gaut. V, 38. 'The rule refers to the case when many guests beds, attendance on departure and honour (while they stay), to the most distinguished in the best form, to the lower ones in a lower form, to equals in an equal manner.

108. But if another guest comes after the Vaisvadeva offering has been finished, (the householder) must give him food according to his ability, (but) not repeat the Bali offering.

109. A Brâhmaṇa shall not name his family and (Vedic) gotra in order to obtain a meal; for he who boasts of them for the sake of a meal, is called by the wise a foul feeder (vântâsin).

110. But a Kshatriya (who comes) to the house of a Brâhmaṇa is not called a guest (atithi), nor a Vaisya, nor a Sûdra, nor a personal friend, nor a relative, nor the teacher.

111. But if a Kshatriya comes to the house of a Brâhmaṇa in the manner of a guest, (the householder) may feed him according to his desire, after the above-mentioned Brâhmaṇas have eaten.

112. Even a Vaisya and a Sûdra who have approached his house in the manner of guests, he may allow to eat with his servants, showing (thereby) his compassionate disposition.

113. Even to others, personal friends and so forth, who have come to his house out of affection, he may come at the same time.' Upâsanam, 'honour (while they stay),' i. e. 'sitting with them and talking to them' (Medh.).

108. 'When the Vaisvadeva offering has been finished,' i. e. 'when the dinner of the guests is over.'

111. 'In the manner of a guest,' i. e. 'having consumed his provisions while on a journey, being an inhabitant of another village or arriving at meal-time' (Medh., Gov., Kull.).

112. Nâr. says, 'he may cause them to be fed by his servants in the same manner.'

give food, garnished (with seasoning) according to his ability, (at the same time) with his wife.

114. Without hesitation he may give food, even before his guests, to the following persons, (viz.) to newly-married women, to infants, to the sick, and to pregnant women.

115. But the foolish man who eats first without having given food to these (persons) does, while he crams, not know that (after death) he himself will be devoured by dogs and vultures.

116. After the Brâhmaṇas, the kinsmen, and the servants have dined, the householder and his wife may afterwards eat what remains.

117. Having honoured the gods, the sages, men, the manes, and the guardian deities of the house, the householder shall eat afterwards what remains.

118. He who prepares food for himself (alone), eats nothing but sin; for it is ordained that the food which remains after (the performance of) the sacrifices shall be the meal of virtuous men.

119. Let him honour with the honey-mixture a king, an officiating priest, a Snâtaka, the teacher, a son-in-law, a father-in-law, and a maternal uncle, (if they come) again after a full year (has elapsed since their last visit).

114. Suvâsinîḥ, 'to newly-married women,' i.e. 'daughters-in-law and daughters,' may also mean according to 'others,' quoted by Medh. and Gov., 'females whose fathers or fathers-in-law live.' Nand. reads svavâsinîḥ and explains it by 'sisters.'

119-120. Âp. II, 8, 5-9; Gaut.V, 27-30; Vas. XI, 1-2; Baudh. II, 6, 36-37; Yâgñ. I, 110.

119. Guruḥ, 'the teacher,' means according to Nâr. 'the teacher or the sub-teacher.' Priyaḥ, which according to Gov., Kull., and Râgh. means 'a son-in-law,' is taken by Nâr. and Nand. in its etymological sense, 'a friend.'

120. A king and a Srotriya, who come on the performance of a sacrifice, must be honoured with the honey-mixture, but not if no sacrifice is being performed; that is a settled rule.

121. But the wife shall offer in the evening (a portion) of the dressed food as a Bali-oblation, without (the recitation of) sacred formulas; for that (rite which is called the) Vaisvadeva is prescribed both for the morning and the evening.

122. After performing the Pitriyagña, a Brāhmaṇa who keeps a sacred fire shall offer, month by month, on the new-moon day, the funeral sacrifice (Śrāddha, called) Pindānvāhāryaka.

123. The wise call the monthly funeral offering to the manes Anvāhārya (to be offered after the

120. According to one opinion, given by Medh., and according to Gov., Kull., Nār., this rule is a limitation of verse 119, and means that the two persons mentioned shall not receive the honey-mixture, except when they come during the performance of a sacrifice, however long a period may have elapsed since their last visit. According to another explanation, mentioned by Medh., and according to Nand. and Rāgh., the verse means that a king and a Srotriya, who come before a year since their last visit elapsed, on the occasion of a sacrifice, shall receive the madhuparka. The term Srotriya refers according to Medh. to a Snātaka or to an officiating priest, according to others quoted by him to all the persons mentioned in the preceding verse, according to Gov., Kull., Nār., and Rāgh. to a Snātaka. The latter is probably the correct opinion, as a Srotriya, i. e. one who knows a whole recension of the Veda, must be a Snātaka. Medh. approves of the reading yagñakarmāny upasthite.

121. Nand. omits this verse.

122. Yāgñ. I, 217; Gaut. XV, 2. The sacrifice intended by the term Pitriyagña, 'sacrifice offered to the fathers,' is the so-called Pindapitriyagña, a Srauta rite (Āśvalāyana, Srauta-sūtra II, 6-7), and Pindānvāhāryaka is another name for the monthly Śrāddha.

cakes), and that must be carefully performed with the approved (sorts of) flesh (mentioned below).

124. I will fully declare what and how many Brāhmaṇas must be fed on that (occasion), who must be avoided, and on what kinds of food (they shall dine).

125. One must feed two (Brāhmaṇas) at the offering to the gods, and three at the offering to the manes, or one only on either occasion; even a very wealthy man shall not be anxious (to entertain) a large company.

126. A large company destroys these five (advantages), the respectful treatment (of the invited, the propriety of) place and time, purity and (the selection of) virtuous Brāhmaṇa (guests); he therefore shall not seek (to entertain) a large company.

127. Famed is this rite for the dead, called (the sacrifice sacred to the manes (and performed) on the new-moon day; if a man is diligent in (performing) that, (the reward of) the rite for the dead, which is performed according to Smārta rules, reaches him constantly.

125. Vas. XI, 27; Baudh. II, 15, 10; Vi. LXXIII, 3-4; Gaut. XV, 8, 21; Yāgy. I, 228. The offering to the gods, mentioned in this verse, is an Aṅga or subsidiary rite preceding the offering to the manes. Medh. takes the first part of this verse in a peculiar manner, 'One must feed two (Brāhmaṇas) at the offering to the gods, and three (for each ancestor, or nine in all) at the offering to the manes, or one on either occasion (i.e. one at the offering to the gods and at the offering to the manes, one for each ancestor, or three in all).'

126. Vas. XI, 28; Baudh. II, 15, 11.

127. Gov. reads vidhiḥ kshaye for vidhukshaye, 'on the new-moon day,' and explains the first half of the verse as follows: 'The ceremony called the (sacrifice) to the manes (is) a rite for the benefit of the dead, (and) prescribed on the new-moon day

128. Oblations to the gods and manes must be presented by the givers to a Śrotriya alone; what is given to such a most worthy Brāhmaṇa yields great reward.

129. Let him feed even one learned man at (the sacrifice) to the gods, and one at (the sacrifice) to the manes; (thus) he will gain a rich reward, not (if he entertains) many who are unacquainted with the Veda.

130. Let him make inquiries even regarding the remote (ancestors of) a Brāhmaṇa who has studied an entire (recension of the) Veda; (if descended from a virtuous race) such a man is a worthy recipient of gifts (consisting) of food offered to the gods or to the manes, he is declared (to procure as great rewards as) a guest (atithi).

131. Though a million of men, unacquainted with the Rik̐as, were to dine at a (funeral sacrifice), yet a single man, learned in the Veda, who is satisfied (with his entertainment), is worth them all as far as the (production of) spiritual merit (is concerned).

132. Food sacred to the manes or to the gods must be given to a man distinguished by sacred or in the house, i.e. to be performed by householders, not by men of other orders.' Medh., too, mentions another reading, which he explains much in the same way as Gov., and which therefore may have been vidhiḥ kshaye, though the MSS. read tithikshaye.

128. Vas. III, 8; Gaut. XV, 9.

130. Vi. LXXXII, 2. The examination must extend, as in the case of officiating priests, to ten ancestors on the mother's and the father's side (Medh., Gov.).

131. 'The Rik̐as,' i.e. 'the Veda.' Nār. reads instead of prītaḥ, 'who is satisfied,' yuktaḥ, and combines it with dharmataḥ, 'who is properly invited.' Nand. has vipraḥ, 'a Brāhmaṇa,' for prītaḥ. K. has prima manu vipraḥ, sec. manu yuktaḥ.

knowledge; for hands, smeared with blood, cannot be cleansed with blood.

133. As many mouthfuls as an ignorant man swallows at a sacrifice to the gods or to the manes, so many red-hot spikes, spears, and iron balls must (the giver of the repast) swallow after death.

134. Some Brâhmanas are devoted to (the pursuit of) knowledge, and others to (the performance of) austerities; some to austerities and to the recitation of the Veda, and others to (the performance of) sacred rites.

135. Oblations to the manes ought to be carefully presented to those devoted to knowledge, but offerings to the gods, in accordance with the reason (of the sacred law), to (men of) all the four (above-mentioned classes).

136. If there is a father ignorant of the sacred texts whose son has learned one whole recension of the Veda and the Aṅgas, and a son ignorant of the sacred texts whose father knows an entire recension of the Veda and the Aṅgas,

133. Nâr. thinks that the eater, not the giver of the feast will bear the punishment. Medh. gives both this explanation and that adopted in the translation. Nâr. explains rishî, 'spear,' by khadga, 'sword.' Nand. reads hulân for gudân, 'balls,' and says that hula means 'a double-edged sword.'

134. 'Knowledge,' i. e. 'the knowledge of the supreme soul' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). Medh. and Nâr. say that ascetics, hermits, students, and householders are intended by the four divisions mentioned in the text.

135. Vas. XI, 17; Baudh. II, 14, 3. The verse indicates that ascetics are particularly desirable guests.

136-137. Kull. remarks that the object of the verse is to teach that at a Srâddha the learned son of a learned father is to be entertained, but not to permit the admission of a fool whose father is learned.

137. Know that he whose father knows the Veda, is the more venerable one (of the two); yet the other one is worthy of honour, because respect is due to the Veda (which he has learned).

138. Let him not entertain a personal friend at a funeral sacrifice; he may gain his affection by (other) valuable gifts; let him feed at a Srâddha a Brâhmaṇa whom he considers neither as a foe nor as a friend.

139. He who performs funeral sacrifices and offerings to the gods chiefly for the sake of (gaining) friends, reaps after death no reward for Srâddhas and sacrifices.

140. That meanest among twice-born men who in his folly contracts friendships through a funeral sacrifice, loses heaven, because he performed a Srâddha for the sake of friendship.

141. A gift (of food) by twice-born men, consumed with (friends and relatives), is said to be offered to the Pisâkas; it remains in this (world) alone like a blind cow in one stable.

142. As a husbandman reaps no harvest when he has sown the seed in barren soil, even so the giver of sacrificial food gains no reward if he presented it to a man unacquainted with the Rikas.

143. But a present made in accordance with the rules to a learned man, makes the giver and the 138-148. Âp. II, 17, 4-6; Gaut. XV, 12-14; Baudh. II, 14, 6; Yâgyñ. I, 220.

141. Âp. II, 17, 8-9. According to Medh., Gov., Kull., and Râgh. paisakî means 'offered after the manner of the Pisâkas.' But the version given above, which follows Nâr. and Nand., is supported by the ancient verse, quoted by Âpastamba, from which Manu's Sloka is probably derived.

recipient partakers of rewards both in this (life) and after death.

144. (If no learned Brâhmaṇa be at hand), he may rather honour a (virtuous) friend than an enemy, though the latter may be qualified (by learning and so forth); for sacrificial food, eaten by a foe, bears no reward after death.

145. Let him (take) pains (to) feed at a Srâddha an adherent of the Rig-veda who has studied one entire (recension of that) Veda, or a follower of the Yagur-veda who has finished one Sâkhâ, or a singer of Sâmans who (likewise) has completed (the study of an entire recension).

146. If one of these three dines, duly honoured, at a funeral sacrifice, the ancestors of him (who gives the feast), as far as the seventh person, will be satisfied for a very long time.

147. This is the chief rule (to be followed) in offering sacrifices to the gods and manes; know that the virtuous always observe the following subsidiary rule.

148. One may also entertain (on such occasions) one's maternal grandfather, a maternal uncle, a sister's son, a father-in-law, one's teacher, a daughter's son, a daughter's husband, a cognate kinsman, one's own officiating priest or a man for whom one offers sacrifices.

149. For a rite sacred to the gods, he who knows the law will not make (too close) inquiries regarding an (invited) Brâhmaṇa; but when one performs a

148. Bandhum, 'a cognate kinsman' (Kull., Râgh.), is taken by Medh. and Gov. in its widest sense, 'any remoter kinsman' (sago-trâdîh).

149. Vi. LXXXII, 1-2.

ceremony in honour of the manes, one must carefully examine (the qualities and parentage of the guest).

150. Manu has declared that those Brāhmaṇas who are thieves, outcasts, eunuchs, or atheists are unworthy (to partake) of oblations to the gods and manes.

151. Let him not entertain at a Śrāddha one who wears his hair in braids (a student), one who has not studied (the Veda), one afflicted with a skin-disease, a gambler, nor those who sacrifice for a multitude (of sacrificers).

152. Physicians, temple-priests, sellers of meat, and those who subsist by shop-keeping must be avoided at sacrifices offered to the gods and to the manes.

153. A paid servant of a village or of a king, a man with deformed nails or black teeth, one who opposes his teacher, one who has forsaken the sacred fire, and a usurer ;

154. One suffering from consumption, one who subsists by tending cattle, a younger brother who

150-182. Âp. II, 17, 21 ; Gaut. XV, 16-19, 30-31 ; Vas. XI, 19 ; Vi. LXXXII, 3-30 ; Yâgñ. I, 222-224.

150. For the term nâstikavṛtti, 'atheist,' Medh. proposes, besides the explanation given above, the other equally possible one, 'he who derives his livelihood from atheists.'

151. Anadhiyānam, 'one who has not studied the Veda,' i.e. 'one who has been initiated only, but has not studied' (Kull.), or 'one who has not mastered the Veda' (Medh.), or 'one who has left off studying' (Nâr.). Medh. and Nand. read durvālam for durbalam, 'afflicted with a skin-disease,' and the former explains his var. lect. by 'a bald or a red-haired man.' 'Those who sacrifice for a multitude,' i.e. 'who offer the (forbidden) Ahīna sacrifices, for on that occasion there are many sacrificers' (Nâr.).

154. Nirākṛtiḥ, 'one who neglects the five great sacrifices' (Medh., marries or kindles the sacred fire before the elder, one who neglects the five great sacrifices, an enemy of the Brâhmana race, an elder brother who marries or kindles the sacred fire after the younger, and one who belongs to a company or corporation,

155. An actor or singer, one who has broken the vow of studentship, one whose (only or first) wife is a Sûdra female, the son of a remarried woman, a one-eyed man, and he in whose house a paramour of his wife (resides);

156. He who teaches for a stipulated fee and he who is taught on that condition, he who instructs Sûdra pupils and he whose teacher is a Sûdra, he who speaks rudely, the son of an adulteress, and the son of a widow,

157. He who forsakes his mother, his father, or a teacher without a (sufficient) reason, he who has

Kull., Râgh.), means according to Gov. 'one who forsakes the Vedas (and the rest),' according to Nâr. and Nand. 'one who does not recite the Veda privately,' or 'who has forgotten it.' Ganâ-bhyantaraḥ, 'one who belongs to a company or corporation,' i.e. 'of men who live by one trade' (Medh., Gov., Nâr.), is further explained by Nâr. by 'the headman of a village,' or 'the leader of a caravan.' According to Kull. and Râgh. it means 'one who misappropriates the money of a corporation.'

155. Kusilava, 'an actor or singer,' is, as Medh. states, a very wide term, including all 'bards, actors, jugglers, dancers, singers, and the like.' Kull. wrongly understands by avakîrṇin, 'one who has broken the vow of studentship,' an ascetic also who has become unchaste. Such an ascetic is called ârûdḥapatita.

156. Vâgdushaḥ, 'one who speaks rudely,' means according to 'others,' quoted by Medh. and Kull., 'one who is accused of a great crime' (abhisasta).

157. According to Nâr. guroḥ, 'a teacher,' denotes the âkârya alone. Medh. blames this explanation, and refers it to the sub-teacher. The same explains kundâśi, 'he who eats the food of the son of an adulteress,' by 'a glutton who eats sixty Palas of rice.'

contracted an alliance with outcasts either through the Veda or through a marriage,

158. An incendiary, a prisoner, he who eats the food given by the son of an adulteress, a seller of Soma, he who undertakes voyages by sea, a bard, an oil-man, a suborner to perjury,

159. He who wrangles or goes to law with his father, the keeper of a gambling-house, a drunkard, he who is afflicted with a disease (in punishment of former) crimes, he who is accused of a mortal sin, a hypocrite, a seller of substances used for flavouring food,

160. A maker of bows and of arrows, he who lasciviously dallies with a brother's widow, the betrayer of a friend, one who subsists by gambling, he who learns (the Veda) from his son,

158. Agâradâhî, 'an incendiary,' includes according to a verse, quoted by Nand. also, 'one who burns corpses for money.' Kû-kârakâh, 'a suborner to perjury' (Gov., Kull.), means according to Medh. and Râgh. 'a false witness,' according to Nâr. and Nand. 'any one who commits fraud,' e.g. a forger, a falsifier of weights and measures. 'Others' quoted by Medh. explain somavikrayin as 'one who sells (the merit gained by) Soma (sacrifices).'

159. 'He who wrangles or goes to law with his father,' e.g. who forces him to divide the family estate (Medh.), see Gaut. XV, 19. Kitavaḥ, 'the keeper of a gambling-house' (Medh.), means according to Gov. and Nand. 'one who makes others play for himself,' according to Nâr. 'a gambler for pleasure,' and according to Nand. 'a rogue.' 'Others,' however, read kekaraḥ, 'a squinting man,' and construe it with madyapaḥ, 'a drunkard' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Nand., Râgh.). Rasa, 'substances used for flavouring food,' e.g. 'sugar-cane juice' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), 'molasses' (Nâr.). Medh. explains rasadaḥ by vishadaḥ, 'a poisoner.'

160. I accept Gov.'s and Râgh.'s explanation of agredidhishûpati, who believe it to be equivalent to didhishûpati explained below, verse 173. Kull. and Nand. take it as 'the husband of a younger sister married before the elder,' and Medh. as an

161. An epileptic man, one who suffers from scrofulous swellings of the glands, one afflicted with white leprosy, an informer, a madman, a blind man, and he who cavils at the Veda must (all) be avoided.

162. A trainer of elephants, oxen, horses, or camels, he who subsists by astrology, a bird-fancier, and he who teaches the use of arms,

163. He who diverts water-courses, and he who delights in obstructing them, an architect, a messenger, and he who plants trees (for money),

164. A breeder of sporting-dogs, a falconer, one who defiles maidens, he who delights in injuring living creatures, he who gains his subsistence from Sûdras, and he who offers sacrifices to the Ganas,

165. He who does not follow the rule of conduct, a (man destitute of energy like a) eunuch, one who constantly asks (for favours), he who lives by agri-irregular compound consisting of agredidhishûpati and didhishûpati, see Gaut. XV, 16. Though in some Smṛitis agredidhishûpati has the meaning given by Kull., it seems here inadmissible, on account of verse 173, which is meaningless, if it is not meant to explain this term. Dyûtavṛittiḥ, 'one who subsists by gambling,' means according to Medh. 'one who makes others play for his profit,' according to Gov., Kull., and Râgh. 'the keeper of a gambling-house.' Nâr. and Nand. take it in its literal meaning.

162. Pakshinâm poshakaḥ, 'a bird-fancier,' means according to Medh. 'a trainer of hunting-falcons and hawks.'

164. The commentators mention a var. lect. vṛishalaputraḥ, 'one who has only sons by a Sûdra wife,' for 'one who gains his subsistence from Sûdras.' Nâr. and Nand. explain ganânâm yâgakaḥ by 'one who sacrifices for ganas,' i.e. many people or guilds. According to the explanation of Medh., Gov., Kull., and Râgh., which has been translated above, the performance of the Vinâyaka or Ganesahoma (Yâgñ. I, 270-294) may be meant. But it is also possible to think of the Ganahomas, which according to Baudh. IV, 8, 1 must not be performed for others.

culture, a club-footed man, and he who is censured by virtuous men,

166. A shepherd, a keeper of buffaloes, the husband of a remarried woman, and a carrier of dead bodies, (all these) must be carefully avoided.

167. A Brâhmana who knows (the sacred law) should shun at (sacrifices) both (to the gods and to the manes) these lowest of twice-born men, whose conduct is reprehensible, and who are unworthy (to sit) in the company (at a repast).

168. As a fire of dry grass is (unable to consume the offerings and is quickly) extinguished, even so (is it with) an unlearned Brâhmana ; sacrificial food must not be given to him, since it (would be) offered in ashes.

169. I will fully declare what result the giver obtains after death, if he gives food, destined for the gods or manes, to a man who is unworthy to sit in the company.

170. The Râkshasas, indeed, consume (the food) eaten by Brâhmanas who have not fulfilled the vow of studentship, by a Parivettri and so forth, and by other men not admissible into the company.

171. He must be considered as a Parivettri who

168. According to Medh. and Gov. the object of this verse is to admit virtuous and learned men, afflicted with bodily defects, as guests at rites in honour of the gods ; see Vas. XI, 20. Kull. thinks that the injunction to avoid ignorant men is repeated here in order to show that they are as unfit as real 'defilers of the company.'

170. Avratâh, 'who have not fulfilled the vow of studentship' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), means according to Medh. 'of bad conduct,' and according to Nâr. 'who do not observe the rules prescribed for a Snâtaka and so forth.'

171. Usually a person who kindles the sacred fire before his elder brother is called a Paryâdhâtri, and the elder brother a Paryâhita.

marries or begins the performance of the Agnihotra before his elder brother, but the latter as a Parivitti.

172. The elder brother who marries after the younger, the younger brother who marries before the elder, the female with whom such a marriage is contracted, he who gives her away, and the sacrificing priest, as the fifth, all fall into hell.

173. He who lasciviously dallies with the widow of a deceased brother, though she be appointed (to bear a child by him) in accordance with the sacred law, must be known to be a Didhishâpati.

174. Two (kinds of) sons, a Kunda and a Golaka, are born by wives of other men; (he who is born) while the husband lives, will be a Kunda, and (he who is begotten) after the husband's death, a Golaka.

175. But those two creatures, who are born of wives of other men, cause to the giver the loss (of the rewards), both in this life and after death, for the food sacred to gods or manes which has been given (to them).

176. The foolish giver (of a funeral repast) does not reap the reward for as many worthy guests as a man, inadmissible into company, can look on while they are feeding.

177. A blind man by his presence causes to the giver (of the feast) the loss of the reward for ninety (guests), a one-eyed man for sixty, one who suffers from white leprosy for a hundred, and one punished by a (terrible) disease for a thousand.

178. The giver (of a Srâddha) loses the reward,

172. Baudh. II, 1, 39.

177. Regarding the diseases which are punishments for sins committed in a former life, see below, XI, 49 seq.

178. Paurtikam, 'due for such a non-sacrificial gift,' i.e. 'for one due for such a non-sacrificial gift, for as many Brāhmaṇas as a (guest) who sacrifices for Sūdras may touch (during the meal) with his limbs.

179. And if a Brāhmaṇa, though learned in the Veda, accepts through covetousness a gift from such (a man), he will quickly perish, like a vessel of unburnt clay in water.

180. (Food) given to a seller of Soma becomes ordure, (that given) to a physician pus and blood, but (that presented) to a temple-priest is lost, and (that given) to a usurer finds no place (in the world of the gods).

181. What has been given to a Brāhmaṇa who lives by trade that is not (useful) in this world and the next, and (a present) to a Brāhmaṇa born of a remarried woman (resembles) an oblation thrown into ashes.

182. But the wise declare that the food which (is offered) to other unholy, inadmissible men, enumerated above, (is turned into) adipose secretions, blood, flesh, marrow, and bone.

183. Now hear by what chief of twice-born men which is given outside the sacrificial enclosure' (Medh., Gov.), or 'for the gift of food at a Śrāddha' (Kull., Rāgh.).

179. 'From such a man,' i. e. 'from one who sacrifices for Sūdras.'

180. The meaning is that the giver will be born in his next life among the animals, feeding on the unclean substances enumerated (Medh., Gov., Kull., Rāgh.), or that the food will be rejected by the manes and the gods as impure (Nār.). Apratish/ham, 'finds no place' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Rāgh.), means according to Nār. and Nand. 'secures no fame (to the giver).'

182. According to Medh., Gov., Kull., and Rāgh., it must be understood that the giver will be born in his next existence as a worm, feeding on the substances mentioned.

183-186. Âp. II, 17, 22; Gaut. XV, 28, 31; Vas. III, 19; Baudh. II, 14, 2-3; Vi. LXXXIII; Yâgñ. I, 219-221.

a company defiled by (the presence of) unworthy (guests) is purified, and the full (description of) the Brâhmanas who sanctify a company.

184. Those men must be considered as the sanctifiers of a company who are most learned in all the Vedas and in all the Aṅgas, and who are the descendants of Srotriyas.

185. A Trinâkiketa, one who keeps five sacred fires, a Trisuparna, one who is versed in the six Aṅgas, the son of a woman married according to the Brâhma rite, one who sings the Gyeshthasâman,

186. One who knows the meaning of the Veda, and he who expounds it, a student, one who has given a thousand (cows), and a centenarian must be considered as Brâhmanas who sanctify a company.

187. On the day before the Srâddha-rite is performed, or on the day when it takes place, let him invite with due respect at least three Brâhmanas, such as have been mentioned above.

188. A Brâhmaṇa who has been invited to a (rite) in honour of the manes shall always control himself and not recite the Veda, and he who performs the Srâddha (must act in the same manner).

185. Regarding the term Trinâkiketa, see Âp. II, 17, 22, note. Pañkâgniḥ, 'one who keeps five sacred fires' (Medh., 'others,' Gov., Kull., Nand., Râgh.), means according to Medh. and Nâr. 'one who knows the pañkâgnividyâ, taught in the *Khândogya*panishad IV, 10 seq. Trisuparna means according to Medh., Nâr., and Nand. 'one who knows the texts Taitt. Âr. X, 38-40; but according to Gov., Kull., and Râgh. 'one who knows the portion of the Rig-veda called Trisuparna, Rig-veda X, 114, 3-5.

186. Nand. explains brahmatâri, 'a student,' by 'a chaste man' (see above, verse 50).

187. Âp. II, 17, 11-15; Vas. XI, 17; Yâgñ. I, 225.

188. Gaut. XV. 23; Yâgñ. I, 225. 'Control himself,' i.e. 'remain chaste.'

189. For the manes attend the invited Brâhmaṇas, follow them (when they walk) like the wind, and sit near them when they are seated.

190. But a Brâhmaṇa who, being duly invited to a rite in honour of the gods or of the manes, in any way breaks (the appointment), becomes guilty (of a crime), and (in his next birth) a hog.

191. But he who, being invited to a Srâddha, dallies with a Sûdra woman, takes upon himself all the sins which the giver (of the feast) committed.

192. The manes are primeval deities, free from anger, careful of purity, ever chaste, averse from strife, and endowed with great virtues.

193. Now learn fully from whom all these (manes derive) their origin, and with what ceremonies they ought to be worshipped.

194. The (various) classes of the manes are declared to be the sons of all those sages, Marîkî and the rest, who are children of Manu, the son of Hiranyagarbha.

195. The Somasads, the sons of Virâg, are stated to be the manes of the Sâdhyas, and the Agnish-

189. 'Like the wind,' i.e. 'like the vital air, the breath' (Medh., Gov., Kull.). Medh. thinks that the manes enter the body of the invited guests.

190. Medh. explains atikrâman, 'breaks the appointment' (Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), by 'breaks the rules of chastity and the like.' Medh. mentions a second 'improper' explanation given by 'others,' 'does not accept the invitation.'

191. Medh., Gov., Nand., and Râgh. take vrîshalt, 'a Sûdra woman,' in the sense of 'his lascivious wife.' Probably the word is used in its proper sense and indicates, as Nâr. states, that intercourse with a Sûdra wife is the worst offence in such a case.

194. 'Marîkî and the rest,' see above, I, 35.

195. Nâr., Nand., and K. prima manu read Somasutaḥ for Somasadaḥ.

vāttas, the children of Marīkī, are famous in the world (as the manes) of the gods.

196. The Barhishads, born of Atri, are recorded to be (the manes) of the Daityas, Dānavas, Yakshas, Gandharvas, Snake-deities, Rākshasas, Suparnas, and Kinnaras, 197. The Somapas those of the Brāhmaṇas, the Havirbhugs those of the Kshatriyas, the Āgyapas those of the Vaisyas, but the Sukālins those of the Sūdras.

198. The Somapas are the sons of Kavi (Bhrigu), the Havishmats the children of Aṅgiras, the Āgyapas the offspring of Pulastya, but the Sukālins (the issue) of Vasishṭha.

199. One should know that (other classes), the Agnidagdhas, the Anagnidagdhas, the Kāvyas, the Barhishads, the Agnishvāttas, and the Saumyas, are (the manes) of the Brāhmaṇas alone.

200. But know also that there exist in this (world) countless sons and grandsons of those chief classes of manes which have been enumerated.

201. From the sages sprang the manes, from the manes the gods and the Dānavas, but from the gods the whole world, both the movable and the immovable in due order.

202. Even water offered with faith (to the manes)

199. Medh. and Gov. place the Anagnidagdhas first. Nār. reads at the end of the first half-verse bahûn, 'many,' instead of tathâ, and Nand. has vahân. The translation follows the explanation given by Gov., Kull., and Râgh. The other three commentators say that this verse gives partly different names for the several classes of manes, enumerated in the preceding verses. But their explanations are not very clear, and they are forced to ignore or transpose the particle eva which stands after viprânâm. The verse probably contains a second classification of the manes, which differs from the preceding, because it is based on a different tradition.

202. Akshayâpakalpate, 'produces endless (bliss),' (Gov., Kull.), in vessels made of silver or adorned with silver, produces endless (bliss).

203. For twice-born men the rite in honour of the manes is more important than the rite in honour of the gods; for the offering to the gods which precedes (the Srâddhas), has been declared to be a means of fortifying (the latter).

204. Let him first invite a (Brâhmaṇa) in honour of the gods as a protection for the (offering to the manes); for the Rākshasas destroy a funeral sacrifice which is left without such a protection.

205. Let him make (the Srâddha) begin and end with (a rite) in honour of the gods; it shall not begin and end with a (rite) to the manes; for he who makes it begin and end with a (rite) in honour of the manes, soon perishes together with his progeny.

206. Let him smear a pure and secluded place with cowdung, and carefully make it sloping towards the south.

207. The manes are always pleased with offerings made in open, naturally pure places, on the banks of rivers, and in secluded spots.

means according to Medh. 'affords to them imperishable satisfaction.'

203. The rite in honour of the gods meant is the Vaisvadeva which precedes each Srâddha.

204. The above translation of the first half-verse follows Medh., Gov., and Kull. It is, however, not impossible to take, with Sir W. Jones, daivam as a neuter, and to translate, 'Let him first perform the rite in honour of the gods as a protection for the (Srâddha).'

205. The meaning of the verse is that the Brâhmaṇas, fed at the Vaisvadeva which precedes the Srâddha, must be invited and served before and dismissed after the Brâhmaṇas entertained in honour of the manes (Medh., Kull., Nâr.). See also below, verse 209.

206. Âp. II, 18, 14; Gaut. XV, 25; Yâgñ. I, 227.

207. Vi. LXXXV, 54-63. Koksheshu, 'naturally pure' (Medh.,

208. The (sacrificer) shall make the (invited) Brâhmanas, who have duly performed their ablutions, sit down on separate, prepared seats, on which blades of Kusa grass have been placed.

209. Having placed those blameless Brâhmanas on their seats, he shall honour them with fragrant garlands and perfumes, beginning with (those who are invited in honour of) the gods.

210. Having presented to them water, sesamum grains, and blades of Kusa grass, the Brâhmana (sacrificer) shall offer (oblations) in the sacred fire, after having received permission (to do so) from (all) the Brâhmana (guests) conjointly.

211. Having first, according to the rule, performed, as a means of protecting (the Srâddha), oblations to Agni, to Soma, and to Yama, let him afterwards satisfy the manes by a gift of sacrificial food.

212. But if no (sacred) fire (is available), he shall place (the offerings) into the hand of a Brâhmana; for Brâhmanas who know the sacred texts declare, 'What fire is, even such is a Brâhmana.'

213. They (also) call those first of twice-born men the ancient deities of the funeral sacrifice, free from anger, easily pleased, employed in making men prosper.

Gov., Kull., Nâr.) or 'lovely' (Nand., Râgh.), 'such as forest glades' (Kull.).

208. Yâgñ. I, 226.

209. Vi. LXXIII, 2; Yâgñ. I, 231.

210. Vi. LXXXIII, 5; Âp. II, 17, 17-19; Baudh. II, 14, 7; Yâgñ. I, 229.

211. Vi. LXXIII, 12; Baudh. II, 14, 7.

212. Âsvalâyana Grîhya-sûtra IV, 8, 5-6. Cases, where a sacred fire is wanting, are those in which a child, an unmarried man, or a widower perform a Srâddha (Medh., Kull., Nâr.).

213. The object of the verse is to show why the offerings may

214. After he has performed (the oblations) in the fire, (and) the whole series of ceremonies in such a manner that they end in the south, let him sprinkle water with his right hand on the spot (where the cakes are to be placed).

215. But having made three cakes out of the remainder of that sacrificial food, he must, concentrating his mind and turning towards the south, place them on (Kusa grass) exactly in the same manner in which (he poured out the libations of) water.

216. Having offered those cakes according to the (prescribed) rule, being pure, let him wipe the same hand with (the roots of) those blades of Kusa grass for the sake of the (three ancestors) who partake of the wipings (lepa).

217. Having (next) sipped water, turned round (towards the north), and thrice slowly suppressed be placed into the hands of the guests. The epithet 'ancient' is explained to mean 'produced in the kalpa when the Sādhyas were created' (Medh.), or 'those whose succession has been uninterrupted since immemorial times' (Gov., Kull., Rāgh.), or 'those who were produced before all other castes' (Nār.), or 'those who receive gifts before others' (Rāgh.). Medh. prefers, however, to read purā-tanāḥ, 'the ancients call,' &c., and this seems to have stood in Nand.'s text too.

214. 'The whole series of ceremonies,' i.e. 'the acts of sprinkling water and strewing Kusa grass round the fire and so forth, which are subsidiary to the oblations in the fire.' Apasavyam, 'in such a manner that they end in the south' (dakṣiṇāsamsthām), means according to Nār., prāñnāvītena, 'passing the sacrificial string over the right shoulder and under the left arm.' Apasavyena hastena, 'with his right hand' (Medh. 'others,' Kull., Rāgh.), means according to Medh., Gov., Nār., and Nand., 'out of the Tīrtha of the right hand which is sacred to the manes' (see above, II, 59).

216. The three ancestors meant are the great-grandfather, his father and grandfather; see Vi. LXXIII, 22.

217. The texts to be pronounced are, 'Adoration to Spring I' &c., his breath, (the sacrificer) who knows the sacred texts shall worship (the guardian deities of) the six seasons and the manes.

218. Let him gently pour out the remainder of the water near the cakes, and, with fixed attention, smell those cakes, in the order in which they were placed (on the ground).

219. But taking successively very small portions from the cakes, he shall make those seated Brâhmanas eat them, in accordance with the rule, before (their dinner).

220. But if the (sacrificer's) father is living, he must offer (the cakes) to three remoter (ancestors); or he may also feed his father at the funeral sacrifice as (one of the) Brâhmaṇa (guests).

221. But he whose father is dead, while his grandfather lives, shall, after pronouncing his father's name, mention (that of) his great-grandfather.

222. Manu has declared that either the grandfather may eat at that Srâddha (as a guest), or (the and afterwards, 'Adoration to you, oh manes!' &c. Before he recites the latter texts, the worshipper must turn round towards the south.

218. Vi. LXXIII, 23. 'The remainder of the water,' i.e. 'which is contained in the vessel from which he took the water for sprinkling the ground' (verse 214).

219. 'Those seated Brâhmanas,' i.e. 'those invited for the funeral rite, not those invited for the preceding rite in honour of the gods.' 'According to the rule,' i.e. 'giving to the representative of the father a piece from the cake offered to the manes of the father and so forth' (Kull.), or 'after they have sipped water and so forth' (Nâr.). Nand. inserts here verse 223, and states that it is explanatory of the term 'according to the rule.'

220. Vi. LXXV, 1, 4. Nâr. adds that this case happens when a son has kindled the sacred fire during his father's lifetime, because then the Pindâpitriyagñā and afterwards the Pârvaṇa Srâddha must be performed.

221-222. Vi. LXXV, 6.

grandson) having received permission, may perform it, as he desires.

223. Having poured water mixed with sesamum, in which a blade of Kusa grass has been placed, into the hands of the (guests), he shall give (to each) that (above-mentioned) portion of the cake, saying, 'To those, Svadhâ !'

224. But carrying (the vessel) filled with food with both hands, the (sacrificer) himself shall gently place it before the Brâhmanas, meditating on the manes.

225. The malevolent Asuras forcibly snatch away that food which is brought without being held with both hands.

226. Let him, being pure and attentive, carefully place on the ground the seasoning (for the rice), such as broths and pot herbs, sweet and sour milk, and honey,

227. (As well as) various (kinds of) hard food which require mastication, and of soft food, roots, fruits, savoury meat, and fragrant drinks.

228. All this he shall present (to his guests), and, being pure and attentive, successively invite them to partake of each (dish), proclaiming its qualities.

229. Let him on no account drop a tear, become angry or utter an untruth, nor let him touch the food with his foot nor violently shake it.

223. Vi. LXXIII, 23. This rule is a supplement to verse 220. Instead of the pronoun the names are to be used (Medh., Gov.).

225. Vas. XI, 25; Baudh. II, 15, 3.

229. Vi. LXXIX, 19-21; LXXXI, 1; Yâgñ. I, 239. Avadhû-nayet, 'nor violently shake it,' is explained according to Medh. by 'others,' 'nor remove the dust with his dress.' Nand. places verse 230 immediately after verse 228.

230. A tear sends the (food) to the Pretas, anger to his enemies, a falsehood to the dogs, contact with his foot to the Rākshasas, a shaking to the sinners.

231. Whatever may please the Brāhmaṇas, let him give without grudging it; let him give riddles from the Veda, for that is agreeable to the manes.

232. At a (sacrifice in honour) of the manes, he must let (his guests) hear the Veda, the Institutes of the sacred law, legends, tales, Purāṇas, and Khilas.

233. Himself being delighted, let him give delight to the Brāhmaṇas, cause them to partake gradually and slowly (of each dish), and repeatedly invite (them to eat) by (offering) the food and (praising) its qualities.

234. Let him eagerly entertain at a funeral sacrifice a daughter's son, though he be a student, and let him place a Nepāl blanket on the seat (of each guest), scattering sesamum grains on the ground.

231. Yâgñ. I, 239. Brahmodyâḥ kathâḥ, 'let him give riddles from the Veda,' such as those collected in the Ârvalâyana Srauta-sûtra X, 9, 2 (Medh., Nand.). Medh. thinks that the term brahmodya may also refer to Vedic stories, such as that of the fights of the Devas and Asuras, or of Saramâ and the Panis, and he mentions a var. lect. brahmâdyâḥ, 'conversations regarding the Brahman, the supreme soul.' This latter explanation is adopted by Gov., Kull., Nâr., and Râgh., though the text everywhere has brahmodyâḥ. As the Brahmodya-riddles were a favourite recreation of the priests during the tedious performance of their sacrifices, it is not doubtful that the explanation given in the translation is the only admissible one.

232. Baudh. II, 14, 5; Vi. LXXIII, 16; Yâgñ. I, 239. 'Khilas,' i. e. 'the apocrypha of the Veda, such as the Sṛisûkta.' 'Âkhyânâni legends, such as the Sauparna, the Maitrâvârûna' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'such as occur in the Brāhmaṇas' (Nâr.), or 'the death of Kamsa and so forth' (Nand.).

235. There are three means of sanctification, (to be used) at a Śrāddha, a daughter's son, a Nepāl blanket, and sesamum grains; and they recommend three (other things) for it, cleanliness, suppression of anger, and absence of haste.

236. All the food must be very hot, and the (guests) shall eat in silence; (even though) asked by the giver (of the feast), the Brāhmaṇas shall not proclaim the qualities of the sacrificial food.

237. As long as the food remains warm, as long as they eat in silence, as long as the qualities of the food are not proclaimed, so long the manes partake (of it).

238. What (a guest) eats, covering his head, what he eats with his face turned towards the south, what he eats with sandals on (his feet), that the Rākshasas consume.

239. A Kāṇḍāla, a village pig, a cock, a dog, a menstruating woman, and a eunuch must not look at the Brāhmaṇas while they eat.

240. What (any of) these sees at a burnt-oblation, at a (solemn) gift, at a dinner (given to Brāhmaṇas), or at any rite in honour of the gods and manes, that produces not the intended result.

241. A boar makes (the rite) useless by inhaling the smell (of the offerings), a cock by the air of his wings, a dog by throwing his eye (on them), a low-caste man by touching (them).

242. If a lame man, a one-eyed man, one deficient

235. Vas. XI, 35-36.

236. Vi. LXXXI, 11, 20.

237. Vi. LXXXI, 20; Vas. XI, 32.

238. Vi. LXXXI, 12-14.

239. Âp. II, 17, 20; Gaut. XV, 24.

241. 'A low-caste man,' i.e. 'a Śūdra.'

242. Vi. LXXXI, 15-16. According to Medh., Gov., and Kull.,

in a limb, or one with a redundant limb, be even the servant of the performer (of the Srâddha), he also must be removed from that place (where the Srâddha is held).

243. To a Brâhmana (householder), or to an ascetic who comes for food, he may, with the permission of (his) Brâhmana (guests), show honour according to his ability.

244. Let him mix all the kinds of food together, sprinkle them with water and put them, scattering them (on Kusa grass), down on the ground in front of (his guests), when they have finished their meal.

245. The remnant (in the dishes), and the portion scattered on Kusa grass, shall be the share of deceased (children) who received not the sacrament (of cremation) and of those who (unjustly) forsook noble wives.

246. They declare the fragments which have fallen on the ground at a (Srâddha) to the manes, to be the share of honest, dutiful servants.

the word api, 'even,' indicates that others, e.g. Sûdras, must also be sent away.

243. Vi. LXXXI, 18. Medh., Gov., and Kull. take the first words differently, 'To a Brâhmana who comes as a guest (atithi) or any other mendicant.' Nâr. and Râgh. give the explanation adopted above.

244. Vi. LXXXI, 21.

245. Vas. XI, 23-24; Vi. LXXXI, 22. Regarding the burial of children, see below, V, 69. Tyâginâm kulayoshitâm, 'of those who unjustly forsook noble wives' (Medh., Kull.), may also mean, according to Râgh. and to 'others,' quoted by Medh. and Kull., 'of those who forsook their Gurus and of unmarried maidens;' according to Gov., 'of women who forsook their families;' according to Nâr., 'of suicides and childless women.' Nand. explains the first word by 'of ascetics.'

246. Vi. LXXXI, 23.

247. But before the performance of the Sapindīkarana, one must feed at the funeral sacrifice in honour of a (recently-)deceased Āryan (one Brāhmaṇa) without (making an offering) to the gods, and give one cake only.

248. But after the Sapindīkarana of the (deceased father) has been performed according to the sacred law, the sons must offer the cakes with those ceremonies, (described above.)

249. The foolish man who, after having eaten a Śrāddha(-dinner), gives the leavings to a Sūdra, falls headlong into the Kālasūtra hell.

250. If the partaker of a Śrāddha(-dinner) enters on the same day the bed of a Sūdra female, the manes of his (ancestors) will lie during that month in her ordure.

251. Having addressed the question, 'Have you dined well?' (to his guests), let him give water for sipping to them who are satisfied, and dismiss them, after they have sipped water, (with the words) 'Rest either (here or at home)!'

247. Vi. XXI, 2-12, 19; Yāgñ. I, 250. The Sapindīkarana, 'the solemn reception of a dead person among the partakers of the funeral oblations,' is performed either on the thirteenth day or a year after the death. Up to the time of its performance the Śrāddhas are so-called Ekoddish/as, 'performed for one person only.' Medh., Gov., Nār., Nand., and K. read the first word of the verse asapindakriyākarma, and according to this var. lect. the translation must be, 'The rite for persons not made Sapindas (i. e. the Ekoddish/a Śrāddha, must be performed) for an Āryan (recently) deceased; (on that occasion) one must,' &c.

250. Medh., Gov., Kull., and Rāgh. take vrīṣhalī, 'a Sūdra female' (Nār.), in the sense of 'a seducing woman' (vrīṣhasyantī).

251. Yāgñ. I, 242; Vi. LXXIII, 26-27. Kull. reads abhi bho ramyatām, 'Ho, take rest!' and Rāgh., abhito gamyatām, 'Go where you please!'

252. The Brâhmaṇa (guests) shall then answer him, 'Let there be Svadhâ;' for at all rites in honour of the manes the word Svadhâ is the highest benison.

253. Next let him inform (his guests) who have finished their meal, of the food which remains; with the permission of the Brâhmaṇas let him dispose (of that), as they may direct.

254. At a (Srâddha) in honour of the manes one must use (in asking the guests if they are satisfied, the word) svaditam; at a Gosh/~~hi~~-srâddha, (the word) susrutam; at a Vriddhi-srâddha, (the word) sampannam; and at (a rite) in honour of the gods, (the word) ruḷitam.

255. The afternoon, Kusa grass, the due preparation of the dwelling, sesamum grains, liberality, the careful preparation of the food, and (the company of) distinguished Brâhmaṇas are true riches at all funeral sacrifices.

256. Know that Kusa grass, purificatory (texts), the morning, sacrificial viands of all kinds, and those means of purification, mentioned above, are blessings at a sacrifice to the gods.

252. Yâgyñ. I, 243. Medh., Gov., Nand., and Râgh. read svadhetyeva, (shall then answer him) 'Svadhâ!'

254. 'One must ask,' i. e. 'the giver of the feast or any other person who comes' (Medh., Gov.), the former only (Kull.). Medh. and Gov. explain gosh/~~he~~, 'at a Gosh/~~hi~~-srâddha' (Kull., Râgh.), by 'in a cow-pen' (goshu tish/~~hantishu~~, goganamadhya), and Nâr. by gosh/~~he~~ gomandâlârtham gosh/~~he~~ brâhmaṇabhogane. Abhyudaya or Vriddhi-srâddhas are those performed on joyful occasions, such as marriages.

256. Pavitram, 'purificatory texts,' means according to Nâr. 'other means of purification, such as barley and water.' Nand. reads darbhapavitram, 'blades of Kusa grass.' 'Those means of purification mentioned above,' i. e. 'the preparation of the house

257. The food eaten by hermits in the forest, milk, Soma-juice, meat which is not prepared (with spices), and salt unprepared by art, are called, on account of their nature, sacrificial food.

258. Having dismissed the (invited) Brāhmaṇas, let him, with a concentrated mind, silent and pure, look towards the south and ask these blessings of the manes :

259. 'May liberal men abound with us! May (our knowledge of) the Vedas and (our) progeny increase! May faith not forsake us! May we have much to give (to the needy)!'

260. Having thus offered (the cakes), let him, after (the prayer), cause a cow, a Brāhmaṇa, a goat, or the sacred fire to consume those cakes, or let him throw them into water.

261. Some make the offering of the cakes after (the dinner); some cause (them) to be eaten by birds or throw them into fire or into water.

and so forth.' Nand. reads havishyāni ka śaktiṭaḥ, 'sacrificial viands (prepared) according to one's ability.'

257. Anupaskṛitam, 'which is not prepared (with spices),' (Gov., Nār.), means according to Nand. 'not dressed as people usually do,' according to Kull. and Rāgh. 'not tainted by a bad smell,' and according to Medh. 'not forbidden, such as meat from a slaughter-house.' 'Salt unprepared by art,' i.e. 'rock salt or salt from the sea' (but not Biḍa, Nār.).

259. Yâgñ. I, 245; Vi. LXXIII, 28.

260. Yâgñ. I, 256. 'Thus,' i.e. as described in verse 215.

261. Baudh. II, 14, 9. According to the MSS. and editions the word translated in accordance with the clear explanations of Medh., Kull., and K., and with the requirements of the context, by 'after (the dinner),' is purastât. As purastât always means 'before,' it would seem that the real reading of the three commentators was like that of Rāgh.'s commentary 'parastât,' the sense of which perfectly agrees with their explanation.

262. The (sacrificer's) first wife, who is faithful and intent on the worship of the manes, may eat the middle-most cake, (if she be) desirous of bearing a son.

263. (Thus) she will bring forth a son who will be long-lived, famous, intelligent, rich, the father of numerous offspring, endowed with (the quality of) goodness, and righteous.

264. Having washed his hands and sipped water, let him prepare (food) for his paternal relations and, after giving it to them with due respect, let him feed his maternal relatives also.

265. But the remnants shall be left (where they lie) until the Brâhmanas have been dismissed; afterwards he shall perform the (daily) domestic Bali-offering; that is a settled (rule of the) sacred law.

266. I will now fully declare what kind of sacrificial food, given to the manes according to the rule, will serve for a long time or for eternity.

267. The ancestors of men are satisfied for one month with sesamum grains, rice, barley, mâsha beans, water, roots, and fruits, which have been given according to the prescribed rule,

268. Two months with fish, three months with the meat of gazelles, four with mutton, and five indeed with the flesh of birds,

Nâr. and Nand. clearly read purastât, and explain it by prâk, 'before.' But the meaning, thus obtained, is not good, because it stands to reason that the custom mentioned here should differ from that described above, verse 218 seq.

264. This is to be done after the cakes have been made and placed (Medh., Nand.). Medh., Gov., Nand. read pûgayet, 'let him honour,' instead of 'let him feed.'

267-272. Âp. II, 16, 23-17, 3; Gaut. XV, 15; Vi. LXXX; Yâgñ. I, 257-259.

269. Six months with the flesh of kids, seven with that of spotted deer, eight with that of the black antelope, but nine with that of the (deer called) Ruru,

270. Ten months they are satisfied with the meat of boars and buffaloes, but eleven months indeed with that of hares and tortoises,

271. One year with cow-milk and milk-rice ; from the flesh of a long-eared white he-goat their satisfaction endures twelve years.

272. The (vegetable called) Kālasāka, (the fish called) Mahāsalka, the flesh of a rhinoceros and that of a red goat, and all kinds of food eaten by hermits in the forest serve for an endless time.

273. Whatever (food), mixed with honey, one gives on the thirteenth lunar day in the rainy season under the asterism of Maghāḥ, that also procures endless (satisfaction).

274. 'May such a man (the manes say) be born in our family who will give us milk-rice, with honey and clarified butter, on the thirteenth lunar day (of the month of Bhādrapada) and (in the afternoon) when the shadow of an elephant falls towards the east.'

269. Gov. states the Ruru is the Sambara, or Sāmbar stag.

271. Nār. explains vārdhrīṇasa, which Medh., Gov., Kull., and Rāgh. declare, on the strength of a verse, to be a white goat, by 'a black-necked, white-winged bird with a red head,' and quotes another nigama in favour of his view ; see also Âp. II, 17, 3, where the crane called Vārdhrīṇasa (var. lect. Vārdhrīṇasa) is mentioned.

272. Another name of the pot-herb Kālasāka is according to Medh. Kṛīṣṇavāsudeva, according to Nand. Kṛīṣṇanimba. The Mahāsalka is the prawn. Others mentioned by Medh. read saralkān.

273. Vi. LXXVI, 1 ; Yāgñ. I, 260. The day meant is Bhādrapada Badi 13.

274. Vi. LXXVIII, 51-52 ; Vas. XI, 40. Gov. omits this verse.

275. Whatever (a man), full of faith, duly gives according to the prescribed rule, that becomes in the other world a perpetual and imperishable (gratification) for the manes.

276. The days of the dark half of the month, beginning with the tenth, but excepting the fourteenth, are recommended for a funeral sacrifice; (it is) not thus (with) the others.

277. He who performs it on the even (lunar) days and under the even constellations, gains (the fulfilment of) all his wishes; he who honours the manes on odd (lunar days) and under odd (constellations), obtains distinguished offspring.

278. As the second half of the month is preferable to the first half, even so the afternoon is better for (the performance of) a funeral sacrifice than the forenoon.

Medh. says that 'others' improperly explain prâkṣhâye kuṅgarasya, '(in the afternoon) when the shadow of an elephant falls towards the east' (Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), by 'during an eclipse.' He also mentions a var. lect. prâkṣhâyâm. It seems, however, by no means certain that the explanation, adopted by him and most commentators, is the correct one. It is much more probable that a particular day (see Vigñânesvara on Yâgñ. I, 217) is meant. The thirteenth lunar day is, of course, the thirteenth of the dark half of Bhâdrapada, the day of the Mahâlâya Sṛâddha.

276. Âp. II, 17, 6; Gaut. XV, 3; Yâgñ. I, 263; Vas. XI, 16. The reason why the fourteenth is excepted, is given Vi. LXXVIII, 50, and Yâgñ. loc. cit.

277. Âp. II, 17, 8-22; Gaut. XV, 4; Vi. LXXVIII, 8-49; Yâgñ. I, 267. I read with Medh., Gov., Nand., Râgh., and K. pitṛṇ arṇan, which, to judge from the commentary, must have been Kull.'s reading also, instead of the senseless pitṛṇ sarvân of the editions. Nand. adds five verses and a half which give the details with respect to the rewards obtained by performing the Sṛâddhas on particular lunar days. They are clearly an interpolation.

278. Âp. II, 17, 5.

279. Let him, untired, duly perform the (rites) in honour of the manes in accordance with the prescribed rule, passing the sacred thread over the right shoulder, proceeding from the left to the right (and) holding Kusa grass in his hands, up to the end (of the ceremony).

280. Let him not perform a funeral sacrifice at night, because the (night) is declared to belong to the Rākshasas, nor in the twilight, nor when the sun has just risen.

281. Let him offer here below a funeral sacrifice, according to the rule given above, (at least) thrice a year, in winter, in summer, and in the rainy season, but that which is included among the five great sacrifices, every day.

282. The burnt-oblation, offered at a sacrifice to the manes, must not be made in a common fire; a Brāhmaṇa who keeps a sacred fire (shall) not (perform) a funeral sacrifice except on the new-moon day.

283. Even when a Brāhmaṇa, after bathing, satisfies the manes with water, he obtains thereby the whole reward for the performance of the (daily) Śrāddha.

284. They call (the manes of) fathers Vasus, (those of) grandfathers Rudras, and (those of) great-grandfathers Ādityas; thus (speaks) the eternal Veda.

279. Gov., Kull., and Rāgh. explain apasavyam, 'proceeding from left to right' (Nār.), by 'with the Tirtha of the hand, that is sacred to the manes.' Medh. and Gov. think that â nidhanât, 'up to the end (of the ceremony),' (Kull., Nār., Nand., Rāgh.), means 'until death.'

280. Āp. II, 17, 23.

284. Yâgñ. I, 268.

285. Let him daily partake of the vighasa and daily eat amṛita (ambrosia); but vighasa is what remains from the meal (of Brâhmaṇa guests) and the remainder of a sacrifice (is called) amṛita.

286. Thus all the ordinances relating to the five (daily great) sacrifices have been declared to you; hear now the law for the manner of living fit for Brâhmaṇas.

CHAPTER IV.

1. Having dwelt with a teacher during the fourth part of (a man's) life, a Brâhmaṇa shall live during the second quarter (of his existence) in his house, after he has wedded a wife.

2. A Brâhmaṇa must seek a means of subsistence which either causes no, or at least little pain (to others), and live (by that) except in times of distress.

3. For the purpose of gaining bare subsistence, let him accumulate property by (following those) irreproachable occupations (which are prescribed for) his (caste), without (unduly) fatiguing his body.

4. He may subsist by Rita (truth), and Amṛita

285. Medh. and Nâr. seem to have read bhṛityasesham, 'what remains after those who must be supported (have been fed).' The former mentions the other reading too.

IV. 2. Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., and Râgh. particularly state that droha and adroha are not equivalent to himsâ and ahimsâ, because 'injury to living beings' is forbidden under any circumstances. What is meant by droha is the pain caused to others by importunate begging. Hence the meaning of Manu is that householders shall, if possible, not subsist by begging, but rather by gleaning corn. Nand., however, explains droha by himsâ, and the following verses favour his opinion.

3. 'For the purpose of gaining bare subsistence, but not in order to procure many enjoyments for himself.'

(ambrosia), or by Mrīta (death) and by Pramrīta (what causes many deaths); or even by (the mode) called Satyânṛita (a mixture of truth and falsehood), but never by Svavṛitti (a dog's mode of life).

5. By Rīta shall be understood the gleanings of corn; by Amrīta, what is given unasked; by Mrīta, food obtained by begging; and agriculture is declared to be Pramrīta.

6. But trade and (money-lending) are Satyânṛita, even by that one may subsist. Service is called Svavṛitti; therefore one should avoid it.

7. He may either possess enough to fill a granary, or a store filling a grain-jar; or he may collect what suffices for three days, or make no provision for the morrow.

8. Moreover, among these four Brāhmaṇa householders, each later-(named) must be considered more distinguished, and through his virtue to have conquered the world more completely.

9. One of these follows six occupations, another subsists by three, one by two, but the fourth lives by the Brahmasattra.

7. Yâgñ. I, 128. The first two clauses are variously interpreted. The first means according to Medh., 'he may keep a store of grain or other property, sufficient to maintain a large family, many servants and animals during three years;' according to Gov., 'a store of grain sufficient for twelve days;' according to Kull. and Râgh., 'a store sufficient to fill a granary which holds a supply for three years or more;' and according to Nâr., 'a store sufficient for a year, six months, or three months.' The second clause is interpreted by Medh. as 'a store sufficient for six months;' by Gov. and Nâr. as 'a store sufficient for six days;' and by Kull. and Râgh. as 'a sufficiency for one year.' For other explanations of the term Kumbhîdhânya, see Baudh. I, 1, 5 note. Nand. reads dvyahaihikaḥ, 'or he may collect what suffices for two days.'

9. 'Six occupations,' i.e. 'gleaning corn, acceptance of gifts

10. He who maintains himself by picking up grains and ears of corn, must be always intent on (the performance of) the Agnihotra, and constantly offer those Ishṛis only, which are prescribed for the days of the conjunction and opposition (of the moon), and for the solstices.

11. Let him never, for the sake of subsistence, follow the ways of the world; let him live the pure, straightforward, honest life of a Brāhmaṇa.

12. He who desires happiness must strive after a perfectly contented disposition and control himself; for happiness has contentment for its root, the root of unhappiness is the contrary (disposition).

13. A Brāhmaṇa, who is a Snātaka and subsists by one of the (above-mentioned) modes of life, must given unasked, begging, agriculture, trade, and teaching' (Medh.), or 'those mentioned in verses 5-6' (Gov.), or 'those mentioned in verses 5-6, excepting service and with the addition of money-lending' (Kull., Rāgh.), or 'those enumerated in verses 5-6, and those six, mentioned above, I, 88' (Nār.), or 'those mentioned above, I, 88' (Nand.). 'Subsists by three,' i.e. 'by the first three, mentioned in verses 5-6' (Medh.), or 'by teaching, sacrificing, and accepting gifts' (Gov., Kull., Rāgh., Nand.), or 'by teaching, sacrificing and accepting gifts, and by the first three, mentioned in verses 5-6' (Nār.). 'One by two,' i.e. 'by gleaning and accepting voluntary gifts' (Medh.), or 'by sacrificing and teaching' (Gov., Kull., Rāgh., Nand.), or 'by gleaning ears and single grains' (Nār.). 'The Brahmasattra,' i.e. 'gleaning either ears or single grains' (Nār.), or 'teaching' (Gov., Kull., Rāgh., Nand.). Elsewhere the term Brahmasattra is applied to the daily recitation of the Veda, and it probably means here 'teaching.'

10. The Agnihotra, i.e. the daily morning and evening oblations in the sacred fire or fires. The sacrifices intended are the Darsa-paurṇamāsas and the Āgrayanas.

11. Yâgñ. I, 123.

12-17. Yâgñ. I, 129.

13. Nand. places verse 15 immediately after verse 12. Regarding the term Snātaka, see below, verse 31, Âp. I, 30, 1-3.

discharge the (following) duties which secure heavenly bliss, long life, and fame.

14. Let him, untired, perform daily the rites prescribed for him in the Veda ; for he who performs those according to his ability, attains to the highest state.

15. Whether he be rich or even in distress, let him not seek wealth through pursuits to which men cleave, nor by forbidden occupations, nor (let him accept presents) from any (giver whosoever he may be).

16. Let him not, out of desire (for enjoyments), attach himself to any sensual pleasures, and let him carefully obviate an excessive attachment to them, by (reflecting on their worthlessness in) his heart.

17. Let him avoid all (means of acquiring) wealth which impede the study of the Veda ; (let him maintain himself) anyhow, but study, because that (devotion to the Veda-study secures) the realisation of his aims.

18. Let him walk here (on earth), bringing his dress, speech, and thoughts to a conformity with his age, his occupation, his wealth, his sacred learning, and his race.

19. Let him daily pore over those Institutes of science which soon give increase of wisdom, those

15. Prasaṅga, 'through pursuits to which men cleave,' e.g. 'music and singing' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh., Nand.). Nâr. interprets the word by 'with too great eagerness.'

17. Vi. LXXI, 4.

18. Yâgñ. I, 123 ; Vi. LXXI, 5-6. 'His race,' e.g. let him wear his hair in the manner prescribed by the usage of his family (Vas. II, 21).

19. Yâgñ. I, 99 ; Vi. LXXI, 8. The various sciences meant are the Itihâsas, Purâṇas, and Nyâya, the Artharâstra, medicine, and which teach the acquisition of wealth, those which are beneficial (for other worldly concerns), and likewise over the Nigamas which explain the Veda.

20. For the more a man completely studies the Institutes of science, the more he fully understands (them), and his great learning shines brightly.

21. Let him never, if he is able (to perform them), neglect the sacrifices to the sages, to the gods, to the Bhûtas, to men, and to the manes.

22. Some men who know the ordinances for sacrificial rites, always offer these great sacrifices in their organs (of sensation), without any (external) effort.

23. Knowing that the (performance of the) sacrifice in their speech and their breath yields imperishable (rewards), some always offer their breath in their speech, and their speech in their breath.

24. Other Brâhmanas, seeing with the eye of knowledge that the performance of those rites has knowledge for its root, always perform them through knowledge alone.

25. A Brâhmana shall always offer the Agnihotra at the beginning or at the end of the day and of the night, and the Darsa and Purnamâsa (Ishtis) at the end of each half-month,

26. When the old grain has been consumed the astrology. The Nigamas are the Ângas (Medh.). Gov., Kull., and Nâr. consider the Nigamas to be a separate class of works, teaching the meaning of the Veda, i. e. the naigamakânda of the Nirukta.

22. This and the next two verses refer to various symbolical ways of performing the great sacrifices, which are mentioned in the Upanishads.

23. Kaushîtaki-Up. II, 5.

24. Nand. omits this verse.

25-27. Gaut. VIII, 19-20; Vas. XI, 46; Vi. LIX, 2-9; Baudh. II, 4, 23; Yâgñ. I, 97, 124-125.

(Âgrayana) Ishî with new grain, at the end of the (three) seasons the (Kâturmâsya)-sacrifices, at the solstices an animal (sacrifice), at the end of the year Soma-offerings.

27. A Brâhmana, who keeps sacred fires, shall, if he desires to live long, not eat new grain or meat, without having offered the (Âgrayana) Ishî with new grain and an animal-(sacrifice).

28. For his fires, not being worshipped by offerings of new grain and of an animal, seek to devour his vital spirits, (because they are) greedy for new grain and flesh.

29. No guest must stay in his house without being honoured, according to his ability, with a seat, food, a couch, water, or roots and fruits.

30. Let him not honour, even by a greeting, heretics, men who follow forbidden occupations, men who live like cats, rogues, logicians, (arguing against the Veda,) and those who live like herons.

31. Those who have become Snâtakas after studying the Veda, or after completing their vows, (and) householders, who are Srotriyas, one must worship by (gifts of food) sacred to gods and manes, but one must avoid those who are different.

30. Yâgñ. I, 130. Pâshandînah, 'heretics,' i.e. 'non-Brâhmanical ascetics' (vâhyalingînah, Medh.), or 'ascetics wearing red dresses and the like' (Gov.), or 'non-Brâhmanical ascetics, such as Bauddhas' (Kull., Nâr.), or 'those who do not believe in the Vedas' (Râgh.). The term does not necessarily refer to the Buddhists and Gainas, though the latter may be designated by it. The correct explanation of the word pâshanda or pâshandin, 'a sectarian,' has been given by Kern, Jaartelling der zuidelijke Buddhisten, p. 67. Regarding the men who act like cats or herons, see below, verses 195-196.

31. Nand. reads griham âgatân, 'who have come to his house,' instead of grihamedhînah, 'who are householders.'

32. A householder must give (as much food) as he is able (to spare) to those who do not cook for themselves, and to all beings one must distribute (food) without detriment (to one's own interest).

33. A Snâtaka who pines with hunger, may beg wealth of a king, of one for whom he sacrifices, and of a pupil, but not of others; that is a settled rule.

34. A Snâtaka who is able (to procure food) shall never waste himself with hunger, nor shall he wear old or dirty clothes, if he possesses property.

35. Keeping his hair, nails, and beard clipped, subduing his passions by austerities, wearing white garments and (keeping himself) pure, he shall be always engaged in studying the Veda and (such acts as are) conducive to his welfare.

36. He shall carry a staff of bamboo, a pot full of water, a sacred string, a bundle of Kusa grass, and (wear) two bright golden ear-rings.

32. Âp. II, 4, 14; Gaut. V, 22; Baudh. II, 5, 20. 'Those who do not cook for themselves,' i.e. students and ascetics. According to Gov. Pâshandâs are included by this term.

33. Gaut. IX, 63-64; Vas. XII, 2; Yâgñ. I, 130. 'A king,' i.e. 'a Kshatriya king who rules in accordance with the Sâstras;' see below, verse 84.

34. Vas. XII, 4; Vi. LXXI, 9; Gaut. IX, 3; Âp. I, 30, 13. Saktañ, 'who is able (to procure food),' (Nâr.), means according to Nand. 'he who is able to dine, shall not stint himself through avarice.' Gov., Kull., and K. explain the phrase, 'A Snâtaka, who is a fit (recipient of gifts), must not pine with hunger (as long as the king has anything to give),' i.e. he must be relieved. Râgh. reads yuktañ instead of saktañ, 'A Snâtaka who is suffering hunger shall not despair.' If taken in the second sense the rule is identical with that given Âp. II, 25, 11; Gaut. X, 9-10; Vi. III, 79.

35. Âp. I, 30, 10-12; Gaut. IX, 4, 7; Yâgñ. I, 131; Baudh. I, 5, 7.

36. Vas. XII, 14-17; Baudh. I, 5, 3-5; 6, 1-5; II, 6, 7; Vi. LXXI, 13-16; Yâgñ. I, 133.

37. Let him never look at the sun, when he sets or rises, is eclipsed or reflected in water, or stands in the middle of the sky.

38. Let him not step over a rope to which a calf is tied, let him not run when it rains, and let him not look at his own image in water ; that is a settled rule.

39. Let him pass by (a mound of) earth, a cow, an idol, a Brâhmana, clarified butter, honey, a cross-way, and well-known trees, turning his right hand towards them.

40. Let him, though mad with desire, not approach his wife when her courses appear ; nor let him sleep with her in the same bed.

41. For the wisdom, the energy, the strength, the sight, and the vitality of a man who approaches a woman covered with menstrual excretions, utterly perish.

42. If he avoids her, while she is in that condition, his wisdom, energy, strength, sight, and vitality will increase.

43. Let him not eat in the company of his wife, nor look at her, while she eats, sneezes, yawns, or sits at her ease.

44. A Brâhmana who desires energy must not

37. Âp. I, 31, 20 ; Vas. XII, 10 ; Baudh. II, 6, 10 ; Vi. LXXI, 17-21 ; Yâgñ. I, 135.

38. Âp. I, 31, 15 ; Vas. XII, 9 ; Baudh. II, 6, 15 ; Vi. LXXI, 23 ; LXIII, 41-43.

39. Gaut. IX, 66 ; Vi. LXIII, 26-28 ; Yâgñ. I, 133.

40-42. Gaut. IX, 29-30 ; Vas. XII, 7 ; Vi. LXIX, 11.

42. Medh. and Nand. read lakshmî, 'luck,' instead of tegañ, 'energy.'

43. Vas. XII, 31 ; Vi. LXVIII, 46 ; Yâgñ. I, 131 ; Gaut. IX, 32.

44. Gaut. IX, 32.

look at (a woman) who applies collyrium to her eyes, has anointed or uncovered herself or brings forth (a child).

45. Let him not eat, dressed with one garment only; let him not bathe naked; let him not void urine on a road, on ashes, or in a cow-pen,

46. Nor on ploughed land, in water, on an altar of bricks, on a mountain, on the ruins of a temple, nor ever on an ant-hill,

47. Nor in holes inhabited by living creatures, nor while he walks or stands, nor on reaching the bank of a river, nor on the top of a mountain.

48. Let him never void faeces or urine, facing the wind, or a fire, or looking towards a Brâhmaṇa, the sun, water, or cows.

49. He may ease himself, having covered (the ground) with sticks, clods, leaves, grass, and the like, restraining his speech, (keeping himself) pure, wrapping up his body, and covering his head.

50. Let him void faeces and urine, in the day-time turning to the north, at night turning towards the south, during the two twilights in the same (position) as by day.

45. Âp. I, 30, 18; Gaut. IX, 40, 45; Vas. XII, 11; Baudh. II, 6, 24, 39; Vi. LXVIII, 14; LXIV, 5; LX, 11, 16, 19; Yâgñ. I, 131, 134. Govrage, 'in a cow-pen' (Gov., Kull.), means according to Medh. 'a place where cows graze.'

46. Âp. I, 30, 18; Gaut. IX, 40; Vi. LX, 4, 21, 10. 'Some omit verses 46-47' (Nâr.), and they are not found in Nand.

47. Vi. LX, 9.

48. Âp. I, 30, 20; Gaut. II, 12; Vi. LX, 22; Yâgñ. I, 134. 'Looking at (things moved by) the wind' (Medh., Kull.). Medh. places verse 52 immediately after this.

49. Âp. I, 30, 14-15; Gaut. IX, 37-38, 41-43; Vas. XII, 13; Vi. LX, 2-3, 23.

50. Âp. I, 31, 1; Vi. LX, 2-3.

51. In the shade or in darkness a Brāhmaṇa may, both by day and at night, do it, assuming any position he pleases ; likewise when his life is in danger.

52. The intellect of (a man) who voids urine against a fire, the sun, the moon, in water, against a Brāhmaṇa, a cow, or the wind, perishes.

53. Let him not blow a fire with his mouth ; let him not look at a naked woman ; let him not throw any impure substance into the fire, and let him not warm his feet at it.

54. Let him not place (fire) under (a bed or the like) ; nor step over it, nor place it (when he sleeps) at the foot-(end of his bed) ; let him not torment living creatures.

55. Let him not eat, nor travel, nor sleep during the twilight ; let him not scratch the ground ; let him not take off his garland.

56. Let him not throw urine or faeces into the water, nor saliva, nor (clothes) defiled by impure substances, nor any other (impurity), nor blood, nor poisonous things.

57. Let him not sleep alone in a deserted dwelling ; let him not wake (a superior) who is sleeping ; let him not converse with a menstruating woman ;

52. Medh. and Nār. mention a var. lect. for prativātam, 'against the wind,' pratisamdhyaṃ, 'in the twilights,' which Nand. adopts.

53. Âp. I, 15, 20-21 ; Gaut. IX, 32 ; Vas. XII, 27 ; Vi. LXXI, 32-34, 37 ; Yâgñ. I, 137.

54. Vi. LXXI, 36 ; Yâgñ. I, 135, 137 ; Gaut. IX, 73.

55. Vi. LXIII, 8 ; LXVIII, 12 ; LXXI, 41, 55.

56. Âp. I, 30, 19 ; Vi. LXXI, 35 ; Yâgñ. I, 137.

57. Gaut. IX, 54-55 ; Vas. XII, 42 ; Vi. LXIII, 21 ; LXX, 13 ; LXXI, 58 ; Yâgñ. I, 138.

nor let him go to a sacrifice, if he is not chosen (to be officiating priest).

58. Let him keep his right arm uncovered in a place where a sacred fire is kept, in a cow-pen, in the presence of Brâhmaṇas, during the private recitation of the Veda, and at meals.

59. Let him not interrupt a cow who is suckling (her calf), nor tell anybody of it. A wise man, if he sees a rainbow in the sky, must not point it out to anybody.

60. Let him not dwell in a village where the sacred law is not obeyed, nor (stay) long where diseases are endemic; let him not go alone on a journey, nor reside long on a mountain.

61. Let him not dwell in a country where the rulers are Sûdras, nor in one which is surrounded by unrighteous men, nor in one which has become subject to heretics, nor in one swarming with men of the lowest castes.

62. Let him not eat anything from which the oil has been extracted; let him not be a glutton; let him not eat very early (in the morning), nor very late (in the evening), nor (take any food) in the evening, if he has eaten (his fill) in the morning.

63. Let him not exert himself without a purpose; let him not drink water out of his joined palms; let

58. Baudh. II, 6, 38; Vi. LXXI, 60.

59. Âp. I, 31, 10, 18; Gaut. IX, 23; Vas. XII, 33; Baudh. II, 6, 11, 17; Vi. LXIII, 2; LXXI, 62. All the commentators except Râgh. explain dhayantîm, 'who is suckling (her calf),' by pibantîm, 'who is drinking' (milk or water, see Yâgñ. I, 140).

60-61. Âp. I, 15, 22, 32, 18; Gaut. IX, 65; Baudh. II, 6, 21, 31; Vi. LXXI, 64-68.

62. Vi. LXVIII, 27, 48; see above, II, 56-57.

63. Gaut. IX, 9, 50, 56; Baudh. II, 6, 5; Vi. LXXI, 69.

him not eat food (placed) in his lap; let him not show (idle) curiosity.

64. Let him not dance, nor sing, nor play musical instruments, nor slap (his limbs), nor grind his teeth, nor let him make uncouth noises, though he be in a passion.

65. Let him never wash his feet in a vessel of white brass; let him not eat out of a broken (earthen) dish, nor out of one that (to judge) from its appearance (is) defiled.

66. Let him not use shoes, garments, a sacred string, ornaments, a garland, or a water-vessel which have been used by others.

67. Let him not travel with untrained beasts of burden, nor with (animals) that are tormented by hunger or disease, or whose horns, eyes, and hoofs have been injured, or whose tails have been disfigured.

68. Let him always travel with (beasts) which are well broken in, swift, endowed with lucky marks, and perfect in colour and form, without urging them much with the goad.

69. The morning sun, the smoke rising from a (burning) corpse, and a broken seat must be avoided. Let him not clip his nails or hair, and not tear his nails with his teeth.

64. Âp. II, 20, 13; Vi. LXXI, 70-71. Na kshvedet, 'let him not grind his teeth,' means according to Nâr., 'let him not roar like a lion;' according to Nand., 'let him not snap his fingers.' Na spho/aye/, 'he shall not slap (his limbs),' means according to Nand., 'he shall not make his fingers crack.'

65. Vi. LXVIII, 20; LXXI, 39.

66. Vi. LXXI, 47.

67-68. Vi. LXIII, 13-18.

69. Vi. LXXI, 44, 46; Yâgñ. I, 139. Bâlâtapaḥ, 'the morning sun,' is according to 'some,' mentioned by Nâr., and according to

70. Let him not crush earth or clods, nor tear off grass with his nails ; let him not do anything that is useless or will have disagreeable results in the future.

71. A man who crushes clods, tears off grass, or bites his nails, goes soon to perdition, likewise an informer and he who neglects (the rules of) purification.

72. Let him not wrangle ; let him not wear a garland over (his hair). To ride on the back of cows (or of oxen) is anyhow a blamable act.

73. Let him not enter a walled village or house except by the gate, and by night let him keep at a long distance from the roots of trees.

74. Let him never play with dice, nor himself take off his shoes ; let him not eat, lying on a bed, nor what has been placed in his hand or on a seat.

Râgh. 'the sun in the sign of Kanyâ, or Virgo,' i.e. 'the sun in autumn.' The same explanation is mentioned by Nandapandita in his comment on the parallel passage of Vishnu. It is, however, probably wrong : see the Introduction. 'Let him not clip his nails or hair,' i.e. 'not himself, but let him employ a barber' (Medh., Gov.), or 'before they have grown long' (Kull.), or 'except at the proper time for clipping' (Nand.).

70. Âp. I, 32, 18 ; Gaut. IX, 51 ; Vi. LXXI, 42-43.

72. Âp. I, 32, 5 ; Gaut. IX, 32 ; Baudh. II, 69. I read with all the commentators 'vigrîhya' instead of the 'vigarhya' of the editions. 'Let him not wear a garland over (his dress),' (Medh.), or 'let him not wear a garland outside (the house),' or 'one that is not fragrant' (others, Medh.).

73. Âp. I, 31, 23 ; Gaut. IX, 32 ; Baudh. II, 6, 13 ; Yâgñ. I, 140.

74. Gaut. IX, 32 ; Vas. XII, 36 ; Baudh. II, 6, 6 ; Vi. LXVIII, 23 ; Vi. LXXI, 45 ; Yâgñ. I, 138. 'Nor what has been placed in his hand,' i.e. 'in his left hand or in a vessel held in that hand' (Nâr.). This is no doubt the best explanation, as Hindus always eat with the fingers of the right hand, and the left hand is considered unclean for very good reasons.

75. Let him not eat after sunset any (food) containing sesamum grains ; let him never sleep naked, nor go anywhere unpurified (after meals).

76. Let him eat while his feet are (yet) wet (from the ablution), but let him not go to bed with wet feet. He who eats while his feet are (still) wet, will attain long life.

77. Let him never enter a place, difficult of access, which is impervious to his eye ; let him not look at urine or ordure, nor cross a river (swimming) with his arms.

78. Let him not step on hair, ashes, bones, potsherds, cotton-seed or chaff, if he desires long life.

79. Let him not stay together with outcasts, nor with Kāṇḍālas, nor with Pukkasas, nor with fools, nor with overbearing men, nor with low-caste men, nor with Antyāvasāyins.

80. Let him not give to a Sūdra advice, nor the remnants (of his meal), nor food offered to the gods ; nor let him explain the sacred law (to such a man), nor impose (upon him) a penance.

81. For he who explains the sacred law (to a Sūdra) or dictates to him a penance, will sink together with that (man) into the hell (called) Asamvṛita.

82. Let him not scratch his head with both hands

75. Gaut. IX, 60 ; Vi. LXVIII, 29 ; LXXI, 3 ; see above, II, 56.

76. Vi. LXVIII, 34 ; LXX, 1.

77. Âp. I, 32, 26 ; Gaut. IX, 32 ; Vas. XII, 45 ; Baudh. II, 6, 26 ; Vi. LXIII, 46.

78. Âp. II, 20, 11 ; Gaut. IX, 15 ; Baudh. II, 6, 16 ; Yâgñ. I, 139.

79. Regarding the Pukkasas and Antyāvasāyins, see below, X, 18, 39.

80. Âp. I, 31, 24 ; Vi. LXXI, 48-52 ; Vas. XVIII, 14.

81. Vas. XVIII, 15.

82. Vi. LXXI, 53.

joined ; let him not touch it while he is impure, nor bathe without (submerging) it.

83. Let him avoid (in anger) to lay hold of (his own or other men's) hair, or to strike (himself or others) on the head. When he has bathed (submerging) his head, he shall not touch any of his limbs with oil.

84. Let him not accept presents from a king who is not descended from the Kshatriya race, nor from butchers, oil-manufacturers, and publicans, nor from those who subsist by the gain of prostitutes.

85. One oil-press is as (bad) as ten slaughter-houses, one tavern as (bad as) ten oil-presses, one brothel as (bad as) ten taverns, one king as (bad as) ten brothels.

86. A king is declared to be equal (in wickedness) to a butcher who keeps a hundred thousand slaughter-houses ; to accept presents from him is a terrible (crime).

87. He who accepts presents from an avaricious king who acts contrary to the Institutes (of the sacred law), will go in succession to the following twenty-one hells :

88. Tâmisra, Andhatâmisra, Mahâraurava, Raurava, the Kâlasûtra hell, Mahânaraka,

89. Samgîvana, Mahâvîki, Tapanâ, Sampratâpana, Samghâta, Sakâkola, Kuḍmala, Pûtimrittika,

83. Vi. LXIV, 12. 'When he has bathed (submerging) his head' should be according to others (mentioned by Kull. and Râgh.) 'when he has anointed his head with oil.'

84. Yâgñ. I, 140.

85. Yâgñ. I, 141. Medh., Gov., Nâr., and Nand. say, 'one king as bad as ten prostitutes' (veryâ).

88-90. Vi. XLIII, 2-22. Nâr. and Gov. say expressly that narakam kâlasûtram &c means 'the Kâlasûtra hell,' and Nâr. that 'Vaita-

90. Lohasaṅku, Rīgīsha, Pathin, the (flaming) river, Sālmala, Asipatravana, and Lohakāraḥa.

91. Learned Brāhmaṇas, who know that, who study the Veda and desire bliss after death, do not accept presents from a king.

92. Let him wake in the muhūrta, sacred to Brahman, and think of (the acquisition of) spiritual merit and wealth, of the bodily fatigue arising therefrom, and of the true meaning of the Veda.

93. When he has risen, has relieved the necessities of nature and carefully purified himself, let him stand during the morning twilight, muttering for a long time (the Gāyatrī), and at the proper time (he must similarly perform) the evening (devotion).

94. By prolonging the twilight devotions, the sages obtained long life, wisdom, honour, fame, and excellence in Vedic knowledge.

95. Having performed the Upākarmaṇ according to the prescribed rule on (the full moon of the month) Srāvana, or on that of Praushṭhapada (Bhādrapada), raṁī' must be understood with nadi, 'the river,' while Gov. speaks of a hell called Nadi, 'the river.' The corresponding passage of Vishṇu shows that the Dīpanadī is meant. The editions read Samhāta instead of Samghāta, Sālmali instead of Sālmala, and Lohadāraḥa, which Rāgh. has also, instead of Lohakāraḥa.

92. Vas. XII, 47; Vi. LX, 1. Kull. and Rāgh. say, 'in the muhūrta, sacred to Brāhmī,' or Bhārati, the goddess of speech. But this explanation is wrong, as the expression prāgāpatya muhūrta, used in other Smṛitis, shows.

93. Vi. LXXI, 77.

94. I read with Gov., Nand., and K., avāpnuyān, 'obtained,' instead of avāpnuyān (Medh., Kull., Nār., Rāgh.).

95-97. Āp. I, 9, 1-3, 10, 2; Gaut. XVI, 1-2, 40; Vas. XIII, 1-5; Baudh. I, 12-16; Vi. XXX, 1-2, 24-25; Yāgyñ. I, 142-144.

The Upākarmaṇ is the solemn opening of the Brāhmaṇical school-term, and the Utsargana or Utsarga its closing. Their a Brâhmaṇa shall diligently study the Vedas during four months and a half.

96. When the Pushya-day (of the month Pausha), or the first day of the bright half of Mâgha has come, a Brâhmaṇa shall perform in the forenoon the Utsargana of the Vedas.

97. Having performed the Utsarga outside (the village), as the Institutes (of the sacred law) prescribe, he shall stop reading during two days and the intervening night, or during that day (of the Utsarga) and (the following) night.

98. Afterwards he shall diligently recite the Vedas during the bright (halves of the months), and duly study all the Aṅgas of the Vedas during the dark fortnights.

99. Let him not recite (the texts) indistinctly, nor in the presence of Sûdras; nor let him, if in the latter part of the night he is tired with reciting the Veda, go again to sleep.

100. According to the rule declared above, let him recite the daily (portion of the) Mantras, and a zealous Brâhmaṇa, (who is) not in distress, (shall study) the Brâhmaṇa and the Mantrasamhitâ.

101. Let him who studies always avoid (reading) on the following occasions when the Veda-study is description is found in the Gr̥hya-sûtras, e.g. Sâṅkhâya IV, 5-6. The Pushya-day is the sixth lunar day of each month: Śrâvana, July-August; Bhâdrapada, August-September; Pausha, December-January; Mâgha, January-February.

97. But see below, verse 119.

98-129. Âp. I, 9, 4-11, 38; 32, 12-15; Gaut. I, 58-60; XVI, 5-49; Vas. XIII, 6-40; XVIII, 13; Baudh. I, 21, 4-22; Vi. XXX, 3-30; Yâgy. I, 144-151.

100. 'The daily (portion of the) Mantras,' i.e. 'the Gâyatrî and other portions of the Rikas, Yagus, and Sâmans.'

forbidden, and (let) him who teaches pupils according to the prescribed rule (do it likewise).

102. Those who know the (rules of) recitation declare that in the rainy season the Veda-study must be stopped on these two (occasions), when the wind is audible at night, and when it whirls up the dust in the day-time.

103. Manu has stated, that when lightning, thunder, and rain (are observed together), or when large fiery meteors fall on all sides, the recitation must be interrupted until the same hour (on the next day, counting from the occurrence of the event).

104. When one perceives these (phenomena) all together (in the twilight), after the sacred fires have been made to blaze (for the performance of the Agnihotra), then one must know the recitation of the Veda to be forbidden, and also when clouds appear out of season.

105. On (the occasion of) a preternatural sound from the sky, (of) an earthquake, and when the lights of heaven are surrounded by a halo, let him know that (the Veda-study must be) stopped until the same hour (on the next day), even if (these phenomena happen) in the (rainy) season.

106. But when lightning and the roar of thunder (are observed) after the sacred fires have been made to blaze, the stoppage shall last as long as the light (of the sun or of the stars is visible); if the remaining (above-named phenomenon, rain, occurs, the reading shall cease), both in the day-time and at night.

105. Medh. proposes as another explanation of gyotishâm kopa-sargane, 'when the heavenly lights trouble each other,' i. e. obscure each other, and Nâr., Kull., and Râgh. refer the phrase to eclipses.

107. For those who wish to acquire exceedingly great merit, a continual interruption of the Veda-study (is prescribed) in villages and in towns, and (the Veda-study must) always (cease) when any kind of foul smell (is perceptible).

108. In a village where a corpse lies, in the presence of a (man who lives as unrighteously as a) Sûdra, while (the sound of) weeping (is heard), and in a crowd of men the (recitation of the Veda must be) stopped.

109. In water, during the middle part of the night, while he voids excrements, or is impure, and after he has partaken of a funeral dinner, a man must not even think in his heart (of the sacred texts).

110. A learned Brâhmana shall not recite the Veda during three days, when he has accepted an invitation to a (funeral rite) in honour of one ancestor (ekoddishṭa), or when the king has become impure through a birth or death in his family (sûtaka), or when Râhu by an eclipse makes the moon impure.

111. As long as the smell and the stains of the (food given) in honour of one ancestor remain on the body of a learned Brâhmana, so long he must not recite the Veda.

112. While lying on a bed, while his feet are raised (on a bench), while he sits on his hams with a cloth tied round his knees, let him not study, nor when he has eaten meat or food given by a person impure on account of a birth or a death,

107. With respect to this verse, see especially Baudh. II, 6, 33-34.

109. Medh. mentions a var. lect. udaye, 'at sunrise,' for udaye, 'in water.'

110. Eclipses of the sun are of course included.

113. Nor during a fog, nor while the sound of arrows is audible, nor during both the twilights, nor on the new-moon day, nor on the fourteenth and the eighth (days of each half-month), nor on the full-moon day.

114. The new-moon day destroys the teacher, the fourteenth (day) the pupil, the eighth and the full-moon days (destroy all remembrance of) the Veda; let him therefore avoid (reading on) those (days).

115. A Brâhmana shall not recite (the Veda) during a dust-storm, nor while the sky is preternaturally red, nor while jackals howl, nor while the barking of dogs, the braying of donkeys, or the grunting of camels (is heard), nor while (he is seated) in a company.

116. Let him not study near a burial-ground, nor near a village, nor in a cow-pen, nor dressed in a garment which he wore during conjugal intercourse, nor after receiving a present at a funeral sacrifice.

117. Be it an animal or a thing inanimate, whatever be the (gift) at a Srâddha, let him not, having just accepted it, recite the Veda; for the hand of a Brâhmana is his mouth.

118. When the village has been beset by robbers, and when an alarm has been raised by fire, let him know that (the Veda-study must be) interrupted until the same hour (on the next day), and on (the occurrence of) all portents.

113. Vâna, 'arrows,' may also mean 'a large lute.'

115. Pañktau, 'in a company' (Gov., Kull., Nâr., 'others'), means according to Medh., Nâr., and Râgh. 'in the midst of dogs, donkeys, or camels.' Nâr. mentions a third explanation, 'in the company of unworthy persons' (apâñktya).

117. I.e. it is as sinful to recite the Veda after accepting a present at a Srâddha, as to study after partaking of a funeral dinner.

119. On (the occasion of) the Upâkarman and (of) the Vedotsarga an omission (of the Veda-study) for three days has been prescribed, but on the Ash/akâs and on the last nights of the seasons for a day and a night.

120. Let him not recite the Veda on horseback, nor on a tree, nor on an elephant, nor in a boat (or ship), nor on a donkey, nor on a camel, nor standing on barren ground, nor riding in a carriage,

121. Nor during a verbal altercation, nor during a mutual assault, nor in a camp, nor during a battle, nor when he has just eaten, nor during an indigestion, nor after vomiting, nor with sour eructations,

122. Nor without receiving permission from a guest (who stays in his house), nor while the wind blows vehemently, nor while blood flows from his body, nor when he is wounded by a weapon.

123. Let him never recite the Rîg-veda or the Yagur-veda while the Sâman (melodies) are heard; (let him stop all Veda-study for a day and a night) after finishing a Veda or after reciting an Âraṇyaka.

124. The Rîg-veda is declared to be sacred to the gods, the Yagur-veda sacred to men, and the Sâma-veda sacred to the manes; hence the sound of the latter is impure (as it were).

119. The Ash/akâs are the three or four days for the Ash/akâ Srâddhas, which are placed differently by different writers; see Weber, Die Nakshatras II, 337.

121. Nâr. interprets na vivâde na kalahe by 'neither during a dispute on legal matters nor during an altercation.'

124. 'Is impure (as it were),' i.e. 'it is not really impure, but when it is heard, one must not study, just as in the presence of some impure thing or person' (Medh.).

125. Knowing this, the learned daily repeat first in due order the essence of the three (Vedas) and afterwards the (text of the) Veda.

126. Know that (the Veda-study must be) interrupted for a day and a night, when cattle, a frog, a cat, a dog, a snake, an ichneumon, or a rat pass between (the teacher and his pupil).

127. Let a twice-born man always carefully interrupt the Veda-study on two (occasions, viz.) when the place where he recites is impure, and when he himself is unpurified.

128. A twice-born man who is a Snātaka shall remain chaste on the new-moon day, on the eighth (lunar day of each half-month), on the full-moon day, and on the fourteenth, even (if they fall) in the period (proper for conjugal intercourse).

129. Let him not bathe (immediately) after a meal, nor when he is sick, nor in the middle of the night, nor frequently dressed in all his garments, nor in a pool which he does not perfectly know.

130. Let him not intentionally step on the shadow of (images of) the gods, of a Guru, of a king, of a Snātaka, of his teacher, of a reddish-brown animal, or of one who has been initiated to the performance of a Śrauta sacrifice (Dikshita).

125. 'The essence of three (Vedas),' i.e. the syllable Om and the Gâyatrī; see above, II, 76-77.

128. Vi. LXIX, 1; Vas. XII, 21. According to others, quoted by Medh., the word brahmaṭrī translated by 'chaste' indicates that a Snātaka must also in other respects behave like a student. Medh. thinks it possible that the abstention from honey and meat may also be indicated.

129. Âp. I, 32, 8; Baudh. II, 6, 25; Vi. LXIV, 3-4, 6. 'Not frequently,' i.e. 'only for particular reasons, such as being touched by a Kāṇḍāla.'

130. Yâgñ. I, 152; Vi. LXIII, 40. Babhru, 'a reddish-brown

131. At midday and at midnight, after partaking of meat at a funeral dinner, and in the two twilights let him not stay long on a cross-road.

132. Let him not step intentionally on things used for cleansing the body, on water used for a bath, on urine or ordure, on blood, on mucus, and on anything spat out or vomited.

133. Let him not show particular attention to an enemy, to the friend of an enemy, to a wicked man, to a thief, or to the wife of another man.

134. For in this world there is nothing so detrimental to long life as criminal conversation with another man's wife.

135. Let him who desires prosperity, indeed, never despise a Kshatriya, a snake, and a learned Brâhmaṇa, be they ever so feeble.

136. Because these three, when treated with disrespect, may utterly destroy him; hence a wise man must never despise them.

137. Let him not despise himself on account of former failures; until death let him seek fortune, nor despair of gaining it.

138. Let him say what is true, let him say what is pleasing, let him utter no disagreeable truth, and let him utter no agreeable falsehood; that is the eternal law.

animal,' is not clearly explained by Gov., Kull., and Râgh. Medh. thinks that 'a brown cow' or 'the Soma creeper' may be meant. Nand. adopts the former view, and Nâr. explains it by 'a brown creature.'

132. Vi. LXIII, 41; Yâgñ. I, 152. Apasânânam, 'water used for a bath,' means according to Nâr. and Nand. 'water used for washing a corpse.'

135-136. Yâgñ. I, 153.

137. Vi. LXXI, 76; Yâgñ. I, 153.

138. Gaut. IX, 68; Vi. LXXI, 73-74; Yâgñ. I, 132.

139. (What is) well, let him call well, or let him say 'well' only; let him not engage in a useless enmity or dispute with anybody.

140. Let him not journey too early in the morning, nor too late in the evening, nor just during the midday (heat), nor with an unknown (companion), nor alone, nor with Śūdras.

141. Let him not insult those who have redundant limbs or are deficient in limbs, nor those destitute of knowledge, nor very aged men, nor those who have no beauty or wealth, nor those who are of low birth.

142. A Brāhmaṇa who is impure must not touch with his hand a cow, a Brāhmaṇa, or fire; nor, being in good health, let him look at the luminaries in the sky, while he is impure.

143. If he has touched these, while impure, let him always sprinkle with his hand water on the organs of sensation, all his limbs, and the navel.

144. Except when sick he must not touch the cavities (of the body) without a reason, and he must avoid (to touch) the hair on the secret (parts).

145. Let him eagerly follow the (customs which are) auspicious and the rule of good conduct, be careful of purity, and control all his organs, let him mutter (prayers) and, untired, daily offer oblations in the fire.

139. Âp. I, 32, 11-14; Gaut. IX, 19-20; Vi. LXXI, 57; Yâgñ. I, 132; Gaut. IX, 32. 'Only,' i.e. even if things go wrong. I follow Nâr.'s explanation, which is the only correct one: bhadram vastuto yakkhobhanam | bhadram ity eva vâ 'bhadram api, '(let him call) well what is really well; or (let him call) well even that which is not well.'

140. Baudh. II, 6, 22-23; Vi. LXIII, 4, 6-7, 9.

141. Vi. LXXI, 2. 142. Yâgñ. I, 155. 144. Vi. LXXI, 79.

146. No calamity happens to those who eagerly follow auspicious customs and the rule of good conduct, to those who are always careful of purity, and to those who mutter (sacred texts) and offer burnt-oblations.

147. Let him, without tiring, daily mutter the Veda at the proper time; for they declare that to be one's highest duty; (all) other (observances) are called secondary duties.

148. By daily reciting the Veda, by (the observance of the rules of) purification, by (practising) austerities, and by doing no injury to created beings, one (obtains the faculty of) remembering former births.

149. He who, recollecting his former existences, again recites the Veda, gains endless bliss by the continual study of the Veda.

150. Let him always offer on the Parva-days oblations to Savitṛi and such as avert evil omens, and on the Aśtākās and Anvashākās let him constantly worship the manes.

151. Far from his dwelling let him remove urine (and ordure), far (let him remove) the water used for washing his feet, and far the remnants of food and the water from his bath.

152. Early in the morning only let him void

146. Vas. XXVI, 14.

147. Gaut. IX, 72.

150. Vi. LXXI, 86. Nand. reads sāvitrīyā, 'with the Sāvitrī,' for sāvitrān, 'to Savitrī,' and Nār. has the same explanation.

151. Âp. I, 31, 2-3; Gaut. IX, 39; Yâgñ. I, 153. Âvasatha, 'his dwelling,' means according to Kull. 'the room where the fires are kept.' Kull. explains nishekam, 'the water from his bath,' by 'seminal impurity.' Gov. and Nār. read ukkhish/ānnanishekam ka, and explain nisheka by tyāga, 'throwing away.'

152. According to Medh., 'others' explained maitram, 'defecation,' by 'friendly service,' or by 'the worship of Mitra.'

fæces, decorate (his body), bathe, clean his teeth, apply collyrium to his eyes, and worship the gods.

153. But on the Parva-days let him go to visit the (images of the) gods, and virtuous Brāhmanas, and the ruler (of the country), for the sake of protection, as well as his Gurus.

154. Let him reverentially salute venerable men (who visit him), give them his own seat, let him sit near them with joined hands and, when they leave, (accompany them), walking behind them.

155. Let him, untired, follow the conduct of virtuous men, connected with his occupations, which has been fully declared in the revealed texts and in the sacred tradition (Smṛiti) and is the root of the sacred law.

156. Through virtuous conduct he obtains long life, through virtuous conduct desirable offspring, through virtuous conduct imperishable wealth; virtuous conduct destroys (the effect of) inauspicious marks.

157. For a man of bad conduct is blamed among people, constantly suffers misfortunes, is afflicted with diseases, and short-lived.

158. A man who follows the conduct of the virtuous, has faith and is free from envy, lives a hundred years, though he be entirely destitute of auspicious marks.

159. Let him carefully avoid all undertakings (the success of) which depends on others; but let

153. Âp. I, 31, 21-22. Medh. omits verses 153-158.

154. Baudh. II, 6, 35. 155. Vas. LXXI, 90; Yâgñ. I, 154.

156. Vas. VI, 7; Vi. LXXI, 91. 157. Vas. VI, 6.

158. Vas. VI, 8; Vi. LXXI, 92.

him eagerly pursue that (the accomplishment of) which depends on himself.

160. Everything that depends on others (gives) pain, everything that depends on oneself (gives) pleasure; know that this is the short definition of pleasure and pain.

161. When the performance of an act gladdens his heart, let him perform it with diligence; but let him avoid the opposite.

162. Let him never offend the teacher who initiated him, nor him who explained the Veda, nor his father and mother, nor (any other) Guru, nor cows, nor Brâhmaṇas, nor any men performing austerities.

163. Let him avoid atheism, cavilling at the Vedas, contempt of the gods, hatred, want of modesty, pride, anger, and harshness.

164. Let him, when angry, not raise a stick against another man, nor strike (anybody) except a son or a pupil; those two he may beat in order to correct them.

161. This rule refers to indifferent acts or cases where there is an option; see above, II, 12.

162. Yâgñ. I, 157-158. Na himsyât, 'let him never offend' (Medh., Kull., Nâr., Nand.), means according to Gov. 'let him never injure them, though they attempt his life, when self-defence is permitted' (see VIII, 350). Tapasvinaḥ means according to Medh. and Gov. 'all those engaged in the performance of austerities,' e.g. even sinners who perform penances (Medh.), while the other commentators understand it to denote 'ascetics.'

163. Âp. I, 30, 25; Vas. XIII, 41; Vi. LXXI, 83. I read with all the commentators instead of dambham, 'hypocrisy,' stambham, which according to Medh., Gov., and Nâr. means 'want of modesty,' and according to Kull. 'want of energy in the fulfilment of duties.'

164. Vi. LXXI, 81-82. See also below, VIII, 299-300.

165. A twice-born man who has merely threatened a Brāhmaṇa with the intention of (doing him) a corporal injury, will wander about for a hundred years in the Tāmisa hell.

166. Having intentionally struck him in anger, even with a blade of grass, he will be born during twenty-one existences in the wombs (of such beings where men are born in punishment of their) sins.

167. A man who in his folly caused blood to flow from the body of a Brāhmaṇa who does not attack him, will suffer after death exceedingly great pain.

168. As many particles of dust as the blood takes up from the ground, during so many years the spiller of the blood will be devoured by other (animals) in the next world.

169. A wise man should therefore never threaten a Brāhmaṇa, nor strike him even with a blade of grass, nor cause his blood to flow.

170. Neither a man who (lives) unrighteously, nor he who (acquires) wealth (by telling) falsehoods, nor he who always delights in doing injury, ever attain happiness in this world.

171. Let him, though suffering in consequence of his righteousness, never turn his heart to unrighteousness; for he will see the speedy overthrow of unrighteous, wicked men.

172. Unrighteousness, practised in this world, does not at once produce its fruit, like a cow; but, advancing slowly, it cuts off the roots of him who committed it.

165-167. Gaut. XXI, 20-22; Yâgñ. I, 155.

172. 'Like a cow,' i.e. 'which at once yields benefits by its milk, &c.' (Gov., Nâr., Nand.). Medh., Kull., and Râgh. take gauḥ

173. If (the punishment falls) not on (the offender) himself, (it falls) on his sons, if not on the sons, (at least) on his grandsons ; but an iniquity (once) committed, never fails to produce fruit to him who wrought it.

174. He prospers for a while through unrighteousness, then he gains great good fortune, next he conquers his enemies, but (at last) he perishes (branch and) root.

175. Let him always delight in truthfulness, (obedience to) the sacred law, conduct worthy of an Āryan, and purity ; let him chastise his pupils according to the sacred law ; let him keep his speech, his arms, and his belly under control.

176. Let him avoid (the acquisition of) wealth and (the gratification of his) desires, if they are opposed to the sacred law, and even lawful acts which may cause pain in the future or are offensive to men.

177. Let him not be uselessly active with his hands and feet, or with his eyes, nor crooked (in his ways), nor talk idly, nor injure others by deeds or even think of it.

178. Let him walk in that path of holy men in its other sense, 'the earth,' i.e. 'which does not at once yield a harvest,' but mention the first explanation too. It is not impossible that the word has to be taken both ways, and that the author wishes to give with it both a sādharmya and a vaidharmyadrishānta.

175. Gaut. IX, 50, 68-69.

176. Gaut. IX, 47, 73 ; Vi. LXXI, 84-85 ; Yāgñ. I, 156. As an example of 'a lawful act causing pain in the future,' Medh. adduces 'the gift of one's whole property.'

177. The last portion of the verse, 'nor injure others, &c.,' may also be translated, 'let him not be intent on deeds (calculated) to injure others.'

which his fathers and his grandfathers followed; while he walks in that, he will not suffer harm.

179. With an officiating or a domestic priest, with a teacher, with a maternal uncle, a guest and a dependant, with infants, aged and sick men, with learned men, with his paternal relatives, connexions by marriage and maternal relatives,

180. With his father and his mother, with female relatives, with a brother, with his son and his wife, with his daughter and with his slaves, let him not have quarrels.

181. If he avoids quarrels with these persons, he will be freed from all sins, and by suppressing (all) such (quarrels) a householder conquers all the following worlds.

182. The teacher is the lord of the world of Brahman, the father has power over the world of the Lord of created beings (Pragâpati), a guest rules over the world of Indra, and the priests over the world of the gods.

183. The female relatives (have power) over the world of the Apsarases, the maternal relatives over that of the Visve Devâs, the connexions by marriage over that of the waters, the mother and the maternal uncle over the earth.

184. Infants, aged, poor and sick men must be considered as rulers of the middle sphere, the eldest

179-184. Yâgñ. I, 157-158.

179. Vaidyair, 'with learned men,' may also mean 'with physicians.'

181. Instead of etair gitais ka, 'by suppressing (all) such (quarrels),' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), Nâr. and Nand. read etair gitas ka, 'allowing himself to be conquered by these,' i.e. 'by bearing with these persons.' This reading, though less well attested than the vulgata, is perhaps preferable.

brother as equal to one's father, one's wife and one's son as one's own body,

185. One's slaves as one's shadow, one's daughter as the highest object of tenderness ; hence if one is offended by (any one of) these, one must bear it without resentment.

186. Though (by his learning and sanctity) he may be entitled to accept presents, let him not attach himself (too much) to that (habit); for through his accepting (many) presents the divine light in him is soon extinguished.

187. Without a full knowledge of the rules, prescribed by the sacred law for the acceptance of presents, a wise man should not take anything, even though he may pine with hunger.

188. But an ignorant (man) who accepts gold, land, a horse, a cow, food, a dress, sesamum-grains, (or) clarified butter, is reduced to ashes like (a piece of) wood.

189. Gold and food destroy his longevity, land and a cow his body, a horse his eye(sight), a garment his skin, clarified butter his energy, sesamum-grains his offspring.

190. A Brâhmaṇa who neither performs austerities nor studies the Veda, yet delights in accepting gifts, sinks with the (donor into hell), just as (he who attempts to cross over in) a boat made of stone (is submerged) in the water.

191. Hence an ignorant (man) should be afraid of accepting any presents ; for by reason of a very small (gift) even a fool sinks (into hell) as a cow into a morass.

186. Vi. LVII, 6-7.

188. Yâgyñ. I, 201.

187. Vi. LVII, 8.

191. Yâgyñ. I, 202.

192. (A man) who knows the law should not offer even water to a Brāhmaṇa who acts like a cat, nor to a Brāhmaṇa who acts like a heron, nor to one who is unacquainted with the Veda.

193. For property, though earned in accordance with prescribed rules, which is given to these three (persons), causes in the next world misery both to the giver and to the recipient.

194. As he who (attempts to) cross water in a boat of stone sinks (to the bottom), even so an ignorant donor and an ignorant donee sink low.

195. (A man) who, ever covetous, displays the flag of virtue, (who is) a hypocrite, a deceiver of the people, intent on doing injury, (and) a detractor (from the merits) of all men, one must know to be one who acts like a cat.

196. That Brāhmaṇa, who with downcast look, of a cruel disposition, is solely intent on attaining his own ends, dishonest and falsely gentle, is one who acts like a heron.

197. Those Brāhmaṇas who act like herons, and those who display the characteristics of cats, fall in consequence of that wicked mode of acting into (the hell called) Andhatâmisra.

198. When he has committed a sin, let him not

192. Vi. XCIII, 7.

195. Vi. XCIII, 8.

196-200. Vi. XCIII, 9-13.

196. I have everywhere translated the word baka or vaka by 'heron,' though, like its modern representative baglâ, it is used also as a name of the white ibis and of the bittern. But from other verses, which speak of the baka cautiously wading in the water as if it were afraid of hurting the aquatic animals, it would seem that the proceedings of the heron, which one can watch in India at every village tank, gave rise to the proverbial expressions bakavrata and bakavratin.

198. Several penances, e.g. the Kândrâyaṇa or the lunar penance, perform a penance under the pretence (that the act is intended to gain) spiritual merit, (thus) hiding his sin under (the pretext of) a vow and deceiving women and Sûdras.

199. Such Brâhmanas are reprehended after death and in this (life) by those who expound the Veda, and a vow, performed under a false pretence, goes to the Râkshasas.

200. He who, without being a student, gains his livelihood by (wearing) the dress of a student, takes upon himself the guilt of (all) students and is born again in the womb of an animal.

201. Let him never bathe in tanks belonging to other men ; if he bathes (in such a one), he is tainted by a portion of the guilt of him who made the tank.

202. He who uses without permission a carriage, a bed, a seat, a well, a garden or a house belonging to an (other man), takes upon himself one fourth of (the owner's) guilt.

203. Let him always bathe in rivers, in ponds, dug by the gods (themselves), in lakes, and in water-holes or springs.

204. A wise man should constantly discharge the paramount duties (called yama), but not always the minor ones (called niyama) ; for he who does not may be performed either by a sinner in order to atone for a crime or by a guiltless man in order to gain spiritual merit ; see Baudh. III, 8, 27-31.

201. Vi. LXIV, 1 ; Yâgñ. I, 159 ; Baudh. II, 5, 6.

202. Yâgñ. I, 160 ; Baudh. II, 6, 29.

203. Vi. LXIV, 16 ; Yâgñ. I, 159. Garta, 'water-holes' (Gov., Nâr.), means according to Kull., who quotes a verse of the Khândogya-parishîṣṭa, Nand., and Râgh., 'a brook.'

204. Regarding the two classes of duties, see Yâgñ. III, 313-314. Though the commentators give various explanations of yama discharge the former, while he obeys the latter alone, becomes an outcast.

205. A Brāhmaṇa must never eat (a dinner given) at a sacrifice that is offered by one who is not a Srotriya, by one who sacrifices for a multitude of men, by a woman, or by a eunuch.

206. When those persons offer sacrificial viands in the fire, it is unlucky for holy (men) and it displeases the gods ; let him therefore avoid it.

207. Let him never eat (food given) by intoxicated, angry, or sick (men), nor that in which hair or insects are found, nor what has been touched intentionally with the foot,

208. Nor that at which the slayer of a learned Brāhmaṇa has looked, nor that which has been touched by a menstruating woman, nor that which has been pecked at by birds or touched by a dog,

209. Nor food at which a cow has smelt, nor particularly that which has been offered by an invitation to all comers, nor that (given) by a multitude or by harlots, nor that which is declared to be bad by a learned (man),

210. Nor the food (given) by a thief, a musician, a carpenter, a usurer, one who has been initiated (for the performance of a Srauta sacrifice), a miser, one bound with fetters, and niyama, it is highly probable that Kull. is right in supposing Manu to have held the same opinion as Yâgñ.

205. Nâr. mentions a var. lect. sûdreṇa, 'by a Sûdra,' for 'by a eunuch.'

209. Gov. and Kull. give as an instance of 'a multitude,' 'a fraternity of Brāhmaṇas inhabiting a monastery.'

210. I translate baddhasya nigadasya ka according to Kull. by 'one bound with fetters,' because in the older Sanskrit the genitive is occasionally used for the instrumental with passive perfect parti-

211. By one accused of a mortal sin (Abhisasta), a hermaphrodite, an unchaste woman, or a hypocrite, nor (any sweet thing) that has turned sour, nor what has been kept a whole night, nor (the food) of a Sûdra, nor the leavings (of another man),

212. Nor (the food given) by a physician, a hunter, a cruel man, one who eats the fragments (of another's meal), nor the food of an Ugra, nor that prepared for a woman in childbed, nor that (given at a dinner) where (a guest rises) prematurely (and) sips water, nor that (given by a woman) whose ten days of impurity have not elapsed,

213. Nor (food) given without due respect, nor (that which contains) meat eaten for no sacred purpose, nor (that given) by a female who has no male (relatives), nor the food of an enemy, nor that (given) by the lord of a town, nor that (given) by outcasts, nor that on which anybody has sneezed ;

ciples, and because nigada does not mean 'bound with fetters,' as the other commentators assume. Nand. adds that the correct reading is nigalena, which is found in some southern MSS.

211. Sûdrasyokkḥisham eva ka, 'nor (the food) of a Sûdra, nor the leavings (of any other man),' (Kull., Nâr.); or, 'the leavings of a Sûdra,' which are mentioned in order to show that a very heavy penance has to be performed (Medh., Râgh.); or, 'that food of which a Sûdra has eaten, and has left a remnant in the dish' (Gov., Nand., Medh., 'others'). Medh. mentions also a var. lect. ukḥisham aguros tathâ, 'nor the leavings of any man excepting a Guru.'

212. Ugra is explained variously as 'a man of the Ugra caste' (Medh., Gov., Nâr., Nand., Râgh.); or, 'a king' (Medh., Gov. in the Mañgari); or, 'a man who perpetrates dreadful deeds' (Kull., Râgh.).

213. Kull. and Gov. seem to take nagaryannam, 'food given by the lord of a town,' i.e. a king (Medh., Nâr., Râgh.), in the sense of nagarânnam, 'food given by a whole town.'

214. Nor the food (given) by an informer, by one who habitually tells falsehoods, or by one who sells (the rewards for) sacrifices, nor the food (given) by an actor, a tailor, or an ungrateful (man),

215. By a blacksmith, a Nishâda, a stage-player, a goldsmith, a basket-maker, or a dealer in weapons,

216. By trainers of hunting dogs, publicans, a washerman, a dyer, a pitiless (man), and a man in whose house (lives) a paramour (of his wife),

217. Nor (the food given) by those who knowingly bear with paramours (of their wives), and by those who in all matters are ruled by women, nor food (given by men) whose ten days of impurity on account of a death have not passed, nor that which is unpalatable.

218. The food of a king impairs his vigour, the food of a Sûdra his excellence in sacred learning, the food of a goldsmith his longevity, that of a leather-cutter his fame ;

219. The food of an artisan destroys his offspring, that of a washerman his (bodily) strength ; the food of a multitude and of harlots excludes him from (the higher) worlds.

220. The food of a physician (is as vile as) pus, that of an unchaste woman (equal to) semen, that of a usurer (as vile as) ordure, and that of a dealer in weapons (as bad as) dirt.

221. The food of those other persons who have been successively enumerated as such whose food must not be eaten, the wise declare (to be as impure as) skin, bones, and hair.

215. According to 'others,' quoted by Medh., Nand., and Râgh., sailûsha, 'an actor,' may also mean 'one who prostitutes his wife.'

216. Nrisamsa, 'a pitiless man' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nand., Râgh.), may also mean 'a bard' (Medh., Nâr., Râgh.).

220. I.e. it causes him to be reborn as an animal feeding on pus or other impure substances (Gov.).

222. If he has unwittingly eaten the food of one of those, (he must) fast for three days; if he has eaten it intentionally, or (has swallowed) semen, ordure, or urine, he must perform a Krikkhra penance.

223. A Brâhmaṇa who knows (the law) must not eat cooked food (given) by a Sûdra who performs no Srâddhas; but, on failure of (other) means of subsistence, he may accept raw (grain), sufficient for one night (and day).

224. The gods, having considered (the respective merits) of a niggardly Srottriya and of a liberal usurer, declared the food of both to be equal (in quality).

225. The Lord of created beings (Pragâpati) came and spake to them, 'Do not make that equal, which is unequal. The food of that liberal (usurer) is purified by faith; (that of the) other (man) is defiled by a want of faith.'

226. Let him, without tiring, always offer sacrifices and perform works of charity with faith; for offerings and charitable works made with faith and with lawfully-earned money, (procure) endless rewards.

227. Let him always practise, according to his

222. Gaut. XXIII, 23-24. Regarding the Krikkhra penance, see below, XI, 211.

224. Nâr. explains asrâddhinaḥ, 'who performs no Srâddhas,' by 'destitute of faith,' and Nand. writes asraddhinaḥ.

224-225. Baudh. I, 10, 5; Vas. XIV, 17.

226-227. Gov. gives and explains 226a and 227b only.

ability, with a cheerful heart, the duty of liberality, both by sacrifices and by charitable works, if he finds a worthy recipient (for his gifts).

228. If he is asked, let him always give something, be it ever so little, without grudging; for a worthy recipient will (perhaps) be found who saves him from all (guilt).

229. A giver of water obtains the satisfaction (of his hunger and thirst), a giver of food imperishable happiness, a giver of sesamum desirable offspring, a giver of a lamp a most excellent eyesight.

230. A giver of land obtains land, a giver of gold long life, a giver of a house most excellent mansions, a giver of silver (rûpya) exquisite beauty (rûpa),

231. A giver of a garment a place in the world of the moon, a giver of a horse (asva) a place in the world of the Asvins, a giver of a draught-ox great good fortune, a giver of a cow the world of the sun ;

232. A giver of a carriage or of a bed a wife, a giver of protection supreme dominion, a giver of grain eternal bliss, a giver of the Veda (brahman) union with Brahman ;

233. The gift of the Veda surpasses all other gifts, water, food, cows, land, clothes, sesamum, gold, and clarified butter.

234. For whatever purpose (a man) bestows any gift, for that same purpose he receives (in his next birth) with due honour its (reward).

226-235. Vas. XXX; Vi. XCI-XCII; Yâgñ. I, 201, 203-212.

234. Medh., Gov., Nâr., and Râgh. take the verse differently. 'With whatever disposition (a man) bestows any gift, with that same disposition he receives (in his next birth its reward), being duly honoured.' Nand. omits it. K. follows Kull's explanation, which is mentioned by Medh. also.

235. Both he who respectfully receives (a gift), and he who respectfully bestows it, go to heaven ; in the contrary case (they both fall) into hell.

236. Let him not be proud of his austerities ; let him not utter a falsehood after he has offered a sacrifice ; let him not speak ill of Brāhmanas, though he be tormented (by them) ; when he has bestowed (a gift), let him not boast of it.

237. By falsehood a sacrifice becomes vain, by self-complacency (the reward for) austerities is lost, longevity by speaking evil of Brāhmanas, and (the reward of) a gift by boasting.

238. Giving no pain to any creature, let him slowly accumulate spiritual merit, for the sake (of acquiring) a companion to the next world, just as the white ant (gradually raises its) hill.

239. For in the next world neither father, nor mother, nor wife, nor sons, nor relations stay to be his companions ; spiritual merit alone remains (with him).

240. Single is each being born ; single it dies ; single it enjoys (the reward of its) virtue ; single (it suffers the punishment of its) sin.

241. Leaving the dead body on the ground like a log of wood, or a clod of earth, the relatives depart with averted faces ; but spiritual merit follows the (soul).

242. Let him therefore always slowly accumulate spiritual merit, in order (that it may be his) companion (after death) ; for with merit as his companion he will traverse a gloom difficult to traverse.

243. (That companion) speedily conducts the man who is devoted to duty and effaces his sins by austerities, to the next world, radiant and clothed with an ethereal body.

244. Let him, who desires to raise his race, ever form connexions with the most excellent (men), and shun all low ones.

245. A Brâhmaṇa who always connects himself with the most excellent (ones), and shuns all inferior ones, (himself) becomes most distinguished; by an opposite conduct he becomes a Sûdra.

246. He who is persevering, gentle, (and) patient, shuns the company of men of cruel conduct, and does no injury (to living creatures), gains, if he constantly lives in that manner, by controlling his organs and by liberality, heavenly bliss.

247. He may accept from any (man), fuel, water, roots, fruit, food offered without asking, and honey, likewise a gift (which consists in) a promise of protection.

248. The Lord of created beings (Pragâpati) has declared that alms freely offered and brought (by the giver himself) may be accepted even from a sinful man, provided (the gift) had not been (asked for or) promised beforehand.

249. During fifteen years the manes do not eat (the food) of that man who disdains a (freely-offered gift), nor does the fire carry his offerings (to the gods).

250. A couch, a house, Kusa grass, perfumes,

247. Âp. I, 18, 1; Gaut. XVII, 5; Vas. XIV, 12; Vi. LVII, 11.

248. Âp. I, 10, 12-14; Vas. XIV, 16; Vi. LVII, 11; Yâgñ. I, 215. Medh., Gov., and Nâr. take apraḥoditâm, 'not asked for or promised,' in the sense of 'not promised' only, and so does Nand., who reads apraveditâm.

249. Âp. I, 19, 14; Vas. XIV, 18; Vi. LVII, 12.

250. Gaut. XVII, 5; Vas. XIV, 12; Vi. LVII, 11; Yâgñ. I, 214.

water, flowers, jewels, sour milk, grain, fish, sweet milk, meat, and vegetables let him not reject, (if they are voluntarily offered.)

251. He who desires to relieve his Gurus and those whom he is bound to maintain, or wishes to honour the gods and guests, may accept (gifts) from anybody ; but he must not satisfy his (own hunger) with such (presents).

252. But if his Gurus are dead, or if he lives separate from them in (another) house, let him, when he seeks a subsistence, accept (presents) from good men alone.

253. His labourer in tillage, a friend of his family, his cow-herd, his slave, and his barber are, among Sûdras, those whose food he may eat, likewise (a poor man) who offers himself (to be his slave).

254. As his character is, as the work is which he desires to perform, and as the manner is in which he means to serve, even so (a voluntary slave) must offer himself.

255. He who describes himself to virtuous (men), in a manner contrary to truth, is the most sinful (wretch) in this world ; he is a thief who makes away with his own self.

256. All things (have their nature) determined by speech ; speech is their root, and from speech they proceed ; but he who is dishonest with respect to speech, is dishonest in everything.

251. Âp. I, 7, 20 ; Gaut. XVII, 4 ; Vas. XIV, 13 ; Vi. LVII, 13 ; Yâgy. I, 216.

252. Vi. LVII, 15.

253. Âp. I, 18, 14 ; Gaut. XVII, 5-6 ; Vi. LVII, 16.

255. I. e. by denying who he really is, he destroys his own identity.

257. When he has paid, according to the law, his debts to the great sages, to the manes, and to the gods, let him make over everything to his son and dwell (in his house), not caring for any worldly concerns.

258. Alone let him constantly meditate in solitude on that which is salutary for his soul; for he who meditates in solitude attains supreme bliss.

259. Thus have been declared the means by which a Brâhmaṇa householder must always subsist, and the summary of the ordinances for a Snâtaka, which cause an increase of holiness and are praise-worthy.

260. A Brâhmaṇa who, being learned in the lore of the Vedas, conducts himself in this manner and daily destroys his sins, will be exalted in Brahman's world.

CHAPTER V.

1. The sages, having heard the duties of a Snâtaka thus declared, spoke to great-souled Bhrîgu, who sprang from fire :

2. 'How can Death have power over Brâhmaṇas

257. Regarding the three debts, see Vas. XI, 48. This verse and the next describe, as Medh. points out, a kind of informal samnyâsa.

260. Vas. VIII, 17; Baudh. II, 3, 1; Gaut. IX, 74.

V. 1. Medh., Gov., and Râgh. state correctly that Bhrîgu, though above, I, 35, he is said to have been created by Manu, and has therefore been named Mânava below, V, 3, is here called the offspring of Fire, in accordance with other passages of the Veda and of the Mahâbhârata.

2. I.e. 'how can they be deprived of the length of life, one hundred years, allotted to men in the Veda?' (Gov., Kull.)

who know the sacred science, the Veda, (and) who fulfil their duties as they have been explained (by thee), O Lord ?'

3. Righteous Bhrigu, the son of Manu, (thus) answered the great sages : 'Hear, (in punishment) of what faults Death seeks to shorten the lives of Brâhmaṇas !'

4. 'Through neglect of the Veda-study, through deviation from the rule of conduct, through remissness (in the fulfilment of duties), and through faults (committed by eating forbidden) food, Death becomes eager to shorten the lives of Brâhmaṇas.'

5. Garlic, leeks and onions, mushrooms and (all plants), springing from impure (substances), are unfit to be eaten by twice-born men.

6. One should carefully avoid red exudations from trees and (juices) flowing from incisions, the Selu (fruit), and the thickened milk of a cow (which she gives after calving).

7. Rice boiled with sesamum, wheat mixed with butter, milk and sugar, milk-rice and flour-cakes which are not prepared for a sacrifice, meat which has not been sprinkled with water while sacred texts were recited, food offered to the gods and sacrificial viands,

8. The milk of a cow (or other female animal) within ten days after her calving, that of camels,

5-25. Âp. I, 17, 18-39 ; Gaut. XVII, 22-36 ; Vas. XIV, 33-48 ; Baudh. I, 12, 1-15 ; Vi. LI, 3-6, 21-42 ; Yâgñ. I, 169-178. Selu, i.e. Cordia Myxa.

7. 'Food offered to the gods,' i.e. the so-called Naivedya. This and sacrificial viands, i.e. those destined for burnt-oblations, must not be eaten before the offering has been made, afterwards the remnants may be eaten (Medh., Gov., Kull.).

8. Sandhinî, 'a cow in heat' (Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), means according of one-hoofed animals, of sheep, of a cow in heat, or of one that has no calf with her,

9. (The milk) of all wild animals excepting buffalo-cows, that of women, and all (substances turned) sour must be avoided.

10. Among (things turned) sour, sour milk, and all (food) prepared of it may be eaten, likewise what is extracted from pure flowers, roots, and fruit.

11. Let him avoid all carnivorous birds and those living in villages, and one-hoofed animals which are not specially permitted (to be eaten), and the Tittibha (Parra Jacana),

12. The sparrow, the Plava, the Hamsa, the Brâhmañi duck, the village-cock, the Sârasa crane, the Raggudâla, the woodpecker, the parrot, and the starling,

13. Those which feed striking with their beaks, web-footed birds, the Koyashî, those which scratch with their toes, those which dive and live on fish, meat from a slaughter-house and dried meat,

14. The Baka and the Balâkâ crane, the raven, the Khañgarî (animals) that eat fish, village-pigs, and all kinds of fishes.

15. He who eats the flesh of any (animal) is to Medh. and Gov. 'one who gives milk once a day only,' and according to Nand. and K. 'one big with a calf.'

11. The permission to eat one-hoofed animals is, as the commentators observe, not given in the Smṛiti. The expression refers to the cases where the Veda prescribes horses, &c., to be slain and eaten at sacrifices.

12. I read with all the commentators Raggudâla instead of Ragguvâla, which the printed editions give. The Raggudâla is according to Vigñânesvara the jungle-fowl, according to Nâr. an aquatic bird.

14. Regarding the Vaka or Baka, see above, IV, 196.

called the eater of the flesh of that (particular creature), he who eats fish is an eater of every (kind of) flesh ; let him therefore avoid fish.

16. (But the fish called) Pâtikṇa and (that called) Rohita may be eaten, if used for offerings to the gods or to the manes ; (one may eat) likewise Râgīvas, Simhatundās, and Sasalkas on all (occasions).

17. Let him not eat solitary or unknown beasts and birds, though they may fall under (the categories of) eatable (creatures), nor any five-toed (animals).

18. The porcupine, the hedgehog, the iguana, the rhinoceros, the tortoise, and the hare they declare to be eatable ; likewise those (domestic animals) that have teeth in one jaw only, excepting camels.

19. A twice-born man who knowingly eats mushrooms, a village-pig, garlic, a village-cock, onions, or leeks, will become an outcast.

20. He who unwittingly partakes of (any of) these six, shall perform a Sâmtapana (Krikkhṛa) or the lunar penance (Kândrâyana) of ascetics ; in case (he has eaten) any other (kind of forbidden food) he shall fast for one day (and a night).

21. Once a year a Brâhmaṇa must perform a Krikkhṛa penance, in order to atone for unintentionally eating (forbidden food) ; but for intentionally (eating forbidden food he must perform the penances prescribed) specially.

22. Beasts and birds recommended (for con-

16. Nâr. explains ekaṭarân, 'solitary animals,' by 'those who go in herds' (saṃghaṭârinah).

20. Regarding the Sâmtapana Krikkhṛa and the lunar penance of ascetics, see below, XI, 213 and 219.

21. Regarding the Krikkhṛa penance, see below, XI, 212.

22. Vas. XIV, 15.

sumption) may be slain by Brâhmanas for sacrifices, and in order to feed those whom they are bound to maintain; for Agastya did this of old.

23. For in ancient (times) the sacrificial cakes were (made of the flesh) of eatable beasts and birds at the sacrifices offered by Brâhmanas and Kshatriyas.

24. All lawful hard or soft food may be eaten, though stale, (after having been) mixed with fatty (substances), and so may the remains of sacrificial viands.

25. But all preparations of barley and wheat, as well as preparations of milk, may be eaten by twice-born men without being mixed with fatty (substances), though they may have stood for a long time.

26. Thus has the food, allowed and forbidden to twice-born men, been fully described; I will now propound the rules for eating and avoiding meat.

27. One may eat meat when it has been sprinkled with water, while Mantras were recited, when Brâhmanas desire (one's doing it), when one is engaged (in the performance of a rite) according to the law, and when one's life is in danger.

28. The Lord of creatures (Pragâpati) created this whole (world to be) the sustenance of the vital spirit; both the immovable and the movable (creation is) the food of the vital spirit.

29. What is destitute of motion is the food of those endowed with locomotion; (animals) without fangs (are the food) of those with fangs, those without hands of those who possess hands, and the timid of the bold.

30. The eater who daily even devours those

27-56. Vas. IV, 5-8; Vi. LI, 59-78; Yâgñ. I, 178-181.

27. Meat is sprinkled with water at the Srauta sacrifices.

destined to be his food, commits no sin; for the creator himself created both the eaters and those who are to be eaten (for those special purposes).

31. 'The consumption of meat (is befitting) for sacrifices,' that is declared to be a rule made by the gods; but to persist (in using it) on other (occasions) is said to be a proceeding worthy of Rākshasas.

32. He who eats meat, when he honours the gods and manes, commits no sin, whether he has bought it, or himself has killed (the animal), or has received it as a present from others.

33. A twice-born man who knows the law, must not eat meat except in conformity with the law; for if he has eaten it unlawfully, he will, unable to save himself, be eaten after death by his (victims).

34. After death the guilt of one who slays deer for gain is not as (great) as that of him who eats meat for no (sacred) purpose.

35. But a man who, being duly, engaged (to officiate or to dine at a sacred rite), refuses to eat meat, becomes after death an animal during twenty-one existences.

36. A Brāhmaṇa must never eat (the flesh of) animals unhallowed by Mantras; but, obedient to the primeval law, he may eat it, consecrated with Vedic texts.

37. If he has a strong desire (for meat) he may make an animal of clarified butter or one of flour, (and eat that); but let him never seek to destroy an animal without a (lawful) reason.

34. 'Of one who slays deer for gain,' i. e. of a professional hunter of the Sabara or other low castes.

35. Vas. XI, 34.

37. Saṅge, 'if (he has) a strong desire (for meat),' (Kull., Rāgh.),

38. As many hairs as the slain beast has, so often indeed will he who killed it without a (lawful) reason suffer a violent death in future births.

39. Svayambhû (the Self-existent) himself created animals for the sake of sacrifices; sacrifices (have been instituted) for the good of this whole (world); hence the slaughtering (of beasts) for sacrifices is not slaughtering (in the ordinary sense of the word).

40. Herbs, trees, cattle, birds, and (other) animals that have been destroyed for sacrifices, receive (being reborn) higher existences.

41. On offering the honey-mixture (to a guest), at a sacrifice and at the rites in honour of the manes, but on these occasions only, may an animal be slain; that (rule) Manu proclaimed.

42. A twice-born man who, knowing the true meaning of the Veda, slays an animal for these purposes, causes both himself and the animal to enter a most blessed state.

43. A twice-born man of virtuous disposition, whether he dwells in (his own) house, with a teacher, or in the forest, must never, even in times of distress, cause an injury (to any creature) which is not sanctioned by the Veda.

44. Know that the injury to moving creatures and to those destitute of motion, which the Veda has means according to Medh. and K. 'if an occasion (arises to slay an animal at a non-Vedic rite),' according to Gov. 'in case (one suffers from) an attack by evil spirits (Bhûtas and the like),' and according to Nand. 'on the occasion of social meetings.' Râgh. mentions Medh.'s view as an optional explanation, and Nâr. objects to Gov.'s interpretation. His own explanation saṅge-tyantekâyâm is corrupt, but is probably intended for atyantekâ-~~h~~âyâm, and thus agrees with Kull.'s.

prescribed for certain occasions, is no injury at all ; for the sacred law shone forth from the Veda.

45. He who injures innoxious beings from a wish to (give) himself pleasure, never finds happiness, neither living nor dead.

46. He who does not seek to cause the sufferings of bonds and death to living creatures, (but) desires the good of all (beings), obtains endless bliss.

47. He who does not injure any (creature), attains without an effort what he thinks of, what he undertakes, and what he fixes his mind on.

48. Meat can never be obtained without injury to living creatures, and injury to sentient beings is detrimental to (the attainment of) heavenly bliss ; let him therefore shun (the use of) meat.

49. Having well considered the (disgusting) origin of flesh and the (cruelty of) fettering and slaying corporeal beings, let him entirely abstain from eating flesh.

50. He who, disregarding the rule (given above), does not eat meat like a Pisâka, becomes dear to men, and will not be tormented by diseases.

51. He who permits (the slaughter of an animal), he who cuts it up, he who kills it, he who buys or sells (meat), he who cooks it, he who serves it up, and he who eats it, (must all be considered as) the slayers (of the animal).

52. There is no greater sinner than that (man) who, though not worshipping the gods or the manes, seeks to increase (the bulk of) his own flesh by the flesh of other (beings).

46. The latter part of the verse may also be translated 'will obtain endless bliss, because he is a man who desires the good of all creatures' (Gov.).

53. He who during a hundred years annually offers a horse-sacrifice, and he who entirely abstains from meat, obtain the same reward for their meritorious (conduct).

54. By subsisting on pure fruit and roots, and by eating food fit for ascetics (in the forest), one does not gain (so great) a reward as by entirely avoiding (the use of) flesh.

55. 'Me he (mâm sah)' will devour in the next (world), whose flesh I eat in this (life); the wise declare this (to be) the real meaning of the word 'flesh' (mâmsah).

56. There is no sin in eating meat, in (drinking) spirituous liquor, and in carnal intercourse, for that is the natural way of created beings, but abstention brings great rewards.

57. I will now in due order explain the purification for the dead and the purification of things as they are prescribed for the four castes (varṇa).

58. When (a child) dies that has teethed, or that before teething has received (the sacrament of) the tonsure (Kûdâkarana) or (of the initiation), all relatives (become) impure, and on the birth (of a child) the same (rule) is prescribed.

54. Munyannâni, 'food fit for ascetics (in the forest),' i.e. 'wild rice and other produce of the forest.'

56. 'There is no sin,' i.e. in doing these things when they are permitted by law.

58-104. Âp. I, 15, 18; II, 15, 2-11; Gaut. XIV; Vas. IV, 16-37; Baudh. I, 11, 1-8, 17-23, 27-32; Vi. XXII; Yâgñ. III, 1-30.

58. Medh. and Gov. explain anugâte, translated freely by 'before teething,' as the conventional designation of 'a child that is younger than one that has teethed' (gâtadantâd bâlâtara iti smaranti), and Nâr. and Râgh. agree to this interpretation. Kull., however, seems to take it in the sense of 'after teething,' and Nand. explains it as 'one who has been born again, i.e. has been initiated.' Gov.,

59. It is ordained (that) among Sapindas the impurity on account of a death (shall last) ten days, (or) until the bones have been collected, (or) three days or one day only.

60. But the Sapinda-relationship ceases with the seventh person (in the ascending and descending lines), the Samānodaka-relationship when the (common) origin and the (existence of a common family)-name are no (longer) known.

61. As this impurity on account of a death is prescribed for (all) Sapindas, even so it shall be (held) on a birth by those who desire to be absolutely pure.

62. (Or while) the impurity on account of a death is common to all (Sapindas), that caused by a birth (falls) on the parents alone; (or) it shall fall on the mother alone, and the father shall become pure by bathing;

Nâr., Kull., and Râgh. think that on account of the second kā, 'or,' the words 'of the initiation' must be understood.

59. The bones of a Brâhmaṇa are collected on the fourth day; see Vi. XIX, 10. The commentators are of opinion that the length of the period of impurity depends, in accordance with the express teaching of other Smṛitis, on the status of the mourner, and that a man who knows the Mantras only of one Sâkhâ shall be impure during four days, one who knows a whole Sâkhâ (or two Vedas) during three days, one who knows the Veda (or three Vedas) and keeps three or five sacred fires, during one day. Medh., however, mentions another interpretation, according to which the four periods correspond to the four ages of the deceased, which have been mentioned in the preceding verse. According to this view the Sapindas shall mourn for an initiated person ten days, for one who had received the tonsure four days, &c. But see verse 67.

61-62. Medh. and Gov. have only one verse instead of the two: ganane 'py evaṁ syân mâtâpitros tu sûtakam | sûtakam mâtur eva syâd upasprîsya pitâ sukih || 'Even thus it shall be (held) on a birth, or the impurity shall fall on the parents alone,

63. But a man, having spent his strength, is purified merely by bathing ; after begetting a child (on a remarried female), he shall retain the impurity during three days.

64. Those who have touched a corpse are purified after one day and night (added to) three periods of three days ; those who give libations of water, after three days.

65. A pupil who performs the Pitr̥medha for his deceased teacher, becomes also pure after ten days, just like those who carry the corpse out (to the burial-ground).

66. (A woman) is purified on a miscarriage in as many (days and) nights as months (elapsed after conception), and a menstruating female becomes pure by bathing after the menstrual secretion has ceased (to flow).

or it shall fall on the mother alone, and the father (shall become) pure by bathing.' Nand. leaves out the first half of verse 61, and combines the second half of 61 with the first half of 62. He continues in this manner down to 65, the second half of which he takes by itself. Hence his interpretation of the following verses is perfectly useless.

63. The translation given above follows Gov., Kull., Nâr., and Râgh. Medh. differs.

64. According to Gov. and Nâr. the rule refers to such Brâhmanas who for money carry a dead body to the cemetery ; according to Kull. and Râgh. to Sapindas who in any way touch a corpse out of affection. Medh. thinks that it applies to all who touch or carry out a dead body, be it for love or for money. Râgh. thinks that the text mentions three alternative periods of impurity, one day, three days, and ten days.

65. The Pitr̥medha, i.e. the Antyeshî (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'the whole of the obsequies' ('others,' Medh.).

66. Thus according to Kull. ; Nâr. and Râgh. think that this rule refers to miscarriages which happen during the first six months of pregnancy ; and that from the seventh month, whether the child

67. (On the death) of children whose tonsure (Kû-dâkarman) has not been performed, the (Sapindas) are declared to become pure in one (day and) night; (on the death) of those who have received the tonsure (but not the initiation, the law) ordains (that) the purification (takes place) after three days.

68. A child that has died before the completion of its second year, the relatives shall carry out (of the village), decked (with flowers, and bury it) in pure ground, without collecting the bones (afterwards).

69. Such (a child) shall not be burnt with fire, and no libations of water shall be offered to it; leaving it like a (log of) wood in the forest, (the relatives) shall remain impure during three days only.

70. The relatives shall not offer libations to (a child) that has not reached the third year; but if it had teeth, or the ceremony of naming it (Nâmakarman) had been performed, (the offering of water is) optional.

71. If a fellow-student has died, the Smṛiti prescribes an impurity of one day; on a birth the purification of the Samânodakas is declared (to take place) after three (days and) nights.

72. (On the death) of females (betrothed but) not married (the bridegroom and his) relatives are purified after three days, and the paternal relatives become pure according to the same rule.

lives or not, the full period of impurity must be kept. Nâr., moreover, asserts that in the first and second months the impurity shall last three days. Sâdhvî, 'becomes pure,' i.e. 'fit to perform sacred rites' (Gov.). Nâr. takes the word in the sense of 'chaste.'

67. Nand. inserts verse 78 immediately after verse 66.

72. 'According to the same rule,' i.e. 'according to that given in verse 67' (Medh., Gov., Nand.), or 'just as the husband's relatives, i.e. after three days' (Kull., Nâr., Râgh.).

73. Let (mourners) eat food without factitious salt, bathe during three days, abstain from meat, and sleep separate on the ground.

74. The above rule regarding impurity on account of a death has been prescribed (for cases where the kinsmen live) near (the deceased); (Sapinda) kinsmen and (Samânodaka) relatives must know the following rule (to refer to cases where deceased lived) at a distance (from them).

75. He who may hear that (a relative) residing in a distant country has died, before ten (days after his death have elapsed), shall be impure for the remainder of the period of ten (days and) nights only.

76. If the ten days have passed, he shall be impure during three (days and) nights; but if a year has elapsed (since the occurrence of the death), he becomes pure merely by bathing.

77. A man who hears of a (Sapinda) relative's death, or of the birth of a son after the ten days (of impurity have passed), becomes pure by bathing, dressed in his garments.

78. If an infant (that has not teethed), or a (grown-up relative who is) not a Sapinda, die in a distant country, one becomes at once pure after bathing in one's clothes.

79. If within the ten days (of impurity) another birth or death happens, a Brâhmaṇa shall remain impure only until the (first) period of ten days has expired.

80. They declare that, when the teacher (âçârya) has died, the impurity (lasts) three days; if the

73. Nand. reads anvāham, (bathe) 'daily' instead of 'during three days.'

(teacher's) son or wife (is dead, it lasts) a day and a night; that is a settled (rule).

81. For a Srotriya who resides with (him out of affection), a man shall be impure for three days; for a maternal uncle, a pupil, an officiating priest, or a maternal relative, for one night together with the preceding and following days.

82. If the king in whose realm he resides is dead, (he shall be impure) as long as the light (of the sun or stars shines), but for (an intimate friend) who is not a Srotriya (the impurity lasts) for a whole day, likewise for a Guru who knows the Veda and the Āṅgas.

83. A Brāhmaṇa shall be pure after ten days, a Kshatriya after twelve, a Vaisya after fifteen, and a Sūdra is purified after a month.

84. Let him not (unnecessarily) lengthen the period of impurity, nor interrupt the rites to be performed with the sacred fires; for he who performs that (Agnihotra) rite will not be impure, though (he be) a (Sapinda) relative.

81. Upasampanne, 'who resides with (him out of affection),' may according to Medh. also mean 'who is virtuous.' According to Nār. it means 'who is a neighbour.'

82. Anûkâṇe tathâ gurau, 'likewise for a Guru who knows the Veda and Āṅgas,' i.e. 'such a one who is mentioned above, II, 149' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.). Nār. takes the two words separately. Medh. connects anûkâṇe with asrottriye, and thinks that a man is meant who does not know the Veda, but the Āṅgas. He also mentions the explanation adopted above. Nand. finally reads anûkâṇe tathâ 'gurau, 'likewise for one who knows the Veda and the Āṅgas, but is not a Guru.'

84. According to Medh. the meaning of the first clause is that, if there is an option between shorter or longer periods of impurity, the mourner is not to choose the longer one in order to escape the performance of his sacred duties. He adds, that others think

85. When he has touched a Kandâla, a menstruating woman, an outcast, a woman in childbed, a corpse, or one who has touched a (corpse), he becomes pure by bathing.

86. He who has purified himself by sipping water shall, on seeing any impure (thing or person), always mutter the sacred texts, addressed to Sûrya, and the Pâvamânî (verses).

87. A Brâhmana who has touched a human bone to which fat adheres, becomes pure by bathing; if it be free from fat, by sipping water and by touching (afterwards) a cow or looking at the sun.

88. He who has undertaken the performance of a vow shall not pour out libations (to the dead) until the vow has been completed; but when he has

it to be an exhortation not to delay the bath which must be taken at the expiration of the period of impurity. The other commentators mention the first explanation only. The second clause, which refers to the continued offering of the Srauta Agnihotra, means according to Medh., Gov., and Nand., that an Agnihotrin who is in mourning shall not perform the offerings in person, but make others, who may even be his near relatives, do it for him. Kull., Nâr., and Râgh. think that the performer himself may also offer them. Nand. explains sanâbhyaḥ, 'a Sapinda' (Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), by sahodaraḥ, 'a full brother.'

85. Tatsprishnam, 'one who has touched a (corpse),' (Medh., 'others;' Gov., Kull., Râgh.), means according to Medh., Nâr., and Nand. 'one who has touched any of those enumerated before, a Kandâla and so forth.'

86. 'He who has purified himself,' i. e. 'before he begins to worship the gods or manes' (Medh., 'others;' Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). 'An impure (thing or person),' i. e. 'those mentioned above.' Medh. and Gov. take the verse differently, 'On seeing one of those impure persons mentioned above, let him sip water and, thus purified, recite, &c.' The texts addressed to Sûrya are found Rig-veda I, 50, 1 seq.; the Pâvamânîs in Mandâla IX.

88. The rule refers to a student, who must not during his studentship perform the last rites for any deceased relative except offered water after its completion, he becomes pure in three days only.

89. Libations of water shall not be offered to those who (neglect the prescribed rites and may be said to) have been born in vain, to those born in consequence of an illegal mixture of the castes, to those who are ascetics (of heretical sects), and to those who have committed suicide,

90. To women who have joined a heretical sect, who through lust live (with many men), who have caused an abortion, have killed their husbands, or drink spirituous liquor.

91. A student does not break his vow by carrying out (to the place of cremation) his own dead teacher (âkârya), sub-teacher (upâdhyâya), father, mother, or Guru.

92. Let him carry out a dead Sûdra by the southern gate of the town, but (the corpses of) his mother (Medh.), or except his mother and father (Gov.), or except his parents and his teacher; see below, verse 91 (Kull., Râgh.). According to K. 'others' think that the rule refers to those performing a lunar penance or other vows.

89. 'To those who (neglect the prescribed rites and may be said to) have been born in vain' (Gov., Kull., Nand., Râgh.), i.e. 'to those who for a year belonged to no order' (Medh.), or 'to eunuchs' (Nâr.). The term saṃkaragâh, 'born in consequence of an illegal mixture of the castes,' includes besides those sprung from mothers of a higher and fathers of a lower caste, sons of widows not appointed and of adulteresses (Medh., Gov., Nand.). 'Ascetics (of heretical sects),' i.e. Kâpâlikas, those wearing red garments, &c. (Medh.). Nâr. and Râgh. refer the term to orthodox ascetics.

90. Pâshandam, 'a heretical sect,' i.e. the Kâpâlikas, those wearing red garments' (Medh.), or 'Bauddhas and so forth' (Nâr.).

91. 'Guru,' i.e. 'one who explains the Veda' (Nâr., Kull.), or 'him who is mentioned above, II, 149' (Medh., Gov.).

92. I.e. a Vaisya by the western gate, a Kshatriya by the twice-born men, as is proper, by the western, northern, or eastern (gates).

93. The taint of impurity does not fall on kings, and those engaged in the performance of a vow, or of a Sattra; for the (first are) seated on the throne of Indra, and the (last two are) ever pure like Brahman.

94. For a king, on the throne of magnanimity, immediate purification is prescribed, and the reason for that is that he is seated (there) for the protection of (his) subjects.

95. (The same rule applies to the kinsmen) of those who have fallen in a riot or a battle, (of those who have been killed) by lightning or by the king, and (of those who perished fighting) for cows and Brāhmaṇas, and to those whom the king wishes (to be pure).

96. A king is an incarnation of the eight guardian deities of the world, the Moon, the Fire, the Sun, the Wind, Indra, the Lords of wealth and water (Kubera and Varuṇa), and Yama.

97. Because the king is pervaded by (those) northern, and a Brāhmaṇa by the eastern (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nand., Râgh.).

93. 'A vow,' i.e. 'the studentship (Nâr.), also a lunar penance and the like' (Medh., Gov., Kull.); 'a Sattra,' i.e. 'a long sacrifice such as the Gavāmayana.' Brahmabhûtaḥ, 'pure like Brahman' (Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), means according to Medh. 'they have reached Brahmahood.'

95. Nand. and K. explain śimbha, 'in a riot,' to mean 'by infants.' 'Whom the king wishes (to be pure),' i.e. 'his servants and ministers whom he wants for his affairs.' Nâr. inserts another class, '(the kinsmen of those who have been killed) by Brāhmaṇas, i.e. by incantations.' But I do not understand how the word could be made to suit the verse.

96. See below, VII, 4.

97. Medh. reads lokesaprabhavâpyayau, and the second half lords of the world, no impurity is ordained for him ; for purity and impurity of mortals is caused and removed by (those) lords of the world.

98. By him who is slain in battle with brandished weapons according to the law of the Kshatriyas, a (Srauta) sacrifice is instantly completed, and so is the period of impurity (caused by his death) ; that is a settled rule.

99. (At the end of the period of impurity) a Brâhmaṇa who has performed the necessary rites, becomes pure by touching water, a Kshatriya by touching the animal on which he rides, and his weapons, a Vaisya by touching his goad or the nose-string (of his oxen), a Sûdra by touching his staff.

100. Thus the purification (required) on (the death of) Sapindas has been explained to you, O best of twice-born men ; hear now the manner in which men are purified on the death of any (relative who is) not a Sapinda.

101. A Brâhmaṇa, having carried out a dead verse must then be translated 'purity and impurity affect mortals, they are caused and removed by the guardians of the world.' Nâr., Nand., and K. read lokesaprabhavo hy ayam, 'but he (the) king springs from the guardians of the world.' Nâr. mentions also a reading lokesaprabhave 'pyayaḥ, 'for him who springs from the guardians of the world, (purity and impurity) do not exist.'

98. According to Medh. some contend that this rule refers only to those who die on the battle-field, not to those who die later of their wounds. Yagñiḥ, 'a (Srauta) sacrifice' (Medh., Kull., Râgh.), means according to Nâr. 'the funeral sacrifice.'

99. 'Touching water,' i.e. 'bathing' (Medh., Kull., Nâr.), 'washing his hands' (Gov.).

101. 'The relatives of his mother and (the Sagotras of his father), or connexions by marriage, are meant' (Nâr.).

Brâhmana who is not a Sapinda, as (if he were) a (near) relative, or a near relative of his mother, becomes pure after three days;

102. But if he eats the food of the (Sapindas of the deceased), he is purified in ten days, (but) in one day, if he does not eat their food nor dwells in their house.

103. Having voluntarily followed a corpse, whether (that of) a paternal kinsman or (of) a stranger, he becomes pure by bathing, dressed in his clothes, by touching fire and eating clarified butter.

104. Let him not allow a dead Brâhmana to be carried out by a Sûdra, while men of the same caste are at hand; for that burnt-offering which is defiled by a Sûdra's touch is detrimental to (the deceased's passage to) heaven.

105. The knowledge (of Brahman) austerities, fire, (holy) food, earth, (restraint of) the internal organ, water, smearing (with cowdung), the wind, sacred rites, the sun, and time are the purifiers of corporeal (beings).

106. Among all modes of purification, purity in (the acquisition of) wealth is declared to be the best; for he is pure who gains wealth with clean hands, not he who purifies himself with earth and water.

102. In case he stays in the house of the mourners, he becomes impure for three days (Gov., Kull., Râgh., K.).

104. According to Nâr. the rule refers exclusively to Brâhmanas, according to Medh. and Kull. to all Âryans. The burning of the body is euphemistically called a burnt-offering.

105. Vi. XXII, 88; Yâgñ. III, 31; Baudh. I, 8, 52. Manah kshamâkhyah (?) niyamayuktam mano gîvasya (Nâr.). The other commentators take manah, 'the mind or internal organ,' in the sense of 'a sanctified heart.'

106. Vi. XXII, 89; Yâgñ. III, 32.

107. The learned are purified by a forgiving disposition, those who have committed forbidden actions by liberality, secret sinners by muttering (sacred texts), and those who best know the Veda by austerities.

108. By earth and water is purified what ought to be made pure, a river by its current, a woman whose thoughts have been impure by the menstrual secretion, a Brâhmaṇa by abandoning the world (saṃnyâsa).

109. The body is cleansed by water, the internal organ is purified by truthfulness, the individual soul by sacred learning and austerities, the intellect by (true) knowledge.

110. Thus the precise rules for the purification of the body have been declared to you; hear now the decision (of the law) regarding the purification of the various (inanimate) things.

111. The wise ordain that all (objects) made of metal, gems, and anything made of stone are to be cleansed with ashes, earth, and water.

112. A golden vessel which shows no stains, becomes pure with water alone, likewise what is produced in water (as shells and coral), what is made of stone, and a silver (vessel) not enchased.

107. Vi. XXII, 90; Yâgñ. III, 33.

108. Vi. XXII, 91; Vas. III, 58; Yâgñ. III, 32.

109. Vi. XXII, 92; Vas. III, 60; Yâgñ. III, 33-34.

110. Vi. XXII, 93.

111-126. Âp. I, 17, 8-13; II, 3, 9; Gaut. I, 29-34; Vas. III, 44-57, 59, 61-63; Baudh. I, 8, 32-53, 9, 1-4, 7-12, 10, 1-9; 13, 11-14, 19; Vi. XXIII, 2-46, 56; Yâgñ. I, 182-190.

112. Anupaskṛitam, 'not enchased,' may also mean according to Medh. and Nand. 'not defiled very much.' Medh. and Nâr. add

113. From the union of water and fire arose the glittering gold and silver; those two, therefore, are best purified by (the elements) from which they sprang.

114. Copper, iron, brass, pewter, tin, and lead must be cleansed, as may be suitable (for each particular case), by alkaline (substances), acids or water.

115. The purification prescribed for all (sorts of) liquids is by passing two blades of Kusa grass through them, for solid things by sprinkling (them with water), for (objects) made of wood by planing them.

116. At sacrifices the purification of (the Soma cups called) Kamasas and Grahas, and of (other) sacrificial vessels (takes place) by rubbing (them) with the hand, and (afterwards) rinsing (them with water).

117. The Karu and (the spoons called) Sruk and Sruva must be cleaned with hot water, likewise (the wooden sword, called) Sphya, the winnowing-basket (Sûrpa), the cart (for bringing the grain), the pestle and the mortar.

118. The manner of purifying large quantities of grain and of cloth is to sprinkle them with water; that this last term applies to all the various objects mentioned in the verse.

113. Medh., Gov., and Kull. quote a Vedic passage which derives the origin of gold from Agni and the goddess Varuṇāni.

115. Utpavanam or utplavanam (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), 'passing two blades of Kusa grass through them,' means according to Medh., 'others,' and K. 'purifying by pouring them into another vessel, filled with pure liquids of the same kind,' according to Nâr. by 'straining through a cloth.' 'Solid things,' i.e. 'a couch, a seat, and the like.'

but the purification of small quantities is prescribed (to take place) by washing them.

119. Skins and (objects) made of split cane must be cleaned like clothes; vegetables, roots, and fruit like grain;

120. Silk and woollen stuffs with alkaline earth; blankets with pounded Arishṭa (fruit); Amsupattas with Bel fruit; linen cloth with (a paste of) yellow mustard.

121. A man who knows (the law) must purify conch-shells, horn, bone and ivory, like linen cloth, or with a mixture of cow's urine and water.

122. Grass, wood, and straw become pure by being sprinkled (with water), a house by sweeping and smearing (it with cowdung or whitewash), an earthen (vessel) by a second burning.

123. An earthen vessel which has been defiled by spirituous liquor, urine, ordure, saliva, pus or blood cannot be purified by another burning.

124. Land is purified by (the following) five (modes, viz.) by sweeping, by smearing (it with cowdung), by sprinkling (it with cows' urine or milk), by scraping, and by cows staying (on it during a day and night).

125. (Food) which has been pecked at by birds,

119. Vaidalânâm, 'objects made of split cane' (Kull., K., Râgh., Nâr., Nand.), means according to Medh. and Gov. 'made of the bark of trees and the like.' Medh. remarks that this and other rules, where skins and so forth are mentioned, apply also to objects made of such things, e.g. shoes.

120. Arishṭa, i.e. Sapindus detergens, the soap-berry tree. Amsupaṭṭa means according to Gov., Nand., and Nâr. 'cloth made of thinned bark,' according to Kull. and Râgh. 'upper garments for women (Sârîs) made of fine cloth' (paṭṭasârîṭṭa, paṭṭasârîṭṭa).

125. 'By birds,' i.e. 'by parrots and the like, not by crows, smelt at by cows, touched (with the foot), sneezed on, or defiled by hair or insects, becomes pure by scattering earth (over it).

126. As long as the (foul) smell does not leave an (object) defiled by impure substances, and the stain caused by them (does not disappear), so long must earth and water be applied in cleansing (in-animate) things.

127. The gods declared three things (to be) pure to Brâhmaṇas, that (on which) no (taint is) visible, what has been washed with water, and what has been commended (as pure) by the word (of a Brâhmaṇa).

128. Water, sufficient (in quantity) in order to slake the thirst of a cow, possessing the (proper) smell, colour, and taste, and unmixed with impure substances, is pure, if it is collected on (pure) ground.

129. The hand of an artisan is always pure, so is (every vendible commodity) exposed for sale in vultures, and other impure ones' (Medh., Gov., Kull.). Avadhûtam, 'touched (with the foot),' (Kull., Râgh.), means according to Medh. 'blown upon with the mouth,' or 'dusted with a dress,' according to Gov. 'dusted with a dress,' according to Nâr. 'moved by the wind (caused by the motion) of a cloth, the foot or the like,' according to Nand. 'defiled by the dust of a broom or of the air moved by the wings (of a bird).'

127. Vas. XIV, 24; Baudh. I, 9, 9; Vi. XXIII, 47; Yâgñ. I, 191. In conformity with the opinion of the commentators I translate pavitrâṇi by 'pure.' But the word has also the meaning of 'means of purification,' in which I have taken it in the translations of the parallel passages. The general sense remains the same.

128. Vas. III, 35-36, 47; Baudh. I, 9, 10; Vi. XXIII, 43; Yâgñ. I, 192.

129. Baudh. I, 9, 1; Vi. XXIII, 43.

the market, and food obtained by begging which a student holds (in his hand) is always fit for use; that is a settled rule.

130. The mouth of a woman is always pure, likewise a bird when he causes a fruit to fall; a calf is pure on the flowing of the milk, and a dog when he catches a deer.

131. Manu has declared that the flesh (of an animal) killed by dogs is pure, likewise (that) of a (beast) slain by carnivorous (animals) or by men of low caste (Dasyu), such as Kandâlas.

132. All those cavities (of the body) which lie above the navel are pure, (but) those which are below the navel are impure, as well as excretions that fall from the body.

133. Flies, drops of water, a shadow, a cow, a horse, the rays of the sun, dust, earth, the wind, and fire one must know to be pure to the touch.

134. In order to cleanse (the organs) by which urine and faeces are ejected, earth and water must be used, as they may be required, likewise in removing the (remaining ones among) twelve impurities of the body.

130. Baudh. I, 9, 2; Vi. XXIII, 49; Yâgñ. I, 193.

131. Vas. III, 45; Vi. XXIII, 50; Yâgñ. I, 192.

132. Vi. XXIII, 51; Yâgñ. I, 194.

133. Vi. XXIII, 51; Yâgñ. I, 193. 'Drops of water,' i.e. 'such as are only perceptible by the touch' (Medh., Gov.), or 'such as come from the mouth, i.e. of saliva' (Kull., Râgh., Nâr.). Râgh. adds, 'and a continuous stream of water.'

134. Âp. I, 16, 15; Gaut. I, 43; Vas. VI, 14; Yâgñ. I, 17. 'As they may be required,' i.e. 'for removing the first six kinds of impurities enumerated in the next verse, as much water and earth as may be required, and for the last six water only' (Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.).

135. Oily exudations, semen, blood, (the fatty substance of the) brain, urine, faeces, the mucus of the nose, ear-wax, phlegm, tears, the rheum of the eyes, and sweat are the twelve impurities of human (bodies).

136. He who desires to be pure, must clean the organ by one (application of) earth, the anus by (applying earth) three (times), the (left) hand alone by (applying it) ten (times), and both (hands) by (applying it) seven (times).

137. Such is the purification ordained for householders; (it shall be) double for students, treble for hermits, but quadruple for ascetics.

138. When he has voided urine or faeces, let him, after sipping water, sprinkle the cavities, likewise when he is going to recite the Veda, and always before he takes food.

139. Let him who desires bodily purity first sip water three times, and then twice wipe his mouth; but a woman and a Śūdra (shall perform each act) once (only).

140. Śūdras who live according to the law, shall each month shave (their heads); their mode of purification (shall be) the same as that of Vaiśyas, and their food the fragments of an Āryan's meal.

136. Vas. VI, 18; Vi. LX, 25.

137. Vas. VI, 19; Vi. LX, 26.

138. Gaut. I, 36; Baudh. I, 8, 26; Vi. LXII, 8. 'The cavities,' i. e. of the head (Gov.), and also the navel, the heart, and the crown of the head (Nār., Kull.).

139. Āp. I, 16, 3-8; Gaut. I, 36; Vas. III, 27-28; Baudh. I, 8, 20-22; Vi. LXII, 6-8; Yāgñ. I, 20.

140. Āp. II, 3, 4-6. 'Who live according to the law,' i. e. 'who serve Āryans' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Rāgh.). Nand. thinks that māsikam vapanam kâryam, 'shall shave each month,' means 'shall offer the monthly Srâddha.'

141. Drops (of water) from the mouth which do not fall on a limb, do not make (a man) impure, nor the hair of the moustache entering the mouth, nor what adheres to the teeth.

142. Drops which trickle on the feet of him who offers water for sipping to others, must be considered as equal to (water) collected on the ground ; they render him not impure.

143. He who, while carrying anything in any manner, is touched by an impure (person or thing), shall become pure, if he performs an ablution, without putting down that object.

144. He who has vomited or purged shall bathe, and afterwards eat clarified butter ; but if (the attack comes on) after he has eaten, let him only sip water ; bathing is prescribed for him who has had intercourse with a woman.

145. Though he may be (already) pure, let him sip water after sleeping, sneezing, eating, spitting, telling untruths, and drinking water, likewise when he is going to study the Veda.

146. Thus the rules of personal purification for men of all castes, and those for cleaning (inanimate) things, have been fully declared to you : hear now the duties of women.

141. Âp. I, 16, 13; Gaut. I, 38-41; Vas. III, 37, 40-41; Baudh. I, 8, 23-25; Vi. XXIII, 53; Yâgñ. I, 195. I read with Medh., Gov., Nâr., Nand., and K., aṅgam na yanti yâh, instead of aṅge patanti, 'which fall on a limb,' the reading of Kull. and Râgh.

142. Vas. III, 42; Vi. XXIII, 54.

143. Gaut. I, 28; Vas. III, 43; Baudh. I, 8, 27-29; Vi. XXIII, 55.

145. Âp. I, 16, 14; Gaut. I, 37; Vi. XXII, 75; Yâgñ. I, 196. According to Medh., some refer this verse to a repeated sipping of water.

147. By a girl, by a young woman, or even by an aged one, nothing must be done independently, even in her own house.

148. In childhood a female must be subject to her father, in youth to her husband, when her lord is dead to her sons; a woman must never be independent.

149. She must not seek to separate herself from her father, husband, or sons; by leaving them she would make both (her own and her husband's) families contemptible.

150. She must always be cheerful, clever in (the management of her) household affairs, careful in cleaning her utensils, and economical in expenditure.

151. Him to whom her father may give her, or her brother with the father's permission, she shall obey as long as he lives, and when he is dead, she must not insult (his memory).

152. For the sake of procuring good fortune to (brides), the recitation of benedictory texts (svastyayana), and the sacrifice to the Lord of creatures (Pragâpati) are used at weddings; (but) the betrothal (by the father or guardian) is the cause of (the husband's) dominion (over his wife).

147-149. See below, IX, 2-3; Vi. XXVI, 12-13; Yâgñ. I, 85-86.

150. Vi. XXVI, 4-6; Yâgñ. I, 83.

151. Vi. XXVI, 14; Yâgñ. I, 63.

152. Svastyayanam, 'the recitation of benedictory texts,' i.e. 'of those intended for averting evil omens' (Gov., Kull.); or 'the Puṇyâhavâkṣa and the rest' (Nâr.); or 'the recitation of the texts which precede the nuptial burnt-oblation' (Râgh., Nand.). Medh. connects the word with yagñāḥ, and explains it by 'that whereby welfare is obtained.' Medh. explains the expression 'the sacrifice to Pragâpati' by stating that 'some' prescribe at a wedding an oblation with the verse Pragâpate na tvad evānyaḥ (? tvadetāny, Rîg-veda X, 121, 10), and that the offerings to the other gods are

153. The husband who wedded her with sacred texts, always gives happiness to his wife, both in season and out of season, in this world and in the next.

154. Though destitute of virtue, or seeking pleasure (elsewhere), or devoid of good qualities, (yet) a husband must be constantly worshipped as a god by a faithful wife.

155. No sacrifice, no vow, no fast must be performed by women apart (from their husbands); if a wife obeys her husband, she will for that (reason alone) be exalted in heaven.

156. A faithful wife, who desires to dwell (after death) with her husband, must never do anything that might displease him who took her hand, whether he be alive or dead.

157. At her pleasure let her emaciate her body by (living on) pure flowers, roots, and fruit; but she must never even mention the name of another man after her husband has died.

158. Until death let her be patient (of hardships), self-controlled, and chaste, and strive (to fulfil) that most excellent duty which (is prescribed) for wives who have one husband only.

159. Many thousands of Brâhmanas who were chaste from their youth, have gone to heaven without continuing their race.

implied by this expression. Nâr. thinks that the Pragâpati called Manu is the guardian deity of the bride, and hence the nuptial oblations are called 'the sacrifice to Pragâpati.'

155. Vi. XXVI, 15; Yâgñ. I, 77.

156-166. See below, IX, 64-68; Yâgñ. I, 75, 87.

157. Medh. takes this opportunity to strongly object to the practice of widows burning themselves with their husbands' corpses.

159. Gov. and Kull. think that the verse refers to the Vâlahhilya Rishis.

160. A virtuous wife who after the death of her husband constantly remains chaste, reaches heaven, though she have no son, just like those chaste men.

161. But a woman who from a desire to have offspring violates her duty towards her (deceased) husband, brings on herself disgrace in this world, and loses her place with her husband (in heaven).

162. Offspring begotten by another man is here not (considered lawful), nor (does offspring begotten) on another man's wife (belong to the begetter), nor is a second husband anywhere prescribed for virtuous women.

163. She who cohabits with a man of higher caste, forsaking her own husband who belongs to a lower one, will become contemptible in this world, and is called a remarried woman (parapûrvâ).

164. By violating her duty towards her husband, a wife is disgraced in this world, (after death) she enters the womb of a jackal, and is tormented by diseases (the punishment of) her sin.

165. She who, controlling her thoughts, words, and deeds, never slights her lord, resides (after death) with her husband (in heaven), and is called a virtuous (wife).

166. In reward of such conduct, a female who controls her thoughts, speech, and actions, gains in this (life) highest renown, and in the next (world) a place near her husband.

160. Vi. XXVI, 17.

162. Medh., Nâr., and Nand. take the first part of the verse differently: 'Offspring begotten by another man does not belong (to the mother).' The other explanation is given by Gov. and Kull.

165. Medh. omits verses 165-166.

167. A twice-born man, versed in the sacred law, shall burn a wife of equal caste who conducts herself thus and dies before him, with (the sacred fires used for) the Agnihotra, and with the sacrificial implements.

168. Having thus, at the funeral, given the sacred fires to his wife who dies before him, he may marry again, and again kindle (the fires).

169. (Living) according to the (preceding) rules, he must never neglect the five (great) sacrifices, and, having taken a wife, he must dwell in (his own) house during the second period of his life.

CHAPTER VI.

1. A twice-born Snâtaka, who has thus lived according to the law in the order of householders, may, taking a firm resolution and keeping his organs in subjection, dwell in the forest, duly (observing the rules given below).

2. When a householder sees his (skin) wrinkled, and (his hair) white, and the sons of his sons, then he may resort to the forest.

167-168. Yâgñ. I, 88.

VI. 1-32. Âp. II, 21, 18-23, 2; Gaut. III, 26-35; Vas. VI, 19-20; IX; Baudh. II, 11, 14-15; III, 18-4, 22; VI. XCIV-XCV; Yâgñ. III, 45-55.

1. Niyatah, 'taking a firm resolution' (Gov., Kull.), means according to Nâr. 'devoted to the restrictive duties, austerities, reciting the Veda, and so forth.' Kull. connects yathâvad, 'duly observing,' &c. (Gov., Nâr.), with 'keeping his organs in subjection.'

2. Medh. notes particularly that the Sishâs insist on the necessity that he who takes to forest-life must have sons and sons' sons, and that hence apatya, 'offspring,' is to be taken in this restricted sense. Nâr. holds that the verse gives three separate grounds for entering the third order, each of which is sufficient by itself, while

3. Abandoning all food raised by cultivation, and all his belongings, he may depart into the forest, either committing his wife to his sons, or accompanied by her.

4. Taking with him the sacred fire and the implements required for domestic (sacrifices), he may go forth from the village into the forest and reside there, duly controlling his senses.

5. Let him offer those five great sacrifices according to the rule, with various kinds of pure food fit for ascetics, or with herbs, roots, and fruit.

6. Let him wear a skin or a tattered garment; let him bathe in the evening or in the morning; and let him always wear (his hair in) braids, the hair on his body, his beard, and his nails (being unclipped).

7. Let him perform the Bali-offering with such food as he eats, and give alms according to his ability; let him honour those who come to his hermitage with alms consisting of water, roots, and fruit.

8. Let him be always industrious in privately reciting the Veda; let him be patient of hardships, friendly (towards all), of collected mind, ever liberal Medh. thinks that the three conditions must exist together. Others, however, mentioned by Medh., took the verse to give a description of the approach of old age, which entitles the householder to turn hermit.

3. 'If his wife desires to accompany him, she may do so. But others say that he is to leave his wife behind if she is young, but shall take her with him if she is aged' (Medh.).

6. Āṭram, 'a tattered garment' (vastrakhaṇḍam, Medh., Gov., Kull.), may also mean 'a dress made of bark, Kura grass, or the like' (Gov., Nār., Rāgh.).

8. Dāntaḥ, 'patient of hardships,' means according to Medh. and Nār. 'free from pride.' Gov. reads in the beginning of the second and never a receiver of gifts, and compassionate towards all living creatures.

9. Let him offer, according to the law, the Agnihotra with three sacred fires, never omitting the new-moon and full-moon sacrifices at the proper time.

10. Let him also offer the Nakshatreshśī, the Āgrayana, and the Kâturmâsya (sacrifices), as well as the Turâyana and likewise the Dâkshâyana, in due order.

11. With pure grains, fit for ascetics, which grow in spring and in autumn, and which he himself has collected, let him severally prepare the sacrificial cakes (purodâsa) and the boiled messes (kuru), as the law directs.

12. Having offered those most pure sacrificial viands, consisting of the produce of the forest, he may use the remainder for himself, (mixed with) salt prepared by himself.

half-verse, tyaktadvandvo 'nisam dâtâ, 'let him not care for the pairs of opposites, let him be ever liberal and compassionate towards all creatures.'

9. Yogatah, 'at the proper time' (Kull., Râgh.), means according to Medh. and Gov. 'as required by law;' according to Nâr. 'diligently.'

10. Medh. reads Darseshśī for Rîksheshśī, 'the Nakshatreshśī.' I read with Medh., Nâr., Nand., and Râgh., Turâyana (see Sâṅkh. Srauta-sûtra IV, 11) instead of Uttarâyana, 'the sacrifice at the winter-solstice,' which Gov., Kull., and K. give. The first reads also more consistently than Kull. and K.: Dakshinâyana, 'the sacrifice at the summer-solstice,' for Dakshasyâyana, 'the Dâkshâyana.' The Nakshatreshśī is a Srauta sacrifice offered to the lunar mansions. Regarding the variety of the Darsapaurṇamâsa, called Dâkshâyana, see Âsv. Srauta-sûtra II, 14.

12. According to Kull., the hermit is to collect the salt from ūsharas, i.e. salt-marshes; according to Nâr., he is to prepare it from the kshâra, 'salt or alkaline elements' of trees and the like.

13. Let him eat vegetables that grow on dry land or in water, flowers, roots, and fruits, the productions of pure trees, and oils extracted from forest-fruits.

14. Let him avoid honey, flesh, and mushrooms growing on the ground (or elsewhere, the vegetables called) Bhûstrîna, and Sigruka, and the Sleshmântaka fruit.

15. Let him throw away in the month of Âsvina the food of ascetics, which he formerly collected, likewise his worn-out clothes and his vegetables, roots, and fruit.

16. Let him not eat anything (grown on) ploughed (land), though it may have been thrown away by somebody, nor roots and fruit grown in a village, though (he may be) tormented (by hunger).

17. He may eat either what has been cooked with fire, or what has been ripened by time; he either may use a stone for grinding, or his teeth may be his mortar.

18. He may either at once (after his daily meal) cleanse (his vessel for collecting food), or lay up a

14. Bhûstrîna, i.e. Andropogon Schoenanthus, Sigruka, according to Nâr., the same as the Sobhanâñgana, i.e. Moringa Pterygosperma, the horse-radish tree, the leaves of which are said to be used as a vegetable. According to Medh., these two vegetables are known among the Bâhîkas, in the Panjâb; according to Gov., Kull., Râgh., the former is found in Mâlvâ. Sleshmântaka, i.e. Cordia Myxa. According to Medh., bhaumâni, 'those which grow on or come from the ground,' has to be taken as a separate word, and denotes a plant, known to the woodmen, named Gogihvikâ, Phlomis or Premna Esculenta. Gov., Nâr., and Kull. give the construction adopted above, and the latter two declare that mushrooms growing on trees are likewise forbidden.

16. 'Though he may be in distress,' i.e. 'tormented by hunger' (Gov., Kull.), or 'sick' (Nâr.).

18. 'He may either at once (after his daily meal) cleanse (his store sufficient for a month, or gather what suffices for six months or for a year.

19. Having collected food according to his ability, he may either eat at night (only), or in the day-time (only), or at every fourth meal-time, or at every eighth.

20. Or he may live according to the rule of the lunar penance (Kāndrāyana, daily diminishing the quantity of his food) in the bright (half of the month) and (increasing it) in the dark (half); or he may eat on the last days of each fortnight, once (a day only), boiled barley-gruel.

21. Or he may constantly subsist on flowers, roots, and fruit alone, which have been ripened by time and have fallen spontaneously, following the rule of the (Institutes) of Vikhanas.

22. Let him either roll about on the ground, or stand during the day on tiptoe, (or) let him alternately stand and sit down; going at the Savanas (at sunrise, at midday, and at sunset) to water in the forest (in order to bathe).

23. In summer let him expose himself to the heat of five fires, during the rainy season live under the open sky, and in winter be dressed in wet clothes, (thus) gradually increasing (the rigour of) his austerities.

vessel for collecting food),’ (Nâr.), means ‘he may either gather only as much as suffices for one day.’ This mode of subsistence is apparently the same as that called Samprakshâlanî vr̥iti by Baudhâya, III, 2, 11.

21. All the commentators except Nâr. expressly state that the text refers to a particular set of Sûtras, ascribed to the R̥ishi Vikhanas, which contained rules for hermits. Medh. adds that the hermit is to learn other practices also from that work.

23. ‘Five fires,’ i.e. ‘four fires and the sun from above.’

24. When he bathes at the three Savanas (sunrise, midday, and sunset), let him offer libations of water to the manes and the gods, and practising harsher and harsher austerities, let him dry up his bodily frame.

25. Having repositied the three sacred fires in himself, according to the prescribed rule, let him live without a fire, without a house, wholly silent, subsisting on roots and fruit,

26. Making no effort (to procure) things that give pleasure, chaste, sleeping on the bare ground, not caring for any shelter, dwelling at the roots of trees.

27. From Brâhmanas (who live as) ascetics, let him receive alms, (barely sufficient) to support life, or from other householders of the twice-born (castes) who reside in the forest.

28. Or (the hermit) who dwells in the forest may bring (food) from a village, receiving it either in a hollow dish (of leaves), in (his naked) hand, or in a broken earthen dish, and may eat eight mouthfuls.

29. These and other observances must a Brâhmana who dwells in the forest diligently practise, and in order to attain complete (union with) the (supreme) Soul, (he must study) the various sacred texts contained in the Upanishads,

24. Gov. says that these harsher austerities are those prescribed in the Vaikhâṇasa Sâstra. Medh. gives as instances, standing with uplifted arms, fasting for a month, and the Dvâḍasarâtra.

25. 'According to the rule,' i.e. 'by swallowing ashes and so forth' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), which mode has to be learned from the Srâvanaka [Srâmanaka Sûtra] (Medh.), or by reciting the text 'Yâ te agne yagnîyâ,' Taitt. Samh. II, 5, 8, 8 (Nâr.).

29. Âtmasamsiddhaye, 'in order to attain complete (union with the (supreme) Soul,' may also mean 'in order to make himself or his soul perfect.' Nâr. gives the correct etymology of Upanishad, explaining upanishannâ yokyata ity upanishat, 'Upanishad means (a text) which is recited (while the pupils are) seated near (the teacher).'

30. (As well as those rites and texts) which have been practised and studied by the sages (R̥ṣhis), and by Brāhmaṇa householders, in order to increase their knowledge (of Brahman), and their austerity, and in order to sanctify their bodies ;

31. Or let him walk, fully determined and going straight on, in a north-easterly direction, subsisting on water and air, until his body sinks to rest.

32. A Brāhmaṇa, having got rid of his body by one of those modes practised by the great sages, is exalted in the world of Brahman, free from sorrow and fear.

33. But having thus passed the third part of (a

30. Gov. and Kull. separate the two words 'Brāhmaṇa householders.' The former explains Brāhmaṇa by 'hermit,' and the latter by 'acquainted with the Brahman, i. e. ascetic.' By 'householders' Kull. understands 'hermits in the forest.' Rāgh. explains Brāhmaṇa by 'those who know Brahman.'

31. Gov. and Kull. take yukta, 'firmly resolved' (Nār., Rāgh.), in the sense of 'intent on the practice of Yoga.' Gov. and Kull. (see also Medh. on the next verse) say that a man may undertake the Mahāprasthāna, or 'Great Departure,' on a journey which ends in death, when he is incurably diseased or meets with a great misfortune, and that, because it is taught in the Sāstras, it is not opposed to the Vedic rules which forbid suicide. From the parallel passage of Āp. II, 23, 2, it is, however, evident that a voluntary death by starvation was considered the befitting conclusion of a hermit's life. The antiquity and general prevalence of the practice may be inferred from the fact that the Gaina ascetics, too, consider it particularly meritorious.

32. 'By one of those modes,' i. e. 'drowning oneself in a river, precipitating oneself from a mount, burning oneself or starving oneself to death' (Medh.); or 'by one of those modes of practising austerities, mentioned above, verse 23' (Gov., Kull., Nār., Nand.). Medh. adds a long discussion, trying to prove that 'the world of Brahman,' which the ascetic thus gains, is not the real complete liberation.

33-85. Āp. II, 21, 2-17; Gaut. III, 11-25; Vas. VI, 19-20; X; man's natural term of) life in the forest, he may live as an ascetic during the fourth part of his existence, after abandoning all attachment to worldly objects. ✓

34. He who after passing from order to order, after offering sacrifices and subduing his senses, becomes, tired with (giving) alms and offerings of food, an ascetic, gains bliss after death.

35. When he has paid the three debts, let him apply his mind to (the attainment of) final liberation; he who seeks it without having paid (his debts) sinks downwards.

36. Having studied the Vedas in accordance with the rule, having begat sons according to the sacred law, and having offered sacrifices according to his ability, he may direct his mind to (the attainment of) final liberation.

37. A twice-born man who seeks final liberation, without having studied the Vedas, without having begotten sons, and without having offered sacrifices, sinks downwards.

38. Having performed the Ishāi, sacred to the Lord of creatures (Pragâpati), where (he gives) all his property as the sacrificial fee, having reposed the sacred fires in himself, a Brâhmaṇa may depart from his house (as an ascetic).

39. Worlds, radiant in brilliancy, become (the portion) of him who recites (the texts regarding) Brahman and departs from his house (as an ascetic), after giving a promise of safety to all created beings.

Baudh. II, 11, 16-26; 17, 1-18, 27; Vi. XCVI-XCVII; Yâgñ. III, 56-65.

33. Nâr. takes âsaṅga, 'attachment' (Gov., Kull.), in the sense of 'possessions.'

38. The description of the rites to be performed on entering the order of ascetics is given in detail in Baudh. II, 17.

40. For that twice-born man, by whom not the smallest danger even is caused to created beings, there will be no danger from any (quarter), after he is freed from his body.

41. Departing from his house fully provided with the means of purification (Pavitra), let him wander about absolutely silent, and caring nothing for enjoyments that may be offered (to him).

42. Let him always wander alone, without any companion, in order to attain (final liberation), fully understanding that the solitary (man, who) neither forsakes nor is forsaken, gains his end.

43. He shall neither possess a fire, nor a dwelling, he may go to a village for his food, (he shall be) indifferent to everything, firm of purpose, meditating (and) concentrating his mind on Brahman.

44. A potsherd (instead of an alms-bowl), the roots of trees (for a dwelling), coarse worn-out garments,

41. Pavitropakītaḥ, 'provided with the means of purification,' i. e. 'his staff, his water-pot, and so forth' (Gov., Kull., Nand.), means according to Medh. either 'applying himself to the recitation of purificatory texts and provided with the means of purifications, i. e. a staff, &c.,' or 'performing penances which purify.' Nâr. takes it to mean, 'having been made most eminent during his life as a householder by acts which purify, i. e. austerities and recitals of the Veda and so forth;' and Râgh., 'possessing a rich store of sanctifying knowledge taught in the Upanishads.' Nâr. takes muniḥ, 'wholly silent' (Gov., Kull.), in the sense of 'intent on meditation.' Nand. explains samupodheshu, 'which may be offered to him' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), by 'which he collected in his house;' and Nâr. by 'which he has duly enjoyed.'

43. Medh. explains muniḥ, 'meditating' (Gov., Kull.), by 'wholly silent.' Instead of asaṃkasukaḥ or aṣaṃkasukaḥ, 'firm of purpose' (Gov., Kull.), Nâr., Nand., and K. prima manu read asaṃkayikaḥ, 'destitute of any store of provisions,' and Râgh. aṣaṃkasūkaḥ, 'free from doubts.' Medh., whose text now reads asaṃkasukaḥ, gives this word as the var. lect. of others, and probably originally read, like Nâr. and Nand., asaṃkayikaḥ.

life in solitude and indifference towards everything, are the marks of one who has attained liberation.

45. Let him not desire to die, let him not desire to live; let him wait for (his appointed) time, as a servant (waits) for the payment of his wages.

46. Let him put down his foot purified by his sight, let him drink water purified by (straining with) a cloth, let him utter speech purified by truth, let him keep his heart pure.

47. Let him patiently bear hard words, let him not insult anybody, and let him not become anybody's enemy for the sake of this (perishable) body.

48. Against an angry man let him not in return show anger, let him bless when he is cursed, and let him not utter speech, devoid of truth, scattered at the seven gates.

49. Delighting in what refers to the Soul, sitting (in the postures prescribed by the Yoga), independent (of external help), entirely abstaining from sensual enjoyments, with himself for his only companion, he shall live in this world, desiring the bliss (of final liberation).

45. The correct reading is nirvesam (Medh., Nâr., var. lect., Nand.) instead of nirdesam (Gov., K.) or nidesam (Kull., Râgh.). The latter reading can, as Nâr. remarks, only mean 'command.'

46. I.e. 'let him look before he puts down his foot, lest he injure any small animal, see ver. 68' (Gov., Medh., Râgh.), or 'lest he step on something impure' (Kull.).

48. 'The seven gates' are, according to Medh. and Gov., 'Dharma, Artha, and Kâma separately, Dharma and Artha, Dharma and Kâma, Artha and Kâma, and finally Dharmârthakâma conjointly; according to Kull. and Medh., 'mind, intellect, and the five senses;' and according to Nâr., 'the five senses, mind, and Aham-kâra, or egoism.' Kull. mentions another explanation, 'the seven worlds,' and Medh. gives as a third meaning, 'the seven vital airs located in the head.' The general sense, 'what refers to worldly matters,' remains always the same.

50. Neither by (explaining) prodigies and omens, nor by skill in astrology and palmistry, nor by giving advice and by the exposition (of the Sâstras), let him ever seek to obtain alms.

51. Let him not (in order to beg) go near a house filled with hermits, Brâhmanas, birds, dogs, or other mendicants.

52. His hair, nails, and beard being clipped, carrying an alms-bowl, a staff, and a water-pot, let him continually wander about, controlling himself and not hurting any creature.

53. His vessels shall not be made of metal, they shall be free from fractures; it is ordained that they shall be cleansed with water, like (the cups, called) Kamasa, at a sacrifice.

54. A gourd, a wooden bowl, an earthen (dish), or one made of split cane, Manu, the son of Sva-yambhu, has declared (to be) vessels (suitable) for an ascetic.

55. Let him go to beg once (a day), let him not be eager to obtain a large quantity (of alms); for an ascetic who eagerly seeks alms, attaches himself also to sensual enjoyments.

50. According to Nâr. and Râgh., aṅgavidyâ, 'palmistry' (Medh., Kull., Nand.), means 'the science of grammar and the other five Âṅgas of the Veda.' Gov. takes nakshatrâṅgavidyâ as a determinative compound, meaning 'astrology.' Anusâsana, 'giving advice' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), means according to Nâr. and Nând. 'teaching the Veda.' Vâda, 'the exposition (of the Sâstras)', (Gov., Kull.), means according to Medh. and Nâr. 'disputations'; according to Nand. and Râgh. 'the science of dialectics.' This verse, which occurs also in Vas. X, 21, is historically important, as it shows that in ancient as in modern times, ascetics followed worldly pursuits and were the teachers or advisers of the people.

55. 'Let him not go oftener to beg' is Gov.'s explanation, instead of 'let him not be eager to obtain a large quantity of alms.'

56. When no smoke ascends from (the kitchen), when the pestle lies motionless, when the embers have been extinguished, when the people have finished their meal, when the remnants in the dishes have been removed, let the ascetic always go to beg.

57. Let him not be sorry when he obtains nothing, nor rejoice when he obtains (something), let him (accept) so much only as will sustain life, let him not care about the (quality of his) utensils.

58. Let him disdain all (food) obtained in consequence of humble salutations, (for) even an ascetic who has attained final liberation, is bound (with the fetters of the Samsâra) by accepting (food given) in consequence of humble salutations.

59. By eating little, and by standing and sitting in solitude, let him restrain his senses, if they are attracted by sensual objects.

60. By the restraint of his senses, by the destruction of love and hatred, and by the abstention from injuring the creatures, he becomes fit for immortality.

61. Let him reflect on the transmigrations of men, caused by their sinful deeds, on their falling into hell, and on the torments in the world of Yama,

62. On the separation from their dear ones, on their union with hated men, on their being overpowered by age and being tormented with diseases,

63. On the departure of the individual soul from this body and its new birth in (another) womb, and

57. Mâtrâ, 'utensils,' i.e. his staff, water-pot, &c. (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), means according to Nâr. and Nand. 'a portion, e.g. a mouthful' (kavalâdiḥ, Nâr.), or 'a portion, i.e. enough to fill his stomach' (udarapûraṇâvadhîr mâtrâ).

on its wanderings through ten thousand millions of existences,

64. On the infliction of pain on embodied (spirits), which is caused by demerit, and the gain of eternal bliss, which is caused by the attainment of their highest aim, (gained through) spiritual merit.

65. By deep meditation let him recognise the subtle nature of the supreme Soul, and its presence in all organisms, both the highest and the lowest.

66. To whatever order he may be attached, let him, though blemished (by a want of the external marks), fulfil his duty, equal-minded towards all creatures; (for) the external mark (of the order) is not the cause of (the acquisition of) merit.

67. Though the fruit of the Kataka tree (the clearing-nut) makes water clear, yet the (latter) does not become limpid in consequence of the mention of the (fruit's) name.

68. In order to preserve living creatures, let him always by day and by night, even with pain to his body, walk, carefully scanning the ground.

69. In order to expiate (the death) of those creatures which he unintentionally injures by day or by night, an ascetic shall bathe and perform six suppressions of the breath.

65. Nand. omits this verse. 'The highest aim' is 'the recognition of the Brahman' (Kull.), and the good fortune of attaining that falls only to the lot of those who have accumulated a rich store of merit.

66. Instead of dûshito 'pi, 'though blemished (by a want of the external marks of the order),' (Kull., Nand., Râgh.), Medh., Gov., Nâr., and K. read bhûshito 'pi, 'though adorned (with garlands and the like).'

69. Regarding the term 'suppression of the breath,' see Vas. XXV, 13, and Wilson, Vishṇupurâṇa, V, p. 231 (ed. Hall).

70. Three suppressions of the breath even, performed according to the rule, and accompanied with the (recitation of the) Vyâhr̥itis and of the syllable Om, one must know to be the highest (form of) austerity for every Brâhmaṇa.

71. For as the impurities of metallic ores, melted in the blast (of a furnace), are consumed, even so the taints of the organs are destroyed through the suppression of the breath.

72. Let him destroy the taints through suppressions of the breath, (the production of) sin by fixed attention, all sensual attachments by restraining (his senses and organs), and all qualities that are not lordly by meditation.

73. Let him recognise by the practice of meditation the progress of the individual soul through beings of various kinds, (a progress) hard to understand for unregenerate men.

74. He who possesses the true insight (into the nature of the world), is not fettered by his deeds ; but he who is destitute of that insight, is drawn into the circle of births and deaths.

71. Vas. XXV, 6; Baudh. IV, 1, 24.

72. Regarding the term dhâraṇâ, 'fixed attention,' see Wilson, Vishṇupurâṇa, V, p. 237 (ed. Hall), and Jacob, Vedântasâra, p. 109.

Anîsvarân gunân, 'all qualities that are not lordly.' Medh. explains the qualities by 'goodness, passion, and darkness,' and the epithet 'not lordly' by 'depending upon another,' and adds that 'the conceit (abhimâna) of the soul (purusha) that it possesses qualities and is affected by pleasure or pain and the like must be destroyed.' Gov. and K. assert that the qualities opposed to 'virtue, knowledge, absence of passion and power' (Davies, Sâṃkhya, p. 81) are to be destroyed by 'meditation,' as defined in the Yogaśâstra. Similarly Nâr., who (as also Nand.) reads anaisvarân, says that the qualities that are opposed to true knowledge and power, and are modifications of passion and darkness, must be destroyed by meditating on the formless. Kull. and Râgh., on the other hand, interpret the passage on Vedânta principles, and explain the qualities as 'such which do not belong to the lord, Brahman, i.e. anger, greed, envy, and so forth.'

75. By not injuring any creatures, by detaching the senses (from objects of enjoyment), by the rites prescribed in the Veda, and by rigorously practising austerities, (men) gain that state (even) in this (world).

76-77. Let him quit this dwelling, composed of the five elements, where the bones are the beams, which is held together by tendons (instead of cords), where the flesh and the blood are the mortar, which is thatched with the skin, which is foul-smelling, filled with urine and ordure, infested by old age and sorrow, the seat of disease, harassed by pain, gloomy with passion, and perishable.

78. He who leaves this body, (be it by necessity) as a tree (that is torn from) the river-bank, or (freely) like a bird (that) quits a tree, is freed from the misery (of this world, dreadful like) a shark.

79. Making over (the merit of his own) good actions to his friends and (the guilt of) his evil deeds to his enemies, he attains the eternal Brahman by the practice of meditation.

80. When by the disposition (of his heart) he

75. 'By the rites prescribed in the Veda,' i.e. the daily rites (Medh., Gov., Kull.), or 'the daily rites and those prescribed for certain occasions' (Nâr., Nand.). 'That state,' i.e. 'the union with Brahman' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), means according to Medh. 'that place, i.e. the world of Brahman.' Nâr. and Nand. read tatparam, 'that highest (Brahman).'

76-77. Maitr. Up. III, 4.

79. 'Making over (the merit of his own) good actions' means according to Gov. and Medh. '(the merit of anybody's) good actions.'

80. 'In this world,' i.e. he becomes a Gīvanmukta, one liberated during this life (Nâr.).

becomes indifferent to all objects, he obtains eternal happiness both in this world and after death.

81. He who has in this manner gradually given up all attachments and is freed from all the pairs (of opposites), reposes in Brahman alone.

82. All that has been declared (above) depends on meditation; for he who is not proficient in the knowledge of that which refers to the Soul reaps not the full reward of the performance of rites.

83. Let him constantly recite (those texts of) the Veda which refer to the sacrifice, (those) referring to the deities, and (those) which treat of the Soul and are contained in the concluding portions of the Veda (Vedânta).

84. That is the refuge of the ignorant, and even

81. 'The pairs of opposites,' i.e. hunger and satiety and so forth (Gov.), or honour and dishonour (Kull.).

82. I follow Gov., Nâr., and Nand., who explain the verse to mean that all the teaching of the preceding chapters with respect to the four orders depends, as far as its ultimate result is concerned, on meditation, because, however well a man may fulfil the prescribed rites, he cannot reap the full reward without knowing and meditating on the Brahman. Kull. refers the phrase 'All that has been declared' to the contents of the last verse, and says that 'the complete freedom from all attachments and the repose in Brahman' depend on the recognition of the unity of the individual soul and of Brahman. He understands by kriyâphalam, 'the reward for the act of meditating.' Medh. begins with an explanation similar to that of Kull., but he takes finally kriyâphalam in the same sense as Gov., Nâr., and Nand. Râgh. explains yad etad abhisabdhitam by 'what can be expressed by words.'

83. 'Which refer to the sacrifice,' i.e. 'the Brâhmanas' (Medh., Gov., Nand.), or 'the Brahmaveda' (Kull., Nâr.), or 'the Karmakânda,' e.g. ishe tvâ ūrge tvâ (Vâg. Samh. I, 1), Râgh. 'Those referring to the deities,' i.e. 'Mantras describing the various deities' (Medh., Gov.), e.g. Rig-veda VIII, 44, 16 (Gov.). The third class of texts mentioned is that of the Upanishads; but see also Goldstücker, Sansk. Dict., s. v. adhyâtma.

that (the refuge) of those who know (the meaning of the Veda); that is (the protection) of those who seek (bliss in) heaven and of those who seek endless (beatitude).

85. A twice-born man who becomes an ascetic, after the successive performance of the above-mentioned acts, shakes off sin here below and reaches the highest Brahman.

86. Thus the law (valid) for self-restrained ascetics has been explained to you ; now listen to the (particular) duties of those who give up (the rites prescribed by) the Veda.

87. The student, the householder, the hermit, and the ascetic, these (constitute) four separate orders, which all spring from (the order of) householders.

88. But all (or) even (any of) these orders, assumed successively in accordance with the Institutes (of the sacred law), lead the Brâhmaṇa who acts by the preceding (rules) to the highest state.

89. And in accordance with the precepts of the Veda and of the Smṛiti, the housekeeper is declared

86. Gov. is of opinion that the persons named above, IV, 22, are here intended. But from what follows, verses 94, 95, it appears that those Brâhmaṇas are meant who, though solely intent on the acquisition of supreme knowledge, and retired from all worldly affairs, continue to reside in their houses ; see also IV, 257. Gov. and Nâr. assume that they remain householders, while Kull. counts them among the ascetics.

87-93. Âp. II, 23-24 ; Gaut. III, 36 ; Vas. VIII, 14-16 ; X, 30 ; Baudh. II, 11, 9-34 ; Vi. LIX, 27-29.

According to the commentators, the following discussion is introduced in order to show, (1) that there are four orders only, and that the Vedasannyâsika belongs to these, and does not form a fifth order, or stand outside the orders ; (2) that as the order of the householders is the most distinguished, it is proper that a man may continue to live in his house under the protection of his son.

to be superior to all of them; for he supports the other three.

90. As all rivers, both great and small, find a resting-place in the ocean, even so men of all orders find protection with householders.

91. By twice-born men belonging to (any of) these four orders, the tenfold law must be ever carefully obeyed.

92. Contentment, forgiveness, self-control, abstention from unrighteously appropriating anything, (obedience to the rules of) purification, coercion of the organs, wisdom, knowledge (of the supreme Soul), truthfulness, and abstention from anger, (form) the tenfold law.

93. Those Brâhmaṇas who thoroughly study the tenfold law, and after studying obey it, enter the highest state.

94. A twice-born man who, with collected mind, follows the tenfold law and has paid his (three) debts, may, after learning the Vedânta according to the prescribed rule, become an ascetic.

95. Having given up (the performance of) all rites, throwing off the guilt of his (sinful) acts, subduing his organs and having studied the Veda, he may live at his ease under the protection of his son.

92. Dhṛtīḥ, 'contentment,' means according to Nâr., Nand., and Râgh. 'firmness of purpose or in the discharge of duties.' Damaḥ, 'self-control,' means according to Medh. and Nand. 'humility;' according to Gov. and Nâr. 'patience under sufferings;' according to Kull. and Râgh. 'the subjugation of the internal organ.' Dhîḥ, 'wisdom,' means according to Medh. and Gov. 'freedom from doubts and errors;' according to Kull. and Râgh. 'knowledge of the true meaning of the Sâstras.' Nâr. and Nand. read hrîḥ, 'modesty or shame.'

94. Vas. X, 26.

95. 'Having studied the Veda,' i.e. 'the Upanishads' (Kull.).

96. He who has thus given up (the performance of) all rites, who is solely intent on his own (particular) object, (and) free from desires, destroys his guilt by his renunciation and obtains the highest state.

97. Thus the fourfold holy law of Brâhmaṇas, which after death (yields) imperishable rewards, has been declared to you ; now learn the duty of kings.

CHAPTER VII.

1. I will declare the duties of kings, (and) show how a king should conduct himself, how he was created, and how (he can obtain) highest success.

2. A Kshatriya, who has received according to the rule the sacrament prescribed by the Veda, must duly protect this whole (world).

3. For, when these creatures, being without a king, through fear dispersed in all directions, the Lord created a king for the protection of this whole (creation),

4. Taking (for that purpose) eternal particles of Indra, of the Wind, of Yama, of the Sun, of Fire, of Varuṇa, of the Moon, and of the Lord of wealth (Kubera).

Gov., Nâr., Nand., Râgh., and K. read abhyasyan, 'studying the Veda,' and the same reading is mentioned by Medh. as a var. lect.

96. 'His own object,' i. e. 'final liberation.'

97. According to Medh. the word 'Brâhmaṇa' is not intended to exclude other Âryans ; but according to Gov., Kull., and Nâr. it is meant to prescribe that asceticism is permissible for Brâhmaṇas alone.

VII. 2. 'The sacrament,' i. e. 'the initiation' (Medh., Gov., Nâr., Kull.), or 'the initiation and the rest' (Râgh.), or 'the sacrament of the coronation' (Nand.). The last opinion seems the correct one.

5. Because a king has been formed of particles of those lords of the gods, he therefore surpasses all created beings in lustre ;

6. And, like the sun, he burns eyes and hearts ; nor can anybody on earth even gaze on him.

7. Through his (supernatural) power he is Fire and Wind, he Sun and Moon, he the Lord of justice (Yama), he Kubera, he Varuna, he great Indra.

8. Even an infant king must not be despised, (from an idea) that he is a (mere) mortal ; for he is a great deity in human form.

9. Fire burns one man only, if he carelessly approaches it, the fire of a king's (anger) consumes the (whole) family, together with its cattle and its hoard of property.

10. Having fully considered the purpose, (his) power, and the place and the time, he assumes by turns many (different) shapes for the complete attainment of justice.

11. He, in whose favour resides Padmâ, the goddess of fortune, in whose valour dwells victory, in whose anger abides death, is formed of the lustre of all (gods).

12. The (man), who in his exceeding folly hates him, will doubtlessly perish ; for the king quickly makes up his mind to destroy such (a man).

5. The commentators explain tegas, 'lustre,' by 'prowess or valour' (vîrya). The next verse, however, shows that at least a play on the word is intended.

10. According to the commentators, the verse is meant as a warning to those who are too confident of possessing a king's favour.

11. 'Padmâ, the goddess of fortune,' must be taken according to Nâr. and Nand. as 'who carries a lotus in her hand,' and according to Râgh. 'whose dwelling is the lotus.' According to Medh., Gov., and Kull., the epithet is added in order to give the idea of greatness.

13. Let no (man), therefore, transgress that law which the king decrees with respect to his favourites, nor (his orders) which inflict pain on those in disfavour.

14. For the (king's) sake the Lord formerly created his own son, Punishment, the protector of all creatures, (an incarnation of) the law, formed of Brahman's glory.

15. Through fear of him all created beings, both the immovable and the movable, allow themselves to be enjoyed and swerve not from their duties.

16. Having fully considered the time and the place (of the offence), the strength and the knowledge (of the offender), let him justly inflict that (punishment) on men who act unjustly.

13. Medh. gives the following instances. If a king orders that during the celebration of a wedding in the house of a minister or other favourite, a public festival is to be held in the town, that everybody is to appear on the occasion, or that during so and so many days no animals are to be killed, no birds to be snared, and no debtors to be imprisoned by their creditors, everybody must obey. The same shall be the case if the king orders with respect to persons in disfavour that they are to be shunned by everybody, that nobody is to enter their houses. Gov., Kull., and Râgh. give the same explanation, and they as well as Medh. add, that this rule refers to lawful orders in worldly matters only. Nâr. seems to have taken the verse differently, in a sense similar to that contained in Sir W. Jones' translation.

14. Yâgñ. I, 353.

15. Bhogâya kalpante, 'allow themselves to be enjoyed' (Medh., Gov., Nâr., Nand., Râgh.), means according to Kull. 'are able to enjoy their own.' Gov. says, kādanādibhayena vṛkshādīsthāvarāṇy api phalapushpādīdvāreṇopabhogārtham sampadyante niyatakālam pushpādīdānavyavasthām nātikrāmanti, 'through fear of being cut down and the like immovable things such as trees become fit to be enjoyed by means of their fruit, flowers, and so forth, (i. e.) they transgress not the law according to which they must give flowers, &c. at the appointed time;' see also below, verse 23.

16. Gaut. XII, 51; Vas. XIX, 9; Vi. III, 91; Yâgñ. I, 367.

17. Punishment is (in reality) the king (and) the male, that the manager of affairs, that the ruler, and that is called the surety for the four orders' obedience to the law.

18. Punishment alone governs all created beings, punishment alone protects them, punishment watches over them while they sleep; the wise declare punishment (to be identical with) the law.

19. If (punishment) is properly inflicted after (due) consideration, it makes all people happy; but inflicted without consideration, it destroys everything.

20. If the king did not, without tiring, inflict punishment on those worthy to be punished, the stronger would roast the weaker, like fish on a spit;

21. The crow would eat the sacrificial cake and the dog would lick the sacrificial viands, and ownership would not remain with any one, the lower ones would (usurp the place of) the higher ones.

22. The whole world is kept in order by punishment, for a guiltless man is hard to find; through fear of punishment the whole world yields the enjoyments (which it owes).

23. The gods, the Dānavas, the Gandharvas, the Rākshasas, the bird and snake deities even give the enjoyments (due from them) only, if they are tormented by (the fear of) punishment.

24. All castes (varṇa) would be corrupted (by intermixture), all barriers would be broken through,

17. 'That is the male,' i. e. 'compared with him all others are (weak) women' (Kull.).

19. Yāgñ. I, 355.

23. The commentators quote in explanation of this verse a passage from the Yagur-veda, 'Through fear the fire warms, through fear the sun shines, through fear move Indra, the Wind, and Death, as the fifth.'

and all men would rage (against each other) in consequence of mistakes with respect to punishment.

25. But where Punishment with a black hue and red eyes stalks about, destroying sinners, there the subjects are not disturbed, provided that he who inflicts it discerns well.

26. They declare that king to be a just inflicter of punishment, who is truthful, who acts after due consideration, who is wise, and who knows (the respective value of) virtue, pleasure, and wealth.

27. A king who properly inflicts (punishment), prospers with respect to (those) three (means of happiness); but he who is voluptuous, partial, and deceitful will be destroyed, even through the (unjust) punishment (which he inflicts).

28. Punishment (possesses) a very bright lustre, and is hard to be administered by men with unimproved minds; it strikes down the king who swerves from his duty, together with his relatives.

29. Next it will afflict his castles, his territories, the whole world together with the movable and immovable (creation), likewise the sages and the gods, who (on the failure of offerings) ascend to the sky.

30. (Punishment) cannot be inflicted justly by one who has no assistant, (nor) by a fool, (nor) by a covetous man, (nor) by one whose mind is unimproved, (nor) by one addicted to sensual pleasures.

25. Vi. III, 96.

26. Gaut. XI, 2.

27. Vishamaḥ, 'partial' (Nâr.), means according to Gov., Kull., and Râgh. 'wrathful.'

28. 'By men with unimproved minds,' i. e. 'who have not learnt the Sâstras' (Gov., Kull.).

30-31. Gaut. XI, 4; Yâgñ. I, 308-309, 354.

31. By him who is pure (and) faithful to his promise, who acts according to the Institutes (of the sacred law), who has good assistants and is wise, punishment can be (justly) inflicted.

32. Let him act with justice in his own domain, with rigour chastise his enemies, behave without duplicity towards his friends, and be lenient towards Brâhmaṇas.

33. The fame of a king who behaves thus, even though he subsist by gleanings, is spread in the world, like a drop of oil on water.

34. But the fame of a king who acts in a contrary manner and who does not subdue himself, diminishes in extent among men like a drop of clarified butter in water.

35. The king has been created (to be) the protector of the castes (varṇa) and orders, who, all according to their rank, discharge their several duties.

36. Whatever must be done by him and by his servants for the protection of his people, that I will fully declare to you in due order.

37. Let the king, after rising early in the morning, worship Brâhmaṇas who are well versed in the threefold sacred science and learned (in polity), and follow their advice.

38. Let him daily worship aged Brâhmaṇas who know the Veda and are pure; for he who always worships aged men, is honoured even by Rākshasas.

31. Pure, i. e. 'with respect to the acquisition of wealth,' or 'not covetous' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). Satyasamdhya, 'faithful to his promise' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), means according to Medh. 'who cares for truth alone.'

32. Vi. III, 96; Yâgñ. I, 333.

33. Vi. III, 97.

37-38. Vi. III, 76-77.

39. Let him, though he may already be modest, constantly learn modesty from them; for a king who is modest never perishes.

40. Through a want of modesty many kings have perished, together with their belongings; through modesty even hermits in the forest have gained kingdoms.

41. Through a want of humility Vena perished, likewise king Nahusha, Sudâs, the son of Pigavana, Sumukha, and Nemi.

42. But by humility Prithu and Manu gained sovereignty, Kubera the position of the Lord of wealth, and the son of Gâdhi the rank of a Brâhmaṇa.

43. From those versed in the three Vedas let him learn the threefold (sacred science), the primeval science of government, the science of dialectics, and the knowledge of the (supreme) Soul; from the people (the theory of) the (various) trades and professions.

44. Day and night he must strenuously exert himself to conquer his senses; for he (alone) who has conquered his own senses, can keep his subjects in obedience.

45. Let him carefully shun the ten vices, springing

41. I read with Medh., Gov., Nâr., Râgh., and K., Sudâh paigavanas kaiva, instead of Sudâso yavanas kaiva (Kull.). Nand. has Vaigavana, a mere clerical mistake. As Medh. remarks, the legends regarding the worthies mentioned here occur in the Mahâbhârata.

42. The son of Gâdhi, i.e. Visvâmitra; see Muir, Original Sanskrit Texts, I, p. 83 seqq.

43. Gaut. XI, 3; Yâgyñ. I, 310. Nâr. takes ânvîkshikîṃ kât-mavidyâm to mean 'and the science of dialectics, i.e. the Nyâya, Sâmkhya, and so forth, which is useful for obtaining final liberation.' Medh. too is not certain if ânvîkshikî is to be taken by itself, but proposes 'the science of dialectics which will be useful to him.'

45-48. Vi. III, 50-51.

from love of pleasure, and the eight, proceeding from wrath, which (all) end in misery.

46. For a king who is attached to the vices springing from love of pleasure, loses his wealth and his virtue, but (he who is given) to those arising from anger, (loses) even his life.

47. Hunting, gambling, sleeping by day, censoriousness, (excess with) women, drunkenness, (an inordinate love for) dancing, singing, and music, and useless travel are the tenfold set (of vices) springing from love of pleasure.

48. Tale-bearing, violence, treachery, envy, slandering, (unjust) seizure of property, reviling, and assault are the eightfold set (of vices) produced by wrath.

49. That greediness which all wise men declare to be the root even of both these (sets), let him carefully conquer; both sets (of vices) are produced by that.

50. Drinking, dice, women, and hunting, these four (which have been enumerated) in succession, he must know to be the most pernicious in the set that springs from love of pleasure.

51. Doing bodily injury, reviling, and the seizure of property, these three he must know to be the most pernicious in the set produced by wrath.

52. A self-controlled (king) should know that in this set of seven, which prevails everywhere, each

49. 'Greediness (lobha) is the root of all (these vices), because (the king) acts in some (of these cases) from a desire for money, and in others from a greediness of sensual pleasures' (Gov.).

52. Medh., Nand., and K. read âtmanaḥ instead of âtmavân, and in that case the translation must be, 'Let him know that in this set . . . each earlier-named vice is more pernicious for him (than . . .).'

earlier-named vice is more abominable (than those named later).

53. (On a comparison) between vice and death, vice is declared to be more pernicious; a vicious man sinks to the nethermost (hell), he who dies, free from vice, ascends to heaven.

54. Let him appoint seven or eight ministers whose ancestors have been royal servants, who are versed in the sciences, heroes skilled in the use of weapons and descended from (noble) families and who have been tried.

55. Even an undertaking easy (in itself) is (sometimes) hard to be accomplished by a single man; how much (harder is it for a king), especially (if he has) no assistant, (to govern) a kingdom which yields great revenues.

56. Let him daily consider with them the ordinary (business, referring to) peace and war, (the four subjects called) sthâna, the revenue, the (manner of) protecting (himself and his kingdom), and the sanctification of his gains (by pious gifts).

54. Vi. III, 71; Yâgñ. I, 311. Labdhalakshân, 'skilled in the use of weapons' (Kull., Nâr.), means according to Medh., Gov., Nand., and Râgh. 'who fail not in their undertakings.' Parîkshitân (Gov., Kull., and K.), or suparîkshitân (Medh., Nâr.), 'who have been tried,' i. e. by tempting them in various ways (Medh.), or 'if they are incorruptible' (Nâr.), or 'who have been examined by spies' (Gov.), or 'who have been bound to fidelity by touching images of the gods, &c.' (Kull., Râgh.). Nand. reads parîkshakân, 'who examine (the state-affairs).'

55. The correct reading is kimu, 'how much harder' (Medh., Gov., sec. manu, Nâr., Nand., Râgh., K.), instead of the kim tu, 'but,' of the editions.

56. Yâgñ. I, 311. Sthâna means according to Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh. 'the army, the treasury, the town, and the kingdom;' according to Medh. either that or 'the loss of his kingdom;' according to Nand. 'halting' (âsana).

57. Having (first) ascertained the opinion of each (minister) separately and (then the views) of all together, let him do what is (most) beneficial for him in his affairs.

58. But with the most distinguished among them all, a learned Brâhmaṇa, let the king deliberate on the most important affairs which relate to the six measures of royal policy.

59. Let him, full of confidence, always entrust to that (official) all business; having taken his final resolution with him, let him afterwards begin to act.

60. He must also appoint other officials, (men) of integrity, (who are) wise, firm, well able to collect money, and well tried.

61. As many persons as the due performance of his business requires, so many skilful and clever (men), free from sloth, let him appoint.

62. Among them let him employ the brave, the skilful, the high-born, and the honest in (offices for the collection of) revenue, (e.g.) in mines, manufactures, and storehouses, (but) the timid in the interior of his palace.

63. Let him also appoint an ambassador who is versed in all sciences, who understands hints, expressions of the face and gestures, who is honest, skilful, and of (noble) family.

58. Yâgñ. I, 311.

60. Nâr. mentions kulodgatân, 'of noble families,' as a var. lect. for avasthitân, 'firm.'

62. Vi. III, 18, 21. Medh. refers karmânta, literally 'management,' to 'sugar-mills, distilleries, and so forth;' Gov. and Kul'. add 'storehouses of grain;' Nâr. explains it by 'manufactories of ornaments and weapons and so forth.' It is, however, not impossible that the compound âkarakarmânta may mean 'for superintending mines and manufactories.' Âkara has very frequently that double meaning.

64. (Such) an ambassador is commended to a king (who is) loyal, honest, skilful, possessing a good memory, who knows the (proper) place and time (for action, who is) handsome, fearless, and eloquent.

65. The army depends on the official (placed in charge of it), the due control (of the subjects) on the army, the treasury and the (government of) the realm on the king, peace and its opposite (war) on the ambassador.

66. For the ambassador alone makes (kings') allies and separates allies; the ambassador transacts that business by which (kings) are disunited or not.

67. With respect to the affairs let the (ambassador) explore the expression of the countenance, the gestures and actions of the (foreign king) through the gestures and actions of his confidential (advisers), and (discover) his designs among his servants.

68. Having learnt exactly (from his ambassador) the designs of the foreign king, let (the king) take such measures that he does not bring evil on himself.

64. Anuraktaḥ, 'loyal' (Medh., Gov., Râgh.), means according to Kull. 'who is beloved among the people.'

66. Instead of bhidyante yena vâ na vâ, 'by which (kings) are disunited or not' (Kull., Râgh.), Medh., Nand., and K. read bhidyante yena mânavâḥ, and Gov. bhidyante yena bândhavâḥ, 'by which men or relatives are disunited.'

67. Nigûdheṅgitakeshaitaiḥ, 'through the gestures and actions of his confidential (advisers),' (Kull., Râgh.), means according to Medh. and Gov. 'by his own hidden gestures and actions,' or perhaps 'while suppressing all significant gestures and actions on his own part;' according to Nand. 'through men who hide their own gestures and actions.'

68. Medh., Gov., Nand., and Râgh. take the verse differently. 'Having learnt exactly the designs of the foreign king, (the ambassador) shall take such measures that he does not bring evil on himself (and his master).'

69. Let him settle in a country which is open and has a dry climate, where grain is abundant, which is chiefly (inhabited) by Âryans, not subject to epidemic diseases (or similar troubles), and pleasant, where the vassals are obedient and his own (people easily) find their livelihood.

70. Let him build (there) a town, making for his safety a fortress, protected by a desert, or a fortress built of (stone and) earth, or one protected by water or trees, or one (formed by an encampment of armed) men or a hill-fort.

71. Let him make every effort to secure a hill-fort, for amongst all those (fortresses mentioned) a hill-fort is distinguished by many superior qualities.

72. The first three of those (various kinds of fortresses) are inhabited by wild beasts, animals living in holes and aquatic animals, the last three by monkeys, men, and gods respectively.

73. As enemies do not hurt these (beings, when they are) sheltered by (their) fortresses, even so foes (can)not injure a king who has taken refuge in his fort.

74. One bowman, placed on a rampart, is a match in battle for one hundred (foes), one hundred for ten

69. Vi. III, 4-5; Yâgñ. I, 320. The full definition of gângalāḥ, 'which is open and has a dry climate,' is, according to a verse quoted by Gov., Râgh., and Kull., 'That country is called gângalā, which has little water and grass, where strong breezes prevail, the heat is great, where grain and the like are abundant.' Anâvīla, 'not subject to epidemic diseases (or similar troubles),' (Kull. and Râgh.), means according to Medh. 'where the people are not quarrelsome;' according to Nâr. and Nand. 'free from defilement such as a mixture of the castes.'

70. Vi. III, 6.

thousand; hence it is prescribed (in the Sâstras that a king shall possess) a fortress.

75. Let that (fort) be well supplied with weapons, money, grain and beasts of burden, with Brâhmaṇas, with artisans, with engines, with fodder, and with water.

76. Let him cause to be built for himself, in the centre of it, a spacious palace, (well) protected, habitable in every season, resplendent (with white-wash), supplied with water and trees.

77. Inhabiting that, let him wed a consort of equal caste (varṇa), who possesses auspicious marks (on her body), and is born in a great family, who is charming and possesses beauty and excellent qualities.

78. Let him appoint a domestic priest (purohita) and choose officiating priests (ṛitvigaḥ); they shall perform his domestic rites and the (sacrifices) for which three fires are required.

79. A king shall offer various (Srauta) sacrifices at which liberal fees (are distributed), and in order

75. Yantraiḥ, 'with engines,' i. e. 'with catapults and so forth' (kshepyâdibhiḥ, Nâr.), or 'made of iron and so forth' (Râgh.).

76. Âp. II, 25, 2-3. Sarvartukam, 'habitable in every season' (Nâr., Nand.), means according to Medh., Gov., Kull., and Râgh. 'supplied with the produce of every season.'

78. Gaut. XI, 12-18; Vas. XIX, 3-6; Baudh. I, 18, 7-8; Vi. III, 70; Yâgñ. I, 312-313. Medh., Gov., Râgh., and K. read, as the sense requires, ṛitvigaḥ, 'officiating priests,' while Kull. alone gives the singular.

79. Âp. II, 26, 1; Vi. III, 81, 84; Yâgñ. I, 314. 'Enjoyments,' i. e. 'garlands, perfumes, unguents, and so forth' (Medh.), or 'houses, couches, and so forth' (Gov., Râgh.), or 'gold, clothes, &c.' (Kull.), or 'wives, houses, clothes, and so forth' (Nâr.), or 'cows and buffalos' (Nand.).

to acquire merit, he shall give to Brāhmanas enjoyments and wealth.

80. Let him cause the annual revenue in his kingdom to be collected by trusty (officials), let him obey the sacred law in (his transactions with) the people, and behave like a father towards all men.

81. For the various (branches of business) let him appoint intelligent supervisors; they shall inspect all (the acts) of those men who transact his business.

82. Let him honour those Brāhmanas who have returned from their teacher's house (after studying the Veda); for that (money which is given) to Brāhmanas is declared to be an imperishable treasure for kings.

83. Neither thieves nor foes can take it, nor can it be lost; hence an imperishable store must be deposited by kings with Brāhmanas.

84. The offering made through the mouth of a Brāhmaṇa, which is neither spilt, nor falls (on the ground), nor ever perishes, is far more excellent than Agnihotras.

85. A gift to one who is not a Brāhmaṇa (yields) the ordinary (reward; a gift) to one who calls himself a Brāhmaṇa, a double (reward); a gift to a well-

80. Yāgñ. I, 321. 'Let him obey the sacred law in (his transactions with his) people,' i. e. 'let him not take higher taxes and duties than the law permits.'

83. Yāgñ. I, 314.

84. Vas. XXX, 7; Yāgñ. I, 315. Na vyathate, 'nor falls (on the ground),' (Gov., Nâr.), means according to Kull. 'nor is dried up.' Medh. reads kyavate, 'falls (on the ground),' and Nâr. prefers that reading. Nand. explains na vyadhate (sic) by 'is not spoilt by hairs or insects falling into it.' Râgh. takes it, like Krishnapandita in his comm. on Vas. XXX, 7, in the sense of 'nor causes pain.'

85. Gaut. V, 20; Vi. XCIII, 1-4. Samam phalam, 'the ordinary read Brāhmaṇa, a hundred-thousandfold (reward); (a gift) to one who knows the Veda and the Āṅgas (Vedapāraṅga, a reward) without end.

86. For according to the particular qualities of the recipient and according to the faith (of the giver) a small or a great reward will be obtained for a gift in the next world.

87. A king who, while he protects his people, is defied by (foes), be they equal in strength, or stronger, or weaker, must not shrink from battle, remembering the duty of Kṣatriyas.

88. Not to turn back in battle, to protect the people, to honour the Brāhmaṇas, is the best means for a king to secure happiness.

89. Those kings who, seeking to slay each other in battle, fight with the utmost exertion and do not turn back, go to heaven.

90. When he fights with his foes in battle, let him not strike with weapons concealed (in wood), nor with (such as are) barbed, poisoned, or the points of which are blazing with fire.

91. Let him not strike one who (in flight) has reward,' i.e. 'just as much as the Veda promises for the object given' (Gov., Kull., Rāgh.). Medh. takes samam in the sense of 'middling,' and Nār. explains it by 'a reward equal to the kindness shown.' Instead of prādhīte, 'to a well-read Brāhmaṇa,' Medh., Gov., Nār., and K. read ātārye, 'to the teacher,' and Nand. srotiye, 'to a Srotiya.' Moreover, Gov., K., and Nand. have sahasra-gunam or sahasraṃ . . . dānam, 'a thousandfold reward.'

87-89. Âp. II, 26, 2; Gaut. X, 16; Baudh. I, 18, 9; Vi. III, 43-45; Yâgñ. I, 322-323.

90. Baudh. I, 18, 10. Kâṭaiḥ, 'concealed (in wood),' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nār., Rāgh.), means according to Nand. 'treacherous.'

91-93. Âp. II, 10, 11; Gaut. X, 18; Baudh. I, 18, 11; Yâgñ. I, 325.

91. Sihlârûdham, 'one who (in flight) has climbed on an eminence' (Nār.), means according to Medh., Kull., and Rāgh. 'one climbed on an eminence, nor a eunuch, nor one who joins the palms of his hands (in supplication), nor one who (flees) with flying hair, nor one who sits down, nor one who says 'I am thine;'

92. Nor one who sleeps, nor one who has lost his coat of mail, nor one who is naked, nor one who is disarmed, nor one who looks on without taking part in the fight, nor one who is fighting with another (foe);

93. Nor one whose weapons are broken, nor one afflicted (with sorrow), nor one who has been grievously wounded, nor one who is in fear, nor one who has turned to flight; (but in all these cases let him) remember the duty (of honourable warriors).

94. But the (Kshatriya) who is slain in battle, while he turns back in fear, takes upon himself all the sin of his master, whatever (it may be);

95. And whatever merit (a man) who is slain in flight may have gained for the next (world), all that his master takes.

96. Chariots and horses, elephants, parasols, money, grain, cattle, women, all sorts of (marketable) goods and valueless metals belong to him who takes them (singly) conquering (the possessor).

97. A text of the Veda (declares) that (the soldiers) shall present a choice portion (of the booty) to the king; what has not been taken singly, must be distributed by the king among all the soldiers.

who has alighted on the ground,' i. e. 'while the assailant stands on his chariot.'

92. Medh. mentions a var. lect. bhagnam, 'who is broken' (?), for nagnam, 'who is naked.'

94-95. Yâgñ. I, 324.

96-97. Gaut. X, 20-23. •

97. According to the commentators the Vedic text alluded to is Aitareya-brâhmaṇa III, 21.

98. Thus has been declared the blameless, primeval law for warriors ; from this law a Kshatriya must not depart, when he strikes his foes in battle.

99. Let him strive to gain what he has not yet gained ; what he has gained let him carefully preserve ; let him augment what he preserves, and what he has augmented let him bestow on worthy men.

100. Let him know that these are the four means for securing the aims of human (existence) ; let him, without ever tiring, properly employ them.

101. What he has not (yet) gained, let him seek (to gain) by (his) army ; what he has gained, let him protect by careful attention ; what he has protected, let him augment by (various modes of) increasing it ; and what he has augmented, let him liberally bestow (on worthy men).

102. Let him be ever ready to strike, his prowess constantly displayed, and his secrets constantly concealed, and let him constantly explore the weaknesses of his foe.

103. Of him who is always ready to strike, the whole world stands in awe ; let him therefore make all creatures subject to himself even by the employment of force.

104. Let him ever act without guile, and on no

99. Yâgñ. I, 316 ; Vas. XVI, 6.

101. Medh., Gov., Râgh., Nand., and K. read at the end of the verse pâtreshu nikshipet, 'let him bestow on worthy recipients,' and this may have been Kull.'s reading too.

102. Nityam udyatadandaḥ syât, 'let him be always ready to strike' (Nâr., Nand.), means according to Medh., Gov., and Kull. 'let him keep his army always ready or exercised.'

104. I read with Gov., Nâr., Nand., Râgh., and K., susamvritaḥ, 'carefully guarding himself.' Medh. reads atandritaḥ, 'untired.'

account treacherously; carefully guarding himself, let him always fathom the treachery which his foes employ.

105. His enemy must not know his weaknesses, but he must know the weaknesses of his enemy; as the tortoise (hides its limbs), even so let him secure the members (of his government against treachery), let him protect his own weak points.

106. Let him plan his undertakings (patiently meditating) like a heron; like a lion, let him put forth his strength; like a wolf, let him snatch (his prey); like a hare, let him double in retreat.

107. When he is thus engaged in conquest, let him subdue all the opponents whom he may find, by the (four) expedients, conciliation and the rest.

108. If they cannot be stopped by the three first expedients, then let him, overcoming them by force alone, gradually bring them to subjection.

109. Among the four expedients, conciliation and the rest, the learned always recommend conciliation and (the employment of) force for the prosperity of kingdoms.

110. As the weeder plucks up the weeds and preserves the corn, even so let the king protect his kingdom and destroy his opponents.

111. That king who through folly rashly oppresses his kingdom, (will), together with his relatives, ere long be deprived of his life and of his kingdom.

112. As the lives of living creatures are destroyed by tormenting their bodies, even so the lives of kings are destroyed by their oppressing their kingdoms.

106. The position of the second and fourth clauses is interchanged according to Medh., Gov., Nand.

113. In governing his kingdom let him always observe the (following) rules; for a king who governs his kingdom well, easily prospers.

114. Let him place a company of soldiers, commanded (by a trusty officer), in the midst of two, three, five or hundreds of villages, (to be) a protection of the kingdom.

115. Let him appoint a lord over (each) village, as well as lords of ten villages, lords of twenty, lords of a hundred, and lords of a thousand.

116. The lord of one village himself shall inform the lord of ten villages of the crimes committed in his village, and the ruler of ten (shall make his report) to the ruler of twenty.

117. But the ruler of twenty shall report all such (matters) to the lord of a hundred, and the lord of a hundred shall himself give information to the lord of a thousand.

118. Those (articles) which the villagers ought to furnish daily to the king, such as food, drink, and fuel, the lord of one village shall obtain.

114. Kull. says, 'in the midst of two, three, or five hundred villages.' Nâr. remarks that the plural 'hundreds' is used in order to leave the number doubtful. It is, however, not impossible that here, as elsewhere in ancient Sanskrit, satânâm means 'a hundred.' Medh. explains saṃgraha, 'protection,' by 'an official,' or 'a royal granary.' Gov. states correctly that the pickets mentioned are the so-called Sthânakas, the Thânâs of modern India.

115-124. Âp. II, 26, 4-5; Vi. III, 7-15; Yâgyñ. I, 337.

116. The rule refers, as Medh., Gov., Kull., and Râgh. remark, to offences with which the persons who report them, are unable to deal. Nâr. thinks that chiefly refusals to pay the revenue or disputes on such matters are meant.

118. The lord of one village is apparently the modern Pâñil, the Pañakñla or Grâmakñla of the inscriptions, and the articles to be furnished to him the so-called 'haks.' The other officials correspond

119. The ruler of ten (villages) shall enjoy one kula (as much land as suffices for one family), the ruler of twenty five kulas, the superintendent of a hundred villages (the revenues of) one village, the lord of a thousand (the revenues of) a town.

120. The affairs of these (officials), which are connected with (their) villages and their separate business, another minister of the king shall inspect, (who must be) loyal and never remiss;

121. And in each town let him appoint one superintendent of all affairs, elevated in rank, formidable, (resembling) a planet among the stars.

122. Let that (man) always personally visit by turns all those (other officials); let him properly explore their behaviour in their districts through spies (appointed to) each.

123. For the servants of the king, who are appointed to protect (the people), generally become knaves who seize the property of others; let him protect his subjects against such (men).

124. Let the king confiscate the whole property of to the modern Naib-sûbâs, Sûbâs, or Mahâlkarîs, Mâmlatdârs, and so forth, and to the Vishayapatis, Râshtrapatis, Râgasthâniyas, &c. of the inscriptions.

119. Kulam, '(as much land as suffices for one) family,' is really a technical term which Medh. explains by ghanta, a term known 'in some districts.' Gov., Kull., Nâr., and Râgh. state that it is the double of a 'middling plough,' i.e. as much as can be cultivated with twelve oxen, while Nand. interprets it by 'the share of one cultivator.'

120. Nâr. explains prithakkâryâni, 'separate affairs,' by 'quarrels among each other;' Nand. by 'the separate affairs of the villagers.' Snigdha, 'loyal' (Kull., Râgh.), means according to Medh. 'impartial.'

121. Graham, 'a planet' (Kull., Râgh.), or 'the planet Mars' (Medh.), or 'the sun' (Gov.), or 'the moon' (Nâr.).

those (officials) who, evil-minded, may take money from suitors, and banish them.

125. For women employed in the royal service and for menial servants, let him fix a daily maintenance, in proportion to their position and to their work.

126. One pana must be given (daily) as wages to the lowest, six to the highest, likewise clothing every six months and one drona of grain every month.

127. Having well considered (the rates of) purchase and (of) sale, (the length of) the road, (the expense for) food and condiments, the charges of securing the goods, let the king make the traders pay duty.

128. After (due) consideration the king shall always fix in his realm the duties and taxes in such a manner that both he himself and the man who does the work receive (their due) reward.

129. As the leech, the calf, and the bee take their food little by little, even so must the king draw from his realm moderate annual taxes.

130. A fiftieth part of (the increments on) cattle

126. 'One pana;' see below, VIII, 136. 'A drona,' i.e. 'four âdhakas' (Medh., Kull., Râgh.), or '512 palas' (Gov.); see below, VIII, 135. Gov., Kull., Nâr., and Râgh. state that the highest servants shall receive six times as much grain and clothes as the lowest, and they add that the middle-class servants, of course, receive three times as much as the lowest.

127. 'The food and condiments,' i.e. 'what is consumed by the people employed by the merchants.' According to Kull. and Nâr., yoga means 'the net profits,' and kshema 'the charges for securing the goods against robbers and so forth.' According to Medh., Gov., and Râgh., the whole compound denotes the latter charges alone.

130-132. Âp. II, 26, 9; Gaut. X, 24-27; Vas. XIX, 26-27; Baudh. I, 18, 1, 13, 15; Vi. III, 22-25, 29-30.

and gold may be taken by the king, and the eighth, sixth, or twelfth part of the crops.

131. He may also take the sixth part of trees, meat, honey, clarified butter, perfumes, (medical) herbs, substances used for flavouring food, flowers, roots, and fruit ;

132. Of leaves, pot-herbs, grass, (objects) made of cane, skins, of earthen vessels, and all (articles) made of stone.

133. Though dying (with want), a king must not levy a tax on Srotriyas, and no Srotriya, residing in his kingdom, must perish from hunger.

134. The kingdom of that king, in whose dominions a Srotriya pines with hunger, will even, ere long, be afflicted by famine.

135. Having ascertained his learning in the Veda and (the purity of) his conduct, the king shall provide for him means of subsistence in accordance with the sacred law, and shall protect him in every way, as a father (protects) the lawful son of his body.

136. Whatever meritorious acts (such a Brâhmana) performs under the full protection of the king, thereby the king's length of life, wealth, and kingdom increase.

137. Let the king make the common inhabitants of his realm who live by traffic, pay annually some trifle, which is called a tax.

132. Medh. and Kull. add 'from the profits (made on the seventeen articles enumerated).'

133. Âp. II, 26, 10 ; 25, 11 ; Gaut. X, 9 ; Vas. XIX, 23 ; Vi. III, 26, 79.

135-136. Yâgñ. III, 44.

137. Prâthaggaṇam, 'the common inhabitants,' i.e. small dealers in vegetables, leaves, and so forth (Kull., Râgh.), or in cakes (Gov.).

138. Mechanics and artisans, as well as Sûdras who subsist by manual labour, he may cause to work (for himself) one (day) in each month.

139. Let him not cut up his own root (by levying no taxes), nor the root of other (men) by excessive greed; for by cutting up his own root (or theirs), he makes himself or them wretched.

140. Let the king, having carefully considered (each) affair, be both sharp and gentle; for a king who is both sharp and gentle is highly respected.

141. When he is tired with the inspection of the business of men, let him place on that seat (of justice) his chief minister, (who must be) acquainted with the law, wise, self-controlled, and descended from a (noble) family.

142. Having thus arranged all the affairs (of) his (government), he shall zealously and carefully protect his subjects.

143. That (monarch) whose subjects are carried off by robbers (Dasyu) from his kingdom, while they loudly call (for help), and he and his servants are (quietly) looking on, is a dead and not a living (king).

144. The highest duty of a Kshatriya is to protect his subjects, for the king who enjoys the rewards, just mentioned, is bound to (discharge that) duty.

145. Having risen in the last watch of the night, having performed (the rite of) personal purification,

138. Gaut. X, 31; Vas. XIX, 28; Vi. III, 32.

141. Vi. III, 73-74; Yâgñ. II, 1-3. Medh. reads sântam, 'of a tranquil disposition,' for prâgñam, 'wise.'

142-144. Âp. II, 10, 6; Gaut. X, 7-8; Vas. XIX, 1; Baudh. I, 18, 1; Vi. III, 1; Yâgñ. I, 334-335.

having, with a collected mind, offered oblations in the fire, and having worshipped Bráhmaṇas, he shall enter the hall of audience which must possess the marks (considered) auspicious (for a dwelling).

146. Tarrying there, he shall gratify all subjects (who come to see him by a kind reception) and afterwards dismiss them; having dismissed his subjects, he shall take counsel with his ministers.

147. Ascending the back of a hill or a terrace, (and) retiring (there) in a lonely place, or in a solitary forest, let him consult with them unobserved.

148. That king whose secret plans other people, (though) assembled (for the purpose), do not discover, (will) enjoy the whole earth, though he be poor in treasure.

149. At the time of consultation let him cause to be removed idiots, the dumb, the blind, and the deaf, animals, very aged men, women, barbarians, the sick, and those deficient in limbs.

150. (Such) despicable (persons), likewise animals, and particularly women betray secret council; for that reason he must be careful with respect to them.

151. At midday or at midnight, when his mental and bodily fatigues are over, let him deliberate, either with himself alone or with his (ministers), on virtue, pleasure, and wealth,

152. On (reconciling) the attainment of these

147-148. Yâgñ. I, 343.

147. Niśalâke, 'solitary' (Nâr., Kull., Râgh.), means according to Medh., Gov., and Nand. 'free from grass and so forth.'

149. 'Animals,' i.e. 'parrots, starlings, and other talking birds' (Kull., Gov., Râgh., Nand.), 'for such creatures divulge secret plans' (Medh.).

(aims) which are opposed to each other, on bestowing his daughters in marriage, and on keeping his sons (from harm),

153. On sending ambassadors, on the completion of undertakings (already begun), on the behaviour of (the women in) his harem, and on the doings of his spies.

154. On the whole eightfold business and the five classes (of spies), on the goodwill or enmity and the conduct of the circle (of neighbours he must) carefully (reflect).

155. On the conduct of the middlemost (prince), on the doings of him who seeks conquest, on the behaviour of the neutral (king), and (on that) of the foe (let him) sedulously (meditate).

154. 'The eightfold business' consists according to Medh. either of 'conciliation, division, employment of force, gifts,' or 'of agriculture, trade, building bridges and embankments, building fortresses or repairing them, catching elephants, digging mines, settling desert districts, cutting down forests,' or 'of collecting revenue, expenditure, dismissing bad servants, prohibiting bad conduct on the part of the castes and orders, deciding difficult points in one's own affairs, deciding legal cases, punishing, and imposing penances.' The second explanation, which is said to belong to Antaka (Yama), is adopted by Nand.; the third, which is taken from the Nītisāstra of Uśanas, by Gov., Kull., Nār., and Rāgh. 'The five classes (of spies),' i. e. 'kārpaṣika, a pilgrim or a rogue, an ascetic who has violated his vows, a distressed agriculturist, a decayed merchant, and a fictitious devotee' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Rāgh.). Nār. and Nand. explain pañṭavarga by 'the collection of the five (requisites for an undertaking).' Regarding 'the circle,' see the following verses.

155-159. Vi. III, 38; Yāgñ. I, 344.

155. 'The middlemost prince' is he whose territory lies between that of the king seeking conquest and that of his foe, and who, though unable to resist both, may become dangerous to them when they are at war with each other; see Kāmandaki, Nītisāra VIII, 18, which passage the commentators quote. 'The foe' may be of three

156. These (four) constituents (prakṛiti, form), briefly (speaking), the foundation of the circle (of neighbours); besides, eight others are enumerated (in the Institutes of Polity) and (thus) the (total) is declared to be twelve.

157. The minister, the kingdom, the fortress, the treasury, and the army are five other (constituent elements of the circle); for, these are mentioned in connexion with each (of the first twelve; thus the whole circle consists), briefly (speaking, of) seventy-two (constituent parts).

158. Let (the king) consider as hostile his immediate neighbour and the partisan of (such a) foe, as friendly the immediate neighbour of his foe, and as neutral (the king) beyond those two.

159. Let him overcome all of them by means of the (four) expedients, conciliation and the rest, (employed) either singly or conjointly, (or) by bravery and policy (alone).

160. Let him constantly think of the six measures of royal policy (guṇa, viz.) alliance, war, marching, halting, dividing the army, and seeking protection.

161. Having carefully considered the business (in hand), let him resort to sitting quiet or marching, kinds, 'natural,' 'artificial' (i. e. one who has a particular reason for his enmity), and 'an immediate neighbour' (see below, verse 158).

156. 'The eight other constituents' are according to Kāmandaki VIII, 16-17, (a) in front beyond the foe's territory, 1. a friend, 2. the foe's friend, 3. the friend's friend, 4. the foe's friend's friend; (b) in the rear, 1. he who attacks in the rear (pārshnigrāha), 2. he who restrains the latter (ākṛanda), 3, 4. the supporters of these two. All the commentators except Medh. quote Kāmandaki more or less correctly. Kāmandaki VIII, 24 states that this doctrine, with respect to the constituent parts of the system of states which requires the attention of each king, is peculiar to the Mānavas.

160-161. Vi. III, 39; Yāgñ. I, 345-346.

[25]

R

alliance or war, dividing his forces or seeking protection (as the case may require).

162. But the king must know that there are two kinds of alliances and of wars, (likewise two) of both marching and sitting quiet, and two (occasions for) seeking protection.

163. An alliance which yields present and future advantages, one must know to be of two descriptions, (viz.) that when one marches together (with an ally) and the contrary (when the allies act separately).

164. War is declared to be of two kinds, (viz.) that which is undertaken in season or out of season, by oneself and for one's own purposes, and (that waged to avenge) an injury done to a friend.

165. Marching (to attack) is said to be twofold, (viz. that undertaken) by one alone when an urgent matter has suddenly arisen, and (that undertaken) by one allied with a friend.

163. Medh. proposes besides the explanation given above another, 'An alliance one must know to be of two kinds, (viz.) that where (the allies) share the danger and the fruits of the expedition and the contrary' (yânaphalasahitau gakkhâvaḥ samânaphalabhâgitayâ na ka tvayâham uttambhanîyo yatnato lipsite tatas tava bhâgo bhavishyati). Nâr. thinks that the adjective tadâtvyâtisamyuktaḥ, too, refers to two different cases, and means 'which yields either immediate or future advantages.' Nand. adopts the latter view as well as Medh.'s second explanation of the first part of the verse.

164. Regarding the expression 'in season,' see below, verse 182. Medh. takes 'out of season' with the second clause, 'and (that waged) out of season (in order to avenge) an injury done to a friend.' He also mentions a var. lect. mitrenâpakrîte (which Gov. has adopted), with the following explanation, 'and that waged out of season when the enemy has been weakened by an ally.' Gov. agrees with this latter view except that he takes akâle with the first clause. The other commentators give the explanation adopted in the translation.

166. Sitting quiet is stated to be of two kinds, (viz. that incumbent) on one who has gradually been weakened by fate or in consequence of former acts, and (that) in favour of a friend.

167. If the army stops (in one place) and its master (in another) in order to effect some purpose, that is called by those acquainted with the virtues of the measures of royal policy, the twofold division of the forces.

168. Seeking refuge is declared to be of two kinds, (first) for the purpose of attaining an advantage when one is harassed by enemies, (secondly) in order to become known among the virtuous (as the protégé of a powerful king).

169. When (the king) knows (that) at some future time his superiority (is) certain, and (that) at the time present (he will suffer) little injury, then let him have recourse to peaceful measures.

170. But when he thinks all his subjects to be

166. Pûrvakṛitena, 'in consequence of former acts,' i.e. 'in consequence of acts committed in a former existence, or in consequence of former imprudence' (Medh., Gov., Kull.). Nand. and Râgh. give only the second explanation; Nâr. says 'by an enemy whom he formerly made.'

167. The text really mentions only one method of 'division.' Hence Medh. thinks that, in order to obtain the two kinds required, it must be understood that the measure may be resorted to either for one's own sake or for the sake of somebody else. Nâr. makes the two methods out by supposing that in the one case the army stops in front of the enemy under the command of a general, while the king marches with a portion of his forces, and that in the other case the contrary takes place. Gov., after giving the explanation adopted in the translation, quotes Kâmandaki, Nitisâra XI, 24, where a different meaning, 'duplicity,' is attributed to the term dvaidhîbhâva. Nand.'s whole explanation consists of this quotation.

170. I read with all the commentators and K., prahrîshâ instead of prakṛîshâ (editions).

exceedingly contented, and (that he) himself (is) most exalted (in power), then let him make war.

171. When he knows his own army to be cheerful in disposition and strong, and (that) of his enemy the reverse, then let him march against his foe.

172. But if he is very weak in chariots and beasts of burden and in troops, then let him carefully sit quiet, gradually conciliating his foes.

173. When the king knows the enemy to be stronger in every respect, then let him divide his army and thus achieve his purpose.

174. But when he is very easily assailable by the forces of the enemy, then let him quickly seek refuge with a righteous, powerful king.

175. That (prince) who will coerce both his (disloyal) subjects and the army of the foe, let him ever serve with every effort like a Guru.

176. When, even in that (condition), he sees (that) evil is caused by (such) protection, let him without hesitation have recourse to war.

177. By all (the four) expedients a politic prince must arrange (matters so) that neither friends, nor neutrals, nor foes are superior to himself.

178. Let him fully consider the future and the immediate results of all undertakings, and the good and bad sides of all past (actions).

179. He who knows the good and the evil (which will result from his acts) in the future, is quick in forming resolutions for the present, and understands the consequences of past (actions), will not be conquered.

176. I read with Gov. and K. sa yuddham instead of suyuddham (Medh., Kull., Râgh., Nand.), 'let him fight bravely.'

180. Let him arrange everything in such a manner that no ally, no neutral or foe may injure him; that is the sum of political wisdom.

181. But if the king undertakes an expedition against a hostile kingdom, then let him gradually advance, in the following manner, against his foe's capital.

182. Let the king undertake his march in the fine month Mārgaśīrsha, or towards the months of Phālguna and Kāitra, according to the (condition of his) army.

183. Even at other times, when he has a certain prospect of victory, or when a disaster has befallen his foe, he may advance to attack him.

184. But having duly arranged (all affairs) in his original (kingdom) and what relates to the expedition, having secured a basis (for his operations) and having duly dispatched his spies;

185. Having cleared the three kinds of roads, and (having made) his sixfold army (efficient), let him leisurely proceed in the manner prescribed for warfare against the enemy's capital.

182. Vi. III, 40; Yāgñ. I, 347. 'Fine,' i. e. 'when fodder and grain are abundant and the roads dry' (Gov., Kull., Rāgh.). Mārgaśīrsha, i. e. November–December; Phālguna, i. e. February–March; Kāitra, i. e. March–April.

184. 'Having secured a basis (for his operations),' i. e. 'having won over the servants of his foe who may be at enmity with their master' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Rāgh.), or 'having established a camp in the country which he intends to attack' (Nār.).

185. 'The three kinds of roads,' i. e. 'through the open country, through marshy ground or such as is cut by watercourses, and through forests' (gāṅgalānūpāṭavika), (Medh., Gov., Kull., Rāgh., Nand.). Nār. gives the same explanation, but adds that the proper interpretation is 'through villages, forests, and hills.' 'The sixfold army,' i. e. consisting of 'elephants, horses, chariots, infantry, the

186. Let him be very much on his guard against a friend who secretly serves the enemy and against (deserters) who return (from the enemy's camp); for such (men are) the most dangerous foes.

187. Let him march on his road, arraying (his troops) like a staff (i.e. in an oblong), or like a waggon (i.e. in a wedge), or like a boar (i.e. in a rhombus), or like a Makara (i.e. in two triangles, with the apices joined), or like a pin (i.e. in a long line), or like a Garuḍa (i.e. in a rhomboid with far-extended wings).

188. From whatever (side) he apprehends danger, in that (direction) let him extend his troops, and let him always himself encamp in an array, shaped like a lotus.

189. Let him allot to the commander-in-chief, to the (subordinate) general, (and to the superior officers) places in all directions, and let him turn his front in that direction whence he fears danger.

general, and workmen' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.). Medh. adds that some name as the fifth component 'the treasury,' and that others explain the term by 'the sixfold division, mentioned by Kâmandi,' Nītisâra XVI, 6. The latter view is adopted by Nand. Nâr. enumerates besides elephants, horses, chariots, and infantry, the riders on elephants and sâstropāyâkas (?).

187. The details regarding the various ways of arranging the troops are found in the Kâmandaki, Nītisâra XIX.

188. My translation of the last clause follows Gov., Nâr., and Râgh. Medh. says that the king shall leave the town with his army in the lotus-array, and Kull. speaks of a 'feigned encampment' (kapaṭanivesanaṁ kuryât). The lotus-array is stated to be 'equally extended on all sides and perfectly circular, the centre being occupied by the king.'

189. Medh. remarks that, as the subordinate general and the commander-in-chief are only two persons, they cannot possibly be stationed 'in all directions,' as the text prescribes, and that hence their servants (i.e. the superior officers) must also be intended.

190. On all sides let him place troops of soldiers, on whom he can rely, with whom signals have been arranged, who are expert both in sustaining a charge and in charging, fearless and loyal.

191. Let him make a small number of soldiers fight in close order, at his pleasure let him extend a large number in loose ranks; or let him make them fight, arranging (a small number) in the needle-array, (and a large number) in the thunderbolt-array.

192. On even ground let him fight with chariots and horses, in water-bound places with boats and elephants, on (ground) covered with trees and shrubs with bows, on hilly ground with swords, targets, (and other) weapons.

193. (Men born in) Kurukshetra, Matsyas, Pañ~~ā~~ālas, and those born in Sūrasena, let him cause to fight in the van of the battle, as well as (others who are) tall and light.

194. After arranging his troops, he should encourage them (by an address) and carefully inspect them; he should also mark the behaviour (of the soldiers) when they engage the enemy.

195. When he has shut up his foe (in a town), let him sit encamped, harass his kingdom, and continually spoil his grass, food, fuel, and water.

190. Nār. explains gurmān, 'troops of soldiers,' by gurmadesasthān, '(soldiers) standing in thickets' (?).

192. Sthale, 'on hilly ground' (nimnonnate, Rāgh.), means according to Medh., Gov., and Kull. 'on ground free from stones, trees, creepers, thorns, pits, and the like.'

193. Kurukshetra, i. e. the neighbourhood of Delhi; Matsyas, i. e. the inhabitants of Bairāṭa or Vairāṭa, north of Jepur (Bhogapure, Medh.); Pañālas, i. e. the inhabitants of Kānyakubga (Kanog); Sūrasenas, i. e. the inhabitants of the country near Mathurā (Ahiṭātra, Gov.).

196. Likewise let him destroy the tanks, ramparts, and ditches, and let him assail the (foe unawares) and alarm him at night.

197. Let him instigate to rebellion those who are open to such instigations, let him be informed of his (foe's) doings, and, when fate is propitious, let him fight without fear, trying to conquer.

198. He should (however) try to conquer his foes by conciliation, by (well-applied) gifts, and by creating dissension, used either separately or conjointly, never by fighting, (if it can be avoided.)

199. For when two (princes) fight, victory and defeat in the battle are, as experience teaches, uncertain; let him therefore avoid an engagement.

200. (But) if even those three before-mentioned expedients fail, then let him, duly exerting himself, fight in such a manner that he may completely conquer his enemies.

201. When he has gained victory, let him duly worship the gods and honour righteous Brâhmanas, let him grant exemptions, and let him cause promises of safety to be proclaimed.

201-205. Vi. III, 47-49; Yâgñ. I, 342, 348-351.

201. 'The gods,' i.e. of the conquered country. Parihârân, 'exemptions,' i.e. 'from taxes and dues for a year or two' (Medh., Nand.), means according to Gov. 'gifts to Srotriyas and others' (srotriyâdigatâvasyadâneshu mayaitad anugñâtam ity evam); according to Kull. 'gifts to gods and Brâhmanas;' according to Nâr. 'Agrahâras or villages presented to Brâhmanas;' according to Râgh. 'gifts of clothes and ornaments to the inhabitants.' The term parihâra occurs very frequently in the inscriptions (see e.g. Arch. Reports of Western India, vol. iv, p. 104 seq.), and means, as the details adduced there show, 'exemption from taxes and payments as well as other immunities.' These parihâras were regularly attached to all grants to Brâhmanas or temples. In our passage a general temporary remission of the taxes is probably intended.

202. But having fully ascertained the wishes of all the (conquered), let him place there a relative of the (vanquished ruler on the throne), and let him impose his conditions.

203. Let him make authoritative the lawful (customs) of the (inhabitants), just as they are stated (to be), and let him honour the (new king) and his chief servants with precious gifts.

204. The seizure of desirable property which causes displeasure, and its distribution which causes pleasure, are both recommendable, (if they are) resorted to at the proper time.

205. All undertakings (in) this (world) depend both on the ordering of fate and on human exertion ; but among these two (the ways of) fate are unfathomable ; in the case of man's work action is possible.

206. Or (the king, bent on conquest), considering a friend, gold, and land (to be) the triple result (of an expedition), may, using diligent care, make peace with (his foe) and return (to his realm).

207. Having paid due attention to any king in the circle (of neighbouring states) who might attack him in the rear, and to his supporter who opposes

205. Yâgñ. I, 348. 'Action,' i. e. 'careful investigation,' hence one should strive to attain one's ends by exertion (Gov., Kull.), or 'remedial action' (pratikriyâ, Nâr.), or 'an effort' (purushakâra, Râgh.). Nand. takes the last clause differently, 'if there is a human effort, the action of fate takes place' (mânushe purushakâre sati daivasya kriyâ vidyate).

206. According to Gov., Kull., and Nâr. the meaning is that, if the foe is willing to make an alliance, to pay tribute, and to cede some territory, the king, bent on conquest, may also make peace with him without actually fighting and return home. In the MSS. of Medh. this and the next verses down to verse 211 are wanting, and the commentary on verse 211 is partly given.

207. The meaning of the verse is according to Gov., Kull., and the latter, let (the conqueror) secure the fruit of the expedition from (the prince whom he attacks), whether (he may have become) friendly or (remained) hostile.

208. By gaining gold and land a king grows not so much in strength as by obtaining a firm friend, (who), though weak, (may become) powerful in the future.

209. A weak friend (even) is greatly commended, who is righteous (and) grateful, whose people are contented, who is attached and persevering in his undertakings.

210. The wise declare him (to be) a most dangerous foe, who is wise, of noble race, brave, clever, liberal, grateful, and firm.

211. Behaviour worthy of an Âryan, knowledge of men, bravery, a compassionate disposition, and great liberality are the virtues of a neutral (who may be courted).

212. Let the king, without hesitation, quit for his own sake even a country (which is) salubrious, fertile, and causing an increase of cattle.

Râgh. that the king, bent on conquest, shall secure his back before he undertakes an expedition. The prince immediately in his rear, who in the terms of the Nîti is called the pârshnigrâha, 'the heel-catcher,' may be supposed to be hostile to him and may be expected to invade his territory during his absence. It is, therefore, essential for the conqueror either to settle matters with him beforehand, or to secure the support of the next neighbour of the pârshnigrâha, who is technically called the âkranda and may be supposed to be inclined to check the pârshnigrâha.

208. Yâgñ. I, 351.

211. Sthaulalakshyam, 'great liberality' (Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand.), is explained, as Kull. asserts, by Medh. and Gov. 'being not sharp-sighted.' The Government copy of Gov. has, however, just the contrary, sûkshmadarsitvam. Medh.'s explanation is not decipherable.

213. For times of need let him preserve his wealth; at the expense of his wealth let him preserve his wife; let him at all events preserve himself even by (giving up) his wife and his wealth.

214. A wise (king), seeing that all kinds of misfortunes violently assail him at the same time, should try all (the four) expedients, be it together or separately, (in order to save himself.)

215. On the person who employs the expedients, on the business to be accomplished, and on all the expedients collectively, on these three let him ponder and strive to accomplish his ends.

216. Having thus consulted with his ministers on all these (matters), having taken exercise, and having bathed afterwards, the king may enter the harem at midday in order to dine.

217. There he may eat food, (which has been prepared) by faithful, incorruptible (servants) who know the (proper) time (for dining), which has been well examined (and hallowed) by sacred texts that destroy poison.

218. Let him mix all his food with medicines (that are) antidotes against poison, and let him always be careful to wear gems which destroy poison.

215. 'The person who employs the expedients,' i.e. 'himself' (Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.); 'his minister or the like' (Nand.). Âsritya, 'let him ponder on' (manasâ balâbalâdîdvârâ nîskitya, Nâr., Râgh.), means according to Medh., Gov., Kull. 'let him depend on.'

217-220. Vi. III, 85, 87-88; Yâgñ. I, 326.

218. Medh., Gov., Nâr., and Nand. read negayet, and Râgh. so-dhayet, 'let him purify,' instead of yogayet (Kull., K.), 'let him mix.' Nâr. explains niyataḥ (Medh., Nâr., Râgh.) or prayataḥ, 'careful' (yatnavân, Gov., Kull., Râgh.), by 'being pure.'

219. Well-trying females whose toilet and ornaments have been examined, shall attentively serve him with fans, water, and perfumes.

220. In like manner let him be careful about his carriages, bed, seat, bath, toilet, and all his ornaments.

221. When he has dined, he may divert himself with his wives in the harem; but when he has diverted himself, he must, in due time, again think of the affairs of state.

222. Adorned (with his robes of state), let him again inspect his fighting men, all his chariots and beasts of burden, the weapons and accoutrements.

223. Having performed his twilight-devotions, let him, well armed, hear in an inner apartment the doings of those who make secret reports and of his spies.

224. But going to another secret apartment and dismissing those people, he may enter the harem, surrounded by female (servants), in order to dine again.

225. Having eaten there something for the second time, and having been recreated by the sound of music, let him go to rest and rise at the proper time free from fatigue.

226. A king who is in good health must observe these rules; but, if he is indisposed, he may entrust all this (business) to his servants.

223. Yâgñ. I, 329. 'Of those who make secret reports,' i. e. 'of the ministers and the rest' (Nâr.), or 'of citizens who may have come' (Medh.).

225. Yâgñ. I, 330. 'Something,' i. e. 'not too much.'

CHAPTER VIII.

1. A king, desirous of investigating law cases, must enter his court of justice, preserving a dignified demeanour, together with Brâhmaṇas and with experienced councillors.

2. There, either seated or standing, raising his right arm, without ostentation in his dress and ornaments, let him examine the business of suitors,

3. Daily (deciding) one after another (all cases) which fall under the eighteen titles (of the law) according to principles drawn from local usages and from the Institutes of the sacred law.

4. Of those (titles) the first is the non-payment of debts, (then follow), (2) deposit and pledge, (3) sale without ownership, (4) concerns among partners, and (5) resumption of gifts,

5. (6) Non-payment of wages, (7) non-performance of agreements, (8) rescission of sale and purchase, (9) disputes between the owner (of cattle) and his servants,

6. (10) Disputes regarding boundaries, (11) assault and (12) defamation, (13) theft, (14) robbery and violence, (15) adultery,

VIII. 1. Vi. III, 72; Yâgñ. I, 359; II, 1; Gaut. XIII, 26; Vas. XVI, 2.

2. 'Standing,' i.e. 'in important cases' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.). 'Raising his right arm,' i.e. 'keeping it uncovered' (Nâr., Nand., Râgh., Gov.). Regarding the meaning of the action, see above, IV, 58.

3. Gaut. XI, 19-24; Vas. XVI, 4-5. 'Local usages,' i.e. 'the law of custom which is not opposed to the Sâstras' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr.).

4. 'Non-payment of debts' (rinasya adânam, Nâr., Nand.) may also be translated 'recovery of debts' (rinasya âdânam).

7. (16) Duties of man and wife, (17) partition (of inheritance), (18) gambling and betting; these are in this world the eighteen topics which give rise to lawsuits.

8. Depending on the eternal law, let him decide the suits of men who mostly contend on the titles just mentioned.

9. But if the king does not personally investigate the suits, then let him appoint a learned Brāhmaṇa to try them.

10. That (man) shall enter that most excellent court, accompanied by three assessors, and fully consider (all) causes (brought) before the (king), either sitting down or standing.

11. Where three Brāhmaṇas versed in the Vedas and the learned (judge) appointed by the king sit down, they call that the court of (four-faced) Brahman.

12. But where justice, wounded by injustice, approaches and the judges do not extract the dart, there (they also) are wounded (by that dart of injustice).

13. Either the court must not be entered, or the truth must be spoken; a man who either says nothing or speaks falsely, becomes sinful.

7. Vyavahârasthitau, 'which give rise to lawsuits' (Gov.), means according to Nâr. 'in deciding lawsuits.'

8. The word 'mostly' is intended to show that there are other titles besides, as Nârada declared (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). Nand. omits this verse.

9. Vi. III, 73; Yâgyñ. II, 3; Gaut. XIII, 26; Vas. XVI, 2.

10. Medh. says 'by (at least) three assessors.'

13. 'Must not be entered,' i.e. 'for the purpose of deciding causes' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.). But the further details show that the verse is intended as a general maxim, applicable to witnesses also.

14. Where justice is destroyed by injustice, or truth by falsehood, while the judges look on, there they shall also be destroyed.

15. 'Justice, being violated, destroys; justice, being preserved, preserves: therefore justice must not be violated, lest violated justice destroy us.'

16. For divine justice (is said to be) a bull (vrisha); that (man) who violates it (kurute 'lam) the gods consider to be (a man despicable like) a Sûdra (vrishala); let him, therefore, beware of violating justice.

17. The only friend who follows men even after death is justice; for everything else is lost at the same time when the body (perishes).

18. One quarter of (the guilt of) an unjust (decision) falls on him who committed (the crime), one quarter on the (false) witness, one quarter on all the judges, one quarter on the king.

19. But where he who is worthy of condemnation is condemned, the king is free from guilt, and the judges are saved (from sin); the guilt falls on the perpetrator (of the crime alone).

20. A Brâhmana who subsists only by the name of his caste (gâti), or one who merely calls himself a Brâhmana (though his origin be uncertain), may, at the king's pleasure, interpret the law to him, but never a Sûdra.

15. This admonition must be addressed by the assessors to a judge who acts against the law (Gov., Kull., Râgh.). Nand. reads vañ, 'you,' instead of nañ, 'us.'

18. Gaut. XIII, 11; Baudh. I, 19, 8. Sabhâsadañ, 'the judges,' means according to Gov. 'all those in court who look on.' The judge and his assessors are, however, the persons really intended.

20. 'One who subsists only by the name of his caste,' i.e. 'a man of Brâhmana descent, who neither studies nor performs any other

21. The kingdom of that monarch, who looks on while a Sûdra settles the law, will sink (low), like a cow in a morass.

22. That kingdom where Sûdras are very numerous, which is infested by atheists and destitute of twice-born (inhabitants), soon entirely perishes, afflicted by famine and disease.

23. Having occupied the seat of justice, having covered his body, and having worshipped the guardian deities of the world, let him, with a collected mind, begin the trial of causes.

24. Knowing what is expedient or inexpedient, what is pure justice or injustice, let him examine the causes of suitors according to the order of the castes (varṇa).

act required by the sacred law' (Kull., Râgh.), or 'one who has not been initiated' (Nâr.). Brâhmaṇabruvāṭi, 'one who merely calls himself a Brâhmaṇa (though his origin be doubtful,' Kull., Râgh.), means according to Nâr. 'an initiated Brâhmaṇa who does not study the Veda.' Medh. and Gov. take the two terms as referring to one person only, 'Even a despicable Brâhmaṇa, who subsists merely by the name of his race,' i. e. neither studies the Veda, nor performs the rites, &c. The commentators point out that, as the employment of a Sûdra is emphatically forbidden, Kshatriyas and Vairyas may be employed in cases of necessity.

22. Sûdrabhûyishāṁ, 'where Sûdras are very numerous' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), means according to Medh. 'where Sûdras mostly decide the law-cases,' according to Nand. 'where Sûdras are mostly employed in high offices.' Nâr. adds that each of the blemishes enumerated is sufficient to cause destruction.

24. Medh. and Râgh. give another optional explanation of the participial clause, 'Understanding that pure justice secures advantages and mere injustice disadvantages.' According to Kull. it means 'Knowing what is expedient and what inexpedient, but paying attention to justice and injustice alone.' Nâr. and Nand. give still more unacceptable interpretations. Gov., who considers the explanation adopted above the only correct one, explains 'what is expedient' by 'what will please the people,' and 'what is inex-

25. By external signs let him discover the internal disposition of men, by their voice, their colour, their motions, their aspect, their eyes, and their gestures.

26. The internal (working of the) mind is perceived through the aspect, the motions, the gait, the gestures, the speech, and the changes in the eye and of the face.

27. The king shall protect the inherited (and other) property of a minor, until he has returned (from his teacher's house) or until he has passed his minority.

28. In like manner care must be taken of barren women, of those who have no sons, of those whose family is extinct, of wives and widows faithful to their lords, and of women afflicted with diseases.

pedient' by 'what will make them angry;' Kull. and Râgh. by 'what will protect the people' and 'what will destroy them.'

25-26. Yâgñ. II, 15.

25. Gov. omits svara, 'voice,' and writes mukha, 'by the colour of the face.' Îṅgita, 'motions,' i. e. 'trembling, horripilation, &c.' (Medh., Gov., Râgh.), or 'looking down, &c.' (Kull.), or 'unintentionally moving the arms, &c.' (Nâr.). Âkâra, 'aspect,' i. e. 'pallor, &c.' (Gov.), or 'sweating, horripilation, &c.' (Kull., Nâr.). Medh. and Râgh. take âkâra to mean 'the manner' of the voice, &c., not as a separate class of signs. Keshhita, 'gestures,' i. e. 'moving, wringing the hands, &c.' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'intentional movements' (Nâr.).

27-29. Gaut. X, 48; Vas. XVI, 8; Vi. III, 65.

27. 'The minority ends with the sixteenth year' (Kull., Nâr.); see Nârada III, 37. The second term is intended to provide for the case of those who finish their Veda-study before the sixteenth year (Medh., Kull.), or of Sûdras (Medh.).

28. 'Those whose family is extinct,' i. e. 'maidens in that condition' (Gov.), or 'those who have quitted their families and become harlots' (Medh. 'others'). 'Wives faithful to their lords,' i. e. 'those whose husbands are absent' (Gov., Râgh.). The conditions

29. A righteous king must punish like thieves those relatives who appropriate the property of such females during their lifetime.

30. Property, the owner of which has disappeared, the king shall cause to be kept as a deposit during three years; within the period of three years the owner may claim it, after (that term) the king may take it.

31. He who says, 'This belongs to me,' must be examined according to the rule; if he accurately describes the shape, and the number (of the articles found) and so forth, (he is) the owner, (and) ought (to receive) that property.

32. But if he does not really know the time and the place (where it was) lost, its colour, shape, and size, he is worthy of a fine equal (in value) to the (object claimed).

33. Now the king, remembering the duty of good men, may take one-sixth part of property lost and afterwards found, or one-tenth, or at least one-twelfth.

of the king's protection are in every case that the relatives are either dead or unable to provide for the females or try to oppress them.

30-34. Âp. II, 28, 7-9; Gaut. X, 36-38; Vas. XVI, 20; Yâgñ. II, 33.

30. 'Property the owner of which has disappeared' means according to the commentators, 'property, found by the royal servants (in a forest or elsewhere, Medh.), the owner of which is not known.' Such property shall be proclaimed by beat of drum (Gov., Kull.). 'Others,' quoted by Medh., think that after three years the king may use it as his own, but has still to restore it, if the owner appears. Nand. points out that the rule does not refer to Brâhmanical property (see Gaut. loc. cit.).

33. The amount to be taken by the king depends according to Medh. on the length of time for which it has been kept (so also

34. Property lost and afterwards found (by the king's servants) shall remain in the keeping of (special) officials; those whom the king may convict of stealing it, he shall cause to be slain by an elephant.

35. From that man who shall truly say with respect to treasure-trove, 'This belongs to me,' the king may take one-sixth or one-twelfth part.

36. But he who falsely says (so), shall be fined in one-eighth of his property, or, a calculation of (the value of) the treasure having been made, in some smaller portion (of that).

37. When a learned Brâhmaṇa has found treasure, deposited in former (times), he may take even the whole (of it); for he is master of everything.

38. When the king finds treasure of old concealed in the ground, let him give one half to Brâhmaṇas and place the (other) half in his treasury.

39. The king obtains one half of ancient hoards and metals (found) in the ground, by reason of Râgh.), or on the trouble which it gave (so also Gov.) and the king's compassion; according to Kull. and Nâr., on the virtues of the owner. Medh. places this verse after verse 34.

35-39. Gaut. X, 43-45; Vas. III, 13-14; Vi. III, 56-64; Yâgñ. II, 34-35.

35. 'Treasure-trove,' i.e. 'valuables secretly buried in the ground' (Medh.). The amount to be taken depends on the 'virtues' of the finder (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or on his caste (Nâr.), or on the place and time, the caste, &c. (Gov.).

36. The amount of the fine depends on the circumstances of the case or the 'virtues' of the offender (Medh.), or on the 'virtues' of the offender alone (Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

37. Medh., Gov., Nâr. take, as Kull. points out, most improperly pûrvopanīhitam, 'deposited in former times,' to mean 'deposited by his ancestors.' The parallel passages of Vishṇu and others are perfectly clear on the point.

39. I take the last clause, which might also be translated '(and)

(his giving) protection, (and) because he is the lord of the soil.

40. Property stolen by thieves must be restored by the king to (men of) all castes (varṇa); a king who uses such (property) for himself incurs the guilt of a thief.

41. (A king) who knows the sacred law, must inquire into the laws of castes (gâti), of districts, of guilds, and of families, and (thus) settle the peculiar law of each.

42. For men who follow their particular occupations and abide by their particular duty, become dear to people, though they may live at a distance.

43. Neither the king nor any servant of his shall because he is the lord of the earth,' as a distinct recognition of the principle that the ownership of all land is vested in the king. Medh. says, 'he is the lord of the soil (bhûmi); it is just that a share should be given to him of that which is found in the soil belonging to him (tadiyâyâ bhuvo yallabdham).'

40. Âp. II, 26, 8; Gaut. X, 46-47; Vi. III, 66-67; Yâgñ. II, 36. I.e. 'if he recovers it' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand.). Medh. reads kaurîhrîtam, and mentions another reading, kaurahrîtam, which Râgh. has, and thinks that it may mean that the king must make good stolen property which is not recovered.

41. Âp. II, 15, 1; Gaut. XI, 20; Vas. XIX, 7; Baudh. I, 2, 1-8; Vi. III, 3; Yâgñ. I, 360. Gâti, 'castes,' i.e. 'Brâhmanas and so forth' (Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand.). Gânapada, 'the laws of districts, e.g. of the Kuru, Kâsi or Kâsmîra countries' (Medh.), or 'of certain districts' (desa, Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'of the inhabitants of one and the same village' (Nâr.). Medh. gives also other explanations of the compound gâtigânapadân, 'of local castes' or 'natives of different countries.' Sreni, 'guilds,' i.e. 'of merchants, &c.' (Medh. Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), or 'of merchants and husbandmen, &c.' (Gov.), or 'of merchants and actors, &c.' (Nand.). Râgh. reads paripâlayet, 'and protect the peculiar law of each.' It must, of course, be understood that the customs are not opposed to the sacred law (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

43. Gaut. XIII, 27. '(Some) other (man),' i.e. 'the plaintiff' themselves cause a lawsuit to be begun, or hush up one that has been brought (before them) by (some) other (man).

44. As a hunter traces the lair of a (wounded) deer by the drops of blood, even so the king shall discover on which side the right lies, by inferences (from the facts).

45. When engaged in judicial proceedings he must pay full attention to the truth, to the object (of the dispute), (and) to himself, next to the witnesses, to the place, to the time, and to the aspect.

46. What may have been practised by the virtuous, by such twice-born men as are devoted to the law, that he shall establish as law, if it be not

(Medh.), or 'the plaintiff or the defendant' (Kull.), or 'any suitor.' 'Others' explain the second half of the verse according to Medh., as follows, 'and let him not appropriate money brought to him in any other manner than for the suit.'

44. Thus Kull. and Râgh. But Medh. and Gov. take the verse a little differently, 'As the hunter tracks the steps of (a wounded) deer,' &c.

45. 'The truth,' i. e. 'removing all fraud' (Kull., Râgh.), or 'what portion (of this suit) is based on truth' (Nâr., Nand.). Artham, 'the object of the dispute,' i. e. 'if it be not too insignificant, in which case the plaint must not be accepted' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.). Nâr. explains artha by 'the money realised by a fine and the like,' Nand. by 'the aim.' 'Himself,' i. e. 'that he will obtain heaven by a just decision' (Kull., Râgh.). 'The place and the time,' i. e. 'what is befitting the place and the time' (Kull.), or 'the place, e. g. Banâras, and the time (e. g. of a famine) where and when the offence has been committed, and which may make the case lighter or heavier' (Medh., Râgh.), or 'the customs of the country and what is befitting the time' (Nâr.), or 'the place where the offence was committed and the age of the offender' (Gov.). Rûpam, 'the aspect,' i. e. 'the nature of the object' (Medh., Nand.), or 'the nature of the case' (Kull.), or 'the looks of the parties' (Medh. 'others,' Gov., Nâr., Râgh.).

46. Thus Kull., Nâr., Râgh., and Nand. But Medh. takes the verse differently, 'What has been practised by the virtuous and by opposed to the (customs of) countries, families, and castes (gâti).

47. When a creditor sues (before the king) for the recovery of money from a debtor, let him make the debtor pay the sum which the creditor proves (to be due).

48. By whatever means a creditor may be able to obtain possession of his property, even by those means may he force the debtor and make him pay.

49. By moral suasion, by suit of law, by artful management, or by the customary proceeding, a creditor may recover property lent; and fifthly, by force.

50. A creditor who himself recovers his property from his debtor, must not be blamed by the king for retaking what is his own.

51. But him who denies a debt which is proved by good evidence, he shall order to pay that debt twice-born men . . . that he shall establish as law for countries, families, and castes, if it is not opposed (to texts of the Sruti and Smṛiti).’ Gov. reads anurûpam, ‘conform with,’ instead of avirudham, ‘not opposed,’ and seems to agree with Medh. He says, ‘And thus let him punish in lawsuits the litigant who acts in a contrary manner; and as here the phrase “what is practised by the virtuous” is used, this (rule) must refer to good conduct.’ But the rule, given in verse 41, must refer to laws other than ‘(those relating to) good conduct.’

49. Vyavahâreṇa, ‘by suit of law’ (Gov., Kull., Nâr.), or ‘by threatening a lawsuit’ (Nand.), or ‘by forced labour’ (Medh.), or ‘by a forcible sale of property’ (Râgh.). Âkârita, ‘the customary proceeding,’ i. e. ‘by killing one’s wife, children, and cattle, and sitting at the debtor’s door.’ Bṛihaspati, quoted by Kull. and Râgh., or ‘by fasting’ (Gov.), or ‘by the creditor’s starving himself to death’ (Nâr.). This custom corresponds to the so-called prâyopavesana, or Dharma, and to the Traga of the bards.

50. Vi. VI, 19; Yâgyñ. II, 40.

51. ‘In this case self-help must not be used’ (Medh.). Regarding the amount of the fine, see below, verse 139.

to the creditor and a small fine according to his circumstances.

52. On the denial (of a debt) by a debtor who has been required in court to pay it, the complainant must call (a witness) who was present (when the loan was made), or adduce other evidence.

53. (The plaintiff) who calls a witness not present at the transaction, who retracts his statements, or does not perceive that his statements (are) confused or contradictory ;

54. Or who having stated what he means to prove afterwards varies (his case), or who being questioned on a fact duly stated by himself does not abide by it ;

55. Or who converses with the witnesses in a place improper for such conversation ; or who declines to answer a question, properly put, or leaves (the court) ;

56. Or who, being ordered to speak, does not answer, or does not prove what he has alleged ; or who does not know what is the first (point), and what the second, fails in his suit.

57. Him also who says 'I have witnesses,' and,

52. Instead of desyam, '(a witness) who was present (when the loan was made,' K., Râgh., Kull.), Medh., Gov., Nâr., and Nand. read desam, '(must point out) the place.'

53-56. Yâgñ. II, 16.

53. Medh., Gov., Nâr., and Nand. read apadesam, 'a wrong or impossible place,' instead of adesyam, 'a witness not present.' Kull. reads according to the editions, 'adesyam,' but his explanation agrees with the other reading.

54. Pravîhitam, 'duly stated (by himself),' (Kull., Nand.), i. e. 'in the plaint' (Gov.), means according to Râgh. and Nâr. 'duly ascertained.'

56. 'Who does not know what is the first (point) and what is the second,' i. e. 'what is the proof and what the matter to be proved' (Kull., Râgh.), or 'what ought to be said first and what later' (Nâr., Nand.).

being ordered to produce them, produces them not, the judge must on these (same) grounds declare to be non-suited.

58. If a plaintiff does not speak, he may be punished corporally or fined according to the law; if (a defendant) does not plead within three fortnights, he has lost his cause.

59. In the double of that sum which (a defendant) falsely denies or on which (the plaintiff) falsely declares, shall those two (men) offending against justice be fined by the king.

60. (A defendant) who, being brought (into court) by the creditor, (and) being questioned, denies (the debt), shall be convicted (of his falsehood) by at least three witnesses (who must depose) in the presence of the Brâhmana (appointed by) the king.

61. I will fully declare what kind of men may be made witnesses in suits by creditors, and in what manner those (witnesses) must give true (evidence).

62. Householders, men with male issue, and indigenous (inhabitants of the country, be they) Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, or Sûdras, are competent, when called by a suitor, to give evidence, not any persons whatever (their condition may be) except in cases of urgency.

58. 'If a plaintiff does not speak,' i.e. 'after bringing a suit' (Kull.). Corporal punishment is for heavy cases (Kull.).

59. Yâgñ. II, 59.

60. Thus Gov., Kull., Râgh., but the last words may also mean 'in the presence of the king and of the Brâhmanas.'

61-72. Âp. II, 29, 7; Gaut. XIII, 1-4; Vas. XVI, 28-30; Baudh. I, 19, 13; Vi. VIII, 7-9; Yâgñ. II, 68-72.

62. Medh. and Nâr. refer the expression 'not any person whatever (their condition may be),' to such as volunteer to give evidence without being summoned. The 'cases of urgency' are those mentioned below, verse 69.

63. Trustworthy men of all the (four) castes (varṇa) may be made witnesses in lawsuits, (men) who know (their) whole duty, and are free from covetousness; but let him reject those (of an) opposite (character).

64. Those must not be made (witnesses) who have an interest in the suit, nor familiar (friends), companions, and enemies (of the parties), nor (men) formerly convicted (of perjury), nor (persons) suffering under (severe) illness, nor (those) tainted (by mortal sin).

✓ 65. The king cannot be made a witness, nor mechanics and actors, nor a Srotriya, nor a student of the Veda, nor (an ascetic) who has given up (all) connexion (with the world),

66. Nor one wholly dependent, nor one of bad fame, nor a Dasyu, nor one who follows forbidden

64. 'Who have an interest in the suit' (Nâr.) means according to Medh., Gov., Kull., and Râgh. 'connected by money, i. e. creditors or debtors of the parties,' or according to Nand. 'men who have received benefits from one of the parties.' Sahâya, 'companions,' i. e. 'sureties and the like' (Medh.), or 'servants' (Kull., Nâr.). Drish'adosha, 'men formerly convicted (of perjury),' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand.), may according to Medh. also mean 'men who have been convicted (of any serious offence).' Men afflicted with serious illnesses must not be made witnesses, because such men are liable to become angry or to forget and thus to give false evidence (Medh.). Dûshita, 'tainted,' i. e. by mortal crimes or numerous smaller offences (Medh., Kull., Râgh.), means according to Nâr. and Nand. Abhirastas, 'those accused of such crimes.'

65. Kusîlava, 'actors' (Nâr.), or 'dancers, musicians, and singers' (Medh.), or 'actors and so forth' (Gov., Kull.), or 'singers' (Nand.). A Srotriya, or Brâhmaṇa learned in the Vedas, cannot be made a witness, because he has to attend to his studies and to the Agni-hotra (Medh., Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Gov., Nand.). The same remark applies to the last two classes. Lîngastha, 'a student,' includes according to Nâr., Gov., Nand., Medh. also 'ascetics.'

66. 'One wholly dependent,' i. e. 'a slave by birth' (Medh., Gov., occupations, nor an aged (man), nor an infant, nor one (man alone), nor a man of the lowest castes, nor one deficient in organs of sense,

67. Nor one extremely grieved, nor one intoxicated, nor a madman, nor one tormented by hunger or thirst, nor one oppressed by fatigue, nor one tormented by desire, nor a wrathful man, nor a thief.

68. Women should give evidence for women, and for twice-born men twice-born men (of the) same (kind), virtuous Sûdras for Sûdras, and men of the lowest castes for the lowest.

69. But any person whatsoever, who has personal knowledge (of an act committed) in the interior apartments (of a house), or in a forest, or of (a crime causing) loss of life, may give evidence between the parties.

70. On failure (of qualified witnesses, evidence)

Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). Vaktavya, 'one of bad fame,' may according to Medh. also mean 'one afflicted with leprosy or some other bad disease.' Dasyu, i. e. 'a servant for wages' (Medh., Gov., Râgh.), or 'a hard-hearted man' (Medh.), or 'an angry man' (Kull.), or 'a murderer' (Râgh.), or 'a low-caste man' (Nand.). The term denotes, however, properly the aboriginal robber-tribes, and probably includes all those resembling them. 'One who follows forbidden occupations,' i. e. 'a Brâhmaṇa who has become a warrior or a trader and the like' (Medh.), or 'a butcher and the like' (Nâr.).

68. Vas. XVI, 30. 'Women should give evidence for women only in cases between women or in matters concerning the female sex, which they alone may be supposed to know' (Medh., Gov., Kull.). 'Twice-born men of the same kind,' i. e. 'of the same caste' (Kull., Nâr., Nand.), or 'of the same caste and equally virtuous' (Gov.), or 'of the same place,' or 'of the same caste, occupations, &c.' (Medh.).

69. 'Of (a crime causing) loss of life,' i. e. 'of robberies, murders, and the like' (Medh., Gov., Kull.).

70. The rule refers to the cases mentioned in verse 69 (Gov., Kull.), or to the last only (Nâr.).

may be given (in such cases) by a woman, by an infant, by an aged man, by a pupil, by a relative, by a slave, or by a hired servant.

71. But the (judge) should consider the evidence of infants, aged and diseased men, who (are apt to) speak untruly, as untrustworthy, likewise that of men with disordered minds.

72. In all cases of violence, of theft and adultery, of defamation and assault, he must not examine the (competence of) witnesses (too strictly).

73. On a conflict of the witnesses the king shall accept (as true) the (evidence of the) majority; if (the conflicting parties are) equal in number, (that of) those distinguished by good qualities; on a difference between (equally) distinguished (witnesses, that of) the best among the twice-born.

74. Evidence in accordance with what has actually been seen or heard, is admissible; a witness who speaks truth in those (cases), neither loses spiritual merit nor wealth.

75. A witness who deposes in an assembly of honourable men (Ārya) anything else but what he has seen or heard, falls after death headlong into hell and loses heaven.

73. Vi. VIII, 39; Yāgñ. II, 78, 80. 'The best of the twice-born,' i.e. 'Brāhmaṇas' (Gov., Nār.), or 'particularly distinguished Brāhmaṇas, who fulfil their sacred duties' (Kull., Rāgh.).

74-75. Âp. II, 29, 9-10; Gaut. XIII, 7; Baudh. I, 19, 14-15; Vas. XVI, 36; Vi. VIII, 13-14.

74. 'Nor wealth,' i.e. 'he will not be fined.'

75. 'In an assembly of honourable men,' i.e. in court (Medh.), or 'in an assembly of Brāhmaṇas' (Gov.). 'And loses heaven,' i.e. which he may have earned by good works (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nand.), or 'even after passing through hell, he cannot get into heaven, because his merit is extinct' (Nār.).

76. When a man (originally) not appointed to be a witness sees or hears anything and is (afterwards) examined regarding it, he must declare it (exactly) as he saw or heard it.

77. One man who is free from covetousness may be (accepted as) witness; but not even many pure women, because the understanding of females is apt to waver, nor even many other men, who are tainted with sin.

78. What witnesses declare quite naturally, that must be received on trials; (depositions) differing from that, which they make improperly, are worthless for (the purposes of) justice.

79. The witnesses being assembled in the court in the presence of the plaintiff and of the defendant, let the judge examine them, kindly exhorting them in the following manner:

80. 'What ye know to have been mutually transacted in this matter between the two men before us, declare all that in accordance with the truth; for ye are witnesses in this (cause).

81. 'A witness who speaks the truth in his evidence, gains (after death) the most excellent regions (of bliss) and here (below) unsurpassable fame; such testimony is revered by Brahman (himself).

76. '(Originally) not appointed (to be a witness),' i.e. 'not entered as a witness in the document' (Medh.), 'but accidentally present at the transaction' (Kull., Nâr., Nand.).

78. 'Quite naturally,' i.e. 'not out of compassion, in the belief of gaining merit, or depending on women' (Medh.), or 'not out of fear and the like' (Kull.), or 'without hesitation, quickly' (Nâr.). Gov. and Nand. explain it 'in accordance with the truth.'

79. Gaut. XIII, 5.

80-101. Âp. II, 29, 9-10; Gaut. XIII, 14-22; Vas. XVI, 32-34; Bauddh. I, 19, 9-12; Vi. VIII, 19-37; Yâgñ. II, 73-75.

82. 'He who gives false evidence is firmly bound by Varuṇa's fetters, helpless during one hundred existences; let (men therefore) give true evidence.

83. 'By truthfulness a witness is purified, through truthfulness his merit grows; truth must, therefore, be spoken by witnesses of all castes (varṇa).

84. 'The Soul itself is the witness of the Soul, and the Soul is the refuge of the Soul; despise not thy own Soul, the supreme witness of men.

85. 'The wicked, indeed, say in their hearts, "Nobody sees us;" but the gods distinctly see them and the male within their own breasts.

86. 'The sky, the earth, the waters, (the male in) the heart, the moon, the sun, the fire, Yama and the wind, the night, the two twilights, and justice know the conduct of all corporeal beings.'

87. The (judge), being purified, shall ask in the forenoon the twice-born (witnesses) who (also have been) purified, (and stand) facing the north or the east, to give true evidence in the presence of (images of) the gods and of Brāhmaṇas.

88. Let him examine a Brāhmaṇa (beginning with) 'Speak,' a Kshatriya (beginning with) 'Speak the truth,' a Vaisya (admonishing him) by (mentioning) his kine, grain, and gold, a Sūdra (threatening

82. 'Varuṇa's fetters,' i. e. 'terrible snake-bonds or dropsy' (Medh., Kull.). Gov. mentions the snake-bonds alone, and Rāgh. says that the verse threatens the punishment of hell. Dropsy is a disease specially attributed to Varuṇa, see Rīg-veda VII, 89, 1, and the story of Sunaśsepha, Ait. Brāhm. VII, 15. The fetters of Varuṇa are mentioned as the punishment of liars, Atharva-veda IV, 16, 6.

86. '(The male in) the heart,' i. e. 'the male or spirit (puruṣa) who resides in the human heart, clothed with a rudimentary body' (Medh.), and similarly the other commentators.

88. '(Admonishing him) by (mentioning) his kine, grain, or gold,' i. e. 'threatening him with the guilt of all offences committed against him) with (the guilt of) every crime that causes loss of caste;

89. (Saying), 'Whatever places (of torment) are assigned (by the sages) to the slayer of a Brâhmaṇa, to the murderer of women and children, to him who betrays a friend, and to an ungrateful man, those shall be thy (portion), if thou speakest falsely.

90. '(The reward) of all meritorious deeds which thou, good man, hast done since thy birth, shall become the share of the dogs, if in thy speech thou departest from the truth.

91. 'If thou thinkest, O friend of virtue, with respect to thyself, "I am alone," (know that) that sage who witnesses all virtuous acts and all crimes, ever resides in thy heart.

92. 'If thou art not at variance with that divine Yama, the son of Vivasvat, who dwells in thy heart, thou needest neither visit the Ganges nor the (land of the) Kurus.

93. 'Naked and shorn, tormented with hunger and thirst, and deprived of sight, shall the man who gives false evidence, go with a potsherd to beg food at the door of his enemy.

94. 'Headlong, in utter darkness shall the sinful man tumble into hell, who being interrogated in a judicial inquiry answers one question falsely.

95. 'That man who in a court (of justice) gives an untrue account of a transaction (or asserts a fact) of which he was not an eye-witness, resembles a blind man who swallows fish with the bones.

96. 'The gods are acquainted with no better man kine, &c.' (Medh.), or 'with the guilt of the theft of kine, &c.' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'with the loss of his kine, &c.' (Nâr.), or 'by making him touch a cow, &c.' (Nand.).

in this world than him, of whom his conscious Soul has no distrust, when he gives evidence.

97. 'Learn now, O friend, from an enumeration in due order, how many relatives he destroys who gives false evidence in several particular cases.

98. 'He kills five by false testimony regarding (small) cattle, he kills ten by false testimony regarding kine, he kills a hundred by false evidence concerning horses, and a thousand by false evidence concerning men.

99. 'By speaking falsely in a cause regarding gold, he kills the born and the unborn; by false evidence concerning land, he kills everything; beware, therefore, of false evidence concerning land.

100. 'They declare (false evidence) concerning water, concerning the carnal enjoyment of women, and concerning all gems, produced in water, or consisting of stones (to be) equally (wicked) as a lie concerning land.

101. 'Marking well all the evils (which are pro-

97. Hanti, 'destroys or kills,' i. e. 'causes to fall into hell' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr.), or 'causes to fall from heaven and to be reborn in the wombs of animals' (Râgh.). Medh. and Kull. (verse 99) give another explanation of this expression, viz. 'incurs a guilt as great as if he had killed them.'

98. 'Men,' i. e. 'slaves.'

99. 'Everything,' i. e. 'everything animated' (Gov., Kull.), or 'even more than a thousand' (Nâr., Râgh.).

100. 'Water,' i. e. 'wells, tanks, &c.' 'Gems produced in water,' i. e. 'pearls, coral, &c.'

Verse 99 is placed by Nand. before verse 100, and some others are inserted between and after them, but the confusion is probably owing merely to clerical errors, as no commentary is given.

101. Añgasâ, 'openly,' means according to Gov. and Kull. 'truly,' according to Nâr. 'quickly.'

duced) by perjury, declare thou openly everything as (thou hast) heard or seen (it).'

102. Brâhmaṇas who tend cattle, who trade, who are mechanics, actors (or singers), menial servants or usurers, the (judge) shall treat like Sûdras.

103. In (some) cases a man who, though knowing (the facts to be) different, gives such (false evidence) from a pious motive, does not lose heaven; such (evidence) they call the speech of the gods.

104. Whenever the death of a Sûdra, of a Vaisya, of a Kshatriya, or of a Brâhmaṇa would be (caused) by a declaration of the truth, a falsehood may be spoken; for such (falsehood) is preferable to the truth.

105. Such (witnesses) must offer to Sarasvatî oblations of boiled rice (karu) which are sacred to the goddess of speech, (thus) performing the best penance in order to expiate the guilt of that falsehood.

106. Or such (a witness) may offer according to the rule clarified butter in the fire, reciting the Kûshmânda texts, or the Rik, sacred to Varuna, 'Untie, O Varuna, the uppermost fetter,' or the three verses addressed to the Waters.

107. A man who, without being ill, does not give evidence in (cases of) loans and the like within three fortnights (after the summons), shall become respon-

102. Vas. III, 1.

103-104. Gaut. XIII, 24-25; Vas. XVI, 36; Vi. VIII, 15; Yâgñ. II, 83.

103. Nand. omits this verse.

105-106. Baudh. I, 19, 16; Vi. VIII, 16; Yâgñ. II, 83.

106. The Kûshmânda texts are found Taitt. Âr. X, 3-5; the verse addressed to Varuna, Rig-veda I, 24, 15; and the three verses addressed to the Waters, Rig-veda X, 9, 1-3.

107. Yâgñ. II, 76.

sible for the whole debt and (pay) a tenth part of the whole (as a fine to the king).

108. The witness to whom, within seven days after he has given evidence, happens (a misfortune through) sickness, a fire, or the death of a relative, shall be made to pay the debt and a fine.

109. If two (parties) dispute about matters for which no witnesses are available, and the (judge) is unable to really ascertain the truth, he may cause it to be discovered even by an oath.

110. Both by the great sages and the gods oaths have been taken for the purpose of (deciding doubtful) matters; and Vasishtha even swore an oath before king (Sudâs), the son of Pigavana.

111. Let no wise man swear an oath falsely, even in a trifling matter; for he who swears an oath falsely is lost in this (world) and after death.

112. No crime, causing loss of caste, is committed by swearing (falsely) to women, the objects of one's desire, at marriages, for the sake of fodder for a cow, or of fuel, and in (order to show) favour to a Brâhmana.

108. Yâgñ. II, 113.

109. Gaut. XIII, 12-13; Vi. IX, 2-9. According to Medh. sapatha, 'oath,' is used for the whole daiva anumâna, 'divine proof,' and thus includes the ordeals.

110. Medh. and Gov. point out that the seven sages purified themselves by oaths when they mutually accused each other of a theft of lotus-fibres (Mah. XIII, 93, 13 seqq.), and that Indra swore an oath when he was accused of an intrigue with Ahalyâ, the wife of Gautama. Vasishtha finally cleared himself of the accusation which Visvâmitra brought against him before king Sudâs, that he was a Râkshasa and had devoured his hundred sons (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand.). See Sâyana on Rig-veda VII, 104, and especially on verse 15, which is considered to contain the oath sworn.

112. Gaut. XXIII, 29; Vas. XVI, 35. 'Fuel,' i.e. 'for a burnt-

113. Let the (judge) cause a Brâhmana to swear by his veracity, a Kshatriya by his chariot or the animal he rides on and by his weapons, a Vaisya by his kine, grain, and gold, and a Sûdra by (imprecating on his own head the guilt) of all grievous offences (pâtaka).

114. Or the (judge) may cause the (party) to carry fire or to dive under water, or severally to touch the heads of his wives and children.

115. He whom the blazing fire burns not, whom the water forces not to come (quickly) up, who meets with no speedy misfortune, must be held innocent on (the strength of) his oath.

116. For formerly when Vatsa was accused by his younger brother, the fire, the spy of the world, burned not even a hair (of his) by reason of his veracity.

117. Whenever false evidence has been given in any suit, let the (judge) reverse the judgment, and whatever has been done must be (considered as) undone.

oblation' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr.). In the last cases the sacredness of the purpose excuses the crime.

113. The Kshatriya and Vaisya must touch the things mentioned, and say, 'May they become useless to me!' (Medh., Gov., Kull.)

114. This verse refers, as the commentators assert, to the two ordeals described by Vi. XI-XII, and Yâgñ. II, 103-109. Medh., Gov., and Kull. assert that ordeals are to be used in particularly important cases only; see also Vi. IX, 10-14.

116. Maitreya, the step-brother of Vatsa, accused the latter of being the offspring of a Sûdra woman. In order to prove the falseness of this allegation, Vatsa passed through a fire (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). I read sparah instead of sprisah.

117. Vi. VIII, 40. 'Fines imposed must be remitted' (Gov., Kull., Nâr.).

118. Evidence (given) from covetousness, distraction, terror, friendship, lust, wrath, ignorance, and childishness is declared (to be) invalid.

119. I will propound in (due) order the particular punishments for him who gives false evidence from any one of these motives.

120. (He who commits perjury) through covetousness shall be fined one thousand (panas), (he who does it) through distraction, in the lowest amercement; (if a man does it) through fear, two middling amercements shall be paid as a fine, (if he does it) through friendship, four times the amount of the lowest (amercement).

121. (He who does it) through lust, (shall pay) ten times the lowest amercement, but (he who does it) through wrath, three times the next (or second amercement); (he who does it) through ignorance, two full hundreds, but (he who does it) through childishness, one hundred (panas).

122. They declare that the wise have prescribed these fines for perjury, in order to prevent a failure of justice, and in order to restrain injustice.

123. But a just king shall fine and banish (men of) the three (lower) castes (varna) who have given false evidence, but a Brâhmana he shall (only) banish.

124. Manu, the son of the Self-existent (Svayambhu), has named ten places on which punishment

119-123. Yâgñ. II, 81.

120. Regarding the three amercements, see below, verse 138.

123. Vivâsayet, 'he shall (only) banish' (Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand.), means according to Medh. 'he shall deprive him of his clothes or of his house.' Gov. gives Medh.'s first explanation only.

124. Âp. II, 27; 8, 17-19; Gaut. XII, 46-47; Vi. V, 2-8.

may be (made to fall) in the cases of the three (lower) castes (varṇa); but a Brāhmaṇa shall depart unhurt (from the country).

125. (These are) the organ, the belly, the tongue, the two hands, and fifthly the two feet, the eye, the nose, the two ears, likewise the (whole) body.

126. Let the (king), having fully ascertained the motive, the time and place (of the offence), and having considered the ability (of the criminal to suffer) and the (nature of the) crime, cause punishment to fall on those who deserve it.

127. Unjust punishment destroys reputation among men, and fame (after death), and causes even in the next world the loss of heaven; let him, therefore, beware of (inflicting) it.

128. A king who punishes those who do not deserve it, and punishes not those who deserve it, brings great infamy on himself and (after death) sinks into hell.

129. Let him punish first by (gentle) admonition, afterwards by (harsh) reproof, thirdly by a fine, after that by corporal chastisement.

130. But when he cannot restrain such (offenders) even by corporal punishment, then let him apply to them even all the four (modes conjointly).

131. Those technical names of (certain quantities of) copper, silver, and gold, which are generally used

126. Gaut. XII, 51; Yâgñ. I, 367. Anubandham, 'the motive,' includes according to Gov. and Kull. also 'the frequency of the offence.' Nâr. gives the latter meaning alone. Nand. reads aparâdham, 'the offence.' Instead of sârâparâdhau Nand. reads sârâsâram, 'the strength or weakness (of the offender).'

127-128. Yâgñ. I, 356; Vi. XIX, 43.

129-130. Yâgñ. I, 366.

131-138. Vi. IV, 1-14; Yâgñ. I, 361-365.

on earth for the purpose of business transactions among men, I will fully declare.

132. The very small mote which is seen when the sun shines through a lattice, they declare (to be) the least of (all) quantities and (to be called) a trasareṇu (a floating particle of dust).

133. Know (that) eight trasareṇus (are equal) in bulk (to) a likshâ (the egg of a louse), three of those to one grain of black mustard (râgasarshapa), and three of the latter to a white mustard-seed.

134. Six grains of white mustard are one middle-sized barley-corn, and three barley-corns one kṛishṇala (raktikâ, or guṇḍa-berry); five kṛishṇalas are one mâsha (bean), and sixteen of those one suvarṇa.

135. Four suvarṇas are one pala, and ten palas one dharana; two kṛishṇalas (of silver), weighed together, must be considered one mâshaka of silver.

136. Sixteen of those make a silver dharana, or purâna; but know (that) a karsha of copper is a kârshâpana, or pana.

137. Know (that) ten dharanas of silver make one satamâna; four suvarṇas must be considered (equal) in weight to a nishka.

138. Two hundred and fifty panas are declared (to be) the first (or lowest) amercement, five (hundred) are considered as the mean (or middlemost), but one thousand as the highest.

139. A debt being admitted as due, (the defendant)

134. The kṛishṇala or raktikâ (ratti) is still used by jewellers and goldsmiths. It corresponds to 0.122 grammes, or 1.875 grains.

136. A karsha = 16 mâshas = 80 kṛishṇalas.

139. Vi. VI, 20-21; Yâgy. II, 42. According to Nâr. 'some' only have this verse.

shall pay five in the hundred (as a fine), if it be denied (and proved) twice as much; that is the teaching of Manu.

140. A money-lender may stipulate as an increase of his capital, for the interest, allowed by Vasishtha, and take monthly the eightieth part of a hundred.

141. Or, remembering the duty of good men, he may take two in the hundred (by the month), for he who takes two in the hundred becomes not a sinner for gain.

142. Just two in the hundred, three, four, and five (and not more), he may take as monthly interest according to the order of the castes (varṇa).

143. But if a beneficial pledge (i.e. one from which profit accrues, has been given), he shall receive no interest on the loan; nor can he, after keeping (such) a pledge for a very long time, give or sell it.

140. Gaut. XII, 29; Yâgñ. II, 37. The rule occurs in our Vâsishtha Dharmasâstra II, 51. The amount is fifteen per cent per annum. According to Kull. (on verse 141), Nâr., Râgh., and Nand. this rule refers to a debt secured by a pledge, and the correctness of this view is proved by the parallel passage of Yâgñ.

141-142. Vas. II, 48; Vi. VI, 2; Yâgñ. II, 37. This rule refers, according to the same commentators, to unsecured loans. A Brâhmana is to pay two per cent per month, a Kshatriya three, a Vaisya four, and a Sûdra five. Med. and Gov. think that the rule refers to cases where the creditor is unable to live on the smaller interest.

143. Gaut. XII, 32; Vi. VI, 5. 'A beneficial pledge,' i.e. 'land, cattle, slaves, &c.' According to Medh., Gov., and Nâr., the last clause refers to pledges which are not used. But Kull. objects that this is contrary to the common practice of the Sishṭas, and Râgh. refers to Yâgñ. II, 58, where it is clearly stated that beneficial pledges only are never lost, while those which are merely kept are lost when the original debt is doubled by unpaid interest.

144. A pledge (to be kept only) must not be used by force, (the creditor), so using it, shall give up his (whole) interest, or, (if it has been spoilt by use) he shall satisfy the (owner) by (paying its) original price; else he commits a theft of the pledge.

145. Neither a pledge nor a deposit can be lost by lapse of time; they are both recoverable, though they have remained long (with the bailee).

146. Things used with friendly assent, a cow, a camel, a riding-horse, and (a beast) made over for breaking in, are never lost (to the owner).

147. (But in general) whatever (chattel) an owner sees enjoyed by others during ten years, while, though present, he says nothing, that (chattel) he shall not recover.

148. If (the owner is) neither an idiot nor a minor and if (his chattel) is enjoyed (by another) before his eyes, it is lost to him by law; the adverse possessor shall retain that property.

149. A pledge, a boundary, the property of infants, an (open) deposit, a sealed deposit, women, the property of the king and the wealth of a Srotريا are not lost in consequence of (adverse) enjoyment.

144. Vi. VI, 5; Yâgñ. II, 59. According to Medh. clothes, &c., are meant; according to Kull. and Râgh. clothes, ornaments, &c.; according to Nâr. beds and so forth. Nâr. thinks that the expression 'the value' refers to the profit made by the use of the pledge.

145. Vi. VI, 7-8; Yâgñ. II, 58. According to Medh. the pledge spoken of here is 'a pledge for keeping which is forcibly used.' Upanidhi, 'a deposit,' means according to Medh., Gov., Kull. (who however refers the term also to deposits), Râgh., and Nand. 'anything lent to another out of friendship;' according to Nâr. 'an additional pledge, given subsequently, in order to complete the security for the loan.'

147-148. Gaut. XII, 37; Vas. XVI, 16-17; Yâgñ. II, 24.

149. Vas. XVI, 18; Gaut. XII, 38-39; Yâgñ. II, 25. 'Women,'

150. The fool who uses a pledge without the permission of the owner, shall remit half of his interest, as a compensation for (such) use.

151. In money transactions interest paid at one time (not by instalments) shall never exceed the double (of the principal); on grain, fruit, wool or hair, (and) beasts of burden it must not be more than five times (the original amount).

152. Stipulated interest beyond the legal rate, being against (the law), cannot be recovered; they call that a usurious way (of lending); (the lender) is (in no case) entitled to (more than) five in the hundred.

153. Let him not take interest beyond the year, nor such as is unapproved, nor compound interest, periodical interest, stipulated interest, and corporal interest.

i. e. 'female slaves and the like.' Râgh. adds that their offspring is not lost to the owner. Upanidhi, 'a sealed deposit' (Gov., Kull., Nâr., and Râgh.).

150. According to the commentators this is the consequence, resulting from the secret unpermitted use of a pledge in ordinary cases, while the loss of the whole interest ensues in the case of a forcible use in contravention of a special prohibition.

151. Gaut. XII, 31, 36; Vi. VI, 11-15; Yâgñ. II, 39. The interest here intended is such which is not paid by instalments, but becomes due together with the principal. According to the commentators, the whole sum payable, i. e. the interest together with the principal, shall not exceed the double of the sum lent, or, in the special cases mentioned, five times that amount.

152. According to Gov. and Nâr. this verse entitles the money-lender to take five per cent from Âryans, not from Sûdras only.

153. Gaut. XII, 30, 34-35. 'A creditor may take for the term of a year interest which has been settled by the following agreement, "When one, two, or three months have passed, the interest on the (capital) shall be calculated and be paid to me at one time;" but he shall not take the interest according to the agreement after

154. He who, unable to pay a debt (at the fixed time), wishes to make a new contract, may renew the agreement, after paying the interest which is due.

155. If he cannot pay the money (due as interest), he may insert it in the renewed (agreement); he must pay as much interest as may be due.

156. He who has made a contract to carry goods by a wheeled carriage for money and has agreed to a certain place or time, shall not reap that reward, if he does not keep to the place and the time (stipulated).

a year has passed' (Kull., Râgh.). According to Gov. this clause means, 'If (the creditor) does not take the money (due) for two or three years and (the debtor) pays then, (the creditor) shall not take more interest than for one year.' Nâr. says, 'atisâmvasarim ("beyond the year") means that (interest) which after the lapse of one year only is redundant,' i. e. 'exceeds that which has been doubled' (see verse 151). Adriṣh/âm, 'unapproved,' i. e. 'in the law-books' (Kull., Râgh), or 'in the law-books and in daily life' (Nand.), means according to Medh. and Gov. anupaṭitâm, 'which has not accumulated,' i. e. 'which is taken for one, two, or three days.' Nâr. agrees with the latter view. Kâlavṛiddhiḥ, 'periodical interest,' i. e. 'monthly interest' (Gov., Nâr.), or 'interest in contravention of verse 151' (Kull., Râgh.). Kâritâ, 'stipulated interest,' i. e. 'an illegal rate of interest, or interest which runs on after the principal has been doubled, agreed to by the debtor on account of distress' (Medh., Gov., Nâr., Kull., Râgh.). Kâyikâ, 'corporal interest,' i. e. 'to be paid by bodily labour or by the use of the body of a pledged animal or slave' (Medh.). Kull., Râgh., and Nand. give the second explanation. According to 'some,' quoted by Medh. and Nâr., the last four kinds of interest are not forbidden. Medh. and Gov. think all or some of them are permissible for merchants. See also for the explanation of the terms, Gaut. XII, 34-35, notes; and Colebrooke I, Digest 35-45.

154. Karāṇa, 'the agreement,' i. e. 'the written bond' (Kull., Râgh.), or 'the written bond and so forth' (Gov., Nâr.). According to the latter two, with whom Medh. seems to agree, karāṇa may also refer to a verbal agreement before witnesses.

155. 'Pay,' i. e. promise to pay in the new agreement.

156. Thus Medh., Gov., Kull., and Râgh. But Nâr. and Nand.

157. Whatever rate men fix, who are expert in sea-voyages and able to calculate (the profit) according to the place, the time, and the objects (carried), that (has legal force) in such cases with respect to the payment (to be made).

158. The man who becomes a surety in this (world) for the appearance of a (debtor), and produces him not, shall pay the debt out of his own property.

159. But money due by a surety, or idly promised, or lost at play, or due for spirituous liquor, or what remains unpaid of a fine and a tax or duty, the son (of the party owing it) shall not be obliged to pay.

160. This just mentioned rule shall apply to the case of a surety for appearance (only); if a surety for payment should die, the (judge) may compel even his heirs to discharge the debt.

161. On what account then is it that after the death of a surety other than for payment, whose explain kakravṛiddhi, 'a contract to carry goods by a wheeled carriage,' by 'compound interest;' and Medh. on verse 157 mentions this opinion too.

157. The expression 'in sea-voyages' includes voyages by land (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or all voyages (Nâr.). The commentators, who explain the preceding verse as referring to compound interest, explain this to mean that merchants trading by sea must pay any rate of interest for money borrowed which experts may fix (see Yâgñ. II, 38). The others, of course, understand by 'the rate' (vṛiddhi) the carrier's or shipowner's wages.

158-160. Gaut. XII, 42; Vi. VI, 41; Yâgñ. II, 47, 53-54.

159. 'Idly promised,' i.e. 'to clowns and so forth' (Kull.), or 'to bards and the like' (Nâr.), or 'not for a religious purpose, but to singers and the like' (Nand.), or 'in jest, to bards and the like' (Râgh.), or 'a pour-boire and the like' (Gov.).

161. 'Whose affairs are fully known,' i.e. 'the cause for which affairs are fully known, the creditor may (in some cases) afterwards demand the debt (of the heirs)?

162. If the surety had received money (from him for whom he stood bail) and had money enough (to pay), then (the heir of him) who received it, shall pay (the debt) out of his property; that is the settled rule.

163. A contract made by a person intoxicated, or insane, or grievously disordered (by disease and so forth), or wholly dependent, by an infant or very aged man, or by an unauthorised (party) is invalid.

164. That agreement which has been made contrary to the law or to the settled usage (of the virtuous), can have no legal force, though it be established (by proofs).

165. A fraudulent mortgage or sale, a fraudulent gift or acceptance, and (any transaction) where he detects fraud, the (judge) shall declare null and void.

166. If the debtor be dead and (the money borrowed) was expended for the family, it must be paid by the relatives out of their own estate even if they are divided.

he became a surety (e. g. for appearance or good behaviour) being fully known' (Nâr., Râgh.).

162. Alamdhanah, 'had money enough (to pay),' i. e. 'had received a sum equal to the loan contracted by him for whose appearance he stood surety' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr.). According to Râgh. the adjective refers to the heir, and means 'if he has money enough to pay.' Nand. reads alakshita, 'if a surety who received money be not found' (i. e. has died or disappeared, &c.).

163. Yâgñ. II, 32.

164. 'The sale of wife and children, giving away one's whole property, though one may have issue' (Medh.).

166. Vi. VI, 39; Yâgñ. II, 45. The meaning is, as Nand. points out, that if a debt was contracted for the benefit of a united family,

167. Should even a person wholly dependent make a contract for the behoof of the family, the master (of the house), whether (living) in his own country or abroad, shall not rescind it.

168. What is given by force, what is enjoyed by force, also what has been caused to be written by force, and all other transactions done by force, Manu has declared void.

169. Three suffer for the sake of others, witnesses, a surety, and judges; but four enrich themselves (through others), a Brâhmaṇa, a money-lender, a merchant, and a king.

170. No king, however indigent, shall take anything that ought not to be taken, nor shall he, it must be repaid by the members of the family, though they may have separated afterwards.

167. Adhyadhinaḥ, 'a person wholly dependent,' i. e. 'a servant (Nâr.), or 'a slave' (Kull.), or 'the youngest (brother) or one in a similar position' (Râgh.). Gov. reads vâ instead of api, and for viṭâlayet (Medh., Kull., Râgh.) or viṭârayet (Nand.), vilambayet; and with this reading the translation must be, 'or one wholly dependent, who makes a contract for the sake of the family, must wait for (the arrival of) the master of the house, whether he be at home or abroad.'

168. Vi. VII, 6; Yâgñi. II, 89.

169. Kulam, 'the judges' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), has, according to Nâr., Nand., and Râgh., its usual meaning, 'the family.' Nâr. and Nand. say that the undivided relatives have to suffer by paying the debts of a deceased coparcener; and Râgh. explains the sufferings of a family by the ruin caused through a bad son. Medh., Gov., and Kull. state that the object of the verse is to inculcate that men must not be forced to become witnesses and so forth against their will, and that Brâhmaṇas, &c., must not force others to those transactions from which they gain advantages, e. g. to lawsuits. (Râgh. similarly.) Nâr. takes the first half as a warning not to become a witness or surety or to remain undivided.

170. Vas. XIX, 14-15.

however wealthy, decline taking that which he ought to take, be it ever so small.

171. In consequence of his taking what ought not to be taken, or of his refusing what ought to be received, a king will be accused of weakness and perish in this (world) and after death.

172. By taking his due, by preventing the confusion of the castes (varṇa), and by protecting the weak, the power of the king grows, and he prospers in this (world) and after death.

173. Let the prince, therefore, like Yama, not heeding his own likings and dislikings, behave exactly like Yama, suppressing his anger and controlling himself.

174. But that evil-minded king who in his folly decides causes unjustly, his enemies soon subjugate.

175. If, subduing love and hatred, he decides the causes according to the law, (the hearts of) his subjects turn towards him as the rivers (run) towards the ocean.

176. (The debtor) who complains to the king that his creditor recovers (the debt) independently (of the court), shall be compelled by the king to pay (as a fine) one quarter (of the sum) and to his (creditor) the money (due).

177. Even by (personal) labour shall the debtor make good (what he owes) to his creditor, if he be of the same caste or of a lower one; but

171. 'For if a king takes from his subjects what he ought not to take, they will say, "He fines us, because he is unable to overcome the vassals, neighbours, and the forest tribes (and to obtain money from them),"' Medh.

176. Vi. VI, 19. See above, verses 49-50.

177. The last clause refers to Brâhmanas (Medh., Kull., Râgh.).

a (debtor) of a higher caste shall pay it gradually (when he earns something).

178. According to these rules let the king equitably decide between men, who dispute with each other the matters, which are proved by witnesses and (other) evidence.

179. A sensible man should make a deposit (only) with a person of (good) family, of good conduct, well acquainted with the law, veracious, having many relatives, wealthy, and honourable (ârya).

180. In whatever manner a person shall deposit anything in the hands of another, in the same manner ought the same thing to be received back (by the owner); as the delivery (was, so must be) the re-delivery.

181. He who restores not his deposit to the depositor at his request, may be tried by the judge in the depositor's absence.

182. On failure of witnesses let the (judge) actually deposit gold with that (defendant) under some pretext or other through spies of suitable age and appearance (and afterwards demand it back).

183. If the (defendant) restores it in the manner and shape in which it was bailed, there is nothing

178. Pratyaya, ' (other) evidence,' i.e. 'by inference and divine proof' (Medh.), or 'by inference, oaths, and so forth' (Gov.), or 'by oaths' (Nâr., Nand.).

180. Yâgñ. II, 65. See also below, verse 195. Nand. omits 184, and places the other verses as follows: 180, 195, 188 b, 185, 186, 189, 194, 187, 188 a, 181, 182, 183, 196, 190, 191, 192, 193.

181. The order of the verses referring to the trial of the bailee, is according to Gov. 181, 183, 184, 182, and according to Nâr. 181, 183, 182, 184.

(of that description) in his hands, for which others accuse him.

184. But if he restores not that gold, as he ought, to those (spies), then he shall be compelled by force to restore both (deposits); that is a settled rule of law.

185. An open or a sealed deposit must never be returned to a near relative (of the depositor during the latter's lifetime); for if (the recipient) dies (without delivering them), they are lost, but if he does not die, they are not lost.

186. But (a depositary) who of his own accord returns them to a near relative of a deceased (depositor), must not be harassed (about them) by the king or by the depositor's relatives.

187. And (in doubtful cases) he should try to obtain that object by friendly means, without (having recourse to) artifice, or having inquired into the (depositary's) conduct, he should settle (the matter) with gentle means.

188. Such is the rule for obtaining back all those open deposits; in the case of a sealed deposit (the depositary) shall incur no (censure), unless he has taken out something.

189. (A deposit) which has been stolen by thieves

185. Pratyantare, 'to a near relative,' i. e. 'to his son, brother, or wife' (Medh.).

187. According to Nâr., this verse refers to cases when one believes a deposit to be with another, but has not made it over oneself; according to Gov. and Kull., to cases where there may be an error. Gov. and Kull. think that the person who should act in the manner described is the king, and they explain anvikkhet, 'one should try to obtain,' by 'he should decide.' Nâr. and Râgh., on the other hand, think that the depositor should act thus. The former explanation is perhaps preferable.

189. Yâgñ. II, 66.

or washed away by water or burned by fire, (the bailee) shall not make it good, unless he took part of it (for himself).

190. Him who appropriates a deposit and him (who asks for it) without having made it, (the judge) shall try by all (sorts of) means, and by the oaths prescribed in the Veda.

191. He who does not return a deposit and he who demands what he never bailed shall both be punished like thieves, or be compelled to pay a fine equal (to the value of the object retained or claimed).

192. The king should compel him who does not restore an open deposit, and in like manner him who retains a sealed deposit, to pay a fine equal (to its value).

193. That man who by false pretences may possess himself of another's property, shall be publicly punished by various (modes of) corporal (or capital) chastisement, together with his accomplices.

190. 'By all (sorts of) means,' i. e. 'by the four expedients, kindness and so forth' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'by spies and so forth' (Nâr.), or 'by blows, imprisonment, and so forth' (Medh.). 'By the oaths prescribed in the Veda,' i. e. 'by the ordeals, such as carrying fire' (Gov., Kull., Nâr.). Nâr. quotes a passage of the Veda, in which it is prescribed that the accused shall take hold of a hot axe.

191. Vi. V, 169-171. The former punishment, which consists of mutilation and other corporal punishments (Medh., Nâr., Râgh.), or the highest amercement and the like (Gov.), shall be inflicted on others than Brâhmanas in particularly bad cases and for a repetition of the offence (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.).

192. Medh., Gov., and Kull. refer this rule to first offences. Nâr. takes avishesha, 'in like manner,' to mean 'without making a distinction on account of the caste of the offender.' Medh. explains upanidhi, 'a sealed deposit,' by 'an object lent in a friendly manner.'

193. 'By false pretences,' i. e. 'by frightening others with the

194. If a deposit of a particular description or quantity is bailed by anybody in the presence of a number (of witnesses), it must be known to be of that particular (description and quantity; the depositary) who makes a false statement (regarding it) is liable to a fine.

195. But if anything is delivered or received privately, it must be privately returned; as the bailment (was, so should be) the re-delivery.

196. Thus let the king decide (causes) concerning a deposit and a friendly loan (for use) without showing (undue) rigour to the depositary.

197. If anybody sells the property of another man, without being the owner and without the assent of the owner, the (judge) shall not admit him who is a thief, though he may not consider himself as a thief, as a witness (in any case).

198. If the (offender) is a kinsman (of the owner), he shall be fined six hundred paṇas; if he is not a kinsman, nor has any excuse, he shall be guilty of theft.

king's anger, by promising to obtain for them favours from the king, or the love of a maiden, and so forth' (Medh.). 'By (various) modes of corporal chastisement,' i. e. 'by cutting off his hands, feet, or his head, &c.' (Gov., Kull., Rāgh.), or 'by decapitating or impaling the offender, or having him trampled to death by elephants, and so forth' (Medh.).

194. I. e. the witnesses must be examined regarding it, and their evidence is conclusive.

196. This conclusion makes it somewhat doubtful if the term upanidhi, which occurs verses 185 and 191, and has been translated by 'a sealed deposit' in accordance with the opinion of most commentators, has really that meaning.

198. 'Any excuse,' e. g. 'that he received it as a present, or bought it from the son or other relative of the owner, and so forth' (Gov., Kull.). Nār. reads anavasare, 'and buys at an improper (time or place).'

199. A gift or sale, made by anybody else but the owner, must be considered as null and void, according to the rule in judicial proceedings.

200. Where possession is evident, but no title is perceived, there the title (shall be) a proof (of ownership), not possession; such is the settled rule.

201. He who obtains a chattel in the market before a number (of witnesses), acquires that chattel with a clear legal title by purchase.

202. If the original (seller) be not producible, (the buyer) being exculpated by a public sale, must be dismissed by the king without punishment, but (the former owner) who lost the chattel shall receive it (back from the buyer).

203. One commodity mixed with another must not be sold (as pure), nor a bad one (as good), nor less (than the proper quantity or weight), nor anything that is not at hand or that is concealed.

199. Nand. omits this verse, and inserts instead, 'He who ignorantly makes a sale without ownership shall be punished according to the above rule (i. e. be fined); but he who does it knowingly shall be punished like a thief.' Nâr. has no trace of verse 199, but quotes the beginning of the verse just translated (anena vidhineti).

200. Nand. places this verse after 202.

201-202. Vi. V, 164-166; Yâgñ. II, 168-170.

202. Thus Medh., Kull., Nâr., and Râgh. (Kull., however, taking sodhita, 'exculpated,' in the sense of niskṛita, 'determined.') But Gov. takes the first part differently. 'If the price cannot be produced by him (the seller)—because he has gone to another country—then the buyer must not be punished by the king, being held to be guiltless on account of the open sale, in accordance with the rule of the preceding verse;' similarly Nand. The difference is caused thereby that Gov. apparently objects to the explanation of mûlam (mûlyam, Nand.) by 'the original (seller).' According to Kull. the buyer receives half the value from the original owner.

203. Yâgñ. II, 245. 'Concealed,' i. e. 'in a cloth' (Medh., Nâr.), or 'in the earth' (Nand.), or 'covered with paint' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

204. If, after one damsel has been shown, another be given to the bridegroom, he may marry them both for the same price ; that Manu ordained.

205. He who gives (a damsel in marriage), having first openly declared her blemishes, whether she be insane, or afflicted with leprosy, or have lost her virginity, is not liable to punishment.

206. If an officiating priest, chosen to perform a sacrifice, abandons his work, a share only (of the fee) in proportion to the work (done) shall be given to him by those who work with him.

207. But he who abandons his work after the sacrificial fees have been given, shall obtain his full share and cause to be performed (what remains) by another (priest).

208. But if (specific) fees are ordained for the several parts of a rite, shall he (who performs the part) receive them, or shall they all share them?

209. The Adhvaryu priest shall take the chariot, and the Brahman at the kindling of the fires (Agnyâdhâna) a horse, the Hotri priest shall also take a horse, and the Udgâtri the cart, (used) when (the Soma) is purchased.

204. This rule is rather astonishing after what has been said, III, 51-54, regarding the sale of daughters, and it proves that, in spite of all directions to the contrary, wives were purchased in ancient India as frequently as in our days.

207. Yâgñ. II, 265. 'After the sacrificial fees have been given,' i. e. 'at the midday oblation and so forth' (Medh., Kull., Gov.). According to Medh. the sacrificer is to pay the substitute, according to the other commentators the priest who receives the fee.

208. Medh. mentions that specific fees are prescribed at the Râgasûya and similar sacrifices ; see Âsv. Srauta-sûtra IX, 3, 14-15; 4, 7-20.

209. According to Medh. and Kull. all the three first-mentioned gifts are given according to the precepts of some Sâkhâs at the Agnyâdhâna, the kindling of the fires. But Gov. says that the

210. The (four) chief priests among all (the sixteen), who are entitled to one half, shall receive a moiety (of the fee), the next (four) one half of that, the set entitled to a third share, one third, and those entitled to a fourth a quarter.

211. By the application of these principles the allotment of shares must be made among those men who here (below) perform their work conjointly.

212. Should money be given (or promised) for a pious purpose by one man to another who asks for it, the gift shall be void, if the (money is) afterwards not (used) in the manner (stated).

213. But if the (recipient) through pride or greed tries to enforce (the fulfilment of the promise), he shall be compelled by the king to pay one suvarṇa as an expiation for his theft.

214. Thus the lawful subtraction of a gift has Brahman priest receives a swift horse at the Agnyâdhâna, and Nâr. adds that the Hotri receives a horse at the Gyotishṭoma.

210. The four classes of priests, regarding whose functions see Max Müller, History Anc. Sansk. Lit., p. 468 seqq., are: 1. Hotri, Adhvaryu, Brahman, Udgâtri; 2. Maitrâvaruṇa, Pratiprasthâtri, Brâhmanâkṣhamsin, Prastotri; 3. Akṣhâvâka, Neshtri, Agnidhra, Pratihartri; 4. Potri, Subrahmanyâ, Grâvashṭut, Netri. Medh. gives the total as 112, and the shares as 56, 28, 16, 12; Gov., Kull., Nâr., and Râgh. the total as 100, and the shares as 48, 24, 16, 8. But Nand. says that the total of the fee, whatever it may be, shall be divided into 25 shares, and the several classes shall receive 12, 6, 4, and 3 such shares respectively. See also Âsv. Srauta-sūtra IX, 4, 3-5. The rule, given in this verse, applies to all ordinary cases.

211. Yâgñ. II, 259, 265. I.e. each is to be paid according to the amount of work which he performs.

212. 'For a pious purpose,' i.e. 'for a sacrifice or a wedding' (Medh.).

213. Samsâdhayet, 'tries to enforce (the fulfilment of the promise),' i.e. 'by a complaint before the king' (Medh.), or 'tries to obtain the money forcibly or refuses to return it' (Kull., Râgh., Gov.).

been fully explained ; I will next propound (the law for) the non-payment of wages.

215. A hired (servant or workman) who, without being ill, out of pride fails to perform his work according to the agreement, shall be fined eight krishṇālas and no wages shall be paid to him.

216. But (if he is really) ill, (and) after recovery performs (his work) according to the original agreement, he shall receive his wages even after (the lapse of) a very long time.

217. But if he, whether sick or well, does not (perform or) cause to be performed (by others) his work according to his agreement, the wages for that work shall not be given to him, even (if it be only) slightly incomplete.

218. Thus the law for the non-payment of wages has been completely stated ; I will next explain the law concerning men who break an agreement.

219. If a man belonging to a corporation inhabiting a village or a district, after swearing to an agreement, breaks it through avarice, (the king) shall banish him from his realm,

220. And having imprisoned such a breaker of an agreement, he shall compel him to pay six

215. Âp. II, 28, 2-3 ; Vi. V, 153-154 ; Yâgñ. II, 193. 'Eight krishṇālas,' i. e. 'of gold, silver or copper, according to the case' (Medh., Gov.), or 'of gold' (Kull.).

216. I read with Medh., Gov., Nâr., Râgh., and K. sudîrghasya for sa dîrghasya (Kull., Nand.).

219. Vi. V, 168 ; Yâgñ. II, 192. By 'corporations inhabiting a village or district' are meant according to Medh., village communities and corporations of merchants, mendicants or monks, Katurvedîs and so forth, and he mentions regulations regarding the grazing of the cattle on a common as one of the agreements which all must observe.

220. According to others mentioned by Medh. the translation nishkas, (each of) four suvarṇas, and one satamāna of silver.

221. A righteous king shall apply this law of fines in villages and castes (gâti) to those who break an agreement.

222. If anybody in this (world), after buying or selling anything, repent (of his bargain), he may return or take (back) that chattel within ten days.

223. But after (the lapse of) ten days he may neither give nor cause it to be given (back); both he who takes it (back) and he who gives it (back, except by consent) shall be fined by the king six hundred (panas).

224. But the king himself shall impose a fine of ninety-six panas on him who gives a blemished damsel (to a suitor) without informing (him of the blemish).

225. But that man who, out of malice, says of a maiden, 'She is not a maiden,' shall be fined one hundred (panas), if he cannot prove her blemish.

226. The nuptial texts are applied solely to virgins, (and) nowhere among men to females who have lost their virginity, for such (females) are excluded from religious ceremonies.

should be 'four suvarṇas or six nishkas or one satamāna.' Kull. and Râgh. also think it possible that three separate fines may be inflicted according to the circumstances of the case.

222. Yâgñ. II, 177. According to Medh., Gov., Kull., the rule refers to things which are not easily spoilt, such as land, copper, &c., not to flowers, fruit, and the like; according to Nâr., to grain and seeds, 'because in other Smṛitis different periods are mentioned for other objects' (see Yâgñ. loc. cit.).

224-225. Yâgñ. I, 66.

224. Regarding the blemishes, see above, verse 205.

226. K. omits this verse.

227. The nuptial texts are a certain proof (that a maiden has been made a lawful) wife ; but the learned should know that they (and the marriage-ceremony) are complete with the seventh step (of the bride around the sacred fire).

228. If anybody in this (world) repent of any completed transaction, (the king) shall keep him on the road of rectitude in accordance with the rules given above.

229. I will fully declare in accordance with the true law (the rules concerning) the disputes, (arising) from the transgressions of owners of cattle and of herdsmen.

230. During the day the responsibility for the safety (of the cattle rests) on the herdsman, during the night on the owner, (provided they are) in his house ; (if it be) otherwise, the herdsman will be responsible (for them also during the night).

231. A hired herdsman who is paid with milk, may milk with the consent of the owner the best (cow) out of ten ; such shall be his hire if no (other) wages (are paid).

232. The herdsman alone shall make good (the loss of a beast) strayed, destroyed by worms, killed by dogs or (by falling) into a pit, if he did not duly exert himself (to prevent it).

227. Nand. omits this verse and the next. After the seventh step has been made the marriage cannot be rescinded (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr.).

228. I. e. he may be allowed to rescind a contract for wages and the like within ten days, but not later (Gov., Kull.).

231. Nand. omits this verse.

232. Vi. V, 137-138 ; Yâgñ. I, 164-165. 'By worms,' i. e. according to Medh. by a kind called Ârohakas, who enter the sexual parts of the cows and destroy them ; Râgh. says, 'by snakes and the like.' 'By dogs,' the word is according to Medh. merely intended as an instance for any wild animal.

233. But for (an animal) stolen by thieves, though he raised an alarm, the herdsman shall not pay, provided he gives notice to his master at the proper place and time.

234. If cattle die, let him carry to his master their ears, skin, tails, bladders, tendons, and the yellow concrete bile, and let him point out their particular marks.

235. But if goats or sheep are surrounded by wolves and the herdsman does not hasten (to their assistance), he shall be responsible for any (animal) which a wolf may attack and kill.

236. But if they, kept in (proper) order, graze together in the forest, and a wolf, suddenly jumping on one of them, kills it, the herdsman shall bear in that case no responsibility.

237. On all sides of a village a space, one hundred dhanus or three samyâ-throws (in breadth), shall be reserved (for pasture), and thrice (that space) round a town.

238. If the cattle do damage to unfenced crops on that (common), the king shall in that case not punish the herdsmen.

239. (The owner of the field) shall make there a hedge over which a camel cannot look, and stop

234. I read with Medh. and Gov. āṅkāms ka, 'their particular marks,' instead of āṅgāni, 'their (other) limbs' (Râgh., Nand., K., and the editions). To judge from the commentary, Kull. must have had the same reading as Medh. and Gov.

235. Vi. V., 137.

237. Yâgñ. II., 167. Dhanus, literally 'a bow's length' = 4 hastas or about 6 feet. The samyâ is a short, thick piece of wood, used at sacrifices. A samyâ-throw is mentioned as a measure also by Âp. I., 9, 6.

every gap through which a dog or a boar can thrust his head.

240. (If cattle do mischief) in an enclosed field near a highway or near a village, the herdsman shall be fined one hundred (panas); (but cattle), unattended by a herdsman, (the watchman in the field) shall drive away.

241. (For damage) in other fields (each head of) cattle shall (pay a fine of) one (pana) and a quarter, and in all (cases the value of) the crop (destroyed) shall be made good to the owner of the field; that is the settled rule.

242. But Manu has declared that no fine shall be paid for (damage done by) a cow within ten days after her calving, by bulls and by cattle sacred to the gods, whether they are attended by a herdsman or not.

243. If (the crops are destroyed by) the husbandman's (own) fault, the fine shall amount to ten times as much as (the king's) share; but the fine (shall be) only half that amount if (the fault lay) with the servants and the farmer had no knowledge of it.

240-242. Âp. II, 28, 5; Gaut. XII, 19-26; Vi. V, 140-150; Yâgñ. II, 161-163.

241. 'The cattle,' i.e. 'the herdsman shall pay for the cattle.' 'In all cases,' i.e. 'whether the cattle were attended by a herdsman or not' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

242. A cow is, according to Nâr., during the first days after calving utterly unmanageable. 'Bulls,' i.e. 'those set at liberty (see Vi. LXXXVI) are meant' (Nâr., Kull.), which may be met with near many Indian villages and in many towns. 'Cattle sacred to the gods,' i.e. either 'such as are set apart for sacrifices,' or 'such as are dedicated to temples' (Medh.). The other commentators prefer the second explanation.

243. Âp. II, 28, 1. 'The husbandman's (own) fault,' i.e. 'if he

244. To these rules a righteous king shall keep in (all cases of) transgressions by masters, their cattle, and herdsmen.

245. If a dispute has arisen between two villages concerning a boundary, the king shall settle the limits in the month of Gyaishtha, when the landmarks are most distinctly visible.

246. Let him mark the boundaries (by) trees, (e.g.) Nyagrodhas, Arvatthas, Kimsukas, cotton-trees, Sâlas, Palmyra palms, and trees with milky juice,

247. By clustering shrubs, bamboos of different kinds, Samls, creepers and raised mounds, reeds, thickets of Kubgaka; thus the boundary will not be forgotten.

248. Tanks, wells, cisterns, and fountains should be built where boundaries meet, as well as temples,

249. And as he will see that through men's ignorance of the boundaries trespasses constantly occur in the world, let him cause to be made other hidden marks for boundaries,

250. Stones, bones, cow's hair, chaff, ashes, potsherds, dry cowdung, bricks, cinders, pebbles, and sand, has allowed his crops to be eaten by cattle, or has not sown the field in proper time, &c.' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.).

245. Gyaishtha, i.e. May-June, 'when the grass has been dried up by the heat' (Medh., Kull., Râgh.).

246. Yâgñ. II, 151. Nyagrodha, Ficus Indica; Arvattha, Ficus Religiosa; Kimsuka, Butea Frondosa; Sâla, Shorea Robusta. 'Trees with milky juice,' i.e. 'Arka (Calatropis Gigantea), Udumbara (Ficus Glomerata), &c.'

247. Samî, Acacia Suma; 'mounds,' i.e. the heaps of earth are meant which now are used generally as landmarks in British districts. Instead of Kubgaka Nand. reads Kulyaka.

251. And whatever other things of a similar kind the earth does not corrode even after a long time, those he should cause to be buried where one boundary joins (the other).

252. By these signs, by long continued possession, and by constantly flowing streams of water the king shall ascertain the boundary (of the land) of two disputing parties.

253. If there be a doubt even on inspection of the marks, the settlement of a dispute regarding boundaries shall depend on witnesses.

254. The witnesses, (giving evidence) regarding a boundary, shall be examined concerning the landmarks in the presence of the crowd of the villagers and also of the two litigants.

255. As they, being questioned, unanimously decide, even so he shall record the boundary (in writing), together with their names.

256. Let them, putting earth on their heads, wearing chaplets (of red flowers) and red dresses, being sworn each by (the rewards for) his meritorious deeds, settle (the boundary) in accordance with the truth.

257. If they determine (the boundary) in the

251. According to Kull., who relies on a passage of Bṛihaspati, these objects are to be placed in jars.

254. According to the commentators the verse refers to a dispute between two villages, and the two litigants are persons deputed by each village to conduct the case (see also below, verse 261).

255. All the commentators explain nibadhnīyāt by 'he shall record in writing,' and as it is specially mentioned that the names of the witnesses shall be given, it seems impossible to take the word in any other sense. Medh. says that, if the witnesses disagree, the opinion of the majority shall be taken.

256-260. Yāgñ. II, 150-152.

manner stated, they are guiltless (being) veracious witnesses; but if they determine it unjustly, they shall be compelled to pay a fine of two hundred (panas).

258. On failure of witnesses (from the two villages, men of) the four neighbouring villages, who are pure, shall make (as witnesses) a decision concerning the boundary in the presence of the king.

259. On failure of neighbours (who are) original inhabitants (of the country and can be) witnesses with respect to the boundary, (the king) may hear the evidence even of the following inhabitants of the forest,

260. (Viz.) hunters, fowlers, herdsman, fishermen, root-diggers, snake-catchers, gleaners, and other foresters.

261. As they, being examined, declare the marks for the meeting of the boundaries (to be), even so the king shall justly cause them to be fixed between the two villages.

262. The decision concerning the boundary-marks of fields, wells, tanks, of gardens and houses depends upon (the evidence of) the neighbours.

263. Should the neighbours give false evidence,

258. Men from the four surrounding villages are meant, as Kull. suggests. The correctness of this opinion is proved by the fact that the land-grants usually mention 'the four boundaries' (ṣaturâghâ/anâni) of the villages given away. Medh. and Nand. read gramasâmântavâsinaḥ, 'four men living in, &c.'

259. Maulânâm, 'original inhabitants,' i.e. 'whose ancestors have lived there since the settlement of the village' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

260. 'Other foresters,' i.e. 'those who collect flowers, fruit, and fuel' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), or 'Sabaras and the rest' (Nâr.).

262. Vas. XVI, 13-15; Yâgñ. II, 154.

263. Yâgñ. I, 153.

when men dispute about a boundary-mark, the king shall make each of them pay the middlemost amercement as a fine.

264. He who by intimidation possesses himself of a house, a tank, a garden, or a field, shall be fined five hundred (panas); (if he trespassed) through ignorance, the fine (shall be) two hundred (panas).

265. If the boundary cannot be ascertained (by any evidence), let a righteous king with (the intention of) benefiting them (all), himself assign (his) land (to each); that is the settled rule.

266. Thus the law for deciding boundary (disputes) has been fully declared, I will next propound the (manner of) deciding (cases of) defamation.

267. A Kshatriya, having defamed a Brâhmana, shall be fined one hundred (panas); a Vaisya one hundred and fifty or two hundred; a Sûdra shall suffer corporal punishment.

268. A Brâhmana shall be fined fifty (panas) for defaming a Kshatriya; in (the case of) a Vaisya the fine shall be twenty-five (panas); in (the case of) a Sûdra twelve.

269. For offences of twice-born men against those of equal caste (varna, the fine shall be) also twelve (panas); for speeches which ought not to be uttered, that (and every fine shall be) double.

270. A once-born man (a Sûdra), who insults a

265. Yâgñ. II, 153.

267-277. Âp. II, 27, 14; Gaut. XII, 1, 8-14; Vas. IX, 9; Vi. V, 23-39; Yâgñ. II, 204-211.

269. 'Speeches that ought not to be uttered,' i.e. 'insinuations against the honour of another's female relatives, especially mothers and sisters' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), with which the Hindus, like other Orientals, are very ready.

270. The last clause refers, according to the commentators, to the twice-born man with gross invective, shall have his tongue cut out; for he is of low origin.

271. If he mentions the names and castes (gâti) of the (twice-born) with contumely, an iron nail, ten fingers long, shall be thrust red-hot into his mouth.

272. If he arrogantly teaches Brâhmanas their duty, the king shall cause hot oil to be poured into his mouth and into his ears.

273. He who through arrogance makes false statements regarding the learning (of a caste-fellow), his country, his caste (gâti), or the rites by which his body was sanctified, shall be compelled to pay a fine of two hundred (panas).

274. He who even in accordance with the true facts (contemptuously) calls another man one-eyed, lame, or the like (names), shall be fined at least one kârshâpana.

275. He who defames his mother, his father, his wife, his brother, his son, or his teacher, and he who gives not the way to his preceptor, shall be compelled to pay one hundred (panas).

276. (For mutual abuse) by a Brâhmana and a origin of the Sûdra from Brahman's feet; see above, I, 31. According to Medh. the expression 'once-born' includes men born from high-caste fathers and low-caste mothers.

271. I.e. if he says 're Yagñadatta,' or 'thou scum of the Brâhmanas.'

273. '(Of a caste-fellow),' (Kull., Râgh.), Gov. too states that the rule cannot refer to Sûdras, because the punishment is too light. Medh. explains karma by 'occupation,' and sâñram by 'bodily (deficiencies),' while the others refer karma sâñram to a denial of the initiation.

275. Âkshârayati, 'defames,' i.e. 'accuses them of a mortal sin' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'of incest' (Nâr.), or 'causes dissensions between them and others' (Medh.), or 'makes them angry' (Nand.).

Kshatriya a fine must be imposed by a discerning (king), on the Brâhmaṇa the lowest amercement, but on the Kshatriya the middlemost.

277. A Vaisya and a Sûdra must be punished exactly in the same manner according to their respective castes, but the tongue (of the Sûdra) shall not be cut out; that is the decision.

278. Thus the rules for punishments (applicable to cases) of defamation have been truly declared; I will next propound the decision (of cases) of assault.

279. With whatever limb a man of a low caste does hurt to (a man of the three) highest (castes), even that limb shall be cut off; that is the teaching of Manu.

280. He who raises his hand or a stick, shall have his hand cut off; he who in anger kicks with his foot, shall have his foot cut off.

281. A low-caste man who tries to place himself on the same seat with a man of a high caste, shall be branded on his hip and be banished, or (the king) shall cause his buttock to be gashed.

282. If out of arrogance he spits (on a superior), the king shall cause both his lips to be cut off; if he urines (on him), the penis; if he breaks wind (against him), the anus.

277. I.e. if a Sûdra defames a Vaisya his tongue is not cut out, but he pays the middlemost amercement.

279-280. Vi. V, 19; Yâgyñ. II, 215.

280. Praharet, 'kicks,' i.e. 'lifts his foot in order to kick' (Medh., Nâr., Nand.).

281. Âp. II, 27, 15; Gaut. XII, 7; Vi. V, 20. According to Medh., Gov., Kull., the rule refers to a Brâhmaṇa and a Sûdra; according to Râgh., to the latter and an Âryan; according to Nâr., to a Kshatriya, Vaisya, or Sûdra offending against a Brâhmaṇa.

282. Vi. V, 21-22.

283. If he lays hold of the hair (of a superior), let the (king) unhesitatingly cut off his hands, likewise (if he takes him) by the feet, the beard, the neck, or the scrotum.

284. He who breaks the skin (of an equal) or fetches blood (from him) shall be fined one hundred (paṇas), he who cuts a muscle six nishkas, he who breaks a bone shall be banished.

285. According to the usefulness of the several (kinds of) trees a fine must be inflicted for injuring them; that is the settled rule.

286. If a blow is struck against men or animals in order to (give them) pain, (the judge) shall inflict a fine in proportion to the amount of pain (caused).

287. If a limb is injured, a wound (is caused), or blood (flows, the assailant) shall be made to pay (to the sufferer) the expenses of the cure, or the whole (both the usual amercement and the expenses of the cure as a) fine (to the king).

284. Vi. V, 66-70; Yâgñ. II, 218. '(Of an equal),' (Medh., Kull., Nand.) According to Râgh., the rule refers to Sûdras assaulting Sûdras. According to Nâr., the last offender's property shall be confiscated.

285. Vi. V, 55-59; Yâgñ. II, 227-228. The expression 'trees' includes all plants (Medh., Kull.). According to Gov., the fine for injuring trees which give shade only is to be very small; in the case of flower-bearing trees, middling; in the case of fruit-trees, high (see Vi. loc. cit.). Medh. remarks that the position of the trees, e.g. whether they are boundary-marks, or stand on a cross-road, in a hermitage, &c., has to be taken into account (see Yâgñ. loc. cit.).

286-287. Vi. V, 75-76; Yâgñ. II, 219, 222.

287. Instead of vraṇa, 'a wound' (Kull., Nâr.), Medh., Gov., Râgh., Nand., and K. read prâṇa. Medh. explains the latter reading by 'if the vital strength is injured,' and Gov. and Râgh. by 'if the breathing power is injured by gagging.' 'Or the whole (as a) fine,' i. e. if the person injured refuses the compensation. Nâr. says, 'and shall pay the whole fine, mentioned above.'

288. He who damages the goods of another, be it intentionally or unintentionally, shall give satisfaction to the (owner) and pay to the king a fine equal to the (damage).

289. In the case of (damage done to) leather, or to utensils of leather, of wood, or of clay, the fine (shall be) five times their value; likewise in the case of (damage to) flowers, roots, and fruit.

290. They declare with respect to a carriage, its driver and its owner, (that there are) ten cases in which no punishment (for damage done) can be inflicted; in other cases a fine is prescribed.

291. When the nose-string is snapped, when the yoke is broken, when the carriage turns sideways or back, when the axle or a wheel is broken,

292. When the leather-thongs, the rope around the neck or the bridle are broken, and when (the driver) has loudly called out, 'Make way,' Manu has declared (that in all these cases) no punishment (shall be inflicted).

293. But if the cart turns off (the road) through the driver's want of skill, the owner shall be fined, if damage (is done), two hundred (paṇas).

294. If the driver is skilful (but negligent), he alone shall be fined; if the driver is unskilful, the occupants of the carriage (also) shall be each fined one hundred (paṇas).

295. But if he is stopped on his way by cattle or

288. 'The goods,' i.e. 'such objects as are not mentioned specially' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Rāgh.).

291-295. Yāgñ. II, 298-299.

291. 'When the carriage turns sideways or backwards,' i.e. 'off the road owing to its badness, to the animals taking fright, &c.' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Rāgh.).

295. There are two readings, aviṭāritaḥ, 'without doubt' (lit. 'not by (another) carriage, and he causes the death of any living being, a fine shall without doubt be imposed.

296. If a man is killed, his guilt will be at once the same as (that of) a thief; for large animals such as cows, elephants, camels or horses, half of that.

297. For injuring small cattle the fine (shall be) two hundred (panas); the fine for beautiful wild quadrupeds and birds shall amount to fifty (panas).

298. For donkeys, sheep, and goats the fine shall be five māshas; but the punishment for killing a dog or a pig shall be one māsha.

299. A wife, a son, a slave, a pupil, and a (younger) brother of the full blood, who have committed faults, may be beaten with a rope or a split bamboo,

300. But on the back part of the body (only), never on a noble part; he who strikes them otherwise will incur the same guilt as a thief.

301. Thus the whole law of assault (and hurt) has been declared completely; I will now explain the rules for the decision (in cases) of theft.

302. Let the king exert himself to the utmost to considered'), and viârita, 'is considered (to be just).' Medh. gives besides the explanation, adopted in the translation according to Kull., another one, 'is not considered (just).' He mentions also the second reading, which Gov., Râgh., Nâr., and Nand. have, and explains it with them by 'is considered (to be just).'

296. 'The same as that of a thief,' i. e. 'he must pay the highest amercement, or 1000 panas' (Medh., Gov., Nâr., Kull., Râgh., Nand.).

297-298. Vi. V, 50-54.

299-300. Âp. I, 8, 31; Gaut. II, 43-44.

300. 'Not on a noble part,' i. e. 'not on the chest or the head, &c.' (Medh., Kull.).

punish thieves; for, if he punishes thieves, his fame grows and his kingdom prospers.

303. That king, indeed, is ever worthy of honour who ensures the safety (of his subjects); for the sacrificial session (sattra, which he, as it were, performs thereby) ever grows in length, the safety (of his subjects representing) the sacrificial fee.

304. A king who (duly) protects (his subjects) receives from each and all the sixth part of their spiritual merit; if he does not protect them, the sixth part of their demerit also (will fall on him).

305. Whatever (merit a man gains by) reading the Veda, by sacrificing, by charitable gifts, (or by) worshipping (Gurus and gods), the king obtains a sixth part of that in consequence of his duly protecting (his kingdom).

306. A king who protects the created beings in accordance with the sacred law and smites those worthy of corporal punishment, daily offers (as it were) sacrifices at which hundred thousands (are given as) fees.

307. A king who does not afford protection, (yet) takes his share in kind, his taxes, tolls and duties, daily presents and fines, will (after death) soon sink into hell.

303-311. Âp. II, 25, 15; Vas. I, 42-44; Vi. V, 196; Yâgñ. I, 335-336, 358; see also below, IX, 252 seqq.

307. 'The share in kind,' i.e. 'the sixth part of the harvest' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), or 'the choice portions of fruit, grain, &c. to be given to the king.' 'Taxes,' i.e. gaṅghādāna (Medh.), or the land-tax paid in money (Nâr.), 'monthly taxes, or taxes payable in certain months by the villagers' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.). Sulka, i.e. 'the tolls and duties payable by merchants and traders' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). For pratibhāgam, i.e. 'the daily presents of fruit, vegetables, &c.,' the so-called Dālīs (Medh., Kull.),

308. They declare that a king who affords no protection, (yet) receives the sixth part of the produce, takes upon himself all the foulness of his whole people.

309. Know that a king who heeds not the rules (of the law), who is an atheist, and rapacious, who does not protect (his subjects, but) devours them, will sink low (after death).

310. Let him carefully restrain the wicked by three methods,—by imprisonment, by putting them in fetters, and by various (kinds of) corporal punishments.

311. For by punishing the wicked and by favouring the virtuous, kings are constantly sanctified, just as twice-born men by sacrifices.

312. A king who desires his own welfare must always forgive litigants, infants, aged and sick men, who inveigh against him.

313. He who, being abused by men in pain, pardons (them), will in reward of that (act) be exalted in heaven; but he who, (proud) of his kingly state,

Nâr. and Râgh. read pratibhogam, Gov. bhûtibhogam, and Nand. prîtibhogam, but the explanation of the first two var. lect. is the same. Prîtibhoga would however denote all 'benevolences,' which usually are called prîtîdâna and are levied on particular occasions.

308. Medh. and Nâr. read arakshitâram attâram, '(a king) who affords no protection, (yet) devours (his subjects and) takes, &c.'

309. Nand. reads at the end of the verse asatyam ka nrîpam tyaget, 'Let him forsake a king who heeds not the rules . . . and is untruthful.' This var. lect. is mentioned by Medh. Vipralumpakam (or 'lopakam'), 'rapacious,' means according to Nâr., Nand., and Râgh. 'who takes the goods of Brâhmanas or injures them.'

310. 'The wicked,' i.e. 'thieves, because the topic (is theft),' (Medh.).

311. 'Twice-born men,' i.e. 'Brâhmanas' (Medh., Nâr.).

forgives them not, will for that (reason) sink into hell.

314. A thief shall, running, approach the king, with flying hair, confessing that theft (and saying), 'Thus have I done, punish me;'

315. (And he must) carry on his shoulder a pestle, or a club of Khadira wood, or a spear sharp at both ends, or an iron staff.

316. Whether he be punished or pardoned, the thief is freed from the (guilt of) theft; but the king, if he punishes not, takes upon himself the guilt of the thief.

317. The killer of a learned Brāhmaṇa throws his guilt on him who eats his food, an adulterous wife on her (negligent) husband, a (sinning) pupil or sacrificer on (their negligent) teacher (or priest), a thief on the king (who pardons him).

318. But men who have committed crimes and have been punished by the king, go to heaven, being pure like those who performed meritorious deeds.

319. He who steals the rope or the water-pot from a well, or damages a hut where water is distri-

314-316. Âp. I, 25, 4-5; Gaut. XII, 43-45; Vas. XX, 41; Baudh. II, 1, 16-17; Vi. LII, 1-2; Yâgñ. III, 257.

314. Medh. and Nand. read instead of dhāvata, 'running,' dhīmatā, (shall approach the king) 'with firm determination.' But Medh. mentions the other reading too, the correctness of which is attested by Vas. loc. cit. According to the commentators and the parallel passages, a repentant thief is meant who has stolen gold belonging to a Brāhmaṇa; see also below, XI, 199-201.

317. Vas. XIX, 44. Medh. gives verse 317 after 318, but remarks that the order ought to be inverted. He says that a priest must leave a disobedient sacrificer; else the guilt of irregularities committed by the latter will fall upon the priest.

319. 'Damages,' i.e. 'takes away the wood belonging to it' (Nâr.).

buted, shall pay one mâsha as a fine and restore the (article abstracted or damaged) in its (proper place).

320. On him who steals more than ten kumbhas of grain corporal punishment (shall be inflicted); in other cases he shall be fined eleven times as much, and shall pay to the (owner the value of his) property.

321. So shall corporal punishment be inflicted for stealing more than a hundred (palas) of articles sold by the weight, (i. e.) of gold, silver, and so forth, and of most excellent clothes.

322. For (stealing) more than fifty (palas) it is enacted that the hands (of the offender) shall be cut off; but in other cases, let him inflict a fine of eleven times the value.

323. For stealing men of noble family and especially women and the most precious gems, (the offender) deserves corporal (or capital) punishment.

324. For stealing large animals, weapons, or medicines, let the king fix a punishment, after considering the time and the purpose (for which they were destined).

'One mâsha,' i. e. 'of copper' (Medh.), 'of gold' (Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.).

320. Vi. V, 12. 'A kumbha is equal to 20 or 22 prasthas of 32 palas each' (Medh.), or 'to 20 droṇas of 200 palas each' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'to 200 palas' (Nâr.). Vadhaḥ, 'corporal punishment,' i. e. 'flogging, mutilation, or even capital punishment, according to the quality of the person robbed' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

321. Vi. V, 13. According to Nâr. and Râgh., other things than gold and silver are to be understood by dharima, 'sold by the weight.' But Medh., Gov., and Kull. explain as above.

322. Vi. V, 81-82. Nâr. thinks that this rule refers to copper and the like metals of small value. But it is also possible to remove the seeming inconsistency, by explaining the term vadhaḥ in the preceding verse by 'capital punishment.'

324-325. Vi. V, 77-78.

324. 'The purpose for which the object was destined,' i. e. 'whether

325. For (stealing) cows belonging to Brâhmanas, for piercing (the nostrils of) a barren cow, and for stealing (other) cattle (belonging to Brâhmanas, the offender) shall forthwith lose half his feet.

326. (For stealing) thread, cotton, drugs causing fermentation, cowdung, molasses, sour milk, sweet milk, butter-milk, water, or grass,

327. Vessels made of bamboo or other cane, salt of various kinds, earthen (vessels), earth and ashes,

328. Fish, birds, oil, clarified butter, meat, honey, and other things that come from beasts,

329. Or other things of a similar kind, spirituous liquor, boiled rice, and every kind of cooked food, the fine (shall be) twice the value (of the stolen article).

330. For flowers, green corn, shrubs, creepers, trees, and other unhusked (grain) the fine (shall be) five krishnalas.

weapons were stolen during a combat, or medicines from a very sick man' (Medh., Gov., Râgh.).

325. Instead of the reading of the editions, 'sthûrikâyâs ka bhêdane,' Medh., Nâr., Râgh., Nand., and K. have 'sthûrikâyâs ka bhedane,' which is no doubt the correct version, the vulgata being caused by a mislecture of the old form of the letter 'tha.' Kull. and Râgh. explain the phrase in the manner given above, and Gov., who reads 'nâsa[si]kâyâs ka bhedane,' agrees with them. Medh., on the other hand, says that sthûrikâ means 'an ox' (balîvardaḥ), and the phrase must be taken 'for pricking with a goad (and using for one's purpose) the ox (of another man).' Nâr. finally asserts that sthûrikâ means 'a load placed on an ox,' and interprets the words by 'for cutting open a sack carried by an ox and abstracting its contents.'

326-331. Vi. V, 83-86.

328. 'Other things that come from beasts,' i. e. 'skins, horns, goroḥanâ, &c.' (Gov., Nâr., Kull., Râgh.).

329. 'Other things of a similar kind,' i. e. 'red arsenic, red lead, &c.' (Gov., Kull.), or 'other eatables' (Nand.).

330. Gaut. XII, 18. Gov. reads alpeshu, 'for a little unhusked

331. For husked grain, vegetables, roots, and fruit the fine (shall be) one hundred (panas) if there is no connexion (between the owner and the thief), fifty (panas) if such a connexion exists.

332. An offence (of this description), which is committed in the presence (of the owner) and with violence, will be robbery; if (it is committed) in his absence, it will be theft; likewise if (the possession of) anything is denied after it has been taken.

333. On that man who may steal (any of) the above-mentioned articles, when they are prepared for (use), let the king inflict the first (or lowest) amercement; likewise on him who may steal (a sacred) fire out of the room (in which it is kept).

334. With whatever limb a thief in any way commits (an offence) against men, even of that (the king) shall deprive him in order to prevent (a repetition of the crime).

(grain),’ instead of anyeshu, ‘other.’ ‘Five *krishṇa*las,’ i. e. ‘of gold’ (Medh.), ‘of gold or silver’ (Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

331. Nirānvaye, ‘if there be no connexion (between the owner and the thief),’ means according to Medh. either ‘if there be no connexion by friendly mutual leading,’ or ‘if there be no connexion such as residence in the same village,’ or ‘if there was no watchman in the field.’ Gov. and Nâr. agree with the first explanation, Kull. and Râgh. with the second; but see above, verse 198.

332. Yâgñ. II, 230. Medh. and Nâr. place this verse after the next.

333. ‘Prepared for use,’ i. e. ‘for eating’ (Medh., Nâr.), or ‘thread worked into cloth’ (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.). ‘Fire,’ i. e. either the sacred fire (Medh., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), or also the common fire (Gov.). Medh. and Nand. read satam, ‘one hundred panas,’ instead of *âdya*m, ‘the lowest amercement,’ which latter reading Medh. mentions too.

334. Pratyâdeśâya, ‘in order to prevent (a repetition of the offence),’ (Gov., Kull., Râgh., Nand.), means according to Medh. and Nâr. ‘in order to deter (others).’

335. Neither a father, nor a teacher, nor a friend, nor a mother, nor a wife, nor a son, nor a domestic priest must be left unpunished by a king, if they do not keep within their duty.

336. Where another common man would be fined one kârshâpana, the king shall be fined one thousand; that is the settled rule.

337. In (a case of) theft the guilt of a Sûdra shall be eightfold, that of a Vaisya sixteenfold, that of a Kshatriya two-and-thirtyfold,

338. That of a Brâhmaṇa sixty-fourfold, or quite a hundredfold, or (even) twice four-and-sixtyfold; (each of them) knowing the nature of the offence.

339. (The taking of) roots and of fruit from trees, of wood for a (sacrificial) fire, and of grass for feeding cows, Manu has declared (to be) no theft.

340. A Brâhmaṇa, seeking to obtain property from a man who took what was not given to him, either by sacrificing for him or by teaching him, is even like a thief.

341. A twice-born man, who is travelling and whose provisions are exhausted, shall not be fined, if he takes two stalks of sugar-cane or two (esculent) roots from the field of another man.

335. Yâgñ. I, 357.

336. The king shall throw the money, due as a fine for an offence he may have committed, into the water or give it to Brâhmaṇas (Medh., Gov., Kull.), in accordance with IX, 245.

337-338. Gaut. XII, 15-17.

337. 'The guilt' means of course that the offender has to pay a fine in proportion.

339. Âp. I, 28, 3; Gaut. XII, 28; Yâgñ. II, 166. According to Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., and Râgh., the condition is that the things taken were unenclosed.

341. Gaut. XII, 49-50; see also below, IX, 239, 241.

342. He who ties up unbound or sets free tied up (cattle of other men), he who takes a slave, a horse, or a carriage will have incurred the guilt of a thief.

343. A king who punishes thieves according to these rules, will gain fame in this world and after death unsurpassable bliss.

344. A king who desires to gain the throne of Indra and imperishable eternal fame, shall not, even for a moment, neglect (to punish) the man who commits violence.

345. He who commits violence must be considered as the worst offender, (more wicked) than a defamer, than a thief, and than he who injures (another) with a staff.

346. But that king who pardons the perpetrator of violence quickly perishes and incurs hatred.

347. Neither for friendship's sake, nor for the sake of great lucre, must a king let go perpetrators of violence, who cause terror to all creatures.

348. Twice-born men may take up arms when (they are) hindered (in the fulfilment of) their duties, when destruction (threatens) the twice-born castes (varṇa) in (evil) times,

342. 'Takes a slave, &c.,' i.e. 'makes them do his work' (Nâr.). The other commentators think of actual theft.

344. Sâhasa, 'violence,' comprises according to Medh. robbery (see also above, verse 332), rape, arson, cutting clothes, or forcibly destroying property.

348-351. Gaut. VII, 25; Vas. III, 15-18, 24; Baudh. I, 18-23; Vi. V, 189-192.

348. I.e. when robbers and so forth do not allow the twice-born to offer sacrifices or to fulfil other sacred duties (Medh.), or when in times of a foreign invasion (Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), or of a famine (Nâr.), the twice-born castes are threatened by an improper intermixture (saṃkara).

349. In their own defence, in a strife for the fees of officiating priests, and in order to protect women and Brâhmanas; he who (under such circumstances) kills in the cause of right, commits no sin.

350. One may slay without hesitation an assassin who approaches (with murderous intent), whether (he be one's) teacher, a child or an aged man, or a Brâhmana deeply versed in the Vedas.

351. By killing an assassin the slayer incurs no guilt, whether (he does it) publicly or secretly; in that case fury recoils upon fury.

352. Men who commit adultery with the wives of others, the king shall cause to be marked by punishments which cause terror, and afterwards banish. +

353. For by (adultery) is caused a mixture of the castes (varṇa) among men; thence (follows) sin, which cuts up even the roots and causes the destruction of everything. L.

354. A man formerly accused of (such) offences, who secretly converses with another man's wife, shall pay the first (or lowest) amercement.

355. But a man, not before accused, who (thus) speaks with (a woman) for some (reasonable) cause, shall not incur any guilt, since in him there is no transgression.

350. According to Kull. the condition is that one must be unable to save oneself by flight, according to Nâr. one must not wound such a man 'excessively.'

351. 'Secretly,' i. e. 'by incantations or spells' (Gov., Nâr., Nand.).

353. I. e. if a mixture of the castes takes place, the sacrifices cannot be offered properly, because duly qualified sacrificers are wanting. If sacrifices are not duly offered, no rain will fall (see above, III, 76), and everything will perish (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

354-358. Âp. II, 26, 18-19; Yâgñ. II, 284.

356. He who addresses the wife of another man at a Tīrtha, outside the village, in a forest, or at the confluence of rivers, shall suffer (the punishment for) adulterous acts (samgrahana).

357. Offering presents (to a woman), romping (with her), touching her ornaments and dress, sitting with her on a bed, all (these acts) are considered adulterous acts (samgrahana).

358. If one touches a woman in a place (which ought) not (to be touched) or allows (oneself to be touched in such a spot), all (such acts done) with mutual consent are declared (to be) adulterous (samgrahana).

✓ 359. A man who is not a Brāhmaṇa ought to suffer death for adultery (samgrahana); for the wives of all the four castes even must always be carefully guarded.

360. Mendicants, bards, men who have performed the initiatory ceremony of a Vedic sacrifice, and artisans are not prohibited from speaking to married women.

356. 'A Tīrtha,' i. e. 'a place on the river-bank where the women fetch water' (Medh., Nār., Rāgh.). The punishment is the highest amercement (Kull.). Nand. places this verse after 357.

358. Nand. says, 'If one touches a woman in a lonely place.' Gov. also mentions this explanation.

359. According to Gov., Kull., Rāgh. this rule refers to adultery committed by a Sūdra with a Brāhmaṇī (Rāgh.) or to the violation of a Brāhmaṇī by a Sūdra (Gov., Kull.). Medh., too, thinks that a Sūdra alone is to suffer capital punishment for adultery with an Āryan woman. Nand., finally, says that Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, and Sūdras are meant, who offend with a female of a higher caste. Possibly the correct explanation of prānāntam dandam, 'death,' may, however, be 'a punishment, even death.' This rendering at least removes all the difficulties created by the parallel passages and the following verses.

361. Let no man converse with the wives of others after he has been forbidden (to do so); but he who converses (with them), in spite of a prohibition, shall be fined one suvarṇa.

362. This rule does not apply to the wives of actors and singers, nor (of) those who live on (the intrigues of) their own (wives); for such men send their wives (to others) or, concealing themselves, allow them to hold criminal intercourse.

363. Yet he who secretly converses with such women, or with female slaves kept by one (master), and with female ascetics, shall be compelled to pay a small fine.

364. He who violates an unwilling maiden shall instantly suffer corporal punishment; but a man who enjoys a willing maiden shall not suffer corporal punishment, if (his caste be) the same (as hers).

365. From a maiden who makes advances to a (man of) high (caste), he shall not take any fine; but her, who courts a (man of) low (caste), let him force to live confined in her house.

361. Yāgñ. II, 285.

362. Baudh. II, 4, 3. I translate kāraṇa according to the commentators by 'actors and singers,' but it may also be the name of a caste which is well known in Western India.

363. 'Female ascetics,' i. e. 'Rakshakās (?)', Sīlamitrās (?), and so forth' (Medh.), or 'Buddhist nuns' (Gov., Kull., Rāgh.). Nār. says 'female mendicants.' It deserves to be noted that according to a passage attributed by Gov. and Nār. to Baudhāyana, but not found in our text, 'some' permitted even orthodox females to become ascetics. Female ascetics were probably in ancient India as common as they are now, and were considered equally disreputable.

364-368. Yāgñ. II, 288.

365. 'From a maiden,' i. e. 'from her relatives or guardians' (Medh.). According to Kull. and Nār. the girl is to be fettered, according to Medh. to be guarded by her relatives. The confinement is to last until she is cured of her attachment.

366. A (man of) low (caste) who makes love to a maiden (of) the highest (caste) shall suffer corporal punishment; he who addresses a maiden (of) equal (caste) shall pay the nuptial fee, if her father desires it.

367. But if any man through insolence forcibly contaminates a maiden, two of his fingers shall be instantly cut off, and he shall pay a fine of six hundred (paṇas).

368. A man (of) equal (caste) who defiles a willing maiden shall not suffer the amputation of his fingers, but shall pay a fine of two hundred (paṇas) in order to deter him from a repetition (of the offence).

369. A damsel who pollutes (another) damsel must be fined two hundred (paṇas), pay the double of her (nuptial) fee, and receive ten (lashes with a) rod.

370. But a woman who pollutes a damsel shall instantly have (her head) shaved or two fingers cut off, and be made to ride (through the town) on a donkey.

371. If a wife, proud of the greatness of her relatives or (her own) excellence, violates the duty which she owes to her lord, the king shall cause

366. The meaning of the second clause is that if the father wishes it, the offender is to marry the girl, after paying the nuptial fee (Kull., Nâr.). If the father does not wish to receive the fee, the offender is to pay an equal sum as a fine to the king (Medh., Gov., Râgh.).

370. According to Medh. and Nâr. the verse prescribes three different punishments, and a Brâhmaṇ offender is to be shaved, a Kshatriyâ to be led through the streets on a donkey, while women of other castes are to lose two fingers. According to Gov., Kull., and Râgh. the punishment is to be regulated by the circumstances.

371-372. Gaut. XXIII, 14-15; Vi. V, 18.

her to be devoured by dogs in a place frequented by many.

372. Let him cause the male offender to be burnt on a red-hot iron bed ; they shall put logs under it, (until) the sinner is burned (to death).

373. On a man (once) convicted, who is (again) accused within a year, a double fine (must be inflicted); even thus (must the fine be doubled) for (repeated) intercourse with a Vrâtyâ and a Kandâlî.

374. A Sûdra who has intercourse with a woman of a twice-born caste (varṇa), guarded or unguarded, (shall be punished in the following manner): if she was unguarded, he loses the part (offending) and all his property; if she was guarded, everything (even his life).

375. (For intercourse with a guarded Brâhman, a Vaisya shall forfeit all his property after imprisonment for a year; a Kshatriya shall be fined one thousand (paṇas) and be shaved with the urine (of an ass).

376. If a Vaisya or a Kshatriya has connexion with an unguarded Brâhman, let him fine the Vaisya five hundred (paṇas) and the Kshatriya one thousand.

377. But even these two, if they offend with a

373. 'A Vrâtyâ,' i.e. 'the wife of an Âryan who has not been initiated' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.); see above, II, 39; or 'one not married in proper time' (Nâr. and Medh.), which latter attempts also another explanation, 'a public woman' or 'one common to several men.' The fine intended is two thousand paṇas (Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

374. Âp. II, 26, 20; 27, 9; Gaut. XII, 2-3; Vas. XXI, 5, 5; Baudh. II, 3, 52; Yâgñ. II, 286, 294. 'Guarded,' i.e. 'by her husband or relatives' (Medh., Kull., Râgh.).

377. Âp. II, 26, 20; Vas. XXI, 2-3; Yâgñ. II, 286. 'Like a Sûdra,' see verse 374.

Brâhmanî (not only) guarded (but the wife of an eminent man), shall be punished like a Sûdra or be burnt in a fire of dry grass.

378. A Brâhmana who carnally knows a guarded Brâhmanî against her will, shall be fined one thousand (paṇas); but he shall be made to pay five hundred, if he had connexion with a willing one.

379. Tonsure (of the head) is ordained for a Brâhmana (instead of) capital punishment; but (men of) other castes shall suffer capital punishment.

380. Let him never slay a Brâhmana, though he have committed all (possible) crimes; let him banish such an (offender), leaving all his property (to him) and (his body) unhurt.

381. No greater crime is known on earth than slaying a Brâhmana; a king, therefore, must not even conceive in his mind the thought of killing a Brâhmana.

382. If a Vaisya approaches a guarded female of the Kshatriya caste, or a Kshatriya a (guarded) Vaisya woman, they both deserve the same punishment as in the case of an unguarded Brâhmana female.

383. A Brâhmana shall be compelled to pay a fine of one thousand (paṇas) if he has intercourse with guarded (females of) those two (castes); for (offending with) a (guarded) Sûdra female a fine of one thousand (paṇas shall be inflicted) on a Kshatriya or a Vaisya.

384. For (intercourse with) an unguarded Kshatriyâ a fine of five hundred (paṇas shall fall) on a

382. According to the commentators the rule of verse 376 applies.

Vaisya; but (for the same offence) a Kshatriya shall be shaved with the urine (of a donkey) or (pay) the same fine.

385. A Brâhmana who approaches unguarded females (of the) Kshatriya or Vaisya (castes), or a Sûdra female, shall be fined five hundred (panas); but (for intercourse with) a female (of the) lowest (castes), one thousand.

386. That king in whose town lives no thief, no adulterer, no defamer, no man guilty of violence, and no committer of assaults, attains the world of Sakra (Indra).

387. The suppression of those five in his dominions secures to a king paramount sovereignty among his peers and fame in the world.

388. A sacrificer who forsakes an officiating priest, and an officiating priest who forsakes a sacrificer, (each being) able to perform his work and not contaminated (by grievous crimes), must each be fined one hundred (panas).

389. Neither a mother, nor a father, nor a wife, nor a son shall be cast off; he who casts them off, unless guilty of a crime causing loss of caste, shall be fined by the king six hundred (panas).

390. If twice-born men dispute among each other

385. 'A female of the lowest castes,' i.e. 'a Kandâli' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'belonging to the castes of washermen, leather-workers, actors, basket-makers, fishermen, Medas, or Bhillas' (Nâr.).

386. Vi. V, 196.

388. 'An officiating priest,' i.e. 'one who has sacrificed for his family since many generations' (Gov., Nâr.).

389. Vi. V, 163; Yâgñ. II, 237. 'Shall not be cast off,' i.e. 'shall not be refused maintenance or the due respect' (Medh., Gov., Kull.).

390. 'Of the orders,' i.e. 'of the four orders' (Nâr., Râgh.), or 'of the householders' (Gov., Kull.). Medh. and Nand. take âsrama concerning the duty of the orders, a king who desires his own welfare should not (hastily) decide (what is) the law.

391. Having shown them due honour, he should, with (the assistance of) Brâhmanas, first soothe them by gentle (speech) and afterwards teach them their duty.

392. A Brâhmana who does not invite his next neighbour and his neighbour next but one, (though) both (be) worthy (of the honour), to a festival at which twenty Brâhmanas are entertained, is liable to a fine of one mâsha.

393. A Srotriya who does not entertain a virtuous Srotriya at auspicious festive rites, shall be made to pay him twice (the value of) the meal and a mâsha of gold (as a fine to the king).

394. A blind man, an idiot, (a cripple) who moves with the help of a board, a man full seventy years old, and he who confers benefits on Srotriyas, shall not be compelled by any (king) to pay a tax.

not in the sense of 'order,' but of 'hermitage,' and 'twice-born men' in the sense of 'hermits.' Nâr. explains na vibrûyât, 'shall not (hastily) decide,' by 'shall not wrongly decide by himself.'

392. Vi. V, 94; Yâgñ. II, 263. 'A festival,' i.e. 'a wedding and so forth' (Medh.), or 'at which a dinner is given' (Nand.). Anuversya, 'his next neighbour but one' (Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), means according to Medh., Gov., and Nand. 'he who lives at the back of his house,' while the neighbour living opposite is the prâtiversitya. 'Twenty,' i.e. 'twenty or more other Brâhmanas' (Gov.). 'A mâsha,' i.e. 'of silver' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'of gold' (Medh., Nâr.).

393. 'A virtuous Srotriya,' i.e. 'a neighbour' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'living in the same village' (Nâr.). Medh. says, 'one who is not a neighbour.'

394. Âp. II, 26, 10-15; Vas. XIX, 23-24. '(A cripple) who moves with the help of a board' is not an uncommon sight in the streets of Indian towns. 'By any (king),' i.e. 'even by one whose treasury is empty.'

395. Let the king always treat kindly a Srotriya, a sick or distressed man, an infant and an aged or an indigent man, a man of high birth, and an honourable man (Ārya).

396. A washerman shall wash (the clothes of his employers) gently on a smooth board of Sālmalt-wood ; he shall not return the clothes (of one person) for those (of another), nor allow anybody (but the owner) to wear them.

397. A weaver (who has received) ten palas (of thread), shall return (cloth weighing) one pala more ; he who acts differently shall be compelled to pay a fine of twelve (paṇas).

398. Let the king take one-twentieth of that (amount) which men, well acquainted with the settlement of tolls and duties (and) skilful in (estimating the value of) all kinds of merchandise, may fix as the value for each saleable commodity.

399. Let the king confiscate the whole property of (a trader) who out of greed exports goods of which the king has a monopoly or (the export of which is) forbidden.

396. Yāgñ. II, 238. Sālmali, or cotton-tree wood, is naturally soft (Medh.).

397. Yāgñ. II, 179. Instead of 'twelve (paṇas),' (Kull., Rāgh.), Medh. proposes 'twelve (palas),' Gov. 'twelve (times the value of the thread),' and Nār. 'one-twelfth (of the value of the thread).' Nand. reads daraphalam and ekaphalādhikam, and says that the weaver is to pay to the king the profit of each eleventh piece of work which he performs.

398. Yāgñ. II, 261. Instead of 'of that (amount),' (Medh., Nār.), Gov., Kull., and Rāgh. say 'of the profit on that.'

399. Yāgñ. II, 261. Medh. gives as instances of monopolies, elephants ; in Kasmīr, saffron ; in the east, fine cloth and wool ; in the west, horses ; in the south, precious stones and pearls. Saffron is still a royal monopoly in Kasmīr.

400. He who avoids a custom-house (or a toll), he who buys or sells at an improper time, or he who makes a false statement in enumerating (his goods), shall be fined eight times (the amount of duty) which he tried to evade.

401. Let (the king) fix (the rates for) the purchase and sale of all marketable goods, having (duly) considered whence they come, whither they go, how long they have been kept, the (probable) profit and the (probable) outlay.

402. Once in five nights, or at the close of each fortnight, let the king publicly settle the prices for the (merchants).

403. All weights and measures must be duly marked, and once in six months let him re-examine them.

404. At a ferry an (empty) cart shall be made to pay one pana, a man's (load) half a pana, an animal and a woman one quarter of a (pana), an unloaded man one-half of a quarter.

405. Carts (laden) with vessels full (of merchandise) shall be made to pay toll at a ferry according to the value (of the goods), empty vessels and men without luggage some trifle.

400. Yâgñ. II, 262. 'At an improper time,' i. e. 'at night and so forth' (Medh., Gov., Nâr., Kull., Râgh.).

402. Yâgñ. II, 251. Gov. and Kull. say, 'let the king settle the price in the presence of those (experts,' see verse 398). The translation follows Râgh. The length of the periods depends thereon, whether the goods vary much in price. Medh. omits this and the next four verses.

403. Vas. XIX, 13.

405. 'Empty vessels,' i. e. such as serve for the transport of merchandise, jars, leather-bags, baskets, &c. Aparikkhadâh, 'men without luggage,' may also be translated 'men without attendants.' Kull. and Râgh. say, 'poor men.'

406. For a long passage the boat-hire must be proportioned to the places and times; know that this (rule refers) to (passages along) the banks of rivers; at sea there is no settled (freight).

407. But a woman who has been pregnant two months or more, an ascetic, a hermit in the forest, and Brâhmanas who are students of the Veda, shall not be made to pay toll at a ferry.

408. Whatever may be damaged in a boat by the fault of the boatmen, that shall be made good by the boatmen collectively, (each paying) his share.

409. This decision in suits (brought) by passengers (holds good only) in case the boatmen are culpably negligent on the water; in the case of (an accident) caused by (the will of) the gods, no fine can be (inflicted on them).

410. (The king) should order a Vaisya to trade, to lend money, to cultivate the land, or to tend cattle, and a Sûdra to serve the twice-born castes.

411. (Some wealthy) Brâhmana shall compassionately support both a Kshatriya and a Vaisya, if they are distressed for a livelihood, employing them on work (which is suitable for) their (castes).

412. But a Brâhmana who, because he is powerful, out of greed makes initiated (men of the) twice-born (castes) against their will do the work of slaves, shall be fined by the king six hundred (panas).

407. Vi. V, 132. According to Medh., heterodox monks must pay, because the word Brâhmana (taken above with students) refers to all the persons mentioned.

408. 'Whatever,' i. e. 'merchandise' (Medh., Nâr.), or 'luggage' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

411. I. e. he shall employ a poor Kshatriya as watchman, and a Vaisya as herdsman (Medh.). If he employs them in this way, he is not punishable (Gov., Kull.).

413. But a Sûdra, whether bought or unbought, he may compel to do servile work; for he was created by the Self-existent (Svayambhû) to be the slave of a Brâhmana.

414. A Sûdra, though emancipated by his master, is not released from servitude; since that is innate in him, who can set him free from it?

415. There are slaves of seven kinds, (viz.) he who is made a captive under a standard, he who serves for his daily food, he who is born in the house, he who is bought and he who is given, he who is inherited from ancestors, and he who is enslaved by way of punishment.

416. A wife, a son, and a slave, these three are declared to have no property; the wealth which they earn is (acquired) for him to whom they belong.

413. 'Whether bought or unbought,' i. e. 'whether maintained in consideration of service or not' (Gov., Kull., Ragh.), or 'whether bought or hired' (Nâr.).

414. Medh. says that the last clause is 'an arthavâda, because further on it will be shown that a slave can be emancipated.' Kull. thinks that an emancipated Sûdra must still serve Brâhmanas or other Âryans in order to gain spiritual merit.

415. Medh. rejects the notion that a captive Kshatriya can be made a slave, and thinks that a captured Sûdra must be meant; but see Yâgñ. II, 183, where it is laid down that Kshatriyas may become the slaves of Brâhmanas and Vaisyas of Brâhmanas and Kshatriyas. Nâr. explains dhvagâhrîtaḥ, 'one made a captive under a standard,' by 'one who has become a slave by marrying a female slave.' 'Enslaved by way of punishment,' i. e. 'because he cannot pay a debt or a fine' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'also because he left a religious order' (see Vi. V., 152), (Nâr., Nand.)

416. According to Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh., the verse means only that these persons are unable to dispose of their property independently. Nâr.'s short note (adhigakṣhamti parakarmakara-nâdinâ) seems to indicate that he took it to refer to their incapacity to earn money by working for others.

417. A Brāhmaṇa may confidently seize the goods of (his) Sūdra (slave); for, as that (slave) can have no property, his master may take his possessions.

418. (The king) should carefully compel Vaisyas and Sūdras to perform the work (prescribed) for them; for if these two (castes) swerved from their duties, they would throw this (whole) world into confusion.

419. Let him daily look after the completion of his undertakings, his beasts of burden, and carriages, (the collection of) his revenues and the disbursements, his mines and his treasury.

420. A king who thus brings to a conclusion all the legal business enumerated above, and removes all sin, reaches the highest state (of bliss).

CHAPTER IX.

1. I will now propound the eternal laws for a husband and his wife who keep to the path of duty, whether they be united or separated.

2. Day and night women must be kept in depend-

417. 'Confidently' means according to Medh., Nâr., and Nand. 'without fearing that he commits the sin of accepting a present from a Sūdra.'

419. Karmântân, 'the completion of his undertakings' (Kull, Râgh.), means according to Medh., Gov., and Nand. 'the works,' i. e. 'agriculture, offices for collecting tolls and duties, and so forth' (Medh., Gov.), according to Nâr. 'the workshops, e. g. for making arms.' The last explanation is perhaps the best.

IX. 1. According to Medh., Gov., and Kull. the duties of husband and wife are placed in the section on civil and criminal law, because the king can and even is bound to enforce their observance by punishments, if either of the two raises a complaint. 'Separated,' i. e. 'when the husband is absent or dead' (Nâr., Râgh.).

2-3. Gaut. XVIII, 1; Vas. V, 1-2; Baudh. II, 3, 44-45; Vi. V, 1-2; Yâgñ. I, 85.

ence by the males (of) their (families), and, if they attach themselves to sensual enjoyments, they must be kept under one's control.

3. Her father protects (her) in childhood, her husband protects (her) in youth, and her sons protect (her) in old age; a woman is never fit for independence.

4. Reprehensible is the father who gives not (his daughter in marriage) at the proper time; reprehensible is the husband who approaches not (his wife in due season), and reprehensible is the son who does not protect his mother after her husband has died.

5. Women must particularly be guarded against evil inclinations, however trifling (they may appear); for, if they are not guarded, they will bring sorrow on two families.

6. Considering that the highest duty of all castes, even weak husbands (must) strive to guard their wives.

7. He who carefully guards his wife, preserves (the purity of) his offspring, virtuous conduct, his family, himself, and his (means of acquiring) merit.

2. 'Must be kept under one's control,' i. e. 'they must be restrained from their vicious attachment' (âtmano vâse sthâpyâ yathâ na sa-gyante), (Nâr.)

4. Yâgñ. I, 64. 'At the proper time,' i. e. before she is marriageable; see Gaut. XVIII, 21; Vas. XVII, 67-71. 'The husband,' see Baudh. IV, 1, 17-19, and above, III, 45. After this verse K. inserts another, not mentioned by the commentators, 'If the wife is guarded, the (purity of the) offspring is secured thereby; if the (purity of the) offspring is secured, oneself is secure.'

6. Yâgñ. I, 81. 'Weak husbands,' i. e. 'blind, lame, or poor ones, &c.' (Kull., Râgh.).

7. 'His family,' i. e. 'his ancestors,' because legitimate sons alone can offer the Srâddhas (Medh., Gov., Kull.), or 'his relatives,' because adultery brings dishonour (Medh., Râgh.), or 'the position of the

8. The husband, after conception by his wife, becomes an embryo and is born again of her ; for that is the wifehood of a wife (gâyâ), that he is born (gâyate) again by her.

9. As the male is to whom a wife cleaves, even so is the son whom she brings forth ; let him therefore carefully guard his wife, in order to keep his offspring pure.

10. No man can completely guard women by force ; but they can be guarded by the employment of the (following) expedients :

11. Let the (husband) employ his (wife) in the collection and expenditure of his wealth, in keeping (everything) clean, in (the fulfilment of) religious duties, in the preparation of his food, and in looking after the household utensils.

12. Women, confined in the house under trustworthy and obedient servants, are not (well) guarded ; but those who of their own accord keep guard over themselves, are well guarded.

13. Drinking (spirituous liquor), associating with wicked people, separation from the husband, rambling abroad, sleeping (at unseasonable hours), and dwelling in other men's houses, are the six causes of the ruin of women.

family' (Nâr.), or 'his property' (Râgh.). 'Himself,' i. e. 'because legitimate children alone can offer the Srâddhas' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'because an adulteress and her paramour are likely to attempt his life' (Medh.). 'His (means of acquiring) merit,' i. e. 'because the husband of an adulteress is not entitled to kindle the sacred fire' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.). Nâr. says, 'his duty (as a householder).'

8. Yâgñ. I, 56. The idea is taken from the Veda ; see e.g. Aitareya-brâhmaṇa VII, 13, to which Kull. refers.

13. 'Associating with wicked people,' i. e. 'with other unfaithful wives' (Nâr.), or 'with adulterers' (Râgh.).

✓ 14. Women do not care for beauty, nor is their attention fixed on age; (thinking), '(It is enough that) he is a man,' they give themselves to the handsome and to the ugly.

15. Through their passion for men, through their mutable temper, through their natural heartlessness, they become disloyal towards their husbands, however carefully they may be guarded in this (world).

16. Knowing their disposition, which the Lord of creatures laid in them at the creation, to be such, (every) man should most strenuously exert himself to guard them.

17. (When creating them) Manu allotted to women (a love of their) bed, (of their) seat and (of) ornament, impure desires, wrath, dishonesty, malice, and bad conduct.

18. For women no (sacramental) rite (is performed) with sacred texts, thus the law is settled; women (who are) destitute of strength and destitute of (the knowledge of) Vedic texts, (are as impure as) falsehood (itself), that is a fixed rule.

19. And to this effect many sacred texts are sung also in the Vedas, in order to (make) fully known the true disposition (of women); hear (now those texts which refer to) the expiation of their (sins).

20. 'If my mother, going astray and unfaithful, conceived illicit desires, may my father keep that seed from me,' that is the scriptural text.

18. The sacramental rites meant are the birth-ceremony and so forth; see also above, II, 66. 'Destitute of strength' (Gov.), i. e. 'of firmness, intelligence, bodily strength, &c.' (Medh., Nand.). The second half verse is closely allied to that quoted Baudh. II, 3, 46, and, like the latter, probably a modification of a Vedic passage.

20. The verse is a slightly altered Mantra which occurs in the

21. If a woman thinks in her heart of anything that would pain her husband, the (above-mentioned text) is declared (to be a means for) completely removing such infidelity.

22. Whatever be the qualities of the man with whom a woman is united according to the law, such qualities even she assumes, like a river (united) with the ocean.

23. Akshamâlâ, a woman of the lowest birth, being united to Vasishtha and Sâraṅgî, (being united) to Mandapâla, became worthy of honour.

24. These and other females of low birth have Sâṅkhâya Grihya-sûtra III, 13, and in the Kâturmâsya portion of the Kâṭhaka recension of the Black Yagur-veda. According to the former work it is to be recited by an Anyatrakarava, 'the son of a paramour.' But the Kaṭhas prescribe its use by every sacrificer who offers a Kâturmâsya sacrifice. Medh., Gov., and Kull. probably allude to the custom of the latter school when they say that the Mantra must be recited by every sacrificer, and that its viniyoga or destination is to be repeated at the Kâturmâsya and at the Anvash-takâ-srâddha. Gov., Kull., Râgh., Nâr., and Nand. explain retah, 'seed,' by mâtriragorûpam skannam, and vrîṅktâm, 'may he keep away,' either by bhagatâm (svîkarotu, Nâr., Nand.), 'may he take for himself,' or by sodhayatu, 'may he purify' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.). Medh. likewise knows the last explanation. But he gives also another, retah pituh sambandhi yad retah sukram, and vrîṅktâm, apanudatu, which comes nearer to that given above. Nidarshanam, 'a scriptural text,' means according to Medh., drishântah, 'an example,' and the other commentators explain it similarly.

22. I.e. as a river becomes salt after uniting with the ocean. It must be borne in mind that, according to the Indian poets, the rivers are the wives of the ocean.

23. Akshamâlâ or Arundhatî was a Kândâlî (Gov., Râgh.), and became, as the Śruti states (Râgh.), with the permission of the Rishis, the wife of the sage Vasishtha. The story of Mandapâla is told in the Mahâbhârata I, 8335 seq. (Adhy. 229). Medh., Gov., and K. read Sârṅgî instead of Sâraṅgî or Sârāṅgî.

attained eminence in this world by the respective good qualities of their husbands.

25. Thus has been declared the ever pure popular usage (which regulates the relations) between husband and wife; hear (next) the laws concerning children which are the cause of happiness in this world and after death.

26. Between wives (striyaḥ) who (are destined) to bear children, who secure many blessings, who are worthy of worship and irradiate (their) dwellings, and between the goddesses of fortune (śriyaḥ, who reside) in the houses (of men), there is no difference whatsoever.

27. The production of children, the nurture of those born, and the daily life of men, (of these matters) woman is visibly the cause.

28. Offspring, (the due performance of) religious rites, faithful service, highest conjugal happiness and heavenly bliss for the ancestors and oneself, depend on one's wife alone.

29. She who, controlling her thoughts, speech, and acts, violates not her duty towards her lord, dwells with him (after death) in heaven, and in this world is called by the virtuous a faithful (wife, sādhvī).

30. But for disloyalty to her husband a wife is censured among men, and (in her next life) she is born in the womb of a jackal and tormented by diseases, the punishment of her sin.

27. Instead of pratyaham, 'the daily (life of men),' Medh. and Nār. read pratyartham, '(the life of men) in all its details,' and Gov. prītyartham, 'the friendly intercourse of men,' because he who has no wife cannot entertain others (Gov., Kull., Rāgh.). Medh. mentions also another reading, pratyartham.

29. Identical with V, 165.

30. Vas. XXI, 14; see also above, V, 164.

31. Listen (now) to the following holy discussion, salutary to all men, which the virtuous (of the present day) and the ancient great sages have held concerning male offspring.

32. They (all) say that the male issue (of a woman) belongs to the lord, but with respect to the (meaning of the term) lord the revealed texts differ; some call the begetter (of the child the lord), others declare (that it is) the owner of the soil.

33. By the sacred tradition the woman is declared to be the soil, the man is declared to be the seed; the production of all corporeal beings (takes place) through the union of the soil with the seed.

34. In some cases the seed is more distinguished, and in some the womb of the female; but when both are equal, the offspring is most highly esteemed.

35. On comparing the seed and the receptacle (of the seed), the seed is declared to be more important; for the offspring of all created beings is marked by the characteristics of the seed.

36. Whatever (kind of) seed is sown in a field, prepared in due season, (a plant) of that same kind,

32. Âp. II, 13, 6-7; Gaut. XVIII, 9-14; Vas. XVII, 6-9, 63-64. Thus Gov., Kull., Râgh., and Nand. But Medh., Nâr., and K. (prima manu) read kartari instead of bhartari, and with this reading the verse has to be translated as follows: 'They (all) declare that a (lawfully begotten) son belongs to the husband, but with respect to the begetter (of a child on another's wife) there is a conflict between the revealed texts; some declare the begetter (to be the owner of the son), others that (he belongs to the) owner of the soil.'

34. The commentators point out the cases of Vyâsa and Rîshya-sriṅga as instances of the truth of the first proposition, and of Dhṛitarâshṭra and other Kshetragas as instances of the second. 'Equal,' i. e. 'belonging to the same owner and to the same class' (Medh.).

marked with the peculiar qualities of the seed, springs up in it.

37. This earth, indeed, is called the primeval womb of created beings; but the seed develops not in its development any properties of the womb.

38. In this world seeds of different kinds, sown at the proper time in the land, even in one field, come forth (each) according to its kind.

39. The rice (called) vr̥hi and (that called) sāli, mudga-beans, sesamum, māsha-beans, barley, leeks, and sugar-cane, (all) spring up according to their seed.

40. That one (plant) should be sown and another be produced cannot happen; whatever seed is sown, (a plant of) that kind even comes forth.

41. Never therefore must a prudent well-trained man, who knows the Veda and its Āṅgas and desires long life, cohabit with another's wife.

42. With respect to this (matter), those acquainted with the past recite some stanzas, sung by Vāyu (the Wind, to show) that seed must not be sown by (any) man on that which belongs to another.

43. As the arrow, shot by (a hunter) who afterwards hits a wounded (deer) in the wound (made by

37. 'Develops not any properties of the womb,' i.e. 'shows no properties such as being composed of earth' (Medh., Gov., Kull.).

39. vr̥hi, i.e. such rice as ripens in sixty days (shashāikā); sāli, i.e. 'red rice, which ripens in the cold season' (Gov., Nār.). Mudga, i.e. Phaseolus Mungo (mūg); māsha, i.e. Phaseolus Radiatus.

41. Vigñāna, 'the knowledge of the Āṅgas' (Kull.), means according to Medh. and Nār., 'profane knowledge;' according to Rāgh., 'the tradition.' Nand. inverts the order, and says, 'profane and sacred learning.'

43. Or, according to a second explanation offered by Medh., 'As the arrow of the hunter who hits a wounded deer is shot into the air (as it were) and becomes useless.'

another), is shot in vain, even so the seed, sown on what belongs to another, is quickly lost (to the sower).

44. (Sages) who know the past call this earth (prithivī) even the wife of Prithu; they declare a field to belong to him who cleared away the timber, and a deer to him who (first) wounded it.

45. He only is a perfect man who consists (of three persons united), his wife, himself, and his offspring; thus (says the Veda), and (learned) Brāhmaṇas propound this (maxim) likewise, 'The husband is declared to be one with the wife.'

46. Neither by sale nor by repudiation is a wife released from her husband; such we know the law to be, which the Lord of creatures (Pragâpati) made of old.

47. Once is the partition (of the inheritance) made, (once is) a maiden given in marriage, (and) once does (a man) say, 'I will give;' each of those three (acts is done) once only.

44. 'Though the earth, after she belonged to Prithu, was possessed by many kings, yet she is called Prithivī, or Prithvī, after her first owner Prithu' (Medh., Nâr.).

45. In confirmation of the first maxim the commentators adduce a passage of the Vâgasaneyi-brâhmaṇa; see also Âp. II, 14, 16.

46. The meaning is that a wife, sold or repudiated by her husband, can never become the legitimate wife of another who may have bought or received her after she was repudiated (Medh.).

47. Yâgñ. I, 65. 'A partition (of the inheritance),' i. e. 'one which has been made in accordance with the law, not one made unjustly' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.). Medh. mentions two other explanations: 1. 'if one of the coparceners complains afterwards that he has received too little, he is entitled only to have the particular point readjusted, not to annul the whole division;' 2. 'if after the division it appears that one of the coparceners was disqualified by bodily defects and ought not to have received a share, the portion

48. As with cows, mares, female camels, slave-girls, buffalo-cows, she-goats, and ewes, it is not the begetter (or his owner) who obtains the offspring, even thus (it is) with the wives of others.

49. Those who, having no property in a field, but possessing seed-corn, sow it in another's soil, do indeed not receive the grain of the crop which may spring up.

50. If (one man's) bull were to beget a hundred calves on another man's cows, they would belong to the owner of the cows; in vain would the bull have spent his strength.

51. Thus men who have no marital property in women, but sow their seed in the soil of others, benefit the owner of the woman; but the giver of the seed reaps no advantage.

52. If no agreement with respect to the crop has been made between the owner of the field and the owner of the seed, the benefit clearly belongs to the owner of the field; the receptacle is more important than the seed.

53. But if by a special contract (a field) is made over (to another) for sowing, then the owner of the seed and the owner of the soil are both considered in this world as sharers of the (crop).

54. If seed be carried by water or wind into made over to him cannot be resumed by the others.' Nâr. refers the phrase 'I will give' to a verbal promise to give a girl, made without a libation of water. I read with Medh., Gov., Râgh., Nand., and K. sakṛit sakṛit, instead of satâm sakṛit, 'those three (acts are done) once among good men.' The object of the verse is to show that a marriage is indissoluble, because a girl can be given once only (Kull., Nand.).

50. Vas. XVII, 8.

54. I read with Gov., Râgh., and K. bîḡt, 'the owner of the somebody's field and germinates (there), the (plant sprung from that) seed belongs even to the owner of the field, the owner of the seed does not receive the crop.

55. Know that such is the law concerning the offspring of cows, mares, slave-girls, female camels, she-goats, and ewes, as well as of females of birds and buffalo-cows.

56. Thus the comparative importance of the seed and of the womb has been declared to you; I will next propound the law (applicable) to women in times of misfortune.

57. The wife of an elder brother is for his younger (brother) the wife of a Guru; but the wife of the younger is declared (to be) the daughter-in-law of the elder.

58. An elder (brother) who approaches the wife of the younger, and a younger (brother who approaches) the wife of the elder, except in times of misfortune, both become outcasts, even though (they were duly) authorised. →

59. On failure of issue (by her husband) a woman who has been authorised, may obtain, (in the) proper (manner prescribed), the desired offspring by (cohabitation with) a brother-in-law or (with some other) Sapinda (of the husband). 4 seed,' instead of vaptâ, 'the sower of the seed' (Medh., Kull., Nand.).

55. 'Such is the law,' i.e. what has been stated in verses 48-54.

56. 'In times of misfortune,' i.e. 'when there is no male offspring.'

57. Guru means here, according to Râgh., 'the father.' As the younger brother's wife is called 'the daughter-in-law' of the elder, the explanation is probably correct.

58-63. Gaut. XVIII, 4-8; Vas. XVII, 56-61; Baudh. II, 4, 9-10; Yâgñ. I, 68-69.

59. A woman can be authorised by her husband, or after his

60. He (who is) appointed to (cohabit with) the widow shall (approach her) at night anointed with clarified butter and silent, (and) beget one son, by no means a second.

61. Some (sages), versed in the law, considering the purpose of the appointment not to have been attained by those two (on the birth of the first), think that a second (son) may be lawfully procreated on (such) women.

62. But when the purpose of the appointment to (cohabit with) the widow has been attained in accordance with the law, those two shall behave towards each other like a father and a daughter-in-law.

63. If those two (being thus) appointed deviate from the rule and act from carnal desire, they will both become outcasts, (as men) who defile the bed of a daughter-in-law or of a Guru.

64. By twice-born men a widow must not be appointed to (cohabit with) any other (than her husband); for they who appoint (her) to another (man), will violate the eternal law.

death by his relatives. 'On failure of issue,' i.e. 'of sons' (Gov., Râgh., Nand.), or 'of sons and of an appointed daughter' (Medh.). If the son born is not fit to offer the Srâddhas, a second may be begot (Medh., Kull., Nâr.).

60. According to the commentators, the expression 'the widow' is not intended to prohibit an appointment by a diseased or impotent husband.

61. 'Because the Sish/as say, "He who has one son only, has no son"' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

62. 'Those two,' i.e. 'the elder brother and the female appointed.'

63. 'Those two,' i.e. 'an elder or younger brother.' 'The rule,' see verse 60. For the last clause, compare verse 57.

64-68. These verses flatly contradict the rules given in the preceding ones. But it by no means follows that they are a modern

65. In the sacred texts which refer to marriage the appointment (of widows) is nowhere mentioned, nor is the re-marriage of widows prescribed in the rules concerning marriage.

66. This practice which is reprehended by the learned of the twice-born castes as fit for cattle is said (to have occurred) even among men, while Vena ruled.

67. That chief of royal sages who formerly possessed the whole world, caused a confusion of the castes (varṇa), his intellect being destroyed by lust.

68. Since that (time) the virtuous censure that (man) who in his folly appoints a woman, whose husband died, to (bear) children (to another man).

69. If the (future) husband of a maiden dies after troth verbally plighted, her brother-in-law shall wed her according to the following rule.

70. Having, according to the rule, espoused her (who must be) clad in white garments and be intent addition. For the same view is expressed by Âp. II, 27, 2-6, and was held, according to Baudh. II, 3, 34, by Aupagandhani. Moreover the Bṛhaspati Smṛiti states expressly (Colebrooke IV, Dig. CLVII) that the contradictory statement occurred in the Mānava Dharmasāstra, known to its author.

65. In his commentary on verse 66 Medh. points out that in other sacred texts, Rig-veda X, 40, 2, the Niyoga is mentioned.

66. According to the epic and Paurāṇic tradition Vena was the father of Prithu, and a godless king, who demanded that the sacrifices should be offered to himself, not to the gods. He was, therefore, cut to pieces by the Brāhmanas with blades of Kusa grass. But hitherto no other passage has been found where it is stated that he introduced the practice of Niyoga. Possibly the assertion of the Mānava may have grown out of the etymological import of the word vena, 'full of desire or lust.'

70. The child born by a female thus married belongs, as the commentators point out, to her deceased betrothed.

on purity, he shall approach her once in each proper season until issue (be had).

71. Let no prudent man, after giving his daughter to one (man), give her again to another; for he who gives (his daughter) whom he had before given, incurs (the guilt of) speaking falsely regarding a human being.

72. Though (a man) may have accepted a damsel in due form, he may abandon (her if she be) blemished, diseased, or deflowered, and (if she have been) given with fraud.

73. If anybody gives away a maiden possessing blemishes without declaring them, (the bridegroom) may annul that (contract) with the evil-minded giver.

74. A man who has business (abroad) may depart after securing a maintenance for his wife; for a wife, even though virtuous, may be corrupted if she be distressed by want of subsistence.

75. If (the husband) went on a journey after providing (for her), the wife shall subject herself to restraints in her daily life; but if he departed without providing (for her), she may subsist by blameless manual work.

71. Yâgñ. I, 65; Vi. XXV, 9-10. Regarding the guilt incurred, see above, VIII, 98. Medh. and Nand. say that the verse is meant to forbid the marriage of a girl whose betrothed died. But Kull. thinks that it refers to all cases where a betrothal has taken place, and that it removes a doubt which might arise through a too strict interpretation of VIII, 227.

72. 'In due form,' i. e. 'with a libation of water and in the presence of Brâhmanas' (Medh., Kull., Râgh.). 'Blemished,' i. e. 'by evil bodily marks' (Medh., Kull., Râgh., Nand.), or 'by being of a base family' (Nâr.).

73. See above, VIII, 205, 224.

74. Nand. inserts verses 95-96 after this.

75. Yâgñ. I, 84. 'Shall subject herself to restraints in her daily

76. If the husband went abroad for some sacred duty, (she) must wait for him eight years, if (he went) to (acquire) learning or fame six (years), if (he went) for pleasure three years.

77. For one year let a husband bear with a wife who hates him ; but after (the lapse of) a year let him deprive her of her property and cease to cohabit with her.

78. She who shows disrespect to (a husband) who is addicted to (some evil) passion, is a drunkard, or diseased, shall be deserted for three months (and be) deprived of her ornaments and furniture.

79. But she who shows aversion towards a mad or outcast (husband), a eunuch, one destitute of manly strength, or one afflicted with such diseases as punish crimes, shall neither be cast off nor be deprived of her property.

80. She who drinks spirituous liquor, is of bad life,' i.e. 'shall not adorn herself, nor visit the houses of strangers, or go to festivals' (Medh., Kull., Râgh.).

76. Gaut. XVIII, 15, 17; Vas. XVII, 75-80. Kull., Nâr., and Râgh. declare that after the expiration of the terms mentioned the wife shall go to seek her husband. Nand. says, 'the meaning is that no sin is committed if she afterwards takes another husband.' Medh. holds that she shall support herself, as before, by blameless occupations and remain chaste. He mentions the opinion of others, according to which she may take another husband in accordance with Nârada's and Parâsara's precepts, but rejects it. 'For pleasure,' i.e. 'in order to gain the favours of another woman whom he prefers' (Medh., Kull., Râgh.).

77. 'Her property,' i.e. 'the ornaments and other wealth given to her by himself' (Kull., Râgh., Nand.), or 'her separate property, which he may have given to her' (stridhana, Nâr.). The commentators add that she must, however, be maintained.

78. 'Addicted to (some evil) passion,' i.e. 'to gambling and so forth' (Kull., Nâr.), or 'to avarice' (Râgh.).

80-81. Baudh. II, 4, 6; Yâgyñ. I, 73.

80. 'Diseased,' i.e. 'afflicted with leprosy or the like' (Kull.); conduct, rebellious, diseased, mischievous, or wasteful, may at any time be superseded (by another wife).

81. A barren wife may be superseded in the eighth year, she whose children (all) die in the tenth, she who bears only daughters in the eleventh, but she who is quarrelsome without delay.

82. But a sick wife who is kind (to her husband) and virtuous in her conduct, may be superseded (only) with her own consent and must never be disgraced.

83. A wife who, being superseded, in anger departs from (her husband's) house, must either be instantly confined or cast off in the presence of the family.

84. But she who, though having been forbidden, drinks spirituous liquor even at festivals, or goes to public spectacles or assemblies, shall be fined six krishṇālas.

85. If twice-born men wed women of their own and of other (lower castes), the seniority, honour, and habitation of those (wives) must be (settled) according to the order of the castes (varṇa).

86. Among all (twice-born men) the wife of equal caste alone, not a wife of a different caste by any means, shall personally attend her husband and assist him in his daily sacred rites.

87. But he who foolishly causes that (duty) to be 'mischievous,' i.e. 'who beats or ill-treats her children, servants, &c.' (Medh., Nâr., Kull.).

83. 'Of the family,' i.e. 'of her own and the husband's family' (Medh.), or 'of her own family' (Kull., Nâr.).

86. Vi. XXVI, 1; Yâgñ. I, 88. 'Personally attend,' i.e. 'prepare and bring his food, &c.' (Medh., Kull., Râgh.).

87. Vi. XXVI, 2. Instead of 'by the ancients' (Kull., Râgh., performed by another, while his wife of equal caste is alive, is declared by the ancients (to be) as (despicable) as a Kāṇḍāla (sprung from the) Brāhmaṇa (caste).

88. To a distinguished, handsome suitor (of) equal (caste) should (a father) give his daughter in accordance with the prescribed rule, though she have not attained (the proper age).

89. (But) the maiden, though marriageable, should rather stop in (the father's) house until death, than that he should ever give her to a man destitute of good qualities.

90. Three years let a damsel wait, though she be marriageable; but after that time let her choose for herself a bridegroom (of) equal (caste and rank).

91. If, being not given in marriage, she herself seeks a husband, she incurs no guilt, nor (does) he whom she weds.

92. A maiden who chooses for herself, shall not take with her any ornaments, given by her father or her mother, or her brothers; if she carries them away, it will be theft.

93. But he who takes (to wife) a marriageable

Nand.), Medh. says, 'since olden times,' Nār. 'in the Purāṇa.' Regarding the origin of the Kāṇḍālas, see below, X, 12.

88-92. Gaut. XVIII, 20-23; Vas. XVII, 69-71; Baudh. IV, 1, 11-14; Vi. XXIV, 40-41; Yāgñ. I, 64.

88. 'Though she have not attained (the proper age),' i.e. 'the age of eight years' (Kull., Nār., Rāgh.), or 'before she is bodily fit for marriage' (Medh., Nand.). Medh. specially objects to the first opinion, 'because men greedy of money give even an infant in marriage.'

92. I read with Medh. and Nand., steyam syāt, instead of stenā syāt, 'she will be a thief' (Kull., Rāgh., K.). Medh. mentions another reading, stenaḥ syāt, 'he, i.e. the bridegroom, will be a thief.'

93. Medh. says that this verse, according to 'some,' does not belong to Manu (keḍid āhuḥ amānavo 'yam slokaḥ).

damsel, shall not pay any nuptial fee to her father; for the (latter) will lose his dominion over her in consequence of his preventing (the legitimate result of the appearance of) her menses.

94. A man, aged thirty years, shall marry a maiden of twelve who pleases him, or a man of twenty-four a girl eight years of age; if (the performance of) his duties would (otherwise) be impeded, (he must marry) sooner.

95. The husband receives his wife from the gods, (he does not wed her) according to his own will; doing what is agreeable to the gods, he must always support her (while she is) faithful.

96. To be mothers were women created, and to be fathers men; religious rites, therefore, are ordained in the Veda to be performed (by the husband) together with the wife.

97. If, after the nuptial fee has been paid for a maiden, the giver of the fee dies, she shall be given in marriage to his brother, in case she consents.

94. Medh. and Kull. point out that this verse is not intended to lay down a hard and fast rule, but merely to give instances of suitable ages. 'If (the performance of) his duties would be impeded, &c.,' i. e. 'if he has finished his studentship earlier, he must marry at once in order to be able to fulfil his duties as a householder' (Kull., Nâr., Râgh.).

95. 'From the gods,' i. e. 'from those mentioned in the Mantras recited at the wedding, e. g. from Bhaga, Aryaman, Savitri, &c.' (Kull., Râgh.), or 'from Agni' (Nâr.), or 'from Soma, the Gandharva, and Agni' (Medh., Nand.). Medh. reads vindetânikkayâ, 'shall wed without a wish on his part,' but mentions the other reading, vindate nekhhayâ, too. According to Medh., Kull., and Râgh., a faithful wife must be supported, even if she does not love her husband.

97. 'His brother,' i. e. 'his full brother, who is even (as) the deceased himself' (Nâr.). Regarding the nuptial fee, and the

98. Even a Sûdra ought not to take a nuptial fee, when he gives away his daughter ; for he who takes a fee sells his daughter, covering (the transaction by another name).

99. Neither ancients nor moderns who were good men have done such (a deed) that, after promising (a daughter) to one man, they gave her to another ;

100. Nor, indeed, have we heard, even in former creations, of such (a thing as) the covert sale of a daughter for a fixed price, called a nuptial fee.

101. 'Let mutual fidelity continue until death,' this may be considered as the summary of the highest law for husband and wife.

102. Let man and woman, united in marriage, constantly exert themselves, that (they may not be) disunited (and) may not violate their mutual fidelity.

103. Thus has been declared to you the law for a husband and his wife, which is intimately connected with conjugal happiness, and the manner of raising offspring in times of calamity ; learn (now the law concerning) the division of the inheritance.

104. After the death of the father and of the mother, the brothers, being assembled, may divide among themselves in equal shares the paternal (and the maternal) estate ; for, they have no power (over it) while the parents live.

contradiction between this and the next verses, see note on VIII, 204.

99. Nand. places this verse after the next.

104. Gaut. XXVIII, 1 ; Baudh. II, 3, 8 ; Yâgyñ. II, 117. The father's estate is to be divided after the father's death, and the mother's estate after the mother's death (Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand.). The mother's estate devolves on the sons only on failure of daughters (Nâr.). The word îrddhvam, 'after,' indicates by implication that the rule holds good in the case of the (father's)

105. (Or) the eldest alone may take the whole paternal estate, the others shall live under him just as (they lived) under their father.

106. Immediately on the birth of his first-born a man is (called) the father of a son and is freed from the debt to the manes; that (son), therefore, is worthy (to receive) the whole estate.

107. That son alone on whom he throws his debt and through whom he obtains immortality, is begotten for (the fulfilment of) the law; all the rest they consider the offspring of desire.

108. As a father (supports) his sons, so let the eldest support his younger brothers, and let them also in accordance with the law behave towards their eldest brother as sons (behave towards their father).

109. The eldest (son) makes the family prosperous or, on the contrary, brings it to ruin; the eldest (is considered) among men most worthy of honour, the eldest is not treated with disrespect by the virtuous.

110. If the eldest brother behaves as an eldest brother (ought to do), he (must be treated) like a turning ascetic (Râgh.). The equal division takes place if the eldest does not desire to receive an additional share (Kull.). The last clause shows that a division of the property may take place with the parents' permission during their lifetime (Kull., Nâr., Râgh.).

105. Gaut. XXVIII, 3; Baudh. II, 3, 13. I. e. if the eldest son is virtuous (Kull., Râgh.), or possesses particularly eminent qualities, while the others are less distinguished (Nâr.).

106. Regarding the debt, see Vas. XI, 48.

107. This verse alludes to the Vedic text quoted, Vas. XVII, 1; Vi. XV, 45.

108. I. e. if they make no division and the eldest takes the whole estate (Kull.). Nand. places this verse after the next.

110. 'Behaves as an eldest brother (ought to do),' i. e. 'duly protects and educates the younger ones' (Medh., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.).

mother and like a father; but if he behaves in a manner unworthy of an eldest brother, he should yet be honoured like a kinsman.

111. Either let them thus live together, or apart, if (each) desires (to gain) spiritual merit; for (by their living) separate (their) merit increases, hence separation is meritorious.

112. The additional share (deducted) for the eldest shall be one-twentieth (of the estate) and the best of all chattels, for the middlemost half of that, but for the youngest one-fourth.

113. Both the eldest and the youngest shall take (their shares) according to (the rule just) stated; (each of) those who are between the eldest and the youngest, shall have the share (prescribed for the) middlemost.

114. Among the goods of every kind the eldest shall take the best (article), and (even a single chattel) which is particularly good, as well as the best of ten (animals).

'Like a kinsman,' i.e. 'like a maternal or paternal uncle' (Medh., Kull., Râgh.); see also below, verse 213.

111. Gaut. XXVIII, 4. '(Their) merit increases,' i.e. 'each of them has to kindle the sacred fire, to offer separately the Agni-hotra, the five great sacrifices and so forth, and hence each gains separately merit' (Medh., Kull.).

112. Gaut. XXVIII, 5-7; Baudh. II, 3, 9; Vi. XVIII, 37; Yâgñ. II, 114. 'The remainder shall be divided equally,' see verse 116 (Medh., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). Medh. says that 'some' declare that the rules on the unequal partition refer to past times, and have no authority for the Kaliyuga. But he rejects this view.

113. The object of the verse is to show that no difference shall be made between sons intervening between the eldest and the youngest, however great their number may be (Kull., Râgh.).

114. Gaut. XXVIII, 11-13; Baudh. II, 3, 6. '(Even a single chattel) which is particularly good,' i.e. 'a dress or an ornament' (Medh.), or 'something impartible like an idol' (Nand.).

115. But among (brothers) equally skilled in their occupations, there is no additional share, (consisting of the best animal) among ten; some trifle only shall be given to the eldest as a token of respect.

116. If additional shares are thus deducted, one must allot equal shares (out of the residue to each); but if no deduction is made, the allotment of the shares among them shall be (made) in the following manner.

117. Let the eldest son take one share in excess, the (brother) born next after him one (share) and a half, the younger ones one share each; thus the law is settled.

118. But to the maiden (sisters) the brothers shall severally give (portions) out of their shares, each out of his share one-fourth part; those who refuse to give (it), will become outcasts.

'The best of ten animals,' thus Kull., Nâr., Râgh., according to Gaut. XXVIII, 12, where they read darataḥ paśūnām, instead of daratam. Medh. gives the same explanation, but applies the rule also to clothes and ornaments. He adds, that 'others' explain the text in accordance with Vas. XVII, 43, 'And a tithe (of the cattle and horses).' Nand. nearly agrees with Medh.'s opinion, as he says that everything shall be divided into ten shares, and the eldest shall take one in excess. All the commentators agree that this additional share belongs to an eldest brother only, if he is endowed with particularly good qualities and the rest are inferior to him.

115. Âp. II, 13, 13. 'Their occupations,' i. e. 'reciting the Veda and so forth' (Kull., Râgh.). According to Nâr., the phrase 'no additional share (consisting of the best animals) among ten' indicates that none of the other additions, mentioned in verse 114, shall be given. Nand. omits this verse.

116. Gaut. XXVIII, 8.

117. Gaut. XXVIII, 9-10; Vas. XVII, 42. 'One share in excess,' i. e. 'two shares' (Medh., Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand.). The latter four point out that this division is to be made when the eldest and the second brothers are more eminent than the rest.

118. Vi. XVIII, 35; Yâgñ. II, 124. According to all the com-

119. Let him never divide (the value of) a single goat or sheep, or a (single beast) with uncloven hoofs; it is prescribed (that) a single goat or sheep (remaining after an equal division, belongs) to the eldest alone.

120. If a younger brother begets a son on the wife of the elder, the division must then be made equally; thus the law is settled.

mentators the meaning is that, if a man leaves children by wives of different castes, the brothers are to provide for the dowry of the unmarried sisters of the same caste, i. e. a Brāhmaṇa's sons by a Brāhmaṇa wife for the daughters of the latter, the sons by a Kshatriya wife for the daughters of the latter, &c. This meaning is more clearly expressed by Medh.'s reading, svābhyaḥ svābhyas tu kanyābhaḥ, 'But the brothers shall give (portions) to the maiden (sisters), each to those of his own (caste).' Kull. adds, that the duty of providing for sisters devolves in the first instance on brothers of the full blood, and in default of such on half-brothers.

As regards the expression 'a fourth share,' Medh. says that a brother shall receive three-fourths and the sister one-fourth, and that, if there are many sisters, they shall receive one-fourth of the share of a brother of equal caste. Kull. agrees with the first part of the explanation, but adds, 'Hence it must be understood that even if there are many brothers and sisters of the same caste, but born of different mothers, one-fourth part must be given to the sisters of the full blood' (i. e. by their full brothers). Nār. says, 'They shall give each one-fourth part of their share, and take three parts; and the same division must be made if there are many daughters. But if there are many sons and one daughter, they must deduct from their several shares as much money as will be equal to a fourth part of one brother's share and give that.' Medh. censures those commentators who think that one-fourth share need not be actually given, but only as much as will suffice to defray the marriage expenses.

119. I. e. such an animal is not to be sold and the proceeds to be divided; nor shall its value be made good to the other brothers by giving them other objects (Medh., Kull., Nār., Rāgh.).

120. I. e. the Kshetrāga receives no preferential share, as his father would have done. Kull. infers from this verse that, though

121. The representative (the son begotten on the wife) is not invested with the right of the principal (the eldest brother to an additional share); the principal (became) a father on the procreation (of a son by his younger brother); hence one should give a share to the (son begotten on the wife of the elder brother) according to the rule (stated above).

122. If there be a doubt, how the division shall be made, in case the younger son is born of the elder wife and the elder son of the younger wife,

123. (Then the son) born of the first wife shall above, verse 104, brothers (i.e. sons of the deceased) only are named, grandsons inherit, also according to Manu, just like sons and with sons; see also below, verse 186.

121. Thus Kull.; Nand. agrees with respect to the first half-verse, but explains the second as follows, 'The father is the principal in the procreation of children; hence one must give a share to the (son begotten on the wife of the eldest) according to the law (declared above).' Nâr. also differs, 'The subsidiary (son) does not by law take the place of the principal, (and cannot for that reason receive an additional share); his father (the eldest was) the principal for continuing the line; hence one should give a share (to his subsidiary son) in accordance with the law.' Râgh. goes off still further, 'The principal (the eldest) must according to the law not be treated like the substitute (i.e. not be deprived of an additional share, yet as) the father is the chief person in the procreation (of children), one should give a share to the (son of the wife) in accordance with the law (applicable to his real father).' Medh. has a similar explanation, '(To say) that the substitute (i.e. the Kshetrâga) is equal to the principal is not proper according to the sacred law; the father (i.e. the begetter) is the principal in the procreation of children, hence one must give a share (to the Kshetrâga) in accordance (with the law declared above).'

122. The point to be decided is, if the seniority is to be according to the mothers or according to actual birth. The eldest wife is, of course, the one married first.

123. Gaut. XXVIII, 14.

take as his additional share one (most excellent) bull; the next best bulls (shall belong) to those (who are) inferior on account of their mothers.

124. But the eldest (son, being) born of the eldest wife, shall receive fifteen cows and a bull, the other sons may then take shares according to (the seniority of) their mothers; that is a settled rule.

125. Between sons born of wives equal (in caste) (and) without (any other) distinction no seniority in right of the mother exists; seniority is declared (to be) according to birth.

126. And with respect to the Subrahmanyâ (texts) also it is recorded that the invocation (of Indra shall be made) by the first-born, of twins likewise, (conceived at one time) in the wombs (of their mothers) the seniority is declared (to depend) on (actual) birth.

124. Gaut. XXVIII, 15. 'May take shares,' i. e. 'may divide the (other) cows' (Medh., Kull.), or 'shall each receive one bull, a very good one, a less excellent one, in due order, according to the seniority of their mothers' (Nâr.).

125. As this verse and the following one contradict the rules given in verses 123-124, the commentators try to reconcile them in various ways. Medh. thinks that verses 123-124 are an arthavâda and have no legal force, and Râgh. inclines to the same opinion. Nâr. and Nand. hold that the seniority according to the mother's marriage is of importance for the law of inheritance (verses 123-124), but that it has no value with respect to salutations and the like or to prerogatives at sacrifices (verses 125-126). Kull., finally relying on Gov.'s opinion, thinks that the rules leave an option, and that their application depends on the existence of good qualities and the want of such. It is, however, probable that, according to the custom of Hindu writers, the two conflicting opinions are placed side by side, and that it is intended that the learned should find their way out of the difficulty as they can.

126. The Subrahmanyâ texts contain an invitation, addressed to Indra, to partake of the Soma; see Aitareya-brâhmana VI, 3. Nand. reads yamayor kaikagarbhe 'pi.

127. He who has no son may make his daughter in the following manner an appointed daughter (putrikâ, saying to her husband), 'The (male) child, born of her, shall perform my funeral rites.'

128. According to this rule Daksha, himself, lord of created beings, formerly made (all his female offspring) appointed daughters in order to multiply his race.

129. He gave ten to Dharma, thirteen to Kasyapa, twenty-seven to King Soma, honouring (them) with an affectionate heart.

130. A son is even (as) oneself, (such) a daughter is equal to a son; how can another (heir) take the estate, while such (an appointed daughter who is even) oneself, lives?

131. But whatever may be the separate property of the mother, that is the share of the unmarried daughter alone; and the son of an (appointed) daughter shall take the whole estate of (his maternal grandfather) who leaves no son.

127. Gaut. XXVIII, 18; Vas. XVII, 17; Baudh. II, 3, 15; Vi. XV, 5.

128. The story of Daksha's fifty, sixty, or twenty-four daughters occurs in the Mahâbhârata and the Purânas. The twenty-seven given to King Soma, the moon, are the lunar mansions or Nakshatras.

130. 'A son is even (as) oneself;' see the verse quoted, Baudh. II, 3, 14. The commentators state that the word duhitâ, 'daughter,' means here putrikâ, 'an appointed daughter.' Medh. adds that in accordance with this verse, an appointed daughter who has no son, when her father dies, does not inherit his property(?).

131. Gaut. XXVIII, 24; Vi. XVII, 21. The correctness of the translation of the term yautakam by 'separate property' (Medh.), follows from its being used below, verse 214, to denote the separate hoard made by an elder brother. According to Medh., Kull., and Nâr. all strîdhana is meant; according to 'others' mentioned by Medh., Nand., and Râgh., the so-called saudâyikam or property derived from the

132. The son of an (appointed) daughter, indeed, shall (also) take the estate of his (own) father, who leaves no (other) son; he shall (then) present two funeral cakes to his own father and to his maternal grandfather.

133. Between a son's son and the son of an (appointed) daughter there is no difference, neither with respect to worldly matters nor to sacred duties; for their father and mother both sprang from the body of the same (man).

134. But if, after a daughter has been appointed, a son be born (to her father), the division (of the inheritance) must in that (case) be equal; for there is no right of primogeniture for a woman.

135. But if an appointed daughter by accident dies without (leaving) a son, the husband of the appointed daughter may, without hesitation, take that estate.

father's family. Kumârî, 'an unmarried daughter' (Medh., Kull.), means according to Nâr. 'a daughter who has no sons.' Dauhitraḥ, literally 'the son of a daughter,' means according to the commentators 'the son of an appointed daughter,' putrikâputraḥ. The first rule is, according to Kull., Nâr., and Nand., a general maxim, which refers not merely to the case of a putrikâ. The second rule shows, according to Nand., that the appointed daughter herself does not inherit her father's estate, if she has a son.

132. Medh. mentions a var. lect., aputrasya hared yadi, 'If the son of an (appointed) daughter takes the entire estate of (his maternal grandfather), &c.,' which is also found in Gov.'s text, but considers it to be wrong.

133. Yâgñ. II, 128. Loke dharmataḥ, 'neither with respect to worldly affairs nor to sacred duties' (Kull.), means according to Râgh. and Nand. 'with respect to sacred duties, according to the law.'

135. 'That estate,' i.e. 'what the appointed daughter received from her father either during his lifetime or after his death' (Nâr.). Kull. adds that the verse is intended to forbid the father's inheriting his pre-deceased daughter's property, on the plea that she was like a son (see verse 185). Nand. says that the paternal uncles &c. shall not take the putrikâ's estate.

136. Through that son whom (a daughter), either not appointed or appointed, may bear to (a husband) of equal (caste), his maternal grandfather (has) a son's son; he shall present the funeral cake and take the estate.

137. Through a son he conquers the worlds, through a son's son he obtains immortality, but through his son's grandson he gains the world of the sun.

138. Because a son delivers (trâyate) his father from the hell called Put, he was therefore called put-tra (a deliverer from Put) by the Self-existent (Svayambhû) himself.

139. Between a son's son and the son of a daughter there exists in this world no difference; for even the son of a daughter saves him (who has no sons) in the next world, like the son's son.

136. Kull. explains akṛitâ vâ kṛitâ vâpi by '(a daughter) either appointed not (explicitly but by a mental reservation), or appointed (explicitly, at the betrothal, according to verse 127).' He adds that Gov. takes the word akṛitâ in its usual sense, and asserts that the verse allows the son of a daughter not appointed to inherit his maternal grandfather's estate. The latter opinion is held also by Nâr., who remarks that the son of a daughter not appointed inherits on failure of a wife or of daughters of his grandfather; and by Nand. Râgh. and Medh. side with Kull., whose explanation is supported by Gaut. XXVIII, 20, and still more by Vi. XV, 6. The latter passage clearly prescribes that the daughter of a man who has no sons is in every case 'an appointed daughter.'

137. Vas. XVII, 5; Vi. XV, 46; Yâgñ. I, 78. 'The worlds,' i. e. 'the ten, called visoka (free from sorrow), the first of which is svarga' (Medh.). 'Immortality, i. e. a very long residence in those same (worlds),' (Medh., Kull.) 'The sun,' i. e. 'Hiranyagarbha' (Nâr.). The verse shows that sons and grandsons inherit, though a wife and the rest may be living (Kull.).

138. Vi. XV, 44.

139. Vi. XV, 47. According to Medh. and Kull., dauhitra, 'the

140. Let the son of an appointed daughter first present a funeral cake to his mother, the second to her father, the third to his father's father.

141. Of the man who has an adopted (Datrima) son possessing all good qualities, that same (son) shall take the inheritance, though brought from another family.

142. An adopted son shall never take the family (name) and the estate of his natural father; the funeral cake follows the family (name) and the estate, the funeral offerings of him who gives (his son in adoption) cease (as far as that son is concerned).

son of a daughter,' means here also 'the son of an appointed daughter.' Nand. reads putravat, 'like a son;' Gov. pûrvagân, '(and) the ancestors.'

140. Baudh. II, 3, 16. Medh. mentions a var. lect., pitus tasya, 'the second to his father,' which he, however, justly considers to be bad.

141. Vas. XV, 9-10; Baudh. Parishva 16. Medh., Kull., and Râgh. refer this rule to the case where a man has a legitimate son and an adopted son, and think that in such a case the latter, being eminently virtuous, shall receive, like a Kshetrâga (see verse 146), a fifth or sixth part of the estate. Medh. remarks that some think he is to have half, but that their opinion is improper, and finally that Upâdhyâya, i.e. his teacher, allots to the adopted son less than to the Kshetrâga. Kull. and Râgh. state that Gov. took the verse to mean that an eminently virtuous adopted son shall inherit on failure of a legitimate son and of the son of the wife, but that this explanation is inadmissible on account of verse 165. Nevertheless Râgh. reproduces Gov.'s opinion. Nâr. says, 'It has been declared that an adopted son receives a share like the chief son, when he is eminently virtuous.' Nand. reads at the end of the second line, sam-prâpto 'sya na putrakâh, 'shall take the inheritance, (provided) the (adoptive father) has no son.'

142. Medh. mentions another 'improper' explanation, according to which haret, 'shall take,' is to mean hârayet, 'shall allow to be taken,' and the purport of the verse is that 'he is to benefit both (fathers) like a Dvyâmushyâyâna.'

143. The son of a wife, not appointed (to have issue by another), and he whom (an appointed female, already) the mother of a son, bears to her brother-in-law, are both unworthy of a share, (one being) the son of an adulterer and (the other) produced through (mere) lust.

144. Even the male (child) of a female (duly) appointed, not begotten according to the rule (given above), is unworthy of the paternal estate; for he was procreated by an outcast.

145. A son (legally) begotten on such an appointed female shall inherit like a legitimate son of the body; for that seed and the produce belong, according to the law, to the owner of the soil.

146. He who takes care of his deceased brother's estate and of his widow, shall, after raising up a son for his brother, give that property even to that (son).

147. If a woman (duly) appointed bears a son to her brother-in-law or to another (Sapinda), that (son, if he is) begotten through desire, they declare (to be) incapable of inheriting and to be produced in vain.

148. The rules (given above) must be understood (to apply) to a distribution among sons of women of the same (caste); hear (now the law) concerning

144. 'The rule (given above),' i. e. that given above, verse 60. Nand. omits this verse.

145. Medh. and Kull. state that the object of this verse is to teach that a Kshetraga, if endowed with good qualities, may even receive (against verse 120) the additional share of an eldest son, because it is said that he inherits 'like a legitimate son.' Nâr. says, '(the expression) like a legitimate son (is used) in order to establish (the title to) an equal share.' Nand. omits this verse.

146. 'This rule refers to the case where the two brothers are divided, while verse 120 refers to those who live in union' (Medh., Kull., Râgh.). Nand. places this verse after 147.

those begotten by one man on many wives of different (castes).

149. If there be four wives of a Brâhmana in the direct order of the castes, the rule for the division (of the estate) among the sons born of them is as follows :

150. The (slave) who tills (the field), the bull kept for impregnating cows, the vehicle, the ornaments, and the house shall be given as an additional portion to the Brâhmana (son), and one most excellent share.

151. Let the son of the Brâhmanî (wife) take three shares of the (remainder of the) estate, the son of the Kshatriyâ two, the son of the Vaisyâ a share and a half, and the son of the Sûdrâ may take one share.

152. Or let him who knows the law make ten shares of the whole estate, and justly distribute them according to the following rule :

149-156. Gaut. XXVIII, 35-39 ; Vas. XVII, 48-50 ; Baudh. II, 3, 10 ; Vi. XVIII, 1-33, 38-40 ; Yâgyñ. II, 125.

150. 'The ornaments,' i. e. 'the ring which the father used to wear, and the like' (Medh., Kull.). 'The house,' i. e. 'the principal mansion' (Medh., Kull., Râgh.). Ekâmsas ka pradhânatah, 'one most excellent share' (Medh., Kull.), means according to Nâr., with whom Nand. agrees, 'and one share consisting of the chief, i. e. best property' (pradhânato mukhyadhanâd utkrîṣhṭâd ity arthaḥ), and according to Râgh. 'and one share, because he is the chief person.' According to Nâr. this 'one share' must be equal in value to one of the three shares mentioned in the next verse.

151. Medh. and Kull. remark that the rule holds good also if there are more sons than one in each class.

152. According to Nâr. this rule refers to the case when each of the wives has several sons, while the preceding one is applicable when each wife has one son only. Râgh. thinks that the first rule shall be followed when the son of the Brâhmanî possesses good qualities, the second when he is destitute of them.

153. The Brâhmana (son) shall take four shares, the son of the Kshatriyâ (wife) three, the son of the Vaisyâ shall have two parts, the son of the Sûdra may take one share.

154. Whether (a Brâhmana) have sons or have no sons (by wives of the twice-born castes), the (heir) must, according to the law, give to the son of a Sûdra (wife) no more than a tenth (part of his estate).

155. The son of a Brâhmana, a Kshatriya, and a Vaisya by a Sûdra (wife) receives no share of the inheritance; whatever his father may give to him, that shall be his property.

156. All the sons of twice-born men, born of wives of the same caste, shall equally divide the estate, after the others have given to the eldest an additional share.

157. For a Sûdra is ordained a wife of his own caste only (and) no other; those born of her shall have equal shares, even if there be a hundred sons.

153. Medh. points out that according to other Smṛitis the Brâhmana son alone receives land, given to his father, and that the Sûdra son receives no share in land, if there is other property.

154. Hence on failure of other sons the other heirs, the Sapindas (Medh.), or the widow and the rest (Nâr.), shall take the rest of the estate. Nâr. adds that he may obtain more than a tenth, if his father give it to him.

155. The son of a Sûdra wife receives no share of his father's estate in case the mother was not legally married (Medh. 'others,' Kull.), or in case he is destitute of good qualities (Kull., Râgh.). According to Medh. and Nâr., na rikthabhâk, 'receives no share of the inheritance,' means 'receives no (larger) share (than one-tenth, except if the father himself has given more to him).' But it seems more probable, that the verse is intended to inculcate the maxim that a son by a Sûdra wife cannot claim any fixed portion of the inheritance from his father who divides his estate.

156. Medh., Gov., and K. read vâ, 'or,' instead of ye (gâtâh), but this gives no good sense, as Medh. remarks.

158. Among the twelve sons of men whom Manu, sprung from the Self-existent (Svayambhū), enumerates, six are kinsmen and heirs, and six not heirs, (but) kinsmen.

159. The legitimate son of the body, the son begotten on a wife, the son adopted, the son made, the son secretly born, and the son cast off, (are) the six heirs and kinsmen.

160. The son of an unmarried damsel, the son received with the wife, the son bought, the son begotten on a re-married woman, the son self-given, and the son of a Sûdra female, (are) the six (who are) not heirs, (but) kinsmen.

161. Whatever result a man obtains who (tries to) cross a (sheet of) water in an unsafe boat, even that result obtains he who (tries to) pass the gloom (of the next world) with (the help of) bad (substitutes for a real) son.

162. If the two heirs of one man be a legitimate

158-159. Gaut. XXVIII, 31-33; Vas. XVII, 25, 38; Baudh. II, 3, 31-32.

158. I.e. the first six inherit the family estate and offer the funeral oblations, the last six do not inherit, but offer libations of water and so forth as remoter kinsmen (Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand. 'some'). Medh., Nâr., and Nand. take adâyâdabândhavâh to mean 'not heirs nor kinsmen.' But Kull. rightly objects that the parallel passage of Baudh. proves this explanation to be wrong. Nâr. finally interprets bandhudâyâdâh, 'heirs and kinsmen,' as 'heirs to the kinsmen,' i.e. 'inheritors of the estate of kinsmen, such as paternal uncles, on failure of sons, wives, and so forth.' Nâr. and Nand., as well as Medh. in his commentary on verse 166, add that the son of an appointed daughter is not mentioned, because he has been declared above to be equal to a legitimate son.

161. Medh. mentions another explanation of the expression kuputraiḥ, 'by bad (substitutes for a real) son,' according to which 'sons of a wife or widow not duly appointed' are meant.

162. According to Medh. and Gov. (quoted by Kull. and Râgh.), son of his body and a son begotten on his wife, each (of the two sons), to the exclusion of the other, shall take the estate of his (natural) father.

163. The legitimate son of the body alone (shall be) the owner of the paternal estate; but, in order to avoid harshness, let him allow a maintenance to the rest.

164. But when the legitimate son of the body divides the paternal estate, he shall give one-sixth or one-fifth part of his father's property to the son begotten on the wife.

the rule refers to the case where a legitimate son and the son of a wife not appointed both claim the inheritance. But 'óthers,' quoted by Medh., Kull., and Râgh., think that it applies to the case where a wife first was appointed by her husband to procreate a son with his brother, and afterwards a legitimate son was born. The difficulty which under this explanation arises with respect to verse 164, is removed by assuming that the latter applies to the case where the natural father of the Kshetrâga has likewise sons, while verse 162 presupposes that he has none. Nâr. and Nand. say that the case which the rule contemplates, is that two brothers were undivided, and when the one died, the other, who himself had sons, begat with the widow a Kshetrâga son. On the death of the second brother, the Kshetrâga is entitled to receive only the share of the husband of his mother, not to claim a portion of the estate of his natural father. Under this supposition the translation would be, 'If a legitimate son (of one brother) and the son of the wife (of another) have a claim to one (undivided) estate, each shall receive the share of his father.'

163-165. Vi. XV, 28-30; Yâgñ. II, 132.

163. This rule refers to the case where one man leaves several substitutes for sons and a legitimate son (Medh., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). 'To the rest,' i.e. 'to all except the son begotten on the wife' (which latter is exempted by verses 164-165; Medh., Kull., Râgh., Nand.). 'He who does not maintain them, commits sin' (Medh., Kull.); but not, if they have other means of subsistence (Nand.).

164. This rule refers to the case where a Kshetrâga was begotten before the legitimate son, and received no property from his natural father (Râgh.); see also Kull.'s notes on verses 162-163. According

165. The legitimate son and the son of the wife (thus) share the father's estate ; but the other ten become members of the family, and inherit according to their order (each later named on failure of those named earlier).

166. Him whom a man begets on his own wedded wife, let him know to be a legitimate son of the body (Aurasa), the first in rank.

167. He who was begotten according to the peculiar law (of the Niyoga) on the appointed wife of a dead man, of a eunuch, or of one diseased, is called a son begotten on a wife (Kshetrāga).

168. That (boy) equal (by caste) whom his mother or his father affectionately give, (confirming the gift) to Nâr. it refers, however, to the case where a man died, leaving several widows, and one was appointed to bear a son by her brother-in-law, while another afterwards proved to be pregnant and bore a legitimate son. 'The Kshetrāga receives one-fifth, if he is endowed with good qualities, else one-sixth' (Medh., Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand.).

165. Vas. XVII, 39. Gotrarikthâmsabhâginah, 'become members of the family (i. e. succeed to the family rights and duties) and inherit' (Medh., Kull., Nand.), may also be translated, 'share the family estate,' as Nâr. proposes. But his suggestion that the family estate is here mentioned in order to exclude them from their father's self-acquired property is doubtlessly wrong. Equally inadmissible seems another explanation, mentioned by Nâr. and Nand., according to which amsabhâginah, 'they share,' is to mean 'they obtain (such) a share (as will suffice for their maintenance).'

166. Âp. II, 18, 1 ; Vas. XVII, 13 ; Baudh. II, 3, 14 ; Vi. XV, 2 ; Yâgñ. II, 128. I read prâthamakalpikam with Medh., Gov., Nâr., and K. Râgh. gives prathamakalpikam. Kull. and Nâr. think that the wife must be of equal caste, while Medh. says that sva means 'his own,' not 'of his own caste.' Medh. mentions Kull.'s opinion as that of 'others.'

167. Vas. XVII, 14 ; Baudh. II, 3, 18 ; Vi. XV, 3 ; Yâgñ. I, 69, II, 127-128.

168. Vas. XVII, 29 ; Baudh. II, 3, 20 ; Vi. XV, 18-19 ; Yâgñ.

with (a libation of) water, in times of distress (to a man) as his son, must be considered as an adopted son (Dātrima).

169. But he is considered a son made (Kṛitrīma) whom (a man) makes his son, (he being) equal (by caste), acquainted with (the distinctions between) right and wrong, (and) endowed with filial virtues.

170. If (a child) be born in a man's house and his father be not known, he is a son born secretly in the house (Gūdhōtpanna), and shall belong to him of whose wife he was born.

171. He whom (a man) receives as his son, (after he has been) deserted by his parents or by either of them, is called a son cast off (Apaviddha).

II, 130. Sadrīsam, 'equal (by caste),' (Kull., Nār., Rāgh., Nand.), means according to Medh. 'equal by virtues, not by caste.' 'His mother or his father,' i.e. 'after mutually agreeing' (Kull.), 'the mother, if there is no father' (Rāgh.). Medh. and Nand. read mâtâ pitâ ka, 'his mother and his father,' but Medh. adds that vâ is the proper reading. 'Affectionately,' i.e. 'not out of avarice' (Medh.), or 'not out of fear and so forth' (Kull., Nand.), or 'not by force or fraud' (Rāgh.). 'In times of distress,' i.e. 'if the adopter has no son' (Kull., Rāgh.), or 'if the adoptee's parents are in distress' (Nār.).

169. Baudh. II, 3, 21; Yāgñ. II, 131. Medh. again says, 'equal by qualities.' 'Acquainted with (the distinctions between) right and wrong,' i.e. 'by performing or not performing Śrāddhas and other sacred rites merit or sin will follow' (Kull.), or 'I am now the son of so and so, and if I do not serve him I shall become an outcast' (Rāgh.), or 'not an infant' (Medh. 'some,' Nār.). Nār. adds that some read gunādashavīṭakṣaṇaḥ, and refer the adjective to the adopter, who is thereby warned not to take an outcast or the like.

170. Vas. XVII, 24; Baudh. II, 3, 22; Vi. XV, 13-14; Yāgñ. II, 129. According to the commentators the condition is that there is no suspicion that the wife had intercourse with a man of lower caste. Nār. says that the case contemplated is, that a wife had intercourse with several men of equal caste.

171. Vas. XVII, 37; Baudh. II, 3, 23; Vi. XV, 24-25; Yāgñ.

172. A son whom a damsel secretly bears in the house of her father, one shall name the son of an unmarried damsel (Kânîna, and declare) such offspring of an unmarried girl (to belong) to him who weds her (afterwards).

173. If one marries, either knowingly or unknowingly, a pregnant (bride), the child in her womb belongs to him who weds her, and is called (a son) received with the bride (Sahodha).

174. If a man buys a (boy), whether equal or unequal (in good qualities), from his father and mother for the sake of having a son, that (child) is called a (son) bought (Kṛitaka).

175. If a woman abandoned by her husband, or a widow, of her own accord contracts a second marriage and bears (a son), he is called the son of a re-married woman (Paunarbhava).

176. If she be (still) a virgin, or one who returned (to her first husband) after leaving him, she is worthy to again perform with her second (or first deserted) husband the (nuptial) ceremony.

II, 132. The reason of the desertion may be either extreme distress of the parents, or the commission of some fault on the part of the boy (Medh.). 'Provided the father of the child was of equal caste' (Nâr., Nand.).

172. Vas. XVII, 22-23; Baudh. II, 3, 24; Vi. XV, 10-11; Yâgñ. II, 129. 'Provided the lover was of equal or higher caste' (Nâr.).

173. Vas. XVII, 26-27; Baudh. II, 3, 25; Vi. XV, 15-16; Yâgñ. II, 131. Medh.'s commentary on verses 173-178 is missing in the I. O. copies.

174. Vas. XVII, 30-32; Baudh. II, 3, 26; Vi. XV, 20-21; Yâgñ. II, 131. 'Equal or unequal,' i. e. 'by good qualities, not by caste' (Kull., Râgh.), means according to Nâr. 'whether of equal or of lower caste.'

175. Vas. XVII, 18; Baudh. II, 3, 27; Vi. XV, 7-9; Yâgñ. II, 130.

176. Vas. XVII, 74. 'Hence a re-married woman, who is not a

177. He who, having lost his parents or being abandoned (by them) without (just) cause, gives himself to a (man), is called a son self-given (Svayamdatta).

178. The son whom a Brâhmaṇa begets through lust on a Sûdra female is, (though) alive (pârāyaṇa), a corpse (śava), and hence called a Pârasava (a living corpse).

179. A son who is (begotten) by a Sûdra on a female slave, or on the female slave of his slave, may, if permitted (by his father), take a share (of the inheritance); thus the law is settled.

180. These eleven, the son begotten on the wife and the rest as enumerated (above), the wise call substitutes for a son, (taken) in order (to prevent) a failure of the (funeral) ceremonies.

181. Those sons, who have been mentioned in connection with (the legitimate son of the body), virgin, is unworthy of the sacrament' (Nâr.). Râgh., relying on Yâgñ. II, 130, expresses the contrary view, and thinks that the word vâ, 'or,' at the end of the first half-verse, permits the insertion of 'or not a virgin.'

177. Vas. XVII, 33-35; Baudh. II, 3, 28; Vi. XV, 22-23; Yâgñ. II, 131.

178. Vas. XVII, 38; Baudh. II, 3, 30; Vi. XV, 27. 'On a Sûdra-female' i. e. 'one married to him' (Kull.). The designation 'a corpse' indicates that his father derives imperfect benefits from his offerings (Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), or that he is blameable (Râgh.). The term Brâhmaṇa includes Kshatriyas by implication (Nâr.).

179. Yâgñ. II, 133. 'A share,' i. e. 'a share equal to that of a legitimate son' (Kull.), in case the division is made in the father's lifetime, else half a share according to Yâgñ. (Medh.).

180. Kriyâlopat, 'in (order to prevent) a failure of the (funeral) ceremonies,' means according to Medh. 'in (order to prevent) a failure of the duty (to beget offspring).' Kull. mentions this explanation also. Nand. says, 'when there is no legitimacy in consequence of the absence of the action of begetting one.'

181. Âp. II, 13, 7; Baudh. II, 3, 34-35. Hence they should not being begotten by strangers, belong (in reality) to him from whose seed they sprang, but not to the other (man who took them).

182. If among brothers, sprung from one (father), one have a son, Manu has declared them all to have male offspring through that son.

183. If among all the wives of one husband one have a son, Manu declares them all (to be) mothers of male children through that son.

184. On failure of each better (son), each next inferior (one) is worthy of the inheritance; but if there be many (of) equal (rank), they shall all share the estate.

185. Not brothers, nor fathers, (but) sons take the paternal estate; but the father shall take the inheritance of (a son) who leaves no male issue, and his brothers.

be taken, if there is a legitimate son (Medh.), or an appointed daughter (Kull.).

182. Vas. XVII, 10; Vi. XV, 42. Hence no subsidiary sons (Kull., Râgh.), or no Kshetrâgas (Nâr.), are necessary in such a case. Kull. and Râgh. add that the brother will take estate and give the funeral offerings on failure of a wife, daughters, and so forth (Yâgyñ. II, 135).

183. Vas. XVII, 11; Vi. XV, 41. Hence no adoption or other substitution (Kull., Râgh.), or no appointment (Nâr.), shall be made in such a case.

184. 'Each better (son),' i. e. 'each earlier named among the twelve' (Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand.). Kull. and Râgh. add that, as the son of a Sûdra wife is enumerated among the twelve, and not considered like the son of Kshatriya and Vaisya wives a legitimate son, he inherits only on failure of all other subsidiary sons. 'Many (of) equal rank,' i. e. 'many Paunarbhavas and so forth' (Kull., Râgh.).

185. Kull. and Râgh. insert after 'who leaves no son,' 'nor widow and daughters,' and before 'brothers,' 'who leaves no parents.' Nâr., who (as also Gov., Nand., and K.) reads eva vâ, 'or brothers,' says that the father inherits the estate of an undivided

186. To three (ancestors) water must be offered, to three the funeral cake is given, the fourth (descendant is) the giver of these (oblations), the fifth has no connection (with them).

187. Always to that (relative within three degrees) who is nearest to the (deceased) Sapinda the son, leaving no male issue, or the brothers with his permission, and that the estate of a divided son descends to his wife, and other heirs mentioned by Yâgñ. II, 135-136. All these interpolations are most probably improper, as Manu nowhere mentions the right of a wife or a daughter, not appointed, to the estate. The verse can only refer to a divided coparcener or to the separate property of an undivided one, and Manu's opinion seems to be that on failure of sons, grandsons, and great-grandsons, whose rights are indicated by verse 137, the father shall inherit, and after him the brothers.

186. 'To three,' i. e. 'to the father, the grandfather, and the great-grandfather' (Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand.). To these same three the cakes are offered (Kull., Râgh.). Kull. and Râgh. state that the object of the verse is to indicate the right of Kshetrâgas and other subsidiary sons to inherit the estate of a grandfather and so forth deceased without leaving issue. Kull. adds that the right of sons and grandsons of a legitimate son is indicated by verse 137. Nand., however, thinks that the verse serves to prove the right of grandsons and great-grandsons to inherit before 'brothers and the rest.'

187. Vas. XVII, 81-82; Gaut. XXVIII, 33; Âp. II, 14, 2-3. The above translation does not fully agree with any of the explanations given by the four commentators. On philological grounds it seems to me improbable that anantaraḥ sapindât can mean anything else than 'nearest to the Sapinda,' and that this Sapinda can be anybody else than the deceased. Further, as verse 186 apparently contains a definition of the term, limiting Sapinda-relationship to three degrees, and as in the second half of verse 187 the Sakulyas, 'those belonging to the same family,' are mentioned as the next heirs, it seems certain that 'the nearest' here meant is 'the nearest Sapinda or relative within three degrees.' Practically the proposed translation is not much different from that extracted by Kull. and others by the grammatically inadmissible expedient of taking sapindât for sapindamadyât, 'among the Sapindas.' The correctness of the above explanation is also attested by the closely allied parallel passage of Baudhâyana I, 11, 9-13, the first Sûtra of estate shall belong ; afterwards a Sakulya shall be (the heir, then) the spiritual teacher or the pupil.

which corresponds to verse 186, while the other four express the same sense as verse 187. There too the term Sakulya occurs, which Gimûtavâhana takes to denote the three descendants beyond the great-grandson and the three ascendants beyond the great-grandfather, while others explain it as a general term, 'members of one family.' What Manu's precise acceptation of the word was cannot be said with certainty. But, as no technical definition is given by him, it will be safest to take it in its etymological and widest sense, 'the (remoter) members of the family,' and to assume that the principle of nearness to the deceased regulated the succession.

As regards the explanations of the commentators, Kull. says, 'As this general rule would be meaningless, if it were referred to the legitimate son and those other Sapindas alone, who have already been mentioned, its object must therefore be (to teach) that the wife and the rest, who have not been mentioned, shall inherit. To that Sapinda who is the nearest among the Sapindas, be he a male or a female, the estate of the deceased shall belong.' He then goes on to enumerate the heirs in the following order: 1. the legitimate son, sharing with a Kshetrâgâ (verse 164), and a virtuous adoptive son (verse 141); 2. the appointed daughter and her son; 3. the Kshetrâgâ and the other ten subsidiary sons, each on failure of the earlier named, with the proviso that the son of a Sûdra wife receives one-tenth of the estate only (verse 154); 4. the widow (on this point a great many passages are quoted, and Medh. is censured, because in his commentary, which is missing in the I. O. MSS., like the whole passage 182-201, he denied her right to inherit); 5. the daughter, not appointed; 6. the father and the mother; 7. full brothers; 8. sons of full brothers; 9. the paternal grandmother (verse 227); 10. any other near Sapinda, (a) of the grandfather's line, (b) of the great-grandfather's line, and so forth; 11. the Samânodakas, or relatives allied by libations of water (Kull. considering Sakulya as equivalent to Samânodaka); 12. the teacher; 13. the pupil. According to Kull. the translation should be, 'To the nearest among the Sapindas (male or female) the estate shall belong; afterwards (on failure of Sapindas) a Samânodaka shall be (the heir), next the teacher, and (then) the pupil.' Râgh. in substance agrees with this explanation, but in order to make the rule still more fully agree with Yâgñ. II, 135-136, he asserts that the 188. But on failure of all (heirs) Brāhmanas (shall) share the estate, (who are) versed in the three Vedas, pure and self-controlled; thus the law is not violated.

Bandhus or cognates are also implied by the term Sakulya. His explanation of the first words also differs from Kull.'s, and is more in accordance with the rules of grammar, 'He who is the nearest to the Sapinda, i.e. to the legitimate son and the son of the daughter—(viz.) the five, the wife and the rest (mentioned by Yāgñ. II, 135-136).' Rāgh. and Kull. are clearly under the spell of Yāgñ., and most improperly transfer into Manu's text the ideas of the latter. Nār.'s short disjointed remarks are not very clear. He explains the first words by eshām madhye sapindānām ato tho[yo]nantaro yathā putrasya pitā tasya tatpitetyādi tasya tasya taddhanam, 'Among those Sapindas the nearest to him, i.e. the father to his son, his father to him, and so forth; always to him that estate (shall belong).' He then enumerates, on failure of the father, the brother and his son, the grandfather, the Samānodaka, the Sagotra, and the 'Bandhu, i.e. the maternal uncle and the rest,' as successive heirs, and explains Sakulya by Bandhu.

Nand., whose text has a faulty reading sapindārhaḥ, asserts that pinda (sapinda?) means 'the deceased,' and explains the first line by saying, 'Always to him who is the Sapinda nearest to the deceased the wealth, the estate, shall belong—the repetition (of the word tasya) shows the successive order.' The Sakulyas are, according to him, the Samānodakas. He reads sakulyāḥ syuḥ, 'Sakulyas shall be the heirs.'

188. Gaut. XXVIII, 41; Vas. XVII, 84-86; Baudh. I, 13, 14; Vi. XVII, 13-14. The phrase 'on failure of all (heirs),' i.e. 'of those mentioned' (Rāgh.), or 'of all males and females, related in any way (to the deceased),' (Nand.), indicates according to Kull. that other unnamed persons, such as fellow-students, are also entitled to inherit. 'Brāhmanas,' i.e. 'such as live in the same village' (Nār.). 'Pure,' i.e. 'careful of external and internal purity' (Kull.), or better 'who are of good conduct' (Nār.). According to Kull. and Rāgh., the meaning of the last clause is that the Brāhmanas who inherit the estate will offer the funeral sacrifices, and thus no violation of the law regarding the Srāddhas will occur. Nār. points out that this rule, as the following verse shows, refers solely to the property of a Brāhmana.

189. The property of a Brāhmaṇa must never be taken by the king, that is a settled rule; but (the property of men) of other castes the king may take on failure of all (heirs).

190. (If the widow) of (a man) who died without leaving issue, raises up to him a son by a member of the family (Sagotra), she shall deliver to that (son) the whole property which belonged to the (deceased).

191. But if two (sons), begotten by two (different men), contend for the property (in the hands) of their mother, each shall take, to the exclusion of the other, what belonged to his father.

189. Âp. II, 14, 5; Gaut. XXVIII, 42; Vas. XVII, 83; Baudh. I, 13, 15-16. According to Kull. and Râgh., the repetition of the prohibition to take the property of a Brāhmaṇa shows that, if no learned and virtuous Brāhmaṇas are to be found, the king shall give the estate of a Brāhmaṇa deceased without heirs, even to men who have nothing but the name of the Brāhmaṇa caste.

190. According to Kull. and Râgh., this verse refers to the case in which a duly authorised widow bears a son to a relative of her husband, and repeats the rule given above, verse 146, which here however is made imperative on the widow. Kull. adds that the object of the repetition is to show that not only a brother-in-law or a Sapinda, as stated above, verse 59, but also a remoter relative, a Sagotra, may beget a son for a man deceased without issue. Nâr., on the other hand, thinks that in accordance with this verse a child which a widow bears, even without authorisation, to a Sagotra shall inherit the estate of the widow's deceased husband (sagotrâd yadi tantum samtānam âhared aniyuktâpi strî tadâ golakave 'pi tasya gñâtyantarâbhâve kshetrapatidhanahâritvam ity arthaḥ). He adds that some apply this rule to Sûdra females only, and that in the opinion of these persons Gûdhagas, Kânînas, and Sahodhas also are considered as sons in the case of Sûdras only, not in the case of Âryans.

191. Kull. and Nand. think that the verse refers to the case in which a woman married successively two husbands and bore a son to either. If the two husbands died and their property remained in

192. But when the mother has died, all the uterine brothers and the uterine sisters shall equally divide the mother's estate.

193. Even to the daughters of those (daughters) something should be given, as is seemly, out of the estate of their maternal grandmother, on the score of affection.

194. What (was given) before the (nuptial) fire, what (was given) on the bridal procession, what was the hands of the wife, she is to make over the entire property of her first husband to his son, and the property of the second husband to the son of the latter. Râgh. gives the same explanation, but proposes as an alternative, 'If two (sons), begotten by two (different men), contend for the separate property of their mother, &c.' For a twice-married woman will have received nuptial and other presents from both husbands. After her death her sons shall each receive what came to her from his father. Nâr. finally holds that the verse refers to a contention between a legitimate son and a Golaka or a Paunarbhava for the estates of their respective fathers which their mother holds. He construes striyâh with gâtau, 'begotten by two (different men) on one woman.'

192. Kull. and Râgh. restrict this rule, in accordance with a passage of Bṛihaspati, to unmarried daughters, and hold that married daughters receive merely 'a token of respect.' The latter amounts according to Kull. to 'one-fourth of a share;' see above, verse 118. Nâr. says that the term 'the mother's estate' refers to 'other property than stridhana or separate property,' and adds to the expression 'the sisters' aputrâḥ, 'those who have no sons.' He, however, gives the opinion, held by Kull. and Râgh. also, stating that it belongs to 'some.'

193. Kull. holds that the granddaughters should be unmarried. Nâr. says, 'When the married daughters are dead, their daughters shall be presented at will by their maternal uncles with the share which their mothers would have received as a token of respect.' Râgh., too, thinks that 'on the score of affection' means 'at the pleasure (of the heirs).' But Nand. deduces from the same term the absolute necessity of the gift.

194. Vi. XVII, 17; Yâgñ. II, 143. 'What was given in token of love,' i.e. 'by the husband' (ratikâle, Nâr.).

given in token of love, and what was received from her brother, mother, or father, that is called the six-fold property of a woman.

195. (Such property), as well as a gift subsequent and what was given (to her) by her affectionate husband, shall go to her offspring, (even) if she dies in the lifetime of her husband.

196. It is ordained that the property (of a woman married) according to the Brâhma, the Daiva, the Ârsha, the Gândharva, or the Prâgâpatya rite (shall belong) to her husband alone, if she dies without issue.

197. But it is prescribed that the property which may have been given to a (wife) on an Âsura marriage or (one of the) other (blamable marriages, shall go) to her mother and to her father, if she dies without issue.

198. Whatever property may have been given by her father to a wife (who has co-wives of different castes), that the daughter (of the) Brâhmaṇī (wife) shall take, or that (daughter's) issue.

195. Yâgñ. II, 144. Kull. and Nâr. state that both the separate property of a woman, enumerated in verse 194, and that named in verse 195, descend to her children, i. e. 'to her sons and the rest' (Râgh.), or 'to her sons or daughters' (Nand.). Nâr. remarks that 'a gift subsequent' and 'the husband's affectionate gift' are not strîdhana, or separate property, and that hence the wife has no right of free disposal with respect to these two.

196-197. Vi. XVII, 19-20; Yâgñ. II, 145.

196. Nâr. adds to the term 'property,' strîdhanâstrîdhanarûpam, 'whether separate property or not.'

198. I. e. if a Brâhmaṇa has wives of the Brâhmaṇa and Kshatriya castes, property given in any way to the Kshatriya wife by her own family, goes to the daughter of the Brâhmaṇa wife, or if that daughter of the Brâhmaṇa wife is dead and has left issue, to the latter. 'Thus the sons of the Brâhmaṇa wife are excluded' (Kull., Nâr.). Nâr. states expressly that the term 'issue' refers to daughters alone.

199. Women should never make a hoard from (the property of) their families which is common to many, nor from their own (husbands' particular) property without permission.

200. The ornaments which may have been worn by women during their husbands' lifetime, his heirs shall not divide; those who divide them become outcasts.

201. Eunuchs and outcasts, (persons) born blind or deaf, the insane, idiots and the dumb, as well as those deficient in any organ (of action or sensation), receive no share.

199. Kull. and Râgh., whose explanation the translation given above follows, take the first clause to refer to the property of a united family, and the second to the separate property of the husbands. But according to Nâr. and Nand. the translation should be as follows, 'Wives should never take anything (for their private expenses) from (their husbands' property, destined for the support of) their families, on which many have a claim, nor from their own property (which is not strîdhana), without the consent of their husbands.' Nâr.'s explanation of nirhâram kuryuḥ, 'should (never) take anything,' seems preferable to that given by Kull. and Râgh.

200. Vi. XVII, 22. 'His heirs,' i. e. 'the sons and the rest' (Kull., Nâr.). Nand., who differs from the above explanation, says, 'Since the ornaments are the husband's property, because they have not been mentioned as strîdhana, the object of this utterance is to forbid their going to the heirs, while the husband lives' (alamkârasya strîdhane 'nudishatvâd bhartṛidhanatvena bhartṛibhâve dâyaâdânâm prâptyapavâdârtho 'yam ârambhaḥ). Nand. appears, therefore, to construe patyau gîvati with bhageran, just as Nandapandita does in the parallel passage of Vishnu (see Professor Jolly's note).

201-203. Âp. II, 14, 1, 15; Gaut. XXVIII, 23, 40, 43; Vas. XVII, 52-53; Baudh. II, 3, 37-40; Vi. XV, 32-37; Yâgyñ. II, 140-141.

201. 'Eunuchs,' i. e. 'those who are incurable;' 'outcasts,' i. e. 'those guilty of a mortal sin (mahâpâtaka) before they perform a penance;' 'the insane,' i. e. 'those who are incurable' (Nâr.). 'Those deficient in any organ, i. e. of action' (Nand.), such as lame men (Kull., Nand.), such as men without hands (Râgh.), or

202. But it is just that (a man) who knows (the law) should give even to all of them food and raiment without stint, according to his ability; he who gives it not will become an outcast.

203. If the eunuch and the rest should somehow or other desire to (take) wives, the offspring of such among them as have children is worthy of a share.

204. Whatever property the eldest (son) acquires (by his own exertion) after the father's death, a share of that (shall belong) to his younger (brothers), provided they have made a due progress in learning.

also 'of sensation,' such as men who have lost the faculty of touch (Nâr.).

202. Medh. and Kull. take atyantam, 'without stint,' in the sense of 'for life.' Nâr. construes the word with adadat, and explains 'he who does not give it at all.' Nand. reads abhyāṅgam, 'ointments,' for atyantam, 'without stint.'

203. Medh. is of opinion that some of the persons disqualified from inheriting, the vâtaretas klîba, those born blind and the lame, may marry, while outcasts, madmen, and the rest cannot do so. Hence the conditional clause may be taken in the sense adopted above in the translation. He, however, adds that the rule may also refer to cases in which the cause of the disqualification arose after marriage. Nâr.'s explanation is substantially the same. But he considers that a eunuch and an outcast cannot contract a legal marriage, and that the expression klibâdayaḥ, literally 'those among whom the eunuch is the first,' refers to 'men born blind and the rest.' He admits also the rights of the Kshetrâga sons of eunuchs and outcasts who contracted a marriage before their disqualification arose. Kull. says, 'By the employment of the term "somehow or other" it is indicated that a eunuch and the rest are not worthy to marry.' In the sequel he explains the word 'offspring' by Kshetrâga. Râgh. and Nand. follow him with respect to the latter point.

204. The rule refers of course to a united family only (Kull.). Medh. infers from the expression vidyânupâlinâḥ, 'provided they have made a due progress in learning,' that 'persons subsisting by learning, mechanics and artisans, such as physicians, actors, singers,'

205. But if all of them, being unlearned, acquire property by their labour, the division of that shall be equal, (as it is) not property acquired by the father; that is a settled rule.

206. Property (acquired) by learning belongs solely to him to whom (it was given), likewise the gift of a friend, a present received on marriage or with the honey-mixture.

are meant. Nâr. and Nand. hold that no part of an acquisition, made under the same circumstances by the youngest brother, can be claimed by the eldest, because this verse specifies the eldest alone, and because the next verse declares that the acquisitions only made by any member of an unlearned family, shall be partible.

205. Gaut. XXXVIII, 31. This rule refers to acquisitions by trade (Medh., Kull., Nâr.), by agriculture (Medh., Kull. Nand.), or by royal service (Medh.). 'As the division is to be equal, the eldest receives no preferential share' (Medh., Kull., Nand.). Medh. adds that, since the expression 'as it is not property acquired by the father,' gives the reason for the equal division, the same rule holds good for the division of the estate of any other person deceased without issue. Nand. takes apitrya iti for apitrya^h iti and explains it by 'since (the division) has not been made by the father.'

206. Yâgñ. II, 118-119. 'Property acquired by learning,' i. e. 'a fee for teaching or money received for proficiency in an art' (Medh., Nand.), includes according to a text of Kâtyâyana, quoted by Kull. and Râgh. (see Colebrooke V, Digest CCCXLVII), gifts from pupils, gratuities for performing a sacrifice, a fee for answering a difficult question in casuistry, or for ascertaining a doubtful point in law, rewards for displaying knowledge or for victory in a learned contest, or for reciting the Veda with transcendent ability. Instances in which land was given as vidyâdhana occur in the inscriptions, see e. g. Indian Antiquary, XII, p. 195 b, l. 6. 'A present received on marriage,' i. e. 'what (the bridegroom) receives from the relatives of his wife' (Medh., Nâr.), or 'from any other person' (Medh. 'others'), means according to Nand., 'strîdhana received at the time of marriage' (?). 'A present received with the honey-mixture' is explained by Medh. and, as Kull. asserts, by Gov. also, by 'the fee given for the performance of a sacrifice.' But the explanation given by Kull., Nâr., Râgh., and Nand., 'any

207. But if one of the brothers, being able (to maintain himself) by his own occupation, does not desire (a share of the family) property, he may be made separate (by the others) receiving a trifle out of his share to live upon.

208. What one (brother) may acquire by his labour without using the patrimony, that acquisition, (made solely) by his own effort, he shall not share unless by his own will (with his brothers).

209. But if a father recovers lost ancestral pro-present received, in token of respect, with the honey-mixture,' e. g. a silver vase (Râgh.), is preferable. Regarding the persons worthy of the honey-mixture, see above, III, 119-120. Kull. points out that this rule is a restriction of that given above, verse 204. Râgh. adds that, as the parallel passage of Yâgñ. shows, such acquisitions become the private property of the donee, only if they were obtained 'without detriment to the paternal estate;' see also below, verse 208.

207. Yâgñ. II, 116. The translation given above follows the second explanation offered by Medh., and the glosses of Kull. and Nâr. According to Medh.'s first explanation, with which Nand. agrees, the translation would agree with Sir W. Jones's, 'he may debar himself from his share.' The reason why a trifle should be given is, according to all commentators, that future disputes may be prevented.

208. Yâgñ. II, 118; Vi. XVIII, 42. 'By his labour,' i. e. 'by agriculture and the like' (Medh., Kull., Nand.), or 'by any occupation entailing trouble' (śramaganyakarmāṇā, Nâr.). Anupaghnan, 'without using' (Nand.), or 'without living upon' (Râgh.), is explained by Kull. 'without detriment to,' and Nand. mentions this interpretation also. Nâr. remarks that acquisitions made without labour or trouble are liable to partition. Nand. says that the rule, given in this verse, may be reconciled with that contained in verse 205, by assuming that the latter presupposes that all brothers exert themselves according to their ability (pūrvam sarveshu yathāsāmarthyam ihamāneshu bhrātṛiṣhu labdhasya samavibhāga ukta ityavirodho 'nusamdheyaḥ).

209. Yâgñ. II, 119; Vi. XVIII, 43. The translation of paitrikam, lit. 'paternal,' by 'ancestral,' is based on Nâr.'s gloss svapitriperty, he shall not divide it, unless by his own will, with his sons, (for it is) self-acquired (property).

210. If brothers, (once) divided and living (again) together (as coparceners), make a second partition, the division shall in that case be equal; in such a case there is no right of primogeniture.

211. If the eldest or the youngest (brother) is deprived of his share, or if either of them dies, his share is not lost (to his immediate heirs).

212. His uterine brothers, having assembled together, shall equally divide it, and those brothers who were reunited (with him) and the uterine sisters.

sambandhi and on Râgh.'s pitrîpitâmahâdisambandhi. The latter refers also to the parallel passage of Yâgñ. Anavâptam, 'lost,' means literally 'not obtained (by his father).' The translation of svayamargitam by 'for it is self-acquired' agrees with Nand.'s remark, svayamargitatvâd ity arthaḥ. Nâr. adds, 'And thus it has been declared that property of the father which has not been acquired by him with exceedingly great trouble must be divided at the will of the sons, and to this refers the passage of Yâgñ. II, 121, "Over land acquired by the grandfather, &c." Medh., whose commentary on this verse is very corrupt, seems likewise to have inferred from it that Manu admitted the equal ownership of a father and his sons in ancestral property (see also Colebrooke V, Digest XCI). But he combats the theory that sons may without a violation of their duty force the father to divide the ancestral property.

210. Vi. XVIII, 41.

211. 'Be deprived of his share,' i. e. 'because he has become an outcast or the like' (Medh.), or 'because he has become an ascetic' (Kull., Nand.), or 'because he has emigrated' (Nand.), or 'because he has become a eunuch after the (first) partition' (Nâr.). Na lupyate, 'is not lost (to his immediate heirs),' is explained by Nâr. as follows, 'His share, being formerly determined, is not lost, i. e. must not be divided by all the reunited coparceners and thus be made to disappear' (see also the text of Brîhaspati, Colebrooke V, Digest CCCCVII, 2). 'What is to be done with the share is shown in the next verse' (Medh., Nâr., Râgh., Nand.).

212. Vi. XVII, 17; Gaut. XXVIII, 21; Yâgñ. II, 138. The

213. An eldest brother who through avarice may defraud the younger ones, shall no (longer hold the position of) the eldest, shall not receive an (eldest son's additional) share, and shall be punished by the king.

214. All brothers who habitually commit forbidden acts, are unworthy of (a share of) the property, and the eldest shall not make (anything his) separate property without giving (an equivalent) to his younger brothers.

meaning of the verse is: 1. according to Medh., with whose opinion the not very clear glosses of Kull. and Râgh. seem to agree, 'the share of a deceased reunited brother goes first to the reunited brothers of the full blood and to such sisters of the full blood who are not married (aputrâh, MSS. for aprattâh)—married sisters (pravrittâh, MSS. for pradattâh) being excluded, because they belong to another family—next to not reunited brothers of the full blood, finally to reunited half-brothers;' 2. according to Nâr., 'the share of a reunited brother devolves first on reunited brothers of the whole blood, next on reunited half-brothers, further on sisters of the full blood, then on the sons of brothers [of the whole blood?], and finally on sons of half-brothers [? tadabhâve tvasodârâdy api].' Nand. has the same order of heirs as Nâr., but stops with 'the sisters of the whole blood.' Nâr.'s and Nand.'s explanation, which strictly follows the order of the enumeration in the text, agrees with Brîhaspati's rule (Colebrooke V, Digest CCCCVII, 3), which likewise seems to be a paraphrase of Manu's words. Kull., Râgh., and Nâr. hold that the heirs, named in the verse, inherit only on failure of sons, wives, daughters, and parents. Nâr. further remarks that some refer this verse and the preceding one to the division of the estate of one who died before partition, while others believe that it applies to the estate of a reunited brother only.

213. 'Shall no (longer hold the position of) the eldest,' i.e. 'shall not receive the honours, e. g. in saluting, due to the eldest brother' (Medh., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). The insertion of the words 'an eldest son's additional' before 'share,' is made on the authority of Medh. and Kull. 'Shall be punished,' i.e. 'by reprimand (vâgdandadhig-dandâbhyâm) or by a fine as the case may require' (Medh.).

214. Âp. II, 14, 15; Gaut. XXVIII, 40; Baudh. II, 3, 38. 'Who

215. If undivided brethren, (living with their father,) together make an exertion (for gain), the father shall on no account give to them unequal shares (on a division of the estate).

216. But a son, born after partition, shall alone take the property of his father, or if any (of the other sons) be reunited with the (father), he shall share with them.

217. A mother shall obtain the inheritance of a son (who dies) without leaving issue, and, if the mother be dead, the paternal grandmother shall take the estate.

habitually commit forbidden acts,' i. e. 'who are addicted to gambling, drinking, and the like vices' (Kull., Râgh.), or 'who, being Brâhmanas, follow despicable modes of living, such as tending cattle, serving Sûdras and the like' (Nâr.). Na . . . kurvîta yautukam, 'shall not make (anything his) separate property,' means according to Nand. 'shall not give a marriage-portion to his daughter without having made a division of the estate.' The correct interpretation is, however, that given by the other commentators, according to which the eldest is not to appropriate anything out of the common stock for himself 'without giving an equivalent to the others' (kanish/kebhya tâvad adattvâ, Nâr.).

215. Yâgñ. II, 120. Medh. remarks that this rule is a restriction of the general power of the father to make an unequal division (Yâgñ. II, 116), and thinks that it is not necessary that all the brothers should have been associated in the same kind of work. According to him it is sufficient that all have exerted themselves to gain money. Nâr. and Nand. clearly express the contrary view (sahot-thânam sambhûyavânigryâdinâ vittârganam, Nâr.).

216. Gaut. XXVIII, 29; Vi. XVII, 3; Yâgñ. II, 122.

217. Vi. XVII, 7; Yâgñ. II, 135. Kull., Nâr., and Nand. all three hold that the mother inherits only on failure of sons [grandsons and great-grandsons, Nand.], widows, and daughters. But they disagree with respect to the sequence of the next following heirs. Kull. holds that the mother and the father, whose right has been mentioned above, verse 185, follow next, inheriting conjointly, then brothers, afterwards brothers' sons, and after

218. And if, after all the debts and assets have been duly distributed according to the rule, any (property) be afterwards discovered, one must divide it equally.

219. A dress, a vehicle, ornaments, cooked food, water, and female (slaves), property destined for pious uses or sacrifices, and a pasture-ground, they declare to be indivisible.

them the paternal grandmother. Nâr. gives the following order : 1. mother, 2. father, 3. brothers, 4. brothers' sons, 5. maternal grandmother. Medh. says that this verse has been explained formerly. The portion of his commentary where the explanation occurred, has, however, been lost ; see note on verse 187.

218. Yâgñ. II, 126. Medh., Kull., and Nâr. point out that on the division of property discovered after partition, the eldest, according to this text, receives no preferential share. Nâr. adds that this rule applies also to debts, discovered after partition. Nâr. inserts this verse after verse 219.

219. Gaut. XXVIII, 46-47 ; Vi. XVIII, 44. Instead of patram, 'a vehicle,' i. e. 'a horse or cart, used exclusively by one of the coparceners during union' (Medh., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), Nand. reads pâtram, 'a drinking-vessel.' Striyah, 'female (slaves),' means according to Nâr. 'wives.' My translation of yogakshemam, which I take with Medh., Nâr., and Nand. as a copulative compound in the neuter gender, by 'property destined for pious uses and sacrifices,' rests on the explanation given by Vigñânesvara (Colebrooke, Mit. I, 4, 23), and adopted by Haradatta and Nandapandita on the parallel passages of Gaut. and Vi. I prefer it to all others, chiefly on account of the explicit passage of Laugâkshi which Vigñânesvara quotes. In its favour speaks also that numerous royal grants allow villages or land to Brâhmanas and their descendants for the performance of certain sacrifices, or for charitable purposes, such as the daily distribution of food (annasattra or sadâvrata), and that the occurrence of a rule in the Smṛtis, declaring property given under such conditions to be impartible, is no more than might be expected. The commentators on Manu, on the other hand, give the following explanations : 1. 'the means of securing protection, i. e. royal councillors, family priests, ministers, old women (vṛiddhâḥ), a house, and a kâra, a spy (?), or a pasture-ground(?) and the like' (Medh.); 2. 'a royal councillor, a domestic priest and the like' (Kull.

220. The division (of the property) and the rules for allotting (shares) to the (several) sons, those begotten on a wife and the rest, in (due) order, have been thus declared to you; hear (now) the laws concerning gambling.

221. Gambling and betting let the king exclude from his realm; those two vices cause the destruction of the kingdoms of princes.

222. Gambling and betting amount to open theft; the king shall always exert himself in suppressing both (of them).

223. When inanimate (things) are used (for staking money on them), that is called among men gambling (dyûta), when animate beings are used (for the same purpose), one must know that to be betting (samâhvaya).

224. Let the king corporally punish all those (persons) who either gamble and bet or afford (an and Râgh., which latter reads, however, yogakshemapraṭāram); 3. 'means of gain, i. e. a grant and the like, received from a king and the like, and gained by oneself, and means of protection' (prākāre ka ish/akādīh? Nâr.); 4. 'sources of gain, i. e. persons for whom one sacrifices and the like, sources of protection, i. e. doorkeepers and the like, and sources of gain and protection, i. e. lords of villages and the like' (Nand.). Praṭāra, 'a pasture-ground,' means according to Nâr. and Nand. 'a road leading to a field, a garden and the like.'

Medh., Kull., and Nâr. state that the first four articles shall in general be kept by the coparcener who used them or for whose use they were prepared, but that articles or quantities of exceptional value must be sold or exchanged for other property. Wells and so forth are to be used by all the coparceners (Kull., Nand.). Female slaves are to do work for all coparceners (Kull.).

221-229. Âp. II, 25, 12-15; Gaut. XXV, 18; Baudh. II, 2, 16; Yâgñ. II, 199-203. In the I. O. MSS. Medh.'s commentary on verses 221-227 is missing.

224. Yâgñ. II, 304. 'The distinctive marks of twice-born men,' opportunity for it), likewise Sûdras who assume the distinctive marks of twice-born (men).

225. Gamblers, dancers and singers, cruel men, men belonging to an heretical sect, those following forbidden occupations, and sellers of spirituous liquor, let him instantly banish from his town.

226. If such (persons who are) secret thieves, dwell in the realm of a king, they constantly harass his good subjects by their forbidden practices.

227. In a former Kalpa this (vice of) gambling has been seen to cause great enmity; a wise man, therefore, should not practise it even for amusement.

228. On every man who addicts himself to that (vice) either secretly or openly, the king may inflict punishment according to his discretion.

i. e. 'the sacrificial thread and the like' (Kull., Nâr.). 'Shall punish corporally,' i. e. 'shall cause them to be flogged, &c.' (Nâr.), or 'shall cause their hands and feet to be cut off and so forth according to the gravity of the offence' (Kull., Râgh.).

225. Instead of krûrân, 'cruel men,' i. e. 'those who hate men learned in the Veda' (Kull.), Nâr. and Râgh. read kerân, which the former explains by 'men of exceedingly crooked behaviour,' and the latter in accordance with Kull.'s explanation of krûrân. Nand. reads kailân, 'given to sports' (kêlîsilân), and K. korân, 'thieves.' Saundâkân, 'distillers or sellers of spirituous liquor' (Kull., Nâr.), may also mean 'drunkards,' as Nand. explains it.

226. Instead of 'who are secret thieves' (Kull.), Nâr. says, 'and secret thieves.' Bâdhante, 'harass' (Kull.), means according to Nâr., Râgh., and Nand. 'corrupt.'

227. Nâr. explains purâkalpe, 'in a former Kalpa,' by 'in the ancient stories,' and Râgh. and Nand. point to the adventures of king Nala and Yudhishthira, which, no doubt, are alluded to in the text.

228. Râgh. and Nand. point out that not only corporal punishment (according to verse 224), but also a fine may be inflicted; see also the next verse.

229. But a Kshatriya, a Vaisya, and a Sûdra who are unable to pay a fine, shall discharge the debt by labour; a Brâhmana shall pay it by instalments.

230. On women, infants, men of disordered mind, the poor and the sick, the king shall inflict punishment with a whip, a cane, or a rope and the like.

231. But those appointed (to administer public) affairs, who, baked by the fire of wealth, mar the business of suitors, the king shall deprive of their property.

232. Forgers of royal edicts, those who corrupt his ministers, those who slay women, infants, or Brâhmanas, and those who serve his enemies, the king shall put to death.

233. Whenever any (legal transaction) has been completed or (a punishment) been inflicted according to the law, he shall sanction it and not annul it.

229. Yâgñ. II, 43. Compare the rule given at VIII, 177.

230. Siphâ, 'a whip,' is explained by Râgh. as 'a rod measuring five fingers,' or 'the pendent root of a fig-tree.' Nâr. and Nand. give the latter meaning. Medh., Nâr., and Nand. read daridrânâtharoginâm, 'the poor, the unprotected, and the sick.'

231. See above, VII, 124; Vi. V, 180. 'Those appointed, &c.,' i. e. viceroys and so forth (Medh.), or judges and so forth (Nâr.). 'Baked by the fire of wealth' is a simile taken from the burning of earthen pots, and means that such persons by the influence of wealth undergo a change for the worse, just as a pot heated in a fire changes its colour, or, as the Vaiseshikas hold, its nature. According to Medh., 'others' read ye 'niyuktâs tu, and referred the verse to non-official persons meddling with administrative or judicial business.

232. Yâgñ. II, 240; Vi. V, 9, 11.

233. Medh. and Kull. refer this prohibition to cases which have been properly decided in the king's courts, while Nâr. thinks that it applies to orders passed by former kings. Nand. gives a different explanation of the words tîrita and anurish'a. He adduces a verse of Kâtyâyana, according to which the former means 'a cause or

234. Whatever matter his ministers or the judge may settle improperly, that the king himself shall (re-)settle and fine (them) one thousand (paṇas).

235. The slayer of a Brāhmaṇa, (a twice-born man) who drinks (the spirituous liquor called) Surā, he who steals (the gold of a Brāhmaṇa), and he who violates a Guru's bed, must each and all be considered as men who committed mortal sins (mahā-pātaka).

236. On those four even, if they do not perform a penance, let him inflict corporal punishment and fines in accordance with the law.

237. For violating a Guru's bed, (the mark of) a female part shall be (impressed on the forehead with a hot iron); for drinking (the spirituous liquor called) Surā, the sign of a tavern; for stealing (the gold of a Brāhmaṇa), a dog's foot; for murdering a Brāhmaṇa, a headless corpse.

plaint declared to be just or unjust by the assessors,' and the latter 'a cause or plaint confirmed by witnesses.'

234. Yāgyñ. II, 305. Medh. and Kull. think that this rule refers to cases where the cause of the unjust decision is not a bribe, because the punishment of corrupt judges has been prescribed above, verse 231. But Nār. and Rāgh. think that it applies to cases of bribery also, and that the fine shall vary according to the nature of the case, 1000 paṇas being the lowest punishment.

235-242. Baudh. I, 18, 18; Vi. V, 3-7.

235. Instead of '(a twice-born man) who drinks the spirituous liquor, &c.' (Kull., Nār.), Medh. and Rāgh. say, 'a Brāhmaṇa who, &c.;' but see below, XI, 94.

236. Medh. remarks that 'others' refer this rule, on account of the word api, 'even, likewise,' to the fifth Mahāpatakin also, i. e. to him who associates with one of the other four (see below, XI, 55); and Rāgh., as well as Nand., approves of this explanation.

237. 'The sign of a tavern,' i. e. 'a wine-cup.' It follows from the rule given in verse 240, that the forehead is the place where they shall be branded.

238. Excluded from all fellowship at meals, excluded from all sacrifices, excluded from instruction and from matrimonial alliances, abject and excluded from all religious duties, let them wander over (this) earth.

239. Such (persons) who have been branded with (indelible) marks must be cast off by their paternal and maternal relations, and receive neither compassion nor a salutation; that is the teaching of Manu.

240. But (men of) all castes who perform the prescribed penances, must not be branded on the forehead by the king, but shall be made to pay the highest amercement.

241. For (such) offences the middlemost amercement shall be inflicted on a Brâhmana, or he may be banished from the realm, keeping his money and his chattels.

242. But (men of) other (castes), who have unintentionally committed such crimes, ought to be deprived of their whole property; if (they committed them) intentionally, they shall be banished.

238. Medh. reads asamyogyâh, 'excluded from all intercourse,' instead of asamyâgyâh, 'excluded from all sacrifices.'

240. 'All castes,' i. e. 'the three Âryan castes.' Nâr. and Nand. read pûrve, 'the before-mentioned castes.' 'The highest amercement,' see above, VIII, 138.

241. According to Medh., the meaning of the verse is that a Brâhmana, endowed with good qualities, who unintentionally (verse 242) committed a mortal sin, shall either be fined in the middlemost amercement and be made to perform the prescribed penance, or, if he refuses to do that, be banished without the infliction of a fine. Kull. and Nand. partly agree, but think that the offender is to be banished, if he committed the crime intentionally.

242. The translation follows Nâr. and Nand., who think that persons, performing no penance, shall be deprived of their whole

243. A virtuous king must not take for himself the property of a man guilty of mortal sin; but if he takes it out of greed, he is tainted by that guilt (of the offender).

244. Having thrown such a fine into the water, let him offer it to Varuṇa, or let him bestow it on a learned and virtuous Brāhmaṇa.

245. Varuṇa is the lord of punishment, for he holds the sceptre even over kings; a Brāhmaṇa who has learnt the whole Veda is the lord of the whole world.

246. In that (country), where the king avoids taking the property of (mortal) sinners, men are born in (due) time (and are) long-lived,

247. And the crops of the husbandmen spring up, each as it was sown, and the children die not, and no misshaped (offspring) is born.

property, if the offence was committed unintentionally, and be banished after being branded, if their crime was intentional. Nār., moreover, adds, 'this refers to light cases; it has been declared that he shall slay the offender in bad cases.' Kull. and Rāgh. think that confiscation of the whole property shall be inflicted in particularly bad cases, instead of the fine of 1000 paṇas prescribed in verse 240; and Medh. says that this is the opinion of 'some.' Medh., Kull., and Rāgh. explain pravāsanam, 'shall be banished,' by 'shall be punished corporally.' Though it is not absolutely impossible that pravās may mean 'to hurt, or punish corporally,' it seems not advisable to take the word in the latter sense, on account of verses 238 and 241; compare also VIII, 284. Medh. remarks that a Śūdra who offends unintentionally, shall be branded and be deprived of his whole property, else he shall be put to death.

244. Yâgñ. II, 307.

245. Varuṇa is the supreme ruler (adhirâga) of kings; see Taittirīya-brāhmaṇa III, 1, 2, 7. Regarding the position of a learned Brāhmaṇa, see above, I, 98-101.

246. Instead of kâlena, 'in (due) time,' i.e. 'after the full period of gestation' (Kull., Nār., Rāgh.), Nand. reads loke tu, 'but in that country.'

248. But the king shall inflict on a base-born (Sûdra), who intentionally gives pain to Brâhmanas, various (kinds of) corporal punishment which cause terror.

249. When a king punishes an innocent (man), his guilt is considered as great as when he sets free a guilty man; but (he acquires) merit when he punishes (justly).

250. Thus the (manner of) deciding suits (falling) under the eighteen titles, between two litigant parties, has been declared at length.

251. A king who thus duly fulfils his duties in accordance with justice, may seek to gain countries which he has not yet gained, and shall duly protect them when he has gained them.

252. Having duly settled his country, and having built forts in accordance with the Institutes, he shall use his utmost exertions to remove (those men who are noxious like) thorns.

253. By protecting those who live as (becomes) Âryans and by removing the thorns, kings, solely intent on guarding their subjects, reach heaven.

254. The realm of that king who takes his share

248. See above, VIII, 279-284. Though all the commentators take avaragam in the sense of 'a base-born Sûdra,' the word may have its etymological meaning, 'a man of lower caste.' Medh. explains 'who gives pain' by 'who takes their property or wives;' Nâr., 'who causes exceedingly great misery.'

249. See above, VIII, 19, 310-311, 317.

250. 'This verse is the conclusion of the section on the eighteen titles of the law' (Medh.), 'and now follows a supplement on the duties of a king' (Nâr.).

252. See above, VII, 69-70.

253-254. See above, VIII, 307, 386-387.

in kind, though he does not punish thieves, (will be) disturbed and he (will) lose heaven.

255. But if his kingdom be secure, protected by the strength of his arm, it will constantly flourish like a (well)-watered tree.

256. Let the king who sees (everything) through his spies, discover the two sorts of thieves who deprive others of their property, both those who (show themselves) openly and those who (lie) concealed.

257. Among them, the open rogues (are those) who subsist by (cheating in the sale of) various marketable commodities, but the concealed rogues are burglars, robbers in forests, and so forth.

258. Those who take bribes, cheats and rogues, gamblers, those who live by teaching (the performance of) auspicious ceremonies, sanctimonious hypocrites, and fortune-tellers,

258. Aupādhikāḥ, 'cheats,' means according to Medh. 'persons of crooked behaviour who promise kindnesses, but secretly do evil to others,' or 'such as take money under false pretences,' or 'such as extort money by threats.' The last explanation is adopted by Kull. and Rāgh., while Nār. and Nand. interpret the term to mean 'persons who cheat by using false weights and measures.' Vaṇṭakāḥ, 'rogues,' i.e. 'men who promise to transact business for others, and do not keep their word' (Medh.), or 'alchemists who pretend to change base metals into precious metals' (rasam vidyam [rasavidyayā] tāmṛādi ragatādirūpena darsayitvā suvarṇādikam grīhṇanti, Rāgh., Kull.), or 'men who take money on false pretences' (Nār.). Maṅgalādesavṛitāḥ, 'those who live by teaching the performance of, or by performing for others, auspicious ceremonies' (Medh., Kull., Rāgh.), means according to Nār. 'men who live by reciting auspicious hymns' (maṅgalastutipātho vṛitam karitam yeshām), and Medh. proposes a similar alternative explanation. Medh. reads bhadrāprekṣaṇikāḥ saha, and explains the compound by 'eulogists' (prāsaṃsikapuruṣhalakṣaṇāḥ). Nār. explains ikṣaṇikāḥ, 'fortune-tellers,' by 'actors and jugglers.'

259. Officials of high rank and physicians who act improperly, men living by showing their proficiency in arts, and clever harlots,

260. These and the like who show themselves openly, as well as others who walk in disguise (such as) non-Āryans who wear the marks of Āryans, he should know to be thorns (in the side of his people).

261. Having detected them by means of trustworthy persons, who, disguising themselves, (pretend) to follow the same occupations and by means of spies, wearing various disguises, he must cause them to be instigated (to commit offences), and bring them into his power.

259. Mahāmātra, 'officials of high rank,' i.e. 'courtiers such as councillors and domestic priests' (Medh.), or 'ministers' (Nâr.), is taken by Kull. and Râgh. in its other sense, 'elephant-breakers.' Silpopakârayuktâh, 'men living by showing their proficiency in arts,' i.e. 'such as cut figures out of chips of cane and the like' (Medh., Râgh.), or 'painters and the like' (Kull.). Nâr. and Nand. read silpopakârayuktâh, i.e. 'artists such as painters and persons adorning (upakâra) people such as hairdressers' (Nâr.), or 'umbrella and fan makers' (Nand.). Medh. says that asam-yakkârinah, 'who act improperly,' must be taken with all the four classes of persons enumerated.

260. Nâr. and Nand. read vigâtîyân, 'such and the like open (rogues) of many kinds,' and connect the accusatives in this verse with viditvâ in the next. Kull. takes vigâtîyât, 'let him know (to be),' in the sense of 'let him discover (through spies).'

261. The translation follows Nâr.'s explanation, who reads protsâhya (likewise found in Gov., Râgh., and K.) instead of protsâdya, found in the editions, in Kull.'s and probably also in Medh.'s version. The reading protsâdya, 'having destroyed them,' is objectionable on account of the following verse. Râgh. explains protsâhya differently; he says, 'having inspired them with energy by saying, "you must give up this livelihood and earn money by agriculture, trade, and the like," he shall induce to adopt a honest mode of line through desire for money.' Nand. seems to

262. Then having caused the crimes, which they committed by their several actions, to be proclaimed in accordance with the facts, the king shall duly punish them according to their strength and their crimes.

263. For the wickedness of evil-minded thieves, who secretly prowl over this earth, cannot be restrained except by punishment.

264. Assembly-houses, houses where water is distributed or cakes are sold, brothels, taverns and victualler's shops, cross-roads, well-known trees, festive assemblies, and play-houses and concert-rooms,

265. Old gardens, forests, the shops of artisans, empty dwellings, natural and artificial groves,

266. These and the like places the king shall cause to be guarded by companies of soldiers, both stationary and patrolling, and by spies, in order to keep away thieves.

267. By the means of clever reformed thieves, who associate with such (rogues), follow them and know their various machinations, he must detect and destroy them.

268. Under the pretext of (offering them) various dainties, of introducing them to Brâhmaṇas, and on the pretence of (showing them) feats of strength, the (spies) must make them meet (the officers of justice).

read protsârya (protsâryâ, MS.). Kull. explains anekasamsthânaiḥ, 'wearing various disguises' (Nâr., Nand.), by 'stationed in various places.' Medh.'s commentary on the end of verse 261 and on verses 262-274 is missing in the I. O. MSS.

267. Instead of utsâdayet, 'he shall destroy them' (Kull., K., editions), Gov., Nâr., Nand., and Râgh. read utsâhayet, i.e. 'he shall incite them to commit (crimes,' Nâr., Râgh.).

269. Those among them who do not come, and those who suspect the old (thieves employed by the king), the king shall attack by force and slay together with their friends, blood relations, and connexions.

270. A just king shall not cause a thief to be put to death, (unless taken) with the stolen goods (in his possession); him who (is taken) with the stolen goods and the implements (of burglary), he may, without hesitation, cause to be slain.

271. All those also who in villages give food to thieves or grant them room for (concealing their implements), he shall cause to be put to death.

272. Those who are appointed to guard provinces and his vassals who have been ordered (to help), he shall speedily punish like thieves, (if they remain) inactive in attacks (by robbers).

273. Moreover if (a man), who subsists by (the fulfilment of) the law, departs from the established rule of the law, the (king) shall severely punish him by a fine, (because he) violated his duty.

269. Mûlaprazihitâh, 'who suspect the old thieves employed by the king' (Kull., Râgh.), means according to Nâr. 'who have been sent by ministers and the like staying in his kingdom,' and according to Nand. 'who have discovered the root, i. e. the reasons (of the proceedings of the spies).' All the three explanations are, however, doubtful.

271. Bhândâvakâsadâh, 'who give them room for (concealing) their implements' (Kull.), means according to Nâr. 'who give them money (for buying arms and the like) and shelter.'

272. The commentators take sâmantân, 'his vassals,' in its etymological sense of 'neighbours.' But it has here no doubt the usual technical meaning.

273. According to the commentators officiating priests and other Brâhmanas are meant, who subsist by obtaining alms on the strength of their piety.

274. Those who do not give assistance according to their ability when a village is being plundered, a dyke is being destroyed, or a highway robbery committed, shall be banished with their goods and chattels.

275. On those who rob the king's treasury and those who persevere in opposing (his commands), he shall inflict various kinds of capital punishment, likewise on those who conspire with his enemies.

276. But the king shall cut off the hands of those robbers who, breaking into houses, commit thefts at night, and cause them to be impaled on a pointed stake.

277. On the first conviction, let him cause two fingers of a cut-purse to be amputated; on the second, one hand and one foot; on the third, he shall suffer death.

278. Those who give (to thieves) fire, food, arms, or shelter, and receivers of stolen goods, the ruler shall punish like thieves.

274. Vi. V, 74. Instead of hitâbhaṅge, 'when an embankment is destroyed' (Kull., editions), Râgh. reads hiḍâbhaṅge, and Gov. as well as Nand. iḍâbhaṅge with the same explanation. Nâr. has tadâgabhaṅge, probably a mistake for iḍâbhaṅge, and mentions a var. lect. hiḥâbhaṅge, adding that hiḥâ is 'a dam thrown across a river.' K. finally reads setubhaṅge.

276. Yâgñ. II, 273.

277. Vi. V, 136; Yâgñ. II, 274. 'Two fingers,' i. e. 'the thumb and the index' (Kull., Râgh., Nâr.), or 'the index and the middle finger' (Nand.).

278. Yâgñ. II, 276. 'Those who give (to thieves) fire,' i. e. 'in order that they may warm themselves, or for similar purposes' (Medh.), or 'in order that they may put fire to houses' (Nâr.). Moshasya samnidhâtṛin, 'receivers of stolen goods' (Kull.), means according to Nâr. 'those who conduct thieves to the place where they can commit their crime, or helpers and abettors.' The best copy of Medh. has mokshasya, both in the text and in the

279. Him who breaks (the dam of) a tank he shall slay (by drowning him) in water or by (some other) simple (mode of) capital punishment; or the offender may repair the (damage), but shall be made to pay the highest amercement.

280. Those who break into a (royal) storehouse, an armoury, or a temple, and those who steal elephants, horses, or chariots, he shall slay without hesitation.

281. But he who shall take away the water of a tank, made in ancient times, or shall cut off the supply of water, must be made to pay the first (or lowest) amercement.

282. But he who, except in a case of extreme necessity, drops filth on the king's high-road, shall pay two kârshâpanas and immediately remove (that) filth.

283. But a person in urgent necessity, an aged man, a pregnant woman, or a child, shall be reprimanded and clean the (place); that is a settled rule.

284. All physicians who treat (their patients) wrongly (shall pay) a fine; in the case of animals, the commentary, and the other gives it in the text, while the explanation is rakshitâraha, 'protectors or abettors.' Nand., too, reads in the text mokshasya, and says, 'mokshasya moshitadravyasya mokshasâdhanasyeti vâ.' It would, therefore, seem that an ancient var. lect. mokshasya really existed.

279. Yâgñ. II, 278. 'By (some other) simple (mode of) capital punishment,' i. e. 'by cutting off his head' (Nâr., Râgh.).

280. Yâgñ. II, 273. This verse and the next are omitted in the I. O. MSS. of Medh.

281. Nâr. says that the offender must also make good the damage done.

282. Vi. V., 106-107. Medh. says that he shall pay the Kandâla, i. e. the sweeper, to remove the filth.

284. Vi. V., 175-177; Yâgñ. II, 242. Nâr. adds, 'But this first (or lowest); in the case of human beings, the middlemost (amercement).

285. He who destroys a bridge, the flag (of a temple or royal palace), a pole, or images, shall repair the whole (damage) and pay five hundred (panas).

286. For adulterating unadulterated commodities, and for breaking gems or for improperly boring (them), the fine is the first (or lowest) amercement.

287. But that man who behaves dishonestly to honest (customers) or cheats in his prices, shall be fined in the first or in the middlemost amercement.

288. Let him place all prisons near a high-road, where the suffering and disfigured offenders can be seen.

289. Him who destroys the wall (of a town), or fills up the ditch (round a town), or breaks a (town)-gate, he shall instantly banish.

290. For all incantations intended to destroy life, refers to cases when death is not (the result of the wrong treatment); for if that is the case the punishment is greater.'

285. Vi. V, 174; Yâgñ. II, 297. 'A pole,' i. e. the flagstaff of a village (Nâr.), or 'such as stand in tanks and the like' (Kull.). 'Images,' i. e. 'statues of men; but death as the punishment for destroying images of the gods, because (above, verse 280) capital punishment has been prescribed for breaking into temples' (Nâr.). Kull. and Râgh. say 'common images, made of clay and so forth.'

286. Vi. V, 124; Yâgñ. II, 245-246. Medh. thinks that the fine must be proportionate to the value of the spoiled gem, and Kull. adds that in every case the owner of the spoilt article shall receive compensation.

287. Thus Kull. and Nâr. But Medh. takes the first clause differently: 'That man who gives unequal (quantities) for (such goods as ought to be bartered for) equal (quantities).'

288. Nand. reads kash/âni, 'where the treatment is severe,' instead of sarvâni, 'all.'

290. According to the commentators the abhihârah comprise for magic rites with roots (practised by persons) not related (to him against whom they are directed), and for various kinds of sorcery, a fine of two hundred (paṇas) shall be inflicted.

291. He who sells (for seed-corn that which is) not seed-corn, he who takes up seed (already sown), and he who destroys a boundary(-mark), shall be punished by mutilation.

292. But the king shall cause a goldsmith who behaves dishonestly, the most noxious of all the thorns, to be cut to pieces with razors.

293. For the theft of agricultural implements, of arms and of medicines, let the king award punishment, taking into account the time (of the offence) and the use (of the object).

all incantations and sacrifices, taught either in the Veda or in secular works, which are intended to destroy life. The magic rites, performed with roots, are those which are intended to bring a person into one's power. These are permitted, if practised against a husband or a relative (Nār.). The krityâh, 'sorcery,' are such spells as produce diseases, or cause the failure of an adversary's undertakings. If the abhiâras are successful, the punishment is that of murder (Medh., Kull.).

291. Instead of bigotkrisham (Kull.), which is explained 'who sells seed-corn placed (at the top of a bag of worthless grain),' the correct reading seems to be bigotkrashâ, 'he who takes up seed (already sown).' Bigotkrashâ occurs in Nār.'s commentary only, where it is explained bigakâle mahârgatâkâmotarshakârî, 'he who at sowing time plucks (the seed) out, desiring to raise the price of grain.' All the other commentators give more or less corrupt readings, which, however, all point to the form bigotkrashâ, viz. Medh., bigetkrushah or bigotkriptyah, explained by vandhyānti kshetra gñātu [kshetrāni kartum] bigam utkarshati sobhanam yad bigam kshetre [ta]devoddhṛitya nayati; Gov., bigotkrishâh; Nand., bigotkrishoh and bigotkrishâ, explained by bigānām uptānām uddhartâ; K., biryâtkrashâ, marked as corrupt.

293. Thus a theft of a plough in the season for ploughing, or of

294. The king and his minister, his capital, his realm, his treasury, his army, and his ally are the seven constituent parts (of a kingdom); (hence) a kingdom is said to have seven limbs (aṅga).

295. But let him know (that) among these seven constituent parts of a kingdom (which have been enumerated) in due order, each earlier (named) is more important and (its destruction) the greater calamity.

296. Yet in a kingdom, containing seven constituent parts, which is upheld like the triple staff (of an ascetic), there is no (single part) more important (than the others), by reason of the importance of the qualities of each for the others.

297. For each part is particularly qualified for (the accomplishment of) certain objects, (and thus) each is declared to be the most important for that particular purpose which is effected by its means.

298. By spies, by a (pretended) display of energy, and by carrying out (various) undertakings, let the king constantly ascertain his own and his enemy's strength;

299. Moreover, all calamities and vices; afterwards, when he has fully considered their relative importance, let him begin his operations.

arms just before or during a fight, should be punished more heavily than if it had been committed at any other time.

294. See above, VII, 257; Yâgñ. I. 352.

296. The verse is meant, as the commentators remark, to show that one must not infer from verse 295 that the Aṅgas, named later in the enumeration, may be neglected. According to Nâr., the simile is not taken from the triple staff of an ascetic, but from the three beams of a house and the like.

298. See above, VII. Medh., Gov., Nâr., Nand., and K. read at the end of the line, parâtmanoḥ, instead of mahîpatih.

299. 'All calamities and vices,' i. e. 'those affecting his enemy

300. (Though he be) ever so much tired (by repeated failures), let him begin his operations again and again; for fortune greatly favours the man who (strenuously) exerts himself in his undertakings.

301. The various ways in which a king behaves (resemble) the Kṛita, Tretâ, Dvâpara, and Kali ages; hence the king is identified with the ages (of the world).

302. Sleeping he represents the Kali (or iron age), waking the Dvâpara (or brazen) age, ready to act the Tretâ (or silver age), but moving (actively) the Kṛita (or golden) age.

303. Let the king emulate the energetic action of Indra, of the Sun, of the Wind, of Yama, of Varuna, of the Moon, of the Fire, and of the Earth.

304. As Indra sends copious rain during the four months of the rainy season, even so let the king, taking upon himself the office of Indra, shower benefits on his kingdom.

305. As the Sun during eight months (imperceptibly) draws up the water with his rays, even so let him gradually draw his taxes from his kingdom; for that is the office in which he resembles the Sun.

306. As the Wind moves (everywhere), entering (in the shape of the vital air) all created beings, even so let him penetrate (everywhere) through his and his enemy's party' (Nâr.), or 'those affecting both his own and the enemy's parties' (Kull.). Nand. reads the second line as follows, gurulâghavato gñâtâ tataḥ karma samâkaret.

302. This verse closely agrees with the fourth exhortation, addressed by Indra to Rohita, Aitareya-brâhmaṇa VII, 15.

305. Instead of nityam, 'gradually,' Nand. reads samyak, 'duly.'

spies ; that is the office in which he resembles the Wind.

307. As Yama at the appointed time subjects to his rule both friends and foes, even so all subjects must be controlled by the king ; that is the office in which he resembles Yama.

308. As (a sinner) is seen bound with ropes by Varuna, even so let him punish the wicked ; that is his office in which he resembles Varuna.

309. He is a king, taking upon himself the office of the Moon, whose (appearance) his subjects (greet with as great joy) as men feel on seeing the full moon.

310. (If) he is ardent in wrath against criminals and endowed with brilliant energy, and destroys wicked vassals, then his character is said (to resemble) that of Fire.

311. As the Earth supports all created beings equally, thus (a king) who supports all his subjects, (takes upon himself) the office of the Earth.

312. Employing these and other means, the king shall, ever untired, restrain thieves both in his own dominions and in (those of) others.

313. Let him not, though fallen into the deepest distress, provoke Brâhmanas to anger ; for they,

308. Nand. reads the first line differently, Varunenâpi pârais ka badhyate vârunair naraḥ, 'As men are bound by Varuna with Varuna's fetters.' The expression 'the fetters of Varuna' is a common designation of dropsy.

310. Nâr. adds, 'As the fire at an ordeal injures wicked men, even so he should destroy wicked neighbours.'

312. 'In (those of) others,' i.e. 'those thieves who live in other kingdoms, and come to rob in his own' (Kull., Nâr.). Nand. omits this and the next two verses.

313. 'Let him not provoke Brâhmanas to anger,' i.e. 'by taking their when angered, could instantly destroy him together with his army and his vehicles.

314. Who could escape destruction, when he provokes to anger those (men), by whom the fire was made to consume all things, by whom the (water of the) ocean was made undrinkable, and by whom the moon was made to wane and to increase again?

315. Who could prosper, while he injures those (men) who provoked to anger, could create other worlds and other guardians of the world, and deprive the gods of their divine station?

316. What man, desirous of life, would injure them to whose support the (three) worlds and the gods ever owe their existence, and whose wealth is the Veda?

317. A Brâhmana, be he ignorant or learned, is a great divinity, just as the fire, whether carried forth (for the performance of a burnt-oblation) or not carried forth, is a great divinity.

318. The brilliant fire is not contaminated even in burial-places, and, when presented with oblations (of butter) at sacrifices, it again increases mightily.

property' (Medh., Nâr.), or 'treating them with contumely' (Medh.). 'They could destroy him,' i. e. 'by magic rites and curses' (Kull.).

314. This verse refers to certain stories, told, as Medh. and Nâr. point out, in the section of the Mahâbhârata, called Mokshadharmâh XII, 344, 55, 57-58, 60-61. There it is said that Bhrîgu made the fire consume all things, that the moon became 'consumptive' in consequence of the curse of Daksha, and that Vadâvâ-mukha made the ocean salt in punishment for his disobedience.

315. This verse also contains allusions to the Mahâbhârata. Visvâmitra tried to create other worlds (Medh.), the Vâlakhilyas another Indra and Vâyu, and others deprived the gods of their station. With respect to the latter point, Râgh. quotes the story of Mândavya cursing Yama (Mahâbhârata I, 108, 16), and causing him to be born as a Sûdra.

316. See above, I, 93-95.

319. Thus, though Brâhmaṇas employ themselves in all (sorts of) mean occupations, they must be honoured in every way ; for (each of) them is a very great deity.

320. When the Kshatriyas become in any way overbearing towards the Brâhmaṇas, the Brâhmaṇas themselves shall duly restrain them ; for the Kshatriyas sprang from the Brâhmaṇas.

321. Fire sprang from water, Kshatriyas from Brâhmaṇas, iron from stone ; the all-penetrating force of those (three) has no effect on that whence they were produced.

322. Kshatriyas prosper not without Brâhmaṇas, Brâhmaṇas prosper not without Kshatriyas ; Brâhmaṇas and Kshatriyas, being closely united, prosper in this (world) and in the next.

323. But (a king who feels his end drawing nigh) shall bestow all his wealth, accumulated from fines, on Brâhmaṇas, make over his kingdom to his son, and then seek death in battle.

321. 'Fire sprang from water, thus speak the Paurâṇikas' (Nand.); '(that origin is) visible in the case of lightning and in that of the (submarine) Vadavâgni' (Râgh.). According to Râgh., the statement that the Kshatriyas sprang from the Brâhmaṇas is based on a Vedic passage. But Nâr. thinks that it alludes to a Paurâṇik story, according to which the Brâhmaṇas produced with the Kshatriyâ females a new Kshatriya race after the destruction of the second varṇa by Parāsurāma.

322. Gaut. XI, 14 ; Vas. XIX, 4.

323. Medh. says that others explain the expression 'all his wealth, accumulated from fines,' as including 'all the king's possessions, excepting horses and chariots, arms, land, and slaves,' but that this is improper. He adds that, if the king cannot die in battle, he may burn or drown himself. Kull. says that he may kill himself by starvation. In later times kings followed this rule ; see e. g. Vikramāṅkatarita IV, 44-68.

324. Thus conducting himself (and) ever intent on (discharging) his royal duties, a king shall order all his servants (to work) for the good of his people.

325. Thus the eternal law concerning the duties of a king has been fully declared; know that the following rules apply in (due) order to the duties of Vaisyas and Sûdras.

326. After a Vaisya has received the sacraments and has taken a wife, he shall be always attentive to the business whereby he may subsist and to (that of) tending cattle.

327. For when the Lord of creatures (Pragâpati) created cattle, he made them over to the Vaisya; to the Brâhmaṇa, and to the king he entrusted all created beings.

328. A Vaisya must never (conceive this) wish, 'I will not keep cattle;' and if a Vaisya is willing (to keep them), they must never be kept by (men of) other (castes).

329. (A Vaisya) must know the respective value of gems, of pearls, of coral, of metals, of (cloth) made of thread, of perfumes, and of condiments.

330. He must be acquainted with the (manner of) sowing of seeds, and of the good and bad qualities of fields, and he must perfectly know all measures and weights.

331. Moreover, the excellence and defects of commodities, the advantages and disadvantages of (different) countries, the (probable) profit and loss on merchandise, and the means of properly rearing cattle.

332. He must be acquainted with the (proper)

326. Regarding the 'business whereby a Vaisya may subsist,' see below, X, 77-78.

wages of servants, with the various languages of men, with the manner of keeping goods, and (the rules of) purchase and sale.

333. Let him exert himself to the utmost in order to increase his property in a righteous manner, and let him zealously give food to all created beings.

334. But to serve Brâhmanas (who are) learned in the Vedas, householders, and famous (for virtue) is the highest duty of a Sûdra, which leads to beatitude.

335. (A Sûdra who is) pure, the servant of his betters, gentle in his speech, and free from pride, and always seeks a refuge with Brâhmanas, attains (in his next life) a higher caste.

336. The excellent law for the conduct of the (four) castes (varna), (when they are) not in distress, has been thus promulgated; now hear in order their (several duties) in times of distress.

CHAPTER X.

1. Let the three twice-born castes (varna), discharging their (prescribed) duties, study (the Veda); but among them the Brâhmaṇa (alone) shall teach it, not the other two; that is an established rule.

333. 'If a rich Vaisya is not liberal, he shall be punished by the king' (Medh.).

334-336. See below, X, 121-129.

335. I read with Medh., Gov., and Nâr., brâhmaṇâpâsrayo nityam.

X. 1. Medh. has one line more in the beginning, 'Hereafter I will declare the rules applicable to that which must be studied.' According to Nâr., the expression svakarmasthâḥ, 'discharging their prescribed duties,' means 'if they follow their prescribed

2. The Brâhmana must know the means of subsistence (prescribed) by law for all, instruct the others, and himself live according to (the law).

3. On account of his pre-eminence, on account of the superiority of his origin, on account of his observance of (particular) restrictive rules, and on account of his particular sanctification the Brâhmana is the lord of (all) castes (varna).

4. The Brâhmana, the Kshatriya, and the Vaisya castes (varna) are the twice-born ones, but the fourth, the Sûdra, has one birth only; there is no fifth (caste).

5. In all castes (varna) those (children) only which are begotten in the direct order on wedded wives, equal (in caste and married as) virgins, are to be occupations,' and indicates that those who follow forbidden occupations, i. e. live like Sûdras, shall not study the Veda. The commentators entirely forget to mention that, according to II, 241-242, a Brâhmana may learn the Veda from a non-Brâhmanical teacher, and that hence this rule is not absolute.

2. Gaut. XI, 25; Vas. I, 39-41. Medh. points out that this rule gives an exception to IV, 80, where it is said that a Brâhmana shall not give spiritual advice to a Sûdra.

3. See above, I, 93. 'On account of his pre-eminence,' i. e. 'through his qualities' (Medh.), or 'by race' (Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). Niyamasya ka dhâranât, 'on account of his observance of (particular) restrictive rules,' i. e. 'of the rules prescribed for a Snâtaka' (Medh., Gov., Nâr., Râgh.), means according to Kull. 'on account of his possessing a particularly great knowledge of the Veda.' 'On account of his particular sanctification,' i. e. 'because special observances are required from him in sipping water and so forth, or because he must be initiated earlier than a Kshatriya' (Medh.). The other commentators give the second explanation only. 'The lord,' i. e. 'the adviser and instructor.'

4. Âp. I, 1, 3; Vas. II, 1-2; Baudh. I, 16, 1; Yâgñ. I, 10.

5. Âp. II, 13, 1; Vi. XVI, 1; Yâgñ. I, 90. 'In the direct order,' i. e. 'by a Brâhmana on a Brâhmanî, by a Kshatriya on a Kshatriyâ, and so forth' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), means according to Nâr., that considered as belonging to the same caste (as their fathers).

6. Sons, begotten by twice-born men on wives of the next lower castes, they declare to be similar (to their fathers, but) blamed on account of the fault (inherent) in their mothers.

7. Such is the eternal law concerning (children) born of wives one degree lower (than their husbands); know (that) the following rule (is applicable) to those born of women two or three degrees lower.

8. From a Brâhmaṇa with the daughter of a Vaisya is born (a son) called an Ambashṭha, with the daughter of a Sûdra a Nishâda, who is also called a Pârasava.

in each case the bridegroom must be older than the wife. He adds, 'Hence it has been declared that the son of a woman who is older than (her husband) is not a Brâhmaṇa, though she may have been legally married, and may be of the same caste (as her husband).' The commentators are at great pains to prove that subsidiary sons, such as Sahodhas, Kânînas, and so forth, and all offspring of illicit unions are outcasts. Medh. and Gov. even take the trouble to discuss the Vedic story of Gâbâla Satyakâma (Khândogya Up. IV, 4), whose mother did not know by whom he was begotten, and who, nevertheless, was admitted to be a Brâhmaṇa. They are of opinion that Gâbâlâ had been legally married, and had forgotten her husband's family-name during her troubles.

6-56. Gaut. IV, 16-28; Vas. XVIII; Baudh. I, 16, 6-17, 15; Vi. XVI, 2-15; Yâgyñ. I, 91-95.

6. 'Blamed,' i. e. 'excluded from the fathers' caste' (Nâr.). With the expression 'similar,' compare Baudh.'s term 'savarna.' Nand. places verse 14 immediately after this, and adds that if the latter is placed lower down, that is owing to a mistake of the copyists.

7. Regarding the term Pârasava, see above, IX, 178. Gov. and Nâr. remark that the second name Parâsava is added in order to distinguish this Nishâda from the other Nishâda, who is a Pratiloma, and subsists by catching fish.

8. Medh. does not give this verse.

9. From a Kshatriya and the daughter of a Sûdra springs a being, called Ugra, resembling both a Kshatriya and a Sûdra, ferocious in his manners, and delighting in cruelty.

10. Children of a Brâhmana by (women of) the three (lower) castes, of a Kshatriya by (wives of) the two (lower) castes, and of a Vaisya by (a wife of) the one caste (below him) are all six called base-born (apasada).

11. From a Kshatriya by the daughter of a Brâhmana is born (a son called) according to his caste (gâti) a Sûta; from a Vaisya by females of the royal and the Brâhmana (castes) spring a Mâgadha and a Vaideha.

12. From a Sûdra are born an Âyogava, a Kshattri, and a Kândâla, the lowest of men, by Vaisya, Kshatriya, and Brâhmana females, (sons who owe their origin to) a confusion of the castes.

13. As an Ambashtha and an Ugra, (begotten) in the direct order on (women) one degree lower (than their husbands) are declared (to be), even so are a Kshattri and a Vaidehaka, though they were born in the inverse order of the castes (from mothers one degree higher than the fathers).

14. Those sons of the twice-born, begotten on wives of the next lower castes, who have been enumerated in due order, they call by the name

12. Nâr. and K. read Ayogava. Medh. and Nand. read Kândâla, instead of Kândâla (Gov., Kull.).

13. The meaning is that the Kshattri and the Vaidehaka, though Pratilomas, hold the same position with respect to sacred rites, but not with respect to studying and so forth, and are as fit to be touched as the two Anulomas (Medh.). Gov. and Kull. mention the second point of equality only.

14. The meaning is that they are reckoned as belonging to the Anantaras (belonging to the next lower caste), on account of the blemish (inherent) in their mothers.

15. A Brâhmana begets on the daughter of an Ugra an Âvrîta, on the daughter of an Ambashtha an Âbhîra, but on a female of the Âyogava (caste) a Dhigvana.

16. From a Sûdra spring in the inverse order (by females of the higher castes) three base-born (sons, apasada), an Âyogava, a Kshattrî, and a Kândâla, the lowest of men;

17. From a Vaisya are born in the inverse order of the castes a Mâgadha and a Vaideha, but from a Kshatriya a Sûta only; these are three other base-born ones (apasada).

18. The son of a Nishâda by a Sûdra female becomes a Pukkasa by caste (gâti), but the son of a Sûdra by a Nishâda female is declared to be a Kukkuṭaka.

19. Moreover, the son of a Kshattrî by an Ugra female is called a Svapâka; but one begotten by a Vaidehaka on an Ambashtha female is named a Vena.

20. Those (sons) whom the twice-born beget on wives of equal caste, but who, not fulfilling their mothers' caste and receive the sacraments according to the law prescribed for the mothers' caste (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Nand.); see also below, verse 41.

15. The Âbhîra is the modern Ahir.

16-17. Kull. thinks that the Pratilomas are enumerated once more, 'in order to show that they are unfit to fulfil the duties of sons.' Nand. places these two verses before verse 15.

18. Nand. reads Pulkasa instead of Pukkasa.

19. Gov., Nand., and K. read Vena instead of Vena. Râgh. adds that the modern name is Baruḍa, the name of caste of basket-makers.

20. Gov. and Nand. read at the end of the first line sutân for sacred duties, are excluded from the Sâvitrit, one must designate by the appellation Vrâtyas.

21. But from a Vrâtya (of the) Brâhmaṇa (caste) spring the wicked Bhriggakantaka, the Âvantya, the Vâdadhâna, the Pushpadha, and the Saikha.

22. From a Vrâtya (of the) Kshatriya (caste), the Ghalla, the Malla, the Likkhivi, the Naṭa, the Karana, the Khasa, and the Dravida.

tu yân (Medh., Kull., K.), 'not fulfilling their sacred duties,' i.e. 'not being initiated at the proper time;' see above, II, 39. Medh. mentions a var. lect. avratâh, 'Those sons whom men neglecting their sacred duties, &c.' But he rejects it.

21. I read with Medh., Gov., Nâr., and K., Bhriggakantaka instead of Bhûrgakantaka (editions), or Bhûtyakantaka (Nand.); see also Gaut. IV, 20, where the form Bhrigyakanta occurs. Regarding the Âvantya (Âpañka, Nand.), see also Baudh. I, 2, 13. Instead of Vâdadhâna Nand. has Vâdaghâna, and K. Vâdhadhâna, marked as corrupt. Medh. reads (one MS. Pushparaikharaḥ) Pushparekhara instead of pushpadhaḥ saikha eva ka (editions). Gov. has in the text Pushyaḥ saikhakastathâ, in the commentary pushyavasaisakha; K. pushpa . . . kharas tathâ; Nand. Pushparibaka eva ka. It would seem that according to Medh. and Nand. only four tribes, sprung from a Vrâtya Brâhmaṇa, are enumerated. But the form of the last name remains doubtful. The commentators think all the races named are descended from a Vrâtya Brâhmaṇa and a female of his own caste. Gov. remarks that according to Uśanas' Nîṭisâstra the Bhriggakanas live by sorcery, the Âvantyas and Vâdadhânas serve in war, and all other Vrâtyas are spies. It is very probable that all these names originally denote nations, but the Âvantyas, the inhabitants of Western Mâlva, and the Vâdadhânas, who are enumerated among the northern tribes, are alone traceable in other works.

22. I read with Medh. and Gov. Likkhivi instead of Nikkhivi (editions). K. has Likkhavi (kha being marked as corrupt), and Nand. Likkikhi. As 'a' and 'i' in these are constantly exchanged, Likkhivi may be considered as a vicarious form for Likkhavi, and it may be assumed that the Manusamhitâ considered the famous Kshatriya race of Magadha and Nepâl as unorthodox. Gov. says that, according to Uśanas, the Naṭas and Karanas are spies, and

23. From a Vrâtya (of the) Vaisya (caste) are born a Sudhanvan, an Âtârya, a Kârusha, a Viganman, a Maitra, and a Sâtвата.

24. By adultery (committed by persons) of (different) castes, by marriages with women who ought not to be married, and by the neglect of the duties and occupations (prescribed) to each, are produced (sons who owe their origin) to a confusion of the castes.

25. I will (now) fully enumerate those (sons) of mixed origin, who are born of Anulomas and of Pratilomas, and (thus) are mutually connected.

26. The Sûta, the Vaidehaka, the Kandâla, that lowest of mortals, the Mâgadha, he of the Kshattri caste (gâti), and the Âyogava,

27. These six (Pratilomas) beget similar races (varna) on women of their own (caste), they (also) produce (the like) with females of their mother's caste (gâti), and with females (of) higher ones.

the Khasas and Dravidas are water-carriers and distributors of waters at drinking fountains.

23. K. reads Pârusha, and Nand. Kâruga, instead of Kârusha (Medh., Gov., Kull.). Instead of Viganman Nand. has Nigangha. Gov. remarks that, according to Usanas, Âtâryas and Sâtवatas subsist by worshipping the gods, or serving as temple-priests (âtâryasâtवataih devapûganam).

25. 'Anulomas,' see above, verse 8.

27. Thus Nâr. and Nand., with whom Kull. agrees, except that he adds 'on higher and (on lower) castes.' Medh. reads in the second line mâtṛigâtýâh prasûyante pravarásu ka yonishu, and explains as follows, 'Those who belong to the mother's caste, i.e. the Anulomas, called Anantara (verse 14), beget similar sons on females of their own caste, and (more degraded children) on females of higher castes.' He mentions that others read matrigâtau prasûyante, and says that the meaning then is, 'The Anulomas beget sons of their own race on females of their own and of their mothers' castes.' Gov. reads mâtṛigâtau svayonyâm tu sadrisam ganayanti vai, and

28. As a (Brâhmana) begets on (females of) two out of the three (twice-born castes a son similar to) himself, (but inferior) on account of the lower degree (of the mother), and (one equal to himself) on a female of his own race, even so is the order in the case of the excluded (races, vâhya).

29. Those (six mentioned above) also beget, the one on the females of the other, a great many (kinds of) despicable (sons), even more sinful than their (fathers), and excluded (from the Âryan community, vâhya).

30. Just as a Sûdra begets on a Brâhmana female a being excluded (from the Âryan community), even so (a person himself) excluded pro-likewise refers the line to the Anulomas. 'But (the Anulomas) beget similar sons on females of their mothers' and of their own castes.' Râgh. likewise differs.

28. I read with all the commentators and K., krama instead of kramât (editions). 'Even so is the order in the case of the excluded (races),' means according to Gov. and Kull., that there is a difference in rank between Pratilomas, similar to that existing between Anulomas, and that Pratilomas sprung from Âryan fathers are more respectable than those begotten by Sûdra fathers, according to Medh., whose opinion is controverted by Gov., Kull., and Râgh., that Pratilomas, sprung from Âryan fathers and mothers, are to be considered Âryans, and worthy of being initiated just as Anulomas. According to Nâr. and Nand., the translation should be as follows: 'As among the three castes a (man) produces (a son similar to) himself on two wives, (i. e.) on her who belongs to his own caste and on her who belongs to the next lower one, even so is the order with those excluded (from the four chief castes),' i. e. even so is it with Anulomas, e. g. with a Mûrdhâvasikta, who begets a Mûrdhâvasikta on a Mûrdhâvasikta female and on an Âvantya female (Nâr.), and with Pratilomas, e. g. with a Kshattri who begets a Kshattri both on a female of his own caste and on a Kandâlî (Nand.). It must be added that Nand. reads anantaryâm instead of ânantaryât.

creates with (females of) the four castes (varṇa, sons) more (worthy of being) excluded (than he himself).

31. But men excluded (by the Âryans, vâhya), who approach females of higher rank, beget races (varṇa) still more worthy to be excluded, low men (hina) still lower races, even fifteen (in number).

31. In order to show that fifteen lower castes are produced, the commentators propose various interpretations of the verse, among which those of Kull., Nâr., and Râgh. alone deserve to be mentioned. Kull. thinks that the terms vâhya and hina may either refer to two sets of men or to one only. Under the former supposition, the Vâhyas must be understood to be the Pratiloma offspring of a Sûdra, i.e. Âyogavas, Kshattris, and Kandâlas; and the Hinas, the Pratiloma offspring of Kshatriyas and Vaisyas, i.e. Sûtas, Mâgadhas, and Vaidehas. Each of these two sets produce fifteen lower races by unions with women of the four chief castes and of their own (verse 27), i.e. Âyogavas beget five, with Brâhmana, Kshatriya, Vaisya, Sûdra, and Âyogava women; Kshattris likewise five, with Brâhmana, Kshatriya, Vaisya, Sûdra, and Kshattri women, and so forth. But if the two terms vâhya and hina are referred to one set of males only, they must be understood to denote the six Pratilomas, Kandâlas, Kshattris, Âyogavas, Vaidehas, Mâgadhas, and Sûtas; and it must be assumed that the verse refers to unions between these six Pratiloma races alone. Then the lowest among them, the Kandâla, may produce with females of the five higher Pratiloma tribes five more degraded races; the Kshattri, with the four above him, four; the Âyogava, the three above him, three; the Vaideha, two; and the Mâgadha, one. The total of $5 + 4 + 3 + 2 + 1$ is thus 15. Râgh. agrees with this interpretation. Nâr., on the other hand, refers the terms vâhya and hina to one set of males, the three Pratilomas sprung from the Sûdra, and assumes that the verse refers to unions of these three with females of the four principal castes and of their own. According to the calculation given under Kull.'s first explanation, the total of more degraded races which may be thus produced, is thirty. It seems to me that Kull.'s second explanation is the best, though I am not prepared to deny that his first explanation, and even Nâr.'s version, may be defended. The commentators point out that varṇa is used here in a figurative sense, because it has been declared above, verse 4, that there are only four real varṇas.

32. A Dasyu begets on an Âyogava (woman) a Sairandhra, who is skilled in adorning and attending (his master), who, (though) not a slave, lives like a slave, (or) subsists by snaring (animals).

33. A Vaideha produces (with the same) a sweet-voiced Maitreyaka, who, ringing a bell at the appearance of dawn, continually praises (great) men.

34. A Nishâda begets (on the same) a Mârgava (or) Dâsa, who subsists by working as a boatman, (and) whom the inhabitants of Âryâvarta call a Kaivarta.

35. Those three base-born ones are severally begot on Âyogava women, who wear the clothes of the dead, are wicked, and eat reprehensible food.

32. I read with Medh., Gov., Nâr., Nand., and K., Sairandhra instead of Sairandhri (editions). 'A Dasyu,' i.e. 'one of those tribes described below, verse 45' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), or 'one of the afore-mentioned fifteen Pratiloma races' (Nâr., Nand.). Prasâdhanopaâragñam, 'skilled in adorning and attending (his master),' i.e. 'in dressing hair, anointing him with oil and so forth, and in shampooing' (Gov., Nâr., Nand.), means according to Kull., who takes prasâdhanopaâra, not as a copulative, but as a tatpurusha compound, 'skilled in serving (his master) at his toilet.' Medh.'s explanation is ambiguous. With respect to his second occupation, 'snaring animals,' Medh., Gov., and Kull. say that the Sairandhra resorts to it in order to support himself in times of distress, or in order to obtain meat for the worship of the gods and manes, or at the order of the king. Nand. remarks, 'As the Dasyus are many, there are also many Sairandhras, and that is indicated by the addition of a different mode of subsistence.'

34. Gov. and K. read Mâgadha instead of Mârgava. Gov. thinks that, as the section treats of Pratilomas, the Nishâda mentioned here is the Pratiloma Nishâda enumerated by Vyâsa.

35. I follow Medh., Gov., Nâr., Nand., and K., who read mṛitavāstrabhṛīṣvanârīyāsu, 'who wear the clothes of the dead, are wicked,' instead of mṛitavāstrabhṛīṣu nârīṣu, 'women who wear the clothes of the dead' (editions). Kull. also seems to have had the

36. From a Nishâda springs (by a woman of the Vaideha caste) a Kârâvara, who works in leather; and from a Vaidehaka (by women of the Kârâvara and Nishâda castes), an Andhra and a Meda, who dwell outside the village.

37. From a Kandâla by a Vaideha woman is born a Pândusopâka, who deals in cane; from a Nishâda (by the same) an Âhindîka.

38. But from a Kandâla by a Pukkasa woman is born the sinful Sopâka, who lives by the occupations of his sire, and is ever despised by good men.

39. A Nishâda woman bears to a Kandâla a son (called) Antyâvasâyin, employed in burial-grounds, and despised even by those excluded (from the Âryan community).

40. These races, (which originate) in a confusion (of the castes and) have been described according to their fathers and mothers, may be known by their occupations, whether they conceal or openly show themselves.

former reading, as he copies the explanation sukrûrâsu, 'very cruel,' which Gov. gives. Medh. explains anâryâsu by 'not to be touched by Âryans.'

36. Thus according to Medh. and Kull. But Gov. and Râgh. understand in the second line with 'from a Vaidehaka,' the words 'by women of the Vaideha caste.' Nâr., who in the preceding verse takes the words ete trayaḥ, 'those three,' in the sense of 'the following three other races,' assumes of course that the mothers of Kârâvaras, Medas, and Andhras are Âyogava females. The latter two 'castes' are the well-known nations inhabiting Mevâd (Medapâṭa) in south-eastern Râgputâna, and the eastern Dekkan.

38. Râgh. and Nand. read Paulkasa instead of Pukkasa. Mûla-vyasanavṛttimân means according to Gov., Kull., and Râgh. 'who lives by executing criminals,' according to Nâr. and Nand. 'who lives by digging roots,' i.e. 'in order to sell them as medicine,' or 'by curing hemorrhoids' (Nand.). Medh. gives both explanations. The translation, given above, follows the Petersburg Dict., sub voce.

41. Six sons, begotten (by Âryans) on women of equal and the next lower castes (Anantara), have the duties of twice-born men; but all those born in consequence of a violation (of the law) are, as regards their duties, equal to Sûdras.

42. By the power of austerities and of the seed (from which they sprang), these (races) obtain here among men more exalted or lower rank in successive births.

43. But in consequence of the omission of the sacred rites, and of their not consulting Brâhmanas, the following tribes of Kshatriyas have gradually sunk in this world to the condition of Sûdras;

44. (Viz.) the Paundrakas, the Kodas, the Dravidas, the Kâmbogas, the Yavanas, the Sakas, the Pâradas, the Pahlavas, the Kînas, the Kirâtas, and the Daradas.

41. Medh. adds, 'The mention of the Anantaras is intended to include all Anulomas.'

42. 'These,' i. e. 'those born of wives of equal castes and Anantaras' (Gov., Kull.). Medh. and Nâr. include all Anulomas, and Râgh. even Pratilomas, sprung from Âryan fathers. Yuge yuge, 'in successive births' (Medh., Nâr., Nand.), means according to Kull. 'in each of the ages of the world.' Kull. refers to the stories regarding Visvâmitra and Rishyasringa, while Medh. points to the discussion, given below, verse 64 seq.

43. Medh. and Gov. read brâhmanâtikramena, 'by disrespect towards Brâhmanas,' instead of brâhmanâdarsanena, 'by not consulting Brâhmanas' (Kull., Nâr., Nand., Râgh., K.).

44. Instead of Paundrakas (Kull.), Medh., Nâr., Nand., and K. read Pundrakas, and Gov. Paundhrakas. My reading Kodas is a correction of Komdra, which is found in some MSS. of Medh. and in K. We have plainly Kola in Nand., while some MSS. of Medh. and Gov. read Kâmdra or Kâmdra, and the editions give Kaudra. Sir W. Jones' opinion that kaudra stands for ka Odra is improbable, because the particle 'and' is clearly not wanted after the first word. Instead of Pahlava, some MSS. of Medh. and some editions

45. All those tribes in this world, which are excluded from (the community of) those born from the mouth, the arms, the thighs, and the feet (of Brahman), are called Dasyus, whether they speak the language of the Mlekkhas (barbarians) or that of the Âryans.

46. Those who have been mentioned as the base-born (offspring, apasada) of Âryans, or as produced in consequence of a violation (of the law, apadhvasaga), shall subsist by occupations reprehended by the twice-born.

47. To Sûtas (belongs) the management of horses and of chariots; to Ambashthas, the art of healing; to Vaidehakas, the service of women; to Mâgadhas, trade;

48. Killing fish to Nishâdas; carpenters' work to the Âyogava; to Medas, Andhras, Kuñkus, and Madgus, the slaughter of wild animals; read Pahnava. Gov. gives Pallava. The editions give the Khasas after the Daradas. But Medh., Gov., Nand., and K. have tathâ at the end of the verse. The commentators state that the names enumerated in the first instance denote countries, and next, particular races living in them.

45. 'Those born from the mouth, &c.,' i.e. the four Varnas; see above, I, 87.

46. 'Base-born offspring of Âryans;' see above, verses 17 and 41.

47. 'The service of women,' i.e. 'the office of guardians in the harem.'

48. Instead of Kuñku (editions, Râgh.), Medh., Gov., and Nâr. seem to have read Kûku. Nand. reads Mamsu for Madgu. Nâr. says that these two words are synonyms of Ghalla and Malla; see above, verse 22. But Gov. quotes a verse of Yama, according to which the Kûkuka is the son of a Vaisya by a Kshatriya female, and the Madgu the offspring of a Sûdra and a Kshatriyâ. Kull.'s and Râgh.'s reference to Baudh. is, according to the MSS. of the Baudh. Dharmasûtra, erroneous.

49. To Kshattris, Ugras, and Pukkasas, catching and killing (animals) living in holes ; to Dhigvanas, working in leather ; to Venas, playing drums.

50. Near well-known trees and burial-grounds, on mountains and in groves, let these (tribes) dwell, known (by certain marks), and subsisting by their peculiar occupations.

51. But the dwellings of Kandâlas and Svapakas shall be outside the village, they must be made Apapâtras, and their wealth (shall be) dogs and donkeys.

52. Their dress (shall be) the garments of the dead, (they shall eat) their food from broken dishes, black iron (shall be) their ornaments, and they must always wander from place to place.

53. A man who fulfils a religious duty, shall not seek intercourse with them ; their transactions (shall be) among themselves, and their marriages with their equals.

54. Their food shall be given to them by others (than an Âryan giver) in a broken dish ; at night they shall not walk about in villages and in towns.

49. Nand. omits this verse.

50. Nand. places verse 50 after verse 52.

51. Medh. and Nâr. read avapâtrâh instead of apapâtrâh (Kull., Râgh., K., and Gov.?), and Medh. gives three explanations of the term : 1. vessels used by them must be thrown away ; 2. if food is given to them, it must not be placed in vessels which they hold in their hands, but in such as stand on the ground or are held by others ; 3. they shall use bad, i. e. broken vessels, as is stated in the next verse. The other commentators adopt the first explanation, which is no doubt the correct one.

53. Gov. and Nand. say, 'A righteous man,' instead of 'A man who fulfils a religious duty.'

54. Gov. and Nâr. take the beginning of the verse differently,

55. By day they may go about for the purpose of their work, distinguished by marks at the king's command, and they shall carry out the corpses (of persons) who have no relatives; that is a settled rule.

56. By the king's order they shall always execute the criminals, in accordance with the law, and they shall take for themselves the clothes, the beds, and the ornaments of (such) criminals.

57. A man of impure origin, who belongs not to any caste, (varna, but whose character is) not known, who, (though) not an Āryan, has the appearance of an Āryan, one may discover by his acts.

58. Behaviour unworthy of an Āryan, harshness, cruelty, and habitual neglect of the prescribed duties betray in this world a man of impure origin.

59. A base-born man either resembles in character his father, or his mother, or both; he can never conceal his real nature.

60. Even if a man, born in a great family, sprang from criminal intercourse, he will certainly possess the faults of his (father), be they small or great.

61. But that kingdom in which such bastards, sullyng (the purity of) the castes, are born, perishes quickly together with its inhabitants.

'Their food shall be given to them by others in a broken vessel,' i. e. 'they shall not cook for themselves in their houses.'

55. 'Distinguished by marks,' i. e. 'by a thunderbolt and the like, or by axes, adzes, and so forth, used for executing criminals, and carried on the shoulder' (Medh.), or 'by sticks and so forth' (Gov.), or 'by iron ornaments and peacock's feathers and the like' (Nâr.). Râgh. thinks that they are to be branded on the forehead and on other parts of the body. In olden times the depressed races of Gujarat used to wear a horn as their distinguishing mark.

57-59. Vas. XVIII, 7; Vi. XVI, 17.

62. Dying, without the expectation of a reward, for the sake of Brâhmanas and of cows, or in the defence of women and children, secures beatitude to those excluded (from the Âryan community, vâhya).

63. Abstention from injuring (creatures), veracity, abstention from unlawfully appropriating (the goods of others), purity, and control of the organs, Manu has declared to be the summary of the law for the four castes.

64. If (a female of the caste), sprung from a Brâhmana and a Sûdra female, bear (children) to one of the highest caste, the inferior (tribe) attains the highest caste within the seventh generation.

62. Vi. XVI, 18.

63. Gaut. VIII, 23; Yâgñ. I, 122; and above, IV, 246, V, 107. Nand. reads sarvavarṇe, 'for all castes,' instead of kâturvarṇe, 'for the four castes.'

64. Âp. II, 10-11; Gaut. IV, 22; Yâgñ. I, 96. According to Medh., Gov., Kull., and Râgh., the meaning is that, if the daughter of a Brâhmana and of a Sûdra female and her descendants all marry Brâhmanas, the offspring of the sixth female descendant of the original couple will be a Brâhmana. While this explanation agrees with Haradatta's comment on the parallel passage of Gautama, Nâr. and Nand. take the verse very differently. They say that if a Pârasava, the son of a Brâhmana and of a Sûdra female, marries a most excellent Pârasava female, who possesses a good moral character and other virtues, and if his descendants do the same, the child born in the sixth generation will be a Brâhmana. Nand. quotes in support of his view Baudhâyana I, 16, 13-14 (left out in my translation of the Sacred Books of the East, II, p. 197), nishâdena nishâdyâm â pañkâmâg grâter apahanti [grâto 'pahanti] sûdratâm | tam upanayet shashtham yâgayet, '(Offspring), begotten by a Nishâda on a Nishâdî, removes within five generations the Sûdra-hood; one may initiate him (the fifth descendant), one may sacrifice for the sixth.' This passage of Baudhâyana, the reading of which is supported by a new MS. from Madras, clearly shows that Baudhâyana allowed the male offspring of Brâhmanas and Sûdra females to be raised to the level of Âryans. It is also not impossible

65. (Thus) a Sûdra attains the rank of a Brâhmaṇa, and (in a similar manner) a Brâhmaṇa sinks to the level of a Sûdra; but know that it is the same with the offspring of a Kshatriya or of a Vaisya.

66. If (a doubt) should arise, with whom the pre-eminence (is, whether) with him whom an Āryan by chance begot on a non-Āryan female, or (with the son) of a Brâhmaṇa woman by a non-Āryan,

67. The decision is as follows: 'He who was begotten by an Āryan on a non-Āryan female, may become (like to) an Āryan by his virtues; he whom an Āryan (mother) bore to a non-Āryan father (is and remains) unlike to an Āryan.'

that the meaning of Manu's verse may be the same, and that the translation should be, 'If the offspring of a Brâhmaṇa and of a Sûdra female begets children with a most excellent (male of the Brâhmaṇa caste or female of the Pârasava tribe), the inferior (tribe) attains the highest caste in the seventh generation.' The chief objection to this version, which consists in the fact that sregasâ, 'with a most excellent,' stands in the masculine, may be met by Manu's peculiar use of the masculine instead of the feminine above in verse 32, where âyogave is used for âyogavyâm.

65. The manner in which a Brâhmaṇa sinks to the level of a Sûdra is, according to Medh., Gov., and Kull., the following. If the son of a Brâhmaṇa and of a Sûdra female and his descendants marry Sûdra wives, the seventh descendant will be a pure Sûdra. Medh., Gov., and Kull. hold that the offspring of a Brâhmaṇa and of a Kshatriya female obtains the higher or lower rank in the third generation, and the offspring of a Brâhmaṇa and of a Vaisya female in the fifth. Medh. and Gov. expressly state that 'they,' i.e. the older commentators, give this explanation.

66. 'A non-Āryan female,' i.e. 'a Sûdra female' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh., Nand.), or 'the daughter of a Vrâtya and the like' (Nâr.). 'By chance,' i.e. even on an unmarried one (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh., Nand.), or 'unknowingly' (Nâr.). 'An Āryan female,' i.e. 'a Brâhmaṇi' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh., Nâr., Nand.).

67. 'May become (like to) an Āryan by his virtues,' i.e. 'may become most excellent or praiseworthy by offering the Pâkayagñas

68. The law prescribes that neither of the two shall receive the sacraments, the first (being excluded) on account of the lowness of his origin, the second (because the union of his parents was) against the order of the castes.

69. As good seed, springing up in good soil, turns out perfectly well, even so the son of an Âryan by an Âryan woman is worthy of all the sacraments.

70. Some sages declare the seed to be more important, and others the field; again others (assert that) the seed and the field (are equally important); but the legal decision on this point is as follows:

71. Seed, sown on barren ground, perishes in it; a (fertile) field also, in which no (good) seed (is sown), will remain barren.

72. As through the power of the seed (sons) born of animals became sages who are honoured and praised, hence the seed is declared to be more important.

73. Having considered (the case of) a non-Âryan who acts like an Âryan, and (that of) an Âryan who acts like a non-Âryan, the creator declared, 'Those two are neither equal nor unequal.'

and the like, which according to other Smṛitis are permitted to him' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr.). 'Unlike to an Âryan,' i. e. 'unworthy of praise or respect' (Gov., Kull.).

69-72. See also the discussion which occurs above, IX, 33-41.

71. Gov., Kull., and Nand. say 'a field in which no seed (is sown) remains barren.' The translation follows Medh. The commentators refer to the stories of Mandapâla and Rishyasṛṅga, see above, IX, 23.

72. 'Not equal,' i. e. because they differ in caste; 'not unequal,' i. e. because both do what is forbidden to them. Hence nobody should do acts which are not permitted to him (Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

74. Brâhmanas who are intent on the means (of gaining union with) Brahman and firm in (discharging) their duties, shall live by duly performing the following six acts, (which are enumerated) in their (proper) order.

75. Teaching, studying, sacrificing for himself, sacrificing for others, making gifts and receiving them are the six acts (prescribed) for a Brâhmana.

76. But among the six acts (ordained) for him three are his means of subsistence, (viz.) sacrificing for others, teaching, and accepting gifts from pure men.

77. (Passing) from the Brâhmana to the Kshatriya, three acts (incumbent on the former) are forbidden, (viz.) teaching, sacrificing for others, and, thirdly, the acceptance of gifts.

78. The same are likewise forbidden to a Vaisya, that is a settled rule; for Manu, the lord of creatures (Pragâpati), has not prescribed them for (men of) those two (castes).

79. To carry arms for striking and for throwing (is prescribed) for Kshatriyas as a means of subsistence; to trade, (to rear) cattle, and agriculture

74-80. Âp. II, 10, 4-7; Gauṣ. X, 1-7, 49; Vas. II, 13-19; Baudh. I, 18, 1-4; Vi. II, 1-7; Yāgy. I, 118-119; see also above, I, 88-90.

74. Brahmayonisthâh, 'who are intent on the means of gaining union with Brahman' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), means according to Nâr. and Râgh. 'who are of pure Brâhmanical race,' according to Nand. 'who abide by that which springs from the Veda, i.e. the sacred law,' or 'who are the dwelling-place of the Veda.'

77. Nâr. reads brâhmanâh kshatriyam prati, 'To a Kshatriya three acts incumbent on a Brâhmana' are forbidden,' instead of brâhmanât kshatriyam prati. Nand., whose text is corrupt, seems to have had the same reading as Nâr.

for Vaisyas; but their duties are liberality, the study of the Veda, and the performance of sacrifices.

80. Among the several occupations the most commendable are, teaching the Veda for a Brâhmaṇa, protecting (the people) for a Kshatriya, and trade for a Vaisya.

81. But a Brâhmaṇa, unable to subsist by his peculiar occupations just mentioned, may live according to the law applicable to Kshatriyas; for the latter is next to him in rank.

82. If it be asked, 'How shall it be, if he cannot maintain himself by either (of these occupations?)' the answer is), he may adopt a Vaisya's mode of life, employing himself in agriculture and rearing cattle.

83. But a Brâhmaṇa, or a Kshatriya, living by a Vaisya's mode of subsistence, shall carefully avoid (the pursuit of) agriculture, (which causes) injury to many beings and depends on others.

84. (Some) declare that agriculture is something excellent, (but) that means of subsistence is blamed

80. Vârttâ, 'trade' (Nand.), means according to Kull. 'trade and rearing cattle,' and according to Gov. 'trade, rearing cattle, and agriculture.' But the context makes it probable that one occupation only is intended.

81-98. Âp. I, 20, 10-21, 4; Gaut. VII, 1-26; Vas. II, 22-39; Baudh. II, 4, 16-21; Vi. II, 15; LIV, 18-21; Yâgñ. III, 35-40.

82. Nâr. thinks that krîshi, 'agriculture,' means here asvayamkrîtâ, 'at which the Brâhmaṇa does not work personally,' while Gov. and Kull. hold the contrary opinion. For according to them the asvayamkrîtâ krîshi has been permitted even for ordinary times, above, IV, 4-5.

83. 'Depends on others,' i. e. 'on bullocks and so forth' (Gov., Kull.). It has been taught above, IV, 159-160, that a Snâtaka is to avoid all that depends upon others.

84. Medh. points out that this verse is directed against the teaching of Vas. II, 32-36.

by the virtuous; (for) the wooden (implement) with iron point injures the earth and (the beings) living in the earth.

85. But he who, through a want of means of subsistence, gives up the strictness with respect to his duties, may sell, in order to increase his wealth, the commodities sold by Vaisyas, making (however) the (following) exceptions.

86. He must avoid (selling) condiments of all sorts, cooked food and sesamum, stones, salt, cattle, and human (beings),

87. All dyed cloth, as well as cloth made of hemp, or flax, or wool, even though they be not dyed, fruit, roots, and (medical) herbs ;

88. Water, weapons, poison, meat, Soma, and perfumes of all kinds, fresh milk, honey, sour milk, clarified butter, oil, wax, sugar, Kusa-grass ;

89. All beasts of the forest, animals with fangs or tusks, birds, spirituous liquor, indigo, lac, and all one-hoofed beasts.

90. But he who subsists by agriculture, may at pleasure sell unmixed sesamum grains for sacred

86. Medh. says, 'and cooked food, mixed with sesamum grains.' The same commentator thinks that, as salt which is also a condiment is specially forbidden, other condiments may be sold optionally. But Gov. and Kull. point out that it is specially named, because the penance is heavier. Nâr. explains rasân, 'condiments,' by 'exudations of leaves, wood, and so forth.'

88. Nâr. reads kshâram, 'alkaline substances,' instead of kshîram, 'fresh milk,' but mentions the latter reading, and Nand. kshâram for kshaudram.

89. Nâr. reads maggâ, 'marrow,' instead of madyam, 'spirituous liquor.' Medh. says that some read ekasaphân bahûn, 'many one-hoofed beasts,' and permit the sale of a single one. Nand. reads parûn, 'animals.'

90. Suddhân, 'unmixed' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), means purposes, provided he himself has grown them and has not kept them long.

91. If he applies sesamum to any other purpose but food, anointing, and charitable gifts, he will be born (again) as a worm and, together with his ancestors, be plunged into the ordure of dogs.

92. By (selling) flesh, salt, and lac a Brâhmaṇa at once becomes an outcast; by selling milk he becomes (equal to) a Sûdra in three days.

93. But by willingly selling in this world other (forbidden) commodities, a Brâhmaṇa assumes after seven nights the character of a Vaisya.

94. Condiments may be bartered for condiments, but by no means salt for (other) condiments; cooked food (may be exchanged) for (other kinds of) cooked food, and sesamum seeds for grain in equal quantities.

95. A Kshatriya who has fallen into distress, may subsist by all these (means); but he must never arrogantly adopt the mode of life (prescribed for his) betters.

according to Nand. 'white,' according to Nâr. 'of good quality.' 'Provided he has not kept them long,' i. e. 'if he has not kept them long after the harvest, in order to increase his profit' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr.).

91. K. reads krîmîr bhûtvâ sa vish/hâyâm, 'he will be plunged into ordure;' and Medh. seems likewise to have read sa, 'he,' for sva, 'dog.'

93. Kâmatah, 'willingly,' means according to Medh. and Nand. 'not in times of distress, but in ordinary times.'

94. I read with Medh. and Nand., krîânnam ka krîânnena instead of kâkrîânnena (Gov., Kull., Nâr.), 'for undressed grain,' because all the other Smritis have the former rule. K. reads vâ krîânnena, and thus shows how the misreading kâ° arose. Nand. reads na tveva lavanam tilaiḥ, 'but not salt for sesamum grains,' and Medh. mentions the reading as a var. lect.

96. A man of low caste who through covetousness lives by the occupations of a higher one, the king shall deprive of his property and banish.

97. It is better (to discharge) one's own (appointed) duty incompletely than to perform completely that of another; for he who lives according to the law of another (caste) is instantly excluded from his own.

98. A Vaisya who is unable to subsist by his own duties, may even maintain himself by a Sûdra's mode of life, avoiding (however) acts forbidden (to him), and he should give it up, when he is able (to do so).

99. But a Sûdra, being unable to find service with the twice-born and threatened with the loss of his sons and wife (through hunger), may maintain himself by handicrafts.

100. (Let him follow) those mechanical occupations and those various practical arts by following which the twice-born are (best) served.

101. A Brâhmana who is distressed through a want of means of subsistence and pines (with hunger), (but) unwilling to adopt a Vaisya's mode of life and resolved to follow his own (prescribed) path, may act in the following manner.

97. Nâr. gives as an instance of an ill or incomplete performance of a Brâhmana's duty, which is better than completely discharging the duties of another caste, the acceptance of alms from an impure person. Nand. omits this verse, which, indeed, is here out of place and ought to stand in the discussion beginning verse 101.

98. 'Acts forbidden to him,' i. e. 'eating the leavings of the others and so forth' (Gov., Kull., Nâr.), or 'eating forbidden food and the like' (Nand.).

99-100. Vi. III, 14; Gaut. X, 60.

101-114. Gaut. VII, 4-5, 23; Âp. I, 18, 5-8, 14-15.

102. A Brâhmaṇa who has fallen into distress may accept (gifts) from anybody; for according to the law it is not possible (to assert) that anything pure can be sullied.

103. By teaching, by sacrificing for, and by accepting gifts from despicable (men) Brâhmaṇas (in distress) commit not sin; for they (are as pure) as fire and water.

104. He who, when in danger of losing his life, accepts food from any person whatsoever, is no more tainted by sin than the sky by mud.

105. Agîgarta, who suffered hunger, approached in order to slay (his own) son, and was not tainted by sin, since he (only) sought a remedy against famishing.

106. Vâmadeva, who well knew right and wrong, did not sully himself when, tormented (by hunger), he desired to eat the flesh of a dog in order to save his life.

107. Bharadvâga, a performer of great austerities, accepted many cows from the carpenter Brîbu, when he was starving together with his sons in a lonely forest.

102. 'Anything pure,' i. e. 'the Ganges and the like' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), or 'fire and the like' (Nâr., Râgh.).

103. Vas. XXVII, 9.

105. Regarding the story of Agîgarta, see Aitareya-brâhmaṇa VII, 13-16.

107. I read with Gov. and Sâyana on Rig-veda VI, 45, 31, Brîbu instead of Vridhu (Kull., Râgh., K.), and Brîhat (Nâr., Nand.). The corrected copies of Medh. have Vridhu, but the oldest reads vridhha in the text, and in the commentary drîbu, i. e. brîbu. It is not doubtful that Brîbu is the correct reading. For in the hymn quoted that personage is described as the carpenter of the Panis, and his liberality is highly praised. Moreover the Sâṅkhâyaṇa

108. Visvâmitra, who well knew what is right or wrong, approached, when he was tormented by hunger, (to eat) the haunch of a dog, receiving it from the hands of a Kandâla.

109. On (comparing) the acceptance (of gifts from low men), sacrificing (for them), and teaching (them), the acceptance of gifts is the meanest (of those acts) and (most) reprehensible for a Brâhmaṇa (on account of its results) in the next life.

110. (For) assisting in sacrifices and teaching are (two acts) always performed for men who have received the sacraments; but the acceptance of gifts takes place even in (case the giver is) a Sûdra of the lowest class.

111. The guilt incurred by offering sacrifices for teaching (unworthy men) is removed by muttering (sacred texts) and by burnt offerings, but that incurred by accepting gifts (from them) by throwing (the gifts) away and by austerities.

112. A Brâhmaṇa who is unable to maintain himself, should (rather) glean ears or grains from (the field of) any (man); gleaning ears is better than accepting gifts, picking up single grains is declared to be still more laudable.

113. If Brâhmaṇas, who are Snâtakas, are pining with hunger, or in want of (utensils made of) common metals, or of other property, they may ask the Srauta-sûtra (see the Petersburg Dictionary, sub voce Brîbu) alludes to the legend mentioned by Manu.

108. Regarding the legend of Visvâmitra, see Mahâbh. XII, 141, 28 seqq.

110. Nâr. says, 'a Sûdra (or) one of the lowest class, i. e. a Kandâla.'

111. Âp. I, 28, 11; Vas. XX, 45; Vi. LIV, 28. 'By austerities,' i. e. 'by penances,' see below, XI, 194.

113. Kupyam, '(utensils made of) common metals,' includes king for them ; if he is not disposed to be liberal, he must be left.

114. (The acceptance of) an untilled field is less blamable than (that of) a tilled one ; (with respect to) cows, goats, sheep, gold, grain, and cooked food, (the acceptance of) each earlier-named (article is less blamable than of the following ones).

115. There are seven lawful modes of acquiring property, (viz.) inheritance, finding or friendly donation, purchase, conquest, lending at interest, the performance of work, and the acceptance of gifts from virtuous men.

according to Medh. 'pots, kettles, wooden stools, and the like ; according to Gov. 'all property of small value such as beds, seats ;' according to Kull., Râgh., and Nand. 'also grain and clothes.' But Nâr. takes it in its usual sense, 'common metals such as brass and copper.' I translate the last clause according to the first explanation of Medh., Gov., Nâr., and Râgh., who think that all Brâhmanas should leave the realm of a king who does not support famishing Snâtakas. Nand., however, says that such a king is to be excluded from instruction and admission to sacrifices. Medh.'s second interpretation, according to which tyâgaḥ means dharma-hâniḥ, 'a loss of spiritual merit,' agrees with Nand.'s view. Kull. finally takes the phrase very differently, 'but he who does not wish to give anything, being known for his avarice, must be left to himself, i. e. must not be asked.' Kull. and Gov. hold that 'the prince' meant here is a Kshatriya king who does not follow the Sâstras, or a Sûdra king (see note on IV, 33), and that the verse thus rescinds the prohibition given above, IV, 84 seq.

114. Vas. XII, 3.

115. Gaut. X, 39-42. Lâbha, 'finding or friendly donation' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), refers according to Nâr. and Nand. to the acquisition of treasure-trove alone, not to the acceptance of presents from friends, from a father-in-law, &c. Gaya, 'conquest,' means according to Nand. 'gaining lawsuits.' The same commentator takes prayoga, 'lending money at interest,' in the sense of 'teaching,' and karma-yoga, 'performance of labour,' in the sense of 'sacrificing for others.' All the commentators, except Nand., point out that the first three modes of acquisition are lawful for all castes, the fourth for Ksha-

116. Learning, mechanical arts, work for wages, service, rearing cattle, traffic, agriculture, contentment (with little), alms, and receiving interest on money, are the ten modes of subsistence (permitted to all men in times of distress).

117. Neither a Brâhmana, nor a Kshatriya must lend (money at) interest; but at his pleasure (either of them) may, in times of distress (when he requires money) for sacred purposes, lend to a very sinful man at a small interest.

118. A Kshatriya (king) who, in times of distress, takes even the fourth part (of the crops), is free from guilt, if he protects his subjects to the best of his ability.

119. His peculiar duty is conquest, and he must not turn back in danger; having protected the Vaisyas by his weapons, he may cause the legal tax to be collected;

120. (Viz.) from Vaisyas one-eighth as the tax on triyas, the fifth and sixth for Vaisyas (or the fifth for Vaisyas, the sixth for Sûdras, Nâr.), and the seventh for Brâhmanas.

116. 'Learning,' i. e. (teaching) other than Vedic sciences, e. g. logic, exorcising evil spirits, or charms against poison (Medh., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). Gov. thinks that 'teaching for a stipulated fee' is also permissible under this rule.

117. Vas. II, 40-43. Gov., Nâr., and K. read alpakam instead of alpakâm, and with this var. lect. the last clause might be translated with Nâr. by '... (either of them) ... may lend a small (sum) to a very sinful man.'

119. I read with Gov. and K. na bhaye instead of nâhave (editions). Medh.'s text has the latter reading, but the commentary bhaye upasthite parânmukho yuddhe na syât, 'when danger threatens he shall not turn back in battle,' indicates that his reading was bhaye. The same inference may be drawn from Kull.'s commentary. Nand. gives na bhave, probably a mistake for na bhaye.

120. According to Medh., the first line refers to the profits of grain, one-twentieth (on the profits on gold and cattle), which amount at least to one Kârshâpana; Sûdras, artisans, and mechanics (shall) benefit (the king) by (doing) work (for him).

121. If a Sûdra, (unable to subsist by serving Brâhmanas,) seeks a livelihood, he may serve Kshatriyas, or he may also seek to maintain himself by attending on a wealthy Vaisya.

122. But let a (Sûdra) serve Brâhmanas, either subjects dealing in corn or in gold. From the former the king may take in times of distress one-eighth, and from the latter one-twentieth. The second line indicates that artisans who, according to VII, 138, in ordinary times furnish one piece of work in each month, may be made to work more for the king. According to Gov. and Kull., husbandmen (krishigîvinâm, Gov.) shall give from the increments on grain (upakaya) one-eighth (instead of one-twelfth, and in the direst distress one-fourth, according to verse 118, Kull.), from all increments on gold and so forth amounting to more than a Kârshâpana one-twentieth instead of one-fiftieth, as prescribed above, VII, 130. Râgh. in substance agrees with this explanation. Nâr. and Nand. read, as it would seem, vimsatkârshâpanâvaram (nâparam, Nand.), and take the verse differently. Nâr. says that the tax on grain is to be one-fourth in the case of Sûdras, and one-eighth in the case of Vaisyas, that the tax on everything else is to be at least one Kârshâpana in twenty, and that artisans who work for wages shall pay the same rate (vimsatkârshâpanam iti dhanyâd anyeshu vimsad vimsatikârshâpanamûlyam tâdrisalâbhe kârshâpana eko râgñâ grâhya ity avaraḥ pakshaḥ | sambhave tv adhikam api grâhyam ity arthaḥ | dharmopakaraṇāḥ [karmo°] dharmibhir [karmabhir] visvam upakurvantas tantuvâyâdayaḥ | sûdrâḥ kâravo varṇavâhyâ naḥakītrakârâdyâḥ | silpinas ka rathakârâdyâs te 'pi karma krītṛvâ bhrūitve 'pi vimsatikârshâpanalâbhe kârshâpanâvaram sulkam dadyur iti seshāḥ). According to Nâr. the translation would be: '(Viz.) one-eighth as the tax (payable) by Vaisyas on grain, (and on everything else) at least one Kârshâpana out of twenty; Sûdra artisans and mechanics who benefit (men) by their work (shall pay the same rate).' Nâr. adds that some read trimsatkârshâpanâvaram, 'at least one Kârshâpana out of thirty.'

121-129. Gaut. X, 50-65; Yâgñ. I, 120-121.

for the sake of heaven, or with a view to both (this life and the next); for he who is called the servant of a Brāhmaṇa thereby gains all his ends.

123. The service of Brāhmaṇas alone is declared (to be) an excellent occupation for a Sūdra; for whatever else besides this he may perform will bear him no fruit.

124. They must allot to him out of their own family(-property) a suitable maintenance, after considering his ability, his industry, and the number of those whom he is bound to support.

125. The remnants of their food must be given to him, as well as their old clothes, the refuse of their grain, and their old household furniture.

126. A Sūdra cannot commit an offence, causing loss of caste (pātaka), and he is not worthy to receive the sacraments; he has no right to (fulfil) the sacred law (of the Āryans, yet) there is no prohibition against (his fulfilling certain portions of) the law.

127. (Sūdras) who are desirous to gain merit, and know (their) duty, commit no sin, but gain praise, if they imitate the practice of virtuous men without reciting sacred texts.

128. The more a (Sūdra), keeping himself free from envy, imitates the behaviour of the virtuous, the more he gains, without being censured, (exaltation in) this world and the next.

126. 'Cannot commit an offence causing loss of caste,' i.e. 'by eating garlic and the like forbidden fruit' (Gov., Kull.), or 'by (keeping) a slaughter-house' (Rāgh.).

127. In what particulars the practice of the Āryans may be imitated by Sūdras, may be learnt from the parallel passages quoted above.

129. No collection of wealth must be made by a Sûdra, even though he be able (to do it); for a Sûdra who has acquired wealth, gives pain to Brâhmanas.

130. The duties of the four castes (varṇa) in times of distress have thus been declared, and if they perform them well, they will reach the most blessed state.

131. Thus all the legal rules for the four castes have been proclaimed; I next will promulgate the auspicious rules for penances.

CHAPTER XI.

1. Him who wishes (to marry for the sake of having) offspring, him who wishes to perform a sacrifice, a traveller, him who has given away all his property, him who begs for the sake of his teacher, his father, or his mother, a student of the Veda, and a sick man,

2. These nine Brâhmanas one should consider as

129. 'Gives pain to Brâhmanas,' i.e. 'by becoming proud and not serving them' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

XI. 1. Âp. II, 10, 1-2; Gaut. V, 21; Baudh. II, 5, 19. 'He who has given away all his property,' i.e. 'on performing a Virvagit sacrifice' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'other Kratus' (Nâr.). 'For the sake of his teacher, his father, or his mother,' i.e. 'in order to maintain them' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'in order to procure the fee for the teacher' (Râgh., Nâr.). The commentators try to excuse the introduction of the miscellaneous rules, contained in verses 1-43, before the discussion of the penances, which according to X, 131 ought to follow at once, either by assuming that the object is to show the necessity of performing penances in case these rules are violated, or by pointing out that, as gifts are the means for removing sin, the enumeration of the Pâtras or worthy recipients is required.

Snâtakas, begging in order to fulfil the sacred law ; to such poor men gifts must be given in proportion to their learning.

3. To these most excellent among the twice-born, food and presents (of money) must be given ; it is declared that food must be given to others outside the sacrificial enclosure.

4. But a king shall bestow, as is proper, jewels of all sorts, and presents for the sake of sacrifices on Brâhmanas learned in the Vedas.

5. If a man who has a wife weds a second wife, having begged money (to defray the marriage expenses, he obtains) no advantage but sensual enjoyment ; but the issue (of his second marriage belongs) to the giver of the money.

6. One should give, according to one's ability, wealth to Brâhmanas learned in the Veda and living alone ; (thus) one obtains after death heavenly bliss.

3. Gaut. V, 22 ; Baudh. II, 5, 20. The translation follows Medh., Gov., and Nâr. The interpretation adopted by Kull. is, 'To these most excellent Brâhmanas food together with presents must be given (inside the sacrificial enclosure).' Nand. reads etebhyo 'pi instead of etebhyo hi, and thinks that bahirvede is to be construed with api, 'To these most excellent among the twice-born food . . . must be given even outside the sacrificial enclosure.' The correct explanation of the force of the word bahirvedi, 'outside the sacrificial enclosure,' is given by Nâr., who adds, vedyâm tu yâkîtam sarvam eva deyam, 'but near the fire-altar everything asked for must be given to them.' The meaning of the verse, therefore, is that the nine mendicants, mentioned in verses 1-2, shall always receive what they ask for, and other mendicants ordinary food only, but that if they beg at the performance of a sacrifice, other property also must be given to them.

5. Âp. II, 10, 3. The object of the verse is to forbid that alms shall be asked or given for such a purpose (Gov., Kull.). Medh., Gov., Nâr., Râgh., and K. omit this verse. It looks very much like an interpolation, intended to explain the preceding rule.

7. He who may possess (a supply of) food sufficient to maintain those dependant on him during three years or more than that, is worthy to drink the Soma-juice.

8. But a twice-born man, who, though possessing less than that amount of property, nevertheless drinks the Soma-juice, does not derive any benefit from that (act), though he may have formerly drunk the Soma-juice.

✓ 9. (If) an opulent man (is) liberal towards strangers, while his family lives in distress, that counterfeit virtue will first make him taste the sweets (of fame, but afterwards) make him swallow the poison (of punishment in hell).

✓ 10. If (a man) does anything for the sake of his happiness in another world, to the detriment of those whom he is bound to maintain, that produces evil results for him, both while he lives and when he is dead.

11. If a sacrifice, (offered) by (any twice-born) sacrificer, (and) especially by a Brâhmana, must remain incomplete through (the want of) one requisite, while a righteous king rules,

7. Vas. VIII, 10; Vi. LIX, 8; Yâgñ. I, 124. 'Drink the Soma-juice,' i.e. 'perform a Soma-sacrifice, in order to obtain the fulfilment of some wish' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

8. 'Though he formerly may have drunk the Soma,' i.e. 'at the nitya (i.e. the annual, see above, IV, 26, VI, 10) Soma-sacrifice' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.). The same commentators and Medh. point out that this and the preceding verses do not forbid the performance of the nitya Soma-sacrifices, but only of those called kâmya. He who performs the latter without possessing the requisite property, loses also the rewards for the former.

11-15. Gaut. XVIII, 24-27.

11. 'While a righteous king rules,' i.e. 'because such a king will not punish a man who acts in accordance with the Sâstras' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr.).

12. That article (required) for the completion of the sacrifice, may be taken (forcibly) from the house of any Vaisya, who possesses a large number of cattle, (but) neither performs the (minor) sacrifices nor drinks the Soma-juice ;

13. (Or) the (sacrificer) may take at his pleasure two or three (articles required for a sacrifice) from the house of a Sûdra ; for a Sûdra has no business with sacrifices.

14. If (a man) possessing one hundred cows, kindles not the sacred fire, or one possessing a thousand cows, drinks not the Soma-juice, a (sacrificer) may unhesitatingly take (what he requires) from the houses of those two, even (though they be Brâhmaṇas or Kshatriyas) ;

15. (Or) he may take (it by force or fraud) from one who always takes and never gives, and who refuses to give it ; thus the fame (of the taker) will spread and his merit increase.

16. Likewise he who has not eaten at (the time of) six meals, may take at (the time of) the seventh meal (food) from a man who neglects his sacred

12. Nâr. and Nand. think that 'the king' is the agent to be understood with the verb 'may be taken.' The latter relies on the parallel passage of the Mahâbhârata, where the last Pâda of the verse is yagñârtham pârthivo haret. 'The (minor) sacrifices,' i.e. 'the Pâkayagñas and so forth' (Kull.), or 'the five great sacrifices' (Nâr.).

14. Gov. thinks that this verse refers to a Kshatriya alone, while Medh., Kull., Râgh. refer it to Brâhmaṇas also.

15. Gov., Kull., and Râgh. explain âdânanitya, 'one who always takes,' by 'a Brâhmaṇa who always accepts presents,' while Medh. and Nâr. refer the word to men of all castes who constantly amass wealth.

16-23. Gaut. XVIII, 28-32 ; Yâgñ. III, 43-44.

16. 'At the seventh meal-time,' i.e. 'on the fourth day of his starving.'

duties, without (however) making a provision for the morrow,

17. Either from the threshing-floor, or from a field, or out of the house, or wherever he finds it; but if (the owner) asks him, he must confess to him that (deed and its cause).

18. (On such occasions) a Kshatriya must never take the property of a (virtuous) Brâhmaṇa; but he who is starving may appropriate the possessions of a Dasyu, or of one who neglects his sacred duties.

19. He who takes property from the wicked and bestows it on the virtuous, transforms himself into a boat, and carries both (over the sea of misfortune).

20. The property of those who zealously offer sacrifices, the wise call the property of the gods; but the wealth of those who perform no sacrifices is called the property of the Âsuras.

21. On him (who, for the reasons stated, appropriates another's possessions), a righteous king shall not inflict punishment; for (in that case) a Brâhmaṇa pines with hunger through the Kshatriya's want of care.

22. Having ascertained the number of those dependent on such a man, and having fully considered his learning and his conduct, the king shall allow him, out of his own property, a maintenance whereon he may live according to the law;

23. And after allotting to him a maintenance, the

18. 'A Dasyu,' see above, X, 45. According to Nâr., this verse too refers to the king.

19. 'Both,' i. e. 'him from whom he takes it by saving him from sin (or, from the trouble of protecting his property, Gov.), and the recipient' (Kull., Gov.). Nand. omits verses 19-21.

21-22. See above, VII, 134-135.

23. See above, VIII, 304.

king must protect him in every way; for he obtains from such (a man) whom he protects, the sixth part of his spiritual merit.

24. A Brāhmaṇa shall never beg from a Sūdra property for a sacrifice; for a sacrificer, having begged (it from such a man), after death is born (again) as a Kandāla.

25. A Brāhmaṇa who, having begged any property for a sacrifice, does not use the whole (for that purpose), becomes for a hundred years a (vulture of the kind called) Bhāsa, or a crow.

26. That sinful man, who, through covetousness, seizes the property of the gods, or the property of Brāhmaṇas, feeds in another world on the leavings of vultures.

27. In case the prescribed animal and Soma-sacrifices cannot be performed, let him always offer at the change of the year a Vairvânart Ishî as a penance (for the omission).

28. But a twice-born, who, without being in distress, performs his duties according to the law for times of distress, obtains no reward for them in the next world; that is the opinion (of the sages).

29. By the Visve-devas, by the *Sâdhya*s, and by the great sages (of the) Brāhmaṇa (caste), who were afraid of perishing in times of distress, a substitute was made for the (principal) rule.

24. Vi. LIX, 11; Yâgñ. I, 127.

25. Yâgñ. I, 127. Medh., Gov., and Nâr. say, 'A Brāhmaṇa who . . . does not give the whole of it (to Brāhmaṇas).'

26. Pare loka, 'in another world,' means according to Gov. and Kull., 'in his next birth.'

27. Vi. LIX, 10; Yâgñ. I, 126. The Vairvânart Ishî is according to Medh., a rite described in the Gr̥hya-sûtras. Regarding the prescribed Srauta sacrifices, see above, IV, 25-26.

30. That evil-minded man, who, being able (to fulfil) the original law, lives according to the secondary rule, reaps no reward for that after death.

31. A Brâhmana who knows the law need not bring any (offence) to the notice of the king ; by his own power alone he can punish those men who injure him.

32. His own power is greater than the power of the king ; the Brâhmana, therefore, may punish his foes by his own power alone.

33. Let him use without hesitation the sacred texts, revealed by Atharvan and by Aṅgiras ; speech, indeed, is the weapon of the Brâhmana, with that he may slay his enemies.

34. A Kshatriya shall pass through misfortunes which have befallen him by the strength of his arms, a Vaisya and a Sûdra by their wealth, the chief of the twice-born by muttered prayers and burnt-oblations.

35. The Brâhmana is declared (to be) the creator (of the world), the punisher, the teacher, (and hence) a benefactor (of all created beings) ; to him let no man say anything unpropitious, nor use any harsh words.

31. This and the following verses rescind the rules given above, IX, 290.

32. See above, IX, 313-321.

33. 'The sacred texts, revealed by Atharvan and Aṅgiras,' i. e. the charms and incantations contained in the Atharva-veda. Nâr. reads abhiârayan, 'using magic,' instead of aviârayan (Medh., Gov., Kull., K.). Nand. reads, srutir atharvâṅgirasîh kuryâd ity abhiâritam.

34. Vas. XXVI, 16.

35. I read with Medh., Gov., Nâr., Râgh., Nand., and K., maitro for maitrî, and suktâm for sushkâm (editions). The commentators differ

36. Neither a girl, nor a (married) young woman, nor a man of little learning, nor a fool, nor a man in great suffering, nor one uninitiated, shall offer an Agnihotra.

37. For such (persons) offering a burnt-oblation sink into hell, as well as he to whom that (Agnihotra) belongs; hence the person who sacrifices (for another) must be skilled in (the performance of) Vaitâna (rites), and know the whole Veda.

much with respect to the explanation of the first line. Vidhâtâ, 'the creator (of the world,' Medh., Nâr.), means according to Gov. and Kull. 'the performer of the prescribed rites;' according to Râgh. 'able to do, to undo, and to change;' according to Nand. 'the performer of magic rites and so forth.' Sâsitâ, 'the punisher' (Medh. Kull., Râgh.), i. e. 'of others, of the king' (Medh.), or 'of his sons, pupils, and so forth' (Kull.), is interpreted by Nâr. to mean 'the instructor in the sacred law,' by Nand. 'the instigator (of incantations).' Vaktâ, 'the teacher' (Gov., Nâr.), means according to Medh. 'the giver of good advice,' according to Kull. and Râgh. 'the expounder of the sacred law.' The explanations of Gov. and Kull. allow also the translation adopted by Sir W. Jones, 'He who performs his duties . . . is truly called a Brâhmaṇa.' As regards the second line Medh. offers two explanations. First he interprets it 'to him, i. e. when he uses magic, let no man say anything unpropitious, i. e. he must not punish him, nor use any harsh words, i. e. admonish or sharply reprimand him.' Gov. and Kull. agree with this explanation, but omit the specification 'when he uses magic.' According to Medh.'s second rendering the line contains an advice, addressed to men of all castes, not to anger or disquiet a Brâhmaṇa; and this view is adopted by Râgh. and Nand., who explain akusalam, 'unpropitious,' by anishṭam, 'anything disagreeable.' Nâr.'s readings seem to have differed. He has kuryât instead of brûyât, and explains the first phrase, 'to him let no man do anything unpropitious,' i. e. anything unbecoming, such as a bodily injury. In the second clause he reads suktam (suktam, MS.), which he explains by paryushitam, 'stale,' but he does not give the remainder of his text.

36-37. Âp. II, 15, 18-19; Gaut. II, 4; Vas. II, 6: see also above, II, 172; V, 155; IX, 18. The Vaitâna rites are those performed in the vitâna, the three sacred fires. Hence it follows that the Agnihotra meant here is the Srauta Agnihotra.

38. A Brâhmaṇa who, though wealthy, does not give, as fee for the performance of an Agnyâdheya, a horse sacred to Pragâpati, becomes (equal to one) who has not kindled the sacred fires.

39. Let him who has faith and controls his senses perform other meritorious acts, but let him on no account offer sacrifices at which he gives smaller fees (than those prescribed).

40. The organs (of sense and action), honour, (bliss in) heaven, longevity, fame, offspring, and cattle are destroyed by a sacrifice at which (too) small sacrificial fees are given; hence a man of small means should not offer a (Srauta) sacrifice.

41. A Brâhmaṇa who, being an Agnihotrin, voluntarily neglects the sacred fires, shall perform a lunar penance during one month; for that (offence) is equal to the slaughter of a son.

42. Those who, obtaining wealth from Sûdras, (and using that) offer an Agnihotra, are priests officiating for Sûdras, (and hence) censured among those who recite the Veda.

38. The translation of prâgâpatya, 'sacred to Pragâpati,' follows Gov., Kull., Nâr., and Râgh. Medh. says that the epithet may be used merely by way of laudation, or may mean that the animal is to be neither very good nor very bad, or that it may be derived from a phrase current among the people. Nand. explains it by 'to be given to the Brahman priest.'

40. Gov. and Kull. explain, here and above, IV, 94, yasaḥ, 'honour,' by 'a good name during one's life,' and kîrtim, 'fame,' by 'fame after death.' Nâr. takes the former as 'being known to others for one's virtues,' and the latter as 'being praised by others.'

41. Gaut. XXII, 34; Vas. I, 18; XXI, 27; Vi. LIV, 13. Nand. explains vîra, 'son' (Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), by a Kshatriya, and Râgh. says that it may also mean 'a deity.'

42. See above, XI, 24.

43. Treading with his foot on the heads of those fools who worship a fire (kindled at the expense) of a Śûdra, the giver (of the wealth) shall always pass over his miseries (in the next world).

44. A man who omits a prescribed act, or performs a blamable act, or cleaves to sensual enjoyments, must perform a penance.

45. (All) sages prescribe a penance for a sin unintentionally committed; some declare, on the evidence of the revealed texts, (that it may be performed) even for an intentional (offence).

46. A sin unintentionally committed is expiated by the recitation of Vedic texts, but that which (men) in their folly commit intentionally, by various (special) penances.

47. A twice-born man, having become liable to perform a penance, be it by (the decree of) fate or by (an act) committed in a former life, must not, before the penance has been performed, have intercourse with virtuous men.

48. Some wicked men suffer a change of their

43. Nand. reads the first line differently, pâpânâm satatam teshâm agnim sûdrasya guhvatâm, but the general sense remains the same.

44-46. Gaut. XIX; Vas. XX, 1-3; XXII; Baudh. III, 10; Yâgyñ. III, 219, 226.

45. Vedic texts which prescribe penances for offences committed intentionally, are quoted Gaut. XIX, 7-10. The commentators adduce also Aitareya-brâhmana VII, 28.

47. Daivât, 'by (the decree of) fate,' i.e. 'through carelessness' (Medh., Nâr., Kull., Râgh.). Medh. mentions a var. lect. mohât, 'through delusion of mind.' 'By (an act) committed in a former life,' i.e. 'if he has black teeth or some other bodily defect from which his having committed a crime in a former birth may be inferred.'

48-54. Vas. I, 18; XX, 6; XXI, 43-44; Vi. XLV; Yâgyñ. III, 207-215.

(natural) appearance in consequence of crimes committed in this life, and some in consequence of those committed in a former (existence).

49. He who steals the gold (of a Brâhmaṇa) has diseased nails; a drinker of (the spirituous liquor called) Surâ, black teeth; the slayer of a Brâhmaṇa, consumption; the violator of a Guru's bed, a diseased skin;

50. An informer, a foul-smelling nose; a calumniator, a stinking breath; a stealer of grain, deficiency in limbs; he who adulterates (grain), redundant limbs;

51. A stealer of (cooked) food, dyspepsia; a stealer of the words (of the Veda), dumbness; a stealer of clothes, white leprosy; a horse-stealer, lameness.

52. The stealer of a lamp will become blind; he who extinguishes it will become one-eyed; injury (to sentient beings) is punished by general sickness; an adulterer (will have) swellings (in his limbs).

53. Thus in consequence of a remnant of (the guilt of former) crimes, are born idiots, dumb, blind, deaf, and deformed men, who are (all) despised by the virtuous.

54. Penances, therefore, must always be performed for the sake of purification, because those

51. 'A stealer of the words (of the Veda),' i. e. 'one who learns the Veda without permission, by hearing another man recite it' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), means according to Nâr. 'a plagiarist.'

52. Gov., Nâr., Nand., and K. omit this verse, and Râgh. says that it is found kvâpi, in some MSS.

53. I read with Nâr., Nand., and K., karmâvasesheṇa instead of karmavisesheṇa (editions). The explanations of Medh., Gov., and Kull. likewise point to the former reading.

whose sins have not been expiated, are born (again) with disgraceful marks.

55. Killing a Brâhmaṇa, drinking (the spirituous liquor called) Surâ, stealing (the gold of a Brâhmaṇa), adultery with a Guru's wife, and associating with such (offenders), they declare (to be) mortal sins (mahâpâtaka).

56. Falsely attributing to oneself high birth, giving information to the king (regarding a crime), and falsely accusing one's teacher, (are offences) equal to slaying a Brâhmaṇa.

57. Forgetting the Veda, reviling the Vedas, giving false evidence, slaying a friend, eating forbidden food, or (swallowing substances) unfit for food, are six (offences) equal to drinking Surâ.

58. Stealing a deposit, or men, a horse, and silver, land, diamonds and (other) gems, is declared to be equal to stealing the gold (of a Brâhmaṇa).

59. Carnal intercourse with sisters by the same mother, with (unmarried) maidens, with females of 55-71. Âp. I, 21, 7-19; Gaut. XXI, 1-12; Vas. I, 19-23; Baudh. II, 2, 1-8; 12-13; 15-16; Vi. XXXIV, 1; XXXV-XXXVIII, 6; XXXIX-XLII; Yâgñ. III, 227-242.

55. See above, IX, 235.

56. Guros kâlikanirbandhaḥ, 'falsely accusing one's teacher' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), may also mean according to Medh. 'wrongfully going to law with the teacher.' Nâr. and Nand. explain it by 'persevering in doing what is disagreeable to the teacher.'

57. Garhitânâdya, 'forbidden food and (substances) unfit for food' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), means according to Medh. 'forbidden food and such which one has resolved not to eat;' according to Nâr. and Nand. 'food blemished by the contact with impure men or things, and such as is by its nature unfit for eating, e. g. garlic.'

59. The commentators point out that, though the crimes enumerated in verses 56-59 are stated to be equal to mortal sins, the penances are not always the same, but frequently less heavy.

the lowest castes, with the wives of a friend, or of a son, they declare to be equal to the violation of a Guru's bed.

60. Slaying kine, sacrificing for those who are unworthy to sacrifice, adultery, selling oneself, casting off one's teacher, mother, father, or son, giving up the (daily) study of the Veda, and neglecting the (sacred domestic) fire,

61. Allowing one's younger brother to marry first, marrying before one's elder brother, giving a daughter to, or sacrificing for, (either brother),

62. Defiling a damsel, usury, breaking a vow, selling a tank, a garden, one's wife, or child,

63. Living as a Vrâtya, casting off a relative, teaching (the Veda) for wages, learning (the Veda) from a paid teacher, and selling goods which one ought not to sell,

64. Superintending mines (or factories) of any

60. 'Selling oneself,' i.e. 'for money into slavery' (Medh.), 'refers to Âryans only' (Nâr.). Medh. mentions another reading, pârâdâryam avikrayaḥ, 'adultery and the sale of forbidden merchandise.' Medh. and Nâr. say, 'forgetting the sacred texts required for the daily private recitation;' and Medh. adds that, as the same offence has been mentioned above, verse 57, 'forgetting the Veda,' may be either reckoned as equal to a Mahâ-pâtaka or as an Upapâtaka crime. Nâr. refers the term 'the fire' to the three sacred Srauta fires.

62. 'Breaking a vow,' i.e. 'any vow voluntarily undertaken' (Medh., Nâr.), means according to Gov., Kull., and Râgh. 'breaking the vow of studentship.'

63. 'Living as a Vrâtya,' see above, X, 20. 'Casting off a relative,' i.e. 'not supporting him in distress, though one possesses money enough to do so' (Medh.). Medh. takes bândhava in the sense of 'maternal relatives,' and understands that it includes the mother, sisters, maternal uncles, &c., while the other commentators take it in a wider sense.

64. Mahâyantrapravartana, 'executing great mechanical works,' sort, executing great mechanical works, injuring (living) plants, subsisting on (the earnings of) one's wife, sorcery (by means of sacrifices), and working (magic by means of) roots, (and so forth),

65. Cutting down green trees for firewood, doing acts for one's own advantage only, eating prohibited food,

66. Neglecting to kindle the sacred fires, theft, non-payment of (the three) debts, studying bad books, and practising (the arts of) dancing and singing,

67. Stealing grain, base metals, or cattle, inter-

e. g. 'constructing dams across rivers in order to stop the water' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh., K.), means according to Nâr. 'making machines for killing great animals such as boars,' according to Nand. '(making) great machines such as sugar-mills.' Stryâgiva, 'subsisting on (the earnings of) one's wife, i. e. by making her go into service (Nâr., Nand.), or by forcing her to become a harlot' (Kull.), means according to Medh. 'subsisting on (the separate property of) one's wife,' according to Râgh. 'living on (the money obtained by selling one's wife.' Nand. reads himśraushadhistry-upâgîvaḥ, 'subsisting on (money earned by the sale of) noxious herbs or on (the earnings of) one's wife.'

65. 'Doing acts for one's own advantage only,' i. e. 'cooking only for oneself, and so forth' (Medh., Nâr., Kull., Nand., Râgh.); see above, III, 118. By ninditâṇṇa, 'forbidden food,' Medh. understands the same kinds, mentioned above, verse 57; Kull., 'forbidden food such as garlic,' Nâr., Râgh., and Nand., 'food given by persons from whom it must not be accepted, e. g. by a king, a gambler, &c.' Medh. and Kull. state expressly that, if such food be eaten once and unintentionally, the offence is an Upapâtaka, but in worse cases equal to a Mahâpâtaka.

66. 'Theft,' i. e. 'of valuable objects' (Kull.), 'excepting gold and the other articles specially mentioned' (Medh., Râgh.), e. g. 'of clothes' (Nâr.). Regarding the three debts, see Vas. XI, 45. 'Bad books,' i. e. 'those of the Kârvâkas, Nirgranthas (Gaiṇas,' Medh.), or 'of heretics in general' (Nâr.).

67. 'Cattle,' i. e. other than cows; see above, verse 60.

course with women who drink spirituous liquor, slaying women, Sûdras, Vaisyas, or Kshatriyas, and atheism, (are all) minor offences, causing loss of caste (Upapâtaka).

68. Giving pain to a Brâhmaṇa (by a blow), smelling at things which ought not to be smelt at, or at spirituous liquor, cheating, and an unnatural offence with a man, are declared to cause the loss of caste (Gâtibhramsa).

69. Killing a donkey, a horse, a camel, a deer, an elephant, a goat, a sheep, a fish, a snake, or a buffalo, must be known to degrade (the offender) to a mixed caste (Samkarikarāṇa).

70. Accepting presents from blamed men, trading, serving Sûdras, and speaking a falsehood, make (the offender) unworthy to receive gifts (Apâtra).

71. Killing insects, small or large, or birds, eating anything kept close to spirituous liquors, stealing fruit, firewood, or flowers, (are offences) which make impure (Malāvaha).

72. Learn (now) completely those penances, by means of which all the several offences mentioned (can) be expiated.

73. For his purification the slayer of a Brâhmaṇa shall make a hut in the forest and dwell (in it)

68. 'Things which ought not to be smelt at,' e. g. 'garlic, onions, ordure, &c.' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr.).

70. 'Blamed men,' i. e. those from whom no gifts must be accepted; see above, IV, 84 seq.

73-87. Âp. I, 24, 10-25; 25, 11-12; 28, 21-29, 1; Gaut. XXII, 2-10; Vas. XX, 25-28; Baudh. II, 1, 2-6; Vi. XXV, 6; L, 1-6, 15; Yâgyñ. III, 243-250.

73. According to Kull., Nâr., and Râgh. this penance is to be performed in case the homicide was committed unintentionally.

during twelve years, subsisting on alms and making the skull of a dead man his flag ;

74. Or let him, of his own free will, become (in a battle) the target of archers who know (his purpose); or he may thrice throw himself headlong into a blazing fire ;

75. Or he may offer a horse-sacrifice, a Svargit, a Gosava, an Abhigit, a Visvagit, a Trivrit, or an Agnishut ;

76. Or, in order to remove (the guilt of) slaying a Brâhmana, he may walk one hundred yoganâs, reciting one of the Vedas, eating little, and controlling his organs ;

77. Or he may present to a Brâhmana, learned in

74. Vidushâm, 'who know (his purpose),' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), may also mean according to Medh. 'who are expert in archery,' and Nand. adopts this explanation. Nâr. thinks that this penance must be performed by one who intentionally murdered a Brâhmana, and that it must end in his death. According to the Bhavishyapurâna which Kull. and Râgh. quote, these two penances and that mentioned in the next verse are to be performed by a Kshatriya who slew a Brâhmana, those ending in death by an offender who himself, destitute of good qualities, killed a learned Srotiya, and the lighter ones by an eminent king who unintentionally caused the death of a worthless Brâhmana.

75. According to the Bhavishyapurâna, Nâr. and Kull., Svargit is the name of a sacrifice, but Medh. (on verse 78) and Râgh. take the word as an adjective qualifying Gosava. Regarding the Gosava, see Kâtyâyana Sr. Sûtras XXII, 11, 3 ; regarding the Abhigit, Âsv. Sr. Sûtras VIII, 5, 13. According to Gov. and Nâr., Trivrit is equivalent to Trivritstoma, and to be taken separately; but according to Medh. and Râgh., trivritâ qualifies Agnishut. Regarding the Agnishut, see Âsv. Sr. Sûtras IX, 7, 22-25.

76. According to Nâr., Kull., and Râgh. (the latter two quoting the Bhavishyapurâna as their authority), this penance suffices to expiate the unintentional slaughter of one who has nothing but the name of a Brâhmana.

77. I read with Medh., Gov., and K., dhanam hi instead of the Vedas, his whole property, as much wealth as suffices for the maintenance (of the recipient), or a house together with the furniture ;

78. Or, subsisting on sacrificial food, he may walk against the stream along (the whole course of the river) Sarasvati; or, restricting his food (very much), he may mutter thrice the Samhitâ of a Veda.

79. Having shaved off (all his hair), he may dwell at the extremity of the village, or in a cow-pen, or in a hermitage, or at the root of a tree, taking pleasure in doing good to cows and Brâhmanas.

dhanam vâ (Nâr., Nand., Râgh., editions), 'or as much wealth as.' Kull.'s explanation, too, points to the former reading, the meaning of which is that 'the whole property' must be sufficient to maintain the recipient. According to the Bhaviṣyapurâṇa, quoted by Kull. and Râgh., the penance is prescribed for the case that a rich, unlearned Brâhmana who keeps no sacred fire, unintentionally slew an utterly worthless Brâhmana.

78. According to the Bhaviṣyapurâṇa, quoted by Kull. and Râgh., the first penance is to be performed by an unlearned Brâhmana who intentionally killed an utterly worthless caste-fellow, the second by an exceedingly distinguished Srotriya who unintentionally caused the death of a man merely a Brâhmana in name. Medh. and Gov. attach their views regarding the particular cases to their explanations of this Sûtra. Gov. does not go beyond generalities. But Medh. says that the penance mentioned in verse 73 and the first described in verse 74 may be optionally performed for intentionally slaying an ordinary Brâhmana. If a Srotriya or one who is performing a Srauta sacrifice has been killed, the offender is to burn himself. The sacrifices will atone for the guilt of a homicide committed unintentionally, by a most distinguished member of the Âryan castes, provided that the person slain was a Brâhmana in name only.

79. Medh., Kull., and Gov. think that the rule allows an option with respect to the residence during the penance of twelve years (verse 73). Nâr. says that the verse contains a general rule for all penances.

80. He who unhesitatingly abandons life for the sake of Brāhmaṇas or of cows, is freed from (the guilt of) the murder of a Brāhmaṇa, and (so is he) who saves (the life of) a cow, or of a Brāhmaṇa.

81. If either he fights at least three times (against robbers in defence of) a Brāhmaṇa's (property), or reconquers the whole property of a Brāhmaṇa, or if he loses his life for such a cause, he is freed (from his guilt).

82. He who thus (remains) always firm in his vow, chaste, and of concentrated mind, removes after the lapse of twelve years (the guilt of) slaying a Brāhmaṇa.

83. Or he who, after confessing his crime in an assembly of the gods of the earth (Brāhmaṇas), and the gods of men (Kshatriyas), bathes (with the priests) at the close of a horse-sacrifice, is (also) freed (from guilt).

84. The Brāhmaṇa is declared (to be) the root of the sacred law and the Kshatriya its top; hence he who has confessed his sin before an assembly of such men, becomes pure.

85. By his origin alone a Brāhmaṇa is a deity even for the gods, and (his teaching is) authoritative for men, because the Veda is the foundation for that.

80. This holds good also before the twelve years' penance is finished (Gov., Kull., Nār.).

83. Gov. holds that this penance is efficacious only if the offender is engaged in the performance of the twelve years' penance. Kull. and Rāgh. think that it is a separate penance, because the subject of the twelve years' penance has been finished in the preceding verse, and because the Bhavishyapurāṇa specially prescribes it for an eminent Brāhmaṇa who unintentionally causes the death of a worthless caste-fellow. Medh. mentions both opinions, and states that he believes the penance to be efficacious in any case.

86. (If) only three of them who are learned in the Veda proclaim the expiation for offences, that shall purify the (sinners); for the words of learned men are a means of purification.

87. A Brâhmana who, with a concentrated mind, follows any of the (above-mentioned) rules, removes the sin committed by slaying a Brâhmana through his self-control.

88. For destroying the embryo (of a Brâhmana, the sex of which was) unknown, for slaying a Kshatriya or a Vaisya who are (engaged in or) have offered a (Vedic) sacrifice, or a (Brâhmana) woman who has bathed after temporary uncleanness (Âtreyî), he must perform the same penance,

89. Likewise for giving false evidence (in an important cause), for passionately abusing the teacher, for stealing a deposit, and for killing (his) wife or his friend.

90. This expiation has been prescribed for unin-

88-89. Âp. I, 24, 6-9, 23; Gaut. XXII, 11-14; Vas. XX, 34-36; Baudh. II, 1, 12; Vi. L, 7-10; LII, 4; Yâgñ. III, 251.

88. Medh. and several other commentators propose, in explanation of the term Âtreyî, besides the interpretation given above, also the erroneous one, 'a female of the tribe of Atri.'

89. 'Giving false evidence,' i.e. 'in a case where the life of the accused is involved' (Medh., Gov., Nâr.), or 'where gold, land and the like is at stake' (Kull., Râgh.). 'Abusing the teacher,' see above, verse 56. 'Stealing a deposit,' i.e. 'gold belonging to a Kshatriya or Vaisya, or silver and other property belonging to a Brâhmana' (Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), or property belonging to a poor Brâhmana (Medh.). Strî, 'his wife' (Nâr., Nand.), means according to Gov., Kull., and Râgh. 'the virtuous wife of a distinguished Brâhmana who keeps sacred fires.' Medh. (on verse 88) seems to agree to a similar explanation. 'His friend,' i.e. 'though he may not be a Brâhmana' (Nâr.).

90. The verse is identical with Baudh. II, 1, 6. The correct tentionally killing a Brâhmana ; but for intentionally slaying a Brâhmana no atonement is ordained.

91. A twice-born man who has (intentionally) drunk, through delusion of mind, (the spirituous liquor called) Surâ shall drink that liquor boiling-hot; when his body has been completely scalded by that, he is freed from his guilt;

92. Or he may drink cow's urine, water, milk, clarified butter or (liquid) cowdung boiling-hot, until he dies;

93. Or, in order to remove (the guilt of) drinking Surâ, he may eat during a year once (a day) at night grains (of rice) or oilcake, wearing clothes made of cowhair and his own hair in braids and carrying (a wine cup as) a flag.

interpretation of this verse is that Manu, just as Âp. I, 24, 24, held the intentional murder of a true Brâhmana to be inexpiable during the criminal's life, and meant to teach that the murderer had either to perform a penance which caused his death or to live according to the twelve years' rule during the term of his natural life. This is the doctrine attributed to Manu by Gaut. XXI, 7. While Gov. and Nâr. agree with this explanation, Medh., 'others' quoted by Gov., Kull., Nand., and Râgh. refer iyam, 'this,' to verse 73, and hold that in the case of wilful murder the penance has only to be made severer by doubling or trebling the term of twelve years.

91-98. Âp. I, 25, 3, 10; 27, 10; Gaut. XXIII, 10-12; Vas. XX, 19, 22; Baudh. II, 1, 18-22; Vi. LI, 1-4; Yâgyñ. III, 253-254.

91. This and the next penances are prescribed for an intentional offence; see below, verse 147. According to Medh., Gov., Kull., and Râgh. (the latter two quoting the Bhavishyapurâna), the spirituous liquor here intended is the paishîkî surâ, that distilled from ground rice. According to Nâr. the penance ending in death must be performed by all Âryans who have drunk paishîkî surâ, and by Brâhmanas who have drunk any of the three kinds of surâ mentioned in verse 95. Nand. reads amohât, and explains it by matipûrvakam, 'intentionally.'

93. According to Gov., Kull., Nand., and Râgh., this penance is prescribed for drinking unintentionally paishîkî surâ; according

94. Surâ, indeed, is the dirty refuse (mala) of grain, sin also is called dirt (mala); hence a Brâhmana, a Kshatriya, and a Vaisya shall not drink Surâ.

95. Surâ one must know to be of three kinds, that distilled from molasses (gaudî), that distilled from ground rice, and that distilled from Madhûka-flowers (mâdhvî); as the one (named above) even so are all (three sorts) forbidden to the chief of the twice-born.

96. Surâ, (all other) intoxicating drinks and decoctions and flesh are the food of the Yakshas, Râkshasas, and Pisâkas; a Brâhmana who eats (the remnants of) the offerings consecrated to the gods, must not partake of such (substances).

97. A Brâhmana, stupefied by drunkenness, might fall on something impure, or (improperly) pronounce Vedic (texts), or commit some other act which ought not to be committed.

98. When the Brahman (the Veda) which dwells in his body is (even) once (only) deluged with spirituous liquor, his Brahmanhood forsakes him and he becomes a Sûdra.

to 'others' quoted by Medh. and Râgh., for drinking gaudî or mâdhvî surâ; according to Nâr., for intentionally drinking water mixed with madhusurâ. Medh. himself says idam prânâtyaya aushadhârtham, 'this (is intended) as a medicine for death.'

94. This verse shows, as the commentators point out, the distinction between spirituous liquor distilled from ground grain, paishâkî surâ, and the other two sorts mentioned in the next verse. The first alone is forbidden to all Âryans, the other two sorts to Brâhmanas; see also Gaut. II, 20.

95. Mâdhvî, 'distilled from Madhûka (Mauâ) flowers' (Kull.), means according to Medh. 'distilled from honey,' according to Nâr. 'distilled either from grapes or from Madhûka flowers or from honey.'

99. The various expiations for drinking (the spirituous liquors called) Surâ have thus been explained; I will next proclaim the atonement for stealing the gold (of a Brâhmaṇa).

100. A Brâhmaṇa who has stolen the gold (of a Brâhmaṇa) shall go to the king and, confessing his deed, say, 'Lord, punish me!'

101. Taking (from him) the club (which he must carry), the king himself shall strike him once, by his death the thief becomes pure; or a Brâhmaṇa (may purify himself) by austerities.

102. He who desires to remove by austerities the guilt of stealing the gold (of a Brâhmaṇa), shall perform the penance (prescribed) for the slayer of a Brâhmaṇa, (living) in a forest and dressed in (garments made of) bark.

103. By these penances a twice-born man may remove the guilt incurred by a theft (of gold); but he may atone for connexion with a Guru's wife by the following penances.

104. He who has violated his Guru's bed, shall,

100-101. See above, VIII, 314-316.

101. At the end of the verse Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand., and K. read vâ instead of tu (Medh.(?) editions), which is variously explained. According to Nâr. and Nand., it means 'but.' Kull. thinks that it indicates that, while a Brâhmaṇa must never be slain by the king, other Âryans also may perform austerities. According to Râgh., it refers to the optional recitation of the Gâyatrî, repeated 700,000 times; according to Nâr., to other penances, even such as end in death. But Gov. is probably right in assuming that 'the austerities' meant are those prescribed in the next verse.

102. Âp. I, 25, 10; Yâgñ. III, 258; Vi. LII, 3. According to Nâr., this verse refers to an 'unintentional' offence; according to Kull. and Râgh., to the theft of a small sum.

104-107. Âp. I, 25, 1-2, 10; 28, 15-18; Gaut. XXIII, 8-12; after confessing his crime, extend himself on a heated iron bed, or embrace the red-hot image (of a woman); by dying he becomes pure;

105. Or, having himself cut off his organ and his testicles and having taken them in his joined hands, he may walk straight towards the region of Nirriti (the south-west), until he falls down (dead);

106. Or, carrying the foot of a bedstead, dressed in (garments of) bark and allowing his beard to grow, he may, with a concentrated mind, perform during a whole year the Krikkhra (or hard, penance), revealed by Pragâpati, in a lonely forest;

107. Or, controlling his organs, he may during three months continuously perform the lunar penance, (subsisting) on sacrificial food or barley-gruel, in order to remove (the guilt of) violating a Guru's bed.

108. By means of these penances men who have committed mortal sins (Mahâpâtaka) may remove their guilt, but those who committed minor offences, causing loss of caste, (Upapâtaka, can do it) by the various following penances.

Vas. XX, 13-14; Baudh. II, 1, 13-15; Vi. XXXIV, 2; LIII, 1; Yâgñ. III, 259-260.

104. According to Medh., the term 'Guru' denotes here 'the teacher or the father;' according to Kull., Nâr., and Râgh., 'the father;' and Nâr. particularly excludes an offence with a step-mother.

106. According to Medh., Kull., Râgh., this penance expiates incest committed by mistake; according to Nâr., the rule applies to the case when the offence was committed with a stepmother. Regarding the Krikkhra penance, see below, verse 212.

107. According to Medh. and Râgh., the rule refers to an offence committed with the wife of a paternal or of a maternal uncle, or of other minor Gurus; according to Kull., to an offence with an unfaithful or low-caste wife of a Guru. Regarding the lunar penance or Kândrâyana, see below, verse 217.

108. Nâr. takes mahâpâtakinaḥ, 'those who committed mortal

109. He who has committed a minor offence by slaying a cow (or bull) shall drink during (the first) month (a decoction of) barley-grains; having shaved all his hair, and covering himself with the hide (of the slain cow), he must live in a cow-house.

110. During the two (following) months he shall eat a small (quantity of food) without any factitious salt at every fourth meal-time, and shall bathe in the urine of cows, keeping his organs under control.

111. During the day he shall follow the cows and, standing upright, inhale the dust (raised by their hoofs); at night, after serving and worshipping them, he shall remain in the (posture, called) vīrāsana.

112. Controlling himself and free from anger, he must stand when they stand, follow them when they walk, and seat himself when they lie down.

113. (When a cow is) sick, or is threatened by danger from thieves, tigers, and the like, or falls, or sticks in a morass, he must relieve her by all possible means:

114. In heat, in rain, or in cold, or when the wind blows violently, he must not seek to shelter himself, without (first) sheltering the cows according to his ability.

115. Let him not say (a word), if a cow eats (anything) in his own or another's house or field or on the threshing-floor, or if a calf drinks (milk).

116. The slayer of a cow who serves cows in this sins, in the sense of 'those equal to mortal sinners,' i.e. those offenders who have been enumerated above, verse 56 seq.

109-117. Āp. I, 26, 1; Gaut. XXII, 18; Vi. L, 16-24; Yāgy. III, 263-264.

111. 'In the (posture, called) vīrāsana,' i.e. 'seated without leaning against a wall or the like' (Kull., Nand.).

manner, removes after three months the guilt which he incurred by killing a cow.

117. But after he has fully performed the penance, he must give to (Brâhmaṇas) learned in the Veda ten cows and a bull, (or) if he does not possess (so much property) he must offer to them all he has.

118. Twice-born men who have committed (other) minor offences (Upapâtaka), except a student who has broken his vow (Avakīrṇin), may perform, in order to purify themselves, the same penance or also a lunar penance.

119. But a student who has broken his vow shall offer at night on a crossway to Nirṛiti a one-eyed ass, according to the rule of the Pākayagñas.

120. Having offered according to the rule oblations in the fire, he shall finally offer (four) oblations of clarified butter to Vâta, to Indra, to the teacher (of the gods, Bṛihaspati) and to Agni, reciting the Rik verse 'May the Maruts grant me,' &c.

121. Those who know the Veda declare that a voluntary effusion of semen by a twice-born (youth) who fulfils the vow (of studentship constitutes) a breach of that vow.

122. The divine light which the Veda imparts to

117. Yâgñ. III, 265.

118-124. Âp. I, 26, 8; Gaut. XXV, 1-4; Vas. XXIII, 1-4; Baudh. II, 1, 30-35; Vi. XXVIII, 49-50; Yâgñ. III, 280.

118. According to Nâr. and Nand., the lunar penance is to be performed if the offence was committed unintentionally.

119. 'According to the rule of the Pākayagñas,' i. e. 'according to the Parukalpa, found in Âsvalâyana's and other Grihya Sûtras,' Âsv. Gri. Sûtras I, 11 (Nâr.).

120. The verse is found Taittirîya Âraṇyaka II, 18, 4.

122. I read with Medh., Gov., and K., marutaḥ, instead of mârutam (Nand., editions).

the student, enters, if he breaks his vow, the Maruts, Puruhûta (Indra), the teacher (of the gods, Bṛihaspati) and Pāvaka (Fire).

123. When this sin has been committed, he shall go begging to seven houses, dressed in the hide of the (sacrificed) ass, proclaiming his deed.

124. Subsisting on a single (daily meal that consists) of the alms obtained there and bathing at (the time of) the three savanas (morning, noon, and evening), he becomes pure after (the lapse of) one year.

125. For committing with intent any of the deeds which cause loss of caste (Gâtibhramsakara), (the offender) shall perform a Sântapana Krikkhra; (for doing it) unintentionally, (the Krikkhra) revealed by Pragâpati.

126. As atonement for deeds which degrade to a mixed caste (Samkara), and for those which make a man unworthy to receive gifts (Apâtra), (he shall perform) the lunar (penance) during a month; for (acts) which render impure (Malintkaranîya) he shall scald himself during three days with (hot) barley-gruel.

127. One-fourth (of the penance) for the murder of a Brâhmana is prescribed (as expiation) for (intentionally) killing a Kshatriya, one-eighth for

125. Regarding the offences called Gâtibhramsakara, see above, verse 68. The Sântapana Krikkhra is described below, verse 213.

126. Regarding the three classes of offences, see above, 69-71. The penance of subsisting on barley-gruel is described Vi. XLVIII; Baudh. III, 6.

127-131. Âp. I, 24, 1-4; Gaut. XXII, 14-16; Vas. XX, 31-33; Baudh. I, 19, 1-2; II, 8-10; Vi. L, 12-14; Yâgñ. III, 266-267.

127. The word 'virtuous' is, according to the commentators, to be understood with 'a Kshatriya' and 'a Vaisya,' and the rule killing a Vaisya ; know that it is one-sixteenth for killing a virtuous Sûdra.

128. But if a Brâhmana unintentionally kills a Kshatriya, he shall give, in order to purify himself, one thousand cows and a bull ;

129. Or he may perform the penance prescribed for the murderer of a Brâhmana during three years, controlling himself, wearing his hair in braids, staying far away from the village, and dwelling at the root of a tree.

130. A Brâhmana who has slain a virtuous Vaisya, shall perform the same penance during one year, or he may give one hundred cows and one (bull).

(verse 66), according to which the murder of a Sûdra, a Vaisya, and a Kshatriya is an Upapâtaka, to be expiated by a three months' Govrata or a lunar penance, refers to the cases of persons who do not live in accordance with the sacred law.

128. I read with Medh., Gov., Kull. (commentary), Nand., K., suddhyartham âtmanaḥ, instead of suḥaritavrataḥ (editions), which latter reading is evidently wrong.

129. According to Medh. and Râgh., this verse is merely a repetition of the rule given in verse 127. But others, mentioned by him, Gov., Kull., and Nâr., think that the special observances prescribed during the twelve years' penance, e. g. carrying a skull instead of a flag, which this verse does not expressly mention, need not be kept. Nand. reads dvyabdam, 'two years,' instead of tryabdam.

130. I read with Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand., and K. dadyâd vaikasatam, instead of dadyâḥkaikasatam (Medh., editions, and probably mentioned by Nâr.). According to Gov. and Kull. the two penances are to be performed optionally, in case a virtuous Vaisya has been killed unintentionally. Râgh. seems to hold the same opinion. But Medh. says that the first penance is to be performed for the murder of a Vaisya who was less distinguished than the one referred to in verse 127. Nâr. finally thinks that the verse refers to a Vaisya engaged in the performance of a sacrifice, and that the

131. He who has slain a Sûdra, shall perform that whole penance during six months, or he may also give ten white cows and one bull to a Brâhmaṇa.

132. Having killed a cat, an ichneumon, a blue jay, a frog, a dog, an iguana, an owl, or a crow, he shall perform the penance for the murder of a Sûdra ;

133. Or he may drink milk during three days, or walk one hundred yoganas, or bathe in a river, or mutter the hymn addressed to the Waters.

134. For killing a snake, a Brâhmaṇa shall give a spade of black iron, for a eunuch a load of straw and a mâsha of lead ; particle vâ, 'or,' takes the place of the copula, and thus one penance only is prescribed.

131. Gov. and Kull. hold that these penances, too, are to be performed in the case of an unintentional homicide. Medh. explains sitâh, 'white,' to mean 'not white in colour, but (called so) because they resemble in purity (white substances), and give much milk and are accompanied by their calves.'

132. Âp. I, 25, 13 ; Gaut. XXII, 19 ; Vas. XXI, 24 ; Vi. L, 30-32 ; Yâgñ. III, 270. Gov., Kull., Nand. expressly state that the penance for the murder of a Sûdra is to be performed for intentionally (thus also Nâr.) killing any single one of these animals, while Medh. thinks that the rule holds good only if one has killed all of them. The penance intended is, according to Gov., Kull., Nâr., and Râgh., not that mentioned in the preceding verse, but the lunar penance (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or the Govrata (Gov., Kull.), or the Tapta Krikhṛa (Nâr.).

133. According to Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh., these penances are to be performed if the animal has been killed unintentionally ; according to Medh. they serve to expiate the slaughter of a single animal. The choice among the four penances depends according to Kull. and Râgh. on the strength of the offender, according to Gov. and Nâr. on his caste and other circumstances. 'A yogana,' i. e. $2\frac{1}{2}$ -9 miles. The hymn mentioned is found Rig-veda X, 9.

134. Gaut. XXII, 23, 25 ; Vi. L, 34-35 ; Yâgñ. III, 273. 'A Brâhmaṇa,' i. e. 'even a Brâhmaṇa' (Nâr.). The recipient of the gift is in every case a Brâhmaṇa.

135. For a boar a pot of clarified butter, for a partridge a drona of sesamum-grains, for a parrot a calf two years old, for a crane (a calf) three years old.

136. If he has killed a Hamsa, a Balāka, a heron, a peacock, a monkey, a falcon, or a Bhāsa, he shall give a cow to a Brāhmaṇa.

137. For killing a horse, he shall give a garment, for (killing) an elephant, five black bulls, for (killing) a goat, or a sheep, a draught-ox, for killing a donkey, (a calf) one year old;

138. But for killing carnivorous wild beasts, he shall give a milch-cow, for (killing) wild beasts that are not carnivorous, a heifer, for killing a camel, one krishṇala.

139. For killing adulterous women of the four castes, he must give, in order to purify himself, respectively a leathern bag, a bow, a goat, or a sheep.

140. A twice-born man, who is unable to atone by gifts for the slaughter of a serpent and the other (creatures mentioned), shall perform for each of them, a Krikkhra (penance) in order to remove his guilt.

141. But for destroying one thousand (small)

135. Gaut. XXII, 24; Vi. L, 36-39; Yāgñ. III, 271, 273-274. Kumbha, 'a pot,' i. e. 'of 200 palas' (Nâr.). A drona, i. e. four âdhakas (Medh.), or 128 palas (Nâr.).

136. Vi. L, 33; Yāgñ. III, 272.

137. Vi. L, 25-28; Yāgñ. III, 271, 274.

138. Vi. L, 29, 40-41; Yāgñ. III, 272-273. 'A krishṇala,' i. e. 'of gold' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Nand., Râgh.).

139. Gaut. XXII, 26; Yāgñ. III, 268. 'Respectively,' i. e. according to the order of the castes. Râgh. adds 'unintentionally.'

140. Yāgñ. III, 274; Vas. XXI, 26.

141. Gaut. XXII, 20-21; Âp. I, 26, 2; Vas. XXI, 25; Vi. L, 46; animals that have bones, or a whole cart-load of boneless (animals), he shall perform the penance (prescribed) for the murder of a Sûdra.

142. But for killing (small) animals which have bones, he should give some trifle to a Brâhmaṇa; if he injures boneless (animals), he becomes pure by suppressing his breath (prāṇâyāma).

143. For cutting fruit-trees, shrubs, creepers, lianas, or flowering plants, one hundred Rikas must be muttered.

144. (For destroying) any kind of creature, bred in food, in condiments, in fruit, or in flowers, the expiation is to eat clarified butter.

145. If a man destroys for no good purpose plants produced by cultivation, or such as spontaneously spring up in the forest, he shall attend a cow during one day, subsisting on milk alone.

146. The guilt incurred intentionally or unintentionally by injuring (created beings) can be removed by means of these penances; hear (now, how) all Yâgñ. III, 269. '(Small) animals that have bones,' i. e. 'lizards and the like' (Gov., Kull., Nâr.).

142. Vi. L, 47; Yâgñ. III, 275; Gaut. XXII, 22. The rule refers in each case to the destruction of a single animal (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or of a number less than that mentioned in the preceding verse (Nâr.). 'Something,' i. e. one para (Nâr.) or 'eight handfuls of grain' (Nand.).

143. Vi. L, 48; Yâgñ. III, 276. According to Kull. this penance must be performed for an offence committed once and unintentionally, because 'the cutting of green trees' has been declared above, verse 65, to be an Upapâtaka for which at least a lunar penance has to be performed. 'One hundred Rikas,' 'the Gâyatrî and the like' (Kull.), or 'the Gâyatrî one hundred times' (Nâr.).

144. Vi. L, 49; Yâgñ. III, 275. Rasa, 'condiments,' i. e. 'molasses, butter-milk and the like' (Medh., Gov., Kull.).

145. Vi. L, 50; Yâgñ. III, 144.

(sins) committed by partaking of forbidden food (or drink, can be expiated).

147. He who drinks unintentionally (the spirituous liquor, called) Vāruṇī, becomes pure by being initiated (again); (even for drinking it) intentionally (a penance) destructive to life must not be imposed; that is a settled rule.

148. He who has drunk water which has stood in a vessel used for keeping (the spirituous liquor, called) Surâ, or other intoxicating drinks, shall drink during five (days and) nights (nothing but) milk in which the Saṅkha (plant) has been boiled.

147. Âp. I, 25, 10; Gaut. XXIII, 2; Vas. XX, 19; Baudh. II, 1, 19; Vi. LI, 1, 4; Yâgy. III, 255. 'Vāruṇī,' i. e. 'liquor distilled from molasses or Mauâ flowers (gaudī mādhvī ka), not that distilled from ground grain, because another penance has been prescribed above, verse 93' (Medh., Gov.). The other commentators agree with this explanation, as well as with the additional rule that a Tapta Krikkhṛa must be performed before the second initiation. Râgh. and Kull. quote also the Bhaviṣyapurâṇa, which gives the same interpretation. The explanation of the second part of the verse is everywhere that which the translation follows except in Medh.'s and Nand.'s commentaries, where it is rendered '(for drinking even these two kinds of Surâ) intentionally (this penance) must not be prescribed, (but) one whereby death ensues.' In my opinion the commentators are totally wrong. I think that Vāruṇī means here, as elsewhere, Surâ, and that the first half of the verse prescribes the performance of a second initiation after the penance, mentioned in verse 93, has been performed, while the second line teaches that the intentional drinking of Surâ can be expiated by death alone. I would therefore propose, 'If a man unintentionally drinks Surâ, he becomes pure only by being initiated again; but (the guilt of him who drinks it) intentionally, cannot be expiated, it remains as long as he lives, that is a settled rule.' The correctness of my interpretation of the words anirdesyam prâṇāntikam follows from Gaut. XXI, 7.

148. Vas. XX, 21; Vi. LI, 23-24; Baudh. II, 1, 22.

149. He who has touched spirituous liquor, has given it away, or received it in accordance with the rule, or has drunk water left by a Sûdra, shall drink during three days water in which Kusa-grass has been boiled.

150. But when a Brâhmaṇa who has partaken of Soma-juice, has smelt the odour exhaled by a drinker of Surâ, he becomes pure by thrice suppressing his breath in water, and eating clarified butter.

151. (Men of) the three twice-born castes who have unintentionally swallowed ordure or urine, or anything that has touched Surâ, must be initiated again.

152. The tonsure, (wearing) the sacred girdle, (carrying) a staff, going to beg, and the vows (incumbent on a student), are omitted on the second initiation of twice-born men.

153. But he who has eaten the food of men, whose food must not be eaten, or the leavings of women and Sûdras, or forbidden flesh, shall drink barley(-gruel) during seven (days and) nights.

149. 'According to the rule,' i. e. 'pronouncing a benediction (on the giver),' (Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.), or 'at a Sautrâmanî sacrifice' (Nand.).

150. Gaut. XXIII, 6; Vi. LI, 25.

151. Gaut. XXIII, 3; Vas. XX, 20; Vi. LI, 2; Yâgy. III, 235.

152. Vas. XX, 18; Baudh. II, 1, 20; Vi. LI, 5. 'The vows,' i. e. 'serving the fire, avoiding meat, honey and so forth' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), and 'the Veda-vows' (Nâr.).

153. Vas. XIV, 33; Vi. LI, 50, 54, 56. See above, IV, 222, where another penance is prescribed for unknowingly eating food given by persons whose food must not be eaten. According to Kull. the two penances may be performed optionally, but according to Medh. and Nâr. this rule refers to an offence committed intentionally.

154. A twice-born man who has drunk (fluids that have turned) sour, or astringent decoctions, becomes, though (these substances may) not (be specially) forbidden, impure until they have been digested.

155. A twice-born man, who has swallowed the urine or ordure of a village pig, of a donkey, of a camel, of a jackal, of a monkey, or of a crow, shall perform a lunar penance.

156. He who has eaten dried meat, mushrooms growing on the ground, or (meat, the nature of) which is unknown, (or) such as had been kept in a slaughter-house, shall perform the same penance.

157. The atonement for partaking of (the meat of) carnivorous animals, of pigs, of camels, of cocks, of crows, of donkeys, and of human flesh, is a Tapta Krikkhra (penance).

158. If a twice-born man, who has not returned

154. 'Astringent decoctions,' i.e. 'those known to physicians are prepared from various herbs' (Medh.). Râgh. and Nand. think that pîtvâmedhyânyapi stands for pîtvâ amedhyâni api, and explain amedhya by 'garlic and the like.'

156. Vi. LI, 27, 34. Gov. and Râgh. take agñâtam, 'the nature of which is unknown,' to mean 'unintentionally.' Râgh. takes bhaumâni, 'growing on the ground,' separately, and interprets kavakâni, 'mushrooms,' by 'mushrooms growing on trees.' But Medh. says 'the word bhaumâni is used in order to exclude those growing in the holes (of trees) from the prohibition,' while Nâr. thinks that according to another Smṛiti another penance, the Prasṛitiyâvaka, shall be performed for eating the latter.

157. Gaut. XXIII, 4-5; Vas. XXIII, 30; Vi. LI, 3-4. With respect to this verse and the preceding one, see also above, V, 19-21, where other penances are prescribed. Kull. and Râgh. think that this rule refers to an offence committed once, while those given in the fifth chapter apply to a relapse. Regarding the Tapta Krikkhra, see below, verse 215.

158. Vi. LI, 43-44. The commentators state that the term

(home from his teacher's house), eats food, given at a monthly (Śrāddha), he shall fast during three days and pass one day (standing) in water.

159. But a student who on any occasion eats honey or meat, shall perform an ordinary Krikkhra (penance), and afterwards complete his vow (of studentship).

160. He who eats what is left by a cat, by a crow, by a mouse (or rat), by a dog, or by an ichneumon, or (food) into which a hair or an insect has fallen, shall drink (a decoction of) the Brahmasuvarṅalā (plant).

161. He who desires to be pure, must not eat forbidden food, and must vomit up such as he has eaten unintentionally, or quickly atone for it by (various) means of purification.

162. The various rules respecting penances for eating forbidden food have been thus declared; hear now the law of those penances which remove the guilt of theft.

māsika, 'a monthly (Śrāddha),' refers to a so-called Ekoddishā Śrāddha. According to Medh., 'others' thought that, because a student is allowed to partake of a Śrāddha by II, 189, the inviter should perform the penance. According to Medh., the student shall on the fourth day stand in water; but according to Gov., Kull., on one of the three fast days; according to Nār., on the first.

159. Vi. LI, 45; Vas. XXIII, 12; Yāgñ. III, 282. Instead of brahmaṅgārī, 'a student,' Medh., Gov., Nār., and Nand. read vratāṅgārī, 'a man performing a vow,' and Nār. explains it by 'a student, a hermit, a widow, an ascetic and so forth,' while the other commentators refer the term to a student alone.

160. Vi. LI, 46; Vas. XXIII, 11. 'Food into which an insect or a hair has fallen,' i. e. 'without scattering earth on it' (Gov., Kull., Rāgh.). Nār. adds during one day.

161. Gaut. XXIII, 26. 'Means of purification,' i. e. 'penances' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Rāgh.), or 'purgative decoctions' ('others,' Medh., Nār., Nand.).

163. The chief of the twice-born, having voluntarily stolen (valuable) property, grain, or cooked food, from the house of a caste-fellow, is purified by performing Krikkhra (penances) during a whole year.

164. The lunar penance has been declared to be the expiation for stealing men and women, and (for wrongfully appropriating) a field, a house, or the water of wells and cisterns.

165. He who has stolen objects of small value from the house of another man, shall, after restoring the (stolen article), perform a Sâmtapana Krikkhra for his purification.

166. (To swallow) the five products of the cow (pañkagavya) is the atonement for stealing eatables of various kinds, a vehicle, a bed, a seat, flowers, roots, or fruit.

163. Vi. LII, 5. According to Medh. and Nâr. it is meant that others stealing the same articles from caste-fellows must perform the same penance. Medh., Gov., Kull., Nand., and Nâr. think that the verse gives the extreme limit of the penance, and that under special circumstances it may be reduced.

164. Vi. LII, 6. 'Men and women,' i. e. 'slaves' (Medh.). Râgh. mentions a var. lect. tadâgânâm, 'or a tank,' instead of galânâm, 'of the water.' Nâr. and Râgh. think that the penance is intended for an offence committed unintentionally.

165. Vi. LII, 7. 'Objects of small value,' i. e. 'earthen vessels, wooden ones, e. g. a trough, or iron utensils, e. g. a hoe' (Medh.), or 'tin, lead and the like' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 'straw and the like' (Nâr.). K. omits 'after restoring,' and reads tatpâpasya visudhaye, 'for the expiation of that sin.'

166. Vi. LII, 8. Medh. says that the penance is to last one day only. Nâr. thinks that the Mahâsâmtapana penance is indicated by the mention of the pañkagavya, and that this holds good in the case of an unintentional offence only. Nand. adds, 'With this and the following rules the words "after restoring the property" have still their force;' so also Kull. on verse 165.

167. Fasting during three (days and) nights shall be (the penance for stealing) grass, wood, trees, dry food, molasses, clothes, leather, and meat.

168. To subsist during twelve days on (uncooked) grains (is the penance for stealing) gems, pearls, coral, copper, silver, iron, brass, or stone.

169. (For stealing) cotton, silk, wool, an animal with cloven hoofs, or one with uncloven hoofs, a bird, perfumes, medicinal herbs, or a rope (the penance is to subsist) during three days (on) milk.

170. By means of these penances, a twice-born man may remove the guilt of theft; but the guilt of approaching women who ought not to be approached (agamyâ), he may expiate by (the following) penances.

171. He who has had sexual intercourse with sisters by the same mother, with the wives of a friend, or of a son, with unmarried maidens, and with females of the lowest castes, shall perform the penance, prescribed for the violation of a Guru's bed.

167. Vi. LII, 9. According to Nâr. the rule refers to an unintentional offence.

168. Vi. LII, 10. According to Medh. the penance may be shortened according to the special circumstances of the case. Nâr. says, 'This refers to cases when the theft is not committed in times of distress.'

169. Vi. LII, 11. According to Nâr. this rule holds good if the theft is committed in times of distress and very small quantities are taken. Gov. and Kull. observe on this verse and the preceding ones, that the apparent inequality of the penances, which are prescribed equally for great and small things, will disappear if special circumstances, such as the frequency of the offence, time and place, the character of the owner and so forth, are taken into account.

171. Gaut. XXIII, 12-13, 32; Vas. XX, 15-16; Baudh. II, 1, 13; Vi. XXXIV, 2; XXXVI, 7; LIII, 1; Yâgñ. III, 233. See also above, verse 59. According to Medh., Gov., Kull., and Râgh., the penance to be performed is that mentioned above in verse 106, while self-immolation is prescribed for repeated intentional offences only. Nâr. speaks of a twelve years' penance.

172. He who has approached the daughter of his father's sister, (who is almost equal to) a sister, (the daughter) of his mother's sister, or of his mother's full brother, shall perform a lunar penance.

173. A wise man should not take as his wife any of these three; they must not be wedded because they are (Sapindā-)relatives, he who marries (one of them), sinks low.

174. A man who has committed a bestial crime, or an unnatural crime with a female, or has had intercourse in water, or with a menstruating woman, shall perform a Sāmtapana Krikkhṛa.

175. A twice-born man who commits an unnatural offence with a male, or has intercourse with a female in a cart drawn by oxen, in water, or in the day-time, shall bathe, dressed in his clothes.

176. A Brāhmaṇa who unintentionally approaches a woman of the Kandāla or of (any other) very low caste, who eats (the food of such persons) and accepts

172. I read with all the commentators and K. in the second line mātus ka bhrātur āptasya (āptām ka, Nand.) instead of mātus ka bhrātus tanayām (editions). According to Kull. and Nār. the rule refers to an offence committed by mistake and, as the former says, once only.

173. This verse is directed against the custom of the southerners, mentioned by Baudh. I, 2, 3. 'Sinks low,' i.e. 'falls into hell or begets base-born offspring' (Medh.). Gov. and Kull. adopt the former explanation, while Nār. says 'he becomes an outcast.'

174. Gaut. XXII, 36; XXIII, 34; Vi. LIII, 4, 7; Yāgñ. III, 288. A bestial crime with a cow is excepted, see Vi. LIII, 3. Medh. mentions a var. lect., gale khe ka, instead of gale kaiva, which agrees with Vishnu's text.

175. Vi. LIII, 4; Yāgñ. III, 291. Nār. says that the verse refers to an unintentional offence.

176. Vas. XXIII, 41; Baudh. II, 4, 13-14; Vi. LIII, 5-6. 'Very low caste,' i.e. 'Mlekkhas or barbarians, Sabaras and so forth' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), or 'Sūtas and the like' (Nār.), or 'Gavanas (presents from them) becomes an outcast ; but (if he does it) intentionally, he becomes their equal.

177. An exceedingly corrupt wife let her husband confine to one apartment, and compel her to perform the penance which is prescribed for males in cases of adultery.

178. If, being solicited by a man (of) equal (caste), she (afterwards) is again unfaithful, then a Krikkhra and a lunar penance are prescribed as the means of purifying her.

179. The sin which a twice-born man commits by dallying one night with a Vrishali, he removes in three years, by subsisting on alms and daily muttering (sacred texts).

180. The atonement (to be performed) by sinners (of) four (kinds) even, has been thus declared ; hear now the penances for those who have intercourse with outcasts.

181. He who associates with an outcast, himself becomes an outcast after a year, not by sacrificing

(i. e. Mahommedans) and the like' (Râgh.). In the first case the penance for a Patita must be performed ; in the second, no penance can be prescribed.

177. Vas. XXI, 8, 12-13 ; Vi. LIII, 8. Adultery is an Upapâ-taka according to verse 60, and to be expiated, according to verse 118, by a Govrata or a Kândrâyana, which latter seems to be here intended. The commentators add that the penance must be lighter or heavier, according to the caste of the male offender.

178. I read with Gov., Nâr. upamantritâ instead of upayantritâ (editions, K., Nand.). Medh. seems to have read anumantritâ.

179. Âp. I, 27, 11 ; Baudh. II, 2, 11 ; Vi. LIII, 9. 'A Vrishali,' i. e. a Kandâli (Medh., Kull., Râgh.). But others, mentioned by Medh., Gov., and Nâr., think that a Sûdra female is meant. Nand. places this verse before verse 178.

181. Gaut. XXI, 3 ; Vas. I, 22 ; Baudh. II, 2, 35 ; Yâgy. III, 261 ; Vi. XXXV, 3-5. Gov. and Nâr. explain the verse differently, 'He who associates with an outcast by sacrificing for him or by forming for him, teaching him, or forming a matrimonial alliance with him, but by using the same carriage or seat, or by eating with him.

182. He who associates with any one of those outcasts, must perform, in order to atone for (such) intercourse, the penance prescribed for that (sinner).

183. The Sapindas and Samānodakas of an outcast must offer (a libation of) water (to him, as if he were dead), outside (the village), on an inauspicious day, in the evening and in the presence of the relatives, officiating priests, and teachers.

184. A female slave shall upset with her foot a pot filled with water, as if it were for a dead person; (his Sapindas) as well as the Samānodakas shall be impure for a day and a night;

185. But thenceforward it shall be forbidden to converse with him, to sit with him, to give him a share of the inheritance, and to hold with him such intercourse as is usual among men;

186. And (if he be the eldest) his right of primogeniture shall be withheld and the additional share, a matrimonial alliance with him, himself becomes an outcast after a year, but not by using the same carriage or seat or eating with him.' In the latter case four years are required. The parallel passage of Vishṇu shows, however, clearly what is meant.

182. Vi. LIV, 1.

183-186. Gaut. XX, 4-7; Vas. XV, 12-16; Baudh. II, 1, 36; Yāgñ. III, 295.

183. 'In the presence of the relatives, &c.,' i. e. 'of those who perform the ceremony, not of those of the outcast' (Medh.).

184. 'As if it were for a dead person,' i. e. 'saying, "This is for N. N."' (Medh.), 'turning to the south' (Gov., Kull., Nâr., Nand., Râgh.).

185. I prefer K.'s reading nivarterams tatas tasmât. According to Medh. 'others' explained dâyâdya, 'a share of the inheritance,' by 'money,' and thought that all sums due to him were to be given to his heirs.

due to the eldest son; and in his stead a younger brother, excelling in virtue, shall obtain the share of the eldest.

187. But when he has performed his penance, they shall bathe with him in a holy pool and throw down a new pot, filled with water.

188. But he shall throw that pot into water, enter his house and perform, as before, all the duties incumbent on a relative.

189. Let him follow the same rule in the case of female outcasts; but clothes, food, and drink shall be given to them, and they shall live close to the (family-)house.

190. Let him not transact any business with unpurified sinners; but let him in no way reproach those who have made atonement.

191. Let him not dwell together with the murderers of children, with those who have returned evil for good, and with the slayers of suppliants for protection or of women, though they may have been purified according to the sacred law.

192. Those twice-born men who may not have been taught the Sâvitṛī (at the time) prescribed by the rule, he shall cause to perform three Krikkhra (penances) and afterwards initiate them in accordance with the law.

187-188. Gaut. XX, 10-14; Vas. XV, 17-21; Baudh. II, 1, 36; Yâgñ. III, 296.

188. Thus Gov., Kull., Râgh., and others quoted by Medh. But the latter commentator himself refers sa tu, 'but he,' to one of the relatives, and Nâr. seems to agree with him.

189. Yâgñ. III, 297.

190-191. Vi. LIV, 32-33; Yâgñ. III, 299.

192. Âp. I, 1, 23-2, 10; Vas. XI, 76-79; Vi. LIV, 26. Regarding the times of the initiation, see above, II, 38.

193. Let him prescribe the same (expiation) when twice-born men, who follow forbidden occupations or have neglected (to learn) the Veda, desire to perform a penance.

194. If Brāhmaṇas acquire property by a reprehensible action, they become pure by relinquishing it, muttering prayers, and (performing) austerities.

195. By muttering with a concentrated mind the Sāvitrī three thousand times, (dwelling) for a month in a cow-house, (and) subsisting on milk, (a man) is freed from (the guilt of) accepting presents from a wicked man.

196. But when he returns from the cow-house, emaciated with his fast, and reverently salutes, (the Brāhmaṇas) shall ask him, 'Friend, dost thou desire to become our equal?'

197. If he answers to the Brāhmaṇas, 'Forsooth, (I will not offend again),' he shall scatter (some) grass for the cows; if the cows hallow that place (by eating the grass) the (Brāhmaṇa) shall re-admit him (into their community).

193. Vi. LIV, 27.

194. Vi. LIV, 24, 28; Yâgñ. III, 290. 'By a reprehensible action,' i.e. 'by receiving presents from wicked men or, according to others, by acquiring money in any manner forbidden to him. The latter extend the rule to other Âryans' (Medh.). Gov., Kull., and Nâr. refer the verse to Brāhmaṇas and to their accepting presents from wicked men and similar acts.

195. Medh. remarks that according to some the offender shall daily recite the Gâyatrī three thousand times, according to others three thousand times in the whole month.

196-197. Yâgñ. III, 300.

197. The beginning of the verse is explained differently by Nâr. and Nand.: 'If he tells the truth to the Brāhmaṇas, i.e. with respect to his offence and his penance.' Medh. takes tīrtha in its usual sense, 'a bathing-place,' and connects it with pratigrahaṁ kuryuḥ,

198. He who has sacrificed for Vrātyas, or has performed the obsequies of strangers, or a magic sacrifice (intended to destroy life) or an Ahīna sacrifice, removes (his guilt) by three *Krikkh*ra (penances).

199. A twice-born man who has cast off a suppliant for protection, or has (improperly) divulged the Veda, atones for his offence, if he subsists during a year on barley.

200. He who has been bitten by a dog, a jackal, or a donkey, by a tame carnivorous animal, by a man, a horse, a camel, or a (village-)pig, becomes pure by suppressing his breath (Prāṇāyāma).

201. To eat during a month at each sixth meal-time (only), to recite the Samhitā (of a Veda), and (to perform) daily the Sākala oblations, are the means of purifying those excluded from society at repasts (Apāṅktya).

‘they shall re-admit at the bathing-place.’ Nār. says it means vya-vahāravartman. The translation follows Gov., Kull., and Rāgh.

198. Āp. I, 26, 7; Vi. LIV, 25; Yāgñ. III, 289. Vrātyas, see above, X, 20. ‘A magic rite (intended to destroy life),’ i.e. ‘a Syena sacrifice and the like.’ The Ahīna sacrifices are those lasting between two and twelve days; see Weber, Ind. Stud. X, 355. Medh. thinks that the rule refers to the person who offers the sacrifices (yagamāna), while others mentioned by him hold that it applies to the officiating priests.

199. Yāgñ. III, 289. Vedaṃ viplāvya, ‘having (improperly) divulged the Veda,’ i.e. ‘having taught people who ought not to be taught’ (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nand.), means according to Nār. ‘having improperly interpreted the Veda or perverted its sense by omitting Anusvāras, Visargas, and the like,’ according to Rāgh. ‘having intentionally forgotten it.’

200. Gaut. XXIII, 7; Vas. XXIII, 31; Vi. LIV, 12; Yāgñ. III, 277. ‘A tame carnivorous animal,’ i.e. ‘a cat, an ichneumon, and so forth’ (Medh., Gov., Kull., Rāgh.). Nār. reads agrāmyaiḥ (grāmyaiḥ) kravyādbhiḥ, and gives as an instance ‘a wolf.’

201. Regarding the Apāṅktyas, elsewhere called Pāṅktidūṣhas,

202. A Brāhmaṇa who voluntarily rode in a carriage drawn by camels or by asses, and he who bathed naked, become pure by suppressing his breath (Prāṇâyâma).

203. He who has relieved the necessities of nature, being greatly pressed, either without (using) water or in water, becomes pure by bathing outside (the village) in his clothes and by touching a cow.

204. Fasting is the penance for omitting the daily rites prescribed by the Veda and for neglecting the special duties of a Snâtaka.

205. He who has said 'Hum' to a Brāhmaṇa, or has addressed one of his betters with 'Thou,' shall bathe, fast during the remaining part of the day, and appease (the person offended) by a reverential salutation.

206. He who has struck (a Brāhmaṇa) even with a blade of grass, tied him by the neck with a cloth, or conquered him in an altercation, shall appease him by a prostration.

'defilers of the company,' see above, III, 151 seq. Nâr. remarks that this penance is to be performed by those only for whom no other expiation is specially prescribed. The Sâkala-homas are oblations offered with the eight verses Vâgasaneyi-saṃhitâ VIII, 13.

202. Vi. LIV, 23; Yâgñ. III, 291. Medh. and Kull. remark that he who rides on the back of camels or donkeys has to perform more than one Prāṇâyâma.

203. Vi. LIV, 10. 'Outside the village,' i.e. 'in a river or the like' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.).

204. Vi. LIV, 29. The rules for a Snâtaka are those given in the fourth chapter. The daily rites are the Agnihotra and so forth. The fasting is to last one day (Medh., Kull., Nâr.).

205. Yâgñ. III, 292. 'One's betters ought to be addressed with "You"' (Medh.).

206. Yâgñ. III, 292. See above, IV, 166. Gov. and Nâr. say, 'a Brāhmaṇa more venerable than himself.'

207. But he who, intending to hurt a Brāhmaṇa, has threatened (him with a stick and the like) shall remain in hell during a hundred years; he who (actually) struck him, during one thousand years.

208. As many particles of dust as the blood of a Brāhmaṇa causes to coagulate, for so many thousand years shall the shedder of that (blood) remain in hell.

209. For threatening a Brāhmaṇa, (the offender) shall perform a Krikkhra, for striking him an Atikrikkhra, for shedding his blood a Krikkhra and an Atikrikkhra.

210. For the expiation of offences for which no atonement has been prescribed, let him fix a penance after considering (the offender's) strength and the (nature of the) offence.

211. I will (now) describe to you those means, adopted by the gods, the sages, and the manes, through which a man may remove his sins.

212. A twice-born man who performs (the Krikkhra penance), revealed by Praṣāpati, shall eat during three days in the morning (only), during (the next) three days in the evening (only), during the (following) three days (food given) unasked, and shall fast during another period of three days.

207–208. See above, IV, 165, 167–169, where slightly different versions of these verses occur. I read with all the commentators and K. dvīganmanaḥ, 'of a Brāhmaṇa,' instead of mahitale, 'on the ground' (editions).

209. Vi. LIV, 30; Yāgñ. III, 293. Medh. points out that these offences have already been dealt with above in verses 67 and 125, and thinks that the penance prescribed in the latter verse may be performed optionally instead of those mentioned here.

210. Vi. LIV, 34; Yāgñ. III, 294.

212. Âp. I, 27, 7; Gaut. XXVI, 2–5; Vas. XXI, 20; Baudh. II,

213. (Subsisting on) the urine of cows, cowdung, milk, sour milk, clarified butter, and a decoction of Kusa-grass, and fasting during one (day and) night, (that is) called a Sântapana Krikkhra.

214. A twice-born man who performs an Atikrikkhra (penance), must take his food during three periods of three days in the manner described above, (but) one mouthful only at each meal, and fast during the last three days.

215. A Brâhmana who performs a Taptakrikkhra (penance) must drink hot water, hot milk, hot clarified butter and (inhale) hot air, each during three days, and bathe once with a concentrated mind.

216. A fast for twelve days by a man who controls himself and commits no mistakes, is called a Parâka Krikkhra, which removes all guilt.

217. If one diminishes (one's food daily by) one

2, 38; IV, 5, 6-7; Vi. XLVI, 10; Yâgñ. III, 320. According to Medh., food which a wife brings unasked is also 'food given unasked.'

213. Baudh. IV, 5, 13; Vi. XLVI, 19; Yâgñ. III, 313. There are two ways of performing this penance: Either the penitent may eat the six substances during one day and fast on the next, or he may subsist one day on each of the six and fast on the seventh day (Medh., Gov.). The other commentators give the first explanation only.

214. Gaut. XXV, 18-19; Vas. XXIV, 1-2; Baudh. II, 2, 40; IV, 5, 8; Yâgñ. III, 320. 'Above,' i.e. in verse 213.

215. Vas. XXI, 18; Baudh. II, 2, 37; IV, 5, 10; Vi. XLVI, 11; Yâgñ. III, 318.

216. Baudh. IV, 5, 15; Vi. XLVI, 18; Yâgñ. III, 221. 'Commits no mistakes,' i.e. 'with respect to the general rules to be followed during the performance of a Krikkhra,' see Vas. XXIV, 5 (Medh., Nâr.).

217-226. Gaut. XXVII; Vas. XXIV, 45-47; XXVII, 21; Baudh. III, 8; IV, 5, 17-21; Vi. XLVII; Yâgñ. III, 324-327.

217. The form of the lunar penance described in this verse is mouthful during the dark (half of the month) and increases (it in the same manner) during the bright half, and bathes (daily) at the time of three libations (morning, noon, and evening), that is called a lunar penance (Kândrâyana).

218. Let him follow throughout the same rule at the (Kândrâyana, called) yavamadhyama (shaped like a barley-corn), (but) let him (in that case) begin the lunar penance, (with a) controlled (mind), on the first day of the bright half (of the month).

219. He who performs the lunar penance of ascetics, shall eat (during a month) daily at midday eight mouthfuls, controlling himself and consuming sacrificial food (only).

220. If a Brâhmaṇa, with concentrated mind, eats (during a month daily) four mouthfuls in a morning and four after sunset, (that is) called the lunar penance of children.

221. He who, concentrating his mind, eats during a month in any way thrice eighty mouthfuls of sacrificial food, dwells (after death) in the world of the moon.

222. The Rudras, likewise the Âdityas, the Vasus and the Maruts, together with the great sages, practised this (rite) in order to remove all evil.

223. Burnt oblations, accompanied by (the recitation of) the Mahâvyâhṛitis, must daily be made (by the so-called pipplikâmadhya or ant-shaped one, where the fast or lean days lie in the middle.

218. It will be advisable to read with Medh. and Gov., in the second line, ĵaret instead of ĵaran. Gov. has ĵaran in the first line. Nand. reads the last words quite differently, (niyatas) kândrâyam athâparam.

221. 'In any way,' i. e. 'without observing any particular limit as to the number of mouthfuls to be eaten on each day' (Nâr.).

the penitent) himself, and he must abstain from injuring (sentient creatures), speak the truth, and keep himself free from anger and from dishonesty.

224. Let him bathe three times each day and thrice each night, dressed in his clothes; let him on no account talk to women, Sûdras, and outcasts.

225. Let him pass the time standing (during the day) and sitting (during the night), or if he is unable (to do that) let him lie on the (bare) ground; let him be chaste and observe the vows (of a student) and worship his Gurus, the gods, and Brâhmaṇas.

226. Let him constantly mutter the Sâvitṛī and (other) purificatory texts according to his ability; (let him) carefully (act thus) on (the occasion of) all (other) vows (performed) by way of penance.

227. By these expiations twice-born men must be purified whose sins are known, but let him purify those whose sins are not known by (the recitation of) sacred texts and by (the performance of) burnt oblations.

224. Medh. remarks that the penitent may however talk to the female members of his household, if an occasion requires it.

225. Vratī syât, 'observe the vows (of a student),' i. e. 'wear the girdle of Muṣṣa-grass, a staff and so forth' (Gov., Kull. Nâr.), means according to Medh. 'let him resolve to abstain from that which is not forbidden by good men.'

226. 'Purificatory texts,' i. e. 'the Aghamarshaṇa, the Pâvamânīs and so forth;' see Vi. LVI. '(Other) vows,' i. e. 'the Kṛikkṛas.'

227. Vas. XXV, 3. Penances are usually imposed by a parishad, an assembly of learned Brâhmaṇas. In the case of secret sins the penances shall be settled by the learned in a general way, not with reference to a special case. By this interpretation the commentators get over the difficulty which the reading sodhayet, 'let him purify,' offers. But Nâr. reads anāvishkṛitapâpâs tu mantrair homais ka sodhanaiḥ, 'but those whose sins are not known, by sacred texts and burnt oblations, (declared to be) means of purification.'

228. By confession, by repentance, by austerity, and by reciting (the Veda) a sinner is freed from guilt, and in case no other course is possible, by liberality.

229. In proportion as a man who has done wrong, himself confesses it, even so far he is freed from guilt, as a snake from its slough.

230. In proportion as his heart loathes his evil deed, even so far is his body freed from that guilt.

231. He who has committed a sin and has repented, is freed from that sin, but he is purified only by (the resolution of) ceasing (to sin and thinking) 'I will do so no more.'

232. Having thus considered in his mind what results will arise from his deeds after death, let him always be good in thoughts, speech, and actions.

233. He who, having either unintentionally or intentionally committed a reprehensible deed, desires to be freed from (the guilt of) it, must not commit it a second time.

234. If his mind be uneasy with respect to any act, let him repeat the austerities (prescribed as a penance) for it until they fully satisfy (his conscience).

235. All the bliss of gods and men is declared by the sages to whom the Veda was revealed, to have

228. Âpadi, 'in case no other course is possible,' i.e. 'if the offender is unable to perform penances or to recite Vedic texts.'

230. 'His body,' i. e. 'the soul in his body' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nand.), or 'the subtle body' (Nâr.).

231. Instead of naivam, 'so no (more),' Nâr. reads nainaḥ ('I will) not sin (any more),' and K.'s reading nainam points to the same var. lect. Gov., Nand., and the best MS. of Medh. read naitat kuryât punar iti, and the translation would then be 'but he is purified (only) by ceasing (to sin), thereby that he does so no more.'

235. 'To have austerity for its root, austerity for its middle, and austerity for its root, austerity for its middle, and austerity for its end.

236. (The pursuit of sacred) knowledge is the austerity of a Brâhmaṇa, protecting (the people) is the austerity of a Kshatriya, (the pursuit of) his daily business is the austerity of a Vaisya, and service the austerity of a Sûdra.

237. The sages who control themselves and subsist on fruit, roots, and air, survey the three worlds together with their moving and immovable (creatures) through their austerities alone.

238. Medicines, good health, learning, and the various divine stations are attained by austerities alone; for austerity is the means of gaining them.

239. Whatever is hard to be traversed, whatever is hard to be attained, whatever is hard to be reached, whatever is hard to be performed, all (this) may be accomplished by austerities; for austerity (possesses a power) which it is difficult to surpass.

240. Both those who have committed mortal sin (Mahâpâtaka) and all other offenders are severally freed from their guilt by means of well-performed austerities.

241. Insects, snakes, moths, bees, birds and beings, bereft of motion, reach heaven by the power of austerities.

austerity for its end,' i. e. 'to be produced, to continue, and to end in consequence of austerities performed' (Medh., Kull., Nâr.).

238. Medh. explains aushadhâni, 'medicines,' by 'elixirs.' Instead of agado (Kull., K., Râgh.) Medh., Gov., Nâr., and Nand. read agadâh, and explain it by 'medicines' (Medh., Nand.), 'remedies or charms against poison' (Gov., Nâr.).

241. Instead of ki/âs ka, 'insects,' Nâr. reads svânas ka, 'dogs.' Gov. and Nand. say that the verse refers to the Kî/opâkhyâna and the Kapotâkhyâna, told in the Iuhâsas (Mahâbhârata XII).

242. Whatever sin men commit by thoughts, words, or deeds, that they speedily burn away by penance, if they keep penance as their only riches.

243. The gods accept the offerings of that Brâhmana alone who has purified himself by austerities, and grant to him all he desires.

244. The lord, Pragâpati, created these Institutes (of the sacred law) by his austerities alone ; the sages likewise obtained (the revelation of) the Vedas through their austerities.

245. The gods, discerning that the holy origin of this whole (world) is from austerity, have thus proclaimed the incomparable power of austerity.

246. The daily study of the Veda, the performance of the great sacrifices according to one's ability, (and) patience (in suffering) quickly destroy all guilt, even that caused by mortal sins.

247. As a fire in one moment consumes with its bright flame the fuel that has been placed on it, even so he who knows the Veda destroys all guilt by the fire of knowledge.

248. The penances for sins (made public) have been thus declared according to the law ; learn next the penances for secret (sins).

249. Sixteen suppressions of the breath (Prânâyâma) accompanied by (the recitation of) the Vyâhr̥itis

245. I read with all the commentators and K. at the end of the verse, udbhavam, instead of uttamam (editions).

246. Vas. XXVII, 7 ; Yâgñ. III, 311.

247. Vas. XXVII, 1-2.

248. Kull. and Râgh. state that Gov. omits this verse, while Medh. gives it. The accessible MS. of Gov., however, shows it, but without a commentary. Medh. says only that 'some' read it. Nâr. and Nand. omit it.

249. Vas. XXVI, 4 ; Vi. LV, 5 ; Baudh. IV, 1, 29. The best and of the syllable Om, purify, if they are repeated daily, after a month even the murderer of a learned Brâhmana.

250. Even a drinker of (the spirituous liquor called) Surâ becomes pure, if he mutters the hymn (seen) by Kutsa, 'Removing by thy splendour our guilt, O Agni,' &c., (that seen) by Vasishtha, 'With their hymns the Vasishthas woke the Dawn,' &c., the Mâhitra (hymn) and (the verses called) Suddhavatis.

251. Even he who has stolen gold, instantly becomes free from guilt, if he once mutters (the hymn beginning with the words) 'The middlemost brother of this beautiful, ancient Hotri-priest' and the Sivasamkalpa.

252. The violator of a Guru's bed is freed (from sin), if he repeatedly recites the Havishpântiya (hymn), (that beginning) 'Neither anxiety nor misfortune,' (and that beginning) 'Thus, verily, thus,' and mutters the hymn addressed to Purusha.

253. He who desires to expiate sins great or explanation of the words 'accompanied by (the recitation of) the Vyâhr̥tis and (of) the syllable Om' is Nâr.'s, who asserts that they indicate the necessity of reciting the Gâyatrî with the Siras text during the performance of each Prânâyâma; see Vas. XXV, 13.

250. Vas. XXVI, 5. The hymn seen by Kutsa, i. e. Rig-veda I, 97; that seen by Vasishtha, i. e. Rig-veda VII, 80. The Mâhitra hymn, i. e. Rig-veda X, 185. The Suddhavatis, i. e. Rig-veda VIII, 84, 7-9. Medh., Gov., Nâr., and K. read mâhendram for mâhitram, and Nâr. adds that some give the latter reading. The hymns are to be recited during a month sixteen times (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), or 108 times a day (Nâr.).

251. Vas. XXVI, 6. The hymn is found Rig-veda I, 164; the Sivasamkalpa, Vâg. Samh. XXXIV, 1. 'Once,' i. e. 'once daily during a month' (Gov., Kull., Nâr.).

252. Vas. XXVI, 7; Yâgy. III, 305. The four hymns are Rig-veda X, 88; X, 126; X, 119; and X, 90.

253. The two verses are found Rig-veda I, 24, 14, and VII, 89, 5.

small, must mutter during a year the Rik-verse 'May we remove thy anger, O Varuṇa,' &c., or 'Whatever offence here, O Varuṇa,' &c.

254. That man who, having accepted presents which ought not to be accepted, or having eaten forbidden food, mutters the Taratsamandīya (Rikas), becomes pure after three days.

255. But he who has committed many sins, becomes pure, if he recites during a month the (four verses) addressed to Soma and Rudra, and the three verses (beginning) 'Aryaman, Varuṇa, and Mitra,' while he bathes in a river.

256. A grievous offender shall mutter the seven verses (beginning with) 'Indra,' for half a year; but he who has committed any blamable act in water, shall subsist during a month on food obtained by begging.

257. A twice-born man removes even very great guilt by offering clarified butter with the sacred texts belonging to the Sākala-homas, or by muttering the Rik, (beginning) 'Adoration.'

258. He who is stained by mortal sin, becomes pure, if, with a concentrated mind, he attends cows for a year, reciting the Pāvamāṇī (hymns) and subsisting on alms.

254. Gaut. XXIV, 2-3; Baudh. IV, 2, 4-5. The verses are found Rig-veda IX, 58, 1-4.

255. The verses are found Rig-veda VI, 74, 1-4, and IV, 2, 4-6.

256. The verses are found Rig-veda I, 106, 1-7.

257. The Mantras for the Sākala-homas, i.e. Vâg. Samh. VIII, 13. The verse is found Rig-veda VI, 51, 8. According to Nâr. the Mantras must be muttered 108 times.

258. The Pāvamāṇī hymns, i.e. the ninth Mandala of the Rig-veda.

259. Or if, pure (in mind and in body), he thrice repeats the Samhitâ of the Veda in a forest, sanctified by three Parâka (penances), he is freed from all crimes causing loss of caste (pâtaka).

260. But if (a man) fasts during three days, bathing thrice a day, and muttering (in the water the hymn seen by) Aghamarshana, he is (likewise) freed from all sins causing loss of caste.

261. As the horse-sacrifice, the king of sacrifices, removes all sin, even so the Aghamarshana hymn effaces all guilt.

262. A Brâhmaṇa who retains in his memory the Rig-veda is not stained by guilt, though he may have destroyed these three worlds, though he may eat the food of anybody.

263. He who, with a concentrated mind, thrice recites the Riksamhitâ, or (that of the) Yagur-veda, or (that of the) Sâma-veda together with the secret(texts, the Upanishads), is completely freed from all sins.

264. As a clod of earth, falling into a great lake, is quickly dissolved, even so every sinful act is engulfed in the threefold Veda.

265. The Rikas, the Yagus(-formulas) which differ (from the former), the manifold Sâman(-songs), must

259. 'The Samhitâ,' i. e. the Mantras and Brâhmaṇas (Kull., Râgh.), the former alone (Nâr.). 'Parâka penances,' see above, verse 216. The verse seems to refer to the Anasnatpârâyana, fully described by Baudh. III, 9.

260-261. Gaut. XXIV, 10-12; Vas. XXVI, 8; Baudh. III, 5; IV, 2, 15; Vi. LV, 7; Yâgy. III, 302. The Aghamarshana is found Rig-veda X, 190.

262. Vas. XXVII, 3.

263. Baudh. IV, 5, 29.

264. I read with Gov., Nand., and K. pr. manu 'kshipram' instead of 'kshiptam' (Medh., K. sec. manu, editions).

265. Medh. and Gov. read âdyâni, 'chief,' instead of anyâni, 'which differ.' Medh. explains it as 'either those found in the be known (to form) the triple Veda ; he who knows them, (is called) learned in the Veda.

266. The initial triliteral Brahman on which the threefold (sacred science) is based, is another triple Veda which must be kept secret ; he who knows that, (is called) learned in the Veda.

CHAPTER XII.

1. 'O sinless One, the whole sacred law, (applicable) to the four castes, has been declared by thee ; communicate to us (now), according to the truth, the ultimate retribution for (their) deeds.'

2. To the great sages (who addressed him thus) righteous Bhṛigu, sprung from Manu, answered, 'Hear the decision concerning this whole connexion with actions.'

3. Action, which springs from the mind, from speech, and from the body, produces either good or evil results ; by action are caused the (various) conditions of men, the highest, the middling, and the lowest.

4. Know that the mind is the instigator here

Samhitâ, not those read in the Brâhmaṇa or those recited according to the Samhitâpâṭha, not those recited according to the Pada or Kramapâṭhas.' Gov. gives the first explanation only.

266. K. omits this verse, and inserts in its stead the following lines:

esha vo vadita[bhihita]s sarvaḥ prâyaścittavinirṇayaḥ । naiḥsreyasaṁ karmavidhim viprasayitam nibodhata ॥
ataḥ param pravakshyâmi saṁsâraavidhim uttamam ।

Nand. gives the first two lines after verse 266, reading, however, ityeshâ(?)bhihitaḥ.

XII. 1. Râgh. takes tattvataḥ parâm separately and explains the second line as follows : 'communicate to us (now) the retribution for (their) deeds (and) supreme (liberation, which springs) from (the recognition of) truth.'

4. 'Of three kinds,' i.e. 'good, middling, or bad.' 'Has three below, even to that (action) which is connected with the body, (and) which is of three kinds, has three locations, and falls under ten heads.

5. Coveting the property of others, thinking in one's heart of what is undesirable, and adherence to false (doctrines), are the three kinds of (sinful) mental action.

6. Abusing (others, speaking) untruth, detracting from the merits of all men, and talking idly, shall be the four kinds of (evil) verbal action.

7. Taking what has not been given, injuring (creatures) without the sanction of the law, and holding criminal intercourse with another man's wife, are declared to be the three kinds of (wicked) bodily action.

8. (A man) obtains (the result of) a good or evil mental (act) in his mind, (that of) a verbal (act) in his speech, (that of) a bodily (act) in his body.

9. In consequence of (many) sinful acts committed with his body, a man becomes (in the next birth) something inanimate, in consequence (of sins) com-locations,' i. e. 'the mind, speech, and the body.' 'Falls under ten heads,' i. e. 'those mentioned in verses 5-7.' The mind, which is here called the instigator, is the internal organ, which has the faculty of samkalpa, 'volition.'

5. 'Thinking in one's heart what is undesirable,' means according to Medh. either 'thinking of or wishing anything that may be injurious to others or what is forbidden.' Gov. and Nâr. give the first explanation, the other commentators the second. Others mentioned by Medh. explained vitathâbhinivesam, 'adherence to false doctrines' (i. e. the denial of a future state, of the authority of the Vedas and so forth), by 'a constant deep hatred.' In their remarks on this verse and the next two, the commentators point out that the opposites of the acts mentioned are the different kinds of good actions.

5-9. Yâgñ. III, 131, 134-136.

mitted by speech, a bird, or a beast, and in consequence of mental (sins he is re-born in) a low caste.

10. That man is called a (true) tridandīn in whose mind these three, the control over his speech (vâg-danda), the control over his thoughts (manodanda), and the control over his body (kâyadanda), are firmly fixed.

11. That man who keeps this threefold control (over himself) with respect to all created beings and wholly subdues desire and wrath, thereby assuredly gains complete success.

12. Him who impels this (corporeal) Self to action, they call the Kshetragñā (the knower of the field); but him who does the acts, the wise name the Bhûtâtman (the Self consisting of the elements).

13. Another internal Self that is generated with all embodied (Kshetragñās) is called Gīva, through which (the Kshetragñā) becomes sensible of all pleasure and pain in (successive) births.

10. Usually an ascetic who wears three staves (danda) tied together, is called a tridandīn. According to our verse this outward sign avails nothing. That man only deserves the name tridandīn who keeps a threefold control (danda) over himself.

11. 'Complete success,' i. e. 'final liberation.'

12. 'This (corporeal) Self,' i. e. 'the body' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), or 'the gross visible body which includes the three sheaths' (Râgh., Nâr.). 'The Kshetragñā (the knower of the field),' i. e. 'the individual Soul (Gīva),' (Medh. on verse 13, Nâr.), the Paramâtman (Nand.); Râgh. quotes, in explanation of the term 'the field,' Bhagavadgītā XIII, 5-6. 'The Bhûtâtman (the Self consisting of the elements),' i. e. 'the body which is composed of or a modification of the elements, i. e. of earth and so forth' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), 'the Self which has the form of the non-sentient, the elements and so forth' (Nâr.), or 'the Gīva' (Nand.).

13. According to Medh. 'some' understand by the term Gīva 'the subtle body (liṅga sarīra) which is overspread by Mahat, the Great One,' because the individual soul, which is usually called

14. These two, the Great One and the Kshetragña, who are closely united with the elements, pervade him who resides in the multiform created beings.

Giva, has been mentioned in verse 12 under the appellation Kshetragña. He adds that 'others' explain Giva by 'the internal organ, which has the form of mind, intelligence, and egoism.' The former view is adopted by Râgh., while Gov., who paraphrases Giva by manaḥ, 'the mind,' and Kull. as well as Nâr., who render it by 'Mahat,' 'the Great One or intelligence,' lean towards the second. Nand. says, 'givasamgñāḥ means "he who fully knows the Givas," i. e. the omniscient.' Sahagaḥ, 'that is generated with,' means according to Medh. and Gov. 'that is associated with until the period of destruction (pralaya) or until final liberation is obtained.'

14. The term mahân, 'the Great One,' is referred by Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh. to the Giva mentioned in the preceding verse, and hence is explained by each in accordance with the view expressed on verse 13. Bhûtasampṛiktau, 'closely united with the elements' (Medh., Gov., Kull.), or 'enveloped by the elements' (Râgh.), means according to Nâr. 'united with the Bhûtâtman.' Sthitam tam vyâpya tish/hataḥ, 'pervade him who resides,' i. e. 'pervade' (Gov.), or 'rest on' (Kull.), or 'conceal through illusion' (Nâr.) him, i. e. 'the Paramâtman, the Supreme Soul' (Gov., Kull., Nâr.), 'who resides in all created beings' (Gov., Nâr.) 'as the witness' (Kull., Nâr.). Gov. adds 'or (the expression vyâpya tish/hataḥ) "they pervade" is used because the Supreme Soul pervades everything.' This latter explanation probably refers to Medh.'s rendering, according to which the verse must be translated 'Those two, the Great One and the Knower of the Field, who are closely united, rest on him who resides in the multiform created beings, pervading (them).' Medh. expressly declares that tish/hataḥ is to be taken as a transitive verb (sarvakarmatvam [sakarmatvam] tish/hater anekârthatvât). He explains 'him' by 'the Supreme Soul,' and adds that the expression 'rest on' is justified, because the Paramâtman is the cause of the whole world, and the product rests on its cause. Râgh. differs very much, and says, 'Those two, the Great One (i. e. the Intelligence and by implication the subtile body) and the Knower of the Field, i. e. the individual soul enveloped by the five elements (and) pervading him who is found in the manifold created beings, i. e. the gross bodies, and reside, i. e. there, as the enjoyers.' Nand. finally has the following explanation: 'Those two, i. e. the

15. From his body innumerable forms go forth, which constantly impel the multiform creatures to action.

16. Another strong body, formed of particles (of the) five (elements and) destined to suffer the torments (in hell), is produced after death (in the case) of wicked men.

17. When (the evil-doers) by means of that body have suffered there the torments imposed by Yama, (its constituent parts) are united, each according to its class, with those very elements (from which they were taken).

individual and the Supreme Soul; united with the elements, i. e. residing in the body; the Great One, i. e. the Supreme Soul and the Knower of the Field; in the manifold, i. e. in the gross and in the subtle; him who is found, i. e. the field (kshetra), pervading they reside. The meaning is that the individual soul pervades the body and the Supreme Soul pervades the individual soul.'

15. 'From his body,' i. e. 'from nature or the form of the Supreme Soul (Paramâtman, Medh., Nâr.) or from the body of Brahman which is endowed with the qualities' (Râgh.), 'like waves from the ocean or sparks from fire, in the manner mentioned in the Vedânta philosophy' (Gov., Kull.). 'Others,' mentioned by Medh., and Nand. explain the expression by 'from the root-evolvent or matter (prakṛiti) which is the body of the Supreme Soul.' Mûrtayaḥ, 'forms,' i. e. 'Kshetragñas' (Gov., Kull., Nâr.), or 'souls limited by subtle bodies' (Râgh.), or 'portions which are the causes of the production of forms' (Nand.).

16. Dhruvam, 'strong,' i. e. 'able to withstand the supernatural torments' (Medh., Kull., Râgh.). Gov. and Nand. read dridham.

17. The translation follows Medh., Gov., and Râgh., with whom Nâr. seems to agree, and it presupposes that the construction of the verse is ungrammatical. Kull. and Nand., who wish to show that Manu's text does not depart from the ordinary rules of grammar, assume that the subject of both clauses is dushkrîto givâh, 'the evil-doing souls.' The former says, 'The evil-doing souls that are subtle, having suffered by means of that produced body those torments imposed by Yama, are individually dissolved on the disappearance of the gross body, in those very constituent portions of the elements;’ the meaning is, ‘they remain being united with them.’ Nand.’s explanation is more intelligible. According to him the translation must be as follows: ‘(The individual souls) having suffered by means of that body the torments of Yama, are dissolved (on the termination of their sufferings, as far as that body is concerned), in those very (five) elements according to the proportion of their works’ (vibhāgaras tatkarmanvibhāgânurûpam). But it seems to me that these attempts to save the grammatical reputation of the author are useless.

18. He, having suffered for his faults, which are produced by attachment to sensual objects, and which result in misery, approaches, free from stains, those two mighty ones.

18. The translation follows the reading of Gov. (comm.), Kull., Nand., and Râgh., anubhūyāsukhodarkân. Medh., Gov. (text), and K. read anubhūya sukhodarkân, ‘(after the expiation) of which happiness is the result’ (Medh.). ‘He,’ i. e. ‘the individual soul’ (kshetragñā, Medh., Gov., Nand.), or ‘the individual soul limited by the subtle body’ (Kull., Râgh.), refers according to Nâr. to ‘the Great One’ (Mahân). ‘Those two mighty ones,’ i. e. ‘the Great One and the Supreme Soul’ (Medh. ‘others,’ Gov., Kull.), are according to Medh. and Râgh. ‘the Great One and the Kshetragñā’ (mentioned verse 14), according to Nâr. and Nand. (on verse 19) ‘the Giva and the Paramâtman or Supreme Soul.’ Medh. adds that under his explanation the verse looks as if it were self-contradictory, because the end to be attained and the attainer are the same, but that the distinction is merely figurative. For the expression ‘he approaches’ means ‘he becomes nothing else but that’ [i. e. after the dissolution of the body, assumed in order to suffer the punishments, he remains purely Kshetragñā and Mahân]. His words are, atah kshetragñam abhyetīti prāptam taḥ ka viruddham sa eva prāpya[h] prāpakas ka | satyam aupatāriko bhedo ’bhipretaḥ | abhyetīty ayam arthaḥ | etāvanmātrasesho bhavati yad uta kshetragñatayā prāptādisamghātmakena mahân iti vyapadish/ena phaleshu tāvanmātraḥ parishiṣyate | līngagīvas ka kshetragñāḥ || Râgh., the only other commentator, who occupies himself with the ulterior meaning of the verse, renders abhyeti, ‘he approaches,’ by anugakṣhati, ‘he follows,’ and adds ‘in order to produce a new body’ (sarīrāntarārambhāya). He further quotes Satapatha-brāhmaṇa XIV, 7, 2, 5, in order to show that according to the Veda the individual soul, united with the subtle body, makes for itself another body.

19. Those two together examine without tiring the merit and the guilt of that (individual soul), united with which it obtains bliss or misery both in this world and the next.

20. If (the soul) chiefly practises virtue and vice to a small degree, it obtains bliss in heaven, clothed with those very elements.

21. But if it chiefly cleaves to vice and to virtue in a small degree, it suffers, deserted by the elements, the torments inflicted by Yama.

22. The individual soul, having endured those torments of Yama, again enters, free from taint, those very five elements, each in due proportion.

23. Let (man), having recognised even by means of his intellect these transitions of the individual soul (which depend) on merit and demerit, always fix his heart on (the acquisition of) merit.

24. Know Goodness (sattva), Activity (ragas), and Darkness (tamas) to be the three qualities of the

19. 'Those two,' i. e. 'the Great One and the Supreme Soul' (mahatparamâtmânau, Gov., Kull.), are according to Medh., who modifies the explanation given on the preceding verse, the Mahân and the Paramâtman; according to Râgh., the Mahân and the Kshetragña. Pasyatah, 'examine,' means according to Râgh. 'by their presence cause to be performed.' 'The guilt,' i. e. 'which remains after the sufferings (in hell,' Kull.). Nand. explains the first line very differently: 'Those two (merit and demerit) watchfully attend him (the Kshetragña) who is bent on performing good and evil.' 'United with which,' i. e. 'with merit and guilt' (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nand.), refers in Râgh.'s opinion to the Mahân and the Kshetragña.

20. 'With those very elements,' i. e. 'with a gross body consisting of the before-mentioned five elements.'

21. 'Deserted by the elements,' i. e. 'after death' (Kull., Nâr.).

22. Medh. and K. read abhyeti for apyeti.

24. Yâgñ. III, 182. 'Of the Self,' i. e. 'of the Mahat' (Kull.,

Self, with which the Great One always completely pervades all existences.

25. When one of these qualities wholly predominates in a body, then it makes the embodied (soul) eminently distinguished for that quality.

26. Goodness is declared (to have the form of) knowledge, Darkness (of) ignorance, Activity (of) love and hatred; such is the nature of these (three) which is (all-)pervading and clings to everything created.

27. When (man) experiences in his soul a (feeling) full of bliss, a deep calm, as it were, and a pure light, then let him know (that it is) among those three (the quality called) Goodness.

28. What is mixed with pain and does not give satisfaction to the soul one may know (to be the quality of) Activity, which is difficult to conquer, and which ever draws embodied (souls towards sensual objects).

Râgh., Nâr., Nand.), the latter two saying mahattattvasya, 'of the (Sâmkhya) principle, called Mahat.' Medh.'s somewhat longer discussion arrives at the same result.

25. 'In a body,' i. e. 'in a subtile body' (Râgh.). Medh. and Gov. add to the first clause 'in consequence of acts done in a former life.'

26. Kull. takes etat, 'such,' in the sense of 'as follows.' Nâr. and Nand. take the last line somewhat differently: 'The nature of these three is pervaded by the (three characteristics just mentioned and) clings to all created beings.'

27. 'A (feeling) full of bliss,' i. e. 'without any particular cause for such a sensation' (Gov.). I take tatra, which Gov. and Kull. explain by tasmin and construe with âtmani, in the sense of teshu, 'among those three.' Râgh. says tatreti tribhiḥ.

28. Medh. has apratipam, which he explains by apratyaksham, 'not perceptible by the senses,' instead of apratigham, 'difficult to conquer.'

29. What is coupled with delusion, what has the character of an undiscernible mass, what cannot be fathomed by reasoning, what cannot be fully known, one must consider (as the quality of) Darkness.

30. I will, moreover, fully describe the results which arise from these three qualities, the excellent ones, the middling ones, and the lowest.

31. The study of the Vedas, austerity, (the pursuit of) knowledge, purity, control over the organs, the performance of meritorious acts and meditation on the Soul, (are) the marks of the quality of Goodness.

32. Delighting in undertakings, want of firmness, commission of sinful acts, and continual indulgence in sensual pleasures, (are) the marks of the quality of Activity.

33. Covetousness, sleepiness, pusillanimity, cruelty, atheism, leading an evil life, a habit of soliciting favours, and inattentiveness, are the marks of the quality of Darkness.

29. I follow Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh., and K., who read avyakta-vishayâtmakam instead of avyaktaṁ vishayâtmakam (Nand., editions). Medh.'s reading is doubtful. 'What is coupled with delusion,' i. e. 'where it is impossible to decide if the (thing) is real or unreal' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.). Avyaktavishayâtmakam, 'what has the character of an undiscernible mass' (asphu/avishayâkârâsva-bhâvam, Kull., Râgh.), or 'what has the form of an undiscernible mass and the nature of which is unreal' (aspash/avishayâkârâsatsva-bhâvam, Gov.), means according to Nâr. 'where the mass and the soul are not luminous' (aprakâso vishaya âtmâ ka yatra).

31. The last words of the verse, which have been translated according to Medh., mean according to Nâr. literally '(are the result) of Goodness (and) the marks of (that) quality' (sâttvikam sattvaganyam gunasya tasyaiva lakshanam kîhnam).

32. Adhairyam, 'want of firmness,' means according to Nâr. 'want of a contented disposition.'

33. Bhinnavrittîṭā, 'leading an evil life,' i. e. 'omitting to live

34. Know, moreover, the following to be a brief description of the three qualities, each in its order, as they appear in the three (times, the present, past, and future).

35. When a (man), having done, doing, or being about to do any act, feels ashamed, the learned may know that all (such acts bear) the mark of the quality of Darkness.

36. But, when (a man) desires (to gain) by an act much fame in this world and feels no sorrow on failing, know that it (bears the mark of the quality of) Activity.

37. But that (bears) the mark of the quality of Goodness which with his whole (heart) he desires to know, which he is not ashamed to perform, and at which his soul rejoices.

38. The craving after sensual pleasures is declared to be the mark of Darkness, (the pursuit of) wealth (the mark) of Activity, (the desire to gain) spiritual according to the rule of conduct;’ pramâdah, ‘inattentiveness,’ i. e. ‘to duty.’

34. Instead of trishu, ‘in the three (times,’ Medh., Gov., Kull., Râgh.), Nand. reads nrîshu, ‘in men.’ Nâr., who reads trishu, explains the words trayânâm gunânâm, trishu as follows: ‘of the three,’ i. e. ‘of the study of the Veda and so forth;’ ‘of the gunas, i. e. ‘of the three classes of virtues;’ ‘in the three,’ i. e. ‘in the three original qualities.’

36. Nand. has rikkhati instead of ikkati. I read with Medh., Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh., and Nand., na ka sokati instead of sa ka sokati (editions). K. reads naiva. ‘And feels no sorrow on failing,’ i. e. ‘if on failing to accomplish his undertaking he begins another, but does not desist from it out of sorrow, that is the meaning’ (Râgh.).

37. Instead of yat sarvena (Gov., Kull.), Medh. and K. read yah sarvena, and Nand. sarvam yene^o. ‘Which with his whole (heart) he desires to know,’ i. e. ‘the meaning of the Veda and so forth’ (Kull., Râgh.).

merit the mark of Goodness; each later (named quality is) better than the preceding one.

39. I will briefly declare in due order what transmigrations in this whole (world a man) obtains through each of these qualities.

40. Those endowed with Goodness reach the state of gods, those endowed with Activity the state of men, and those endowed with Darkness ever sink to the condition of beasts; that is the threefold course of transmigrations.

41. But know this threefold course of transmigrations that depends on the (three) qualities (to be again) threefold, low, middling, and high, according to the particular nature of the acts and of the knowledge (of each man).

42. Immovable (beings), insects, both small and great, fishes, snakes, and tortoises, cattle and wild animals, are the lowest conditions to which (the quality of) Darkness leads.

43. Elephants, horses, Sûdras, and despicable barbarians, lions, tigers, and boars (are) the middling states, caused by (the quality of) Darkness.

44. Kâranas, Suparnas and hypocrites, Râkshasas

40. Yâgñ. III, 137-139.

41. 'Of the knowledge (of each man),' i. e. 'if the acts were committed intentionally or not' (Medh.).

42. 'Immovable (beings),' i. e. 'trees and so forth.' Paravaḥ, 'cattle,' i. e. 'cows and so forth' (Nâr.), or 'dogs and so forth' (Râgh.). Instead of sakakḥapâḥ (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), 'and tortoises,' Medh., Nâr., and Nand. read saṛisripâḥ, 'creeping things,' i. e. 'scorpions and the like' (Nâr.). Instead of mṛigâs kaiva (Gov., Kull., Râgh.), 'and wild animals (or deer),' Medh. and Nand. have srigâlâs ka, 'and jackals.'

43. Mlekḥâḥ, 'barbarians,' i. e. 'Sabaras and so forth' (Nâr.).

44. Kârana may denote a caste of men, i. e. 'bards, singers, panders, and the like' (Medh.), or 'rope-dancers' (Nâr.), or 'Naḥas' and Pisâkas (belong to) the highest (rank of) conditions among those produced by Darkness.

45. Ghallas, Mallas, Nâtas, men who subsist by despicable occupations and those addicted to gambling and drinking (form) the lowest (order of) conditions caused by Activity.

46. Kings and Kshatriyas, the domestic priests of kings, and those who delight in the warfare of disputations (constitute) the middling (rank of the) states caused by Activity.

47. The Gandharvas, the Guhyakas, and the servants of the gods, likewise the Apsarases, (belong all to) the highest (rank of) conditions produced by Activity.

48. Hermits, ascetics, Brâhmanas, the crowds of the Vaimânika deities, the lunar mansions, and the Daityas (form) the first (and lowest rank of the) existences caused by Goodness.

(Gov., Kull.); but it may also, with Râgh., be referred to a class of mythological beings. Suparnas are the bird-deities, mentioned above, I, 37.

45. Ghallas, Mallas, i. e. 'those mentioned above, X, 22 (Kull., Nâr.), who are fencers with sticks or wrestlers and jesters' (Medh., Kull.). Nâtas, i. e. 'those exhibiting themselves on the stage' (raṅgavatârakâh, Medh., Kull.). I read with Medh., Gov., Nâr., and Nand. purushâs ka kuvrittayaḥ, 'men who subsist by despicable occupations,' instead of purushâs sastravrittayaḥ, 'men living by the trade of arms' (Kull., editions).

46. With respect to the low estimation in which domestic priests are held, see the verse quoted Pañkatantra II, 63 (Bombay edition). Nand. reads dānayuddhapradhânâs ka, 'very liberal men, and those delighting in strife.'

47. Guhyakas, i. e. 'evil spirits who hurt children;' Yakshas, i. e. 'the guardians of treasures' (Nâr.). Both are demigods, servants of Kubera. 'The servants of the gods,' i. e. 'Vidyâdharas and so forth.'

48. Medh. mentions an opinion, held by 'others,' according to

49. Sacrificers, the sages, the gods, the Vedas, the heavenly lights, the years, the manes, and the Sâdhyas (constitute) the second order of existences, caused by Goodness.

50. The sages declare Brahmâ, the creators of the universe, the law, the Great One, and the Undiscernible One (to constitute) the highest order of beings produced by Goodness.

51. Thus (the result) of the threefold action, the whole system of transmigrations which (consists) of three classes, (each) with three subdivisions, and which includes all created beings, has been fully pointed out.

which the Yatis, 'ascetics,' are a people living on mount Meru. 'The Vaimânika deities,' i.e. 'those who move in mid-air with their palatial chariots, called vimânas.' Instead of Daityâh, Nâr. mentions as a var. lect. Siddhâh.

49. 'The Vedas,' i.e. 'sounds placed in a certain sequence' (Medh.), or 'the guardian deities or personifications of the Vedas, such as are described in the Itihâsas as belonging to the court of Brahman' (Medh. 'others,' Gov., Kull., Nâr., Râgh.). With respect to the next two terms the commentators vacillate whether the things mentioned or their regents (adhish/hâtrî devatâ) are intended.

50. Brahmâ, i.e. 'Hiranyagarbha' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.). 'The creators of the universe,' i.e. 'Marîçi and the rest;' see above, I, 35; 'the law,' i.e. 'either the meaning of the Veda or the incarnate law' (Medh.); according to the other commentators, the latter only. 'The Great One,' i.e. 'the deity presiding over the principle (of the Sâmkhya philosophy) called the Great One (or Intellect,' Gov., Kull., Râgh.); 'the Undiscernible One,' i.e. 'the deity presiding over the root-evolvent or chief cause of the Sâmkhya philosophy' (Gov., Kull., Râgh.). Medh., who discusses and rejects these explanations of the last two terms, holds that they refer to the Supreme Soul (paramâtman). Nâr. explains 'the Undiscernible' by 'egoism.' Medh., Gov., and K. read avyakta eva ka instead of avyaktam eva ka.

51. Medh. and K. read esha dharma, 'Thus the law with respect to the threefold action, &c.' Nand. places verse 81 immediately after this.

52. In consequence of attachment to (the objects of) the senses, and in consequence of the non-performance of their duties, fools, the lowest of men, reach the vilest births.

53. What wombs this individual soul enters in this world and in consequence of what actions, learn the particulars of that at large and in due order.

54. Those who committed mortal sins (mahâpâ-taka), having passed during large numbers of years through dreadful hells, obtain, after the expiration of (that term of punishment), the following births.

55. The slayer of a Brâhmana enters the womb of a dog, a pig, an ass, a camel, a cow, a goat, a sheep, a deer, a bird, a Kandâla, and a Pukkasa.

56. A Brâhmana who drinks (the spirituous liquor called) Surâ shall enter (the bodies) of small and large insects, of moths, of birds, feeding on ordure, and of destructive beasts.

57. A Brâhmana who steals (the gold of a Brâhmana shall pass) a thousand times (through the bodies) of spiders, snakes and lizards, of aquatic animals and of destructive Pisâkas.

58. The violator of a Guru's bed (enters) a hundred times (the forms) of grasses, shrubs, and creepers, likewise of carnivorous (animals) and of (beasts) with fangs and of those doing cruel deeds.

52. Yâgñ. III, 219. 'Fools,' i.e. 'those who do not perform penances' (Gov., Kull.).

55. Yâgñ. III, 207. Nand. reads Pulkasa, Medh. and Gov. Puñhaka with a Gihvâmûliya which looks like śh.

56. Yâgñ. III, 207.

57. Yâgñ. III, 208. 'Aquatic animals,' i.e. 'crocodiles and so forth' (Gov.). Gov. explains lûta, 'spider,' by 'scorpion.' K. omits this verse.

58. Yâgñ. III, 208. The commentators explain 'carnivorous

59. Men who delight in doing hurt (become) carnivorous (animals); those who eat forbidden food, worms; thieves, creatures consuming their own kind; those who have intercourse with women of the lowest castes, Pretas.

60. He who has associated with outcasts, he who has approached the wives of other men, and he who has stolen the property of a Brâhmaṇa become Brahmarâkshasas.

61. A man who out of greed has stolen gems, pearls or coral, or any of the many other kinds of precious things, is born among the goldsmiths.

62. For stealing grain (a man) becomes a rat, for stealing yellow metal a Hamsa, for stealing water a Plava, for stealing honey a stinging insect, for stealing milk a crow, for stealing condiments a dog, for stealing clarified butter an ichneumon;

63. For stealing meat a vulture, for stealing fat a cormorant, for stealing oil a winged animal (of the (animals)' by 'vultures and the like,' '(beasts) with fangs' by 'lions or tigers and the like.' 'Those doing cruel deeds' are, according to Gov., 'men such as Sabaras;' according to Kull., 'animals such as tigers.'

59. 'Creatures consuming their own kind,' i.e. 'fish and the like.' Nand. places verse 60 before verse 59.

60. Yâgñ. III, 212. 'A Brahmarâkshasa,' lit. 'a Brâhmanical Râkshasa,' is an evil spirit. K. omits this verse.

61. Yâgñ. III, 213. According to another explanation, which Medh. considers the only admissible one, and which the other commentators mention as an alternative, hemakartṛi, 'a goldsmith,' is the name of a bird.

62. Yâgñ. III, 214, 215; Vi. XLIV, 15-20. Rasam, 'condiments,' i.e. the juice of sugar-cane, &c. (Kull.), means according to Nâr. 'quicksilver.'

63. Yâgñ. III, 211, 215; Vi. XLIV, 21-25. I read with Medh., Gov., and Nand., vasâm, 'fat,' instead of vapâm (Kull., editions); kind called) Tailapaka, for stealing salt a cricket, for stealing sour milk a bird (of the kind called) Balākā.

64. For stealing silk a partridge, for stealing linen a frog, for stealing cotton-cloth a crane, for stealing a cow an iguana, for stealing molasses a flying-fox ;

65. For stealing fine perfumes a musk-rat, for stealing vegetables consisting of leaves a peacock, for stealing cooked food of various kinds a porcupine, for stealing uncooked food a hedgehog.

66. For stealing fire he becomes a heron, for stealing household-utensils a mason-wasp, for stealing dyed clothes a francolin-partridge ;

67. For stealing a deer or an elephant a wolf, for stealing a horse a tiger, for stealing fruit and roots a monkey, for stealing a woman a bear, for stealing water a black-white cuckoo, for stealing vehicles a camel, for stealing cattle a he-goat.

68. That man who has forcibly taken away any kind of property belonging to another, or who has eaten sacrificial food (of) which (no portion) had been offered, inevitably becomes an animal.

which latter word Nār. also gives, but explains by medaḥ. The Tailapaka is probably the cockroach. Kṛivāka, 'a cricket,' may also mean 'a cicada.' Nand. reads Kakravāka, 'a Brāhmaṇī duck.'

64. Yāgñ. III, 215 ; Vi. XLIV, 25-30. Regarding Vāgguda, 'the flying-fox,' see note on Gaut. XVII, 34. Rāgh. confirms the explanation given there, as he says that it is a bird flying at night. Medh. and Nand. seem to have had a different reading at the end of the verse. The MSS. of the former have krauṇko godhā māmsāshu valgutīḥ (?), and that of the latter godhā gavyam dado sallam (?).

65. Yāgñ. III, 213 ; Vi. XLIV, 31-34.

66. Yāgñ. III, 214-215 ; Vi. XLIV, 35-37.

67. Yāgñ. III, 214 ; Vi. XLIV, 38-43.

68. Yāgñ. III, 217 ; Vi. XLIV, 44.

69. Women, also, who in like manner have committed a theft, shall incur guilt; they will become the females of those same creatures (which have been enumerated above).

70. But (men of the four) castes who have relinquished without the pressure of necessity their proper occupations, will become the servants of Dasyus, after migrating into despicable bodies.

71. A Brâhmaṇa who has fallen off from his duty (becomes) an Ulkâmukha Preta, who feeds on what has been vomited; and a Kshatriya, a Kaṭapûṭana (Preta), who eats impure substances and corpses.

72. A Vaisya who has fallen off from his duty becomes a Maitrâkshagryotika Preta, who feeds on pus; and a Sûdra, a Kailâsaka (Preta, who feeds on moths).

69. Vi. XLIV, 45. 'In like manner,' i. e. 'intentionally' (Gov., Kull.).

70. I follow Medh., Gov., Nâr., Nand., Râgh., and K., who read dasyushu instead of satrushu, 'of their enemies' (editions). Gov. explains dasyushu by satrushu, and the same explanation is given by Kull.; while according to Medh., 'thieves and robbers' are meant; and according to Nâr., 'forest-tribes, such as Sabaras.' Nand. reads pretatâm (MS. prenatâm) for preshyatâm, and explains it by 'will become Pisâkas among the Dasyus.' His reading looks like a correction made on account of the next verses.

71. Ulkâmukha, i. e. 'with flaming mouth' (Medh.). Medh. prefers Kûṭapûṭana, 'with a stinking nose,' to Kaṭapûṭana (Kull., Nâr., Râgh., Nand., K.). Gov. reads Kaṭapûṭana.

72. Maitrâkshagryotika is, according to Medh., Kull., and Râgh., to be explained as a kind of Preta who has a light in or sees with the anus. Medh. gives another explanation, according to which it simply means 'a Preta,' and adds that 'others' explain it by 'an owl.' Kailâsaka, 'a (Preta) who feeds on moths' (Gov.), means according to Kull., 'who feeds on body-lice.' Kailâsaka is the reading of Gov., Nâr., and Nand.

73. In proportion as sensual men indulge in sensual pleasures, in that same proportion their taste for them grows.

74. By repeating their sinful acts those men of small understanding suffer pain here (below) in various births ;

75. (The torture of) being tossed about in dreadful hells, Tâmisra and the rest, (that of) the Forest with sword-leaved trees and the like, and (that of) being bound and mangled ;

76. And various torments, the (pain of) being devoured by ravens and owls, the heat of scorching sand, and the (torture of) being boiled in jars, which is hard to bear ;

77. And births in the wombs (of) despicable (beings) which cause constant misery, and afflictions from cold and heat and terrors of various kinds,

78. The (pain of) repeatedly lying in various wombs and agonizing births, imprisonment in fetters hard to bear, and the misery of being enslaved by others,

79. And separations from their relatives and dear ones, and the (pain of) dwelling together with the wicked, (labour in) gaining wealth and its loss, (trouble in) making friends and (the appearance of) enemies,

80. Old age against which there is no remedy, the

73. I follow Medh. and Gov., who explain kusalatâ, literally 'cleverness' (Kull., Râgh.), by ekarasiḥhâvaḥ.

75-76. See above, IV, 88-89 ; Yâgñ. III, 206, 221-225.

76. Medh. reads karambhavâlukâs taptâḥ, and explains karambhaḥ by karmadaḥ (kardamaḥ ?), 'heated mud and sand (?)'. The translation follows Kull.'s and Râgh.'s notes. Medh., Gov., Râgh., Nand., and K. read suduḥsahân, 'very hard to bear,' which has been given above, instead of dâruṣân, 'terrible' (Kull., editions).

pangs of diseases, afflictions of many various kinds, and (finally) unconquerable death.

81. But with whatever disposition of mind (a man) performs any act, he reaps its result in a (future) body endowed with the same quality.

82. All the results, proceeding from actions, have been thus pointed out; learn (next) those acts which secure supreme bliss to a Brâhmaṇa.

83. Studying the Veda, (practising) austerities, (the acquisition of true) knowledge, the subjugation of the organs, abstention from doing injury, and serving the Guru are the best means for attaining supreme bliss.

84. (If you ask) whether among all these virtuous actions, (performed) here below, (there be) one which has been declared more efficacious (than the rest) for securing supreme happiness to man,

85. (The answer is that) the knowledge of the Soul is stated to be the most excellent among all of them; for that is the first of all sciences, because immortality is gained through that.

86. Among those six (kinds of) actions (enumer-

81. E. g. if while a man performs an act his disposition is sâttvika, or 'chiefly penetrated by the quality of Goodness,' he will reap its reward in a body produced chiefly by that quality, e. g. that of a god.

83. Yâgñ. III, 190.

84. Medh. omits this verse.

85. Yâgñ. I, 199. 'The knowledge of the Soul,' i. e. not that of the Kshetragñā, but that of the Supreme Soul, which is taught in the Upanishads (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nand.), means according to Nâr., 'meditation' (dhyānam). Nand. asserts that the genitive sarveshām, 'among all,' stands in the sense of the ablative. According to him the translation should be, 'is more excellent than all those.'

86. Medh. takes the genitive shannām, 'among those six,' in the ated above, the performance of) the acts taught in the Veda must ever be held to be most efficacious for ensuring happiness in this world and the next.

87. For in the performance of the acts prescribed by the Veda all those (others) are fully comprised, (each) in its turn in the several rules for the rites.

88. The acts prescribed by the Veda are of two kinds, such as procure an increase of happiness and sense of an ablative, and according to him the translation would be, 'The acts taught in the Veda must ever be held to be more efficacious for ensuring happiness in this world and in the next than all those six (kinds of) actions (enumerated above).' He proposes two explanations for karma vaidikam. 'The acts taught in the Veda' may either be 'the Srauta rites, such as the Gyo-tish/oma,' or 'those called further on, in verses 88-89, nivṛtta,' i. e. 'rites performed as a matter of duty, without a desire for rewards.' Nand. accepts the first explanation, and so does Gov., who, however, takes the genitive in its usual sense, 'among those six.' Nār. adopts Medh.'s second explanation, and says, 'acts, taught in the Veda,' i. e. 'sacrifices and so forth, performed without the intention of (gaining) rewards,' and construes the genitives like Gov. The same construction is adopted by Kull., who explains karma vaidikam by 'the knowledge of the Supreme Soul.' Medh.'s second explanation seems to be the best, on account of verses 89 and 90, where 'knowledge,' i. e. 'the knowledge of the Supreme Soul' (see verse 85) and the performance of the nivṛttam karma are said to effect final liberation. The explanation of the genitives śannām eteshām by 'among those six' may perhaps be defended, if vaidikam karma is taken to correspond to vedābhyāsaḥ, 'studying the Veda (and obeying its rules),' in verse 83. But Medh.'s explanation of the construction is quite possible.

87. Kull. alters his explanation of vaidikam karma slightly, and interprets it by 'the worship of the Supreme Soul' (paramātmopāsanā), and quotes Bṛhadāraṇyaka-upanishad IV, 4, 22 in support of his view. The other commentators find no difficulty in showing that both 'the Srauta sacrifices' and 'the nivṛttākhyam karma' include all the six points mentioned above, verse 83. I read in the first line with K. hi instead of tu (Medh., Gov., Kull., Nand.).

88. Kull. again changes his explanation of the expression 'acts cause a continuation (of mundane existence, pravṛtta), and such as ensure supreme bliss and cause a cessation (of mundane existence, nivṛtta).

89. Acts which secure (the fulfilment of) wishes in this world or in the next are called pravṛtta (such as cause a continuation of mundane existence); but acts performed without any desire (for a reward), preceded by (the acquisition) of (true) knowledge, are declared to be nivṛtta (such as cause the cessation of mundane existence).

90. He who sedulously performs acts leading to future births (pravṛtta) becomes equal to the gods; but he who is intent on the performance of those causing the cessation (of existence, nivṛtta) indeed, passes beyond (the reach of) the five elements.

91. He who sacrifices to the Self (alone), equally recognising the Self in all created beings and all created beings in the Self, becomes (independent like) an autocrat and self-luminous.

taught in the Veda,' and takes it to mean 'sacrifices like the Gyotish/oma and the worship of images.'

89. Medh. explains gñānapūrvam, 'preceded by (the acquisition of true) knowledge,' to mean 'whereof knowledge is the chief (part,' gñānam ādyam mukhyam yasya).

90. Kull. remarks that the expression 'becomes equal to the gods' gives only an instance of the rewards attainable by kāmyāni karmāṇi. 'Passes beyond (the reach of) the five elements,' i. e. 'casts off the subtle body' (Nār.), or 'obtains final liberation' (Medh., Gov., Kull.).

91. Īśa-upanishad, 6. 'He who sacrifices to the Self (alone),' i. e. 'who connects himself with the nature of one who consists of all deities, i. e. thinks, "Not Agni, nor Āditya is the deity, I am here the deity"' (âtmanam eva sarvadevatâmayatvena yogayate | manyate nâstir [nâgnir] âdityo vâ devatâ | aham iha ka devatâ mati [ihaiva devatâ iti?], Medh., similarly Gov. and Nâr.), means according to Kull., Râgh., and Nand., 'he who performs the Gyotish/oma and the like (sacrifices) in the manner of the Brahmârpâṇa,' i. e. in such a manner that he understands Brahman to be the object of the worship, and makes over the merit to Brahman. The participial clause means, according to Medh. and Gov., thinking 'I am contained in the whole creation, both the movable and the immovable' (vyavasthitaḥ, Gov.), or 'I am, as it were, the whole world' (aham ivaitaggagat, Medh.) and 'all created beings are contained in me' (mayy avasthitâni, Gov., mayi sthitâni, Medh.). Kull., Râgh., and Nand. (who reads sampāsyān) explain it on pure Vedânta principles. The sacrificer is to recognise his identity with the Supreme Soul, and that through this identity he is one with all created beings, and that all created beings are one with him. The double rendering of the term svârâgyam is based on the double meaning of the verb râg, 'to rule' and 'to shine.' Medh. alone points it out. Kull. gives the second meaning alone, and takes the phrase a little differently: 'attains the state of the self-luminous (Brahman).' Gov., Nâr., and Nand. give Medh.'s first meaning only.

92. After giving up even the above-mentioned sacrificial rites, a Brâhmaṇa should exert himself in (acquiring) the knowledge of the Soul, in extinguishing his passions, and in studying the Veda.

93. For that secures the attainment of the object of existence, especially in the case of a Brâhmaṇa, because by attaining that, not otherwise, a twice-born man has gained all his ends.

94. The Veda is the eternal eye of the manes, gods, and men ; the Veda-ordinance (is) both beyond the sphere of (human) power, and beyond the sphere of (human) comprehension ; that is a certain fact.

92. 'Above-mentioned,' i.e. 'as securing supreme bliss' (Nand.), or 'the Agnihotra and the rest' (Medh., Gov., Kull.). The last three commentators point out that this verse is not intended to authorise an irregular discontinuance of the daily rites.

93. Nand. omits this verse. Kritakrîtyaḥ, 'has gained all his ends' (Medh.), is taken by Gov. in its other sense, 'has done all he ought to do' (krîtakaramîyaḥ).

94. Instead of asakyam, 'beyond (the sphere of human) power,' i.e. 'which cannot have been produced by men' (Gov., Kull.), Nâr. and Nand. read atarkyam, 'beyond (the sphere of human) reasoning' (tarkenânyathâsambhavam, Nâr.; îdrîsam ity adhyavasâtum

95. All those traditions (smṛiti) and all those despicable systems of philosophy, which are not based on the Veda, produce no reward after death ; for they are declared to be founded on Darkness.

96. All those (doctrines), differing from the (Veda), which spring up and (soon) perish, are worthless and false, because they are of modern date.

97. The four castes, the three worlds, the four orders, the past, the present, and the future are all severally known by means of the Veda.

98. Sound, touch, colour, taste, and fifthly smell are known through the Veda alone, (their) production (is) through the (Vedic rites, which in this respect are) secondary acts.

asakyam apaurusheyatvât, Nand.). Aprameyam, 'beyond (the sphere of human) comprehension,' may, according to the commentators, mean either that the Veda can never be fully known, on account of the number of its branches and of the depth of its meaning, or that it cannot be understood by human reasoning alone, but requires the help of grammar of the Mīmāṃsā and so forth.

95. As an example of false traditions Medh. names 'rules such as "Heavenly bliss is attained by worshipping Kaityas," which occur in the Sobha and other Siddhântas of the Nirgranthas (Digambara Gainas).' 'Despicable systems of philosophy,' e.g. 'that of the Kārvākas' (Kull.). Pretya, 'after death' (paraloke, Gov., Kull.), means according to Medh. prakarsham prāpya, 'after attaining eminence.' Medh. mentions the explanation adopted above as that of 'others,' and adds that it requires the reading prete.

97. Nār. and Râgh. explain prasidhyati, 'are made known,' by gâyate, 'are produced.' Gov. and Kull. point to III, 76.

98. I read with all the commentators prasidhyanti instead of prasûyante (Indian editions). The last words of the verse are extremely doubtful. Medh. reads prasûtir guṇakarmataḥ, and Gov. seems to have adopted the same version, though the text of the Pura MS. has prabhûtaguṇakarmataḥ. Kull. and Râgh. give prasûtiguṇakarmataḥ; Nand. prasûtiguṇakarmabhiḥ, and Nār. prasûtiguṇadharmataḥ, with which reading a var. lect., mentioned by Medh., prasûteguṇadharmataḥ may have originally agreed. In concluding his note on the

99. The eternal lore of the Veda upholds all created beings; hence I hold that to be supreme,

verse Medh. remarks that many other varr. lectt. exist which he omits, because they are useless (vaiṣṭityapā/hāntarāṇi nishprayogana tvān na likhyante). The explanations differ still more than the readings. The translation follows Medh.'s interpretation. According to him the verse means that 'sound and the rest are known to be enjoyable and means of obtaining pleasure through the Veda, as they are perceived in the form of melodies and so forth at the performance of Vedic rites,' but that 'the Veda is not their material cause, the Vedic rites being secondary actions only with respect to their production' (sabḍādīnām bhogyatvena sukhāsāadhanānām vedād eva prasiddhiḥ | vaidikakarmānush/hānād gitādisrabdopapattiḥ . . . na punar veda upādānakāraṇam . . . etad āha prasūtir guṇakarmataḥ | prasūtiḥ sabḍādīnām utpattiḥ | tadarthaṃ guṇakarma phalārthatvāt pradhānakarme [ma] ka kītrādīshu guṇadharmā [karme] ty uktam). Gov.'s short note in substance agrees with this view (ye svargādivipratā [shayā] upabhogyatvenābhimatāḥ sabḍādādayo viśayās te 'bhimataviśayopabhogotpattiyartham yad upakāraṇam karmāgñihotrādikam tadanush/hānadvāreṇa vedād eva prasidhyanti). According to Kull. the meaning of the compound is, 'through the Vedic rites, (originating from) the (three) qualities (Goodness and so forth, which are) the sources (of sound and so forth).' Rāgh. gives two explanations: '(The elements which are the substrata of) sound, touch, colour, taste, and fifthly (of) smell, are known through the Veda according to their origin, their qualities, and their actions.' Afterwards he gives for the last word an alternative version which closely agrees with Kull.'s view. Nand. says, 'Sound and so forth, together with their sources, i. e. ether and so forth, with their qualities, i. e. their manifold subdivisions, e. g. the śadga (note), and so forth, and with their actions, i. e. attracting the organs of sensation and so forth, are known from the Veda alone.' Nār. finally interprets his reading as follows: '(Sound and so forth) are produced from the Veda alone, which is characterised—the affix tasi has the meaning of the third and other cases—by the following, (viz.) the origin, i. e. the cause of production, quality, i. e. excessiveness and so forth, property, i. e. fragrance and so forth' (prasūtiḥ ganmahetuḥ | guṇa utkaṭvādi | dharmaḥ surabhitvādiḥ | trītyādi tasiḥ | etair upalakshitād vedāt prasidhyanti gāyante).

99. In explanation of the first line the commentators point to which is the means of (securing happiness to) these creatures.

100. Command of armies, royal authority, the office of a judge, and sovereignty over the whole world he (only) deserves who knows the Veda-science.

101. As a fire that has gained strength consumes even trees full of sap, even so he who knows the Veda burns out the taint of his soul which arises from (evil) acts.

102. In whatever order (a man) who knows the true meaning of the Veda-science may dwell, he becomes even while abiding in this world, fit for the union with Brahman.

103. (Even forgetful) students of the (sacred) books are more distinguished than the ignorant, those who remember them surpass the (forgetful) students, those who possess a knowledge (of the meaning) are more distinguished than those who

III, 76, and the corresponding Vedic passages. Gov. and Kull. explain asya gantoḥ, 'of these creatures,' by 'of men entitled to perform Vedic rites.' Nār. takes the second line differently: 'Through that, i. e. the Veda alone, I know that highest, i. e. meditation, which is the means, i. e. the means of securing final liberation to these creatures' (yad asya gantoḥ sâdhanam apavarga-sâdhanam | param dhyânam dhyeyâdi | tad etasmâd vedâd eva manye gâne).

100. Medh. places this verse later. The order in which the remaining verses of the Samhitâ are read in the MSS. differs very much from that adopted by the other commentators. They stand as follows: 106, 107, 108, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122; next both the text and the commentary of 91, 92, 93 are repeated, and then comes the last verse, 126.

101. Vas. XXVII, 2.

103. Agñebhyaḥ, 'than the ignorant,' i. e. 'entirely ignorant'

(only) remember (the words), men who follow (the teaching of the texts) surpass those who (merely) know (their meaning).

104. Austerity and sacred learning are the best means by which a Brâhmana secures supreme bliss ; by austerities he destroys guilt, by sacred learning he obtains the cessation of (births and) deaths.

105. The three (kinds of evidence), perception, inference, and the (sacred) Institutes which comprise the tradition (of) many (schools), must be fully understood by him who desires perfect correctness with respect to the sacred law.

106. He alone, and no other man, knows the sacred law, who explores the (utterances) of the sages and the body of the laws, by (modes of) reasoning, not repugnant to the Veda-lore.

(Medh., Nâr.), 'who have not studied the Veda' (Nand.), means according to Gov. and Kull., 'those who have learned a little.' Granthinaḥ, '(forgetful) students' (Kull., Nand.), means according to Medh. and Gov., 'students who learn the texts alone, but do not take very great trouble with them ;' according to Nâr., 'men who know the text only.' Dhârinah, 'those who remember (the texts)' (Kull., Nand.), are according to Medh. and Gov., 'men who are very persevering in studying ;' according to Nâr., 'those who know the meaning of the texts.' Nâr. takes gñânin, 'he who knows (the meaning of the texts),' in the sense of 'he who knows the Soul or Self.'

104. Yâgñ. I, 200.

105. Sâstram, 'the (sacred) Institutes,' i. e. 'the Veda, which has many Sâkhâs' (Gov., Nâr.), or 'the Veda and the Smṛiti' (Medh.), or 'the Smṛiti' (Kull.). Nand. reads siddhim, 'a complete knowledge or accurate performance,' instead of suddhim. The Pura copy of Nâr. stops with this verse, the remaining leaves being lost.

106. 'The utterances of the sages,' i. e. 'the Veda.' 'The body of the laws,' i. e. 'the Smṛiti.' 'The modes of reasoning' are, according to Medh. and Kull., the Mîmâmsâ of Gaimini ; according to 'others' quoted by Medh., all the philosophical schools, excepting

107. Thus the acts which secure supreme bliss have been exactly and fully described; (now) the secret portion of these Institutes, proclaimed by Manu, will be taught.

108. If it be asked how it should be with respect to (points of) the law which have not been (specially) mentioned, (the answer is), 'that which Brâhmanas (who are) Sishṭas propound, shall doubtlessly have legal (force).'

109. Those Brâhmanas must be considered as Sishṭas who, in accordance with the sacred law, have studied the Veda together with its appendages, and are able to adduce proofs perceptible by the senses from the revealed texts.

those which, like the Bauddhas, Nirgranthas, and Lokâyatikas, deny the authority of the Vedas.

108-115. Âp. II, 29, 13-14; Gaut. XXVIII, 48-51; Vas. III, 20; Baudh. I, 1, 5-13, 16; Yâgñ. I, 9-10.

109. 'In accordance with the sacred law,' i. e. 'while observing the rules prescribed for a student.' The expression śruti-pratyakshahetavaḥ, 'who are able to adduce proofs perceptible by the senses from the revealed texts,' is variously interpreted. According to Medh. it means either 'those who possess the revealed texts, (proof through) perception and argument' (śruti-pratyakshe hetuḥ ka śruti-pratyakshahetavaḥ), or 'those for whom the revealed texts which are perceptible by the senses, are the reason for distinguishing between virtue and sin' (athavâ sruteḥ pratyakshasruteḥ | pratyakshasabdaḥ sraute pratyaye pratyakshatulyatvât prayuktaḥ | sa ka hetur dharmâdharmaparigñāne kâranam yeshâm ta evam uḥyante); according to Gov., 'who are the cause of the teaching of the subjects perceptible in the Veda' (vedagoḥkarapadârthopadesakâranabhûtâḥ); according to Kull., 'who are the causes of making the revealed texts perceptible, by reciting the revealed texts'; and according to Nand., 'those for whose knowledge and exposition of the law hearing and perception by means of the senses are the causes' (yeshâm śravaṇam pratyaksham ka dharmagñānavakānayanor hetuḥ te). 'The appendages,' i. e. 'the Itihâsas and Purânas' (Medh. according to the Mahâbhârata,

110. Whatever an assembly, consisting either of at least ten, or of at least three persons who follow their prescribed occupations, declares to be law, the legal (force of) that one must not dispute.

111. Three persons who each know one of the three principal Vedas, a logician, a Mīmāṃsaka, one who knows the Nirukta, one who recites (the Institutes of) the sacred law, and three men belonging to the first three orders shall constitute a (legal) assembly, consisting of at least ten members.

112. One who knows the R̥g-veda, one who knows the Yagur-veda, and one who knows the Sāma-veda, shall be known (to form) an assembly consisting of at least three members (and competent) to decide doubtful points of law.

113. Even that which one Brāhmaṇa versed in the Veda declares to be law, must be considered (to have) supreme legal (force, but) not that which is proclaimed by myriads of ignorant men.

114. Even if thousands of Brāhmaṇas, who have Nand.), or 'the Aṅgas, Mīmāṃsā, the law-books, the Purāṇas, and so forth' (Gov., Kull.).

110. Medh. and Gov. read viṭārayet instead of viṭālayet (Kull., Nand.).

111. 'Three men belonging to the first three orders,' i. e. 'a student, a householder, and a hermit' (Gov., Kull., Nand.). Medh. says that some think 'a student, a householder, and an ascetic' to be meant, because the hermit must not enter a village, and because Gautama, in the enumeration of the castes, places the ascetic before the hermit, while others refer the words to Manu's first three orders. The reading traividyo, which all the commentaries give, is probably incorrect. It ought to be traividyaṃ, tisrinām vidyānām samāhāraḥ; see Yāgy. I, 9, and compare kāturvidyam, kāturvaidyam, Baudh. I, 1, 1, 8, and Vas. III, 20.

114. Avratānām, 'who have not fulfilled their sacred duties,' i. e. 'who have not fulfilled the vows incumbent on a student' (Gov., Kull.).

not fulfilled their sacred duties, are unacquainted with the Veda, and subsist only by the name of their caste, meet, they cannot (form) an assembly (for settling the sacred law).

115. The sin of him whom dunces, incarnations of Darkness, and unacquainted with the law, instruct (in his duty), falls, increased a hundredfold, on those who propound it.

116. All that which is most efficacious for securing supreme bliss has been thus declared to you ; a Brâhmaṇa who does not fall off from that obtains the most excellent state.

117. Thus did that worshipful deity disclose to me, through a desire of benefiting mankind, this whole most excellent secret of the sacred law.

118. Let (every Brâhmaṇa), concentrating his mind, fully recognise in the Self all things, both the real and the unreal, for he who recognises the universe in the Self, does not give his heart to unrighteousness.

115. Nand. gives yad for yam, instead of tamobhûtâḥ, 'incarnations of Darkness,' the reading of the Dharma-sûtras, tamomûdhâḥ, 'perplexed by Darkness or ignorance.'

118. Sampasyet, 'let (every Brâhmaṇa) fully recognise,' i. e. 'let him clearly realise in his mind' (sâkshâtkuryât, Medh., Kull.), through devotional exercises (upâsanâ, Medh.), or through deep meditation (Kull.), or 'let him vow to be solely intent on that one object of knowledge, to the exclusion of the knowledge of all other knowable objects' (gñeyântaravishayanirâkaraṇena tadekagñeyanish-*thâ*m anubrûyât, Medh.). Âtmani, 'in the Self,' i. e. 'in the Supreme Self' (Kull., Nand.), or 'in his own individual Self' (Gov.). Medh. remarks that 'the learned dispute regarding the meaning of the term âtman, and that besides the two explanations already given a third was proposed by some, according to which it meant 'the corporeal Self.' Medh. himself considers the first explanation to be the correct one. Sadasat, 'the real and the unreal,' i. e. either 'the

119. The Self alone is the multitude of the gods, the universe rests on the Self; for the Self produces the connexion of these embodied (spirits) with actions.

120. Let him meditate on the ether as identical with the cavities (of the body), on the wind as identical with the organs of motions and of touch, on the most excellent light as the same with his digestive organs and his sight, on water as the same with the (corporeal) fluids, on the earth as the same with the solid parts (of his body);

121. On the moon as one with the internal organ, on the quarters of the horizon as one with his sense of hearing, on Vishnu as one with his (power of) motion, on Hara as the same with his strength, on Agni (Fire) as identical with his speech, on Mitra as identical with his excretions, and on Pragâpati as one with his organ of generation.

122. Let him know the supreme Male (Purusha, to be) the sovereign ruler of them all, smaller even than small, bright like gold, and perceptible by the intellect (only when) in (a state of) sleep(-like abstraction).

123. Some call him Agni (Fire), others Manu, the products and the causes,' or 'the intelligent and the non-intelligent' (Nand.), means according to Gov., 'that which possesses a shape of certain proportions and its opposite' (mûrtam prithivyâdi yakâ-mûrtam âkâśâdi). Medh. proposes two other explanations, 1. 'that which is both existent and non-existent, i. e. comes into existence and perishes;' 2. 'that which like the hare's horn is non-existent, and that which like ether is eternal.' The word samâhita, 'concentrating himself,' may have, as Medh. thinks, a technical meaning, and refer to the Samâdhi, mentioned in the Yoga and Vedânta systems.

119. In this verse Gov., too, explains âtmâ by paramâtmâ.

120. Medh. explains snehe, 'on the (corporeal) fluids,' by 'on the viscous substances,' e. g. 'the brain and so forth.'

Lord of creatures, others Indra, others the vital air, and again others eternal Brahman.

124. He pervades all created beings in the five forms, and constantly makes them, by means of birth, growth and decay, revolve like the wheels (of a chariot).

125. He who thus recognises the Self through the Self in all created beings, becomes equal(-minded) towards all, and enters the highest state, Brahman.

126. A twice-born man who recites these Institutes, revealed by Manu, will be always virtuous in conduct, and will reach whatever condition he desires.

124. The five forms are the five great elements, which produce all bodies (Gov., Kull., Nand.).

125. Instead of param padam, 'the highest state,' Nand. reads sanâtanam, 'the eternal (Brahman).'

APPENDIX.

QUOTATIONS FROM THE INSTITUTES OF MANU, IN THE TRANSLATED HINDU LAW-BOOKS¹.

- I, 101. Col. Dig. II, 4, 42.
- II, 96. Mit. II, 1, 22.
 - 140. Sar. Vi. 421, 426, 436-7.
 - 145. Col. Dig. V, 424; Viram. III, 4, 7.
 - 146. Dây. XI, 4, 3.
 - 172. Col. Dig. V, 123.
- III, 4-11. Col. Dig. IV, 185.
 - 5. Datt. Mî. VI, 27.
 - 12. Col. Dig. V, 144; Dây. IX, 2; Mit. I, 8, 7.
 - 14. Col. Dig. V, 147.
 - 15-7. Col. Dig. V, 145; Dây. IX, 9; Viram. II, 1, 25.
 - 18. Col. Dig. IV, 52.
 - 20-1. Dây. IV, 3, 4.
 - 42. Viram. III, 1, 2.
 - 49. Smṛi. K. XI, 2, 4; Sar. Vi. 138, 332, 336,
Varad. p. 41.
 - 51. Dây. IV, 3, 24.
 - 55. Col. Dig. IV, 42.
 - 56-9. Col. Dig. IV, 39.
 - 60. Col. Dig. IV, 40, 189, 1; May. IV, 8, 21.
 - 61-2. Col. Dig. IV, 189, 2-3.
 - 81. Dây. XI, 6, 17.

¹ Colebrooke's Digest (Col. Dig.); Vyavahâramayûkha, by Borradaile (Vyav.); Dâyahhâga and Mitâksharâ on Inheritance, by Colebrooke (Dây.; Mit.); Mitâksharâ on Vyavahâra, by Macnaghten (M. Mit.); Dâyakramasamgraha, by Wynch (Dâyakr.); Dattakamîmâmsâ and Dattakandrikâ, by Sutherland (Datt. Mî.; Datt. Kand.); Vivâdaintâmânî, by Prosonno Koomar Tagore (Viv. Kint.); Vîramitrodaya on Inheritance, by Golâpchand Sarkâr (Viram.); Smṛitîkandrikâ, by T. Kristnaswamy Jyer (Smṛi. K.); Sarasvatîvilâsa, by Foulkes (Sar. Vi.); Vyavahâramâdhava and Varadarâjya on Inheritance, by Burnell (Mâdh.; Varad.).

- IV, 162. M. Mit. II, 8, 21.
 V, 60. Dây. XI, 1, 42; XI, 6, 17; Datt. Mi. VI, 27.
 127. Col. Dig. V, 321.
 147-9. Col. Dig. IV, 86.
 150. Col. Dig. IV, 89.
 153-6. Col. Dig. IV, 103.
 157. Col. Dig. IV, 139; Mit. I, 10, 9; Viram. II, 2, 4; Sar. Vi. 345.
 158. Col. Dig. IV, 139; Mit. I, 10, 9; Viram. II, 2, 4.
 159. Col. Dig. IV, 140; Mit. I, 10, 9; Viram. II, 2, 4.
 160. Col. Dig. IV, 141; Mit. I, 10, 9; Datt. Mi. I, 29; Viram. II, 2, 4.
 161. Col. Dig. IV, 142; Mit. I, 10, 9; Viram. II, 2, 4; Sar. Vi. 345.
 162. Col. Dig. IV, 143.
 163. Col. Dig. IV, 161.
 165. Col. Dig. IV, 105.
 VII, 14-28. Viv. Kint. pp. 320-2.
 82. Col. Dig. V, 163; Dây. IX, 20.
 85. Col. Dig. II, 4, 63.
 127-40. Col. Dig. II, 2, 14, 1-13.
 VIII, 1-2. May. I, 1, 5.
 4. Col. Dig. II, 1, 2; May. I, 1, 3; Viv. Kint. p. 4.
 5-7. Col. Dig. II, 1, 2; May. I, 1, 3; M. Mit. I, 2, 5.
 11. M. Mit. I, 1, 12.
 13. M. Mit. I, 1, 15; VI, 1, 59.
 27. Col. Dig. V, 449; Viv. Kint. p. 300.
 28. Col. Dig. V, 480, 1.
 29. Col. Dig. V, 480, 2; May. IV, 10, 10; Smri. K. IX, 2, 27.
 30. Col. Dig. II, 2, 60, 1; May. VII, 8; M. Mit. V, 4.
 31-2. Col. Dig. II, 2, 60, 2-3.
 33. May. VII, 8; M. Mit. V, 5.
 34. Viv. Kint. p. 180.

- (VIII), 35. May. VII, 10; M. Mit. V, 11.
 37-8. M. Mit. V, 9.
 40. May. VII, 11; M. Mit. V, 12.
 43. M. Mit. I, 2, 7.
 45. Col. Dig. II, 4, 68.
 46. Col. Dig. I, 50, 233.
 47. Col. Dig. I, 233.
 48. Col. Dig. I, 234; Viv. Kint. p. 43.
 49. Col. Dig. I, 235; Viv. Kint. p. 43.
 50. Col. Dig. I, 254.
 51. Col. Dig. I, 264.
 59. Col. Dig. I, 265; Viv. Kint. p. 47.
 68. M. Mit. VI, 1, 6.
 70. May. II, 3, 8.
 74. M. Mit. VI, 1, 1.
 79-80. May. II, 3, 14.
 87. May. II, 3, 4.
 102. May. II, 3, 17; M. Mit. VI, 1, 22.
 107. M. Mit. VI, 1, 29.
 108. May. II, 3, 20; M. Mit. VI, 1, 45.
 113. May. II, 3, 17; III, 3; M. Mit. VI, 1, 23;
 VIII, 20, 1.
 115. M. Mit. VIII, 10, 2.
 117. M. Mit. VI, 1, 31.
 120. M. Mit. VI, 1, 49; Viv. Kint. p. 221.
 121. M. Mit. VI, 1, 49; Viv. Kint. p. 222.
 122. Viv. Kint. p. 221.
 123. M. Mit. III, 4, 9; Viv. Kint. p. 222.
 124-5. M. Mit. III, 4, 4.
 128. M. Mit. I, 1, 6.
 129. M. Mit. III, 4, 3.
 132-4. Col. Dig. III, 1, 77, 1-3.
 138. Viv. Kint. p. 222.
 139. Col. Dig. I, 273; Viv. Kint. pp. 48, 221.
 140. Col. Dig. I, 23, 29, 1.
 141. Col. Dig. I, 29, 2; Viv. Kint. p. 7.
 143. Col. Dig. I, 91, 117; II, 2, 7; Viv. Kint. pp.
 21, 25.
 144. Col. Dig. I, 87; May. V, 2, 3.

- (VIII), 146. May. II, 2, 7.
 147. M. Mit. III, 2, 6.
 150. Col. Dig. I, 78.
 151. Col. Dig. I, 43, 61; May. V, 1, 7; Viv. Kint.
 p. 17.
 152. Col. Dig. I, 42.
 153. Col. Dig. I, 41.
 154. Col. Dig. I, 48, 257, 1.
 155. Col. Dig. I, 257, 2.
 156. Col. Dig. I, 258.
 157. Col. Dig. I, 33; Viv. Kint. p. 19.
 159-60. Col. Dig. I, 151, 1-2.
 161. Col. Dig. I, 154.
 162. Col. Dig. I, 155.
 163. Col. Dig. II, 2, 11; II, 4, 57.
 165. May. IX, 10; Vīram. V, 1, 2.
 166. Col. Dig. I, 186.
 167. Col. Dig. I, 190; Dāyakr. XII, 1, 1; Viv.
 Kint. p. 39.
 168. Col. Dig. II, 2, 10.
 177. Col. Dig. I, 245; May. V, 4, 6.
 179. Col. Dig. II, 1, 13; Viv. Kint. p. 49.
 180. Col. Dig. II, 1, 16.
 181-4. Col. Dig. II, 1, 47, 1-4.
 185. Col. Dig. II, 1, 20.
 186. Col. Dig. II, 1, 21; Viv. Kint. p. 51.
 187. Col. Dig. II, 1, 46.
 188. Col. Dig. II, 1, 49.
 189. Col. Dig. II, 1, 26; Viv. Kint. p. 51.
 191. Col. Dig. II, 1, 37; May. VI, 2.
 192. Col. Dig. II, 1, 38; May. VI, 5; Viv. Kint.
 p. 54.
 193. Col. Dig. II, 1, 39; Viv. Kint. p. 53.
 194. Col. Dig. II, 1, 48.
 195. Col. Dig. II, 1, 17.
 196. Col. Dig. II, 1, 50.
 197. Col. Dig. II, 2, 5; Viv. Kint. p. 56.
 198. Col. Dig. II, 2, 40; Viv. Kint. pp. 56, 222.
 199. Col. Dig. II, 2, 27.

- (VIII), 201. Col. Dig. II, 2, 36.
 202. Col. Dig. II, 2, 50; May. VII, 5; Viv. Kint. p. 58.
 203. Col. Dig. II, 2, 61; Viv. Kint. p. 119.
 206. Col. Dig. II, 3, 32; Viv. Kint. p. 65.
 207. Col. Dig. II, 3, 33.
 208. Col. Dig. II, 3, 35, 1.
 209. Col. Dig. II, 3, 35, 2; Viv. Kint. p. 67.
 210. Col. Dig. II, 3, 35, 3; Viv. Kint. p. 66.
 212. Col. Dig. II, 4, 48, 1; Viv. Kint. pp. 84, 223.
 213. Col. Dig. II, 4, 48, 2.
 215. Col. Dig. III, 1, 76; May. XI, 4; Viv. Kint. p. 98.
 216. Col. Dig. III, 1, 81; May. XI, 4; Viv. Kint. p. 99.
 217. Col. Dig. III, 1, 78; May. XI, 4; Viv. Kint. p. 99.
 218. Col. Dig. III, 2, 1.
 219-20. Col. Dig. III, 2, 15; Viv. Kint. p. 110.
 222. Col. Dig. III, 3, 7; 23, 1; Viv. Kint. p. 113.
 223. Col. Dig. III, 3, 23, 2; Viv. Kint. p. 113.
 224-7. Col. Dig. IV, 166-9.
 228. Col. Dig. III, 3, 24; Viv. Kint. p. 113.
 229. Col. Dig. III, 4, 1.
 230. Col. Dig. III, 4, 9; Viv. Kint. p. 105.
 231. Col. Dig. III, 4, 2; Viv. Kint. p. 105.
 232. Col. Dig. III, 4, 12; Viv. Kint. p. 106.
 233. Col. Dig. III, 4, 7; Viv. Kint. p. 106.
 234. Col. Dig. III, 4, 18.
 235-6. Col. Dig. III, 4, 16.
 237. Col. Dig. III, 4, 19; May. XV, 3; Viv. Kint. p. 132.
 238. Col. Dig. III, 4, 25; Viv. Kint. p. 132.
 239. Col. Dig. III, 4, 32.
 240. Col. Dig. III, 4, 29; May. XVII, 9.
 241. Col. Dig. III, 4, 36; Viv. Kint. p. 133.
 242. Col. Dig. III, 4, 54; Viv. Kint. p. 136.
 244. Col. Dig. III, 4, 59.
 245-52. Viv. Kint. p. 120.

- (VIII), 253. Viv. Kint. p. 121.
 257. May. XV, 4.
 259-61. Viv. Kint. p. 121.
 262. Viv. Kint. p. 124.
 264. May. XV, 11; Viv. Kint. p. 126.
 267. May. XVI, 1, 3; Viv. Kint. p. 140.
 268. Viv. Kint. p. 140.
 273. Viv. Kint. p. 142.
 275. May. XVI, 1, 4.
 276-7. Viv. Kint. p. 141.
 279. May. XVI, 2, 4; Viv. Kint. p. 150.
 280-1. May. XVI, 2, 4; Viv. Kint. pp. 146, 150.
 281-2. Viv. Kint. pp. 146, 150.
 283. Viv. Kint. pp. 147, 150.
 284. Viv. Kint. p. 148.
 285. May. XVI, 2, 8; Viv. Kint. p. 155.
 286. Viv. Kint. p. 149.
 288-9. Viv. Kint. p. 183.
 296-8. May. XXII (CCXLII).
 299. Col. Dig. III, 1, 11, 1; Viv. Kint. p. 151.
 300. Col. Dig. III, 1, 11, 2; M. Mit. IV, 1, 9;
 Viv. Kint. p. 151.
 302. Col. Dig. II, 1, 59; Viv. Kint. p. 157.
 303. Viv. Kint. p. 157.
 304. Col. Dig. II, 2, 19; Viv. Kint. p. 322.
 305-6. Viv. Kint. p. 322.
 308. Col. Dig. II, 3, 58.
 319. Viv. Kint. p. 173.
 320. May. XVII, 8.
 321. May. XVII, 8; Viv. Kint. p. 170.
 322. May. XVII, 8; Viv. Kint. p. 171.
 323. May. XVII, 8; Viv. Kint. p. 166.
 324-5. Viv. Kint. p. 167.
 326-30. Viv. Kint. p. 172.
 331. Viv. Kint. p. 171.
 333. Viv. Kint. p. 172.
 335-6. Viv. Kint. p. 221.
 337-8. Viv. Kint. p. 176.
 339. Viv. Kint. p. 179.

- (VIII), 340. Mit. I, 1, 8; Vîram. I, 14; Viv. Kint. p. 177;
Mâdh. p. 4.
341. Viv. Kint. p. 179.
342. Viv. Kint. p. 168.
- 348-9. M. Mit. II, 8, 20.
350. May. XVIII, 8; M. Mit. II, 8, 19, 20.
352. Viv. Kint. p. 203.
354. May. XIX, 3; Viv. Kint. p. 202.
- 355-6. Viv. Kint. p. 202.
359. Viv. Kint. p. 203.
360. Viv. Kint. p. 200.
361. Viv. Kint. p. 202.
362. Viv. Kint. pp. 203-4.
363. Viv. Kint. p. 203.
364. Viv. Kint. p. 205.
365. May. XV, 5.
366. Viv. Kint. p. 205.
- 367-70. Viv. Kint. p. 206.
- 371-2. Viv. Kint. p. 207.
373. Viv. Kint. pp. 207-8.
374. May. XIX, 6; Viv. Kint. p. 209.
375. Viv. Kint. p. 209.
376. May. XIX, 7; Viv. Kint. p. 209.
377. May. XIX, 7; Viv. Kint. p. 210.
378. May. XVIII, 14; XIX, 6; Viv. Kint. p. 210.
379. Viv. Kint. p. 210.
- 380-1. M. Mit. VI, 1, 53; Viv. Kint. p. 211.
382. May. XIX, 7; Viv. Kint. p. 211.
- 383-4. Viv. Kint. p. 211.
385. Viv. Kint. pp. 207, 211.
- 386-7. Viv. Kint. p. 322.
388. Col. Dig. II, 3, 42; Viv. Kint. pp. 69, 212.
389. Viv. Kint. pp. 185, 212.
390. May. I, 1, 14.
398. Viv. Kint. p. 161.
402. Col. Dig. III, 3, 48.
410. Col. Dig. I, 5.
411. Col. Dig. III, 1, 37, 1; May. X, 3; Viv.
Kint. p. 95.

- (VIII), 412. Col. Dig. III, 1, 37, 2; Viv. Kint. p. 95.
 413. Col. Dig. III, 1, 38; Viv. Kint. p. 95.
 414. Col. Dig. III, 1, 36; Viv. Kint. p. 95.
 415. Col. Dig. III, 1, 33.
 416. Col. Dig. II, 4, 56; III, 1, 52, 1; May. IV,
 10, 7; Viram. I, 12; V, 1, 2; Varad. p. 6.
 417. Col. Dig. III, 1, 52, 2.
 IX, 1-2. Col. Dig. IV, 2-3.
 3. Col. Dig. IV, 5.
 4. Col. Dig. IV, 14.
 5-7. Col. Dig. IV, 9, 1-3.
 8-9. Col. Dig. IV, 19-20.
 10-1. Col. Dig. IV, 30, 1-2.
 12. Col. Dig. IV, 32.
 13. Col. Dig. IV, 99.
 14-5. Col. Dig. IV, 22, 1-2.
 16. Col. Dig. IV, 23.
 17. Col. Dig. IV, 24; Viv. Kint. p. 220.
 18-9. Col. Dig. IV, 25-6.
 22-4. Col. Dig. IV, 33, 1-3.
 25. Col. Dig. IV, 34.
 26-8. Col. Dig. IV, 35, 1-3.
 30. Col. Dig. IV, 109.
 32-4. Col. Dig. V, 253, 1-3.
 35. Col. Dig. V, 254; Dâṃ. XI, 3, 3; Dâṃkr. I,
 5, 2.
 36-7. Col. Dig. V, 255-6.
 38-40. Col. Dig. V, 257, 1-3.
 42-6. Col. Dig. V, 252, 1-5.
 47. Col. Dig. V, 252, 6; Dâṃ. XIII, 5; Dâṃkr.
 VIII, 5; Smṛi. K. XVI, 20; Mâdh. p. 57.
 48. Col. Dig. V, 214, 1; 252, 7.
 49. Col. Dig. V, 214, 2; 252, 8; Viv. Kint.
 p. 131.
 50-1. Col. Dig. V, 214, 3-4.
 52. Col. Dig. V, 214, 5; Mit. I, 10, 6; Viram.
 II, 2, 4; Mâdh. p. 23.
 53. Col. Dig. V, 244; Mit. I, 10, 4; Datt. Kand.
 II, 35; Viram. II, 2, 4; Mâdh. p. 53.

- (IX), 54. Col. Dig. V, 236; Dâyakr. XII, 2, 15; Viv. Kint. p. 131.
55. Dâyakr. XII, 2, 15.
59. Col. Dig. IV, 146; V, 229; Mit. I, 10, 8; Datt. Mî. VII, 21; Vîram. II, 2, 4; Sar. Vi. 342.
60. Col. Dig. V, 228; Mit. I, 10, 8; Vîram. II, 2, 4; Sar. Vi. 342; Mâdh. p. 23.
62. Col. Dig. IV, 150.
63. Col. Dig. V, 227.
- 64-8. Col. Dig. IV, 156, 1-5; Mit. I, 10, 8; Vîram. II, 2, 4; Sar. Vi. 343; Mâdh. p. 23.
69. Col. Dig. IV, 170, 1; Mit. I, 10, 10; Vîram. II, 2, 4; Mâdh. p. 24.
70. Col. Dig. IV, 170, 2; Dây. IX, 28; Mit. I, 10, 10; Vîram. II, 2, 4; Mâdh. p. 24.
71. Col. Dig. IV, 171.
- 72-3. Col. Dig. IV, 174, 1-2.
74. Col. Dig. IV, 45, 1.
75. Col. Dig. IV, 45, 2; 116.
76. Col. Dig. IV, 154.
77. Col. Dig. IV, 56.
- 78-9. Col. Dig. IV, 57, 1-2.
80. Col. Dig. IV, 67.
81. Col. Dig. IV, 70.
82. Col. Dig. IV, 73.
83. Col. Dig. IV, 75.
84. Col. Dig. IV, 112.
85. Col. Dig. IV, 46.
86. Col. Dig. IV, 47.
87. Col. Dig. V, 414.
89. Col. Dig. IV, 179.
94. Vîram. II, 1, 2.
- 95-6. Col. Dig. IV, 188, 1-2.
97. Col. Dig. IV, 172.
- 98-100. Col. Dig. IV, 173, 1-3.
- 101-2. Col. Dig. IV, 190, 1-2.
103. Col. Dig. V, 2; Dây. I, 3; Vîram. I, 2; Smṛi. K. I, 1; Sar. Vi. 37.

- (IX), 104. Col. Dig. V, 4; Dây. I, 14; II, 8; III, 1; Mit. I, 3, 3; 5, 7; May. IV, 4, 1; Dâyakr. I, 1, 1; VII, 1; Vîram. I, 10-21, 22, 27, 51; II, 1, 1-2; Viv. Kint. p. 224; Smṛi. K. I, 12, 18; Sar. Vi. 49; Mâdh. p. 1; Varad. p. 6.
105. Col. Dig. V, 9; Dây. I, 36; III, 15; Mit. I, 3, 3; Vîram. II, 1, 7, 11; Viv. Kint. p. 226; Smṛi. K. II, 2, 10; Mâdh. p. 8.
106. Col. Dig. V, 10, 1; Dây. I, 36; XI, 1, 32; Mit. I, 11, 12; Datt. Kand. I, 5; Vîram. II, 1, 7; Sar. Vi. 369; Mâdh. p. 44.
107. Col. Dig. V, 10, 2; Dây. I, 36; Vîram. II, 1, 7; Mâdh. p. 8.
108. Col. Dig. V, 12; Dây. VI, 1, 54; Vîram. II, 1, 7.
109. Col. Dig. V, 13; Vîram. II, 1, 7.
110. Col. Dig. V, 14; Vîram. II, 1, 7.
111. Col. Dig. V, 18; Dây. I, 27, 37; Vîram. I, 21; II, 1, 7; Viv. Kint. p. 227; Smṛi. K. II, 2, 10-11.
112. Col. Dig. V, 34; Dây. II, 37; Mit. I, 2, 4; I, 3, 3; May. IV, 4, 9; Vîram. II, 1, 9, 11; Viv. Kint. p. 234; Smṛi. K. II, 1, 25; III, 8; Mâdh. p. 8; Varad. p. 2.
113. Col. Dig. V, 36.
114. Col. Dig. V, 37; Viv. Kint. p. 234.
115. Col. Dig. V, 38; Dây. II, 45; Smṛi. K. III, 5.
116. Col. Dig. V, 39, 1; Dây. II, 37; Mit. I, 3, 3; May. IV, 4, 9; Vîram. II, 1, 10; Smṛi. K. III, 10, 12; Mâdh. p. 8.
117. Col. Dig. V, 39, 2; Dây. II, 37; Mit. I, 3, 3; May. IV, 4, 9; Dâyakr. VII, 18; Vîram. II, 1, 10; Smṛi. K. III, 12; Mâdh. p. 8.
118. Col. Dig. V, 120; Dây. III, 36; Mit. I, 7, 9; Vîram. II, 1, 21; V, 2, 1; Viv. Kint. p. 248; Smṛi. K. IV, 32; Sar. Vi. 126, 133, 287; Varad. p. 10.
119. Col. Dig. V, 70; Mit. I, 4, 18; May. IV, 7, 17.
120. Col. Dig. V, 76, 1; Mit. II, 1, 10; Vîram. II, 2, 18; III, 1, 6.

- (IX), 121. Col. Dig. V, 76, 2 ; Viram. II, 2, 18.
 122-3. Col. Dig. V, 55, 1-2.
 124. Col. Dig. V, 56.
 125. Col. Dig. V, 57 ; Dâyakr. VII, 14 ; Viv. Kint. p. 233.
 126. Col. Dig. V, 64.
 127. Col. Dig. V, 212 ; Dây. X, 2 ; Datt. Mi. I, 9 ; Viram. II, 2, 3 ; Varad. p. 23.
 128. Col. Dig. V, 222, 1 ; Viram. II, 2, 3 ; Varad. p. 23.
 129. Col. Dig. V, 222, 2 ; Viram. II, 2, 3.
 130. Col. Dig. V, 210 ; Dây. XI, 2, 1 ; May. IV, 8, 10 ; Viram. III, 2, 1 ; Viv. Kint. p. 292 ; Smri. K. XI, 2, 7 ; Sar. Vi. 543, 552 ; Varad. pp. 35-6.
 131. Col. Dig. V, 209, 491 ; Dây. IV, 2, 13 ; May. IV, 10, 17 ; Viram. V, 2, 2, 4 ; Viv. Kint. p. 267 ; Smri. K. IX, 3, 12 ; Sar. Vi. 288 ; Mâdh. p. 44 ; Varad. p. 44.
 132. Col. Dig. V, 220, 3 ; Dây. XI, 2, 19 ; Dâyakr. I, 4, 1 ; Viram. III, 3, 2 ; Viv. Kint. p. 294.
 133. Col. Dig. V, 220, 1 ; Dây. XI, 2, 19 ; Varad. pp. 35-6.
 134. Col. Dig. V, 206 ; Dây. II, 39 ; X, 2 ; Mit. I, 11, 23 ; Dây. VII, 16 ; Viram. II, 2, 17 ; Viv. Kint. p. 286 ; Sar. Vi. 376, 558 ; Mâdh. p. 20 ; Varad. p. 26.
 135. Dây. XI, 2, 16 ; Mâdh. p. 45 ; Varad. p. 48.
 136. Col. Dig. V, 207 ; 220, 2 ; Dây. X, 3 ; XI, 2, 20 ; Mit. II, 2, 6 ; Datt. K'and. I, 22 ; Viram. II, 2, 17 ; III, 3, 1 ; Sar. Vi. 564, 660, 667 ; Mâdh. p. 26 ; Varad. p. 35.
 137. Col. Dig. V, 11 ; Dây. XI, 1, 31 ; Viram. III, 1, 11.
 138. Col. Dig. V, 302 ; Dây. V, 6 ; XI, 1, 31 ; Viram. III, 1, 11.
 139. Dây. IV, 2, 10 ; XI, 6, 9, 31 ; Dâyakr. II, 4, 7 ; Datt. Mi. VII, 17 ; Varad. p. 36.
 140. Col. Dig. V, 208 ; Viram. II, 2, 3.

- (IX), 141. Col. Dig. V, 278; Datt. Kand. V, 20; Viram. II, 2, 18; Smri. K. X, 13; Varad. p. 23.
142. Col. Dig. V, 181; Mit. I, 11, 32; May. IV, 5, 21; Datt. Mi. II, 8; VI, 6, 47; VIII, 1; Datt. Kand. II, 18; Viram. II, 2, 18; Smri. K. X, 15; Sar. Vi. 388; Mâdh. p. 24; Varad. p. 23.
143. Col. Dig. V, 234; Smri. K. V, 12.
144. Col. Dig. V, 226.
145. Col. Dig. V, 235.
146. Col. Dig. V, 232; Mit. II, 1, 10; Datt. Mi. V, 51; Viram. II, 1, 18; III, 1, 6; Mâdh. p. 31.
147. Col. Dig. V, 233; Mâdh. p. 40.
148. Col. Dig. V, 139, 1.
149. Col. Dig. V, 60, 1; 139, 2; Mâdh. p. 16.
150. Col. Dig. V, 60, 2; 139, 3.
151. Col. Dig. V, 60, 3; 139, 4; Dâ. IX, 12; Viram. II, 1, 25.
152. Col. Dig. V, 140, 1; Dâ. IX, 12; Viram. II, 1, 25; Mâdh. p. 16; Varad. p. 18.
153. Col. Dig. V, 140, 2; Dâ. IX, 12; Viram. II, 1, 25; Viv. Kint. p. 271; Varad. p. 18.
154. Col. Dig. V, 166; Dâ. IX, 27; Mit. I, 11, 41; Dâyakr. VII, 19; Viram. II, 1, 25; II, 2, 21; Viv. Kint. p. 273; Sar. Vi. 394; Mâdh. p. 17; Varad. p. 20.
155. Col. Dig. V, 167; Dâ. IX, 27; Mit. I, 8, 10; May. IV, 4, 29; Viram. II, 1, 25; II, 2, 21; Viv. Kint. p. 273; Smri. K. II, 2, 7; Mâdh. p. 17; Varad. p. 20.
156. Col. Dig. V, 53.
157. Col. Dig. V, 66; Dâyakr. VII, 22; Datt. Kand. V, 32; Varad. p. 19.
158. Col. Dig. V, 188, 1; Datt. Mi. II, 56; Datt. Kand. V, 11; Viv. Kint. p. 279; Varad. p. 25.
159. Col. Dig. V, 188, 2; Mit. I, 11, 30; Datt. Kand. V, 11; Viram. II, 2, 19; Viv. Kint. p. 279; Sar. Vi. 386; Mâdh. p. 22.

- (IX), 160. Col. Dig. V, 188, 3; Mit. I, 11, 30; Datt. Kand. V, 11; Viram. II, 2, 19; Viv. Kint. p. 279; Sar. Vi. 386; Mâdh. p. 22; Varad. p. 26.
162. Dây. X, 15; Viram. II, 2, 18.
163. Dây. X, 13; Mit. I, 11, 28; Viram. II, 2, 18; Viv. Kint. p. 286; Smri. K. X, 2; Sar. Vi. 380, 383; Mâdh. p. 21.
164. Dây. X, 11; Mit. I, 11, 29; Viram. II, 2, 18; Sar. Vi. 385; Mâdh. p. 2; Varad. p. 25.
165. Datt. Mî. II, 57; Datt. Kand. V, 10.
166. Col. Dig. V, 194; Datt. Mî. I, 68; Viram. II, 2, 2.
167. Col. Dig. V, 231; Viram. II, 2, 4; Smri. K. X, 4.
168. Col. Dig. V, 275; Mit. I, 11, 9; May. IV, 5, 1; Datt. Mî. I, 7; II, 23; Datt. Kand. I, 12; Viram. II, 2, 8; Smri. K. X, 4; Sar. Vi. 366; Varad. p. 23.
169. Col. Dig. V, 285; Viram. II, 2, 10; Smri. K. X, 4; Varad. p. 23.
170. Col. Dig. V, 250; Viram. II, 2, 5; Smri. K. X, 4; Varad. p. 23.
171. Col. Dig. V, 291; Smri. K. X, 4; Varad. p. 23.
172. Col. Dig. V, 263; Mit. I, 11, 7; Viram. II, 2, 6; Smri. K. X, 4; Varad. p. 23.
173. Col. Dig. V, 288; Viram. II, 2, 12; Smri. K. X, 4; Varad. p. 23.
174. Col. Dig. V, 282; Mit. I, 11, 16; Datt. Mî. II, 24; Viram. II, 2, 9; Smri. K. X, 4; Sar. Vi. 372; Varad. p. 23.
175. Col. Dig. V, 269; Viram. II, 2, 7; Smri. K. X, 4; Varad. p. 25.
177. Col. Dig. V, 287; Viram. II, 2, 11; Smri. K. X, 4; Varad. p. 23.
178. Col. Dig. V, 187; Dây. IX, 28; Viram. II, 2, 14; Smri. K. X, 4; Varad. p. 25.
179. Col. Dig. V, 186; Dây. IX, 29; Datt. Kand. V, 30; Viv. Kint. p. 274; Varad. p. 21.

- (IX), 180. Col. Dig. V, 301; Datt. Mi. I, 33, 42, 56; Datt. Kand. I, 8; Viram. II, 2, 15; Varad.
p. 25.
181. Col. Dig. V, 271; Datt. Mi. VI, 12.
182. Col. Dig. V, 276; Dây. XI, 5, 7; Mit. I, 11, 36; May. IV, 5, 19; Datt. Mi. II, 29, 65;
Datt. Kand. I, 20; Viram. II, 2, 8; Smṛi.
K. X, 8; Sar. Vi. 390; Varad. p. 27.
183. Col. Dig. V, 506; Dây. IV, 3, 32; Datt. Mi.
II, 69; Datt. Kand. I, 23; Viram. II, 2, 8;
V, 2, 14.
184. Col. Dig. V, 298; Datt. Kand. V, 8; Viram.
2, 2, 19.
185. Col. Dig. V, 223; Dây. XI, 1, 40; XI, 5, 5;
Mit. I, 11, 33; II, 1, 7, 9, 35; II, 4, 1;
Datt. Kand. V, 8; Viram. III, 1, 6; III,
2, 3; III, 4, 7; III, 5, 1; Viv. Kint. p.
295; Smṛi. K. X, 1; XI, 1, 1; XI, 3, 6;
XI, 4, 10; Sar. Vi. 485, 488, 491, 575;
Mâdh. pp. 22, 27, 30; Varad. pp. 38-9.
186. Col. Dig. V, 370; Dây. IV, 3, 36; XI, 1, 40;
XI, 6, 7, 10, 14, 17; Dâyakr. I, 10, 5; II,
6, 2; Viram. III, 1, 11.
187. Col. Dig. V, 434; Dây. XI, 6, 10, 14, 17, 21,
24; Mit. II, 3, 3; II, 4, 5; May. IV, 8, 19;
IV, 10, 28; Dâyakr. I, 10, 15, 21, 28; II, 6,
2; III, 4, 2; III, 4, 11; III, 5, 2; III, 7,
5; Viv. Kint. p. 295; Smṛi. K. XI, 5,
9; Sar. Vi. 569; Mâdh. p. 27; Varad.
p. 34.
188. Col. Dig. V, 442; Dây. XI, 6, 26; Mit. II, 7,
4; Viram. III, 7, 8; Smṛi. K. XI, 6, 5;
Sar. Vi. 609; Mâdh. p. 29.
189. Col. Dig. II, 3, 23, 1; V, 443; Dây. XI, 6, 34; Mit. II, 4, 4; II, 7, 5-6; Viram. III,
7-8; Viv. Kint. p. 298; Smṛi. K. XI, 6, 6;
Sar. Vi. 610, 612.
190. Col. Dig. II, 3, 23, 2; May. IV, 10, 8.
191. Col. Dig. V, 344; Dây. X, 16.

- (IX), 192. Col. Dig. V, 485; Dâṃ. IV, 2, 1; Mit. II, 11, 19; Vīram. II, 1, 18; V, 2, 1, 5; Viv. Kint. pp. 226, 266; Smṛi. K. IX, 3, 6; Sar. Vi. 309; Mādḥ. p. 43; Varad. p. 43.
193. Col. Dig. V, 498; Mit. II, 11, 17; May. IV, 10, 16; Vīram. V, 2, 1; Smṛi. K. IX, 3, 10; Sar. Vi. 285; Mādḥ. p. 43; Varad. p. 43.
194. Col. Dig. V, 462; Dâṃ. IV, 1, 4; Mit. II, 11, 4; May. IV, 10, 1; Vīram. V, 1, 1; Viv. Kint. p. 256; Smṛi. K. IX, 1, 1, 3; Sar. Vi. 260; Mādḥ. p. 44; Varad. p. 45.
195. May. IV, 10, 13; Vīram. V, 2, 1; Smṛi. K. IX, 3, 1; Varad. p. 46.
196. Col. Dig. V, 502; Dâṃ. IV, 2, 27; May. IV, 10, 29; Dâṃakr. II, 3, 14; H, 4, 10; Vīram. V, 2, 9; Viv. Kint. p. 269; Smṛi. K. IX, 3, 28; Sar. Vi. 319; Mādḥ. p. 44; Varad. p. 46.
197. Col. Dig. V, 503; Dâṃ. IV, 2, 27; May. IV, 10, 29; Dâṃakr. II, 3, 19; Vīram. V, 2, 9; Viv. Kint. p. 269; Mādḥ. p. 44; Varad. p. 47.
198. Col. Dig. V, 495; Dâṃ. IV, 2, 16; IV, 3, 3; Mit. II, 11, 22; May. IV, 10, 19; Dâṃakr. II, 5, 3; Vīram. V, 2, 5; Smṛi. K. IX, 3, 40; Sar. Vi. 307; Mādḥ. p. 44; Varad. p. 45.
199. Col. Dig. V, 474; Vīram. V, 1, 5; Smṛi. K. IX, 1, 14.
200. Col. Dig. V, 473; Mit. I, 4, 19; II, 11, 34; Viv. Kint. p. 260; Smṛi. K. IX, 2, 27; Sar. Vi. 201; Mādḥ. p. 50; Varad. p. 49.
201. Col. Dig. V, 329, 1; Dâṃ. V, 7; Mit. II, 10, 5; May. IV, 11, 3; Dâṃakr. III, 1; Vīram. VIII, 1; Viv. Kint. p. 243; Smṛi. K. V, 4; Sar. Vi. 148; Mādḥ. p. 39; Varad. p. 13.
202. Col. Dig. V, 329, 2; Mit. II, 10, 5; Vīram. VIII, 2; Viv. Kint. p. 243; Smṛi. K. V, 22; Sar. Vi. 159; Varad. p. 13.
203. Col. Dig. V, 329, 3; Vīram. VIII, 9; Viv. Kint. p. 243; Varad. p. 13.

- (IX), 204. Col. Dig. V, 341; Dâ. VI, 1, 54; Mit. I, 4, 13; Varad. p. 30.
205. Col. Dig. V, 73; May. IV, 7, 14; Viv. Kint. p. 254; Varad. p. 30.
206. Col. Dig. V, 345; Dâ. VI, 1, 9, 31, 51; May. IV, 7, 1; Dâ. IV, 2, 2; Viv. Kint. p. 249; Smṛi. K. VII, 26; Varad. p. 28.
207. Col. Dig. V, 107; Dâ. III, 28; Vîram. II, 1, 15; Viv. Kint. p. 237; Smṛi. K. II, 2, 26; Varad. p. 12.
208. Col. Dig. V, 348; Dâ. VI, 1, 3, 31; Mit. I, 4, 10; May. IV, 7, 4; Dâ. IV, 2, 5; Vîram. VII, 1; Viv. Kint. p. 250; Smṛi. K. VII, 27; Sar. Vi. 173; Varad. p. 29.
209. Col. Dig. V, 91; Dâ. II, 21; VI, 2, 32; Mit. I, 5, 11; May. IV, 4, 5; Vîram. II, 1, 17; Viv. Kint. p. 229; Sar. Vi. 223; Mâdh. p. 13.
210. Col. Dig. V, 35, 406, 1; Dâ. XII, 1; Mit. II, 9, 12; May. IV, 9, 2; Vîram. IV, 1, 4; Smṛi. K. XII, 3; Mâdh. p. 34; Varad. p. 52.
211. Col. Dig. V, 406, 2; Mit. II, 9, 12; May. IV, 9, 13; Vîram. IV, 4; Smṛi. K. XI, 1, 51; XII, 17; Sar. Vi. 767; Mâdh. pp. 35-6; Varad. p. 52.
212. Col. Dig. V, 406, 3; Dâ. XI, 6, 32; Mit. II, 9, 12; May. IV, 9, 13; Vîram. IV, 4, 6; Smṛi. K. XI, 1, 51; XII, 17; Sar. Vi. 767; Mâdh. pp. 35-6; Varad. p. 52.
213. Col. Dig. V, 52; Mit. I, 9, 5; May. IV, 7, 24; Vîram. II, 1, 7; VI, 2; Viv. Kint. p. 234; Sar. Vi. 781; Mâdh. p. 52.
214. Col. Dig. V, 317; Dâ. V, 6; May. IV, 11, 9; Vîram. VIII, 11; Viv. Kint. p. 242; Smṛi. K. V, 19; Varad. p. 12.
215. Col. Dig. V, 29; Dâ. II, 86; Vîram. II, 1, 10; Viv. Kint. p. 235.
216. Col. Dig. V, 101; Dâ. I, 46; II, 2; VII, 1;

- Mit. I, 6, 4, 7; May. IV, 34; Dâṃ. V, 14;
Vīram. II, 1, 24; Viv. Kint. p. 276, 305;
Smṛi. K. XIII, 15; Sar. Vi. 231, 234;
Mâdh. p. 14.
- (IX), 217. Col. Dig. V, 424; Dâṃ. XI, 3, 2; Mit. II, 1, 7; II, 4, 4; II, 5, 1; May. IV, 8, 18;
Dâyakr. I, 10, 4; Vīram. III, 4, 7; III, 5,
1; III, 7, 1; Viv. Kint. p. 294; Smṛi. K.
XI, 4, 10; XI, 5, 6; Sar. Vi. 576, 583, 584,
765; Varad. pp. 36, 40.
218. Col. Dig. V, 375; Dâṃ. XIII, 1; Dâṃakr.
VIII, 2; Vīram. VI, 1; Smṛi. K. XIV, 1;
Sar. Vi. 775; Mâdh. p. 53.
219. Col. Dig. V, 343; Dâṃ. VI, 2, 23; May. IV,
7, 15; Dâṃakr. IV, 2, 13; Vīram. VII, 2;
Smṛi. K. VII, 39; Sar. Vi. 197; Mâdh. p.
50; Varad. p. 30.
- 222-3. Viv. Kint. p. 317.
224. May. XXI, 2; Viv. Kint. p. 317.
229. Col. Dig. III, 1, 34.
- 231-2. Viv. Kint. pp. 190-1.
237. Viv. Kint. p. 213.
254. Viv. Kint. p. 157.
262. Viv. Kint. p. 157.
- 272-4. Viv. Kint. p. 178.
275. May. XXII, (CCXLIII); Viv. Kint. p. 189.
276. Viv. Kint. p. 166.
277. Viv. Kint. p. 169.
278. Viv. Kint. p. 177.
282. May. XV, 9; Viv. Kint. p. 125.
283. Viv. Kint. p. 126.
- 285-6. Viv. Kint. p. 188.
287. Viv. Kint. p. 159.
289. Viv. Kint. p. 189.
290. Viv. Kint. p. 187.
291. Viv. Kint. pp. 131, 157.
292. Viv. Kint. p. 163.
317. Col. Dig. II, 2, 22.
327. Col. Dig. II, 2, 24.

-
- X, 43. Col. Dig. II, 3, 22, 3.
 75. Col. Dig. II, 2, 21.
 76. Col. Dig. I, 7, 3.
 83. Col. Dig. II, 4, 22.
 96. Col. Dig. II, 3, 22 ; Viv. Kint. p. 188.
 97. Col. Dig. I, 74.
 115. Col. Dig. II, 4, 20 ; Mit. I, 1, 16 ; Viv. Kint.
 p. 76 ; Sar. Vi. 472 ; Mādh. p. 5.
 116. Col. Dig. II, 4, 21.
 117. Col. Dig. I, 35 ; II, 4, 23.
 118. Col. Dig. II, 2, 23.
 130. Col. Dig. II, 4, 26.
 XI, 16. Vīram. I, 46.
 90. M. Mit. II, 8, 19.
 111-5. Vīram. I, 44.
 177. Col. Dig. IV, 82.
 189. Vīram. III, 1, 10 ; Smṛi. K. XI, 1, 49.
 228. Col. Dig. I, 206.
-

A.

SYNOPSIS

OF

PARALLEL PASSAGES.

By the advice of the editor I add a detailed synopsis of the parallel passages from the six Dharma-sûtras and Smṛitis, as well as of the wholly or partly identical verses from the Mahābhārata, Parāśara, Mānava Śrāddhakalpa, the Upanishads, and some other works. I trust that, though references to the Smṛitis have already been given in the notes to the translation, this addition will not be found useless. The principle on which I have worked is, a different one, and this synopsis shows much more clearly which rules of Manu's work are represented in the older books and which are not. It also shows at a glance which verses I have been able to trace elsewhere. According to what has been said in the Introduction, both points are of some importance. I have used this opportunity to supply some omissions, and to correct the misprints occurring in the figures of the quotations given in the notes. Wherever the notes and the synopsis differ, the latter alone is to be relied on. The addition of an asterisk (*) to a quotation means that the passage is in verse, and that it is thus intimately connected with Manu's Sloka. The passages quoted from the Mahābhārata are all cognate verses. Hence no asterisks have been added.

Abbreviations: Ga.=Gautamiya Dharmaśāstra; Ba.=Baudhāyana Dharmaśāstra; Âp.=Âpastambiya Dharma-sûtra; Va.=Vāsishṭha Dharmaśāstra; Vi.=Viṣṇu Smṛiti; Yâ.=Yâgñavalkya Dharmaśāstra; Par.=Parāśara Smṛiti (Calc. ed.); Mâ. Sr.=Mānava-Śrāddhakalpa (Introduction, pp. xl-xliii); Â. Gri.=Ârvalāyana Grihya-sûtra (Calc. ed.); Sâ. Gri.=Sāṅkhāyana Grihya-sûtra; Pâ. Gri.=Pāraskara Grihya-sûtra; Go. Gri.=Gobhiliya Grihya-sûtra (Calc. ed.); Mai. Up.=Maitrāyaṇyabrāhmaṇopaniṣad; Îrâ. Up.=Îrāvāsyopaniṣad; Sa. Up.=Saṃhitopaniṣad; Nir.=Nirukta; Mah.=Mahābhārata; V. P.=Viṣṇu-purāṇa, Wilson's translation, edited by Dr. F. E. Hall.

MANU I.

1.	39.
2.	40.
3.	41.
4.	42.
5.	43.
6.	44.
7.	45.
8.	46.
9.	47.
10.	V. P. I,	p. 56;	Mah. XII,							48.
		342,	40.							49.
11.	50.
12.	51.
13.	52.
14.	53.
15.	54.
16.	55.
17.	56.
18.	Mah. XII,	233,	12 ^b .							57.
19.	58.
20.	Mah. XII,	233,	8.							59.
21.	Mah. XII,	233,	26.							60.
22.	61.
23.	62.
24.	63.
25.	64.	Mah. XII,	232,	12-13.
26.	65.	Mah. XII,	232,	15.
27.	66.	Mah. XII,	232,	16.
28.	Mah. XII,	233,	16.							67.	Mah. XII,	232,	17.
29.	Mah. XII,	233,	17.							68.	Mah. XII,	232,	18-19.
30.	69.	Mah. XII,	232,	20.
31.	70.	Mah. XII,	232,	21.
32.	71.	Mah. XII,	232,	29.
33.	72.	Mah. XII,	232,	30.
34.	73.	Mah. XII,	232,	31.
35.	74.
36.	75.	Mah. XII,	233,	4.
37.	76.	Mah. XII,	233,	5.
38.	77.	Mah. XII,	233,	6.

78. Mah. XII, 233, 7.	98.
79.	99. Yâ. I, 198.
80.	100.
81. Mah. XII, 232, 23.	101.
82. Mah. XII, 232, 24.	102.
83. Mah. XII, 232, 25.	103.
84. Mah. XII, 232, 26; III, 200, 16.	104.
85. Mah. XII, 232, 27.	105.
86. Mah. XII, 232, 28; Par. I, 23*.	106.
87.	107.
88.	108. Va. VI, 1 ^a .*.
89.	109. Va. VI, 2*, 3-5*.
90.	110.
91.	111.
92.	112.
93.	113.
94. Yâ. I, 198-99.	114.
95.	115.
96.	116.
97.	117.
	118.
	119.

MANU II.

1.	17.
2.	18.
3.	19.
4.	20.
5.	21.
6. Ba. I, 1, 1-6; Ga. I, 1-3; Âp. I, 1, 1-3; Va. I, 4-6.	22. Ba. I, 2, 9-10; Va. I, 8-9.
7.	23. Ba. I, 2, 12; Va. I, 13-15; Yâ. I, 2.
8.	24. Ba. I, 2, 13-15; Âp. I, 32, 18; Vi. LXXXIV, 2, 4.
9.	25.
10.	26. Ga. VIII, 14; Yâ. I, 10.
11.	27. Yâ. I, 13 ^a .
12. Yâ. I, 7*..	28.
13.	29. Mah. III, 180, 34 ^a ; Vi. XXVII, 4; Yâ. I, 11; Â. Gri. I, 15, 1-3; Sâ. Gri. I, 24, 1-
14. Ga. I, 4; Âp. I, 30, 9.
15.
16.

- 3; Pâ. Gri. I, 16, 3-4; Go. Gri. II, 7, 21.
30. Vi. XXVII, 5; Yâ. I, 12; Â. Gri. I, 15, 4; Sâ. Gri. I, 24, 4-5; Pâ. Gri. I, 17, 1; Go. Gri. II, 8, 8.
31. Vi. XXVII, 6-9.
32. Pâ. Gri. I, 17, 4.
33.
34. Vi. XXVII, 10-11; Yâ. I, 12; Â. Gri. I, 16, 1; Sâ. Gri. I, 27, 1; Pâ. Gri. I, 17, 5; I, 19, 1.
35. Vi. XXVII, 12; Yâ. I, 12; Â. Gri. I, 17, 1; Sâ. Gri. I, 28, 1-2; Pâ. Gri. II, 1, 1-2; Go. Gri. II, 9, 1.
36. Ga. I, 5, 7, 11; Ba. I, 3, 7-9; Âp. I, 1, 18; Va. XI, 49-51; Vi. XXVII, 15-17; Yâ. I, 14; Â. Gri. I, 19, 1-4; Sâ. Gri. II, 1, 1, 4-5; Pâ. Gri. II, 2, 1-3; Go. Gri. II, 10, 1-3.
37. Ga. I, 6; Âp. I, 1, 19-20.
38. Vi. XXVII, 26*; Ga. I, 12-14; Ba. I, 3, 12; Âp. I, 1, 21; Va. XI, 71-73; Â. Gri. I, 19, 5-6; Sâ. Gri. II, 1, 6-8; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 36-38; Go. Gri. II, 10, 4.
39. Vi. XXVII, 27*; Ga. XXI, 11; Va. XI, 74; Â. Gri. I, 19, 6; Sâ. Gri. II, 1, 9-13; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 39; Go. Gri. II, 10, 5.
40. Âp. I, 1, 28; 2, 6; Va. XI, 75; Â. Gri. I, 19, 7; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 40; Go. Gri. II, 10, 6.
41. Ga. I, 16-21; Ba. I, 3, 14; Âp. I, 2, 39-3, 9; Va. XI, 61-67; Vi. XXVII, 19-20; Yâ. I, 29; Â. Gri. I, 19, 8; Sâ. Gri. II, 1, 2, 4-5; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 16-19; Go. Gri. II, 10, 8-9.
42. Ga. I, 15; Ba. I, 3, 13; Âp. I, 2, 33-37; Va. XI, 58-60; Vi. XXVII, 18; Yâ. I, 29; Â. Gri. I, 19, 10-11; Sâ. Gri. II, 1, 15-17; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 21-23; Go. Gri. II, 10, 10.
43. Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 24.
44. Ba. I, 8, 5; Vi. XXVII, 19; Yâ. I, 29; Go. Gri. II, 10, 12.
45. Ga. I, 22-24; Ba. I, 3, 15; Âp. I, 2, 38; Va. XI, 52-54; Vi. XXVII, 21, 23; Yâ. I, 29; Â. Gri. I, 19, 12-13; Sâ. Gri. II, 1, 18-20; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 25-28; Go. Gri. II, 10, 11.
46. Ga. I, 26; Ba. I, 3, 15; Va. XI, 55-57; Vi. XXVII, 22; Â. Gri. I, 19, 13; Sâ. Gri. II, 1, 21-24.
47. Ga. I, 25; Vi. XXVII, 24.
48. Ga. II, 8, 35; Âp. I, 3, 25; Â. Gri. I, 22, 5-6; Sâ. Gri. II, 6, 4; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 1; Go. Gri. II, 10, 41-42.
49. Ga. II, 36; Ba. I, 3, 16-17; Âp. I, 3, 28-30; Va. XI, 68-70; Vi. XXVII, 25; Yâ. I, 30; Â. Gri. I, 22, 8; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 2-4.
50. Â. Gri. I, 22, 7; Sâ. Gri. II, 6, 5-6; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 5-7; Go. Gri. II, 10, 43.
51. Ga. II, 39, 40; Âp. I, 3, 31-42; Vi. LXVIII, 40-41; Yâ. I, 31; Â. Gri. I, 22, 9; Sâ. Gri. II, 6, 7; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 8; Go. Gri. II, 10, 44.
52. Mah. XIII, 104, 57.

53. Ga. II, 41; IX, 59; Ba. II, 5, 21; II, 12, 7; Vi. LXVIII, 34-35.
54. Va. III, 69; Ba. II, 12, 7; Vi. LXVIII, 42-43; Yâ. I, 31.
55.
56. Ba. II, 12, 9; II, 13, 11; Yâ. I, 112; Âp. II, 1, 2-3; Vi. LXVIII, 48.
57.
58. Ba. I, 8, 14; Va. III, 26; Vi. LXII, 6; Yâ. I, 18.
59. Ba. I, 8, 15-16; Va. III, 26; Vi. LXII, 1-4; Yâ. I, 19.
60. Ba. I, 8, 19-21; Ga. I, 36; Âp. I, 16, 2-10; Va. III, 27-29; Vi. LXII, 6-8; Yâ. I, 20; Go. Gri. I, 2, 5-9.
61. Ba. I, 8, 17; Âp. I, 15, 4-7; Va. III, 31; Vi. LXII, 5; Yâ. I, 18, 20; Go. Gri. I, 2, 5, 22-23.
62. Ba. I, 8, 23*; Vi. LXII, 9*; Ga. I, 36; Va. III, 31-34; Yâ. I, 21; Go. Gri. I, 2, 29.
63. Ba. I, 8, 5-10; Âp. I, 6, 18-19; Go. Gri. II, 2, 1-3.
64. Vi. XXVII, 29*; Ba. I, 6, 6-9.
65. Yâ. I, 36; Ga. II, 9; Â. Gri. I, 18, 2; Pâ. Gri. II, 1, 3; Go. Gri. III, 1, 1.
66. Vi. XXVII, 13; Yâ. I, 13; Â. Gri. I, 15, 12; 16, 6; 17, 18.
67. Vi. XXII, 32; XXVII, 14; Yâ. I, 13.
68.
69. Ga. II, 6, 8, 10; Yâ. I, 15; Â. Gri. I, 22, 1-2.
70.
71. Ba. I, 3, 25-28; Âp. I, 5, 19, 23; Vi. XXX, 32; Yâ. I, 26; Sâ. Gri. II, 7, 4-6; IV, 8, 15.
72. Ga. I, 46; Âp. I, 15, 22.
73. Ga. I, 46; Sâ. Gri. IV, 8, 12, 16-17.
74. Ga. I, 57; Âp. I, 13, 6-7; Vi. XXX, 33; Sâ. Gri. IV, 8, 12-13.
75. Ga. I, 48-50; Ba. II, 7, 5-7.
76. Vi. LV, 10*.
77. Vi. LV, 11*.
78. Vi. LV, 12*; Ba. II, 11, 6.
79. Vi. LV, 13*; Ba. IV, 1, 29; Va. XXVI, 4.
80. Vi. LV, 14*; Ba. II, 7, 15.
81. Vi. LV, 15*.
82. Vi. LV, 16*; Ba. II, 7, 22.
83. Va. X, 5*; Vi. LV, 17*.
84. Vi. LV, 18*; Ba. IV, 1, 26; Va. XXV, 11.
85. Vi. LV, 19*; Va. XXVI, 9*.
86. Vi. LV, 20*; Va. XXVI, 10*.
87. Vi. LV, 21*; Va. XXVI, 11*.
88.
89.
90.
91.
92.
93.
94.
95.
96.
97.
98.
99.
100.
101. Ga. II, 10-11; Ba. II, 7, 13-14; Âp. I, 30, 8; Va. VII, 16; Vi. XXVIII, 2-3;

- Yâ. I, 23-25; Sâ. Gri. II, 9, 1-3.
 102. Ba. II, 7, 18, 20; Va. XXVI, 2-3.
 103. Ba. II, 7, 15.
 104. Ba. II, 11, 6.
 105. Âp. I, 12, 9; Va. XIII, 7.
 106. Âp. I, 12, 3-5.
 107. Vi. XXX, 34-38; Yâ. I, 41-46; Â. Gri. III, 3, 2-3.
 108. Ga. II, 8, 30, 35; Ba. I, 3, 16; 4, 4-8; Âp. I, 4, 16, 23; 5, 25; Va. VII, 9, 15; Vi. XXVIII, 4, 7, 9, 12; Yâ. I, 25.
 109. Yâ. I, 28.
 110. Ba. I, 4, 2; Âp. I, 32, 22-24; Va. II, 12.
 111. Vi. XXIX, 7*.
 112. Sa. Up. III* (p. 30, Bur.); Ba. I, 4, 1a*; Vi. XXIX, 8*.
 113. Ba. I, 4, 1b*.
 114. Nir. II, 4*; Sa. Up. III* (pp. 29-30, Bur.); Va. II, 8*; Vi. XXIX, 9*.
 115. Nir. II, 4*; Va. II, 9*; Vi. XXIX, 10*.
 116. Vi. XXX, 41-42.
 117. Vi. XXX, 43*; Ga. VI, 1-3, 5; Ba. I, 3, 25-28; Âp. I, 5, 19-20; 14, 7-9; Va. XIII, 41-43; Vi. XXVIII, 14-17; Go. Gri. III, 1, 27.
 118.
 119. Ga. II, 21, 25; Âp. I, 8, 11.
 120. Mah. XIII, 104, 64b-65a.
 121. Âp. I, 5, 15; Ba. I, 3, 23.
 122. Ga. VI, 5; Ba. I, 3, 27; Âp. I, 5, 12; Va. XIII, 44; Vi. XXVIII, 17; Yâ. I, 26; Sâ. Gri. IV, 12, 5.
 123. Va. XIII, 45.
 124. Vi. XXVIII, 17.
 125. Âp. I, 5, 18; Va. XIII, 46.
 126.
 127. Ga. V, 41; Âp. I, 14, 26-29.
 128. Ga. VI, 19.
 129. Vi. XXXII, 7.
 130. Ga. VI, 9; Ba. I, 3, 45; Âp. I, 14, 11; Va. XIII, 41; Vi. XXXII, 4; Sâ. Gri. IV, 12, 1-5.
 131. Ga. VI, 7; Âp. I, 14, 6-9; Vi. XXXII, 2.
 132. Ga. VI, 7-8; Vi. XXXII, 2.
 133. Vi. XXXII, 3.
 134. Âp. I, 14, 13*; Ga. VI, 14-17.
 135. Mah. XIII, 8, 21; Âp. I, 14, 25*; Vi. XXXII, 17*.
 136. Vi. XXXII, 16*; Ga. VI, 20; Va. XIII, 56-57; Yâ. I, 116.
 137. Ga. VI, 10; Yâ. I, 116.
 138. Ga. VI, 24; Ba. II, 6, 30; Âp. II, 11, 7; Va. XIII, 58, 60; Vi. LXIII, 51; Yâ. I, 117.
 139. Ga. VI, 25; Âp. II, 11, 5-6; Va. XIII, 59; Yâ. I, 117.
 140. Ga. I, 9-10; Âp. I, 1, 13; Va. III, 21; Vi. XXIX, 1; Yâ. I, 34.
 141. Va. III, 22-23; Vi. XXIX, 2; Yâ. I, 35.
 142. Yâ. I, 34.
 143. Vi. XXIX, 3; Yâ. I, 35.
 144. Sa. Up. III* (p. 32, Bur.); Nir. II, 4*; Va. II, 10*; Vi. XXX, 47*; Âp. I, 1, 14.
 145. Va. XIII, 48*; Ga. VI, 51; Yâ. I, 35.
 146. Vi. XXX, 44*; Ga. VI, 50; Va. II, 3-5.
 147. Vi. XXX, 45*; Âp. I, 1, 17.
 148. Vi. XXX, 46*; Ga. I, 8; Âp. I, 1, 16.

149.
 150.
 151. Ba. I, 3, 47.
 152.
 153.
 154. Mah. III, 133, 12.
 155. Vi. XXXII, 18*.
 156. Ga. VI, 21-23.
 157. Mah. XII, 36, 46; Va. III, 11*; Ba. I, 1, 10*; Par. VIII, 23*.
 158. Mah. XII, 36, 47; Par. VIII, 24*.
 159. Ga. II, 42; Âp. I, 8, 25-30.
 160.
 161.
 162.
 163.
 164.
 165.
 166. Âp. I, 12, 1-2; Yâ. I, 40.
 167. Ba. II, 11, 8.
 168. Va. III, 2*; Vi. XXVIII, 36.
 169. Va. II, 3*; Vi. XXVIII, 37; Yâ. I, 39.
 170. Mah. III, 180, 34^b; Va. II, 3*; Vi. XXVIII, 38.
 171. Va. II, 6^a*; Ga. I, 10; Va. II, 4-5; Ba. I, 3, 6^a; Âp. II, 15, 19.
 172. Mah. III, 180, 35^a; Va. II, 6^b*; Ba. I, 3, 6^b*; Ga. II, 4-5.
 173.
 174. Vi. XXVII, 28*.
 175.
 176. Ga. II, 8; Va. VII, 17; Vi. XXVIII, 4-5; Yâ. I, 22.
 177. Ga. II, 13; Ba. I, 3, 23-24; Âp. I, 2, 23, 25-26; Yâ. I, 33; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 12; Go. Gri. III, 1, 17, 19, 23.
 178. Ga. II, 13; Ba. I, 3, 24; Âp. I, 3, 11, 17-24; 7, 5; Va. VII, 15; Vi. XXVIII, 11; Yâ. I, 33; Go. Gri. III, 1, 16, 19, 25-26.
 179. Ga. II, 13, 16, 17; Ba. I, 3, 20; Âp. I, 3, 12-13; 7, 3, 8-10; Vi. XXVIII, 11; Yâ. I, 33; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 12; Go. Gri. III, 1, 16.
 180. Vi. XXVIII, 48.
 181. Vi. XXVIII, 51*.
 182. Ba. I, 3, 19; Âp. I, 4, 13-14; Â. Gri. I, 22, 5; Sâ. Gri. II, 6, 8; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 11; Go. Gri. III, 1, 27.
 183. Ga. II, 35; Ba. I, 3, 18; Âp. I, 3, 25; Vi. XXVIII, 9; Yâ. I, 29.
 184. Ga. II, 37-38.
 185.
 186. Ba. I, 3, 19; Âp. I, 4, 16; Vi. XXVIII, 4; Â. Gri. I, 22, 6; Sâ. Gri. II, 6, 8; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 9, 11; Go. Gri. III, 1, 27.
 187. Vi. XXVIII, 52*; Yâ. III, 281.
 188. Yâ. I, 32.
 189. Yâ. I, 32.
 190. Yâ. I, 32.
 191. Ga. II, 29-30; Âp. I, 5, 24-27; Va. VII, 13; Vi. XXVIII, 6-7; Yâ. I, 27; Sâ. Gri. II, 6, 8; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 11; Go. Gri. III, 1, 15.
 192. Ga. II, 22; Âp. I, 5, 17.
 193. Âp. I, 6, 18-20.
 194. Ga. II, 21; Ba. I, 3, 21; Âp. I, 4, 22, 28; Vi. XXVIII, 13.
 195. Ga. II, 25; Âp. I, 6, 5; Vi. XXVIII, 18.

196. Vi. XXVIII, 19*; Ga. II, 28; Ba. I, 3, 38; Va. VII, 12; Âp. I, 6, 6-9; Pâ. Gri. II, 5, 30.
197. Vi. XXVIII, 20-22.
198. Ga. II, 14-15, 21; Âp. I, 2, 21; 3, 15; 6, 13-17; 8, 8-10; Vi. XXVIII, 23; Sâ. Gri. IV, 8, 5, 7-11.
199. Ga. II, 18, 23; Âp. I, 8, 15; Vi. XXVIII, 24-25.
200. Vi. XXVIII, 26.
201.
202.
203. Âp. I, 6, 15, 23.
204. Ba. I, 3, 34; Âp. I, 8, 12-13; Vi. XXVIII, 27-28.
205. Va. XIII, 54^a*; Ga. VI, 3-4; Âp. I, 6, 29-30; 8, 19-20; Vi. XXVIII, 29-30.
206. Âp. I, 7, 28-29.
207. Ga. II, 31; Ba. I, 3, 44; Âp. I, 7, 29-30; Va. XIII, 54; Vi. XXXII, 1.
208. Vi. XXVIII, 31.
209. Ga. II, 32; Ba. I, 3, 36; Âp. I, 7, 30; Vi. XXVIII, 32-33.
210. Ga. II, 31; Ba. I, 3, 37; Âp. I, 7, 27; Vi. XXXII, 2, 5.
211. Ga. II, 32; Ba. I, 3, 37; Âp. I, 7, 27; Vi. XXXII, 6.
212. Vi. XXXII, 13*; Ga. II, 34; Ba. I, 3, 33.
213. Mah. XIII, 48, 38.
214. Mah. XIII, 48, 37.
215.
216. Vi. XXXII, 14*.
217. Vi. XXXII, 15*; Ga. VI, 2; Âp. I, 14, 8.
218.
219. Ga. I, 27; II, 10; Âp. I, 2, 31-32; 30, 8; Va. VII, 11; Vi. XXVIII, 41.
220. Vi. XXVIII, 53*; Ga. XXIII, 21; Ba. II, 7, 16; Âp. II, 12, 13-14; Va. XX, 4.
221. Va. I, 18; Âp. II, 12, 22.
222. Ga. II, 11; Ba. II, 7, 2; Vi. XXVIII, 2.
223. Mah. XIII, 105, 13; Âp. II, 29, 11.
224.
225. Ga. XXI, 15; Âp. I, 14, 6; Vi. XXXI, 1-3.
226.
227.
228. Vi. XXXI, 5.
229. Mah. XII, 108, 5^b.
230. Mah. XII, 108, 6; Vi. XXXI, 7*.
231. Mah. XII, 108, 7; Vi. XXXI, 8; Âp. I, 3, 44.
232. Mah. XII, 108, 8^a.
233. Mah. XII, 108, 8^b-9; Vi. XXXI, 10*.
234. Mah. XII, 108, 12; Vi. XXXI, 9*.
235. Vi. XXXI, 6.
236.
237.
238. Mah. XII, 165, 31^a, 32^a; Âp. II, 29, 11.
239. Mah. XII, 165, 31^b, 32^a.
240.
241. Ga. VII, 1-3; Ba. I, 3, 41-43; Âp. II, 4, 25.
242.
243. Ga. III, 5, 6; Ba. II, 11, 13; Âp. II, 21, 6; Va. VII, 4; Vi. XXVIII, 43; Yâ. I, 49.
244. Ga. III, 9; Yâ. I, 50.
245. Ga. II, 48-49; Âp. I, 7, 19; Vi. XXVIII, 42; Yâ. I, 51; Â. Gri. III, 9, 4; Go. Gri. III, 4, 1-2.

246. Sâ. Gri. III, 1, 18.

247. Ga. III, 7; Vi. XXVIII,
44-45; Yâ. I. 49.

248. Ga. III, 8; Va. VII, 5-6;
Vi. XXVIII, 46; Yâ. I. 49.

249. Vi. XXVIII, 47*.

MANU III.

1. Ga. II, 45-47; Ba. I. 3, 1-4;
Âp. I. 2, 12-16; Yâ. I. 36; Â.
Gri. I. 22, 3-4; Pâ. Gri. II.
5, 13-15; II, 6, 2-3.

2. Va. VIII, 1; Yâ. I. 52.

3. Sâ. Gri. III, 1, 5, 17; Go.
Gri. III, 4, 30-34.

4. Ga. IV, 1; Va. VIII, 1; Yâ.
I. 52; Â. Gri. I. 5, 3-6; III,
9, 4; Sâ. Gri. I. 5, 6-10; Pâ.
Gri. II. 6, 1, 4; Go. Gri. II.
1, 2.

5. Ga. IV, 2-5; Va. VIII, 1-2;
Ba. II. 1, 37-38; Vi. XXIV,
9-10; Yâ. I. 53; Go. Gri.
III, 4, 4-5.

6. Â. Gri. I. 5, 1.

7. Yâ. I. 54.

8. Vi. XXIV, 12-16; Yâ. I. 53.

9.

10.

11. Yâ. I. 53.

12.

13. Ba. I. 16, 2-5; Va. I. 24-25;
Vi. XXIV, 1-4; Yâ. I. 57;
Pâ. Gri. I. 4, 8-11.

14. Va. I. 26; Yâ. I. 56.

15. Vi. XXVI, 6*; Va. I. 27.

16. Ba. II. 2, 7.

17. Va. I. 27.

18. Vi. XXVI, 7*; Va. XIV. 11.

19.

20. Mah. I. 73, 8.

21. Mah. I. 73, 8-9; Ba. I. 20,
1; Va. I. 29; Vi. XXIV, 18.

22.

23. Mah. I. 73, 10; Ga. IV, 15.

24. Mah. I. 73, 10-11; Ga. IV,
14; Ba. I. 20, 10; Âp. II. 12,
3; Vi. XXIV, 27-28.

25. Mah. I. 73, 11-12.

26. Mah. I. 73, 13; Ba. I. 20, 12.

27. Ga. IV, 6; Ba. I. 20, 2;
Âp. II. 11, 17; Va. I. 30; Vi.
XXIV, 19; Yâ. I. 58; Â. Gri.
I, 6.

28. Ga. IV, 9; Ba. I. 20, 5;
Âp. II. 11, 19; Va. I. 31; Vi.
XXIV, 20; Yâ. I. 59; Â. Gri.
I, 6.

29. Ga. IV, 8; Ba. I. 20, 4; Âp.
II. 11, 18; Va. I. 32; Vi.
XXIV, 21; Yâ. I. 59; Â. Gri.
I, 6.

30. Ga. IV, 7; Ba. I. 20, 3; Vi.
XXIV, 22; Yâ. I. 60; Â. Gri.
I, 6.

31. Ga. IV, 11; Ba. I. 20, 6¹;
Âp. II. 12, 1; Va. I. 35; Vi.
XXIV, 24; Yâ. I. 61; Â. Gri.
I, 6.

32. Ga. IV, 10; Ba. I. 20, 7¹;
Âp. II. 11, 20; Va. I. 33; Vi.
XXIV, 23; Yâ. I. 61; Â. Gri.
I, 6.

¹ The order of the Sûtras followed here is that adopted by Dr. Hultzsach in his edition of the text.

33. Ga. IV, 12; Ba. I, 20, 8; Âp. II, 12, 2; Va. I, 34; Vi. XXIV, 25; Yâ. I, 61; Â. Gri. I, 6.
 34. Ga. IV, 13; Ba. I, 20, 9; Vi. XXIV, 26; Yâ. I, 61; Â. Gri. I, 6.
 35.
 36.
 37. Ga. IV, 33; Vi. XXIV, 29; Yâ. I, 58; Â. Gri. I, 6.
 38. Ga. IV, 29-32; Vi. XXIV, 30-32; Yâ. I, 59-60; Â. Gri. I, 6.
 39.
 40.
 41.
 42. Ba. I, 21, 1; Âp. II, 12, 4.
 43. Vi. XXIV, 5; Yâ. I, 62.
 44. Vi. XXIV, 6-8; Yâ. I, 62.
 45. Ga. V, 1-2; Ba. IV, 1, 18-19; Âp. II, 1, 17-18; Va. XII, 21-24; Vi. LXIX, 1; Yâ. I, 79-81; Sâ. Gri. IV, 11, 16; Pâ. Gri. I, 11, 7-8.
 46. Yâ. I, 79.
 47. Yâ. I, 79.
 48. Yâ. I, 79.
 49.
 50. Yâ. I, 79.
 51. Ba. I, 21, 2-3; II, 2, 27; Âp. II, 13, 11; Va. I, 37-38.
 52.
 53. Mah. XIII, 45, 20; Âp. II, 13, 12; Va. I, 36.
 54. Mah. XIII, 46, 1^{b-2^a}.
 55. Mah. XIII, 46, 3; Yâ. I, 82.
 56. Mah. XIII, 46, 5^{b-6^a}.
 57. Mah. XIII, 46, 6^b.
 58. Mah. XIII, 46, 7.
 59.
 60.
 61. Mah. XIII, 46, 4.
 62.
 63. Ba. I, 10, 26*.
 64. Ba. I, 10, 28*.
 65. Ba. I, 10, 28^b*.
 66. Ba. I, 10, 29.
 67. Ga. V, 7-8; Ba. II, 4, 22; Vi. LIX, 1-2; Yâ. I, 97.
 68. Par. II, 11*; Vi. LIX, 19.
 69. Vi. LIX, 20.
 70. Ga. V, 3-4, 9; Ba. II, 5, 11; II, 11, 1; Vi. LIX, 20-25; Yâ. I, 102; Â. Gri. III, 1, 1-4.
 71.
 72. Vi. LIX, 26*.
 73. Sâ. Gri. I, 5, 1; Pâ. Gri. I, 4, 1.
 74. Â. Gri. I, 1, 3; Sâ. Gri. I, 10, 6.
 75. Â. Gri. III, 2, 2.
 76. Mah. XII, 264, 11; Mai. Up. VI, 37; Va. XI, 13.
 77.
 78. Va. VIII, 14-16; Vi. LIX, 27-28.
 79.
 80. Vi. LIX, 29*; Sâ. Gri. II, 16, 6.
 81. Yâ. I, 23, 104.
 82. Mah. XIII, 97, 8^{b-9^a}; Mâ. Sr. IV*; Vi. LXVII, 23-25.
 83. { Ga. V, 10; Ba. II, 5, 11; Âp. II, 3, 12, 16-17; Va.
 84. { XI, 3; Vi. LXVII, 1-3;
 85. { Â. Gri. I, 2, 1-2; Sâ. Gri.
 86. { II, 14, 1-4; Pâ. Gri. II, 9, 1-12.
 87. { Ga. V, 11-17; Âp. II, 3, 12, 15, 18-23; II, 4, 1-8;
 88. { Va. XI, 4; Vi. LXVII, 4-22; Â. Gri. I, 2, 3-10;
 89. { Sâ. Gri. II, 14, 5-17; Pâ.
 90. { Gri. II, 9, 3-10; Go.
 91. { Gri. I, 4, 8-12.

92. Âp. II, 9, 5-6; Vi. LXVII, 26; Yâ. I, 103; Sâ. Gri. II, 14, 22.
93. Âp. II, 4, 9; Vi. LXVII, 28, 32, 44, 46.
94. Ba. II, 5, 15; Âp. II, 4, 10-11; Va. XI, 5; Vi. LIX, 14; LXVII, 27; Yâ. I, 108; Sâ. Gri. II, 14, 20; Pâ. Gri. II, 9, 11-12.
95.
96. Ga. V, 18; Yâ. I, 108; Sâ. Gri. II, 14, 19.
97. Va. III, 8.
98.
99. Ga. V, 31-34; Va. VIII, 12; Âp. II, 4, 13, 16; II, 6, 7-14; Vi. LXVII, 45; Yâ. I, 107.
100. Sâ. Gri. II, 17, 1*; Vi. LXVII, 33.
101. Âp. II, 4, 14*; Ga. V, 35-36; Yâ. I, 107.
102. Va. VIII, 7*; Vi. LXVII, 34*; Ga. V, 40.
103. Va. VIII, 8a*; Vi. LXVII, 35*; Par. I, 43*; Sâ. Gri. II, 16, 3*; Ga. V, 40; Âp. II, 6, 5.
104. Yâ. I, 112.
105. Va. VIII, 8b*; Ga. V, 40; Va. VIII, 4-5; Vi. LXVII, 29-30; Yâ. 107.
106. Ga. V, 38-39; Âp. II, 8, 2-4; Yâ. I, 104.
107. Yâ. I, 107.
108. Âp. II, 6, 16-17; Va. XI, 12.
109.
110. Ga. V, 43.
111. Vi. LXVII, 36*; Ga. V, 44.
112. Vi. LXVII, 37*; Ga. V, 45; Ba. II, 5, 14; Âp. II, 4, 18-20.
113. Vi. LXVII, 38*; Yâ. I, 108.
114. Vi. LXVII, 39*; Ga. V, 25; Ba. II, 13, 5^{a-b}; Âp. II, 4, 12; Yâ. I, 105; Sâ. Gri. II, 14, 21; Pâ. Gri. II, 9, 13.
115. Ba. II, 13, 5^{c-d}; Vi. LXVII, 40; Ba. II, 5, 18.
116. Vi. LXVII, 41*; Âp. II, 8, 2; Yâ. I, 105; Pâ. Gri. II, 9, 14.
117. Vi. LXVII, 42*; Ba. II, 13, 6.
118. Vi. LXVII, 43*; Ba. II, 13, 2.
119. Ga. V, 27-28; Ba. II, 6, 36-38; Âp. II, 8, 5-9; Va. XI, 1-2; Yâ. I, 109-10; Â. Gri. I, 24, 1-4; Sâ. Gri. II, 15, 1-9; Pâ. Gri. I, 3, 1-3; Go. Gri. IV, 10, 24-26.
120. Ga. V, 29-30; Ba. II, 6, 37; Yâ. I, 110; Sâ. Gri. II, 15, 10.
121. Go. Gri. I, 4, 19.
122. Ga. XV, 2; Yâ. I, 217.
123.
124.
125. Ba. II, 15, 10*; Va. XI, 27*; Mâ. Sr. IV*; Ga. XV, 21; Vi. LXXIII, 3-4; Yâ. I, 228; Â. Gri. IV, 7, 2; Sâ. Gri. IV, 1, 2.
126. Ba. II, 15, 11*; Va. XI, 28*; Mâ. Sr. IV*.
127.
128. Va. III, 8a*; Â. Gri. IV, 7, 2.
129. Ga. XV, 21; Va. XI, 29.
130. Vi. LXXXII, 2.
131.

132.
 133.
 134. Mah. XIII, 90, 50; Va. VI, 26; Vi. LXXXIII, 9-13; Yâ. I, 221.
 135. Mah. XIII, 90, 51^a.
 136.
 137.
 138. Ga. XV, 12; Ba. II, 14, 6; Âp. II, 17, 4; Va. XI, 17.
 139. Âp. II, 17, 9.
 140. Mah. XIII, 90, 42.
 141. Mah. XIII, 90, 46; Âp. II, 17, 8^{*}.
 142. Mah. XIII, 90, 44.
 143.
 144. Ba. II, 14, 4; Âp. II, 17, 5-6; Va. XI, 18.
 145. Mâ. Sr. IV^{*}; Ba. II, 14, 4.
 146.
 147.
 148. Mâ. Sr. IV^{*}; Ga. XV, 20; Vi. LXXXIII, 17-18; Yâ. I, 220.
 149. Vi. LXXXII, 1-2.
 150. Ga. XV, 16; Va. XI, 19; Yâ. I, 223-224.
 151. Ga. XV, 16, 18; Vi. LXXXII, 13.
 152. Ga. XV, 18; Vi. LXXXII, 8-9.
 153. Ga. XV, 16, 18; Va. XI, 19; Vi. LXXXII, 26; Yâ. I, 222.
 154. Ga. XV, 16, 18; Va. XI, 19; Yâ. I, 223.
 155. Ga. XV, 17-18; Yâ. I, 222.
 156. Vi. LXXXII, 20-21; Yâ. I, 222, 223.
 157. Vi. LXXXII, 23, 29; Yâ. I, 224.
 158. Mah. XIII, 90, 7; Ga. XV, 18; Yâ. I, 223-224.
 159. Mah. XIII, 90, 8; Ga. XV, 19; Vi. LXXXII, 5, 28; Yâ. I, 222, 223.
 160. Ga. XV, 18; Vi. LXXXII, 18; Yâ. I, 223.
 161. Ga. XV, 18; Âp. II, 17, 21; Va. XI, 19; Vi. LXXXII, 19; Yâ. I, 222.
 162. Âp. II, 17, 21; Vi. LXXXII, 7.
 163.
 164. Ga. XV, 18; Vi. LXXXII, 22; Yâ. I, 223.
 165. Yâ. I, 223.
 166. Ga. XV, 16; Yâ. I, 224.
 167.
 168.
 169.
 170. Mah. XIII, 90, 11^b-12^a.
 171. Par. IV, 20.
 172. Mah. XII, 165, 68^a; Ba. II, 1, 39^{}; Par. IV, 19^{}.
 173.
 174. Par. IV, 17^{*}.
 175.
 176.
 177.
 178.
 179.
 180. Mah. XIII, 90, 13^b-14^a.
 181. Mah. XIII, 90, 14^b-15^a.
 182.
 183.
 184. Mah. XIII, 90, 36; Ga. XV, 9, 28; Âp. II, 17, 22; Vi. LXXXIII, 5; Yâ. I, 219.
 185. Mah. XIII, 90, 26^b-27^a; Mâ. Sr. IV^{*}; Ga. XV, 28; Ba. II, 14, 2; Âp. II, 17, 22; Vi.

- LXXXIII, 2-4, 15, 16; Yâ. I, 219-221.
186. Mâ. Sr. IV*; Yâ. I, 219.
187. Ba. II, 14, 6; Âp. II, 17, 11-15; Va. XI, 17; Vi. LXXXIII, 2; Yâ. I, 225.
188. Ga. XV, 23; Yâ. I, 225.
189. Mâ. Sr. IV.
190.
191. Ga. XV, 22.
192.
193.
194.
195.
196.
197.
198.
199.
200.
201.
202. Mâ. Sr. II; Âp. II, 19, 3-5; Vi. LXXIX, 24; Yâ. I, 236.
203.
204.
205. Vi. LXXXIII, 27; Yâ. I, 244.
206. Ga. XV, 25; Âp. II, 18, 6; Yâ. I, 227; Vi. LXXXV, 62.
207. Vi. LXXXV, 54-61.
208. Vi. LXXXIII, 2; Yâ. I, 226; Â. Gri. IV, 7, 2.
209. Ba. II, 14, 7; Vi. LXXXIII, 12; Yâ. I, 231; Â. Gri. IV, 8, 1; Sâ. Gri. IV, 1, 5.
210. Ba. II, 14, 7; Âp. II, 17, 17-19; Vi. LXXXIII, 12; Yâ. I, 235; Â. Gri. IV, 7, 5-7; Sâ. Gri. IV, 1, 2-3.
211. Ba. II, 14, 7; Â. Gri. IV, 8, 4; Sâ. Gri. IV, 1, 6.
212. Â. Gri. IV, 8, 5-6.
213.
214. Â. Gri. IV, 7, 9.
215. Vi. LXXXIII, 17-19; Yâ. I, 241; Sâ. Gri. IV, 1, 10.
216. Vi. LXXXIII, 22.
217.
218. Vi. LXXXIII, 23.
219.
220. Vi. LXXXV, 1.
221. Vi. LXXXV, 4.
222.
223.
224. Âp. II, 19, 9; Va. XI, 26.
225. Ba. II, 15, 3*; Va. XI, 25*.
226. { Âp. II, 16, 23-24; II, 19,
227. { 19-22; Vi. LXXXIII, 21,
228. { 23-24.
228. Âp. II, 17, 4.
229. Âp. II, 18, 3; Vi. LXXIX, 19-21; LXXXI, 2.
230.
231. Ba. II, 14, 5; Vi. LXXIX, 5-15; Yâ. I, 239.
232. Vi. LXXXIII, 16; Â. Gri. IV, 8, 10; Sâ. Gri. IV, 1, 8.
233.
234. Vi. LXXIX, 16; LXXXIII, 18.
235. Va. XI, 35*, 36; Yâ. I, 235.
236. Vi. LXXXI, 11, 19.
237. Va. XI, 32*; Vi. LXXXI, 20*.
238. Mah. XIII, 90, 19; Vi. LXXXI, 12-13.
239. Ga. XV, 24; Âp. II, 17, 20; Vi. LXXXI, 6-9.
240.
241.
242. Vi. LXXXI, 15.
243. Vi. LXXXI, 18.
244. Vi. LXXXI, 21*; Yâ. I, 240; Â. Gri. IV, 8, 14.

245. Vi. LXXXI, 22^{}; Va. XI, 23^{}.
 246. Vi. LXXXI, 23^{}; Va. XI, 24^{}.
 247. Vi. XXI, 2-3; Yâ. II, 250; Sâ. Gri. IV, 2, 1-4.
 248.
 249.
 250. Mah. XIII, 90, 12^b-13^a; Va. XI, 37^{*}.
 251. Vi. LXXXIII, 26; Yâ. I, 240; Â. Gri. IV, 8, 11; Sâ. Gri. IV, 2, 5-7.
 252. Yâ. I, 243; Â. Gri. IV, 8, 15.
 253. Â. Gri. IV, 8, 11; Sâ. Gri. IV, 1, 12; Yâ. I, 240.
 254. Va. III, 69-71; Sâ. Gri. IV, 2, 5; IV, 4, 14.
 255.
 256.
 257.
 258. Vi. LXXXIII, 27.
 259. Vi. LXXXIII, 28^{}; Yâ. I, 245^{}.
 260. Yâ. I, 256; Go. Gri. IV, 3, 31-34.
 261. Ba. II, 14, 9; Â. Gri. IV, 8, 12-13; Sâ. Gri. IV, 1, 9.
 262. Go. Gri. IV, 3, 27.
 263.
 264.
 265. Va. XI, 21-22; Yâ. I, 256.
 266.
 267. Mah. XIII, 88, 3; Ga. XV, 15; Vi. LXXX, 1; Yâ. I, 257.
 268. Mah. XIII, 88, 5; Ga. XV, 15; Vi. LXXX, 2-5; Yâ. I, 257.
 269. Mah. XIII, 88, 7; Ga. XV, 15; Vi. LXXX, 6-9; Yâ. I, 257-258.
 270. Ga. XV, 15; Âp. II, 16, 27; Vi. LXXX, 10; Yâ. I, 258.
 271. Mah. XIII, 88, 9^b; Ga. XV, 15; Âp. II, 16, 26; Vi. LXXX, 11-12; Yâ. I, 257.
 272. Ga. XV, 15; Âp. II, 17, 1-3; Vi. LXXX, 14; Yâ. I, 259.
 273. Mah. XIII, 88, 15; Âp. II, 19, 22; Yâ. I, 260.
 274. Mah. XIII, 88, 12^a; Mâ. Sr. II; Va. XI, 40^{*}; Vi. LXXXVIII, 52-53.
 275.
 276. Ga. XV, 3; Âp. II, 16, 6; Va. XI, 16.
 277. Ga. XV, 4; Âp. II, 16, 8-22; Vi. LXXXVIII, 8-49; Yâ. I, 261-267.
 278. Âp. II, 16, 5; Va. XI, 36; Vi. LXXXIII, 2.
 279. Yâ. I, 232.
 280. Âp. II, 17, 23; Vi. LXXXVII, 8.
 281.
 282.
 283. Mâ. Sr. II; Ba. II, 11, 3; Âp. I, 13, 1.
 284. Yâ. I, 268.
 285. Mah. III, 2, 60; XII, 244, 12^a-13^b.
 286.

MANU IV.

- | | |
|--|---|
| 1. Mah. XII, 244, 1.
 2. Mah. XII, 263, 6.
 3.
 4.
 5. Sâ. Gri. IV, 11, 13.
 6. Sâ. Gri. IV, 11, 15.
 7. Yâ. I, 128.
 8. Yâ. I, 128.
 9. Mah. XII, 244, 4.
 10.
 11.
 12. Yâ. I, 129.
 13.
 14. Va. XXVII, 8*; Sâ. Gri. IV, 11, 16.
 15. Yâ. I, 129.
 16.
 17. Ba. I, 10, 30; Vi. LXXI, 4; Yâ. I, 129.
 18. Vi. LXXI, 5-6; Yâ. I, 123.
 19. Vi. LXXI, 8; Yâ. I, 99.
 20.
 21. Ga. V, 3.
 22.
 23.
 24.
 25. Ba. II, 4, 23; Va. XI, 46; Vi. LIX, 4; Yâ. I, 124.
 26. Ba. II, 4, 23; Va. XI, 46; Vi. LIX, 5-7, 9; Yâ. I, 125; Sâ. Gri. III, 8, 1.
 27.
 28.
 29.
 30. Yâ. I, 130.
 31. Sâ. Gri. I, 2.
 32. Ga. V, 22; Ba. II, 5, 19-20; Âp. II, 4, 13. | 33. Ga. IX, 63-64; Va. XII, 2; Vi. LXIII, 1; Yâ. I, 130.
 34. Ga. IX, 3; Âp. I, 30, 13; Va. XII, 4; Vi. LXXI, 9.
 35. Ga. IX, 4, 6, 7, 71-72; Ba. I, 5, 7; Âp. I, 30, 10-12; Yâ. I, 131.
 36. Ba. I, 5, 3-5; I, 6, 1; II, 6, 7; Va. XII, 14, 37-38; Âp. I, 8, 2; Vi. LXXI, 13-16; Yâ. I, 133; Sâ. Gri. IV, 11, 21-22; Go. Gri. III, 4, 25-27.
 37. Mah. XIII, 104, 17^b-18^a; Ba. II, 6, 10; Âp. I, 31, 20; Va. XII, 10; Vi. LXXI, 17-21; Yâ. I, 135; Sâ. Gri. IV, 11, 2; Pâ. Gri. II, 7, 6.
 38. Ga. IX, 52; Ba. II, 6, 15; Âp. I, 31, 15; Va. XII, 9; Vi. LXXI, 23; LXIII, 42-43; Â. Gri. III, 9, 6; Pâ. Gri. II, 7, 8; Go. Gri. III, 5, 11.
 39. Ga. IX, 66; Vi. LXIII, 26-30; Yâ. I, 133; Sâ. Gri. IV, 12, 15.
 40. Ga. IX, 29-30; Va. XII, 6; Vi. LXIX, 11; Go. Gri. III, 5, 5.
 41.
 42.
 43. Vi. LXVIII, 46*; Ga. IX, 32; Va. XII, 31; Vi. LXXI, 25; Yâ. I, 131; Sâ. Gri. IV, 11, 10.
 44. Ga. IX, 32, 48; Vi. LXXI, 26; Yâ. I, 135.
 45. Ga. IX, 40, 61; Va. VI, 12; XII, 11; Ba. II, 6, 24; |
|--|---|

- Âp. I, 30, 18; Vi. LX, 11, 16, 19; LXIV, 5; LXVIII, 14; Yâ. I, 131, 134; Â. Gri. III, 9, 6; Pâ. Gri. II, 7, 6.
 46. Va. VI, 12*; Ga. IX, 40; Âp. I, 30, 18; Vi. LX, 4, 10, 21; Yâ. I, 134; Pâ. Gri. II, 7, 15.
 47. Vi. LX, 8-9, 15; Yâ. I, 134.
 48. Ga. IX, 12; Âp. I, 30, 20; Vi. LX, 22; Yâ. I, 134; Sâ. Gri. IV, 12, 23.
 49. Ga. IX, 37-38, 41-43; Ba. I, 10, 10; Âp. I, 30, 14-15; Va. XII, 13; Vi. LX, 1, 3, 23; Yâ. I, 16; Pâ. Gri. II, 7, 15; Sâ. Gri. IV, 12, 20-22.
 50. Va. VI, 10*; Ba. I, 10, 10; Âp. I, 31, 1; Vi. LX, 2; Yâ. I, 16; Sâ. Gri. IV, 12, 25.
 51. Va. VI, 13*.
 52. Va. VI, 11*.
 53. Ga. IX, 32; Âp. I, 15, 20; I, 30, 22; Va. XII, 27; Vi. LXXI, 26, 32-34, 37; Yâ. I, 135, 137; Â. Gri. III, 9, 6; Sâ. Gri. IV, 11, 1.
 54. Ga. IX, 73; Âp. I, 15, 21; II, 12, 6; Vi. LXXI, 36; Yâ. I, 137.
 55. Vi. LXIII, 8; LXVIII, 12; LXXI, 41, 55; see above, II, IV, 220-221.
 56. Âp. I, 30, 19; Vi. LXXI, 32-35; Yâ. I, 137; Sâ. Gri. IV, 12, 26.
 57. Ga. IX, 54-55; Va. XII, 42; Vi. LXX, 13; LXXI, 56, 58; Yâ. I, 138; Sâ. Gri. IV, 11, 6; IV, 12, 7.
 58. Mah. XII, 193, 20; XIII, 163, 50^a; Ba. II, 6, 38*; Vi. LXXI, 60; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 48.
 59. Ga. IX, 22-23; Ba. II, 6, 11, 17; Âp. I, 31, 10, 18; Va. XII, 32-33; Vi. LXXI, 62; Yâ. I, 140.
 60. { Ga. IX, 65; Ba. II, 6, 21,
 31; Âp. I, 15, 22; I, 32,
 61. { 18; Vi. LXIII, 2; LXXI,
 64-68.
 62. Ga. IX, 58; Vi. LXVIII, 27; see above, II, 56-57; Sâ. Gri. IV, 11, 8.
 63. Ga. IX, 9, 50, 56; Ba. II, 6, 5; Vi. LXVIII, 21; LXXI, 69.
 64. Ga. IX, 51; Âp. II, 20, 13; Vi. LXXI, 70-71; Pâ. Gri. II, 7, 3-4.
 65. Vi. LXVIII, 20; LXXI, 39.
 66. Ga. IX, 4; Vi. LXXI, 47; Sâ. Gri. IV, 11, 9.
 67. Vi. LXIII, 13-15, 17.
 68.
 69. Vi. LXXI, 44, 46; Yâ. I, 139.
 70. Ga. IX, 51; Âp. I, 32, 28; Vi. LXXI, 42-43.
 71. Mah. XIII, 104, 15^a.
 72. Ga. IX, 32; Ba. II, 6, 9; Âp. I, 32, 5; Vi. LXIII, 16; Sâ. Gri. IV, 12, 11.
 73. Ga. IX, 32; Ba. II, 6, 13; Âp. I, 31, 23; Yâ. I, 140; Pâ. Gri. II, 7, 6; Go. Gri. III, 5, 35.
 74. Ga. IX, 32; Ba. II, 6, 6; Va. XII, 36; Vi. LXVIII, 19, 23; LXXI, 45; Yâ. I, 138; Go. Gri. III, 5, 12.
 75. Ga. IX, 60; Vi. LXVIII, 29; LXX, 3; Â. Gri. III, 9, 6.
 76. Mah. XIII, 104, 61^b-62^a; Vi. LXVIII, 34; LXX, 1.
 77. Ga. IX, 32; Ba. II, 6, 26;

- Va. XII, 45; Vi. LXIII, 46;
 Yâ. I, 135; Â. Gri. III, 9, 7;
 Sâ. Gri. IV, 12, 19; Pâ. Gri.
 II, 7, 6.
78. Ga. IX, 15; Ba. II, 6, 16;
 Âp. II, 20, 11; Vi. LXIII,
 24-25; Yâ. I, 139.
79.
80. Va. XVIII, 14*; Âp. I, 31,
 24; Vi. LXXI, 48-52.
81. Va. XVIII, 15*.
82. Mah. XIII, 104, 69; Vi.
 LXVIII, 38; LXXI, 53.
83. Vi. LXIV, 12.
84. Yâ. I, 140.
85. Yâ. I, 141.
86.
87.
88. Vi. XLIII, 2-7.
89. Vi. XLIII, 8-15.
90. Vi. XLIII, 16-22.
91.
92. Mah. XIII, 104, 16^a; Va.
 XII, 47; Vi. LX, 1; Sâ. Gri.
 IV, 11, 19.
93. Vi. LXXI, 77.
94. Mah. XIII, 104, 18^b.
95. Ga. XVI, 1-2; Ba. I, 12,
 16; Âp. I, 9, 1, 3; Va. XIII,
 1-5; Vi. XXX, 1; Yâ. I,
 142; Â. Gri. III, 5, 2-3, 14;
 Sâ. Gri. IV, 5, 1-2; Pâ. Gri.
 II, 10, 1-2; II, 11, 10-11;
 Go. Gri. III, 3, 1, 13.
96. Ba. I, 12, 16; Âp. I, 9, 2;
 Vi. XXX, 2; Yâ. I, 143; Sâ.
Gri. IV, 6, 1; Pâ. Gri. II,
 12, 1; Go. Gri. III, 3, 14.
97. Ga. XVI, 40; Vi. XXX, 4;
 Sâ. Gri. IV, 6, 9.
98. Va. XIII, 6-7; Vi. XXX, 3.
99. Ga. XVI, 19; Ba. I, 21, 15;
 Âp. I, 9, 9-11; Va. XVIII,
 12-13; Vi. XXX, 14, 27; Yâ.
 I, 148; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 20.
100.
101. Va. XIII, 8.
102. Ga. XVI, 5-6.
103. Ga. XVI, 22; Ba. I, 21, 6;
 Va. XIII, 36-37; Vi. XXX,
 8, 9; Yâ. I, 145, 149; Sâ.
Gri. IV, 7, 4; Pâ. Gri. II, 11,
 2; Go. Gri. III, 3, 17, 19.
104. Ga. XVI, 10, 23; Âp. I, 11,
 8, 27-28, 31.
105. Ga. XVI, 15-16, 22; Ba. I,
 21, 4; Âp. I, 11, 30-31; Va.
 XIII, 32-33, 35; Vi. XXX,
 9; Yâ. I, 145; Pâ. Gri. II, 11,
 2-3; Go. Gri. III, 3, 18-19.
106. Ba. I, 21, 7; Âp. I, 9, 20-
 24; I, 11, 29; Va. XIII, 9;
 Yâ. 145.
107. Ga. XVI, 19, 45; Ba. I, 21,
 4; II, 6, 33-34; Âp. I, 10,
 22; I, 11, 31; Va. XIII, 17;
 Yâ. I, 150; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 27.
108. Ga. XVI, 7, 19; Ba. I, 21,
 5; Âp. I, 9, 14; I, 10, 17;
 Va. XIII, 11; Vi. XXX, 10;
 Yâ. I, 148; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7,
 24, 37; Pâ. Gri. II, 11, 4, 6;
 Go. Gri. III, 3, 28.
109. Ga. XVI, 11, 12, 18, 34, 46;
 Ba. I, 21, 8, 21; Âp. I, 10,
 25-26; I, 11, 17, 25-26; I,
 32, 12; Vi. XXX, 16; Yâ. I,
 149; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 5, 36;
 Pâ. Gri. II, 11, 2, 4.
110. Ga. XVI, 22; Âp. I, 11, 30;
 Va. XIII, 34; Vi. XXX, 5;
 Yâ. I, 146; Go. Gri. III, 3, 25.
111. Âp. I, 10, 26; I, 11, 25; Yâ.
 I, 146.

112. Ga. XVI, 17, 34; Va. XIII, 14, 23; Vi. XXX. 17; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 45.
113. Ga. XVI, 7, 12, 35; Ba. I, 21, 4, 5, 17, 22; Âp. I, 9, 28; I, 11, 15, 25, 31; Va. XIII, 10, 21-22; Vi. XXX, 4; Yâ. I, 146, 148, 150; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 7-8, 17, 31; Pâ. Gri. II, 11, 1, 4, 6; Go. Gri. III, 3, 20-21.
114. Ba. I, 21, 22*.
115. Ga. XVI, 8; Ba. I, 21, 16; Âp. I, 10, 17; I, 11, 33; Va. XIII, 35; Vi. XXX, 9, 12; Yâ. I, 148, 150; Pâ. Gri. II, 11, 6.
116. Ga. I, 61; XVI, 18; Ba. I, 21, 8; Âp. I, 9, 6; I, 11, 9; Va. XIII, 13, 26-27; Vi. XXX, 15; Yâ. I, 146, 148; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 12, 22, 50; Pâ. Gri. II, 11, 6.
117. Ga. XVI, 48; Va. XIII, 16*; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 55*; Ba. I, 21, 10-11.
118. Ga. XVI, 34; Ba. I, 21, 20; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 2-3; Pâ. Gri. II, 11, 2, 5.
119. Sâ. Gri. IV, 5, 17*; Âp. I, 10, 1-2; Ga. XVI, 36, 38; Vi. XXX, 5, 24-25; Yâ. I, 144, 146; Pâ. Gri. II, 10, 23; II, 11, 2; Go. Gri. III, 3, 22.
120. Ga. XVI, 17; Âp. I, 9, 27; I, 11, 16; Va. XIII, 17-19; Vi. XXX, 18-21; Yâ. I, 151; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 23, 32, 34.
121. Ga. XVI, 20, 34; Âp. I, 10, 20; Va. XIII, 20, 28, 31; Vi. XXX, 11, 19-21; Yâ. I, 149; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 40, 48; Pâ. Gri. II, 11, 4.
122. Âp. I, 11, 8; Vi. XXX, 7; Yâ. I, 149; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 28, 38; Pâ. Gri. II, 11, 1; Go. Gri. III, 3, 28.
123. Ga. XVI, 21; Ba. I, 21, 5; Âp. I, 10, 17-18; Va. XIII, 30; Vi. XXX, 26; Yâ. I, 145, 148; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 21; Pâ. Gri. II, 11, 6.
124.
125.
126. Ga. I, 59; Vi. XXX, 22; Yâ. I, 147; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 33.
127. Yâ. I, 149; Â. Gri. III, 4, 7; Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 6, 9-11, 13-14; Pâ. Gri. II, 11, 7-9; Go. Gri. III, 3, 24-27.
128. Mah. XIII, 104, 29; Ba. I, 21, 18; Âp. I, 31, 21; Va. XII, 21; Vi. LXIX, 1; Yâ. I, 79.
129. Ba. II, 6, 25; Âp. I, 32, 8; Vi. LXIV, 3-4, 6; Â. Gri. III, 9, 6.
130. Vi. LXIII, 40; Yâ. I, 152.
131. Mah. XIII, 104, 27^b-28^a; Vi. LXIII, 19.
132. Vi. LXIII, 41; Yâ. I, 152.
133.
134. Mah. XIII, 104, 21.
135. Yâ. I, 153.
136.
137. Vi. LXXI, 76; Yâ. I, 153.
138. Ga. IX, 68; Vi. LXXI, 73-74; Yâ. I, 132.
139. Ga. IX, 20, 32; Âp. I, 31, 13-14; Vi. LXXI, 57; Yâ. I, 132; Go. Gri. III, 5, 19-20.
140. Mah. XIII, 104, 24^b-25^a; Ba. II, 6, 21-23; Va. XII,

- 43; Vi. LXIII, 4, 6-7, 9; Sâ.
Gri. IV, 12, 12; Go. Gri. III,
 5, 32-34.
 141. Mah. XIII, 104, 35; Vi.
 LXXI, 2.
 142. Âp. I, 15, 18; Yâ. I, 155.
 143. Âp. I, 16, 14.
 144. Vi. LXXI, 79.
 145.
 146. Va. XXVI, 14*.
 147.
 148.
 149.
 150. Vi. LXXI, 86; LXXVI, 1;
 Yâ. I, 217.
 151. Mah. XIII, 104, 82; Ga. IX,
 39; Âp. I, 31, 2; Yâ. I, 154.
 152. Mah. XIII, 104, 23.
 153. Âp. I, 31, 21-22.
 154. Mah. XIII, 104, 65^b-66^a;
 Ba. II, 6, 35; Âp. II, 7, 7-11.
 155. Vi. LXXI, 90*; Yâ. I, 154.
 156. Mah. XIII, 104, 6; Vi.
 LXXI, 91*; Va. VI, 7*.
 157. Va. VI, 6*.
 158. Mah. XIII, 104, 13; Va. VI,
 8*; Vi. LXXI, 92*.
 159.
 160.
 161.
 162. Âp. I, 1, 14; Ga. XXI, 15.
 163. Mah. XIII, 104, 36; Âp. I,
 31, 25; Va. XII, 41; Vi.
 LXXI, 83.
 164. Mah. XIII, 104, 37; Vi.
 LXXI, 80-82.
 165. Ga. XXI, 20.
 166. Ga. XXI, 21.
 167. } Ga. XXI, 22.
 168. }
 169.
 170.
 171.
 172.
 173.
 174. Mah. III, 94, 4.
 175. Ga. IX, 50, 68-70.
 176. Ga. IX, 47, 73; Vi. LXXI,
 84-85; Yâ. I, 156.
 177. Va. VI, 42*.
 178.
 179. Mah. XII, 244, 14^b-15^a;
 Yâ. I, 157.
 180. Mah. XII, 244, 15^b-16^a;
 Yâ. I, 158.
 181. Mah. XII, 244, 16^b-17^a.
 182. Mah. XII, 244, 17^b-18^a.
 183. Mah. XII, 244, 18^b-19^a.
 184. Mah. XII, 244, 19^b-20^a.
 185. Mah. XII, 244, 20^b-21^a.
 186. Vi. LVII, 6-7.
 187. Vi. LVII, 8.
 188. Va. VI, 32*; Yâ. I, 201-
 202.
 189.
 190.
 191. Yâ. I, 202.
 192. Vi. XCIII, 7*.
 193.
 194.
 195. Vi. XCIII, 8*.
 196. Vi. XCIII, 9*.
 197. Vi. XCIII, 10*.
 198. Vi. XCIII, 11*.
 199. Vi. XCIII, 12*.
 200. Vi. XCIII, 13*.
 201. Ba. II, 5, 6; Vi. LXIV, 1;
 Yâ. I, 159.
 202. Ba. II, 6, 29; Yâ. I, 160.
 203. Vi. LXIV, 16; Yâ. I, 159.
 204. Yâ. III, 313-314.
 205. Ga. XVII, 18; Âp. I, 18, 27.
 206.
 207. Ga. XVII, 9-10; Âp. I, 16,

- 23-27; I, 19, 1; Va. XIV, 3;
22-23; Vi. LI, 19; Yâ. I, 162,
167, 168.
208. Ga. XVII, 10-11; Âp. I, 16,
29; Vi. LI, 17-18; Yâ. I,
167, 168.
209. Ga. XVII, 12, 17; Âp. I, 18,
16-17; Va. XIV, 9-10; Vi.
LI, 7, 9, 17; Yâ. I, 161, 168.
210. Mah. XII, 36, 29^a; Ga.
XVII, 17-18; Âp. I, 18, 18,
22-26; I, 19, 1; Va. XIV,
2-3; Vi. LI, 7-9; Yâ. I,
161.
211. Ga. XVII, 14, 16, 17; Âp. I,
17, 17-20; I, 18, 13; I, 19,
15; Va. XIV, 2, 4, 20, 28-29;
Vi. LI, 9, 10; Yâ. I, 161-162,
167; Sâ. Gri. IV, 11, 11; Go.
Gri. III, 5, 9.
212. Âp. I, 19, 15^a*; Va. XIV,
19^a*; Ga. XVII, 17, 19; Âp.
I, 16, 19; I, 17, 3; I, 18, 21;
Va. XIV, 2; Vi. LI, 10; Yâ.
I, 162.
213. Ga. XVII, 17-19, 20; Âp.
I, 17, 4; II, 6, 19-20; Va.
XIV, 2; Vi. LI, 11, 18, 20;
Yâ. I, 162-164, 167.
214. Ga. XVII, 18; Âp. I, 18,
30; Va. XIV, 3; Vi. LI, 12;
Yâ. I, 161, 164, 165.
215. Âp. I, 18, 19; Va. XIV, 5;
Vi. LI, 14; Yâ. I, 161, 163.
216. Ga. XVII, 18; Va. XIV, 3,
11; Vi. LI, 15-16; Yâ. I, 163, 164.
217. Mah. XII, 36, 28^b; Ga.
XVII, 18; Âp. I, 16, 18; Va.
XIV, 6, 11; Yâ. I, 163.
218. Mah. XII, 36, 27; Va. XIV,
2; Vi. LI, 8.
219.
220. Mah. XII, 36, 28^a.
221.
222. Ga. XXIII, 23-24.
223. Âp. I, 18, 3-8, 14.
224. Mah. XII, 265, 11^b-12^a;
Ba. I, 10, 5*; Va. XIV, 17.
225. Mah. XII, 265, 12^b-13^a;
Ba. I, 10, 5*; Va. XIV, 17.
226.
227. Vi. XCII, 32; Yâ. I, 201.
228. Yâ. I, 203.
229. Va. XXIX, 8; Vi. XCI, 3,
15, 16; XCII, 21, 23; Yâ.
I, 210.
230. Vi. XCII, 13, 14; Yâ. I,
210.
231. Vi. XCII, 5, 11, 12; Yâ. I,
204-206, 210.
232. Va. XXIX, 12; Vi. XCII,
22, 27; Yâ. I, 211.
233. Va. XXIX, 19; Yâ. I, 212.
234.
235.
236.
237.
238.
239.
240. Mah. XIII, 111, 11^b-12^a.
241. Mah. XIII, 111, 10^b, 13^b,
14.
242. Mah. XIII, 111, 15^a.
243.
244.
245.
246.
247. Ga. XVII, 3; Âp. I, 18, 1;
Va. XIV, 12; Vi. LVII, 10;
Yâ. I, 214.
248. Va. XIV, 16*; Âp. I, 19,
14*; Vi. LVII, 11*; Yâ. I,
215.

249. Va. XIV, 18*; Âp. I, 19, 14*; Vi. LVII, 12*.	5-6; Âp. I, 17, 14; Yâ. I, 166.
250. Ga. XVII, 3; Ba. I, 9, 8; Âp. I, 18, 1; Va. XIV, 12; Vi. LVII, 10; Yâ. I, 214.	254.
251. Va. XIV, 13*; Vi. LVII, 13*; Ga. XVII, 4; Âp. I, 7, 20; Yâ. I, 216.	255.
252. Vi. LVII, 15*.	256.
253. Vi. LVII, 16*; Ga. XVII,	257.
	258.
	259.
	260. Ga. IX, 74; Ba. II, 3, 1; Va. VIII, 17.

MANU V.

1.	XIV, 48; Vi. LI, 3, 29; Yâ. I, 172, 173, 174.
2.	13. Ga. XVII, 35; Va. XIV, 48; Vi. LI, 27; Yâ. I, 172, 174, 175.
3.	14. Ga. XVII, 29, 34; Ba. I, 12, 3, 8; Va. XIV, 48; Vi. LI, 21, 29; Yâ. I, 173, 174, 175.
4.	15.
5. Ga. XVII, 32; Âp. I, 17, 26, 28; Va. XIV, 33; Vi. LI, 3, 34, 36; Yâ. I, 171.	16. Ga. XVII, 36-37; Ba. I, 12, 8; Vi. LI, 21; Yâ. I, 177-178.
6. Ga. XVII, 32, 33; Va. XIV, 33; Vi. LI, 36; Yâ. I, 171.	17. Ga. XVII, 27; Ba. I, 12, 5; Âp. I, 17, 37; Va. XIV, 39, 44; Vi. LI, 6, 27; Yâ. I, 174.
7. Ga. XVII, 31; Vi. LI, 37; Yâ. I, 171, 173.	18. Ga. XVII, 27; Ba. I, 12, 4-5; Âp. I, 17, 37; Va. XIV, 39, 40, 47; Vi. LI, 6, 26; Yâ. I, 177.
8. Ga. XVII, 22-26; Ba. I, 12, 9-11; Âp. I, 17, 22-24; Va. XIV, 34-35; Vi. LI, 38-40; Yâ. I, 170.	19. Ga. XXIII, 5; Vi. LI, 3-4; Yâ. I, 176.
9. Ga. XVII, 14; Ba. I, 12, 15; Âp. I, 17, 18; Va. XIV, 37-38; Vi. LI, 38, 42; Yâ. I, 167, 170.	20. Yâ. I, 176.
10. Ga. XVII, 14; Ba. I, 12, 14; Âp. I, 17, 19; Vi. LI, 42; Yâ. I, 169.	21.
11. Ga. XVII, 28-29; Ba. I, 12, 1-2; Âp. I, 17, 29, 34; Va. XIV, 48; Vi. LI, 28, 29, 30; Yâ. I, 172.	22. Va. XIV, 15.
12. Ga. XVII, 28-29; Ba. I, 12, 3; Âp. I, 17, 32-33, 35; Va.	23.
	24. Vi. LI, 35; Yâ. I, 169.
	25. Vi. LI, 35; Yâ. I, 169.
	26. Yâ. I, 178.
	27. Yâ. I, 179.
	28. Mah. XII, 10, 6.

29. Mah. XII, 99, 15.
 30.
 31.
 32.
 33.
 34. Vi. LI, 62*.
 35. Va. XI, 34*.
 36. Vi. LI, 59*.
 37.
 38. Vi. LI, 60*; Yâ. I, 180.
 39. Vi. LI, 61*.
 40. Vi. LI, 63*.
 41. Va. IV, 6*; Vi. LI, 64*;
 Sâ. Gri. II, 16, 1*.
 42. Vi. LI, 65*.
 43. Vi. LI, 66*.
 44. Vi. LI, 67*.
 45. Vi. LI, 68*.
 46. Vi. LI, 69*.
 47. Vi. LI, 70*; Yâ. I, 181.
 48. Vi. LI, 71*; Va. IV, 7*.
 49. Vi. LI, 72*.
 50. Vi. LI, 73*.
 51. Vi. LI, 74*.
 52. Mah. XIII, 115, 14^a, 36^a;
 116, 11^a; Vi. LI, 75*.
 53. Mah. XIII, 115, 10, 16; Vi.
 LI, 76*; Yâ. I, 181.
 54. Vi. LI, 77*.
 55. Vi. LI, 78*.
 56.
 57.
 58. Par. III, 21*; Âp. II, 15, 4-5;
 Vi. XXII, 26-27; Yâ. III,
 18, 23.
 59. Ga. XIV, 1; Ba. I, 11, 1;
 Va. IV, 16; Vi. XXII, 1; Yâ.
 III, 18; Â. Gri. IV, 4, 18;
 Sâ. Gri. IV, 7, 6.
 60. Ga. XIV, 13; Ba. I, 11, 2;
 Âp. II, 15, 2-3; Va. IV, 17-
 18; Vi. XXII, 5.
 61. Va. XIV, 20*; Ga. XIV,
 14; Ba. I, 11, 1.
 62. Par. III, 31*; Ga. XIV, 15-
 16; Ba. I, 11, 19-23; Va.
 IV, 21-22; Yâ. III, 19.
 63.
 64. Ga. XIV, 23, 25, 27.
 65. Vi. XXII, 85*; Â. Gri. IV,
 4, 19.
 66. Ga. XIV, 17; Ba. I, 11, 31;
 Vi. XXII, 72; Yâ. III, 20.
 67. Vi. XXII, 29-30; Yâ. III,
 23.
 68. Ba. I, 11, 4; Yâ. III, 1.
 69. Ba. I, 11, 4; Âp. II, 15, 6-7;
 Va. IV, 34; Vi. XXII, 28;
 Yâ. III, 1; Â. Gri. IV, 4, 24;
 Pâ. Gri. III, 10, 4-7.
 70.
 71. Ga. XIV, 20; Ba. I, 11, 30;
 Â. Gri. IV, 4, 26; Sâ. Gri.
 IV, 7, 13; Pâ. Gri. II, 11, 8;
 Go. Gri. III, 3, 24.
 72. Ba. I, 11, 8*; Â. Gri. IV, 4, 23.
 73. Ga. XIV, 37-39; Ba. I, 11,
 24; Âp. II, 15, 9-10; Yâ.
 III, 16; Â. Gri. IV, 4, 16.
 74.
 75. Vi. XXII, 39; Yâ. III, 21;
 Pâ. Gri. III, 10, 44.
 76. Ga. XIV, 44; Va. IV, 36;
 Vi. XXII, 40-41; Yâ. III, 21;
 Pâ. Gri. III, 10, 45.
 77. Yâ. III, 21.
 78. Ga. XIV, 19, 44.
 79. Ga. XIV, 6; Ba. I, 11, 17-
 18; Va. IV, 24; Vi. XXII,
 35; Yâ. III, 20.
 80. Ga. XIV, 28; Ba. I, 11, 28;
 Vi. XXII, 42-44; Yâ. III,
 24; Â. Gri. IV, 4, 21; Sâ.

- Gri.* IV, 7, 9-10; Pâ. Gri. II, 11, 7; Go. Gri. III, 3, 26.
 81. Ga. XIV, 20, 22; Ba. I, 11, 29-30; Vi. XXII, 44; Yâ. III, 24.
 82. Vi. XXII, 45-46; Yâ. III, 24-25; Go. Gri. III, 3, 25.
 83. Ga. XIV, 2-5; Va. IV, 27-30; Vi. XXII, 1-4; Yâ. III, 22.
 84.
 85. Ga. XIV, 30; Ba. I, 9, 5; I, 11, 36; Va. IV, 38; Vi. XXII, 69; Yâ. III, 30.
 86. Ba. I, 15, 31.
 87.
 88. Vi. XXII, 87*; Yâ. III, 5.
 89. Vi. XXII, 56; Yâ. III, 6.
 90. Yâ. III, 6.
 91. Vi. XXII, 86*; Yâ. III, 15.
 92.
 93. Va. XIX, 48*; Ga. XIV, 1, 45-46; Ba. I, 11, 1; Vi. XXII, 48-50; Yâ. III, 27, 28.
 94. Va. XIX, 47*.
 95. Ga. XIV, 9-11; Vi. XXII, 47, 52; Yâ. III, 21, 27.
 96.
 97.
 98. Yâ. III, 29.
 99.
 100.
 101. Ba. I, 11, 33.
 102. Vi. XXII, 8; Yâ. III, 15.
 103. Par. III, 48*; Ga. XIV, 31; Vi. XXII, 64; Yâ. III, 26.
 104.
 105. Vi. XXII, 88*; Ba. I, 8, 52; Yâ. I, 194; III, 31.
 106. Vi. XXII, 89*.
 107. Vi. XXII, 90*; Yâ. III, 32, 33.
 108. Va. III, 58*; Vi. XXII, 91*; Par. VII, 4*; Yâ. III, 32.
 109. Ba. I, 8, 2*; III, 1, 27*; Va. III, 60*; Vi. XXII, 92*; Yâ. III, 33-34.
 110. Vi. XXII, 93*.
 111. Ga. I, 29-30; Ba. I, 8, 32, 46-47; I, 14, 4; Âp. I, 17, 11; Va. III, 49, 50.
 112. Ba. I, 8, 33, 46-47; Va. III, 61-62; Vi. XXIII, 7; Yâ. I, 182.
 113.
 114. Ba. I, 8, 33; Va. III, 58, 63; Vi. XXIII, 25, 26; Yâ. I, 190.
 115. Ga. I, 29; Ba. I, 8, 35; I, 13, 27; I, 14, 16-17; Âp. I, 17, 12; Va. III, 49; Vi. XXIII, 27, 29-30; Yâ. I, 190.
 116. Par. VII, 2*; Ba. I, 8, 50-51; I, 13, 26, 29-32; Âp. I, 17, 13; Vi. XXIII, 8, 10; Yâ. I, 182-183.
 117. Par. VII, 3^a*; Vi. XXIII, 9, 11; Yâ. I, 183-184.
 118. Par. VII, 28^b-29^a*; Ga. I, 29; Ba. I, 8, 42; I, 13, 11; I, 14, 11-12; Va. III, 49; Vi. XXIII, 13-14, 18; Yâ. I, 184.
 119. Ga. I, 33; Ba. I, 8, 36, 38, 43; I, 13, 13; Va. III, 53; Vi. XXIII, 14-15, 18; Yâ. I, 182.

120. Ba. I, 8, 39-42; Va. III, 55; Vi. XXIII, 19-22; Yâ. I, 186-187.
121. Ga. I, 30-31; Ba. I, 8, 45-47; Va. III, 51-52; Vi. XXIII, 23; Yâ. I, 185.
122. Vi. XXIII, 56*; Ga. I, 29; Ba. I, 8, 34; I, 13, 21-25; I, 14, 2; Âp. I, 17, 10; Va. III, 49, 58; Vi. XXIII, 16, 18, 33; Yâ. I, 187-188.
123. Va. III, 59*; Ga. I, 34; Ba. I, 8, 49; I, 14, 3; Vi. XXIII, 5.
124. Va. III, 57*; Ga. I, 31-32; Ba. I, 9, 11; I, 13, 16-20; Va. III, 56; Yâ. I, 188.
125. Vi. XXIII, 38*; Va. XIV, 23; Yâ. I, 189.
126. Ga. I, 42; Va. III, 48; Yâ. I, 191.
127. Mah. XIII, 104, 40; Ba. I, 9, 9*; Va. XIV, 24*; Vi. XXIII, 47*; Yâ. I, 191.
128. Ba. I, 9, 10*; Va. III, 35-36, 47*; Vi. XXIII, 43; Yâ. I, 192.
129. Ba. I, 9, 1*; Vi. XXIII, 48*; Va. III, 46; Yâ. I, 187.
130. Ba. I, 9, 2*; Va. XXVIII, 8*; Vi. XXIII, 49*; Va. III, 45-46; Yâ. I, 187, 193.
131. Vi. XXIII, 50*; Va. III, 45; Yâ. I, 192.
132. Vi. XXIII, 51*; Yâ. I, 194.
133. Vi. XXIII, 52*; Yâ. I, 193.
134. Ga. I, 43; Ba. I, 10, 11-15; Âp. I, 16, 15; Va. VI, 14; Vi. LX, 24; Yâ. I, 17.
135. Vi. XXII, 81*.
136. Va. VI, 18*; Vi. LX, 23; Ba. I, 10, 12-14.
137. Va. VI, 19*; Vi. LX, 26*.
138. Ga. I, 36, 44-45; Ba. I, 8, 26; Âp. I, 16, 7; Va. III, 28; Vi. XXII, 75; LXII, 8.
139. Ga. I, 36; Ba. I, 8, 19-22; Âp. I, 16, 2-6; Va. III, 26-27; Vi. LXII, 6-7; Yâ. I, 20; see also above, II, 60.
140. Âp. II, 3, 4-8.
141. Vi. XXIII, 53*; Ga. I, 38-41; Ba. I, 8, 24-25; Âp. I, 16, 11-13; Va. III, 37; Yâ. I, 195.
142. Ba. I, 10, 34*; Va. III, 42*; Vi. XXIII, 54*; Yâ. I, 195.
143. Vi. XXIII, 55*; Ga. I, 28; Ba. I, 8, 27-29; Va. III, 43.
144. Âp. II, 1, 23; Vi. XXII, 67.
145. Ga. I, 37; Âp. I, 16, 14; Va. III, 38; Vi. XXII, 75; Yâ. I, 196; Go. Grî. I, 2, 32.
146.
147. Ga. XVIII, 1; Ba. II, 3, 44; Va. V, 1; Vi. XXV, 12; see also below, IX, 2.
148. Ba. II, 3, 45; Va. V, 3; Vi. XXV, 13; Yâ. I, 85; see also below, IX, 3.
149. Yâ. I, 86.
150. Vi. XXV, 4-6; Yâ. I, 83.
151. Vi. XXV, 13-14; Yâ. I, 75, 83.
152.
153.
154. Yâ. I, 77.
155. Vi. XXV, 15*; Yâ. I, 77.
156. } Yâ. I, 75.
157. }
158.

159. Âp. II, 23, 5.	164. Va. XXI, 14 ^b .
160. Vi. XXV, 17* ; Par. IV, 26* ; Yâ. I, 75.	165.
161.	166. Yâ. I, 87.
162.	167. } Yâ. I, 89.
163.	168. }
	169.

MANU VI.

1. { Ga. III, 1 ; Ba. II, 17, 2-5 ; Âp. II, 21, 1-5, 19 ; II, 22, 6-7 ; Vi. XCIV, 1-2 ; Yâ. III, 45.	14.
3. Ga. III, 28 ; Ba. II, 11, 15 ; Âp. II, 21, 8-9 ; Vi. XCIV, 3 ; Yâ. III, 45.	15. Âp. II, 22, 24 ; Vi. XCIV, 12 ; Yâ. III, 47.
4. Ga. III, 27 ; Ba. II, 11, 15 ; Va. IX, 9 ; Vi. XC, 4 ; Yâ. III, 45.	16. Va. IX, 4 ; Yâ. III, 46.
5. Ga. III, 29 ; Ba. II, 11, 15 ; Va. IX, 12 ; Vi. XCIV, 5 ; Yâ. III, 46.	17. Ba. III, 3, 2, 9-12 ; Vi. XCV, 14-15 ; Yâ. III, 49.
6. Ga. III, 34 ; Ba. II, 11, 15 ; III, 3, 19 ; Âp. II, 22, 1, 13-14, 17 ; Va. IX, 1 ; Vi. XCIV, 8-10 ; Yâ. III, 46.	18. Ga. III, 35 ; Ba. II, 11, 15 ; III, 2, 11 ; Âp. II, 23, 1 ; Vi. XCIV, 11 ; Yâ. III, 47.
7. Ga. III, 29, 30 ; Ba. II, 11, 15 ; III, 3, 5-7, 20 ; Âp. II, 22, 7 ; Va. IX, 7.	19. Vi. XCV, 5-6 ; Yâ. III, 50.
8. Ba. III, 3, 19 ; Âp. II, 21, 21 ; II, 22, 11 ; Va. IX, 8 ; Vi. XCIV, 6 ; Yâ. III, 48.	20. Vi. XCV, 12-13 ; Yâ. III, 50.
9. Ba. III, 3, 5-7, 20 ; Âp. II, 22, 12 ; Va. IX, 10.	21. Ba. III, 2, 9, 11 ; Âp. II, 23, 2.
10.	22. Ga. III, 26 ; Ba. II, 11, 15 ; Va. IX, 9 ; Vi. XCIV, 10 ; Yâ. III, 48, 51.
11. Âp. II, 22, 17-18.	23. Vi. XCV, 1-4 ; Yâ. III, 52.
12.	24.
13. Ga. III, 26 ; Ba. II, 11, 15 ; Âp. II, 22, 2, 17 ; II, 23, 2 ; Va. IX, 4 ; Vi. XCV, 7-11 ; Yâ. III, 49.	25. Âp. II, 21, 21 ; Va. IX, 11 ; Yâ. III, 54.
	26. Va. IX, 5, 11 ; Vi. XCIV, 7 ; Yâ. III, 45, 51, 54.
	27. Yâ. III, 54.
	28. Vi. XCIV, 13* ; Yâ. III, 55.
	29.
	30.
	31. Ba. III, 3, 9, 13-14 ; Âp. II, 23, 4 ; II, 23, 2 ; Yâ. III, 55.
	32.
	33. Ba. II, 17, 1-6 ; Vi. XCVI, 1.

34. Ba. II, 17, 16*; II, 17, 15.
 35. } Ba. II, 11, 34; Âp. II, 24,
 36. } 8; Yâ. III, 57.
 37. }
 38. Ba. II, 17, 18-28; Vi. XCVI,
 1-2; Yâ. III, 56.
 39. Mah. XII, 245, 28; 279, 22;
 Ba. II, 17, 29; Va. X, 1.
 40. Ba. II, 17, 30; Va. X, 2-3.
 41. Ga. III, 16; Ba. II, 11, 24;
 II, 17, 31; Va. X, 12, 28.
 42. Mah. XII, 246, 4^{b-5^a}.
 43. Mah. XII, 246, 5^b; Ga. III,
 11, 14; Ba. II, 11, 16; Âp.
 II, 21, 10; Va. X, 6; Vi.
 XCVI, 2.
 44. Mah. XII, 246, 7; Ga. III,
 18-19, 25; Ba. II, 11, 19, 21;
 II, 17, 44; Âp. II, 21, 11;
 Va. X, 9-10, 13, 27; Vi.
 XCVI, 10-11.
 45. Mah. XII, 246, 15; Vi.
 XCVI, 18.
 46. Ba. II, 11, 25; II, 17, 43;
 II, 18, 2; Vi. XCVI, 14-17.
 47. Mah. XII, 279, 6^a; Ga. III,
 24; Ba. II, 11, 23; Va. X,
 29; Vi. XCVI, 19-20, 23.
 48. Mah. XII, 279, 6^b; Ba. II,
 18, 3.
 49. Mah. XII, 331, 30; Âp. II,
 21, 13; Va. X, 17, 20.
 50. Va. X, 21*.
 51. Vi. XCVI, 5; Yâ. III, 59.
 52. Ga. III, 22; Ba. II, 11, 18;
 II, 17, 10-11; Va. X, 6; Yâ.
 III, 58.
 53. Vi. XCVI, 8; Yâ. III, 60.
 54. Vi. XCVI, 7; Yâ. III, 60.
 55. Ba. II, 18, 12; Va. X, 24-
 25; Vi. XCVI, 3; Yâ. III, 59.
 56. Ga. III, 15; Ba. II, 11, 22;
 II, 18, 4-6; Va. X, 7-8; Vi.
 XCVI, 6; Yâ. III, 59.
 57. Mah. XII, 279, 10; Va. X,
 22*; Vi. XCVI, 4.
 58. Mah. XII, 279, 11^b; Vi.
 XCVI, 9.
 59. Ba. II, 18, 10-13; Va. X,
 25.
 60. Ba. II, 18, 2-3; Yâ. III, 61.
 61. Vi. XCVI, 36, 38; Yâ. III,
 63-64.
 62. Vi. XCVI, 27-29, 37; Yâ.
 III, 63-64.
 63. Vi. XCVI, 39; Yâ. III, 63-
 64.
 64. Vi. XCVI, 40-42; Yâ. III,
 63-64.
 65. Va. X, 14; Yâ. III, 63-64.
 66. Va. X, 18; Yâ. III, 65.
 67.
 68.
 69.
 70. Va. X, 5.
 71. Va. XXV, 6; Ba. IV, 1, 24.
 72. Vi. XCVI, 24.
 73. Vi. XCVI, 25.
 74.
 75. Âp. II, 21, 14-16.
 76. Mah. XII, 330, 42; Mai. Up.
 III, 4; Vi. XCVI, 43-53.
 77. Mah. XII, 330, 43; Mai.
 Up. III, 4; Vi. XCVI, 43-
 53.
 78.
 79.
 80.
 81.
 82.
 83. Ba. II, 18, 20-27; Âp. II,
 21, 4; Va. X, 4.
 84.
 85.

86.	91.
87. Ga. III, 2-3; Ba. II, 11, 12; Âp. II, 21, 1.	92. Va. X, 30; Yâ. III, 66.
88. Ga. III, 1; Âp. II, 21, 2.	93.
89. Ga. III, 36; Va. VIII, 14; Vi. LIX, 27-29.	94.
90. Va. VIII, 15*; VIII, 16.	95. Va. X, 26.
	96.
	97.

MANU VII.

1.	29.
2.	30.
3.	31. Ga. XI, 4.
4.	32. Vi. IV, 96*; Yâ. I, 333.
5.	33. Vi. IV, 97*.
6.	34.
7.	35.
8.	36.
9.	37. Vi. III, 76.
10.	38. Vi. III, 77.
11.	39.
12.	40.
13.	41.
14. Yâ. I, 353.	42.
15.	43. Ga. XI, 3; Yâ. I, 310.
16. Ga. XII, 51; Va. XIX, 9; Vi. III, 91; Yâ. I, 367.	44.
17.	45.
18. Mah. XII, 15, 2.	46. } Vi. III, 50.
19. Yâ. I, 355.	47. }
20.	48. Vi. III, 51-52.
21.	49.
22. Mah. XII, 15, 34.	50.
23.	51.
24.	52.
25. Mah. XII, 15, 11; Vi. IV, 95*.	53.
26. Ga. XI, 2; Yâ. I, 308- 309.	54. Vi. III, 71; Yâ. I, 311.
27.	55.
28.	56. Yâ. I, 311.
	57.
	58. Yâ. I, 311.
	59.

60.	96. } Ga. X, 20-23.
61. } Vi. III, 16-21.	97. }
62. }	98.
63.	99. Va. XVI, 6; Yâ. I, 316.
64.	100.
65.	101.
66.	102. Mah. XII, 140, 7.
67.	103. Mah. XII, 140, 8.
68.	104.
69. Vi. III, 4-5; Yâ. I, 320.	105. Mah. XII, 83, 49; 140, 24.
70. Mah. XII, 86, 5; Vi. III, 6.	106. Mah. XII, 140, 25.
71.	107.
72.	108.
73.	109.
74.	110.
75.	111.
76. Âp. II, 25, 2-3.	112.
77.	113.
78. Ga. XI, 12-18; Ba. I, 18, 7-8; Va. XIX, 3-6; Vi. III, 70; Yâ. I, 312-313.	114.
79. Âp. II, 26, 1; Vi. III, 78, 81, 84; Yâ. I, 313.	115. Mah. XII, 87, 3; Âp. II, 26, 4-5; Vi. III, 7-10.
80. Yâ. I, 321.	116. Mah. XII, 87, 4; Vi. III, 11-12.
81.	117. Mah. XII, 87, 5; Vi. III, 13-15.
82. } Yâ. I, 314.	118. Mah. XII, 87, 6 ^a .
83. }	119. Mah. XII, 87, 6 ^b -8 ^a .
84. Va. XXX. 7*; Yâ. I, 315.	120. Mah. XII, 87, 9 ^b -10 ^a .
85. Ga. V, 20; Vi. XCIII, 1-4.	121. Mah. XII, 87, 10 ^b -11 ^a ; Âp. II, 26, 4.
86.	122. Mah. XII, 87, 11 ^b -12 ^a ; Yâ. I, 337.
87. Ga. X, 16; Ba. I, 18, 9; Vi. III, 43.	123. Mah. XII, 87, 12 ^b -13 ^a ; Yâ. I, 337.
88. Vi. III, 44; Yâ. I, 322.	124. Yâ. I, 337.
89. Âp. II, 26, 2-3; Vi. III, 45; Yâ. I, 323.	125.
90. Ba. I, 18, 10; Yâ. I, 323.	126.
91. } Ga. X, 18; Ba. I, 18, 11;	127. Mah. XII, 87, 13 ^b -14 ^a .
92. } Âp. II, 10, 11; Yâ. I, 325.	128. Ba. I, 18, 15; Âp. II, 26, 9.
93. }	129.
94. Âp. II, 26, 3; Yâ. I, 324.	130. Ga. X, 24-25; Ba. I, 18, 1;
95. Yâ. I, 324.	Va. I, 42; Vi. III, 22, 24.

131. Ga. X, 27; Va. I, 42; Vi. III, 25.	164.
132. Ga. X, 27; Vi. III, 23, 25.	165.
133. Ga. X, 11; Âp. II, 26, 10; Va. I, 43; XIX, 23; Vi. III, 26.	166.
134. Mah. XIII, 61, 30; Ga. X, 9; Âp. II, 25, 11; Vi. III, 79.	167.
135. Yâ. III, 44.	168.
136. Va. I, 44; Vi. III, 27.	169.
137. Va. XIX, 26-27.	170.
138. Ga. X, 31-32; Va. XIX, 28; Vi. III, 32.	171. Yâ. I, 347.
139. Mah. XII, 87, 18 ^b .	172.
140.	173.
141. Vi. III, 73; Yâ. II, 3.	174.
142. Ga. X, 7-8; Ba. I, 18, 1; Âp. II, 10, 6; Va. XIX, 1; Vi. III, 2; Yâ. I, 334.	175.
143. Mah. XIII, 61, 31.	176.
144.	177.
145.	178.
146.	179.
147. } Yâ. I, 343.	180.
148. }	181.
149.	182. Vi. III, 40; Yâ. I, 347.
150.	183. Vi. III, 41.
151.	184.
152.	185.
153.	186.
154.	187.
155.)	188.
156.) Vi. III, 38; Yâ. I, 344.	189.
157.)	190.
158.)	191. Mah. XII, 100, 47.
159. Vi. III, 38; Yâ. I, 345.	192.
160. Vi. III, 39; Yâ. I, 346.	193.
161.	194.
162.	195.
163.	196.
	197.
	198.
	199.
	200.
	201.
	202. Vi. III, 47.
	203. Vi. III, 42; Yâ. I, 342.
	204.
	205. Yâ. I, 348.

206.	217.
207.	218. Vi. III, 87.
208. Yâ. I, 351.	219. Vi. III, 88.
209.	220. Vi. III, 85.
210.	221. Yâ. I, 328.
211.	222. Yâ. I, 328.
212.	223. } Yâ. I, 329.
213.	224. }
214.	225. Yâ. I, 330.
215.	226.
216. Yâ. I, 326.

MANU VIII.

1. Ga. XIII, 26; Va. XVI, 2; Vi. III, 72; Yâ. I, 359; II, 1.	24.
2.	25. } Yâ. II, 13-15.
3. Ga. XI, 19-24; Va. I, 17; XVI, 4-5.	26. }
4.	27. Ga. X, 48; Va. XVI, 8-9; Vi. III, 65.
5.	28. Vi. III, 65.
6.	29.
7.	30. Ga. X, 36-38; Va. XVI, 19- 20; Yâ. II, 33.
8.	31. Yâ. II, 33.
9. Ga. XIII, 26; Va. XVI, 2; Vi. III, 73; Yâ. II, 3.	32. Yâ. II, 33.
10.	33.
11.	34.
12.	35. Vi. III, 63; Yâ. II, 35.
13.	36. Vi. III, 64; Yâ. II, 35.
14.	37. Ga. X, 44; Va. III, 14; Vi. III, 58; Yâ. II, 34.
15. Mah. III, 313, 28; XII, 90, 15 ^{b-e} .	38. Ga. X, 43; Vi. III, 56-57; Yâ. II, 34.
16.	39. Ga. X, 45; Va. III, 13; Vi. III, 58-62; Yâ. II, 35.
17.	40. Ga. X, 46-47; Âp. II, 26, 8; Vi. III, 66-67; Yâ. II, 36.
18. Ba. I, 19, 8*; Ga. XIII, 11.	41. Ga. XI, 11, 20; Ba. I, 2, 1-8; Âp. II, 15, 1; Va. I, 17; XIX, 7; Vi. III, 3; Yâ. I, 360.
19. Ba. I, 19, 8*.	42.
20.
21.
22.
23.

43. Ga. XIII, 27.
 44. Ga. XI, 23-24; Âp. II, 29, 6;
 Va. XVI, 4-5.
 45.
 46.
 47.
 48.
 49.
 50. Vi. VI, 18; Yâ. II, 40.
 51.
 52.
 53. {
 54. { Yâ. II, 16.
 55. {
 56. {
 57.
 58.
 59. Yâ. II, 11.
 60.
 61. Ga. XIII, 1.
 62. Ba. I, 19, 13; Vi. VIII, 8;
 Yâ. II, 68.
 63. Ga. XIII, 2; Âp. II, 29, 7;
 Va. XVI, 28; Vi. VIII, 8; Yâ.
 II, 68.
 64. Ga. XIII, 2; Vi. VIII, 3;
 Yâ. II, 70-71.
 65. Ba. I, 19, 13; Vi. VIII, 2;
 Yâ. II, 70.
 66. Ba. I, 19, 13; Vi. VIII, 2, 3;
 Yâ. II, 70-71.
 67. Ba. I, 19, 13; Vi. VIII, 2;
 Yâ. II, 70.
 68. Va. XVI, 30*.
 69. Va. XVI, 29; Yâ. II, 69.
 70.
 71.
 72. Ga. XIII, 9; Vi. VIII, 6;
 Yâ. II, 72.
 73. Vi. VIII, 39*; Yâ. II, 78,
 80.
 74. Ba. I, 19, 7; Vi. VIII, 13-14.
 75. Ga. XIII, 7; Ba. I, 19, 14-
 15; Âp. II, 29, 9-10.
 76. Vi. VIII, 12.
 77. Yâ. II, 72.
 78.
 79. Ga. XIII, 5; Âp. II, 29, 7;
 Vi. VIII, 24; Yâ. II, 73.
 80.
 81.
 82.
 83.
 84.
 85.
 86.
 87. Âp. II, 29, 7; Vi. VIII, 19.
 88. Vi. VIII, 20-23.
 89. Vi. VIII, 25; Yâ. II, 73-74.
 90. Ba. I, 19, 10; Vi. VIII, 26;
 Yâ. II, 75.
 91.
 92.
 93. Va. XVI, 33*.
 94.
 95.
 96.
 97.
 98. Ba. I, 19, 12^{b-c*}; Va. XVI,
 34*; Ga. XIII, 14-15.
 99. Ba. I, 19, 12^{d*}; Ga. XIII,
 16.
 100. Ga. XIII, 18-19.
 101.
 102. Ba. I, 10, 24*.
 103.
 104. Ga. XIII, 24-25; Va. XVI,
 36; Vi. VIII, 15; Yâ. II, 83.
 105. Yâ. II, 83.
 106. Ba. I, 19, 16; Vi. VIII, 16.
 107. Ga. XIII, 6; Yâ. II, 76.
 108. Yâ. II, 113.
 109. Ga. XIII, 12-13; Vi. VIII,
 19.

- | | |
|---|---|
| 110. | 149. Va. XVI, 18*; Ga. XII, 38-39; Yâ. II, 25. |
| 111. | 150. |
| 112. Va. XVI, 36*; Ga. XXIII, 29. | 151. Ga. XII, 31, 36; Vi. VI, 11-14, 16-17; Yâ. II, 39. |
| 113. Vi. VIII, 22-23. | 152. |
| 114. } Vi. XI-XII; Yâ. II, 103- | 153. Ga. XII, 30, 34-35. |
| 115. } 109. | 154. |
| 116. | 155. |
| 117. Vi. VIII, 40*. | 156. |
| 118. | 157. |
| 119. } | 158. Vi. VI, 41; Yâ. II, 53. |
| 120. } | 159. Va. XVI, 31*; Ga. XII, 41; Vi. VI, 41; Yâ. II, 47, 53. |
| 121. } Yâ. II, 81. | 160. Vi. VI, 41; Yâ. II, 54. |
| 122. } | 161. |
| 123. } | 162. |
| 124. Ga. XII, 46-47; Vi. V, 2-8. | 163. Yâ. II, 32. |
| 125. | 164. Vi. VII, 11. |
| 126. Ga. XII, 51; Yâ. I, 367. | 165. Vi. VII, 7; Yâ. II, 89. |
| 127. } Va. XIX, 43; Yâ. I, 356. | 166. Vi. VI, 39; Yâ. II, 45. |
| 128. } | 167. |
| 129. } Yâ. I, 366. | 168. Vi. VII, 6; Yâ. II, 89. |
| 130. } | 169. |
| 131. } | 170. Va. XIX, 14-15. |
| 132. } | 171. |
| 133. } Vi. IV, 1-13; Yâ. I, 361- | 172. |
| 134. } 364. | 173. |
| 135. } | 174. |
| 136. } | 175. |
| 137. | 176. Vi. VI, 19; Yâ. II, 40. |
| 138. Vi. IV, 14*; Yâ. I, 365. | 177. |
| 139. Vi. VI, 20-21; Yâ. II, 42. | 178. |
| 140. Ga. XII, 29; Va. II, 51; Yâ. II, 37. | 179. |
| 141. Yâ. II, 37. | 180. Yâ. II, 65. |
| 142. Va. II, 48*; Vi. VI, 2; Yâ. II, 37. | 181. |
| 143. Ga. XII, 32; Vi. VI, 5. | 182. |
| 144. Vi. VI, 6; Yâ. II, 59. | 183. |
| 145. Vi. VI, 7-8; Yâ. II, 58. | 184. |
| 146. | 185. |
| 147. } Ga. XII, 37; Va. XVI, 16- | 186. |
| 148. } 17; Yâ. II, 24. | |

187.	228.
188.	229.
189. Yâ. II, 66.	230. Vi. V, 137; Yâ. II, 164.
190.	231. Vi. V, 139.
191. Vi. V, 169-171.	232. Vi. V, 138; Yâ. II, 164.
192.	233.
193.	234.
194.	235. Vi. V, 137-138.
195.	236.
196.	237. Yâ. II, 167.
197.	238.
198.	239.
199. Yâ. II, 168.	240. Ga. XII, 19-20; Âp. II, 28,
200.	5; Vi. V, 140-146; Yâ. II,
201.	162.
202. Vi. V, 164-165; Yâ. II,	241. Ga. XII, 21-26; Vi. V,
169-170.	147-149; Yâ. II, 161.
203. Yâ. II, 245.	242. Vi. V, 150; Yâ. II, 163.
204. Yâ. I, 66.	243. Âp. II, 28, 1.
205.	244.
206.	245.
207. Yâ. II, 265.	246. } Yâ. II, 151.
208.	247. }
209.	248.
210.	249.
211. Yâ. II, 259.	250. Yâ. II, 151.
212.	251.
213.	252.
214.	253.
215. } Âp. II, 28, 2-3; Vi. V,	254.
216. } 153-154; Yâ. II, 193.	255.
217. }	256. Yâ. II, 152.
218.	257. Yâ. II, 153.
219. Vi. V, 168; Yâ. II, 192.	258.
220.	259.
221.	260.
222. Yâ. II, 177.	261.
223.	262. Va. XVI, 13-15; Yâ. II,
224. } Yâ. I, 66.	154.
225. }	263. Yâ. II, 153.
226.	264.
227.	265. Yâ. II, 153.

266.	302. Âp. II, 25, 15; Vi. V, 196; Yâ. I, 335.
267. Ga. XII, 1, 8, 10; Yâ. II, 207.	303.
268. Ga. XII, 11-13; Yâ. II, 207.	304. Yâ. I, 334.
269. Vi. V, 33-35, 37-38; Yâ. II, 205-206.	305. Mah. XII, 75, 7; Va. I, 44.
270. Ga. XII, 1; Âp. II, 27, 14; Vi. V, 23.	306. Yâ. I, 334.
271. Vi. V, 25.	307.
272. Vi. V, 24.	308. Yâ. I, 336.
273. Vi. V, 26.	309.
274. Vi. V, 27; Yâ. II, 204.	310.
275. Vi. V, 28.	311.
276.	312.
277.	313.
278.	314. Ga. XII, 43; Ba. II, 1, 16; Âp. I, 25, 4; Va. XX, 41; Vi. LII, 1; Yâ. III, 257.
279. Ga. XII, 1; Vi. V, 19; Yâ. II, 215.	315. Ba. II, 1, 17; Va. XX, 41.
280. Yâ. II, 215.	316. Ba. II, 1, 17*; Ga. XII, 44- 45; Âp. I, 25, 4-5; Va. XX, 41; Vi. LII, 2; Yâ. III, 257.
281. Ga. XII, 7; Âp. II, 27, 15; Vi. V, 20.	317. Va. XIX, 44*; Âp. I, 19, 16*.
282. Vi. V, 21-22.	318. Va. XIX, 45*.
283. Vi. V, 65.	319.
284. Vi. V, 66-72; Yâ. II, 218- 220.	320. Vi. V, 12.
285. Vi. V, 55-59.	321. Vi. V, 13.
286. Vi. V, 75-76.	322. Vi. V, 81-82.
287. Vi. V, 75-76; Yâ. II, 222.	323.
288.	324. } Vi. V, 77-78.
289.	325. }
290.	326. }
291. Yâ. II, 299.	327. }
292. Yâ. II, 298-299.	328. } Vi. V, 83-86.
293.	329. }
294.	330. }
295.	331. }
296.	332. Yâ. II, 230.
297. } Vi. V, 50-54.	333.
298. }	334.
299. } Ga. II, 43-44; Âp. I, 8,	335. Mah. XII, 121, 60; Yâ. I, 357*.
300. } 30.	336.
301.

337. } Ga. XII, 15-17.	372. Mah. XII, 165, 65; Ga.
338. } Ga. XII, 28; Âp. I, 28, 3;	XXIII, 15; Va. XXI, 1-3.
Yâ. II, 166.	373. Mah. XII, 165, 66 ^b .
340. Ga. XII, 49-50.	374. Ga. XII, 2; Ba. II, 3, 52;
341.	Âp. II, 27, 9; Va. XXI, 1, 5;
342.	Yâ. II, 286, 294.
343.	375.
344.	376.
345.	377. Âp. II, 26, 20; Va. XXI,
346.	2-3; Yâ. II, 286.
347.	378. Vi. V, 40; Yâ. II, 286.
348. Ba. II, 4, 18; Va. III, 24.	379.
349. Ga. VII, 25; Ba. II, 4, 18;	380. Ga. VIII, 13; Ba. I, 18, 17;
Va. III, 24.	Vi. V, 2.
350. Va. III, 17*; Ba. I, 18, 12-	381.
13; Va. III, 15-16; Vi. V,	382.
191-192; V, 189*.	383.
351. Va. III, 18*; Ba. I, 18, 13;	384.
Va. III, 17; Vi. V, 190*.	385. Vi. V, 41, 43; Yâ. II, 294.
352.	386. Vi. V, 196*.
353.	387.
354. Âp. II, 26, 19; Yâ. II, 285.	388.
355. Âp. II, 26, 18.	389. Vi. V, 163; Yâ. II, 237.
356.	390.
357. } Yâ. II, 284.	391.
358. } Yâ. II, 284.	392. Vi. V, 94; Yâ. II, 263.
359. Ba. II, 4, 2*; II, 4, 1; Âp.	393.
II, 26, 20.	394. Âp. II, 26, 16-17.
360.	395.
361. Yâ. II, 285.	396. Yâ. II, 238.
362. Ba. II, 4, 3*.	397. Yâ. II, 179.
363. Yâ. II, 293.	398. Yâ. II, 261.
364. } Yâ. II, 288.	399. Vi. V, 130; Yâ. II, 261.
365. } Yâ. II, 288.	400. Yâ. II, 262.
366. } Yâ. II, 288.	401. Yâ. II, 252.
367. } Yâ. II, 288.	402. Yâ. II, 251.
368.	403. Va. XIX, 13.
369.	404.
370.	405.
371. Mah. XII, 165, 64; Ga.	406.
XXIII, 14; Vi. V, 18.	407. Vi. V, 132-133.
	408.

409.	415.
410.	416.
411.	417.
412.	418.
413.	419.
414.	420.

MANU IX.

1.	25.
2.	Ga. XVIII, 1; Ba. II, 3, 44; Va. V, 1; Vi. XXV, 12-13; Yâ. I, 85; see also above, V, 147-148.									26.
3.	Mah. XIII, 46, 14; Ba. II, 3, 45*; Va. V, 3*.									27.	Mah. XIII, 46, 11.
4.	Ga. XVIII, 22; Ba. IV, 1, 12, 17-19; Va. XVII, 69- 70; Yâ. I, 64.									28.
5.	29.	See above, V, 165.
6.	Mah. III, 12, 68.									30.	Va. XXI, 14; see above, V, 164.
7.	31.
8.	Yâ. I, 56.									32.	Ga. XVIII, 9-14; Âp. II, 13, 6-7; Va. XVII, 6-9, 63- 64.
9.	Yâ. I, 81.									33.
10.	34.
11.	35.
12.	36.
13.	37.
14.	38.
15.	39.
16.	40.
17.	Mah. XIII, 40, 12 ^b -13 ^a .									41.
18.	Mah. XIII, 40, 11 ^b -12 ^a ; Ba. I, 11, 7; see also above, II, 66.									42.
19.	43.
20.	Sâ. Grî. III, 13, 5; Âp. Sr. I, 9, 9.									44.
21.	45.	Âp. II, 14, 16.
22.	46.
23.	47.	Vi. V, 160; Yâ. I, 65.
24.	48.
										49.
										50.	Va. XVII, 8*.
										51.
										52.
										53.

54. Par. IV, 16*.	1, 14 ^{a-b} *; Ga. XVIII, 20;
55.	Va. XVII, 67-68; Vi. XXIV,
56.	40; Yâ. I, 64.
57.	91.
58.	92. Ga. XVIII, 20.
59. Ga. XVIII, 4-5; Ba. II, 4, 9-	93. Vi. XXIV, 41.
10; Va. XVII, 56; Yâ. I,	94. Mah. XIII, 44, 14 ^a .
68.	95. Mah. XIII, 44, 27 ^a .
60. Va. XVII, 61; Yâ. I, 68.	96.
61. Ga. XVIII, 8.	97.
62. } Yâ. I, 69.	98. Âp. II, 13, 11.
63. }	99.
64.	100.
65.	101.
66.	102.
67.	103.
68.	104. Ga. XXVIII, 1; Ba. II, 3, 3,
69.	8; Vi. XVIII, 36; Yâ. II,
70.	117.
71. Vi. V, 160-161; Yâ. I, 65.	105. Ga. XXVIII, 3; Ba. II, 3,
72. } Vi. V, 162; Yâ. I, 66.	13; Âp. II, 14, 6.
73. }	106.
74.	107. Va. XVII, 1; Vi. XV, 45.
75. Vi. XXV, 9-10; Yâ. I, 84.	108.
76. Ga. XVIII, 15, 17; Va.	109. Mah. XIII, 105, 6 ^a .
XVII, 75-80.	110.
77.	111. Ga. XXVIII, 4.
78.	112. Ga. XXVIII, 5-7; Ba. II,
79.	3, 4; Vi. XVIII, 37; Yâ. II,
80. Yâ. I, 73.	114.
81. Ba. II, 4, 6*.	113.
82.	114. Ga. XXVIII, 11-13; Ba. II,
83.	3, 6; Va. XVII, 43; Yâ. II,
84.	114.
85.	115. Âp. II, 13, 13.
86. Vi. XXVI, 1; Yâ. I, 88.	116. Ga. XXVIII, 8.
87. Mah. XIII, 46, 36 ^b ; Vi.	117. Ga. XXVIII, 9-10; Va.
XXVI, 2-3.	XVII, 42.
88. Ga. XVIII, 21; Va. XVII,	118. Vi. XVIII, 35; Yâ. II,
70; Ba. IV, 1, 11.	124.
89.	119. Ba. II, 3, 9.
90. Mah. XIII, 44, 16; Ba. IV,	120.

121.
 122.
 123. Ga. XXVIII, 14.
 124. Ga. XXVIII, 15.
 125. Ga. XXVIII, 16.
 126.
 127. Ga. XXVIII, 18; Ba. II, 3,
 15; Va. XVII, 15-17; Vi.
 XV, 5.
 128.
 129.
 130. Mah. XIII, 45, 11; Ba. II,
 3, 14.
 131. Mah. XIII, 45, 12; Ga.
 XXVIII, 24; Ba. II, 3, 43;
 Va. XVII, 46; Vi. XVII, 21.
 132.
 133. Mah. XIII, 45, 13^b; Yâ. II, 128.
 134.
 135.
 136. Ga. XXVIII, 19.
 137. Ba. II, 16, 6*; Va. XVII,
 5*; Vi. XV, 46*; Yâ. I, 78.
 138. Vi. XV, 44*.
 139. Vi. XV, 47*.
 140. Ba. II, 3, 16*.
 141. Va. XV, 9-10; Ba. Par. 16.
 142.
 143. } Ga. XXVIII, 23.
 144. }
 145.
 146.
 147.
 148.
 149. Va. XVII, 47.
 150. Mah. XIII, 47, 11.
 151.
 152. Vi. XVIII, 1.
 153. Ba. II, 3, 10; Va. XVII, 48-
 50; Vi. XVIII, 2-5; Yâ. II,
 125.
 154. Vi. XVIII, 32.
 155. Ga. XXVIII, 39.
 156. Vi. XVIII, 28-30, 36-37.
 157. Mah. XIII, 47, 56; Vi.
 XVIII, 31.
 158. Vi. XV, 1.
 159. Ba. II, 3, 31*; Ga. XXVIII,
 32; Va. XVII, 25.
 160. Ba. II, 3, 32*; Ga. XXVIII,
 33; Va. XVII, 38.
 161.
 162. Vi. XVII, 23*.
 163. Vi. XV, 28-30.
 164. Ba. II, 3, 11.
 165. Ga. XXVIII, 34; Yâ. II, 132.
 166. Ba. II, 3, 14; Âp. II, 13, 1;
 Va. XVII, 13; Vi. XV, 2; Yâ.
 II, 128.
 167. Ba. II, 3, 17-18; Va. XVII,
 14; Vi. XV, 3; Yâ. I, 69; II,
 127-128.
 168. Ba. II, 3, 20; Va. XVII, 29;
 Vi. XV, 18-19; Yâ. II, 130.
 169. Ba. II, 3, 21; Yâ. II, 131.
 170. Ba. II, 3, 22; Va. XVII, 24;
 Vi. XV, 13-14; Yâ. II, 129.
 171. Ba. II, 3, 23; Va. XVII, 37;
 Vi. XV, 24-25; Yâ. II, 132.
 172. Ba. II, 3, 24; Va. XVII, 22-
 23; Vi. XV, 10-11; Yâ. II,
 129.
 173. Ba. II, 3, 25; Va. XVII, 26-
 27; Vi. XV, 15-16; Yâ. II,
 131.
 174. Ba. II, 3, 26; Va. XVII, 30-
 32; Vi. XV, 20-21; Yâ. II,
 131.
 175. Ba. II, 3, 27; Va. XVII, 18-
 19; Vi. XV, 7-9; Yâ. II,
 130.
 176. Ba. IV, 1, 16^{b-c}*; Va. XVII,
 74; Vi. XV, 8.

177. Ba. II, 3, 28; Va. XVII, 33-35; Vi. XV, 22-23; Yâ. II, 131.
178. Ba. II, 3, 30; Va. XVII, 38; Vi. XV, 27.
179. Yâ. II, 133.
180.
181. Ba. II, 3, 33-35; Âp. II, 13, 6-10.
182. Va. XVII, 10*; Vi. XV, 42.
183. Va. XVII, 11*; Vi. XV, 41.
184. Va. XVII, 39, 81; Vi. XV, 28-29.
185. Vi. XVII, 6, 8; Yâ. II, 135.
186. Mâ. Sr. III*; Ba. I, 11, 9.
187. Ga. XXVIII, 21; Ba. I, 11, 10-13; Âp. II, 14, 2-3; Va. XVII, 81-82; Vi. XVII, 11; Yâ. II, 135.
188. Ga. XXVIII, 41; Ba. I, 11, 14; Va. XVII, 84-86; Vi. XVII, 14.
189. Ga. XXVIII, 42; Ba. I, 11, 15-16; Âp. II, 14, 5; Va. XVII, 83; Vi. XVII, 13.
190.
191.
192. } Yâ. II, 117.
193. }
194. Vi. XVII, 18; Yâ. II, 143.
195.
196. Vi. XVII, 19; Yâ. II, 145.
197. Vi. XVII, 20; Yâ. II, 145.
198. Mah. XIII, 47, 25.
199. Mah. XIII, 47, 24^b.
200. Vi. XVII, 22*.
201. Ga. XXVIII, 43; Ba. II, 3, 37-40; Âp. II, 14, 1; Va. XVII, 52-53; Vi. XV, 32; Yâ. II, 140.
202. Ga. XXVIII, 43; Ba. II, 3, 37-40; Va. XVII, 54; Vi. XV, 33; Yâ. II, 140.
203. Ga. XXVIII, 44; Vi. XV, 34-36; Yâ. II, 141.
204.
205. Ga. XXVIII, 31.
206. Ga. XXVIII, 30; Yâ. II, 118-119.
207. Yâ. II, 116.
208. Mah. XIII, 105, 11; Vi. XVIII, 42*.
209. Vi. XVIII, 43*; Yâ. II, 119.
210. Vi. XVIII, 41*; Yâ. II, 120.
211.
212. Vi. XVII, 17; Yâ. II, 138.
213. Mah. XIII, 105, 7.
214. Mah. XIII, 105, 10; Ga. XXVIII, 40; Ba. II, 3, 38; Âp. II, 14, 15.
215. Mah. XIII, 105, 12; Yâ. II, 120.
216. Ga. XXVIII, 29; Vi. XVII, 3; Yâ. II, 122.
217. Vi. XVII, 7; Yâ. II, 135.
218. Yâ. II, 126.
219. Vi. XVIII, 44*; Ga. XXVIII, 46-47.
220.
221.
222.
223.
224. Yâ. II, 304.
225.
226.
227.
228.
229. Yâ. II, 43.
230.
231. Vi. V, 180.
232. Vi. V, 9, 11; Yâ. II, 240.
233.

234. Yâ. II, 305.	276. Yâ. II, 273.
235.	277. Vi. V, 136.
236.	278. Yâ. II, 276.
237. Ba. I, 18, 18; Vi. V, 3-7.	279. Yâ. II, 279.
238.	280. Yâ. II, 273.
239.	281.
240.	282. Vi. V, 106-107.
241.	283.
242.	284. Vi. V, 175-177.
243.	285. Vi. V, 174.
244.	286. Vi. V, 124; Yâ. II, 245-
245.	246.
246.	287.
247.	288.
248.	289.
249.	290.
250.	291.
251.	292. Yâ. II, 297.
252.	293.
253.	294. Yâ. I, 352.
254.	295.
255.	296.
256.	297.
257.	298.
258.	299.
259.	300.
260.	301.
261.	302.
262.	303.
263.	304.
264.	305.
265.	306.
266.	307.
267.	308.
268.	309.
269.	310.
270.	311.
271.	312.
272.	313.
273.	314.
274. Vi. V, 74.	315. Mah. XIII, 152, 16.
275.	316.

317. Mah. XIII, 152, 21.	327. Mah. XII, 60, 23 ^b -24 ^a .
318. Mah. XIII, 152, 22.	328. Mah. XII, 60, 26 ^b -27 ^a .
319. Mah. XIII, 152, 23.	329.
320. Mah. XII, 78, 21.	330.
321. Mah. XII, 56, 24; 78, 22.	331.
322. Ga. XI, 14; Va. XIX, 4.	332.
323.	333.
324.	334.
325.	335.
326.	336.

MANU X.

1.	1-3; Vi. XVI, 4; Yâ. I, 93-94.
2.	17. Ba. I, 17, 8; Vi. XVI, 5-6; Yâ. I, 93-94.
3.	18. Ga. IV, 19; Ba. I, 16, 8, 11-12; I, 17, 13-14; Va. XVIII, 5; Vi. XVI, 5.
4. Mah. XIII, 46, 18 ^a ; Âp. I, 1, 3-5; Ba. I, 16, 1; Va. II, 1-2; Yâ. I, 10.	19. Ba. I, 16, 8, 9-10; I, 17, 11-12; Va. XVIII, 2.
5. Âp. I, 13, 1; Vi. XVI, 1; Yâ. I, 90.	20. Ba. I, 16, 16 [*] .
6. Ba. I, 16, 6; Âp. II, 13, 4-5.	21. Ga. IV, 20.
7. Ga. IV, 16; Ba. I, 16, 7; Va. XVIII, 8.	22. Ga. IV, 21.
8. Ga. IV, 16; Ba. I, 16, 7; I, 17, 3; Va. XVIII, 8; Yâ. I, 91.	23.
9. Ga. IV, 16; Ba. I, 16, 7; I, 17, 4; Va. XVIII, 8; Yâ. I, 92.	24. Yâ. I, 96.
10.	25.
11. Ga. IV, 17; Ba. I, 16, 8; I, 17, 7-8; Va. XVIII, 6; Vi. XVI, 5-6; Yâ. I, 93-94.	26.
12. Ga. IV, 17; Ba. I, 16, 8; Vi. XVI, 4, 6; Yâ. I, 93-94.	27. Mah. XIII, 48, 14.
13.	28. Mah. XIII, 48, 15.
14.	29. Mah. XIII, 48, 16; Vi. XVI, 7.
15.	30. Mah. XIII, 48, 17.
16. Ba. I, 17, 7; Va. XVIII, 8.	31. Mah. XIII, 48, 18.
	32. Mah. XIII, 48, 19 ^c -20 ^a .
	33. Mah. XIII, 48, 20 ^b .
	34. Mah. XIII, 48, 21 ^a .
	35. Mah. XIII, 48, 24 ^b -25 ^a .
	36. Mah. XIII, 48, 25 ^b -26 ^a .
	37. Mah. XIII, 48, 26 ^b -27 ^a .
	38. Mah. XIII, 48, 27 ^b .

39. Mah. XIII, 48, 28^b; Va. XVIII, 3.
 40. Mah. XIII, 48, 29; Vi. XVI, 17*.
 41.
 42.
 43. Mah. XIII, 33, 21; 35, 17.
 44. Mah. XIII, 33, 22; 35, 18.
 45.
 46.
 47. Vi. XVI, 10, 12-13.
 48. Vi. XVI, 8.
 49. Vi. XVI, 9.
 50. Mah. XIII, 48, 32^a, 33^a.
 51. Vi. XVI, 14.
 52. Mah. XIII, 48, 32^b; Vi. XVI, 14.
 53.
 54.
 55.
 56. Vi. XVI, 11.
 57. Va. XVIII, 7; Vi. XVI, 17.
 58. Mah. XIII, 48, 41.
 59. Mah. XIII, 48, 42.
 60. Mah. XIII, 48, 44.
 61.
 62. Mah. XIII, 48, 34^a, 35^a; Vi. XVI, 18*.
 63. Yâ. I, 122*; Ga. VIII, 23; Âp. I, 23, 6; Vi. II, 16-17.
 64. Ga. IV, 22; Yâ. I, 96.
 65.
 66.
 67.
 68.
 69.
 70.
 71.
 72.
 73.
74. Va. II, 13.
 75. Ga. X, 1-2; Ba. I, 18, 2; Âp. II, 10, 4; Va. II, 13-14; Vi. II, 5, 9, 11; Yâ. I, 118.
 76. Vi. II, 11.
 77. Ga. X, 1; Ba. I, 18, 3; Âp. II, 10, 6; Va. II, 15-16; Vi. II, 9; Yâ. I, 118.
 78. Ga. X, 1; Ba. I, 18, 4; Âp. II, 10, 7; Va. II, 18; Vi. II, 9.
 79. Ga. X, 7, 15, 49; Ba. I, 18, 3-4; Âp. II, 10, 6-7; Va. II, 17, 19; Vi. II, 6-7, 12-13; Yâ. I, 119.
 80.
 81. Ga. VII, 6; Ba. II, 4, 16; Va. II, 22; Vi. II, 15; Yâ. III, 35.
 82. Ga. VII, 7; Ba. II, 4, 19-21; Va. II, 24, 32-36; Yâ. III, 35; Sâ. Grî. IV, 11, 15.
 83.
 84. Mah. III, 208, 23; XII, 263, 45^b-46^a; Ba. II, 4, 20-21; Va. II, 32-36.
 85. Ga. VII, 8; Âp. I, 20, 10-11; Yâ. III, 39.
 86. Ga. VII, 9, 14-15; Ba. II, 2, 27; Âp. I, 20, 12-13; Va. II, 24, 26, 29; Vi. LIV, 18, 21; Yâ. III, 36, 38.
 87. Ga. VII, 9, 10; Va. II, 24-26; Vi. LIV, 18, 20; Yâ. III, 36-38.
 88. Ga. VII, 9, 11-12; Âp. I, 20, 12-13; Va. II, 26; Vi. LIV, 18-19, 21; Yâ. III, 36-38.
 89. Ga. VII, 13-15; Âp. I, 20, 12; Va. II, 28; Vi. LIV, 21; Yâ. III, 37-38.
 90. Va. II, 31; Yâ. III, 39.

91. Ba. II, 2, 26 *; Va. II, 30 *.	46; Vi. LIV, 28; see below,
92. Va. II, 27 *; Yâ. III, 40.	XI, 194.
93. Yâ. III, 40.	112.
94. Ga. VII, 16-17, 21; Âp. I,	113.
20, 15; Va. II, 37-39.	114. Va. XII, 3.
95. Ga. VII, 26; Vi. II, 15.	115. Ga. X, 39-42.
96. Va. II, 23.	116. Yâ. III, 42.
97.	117. Va. II, 40-43.
98. Va. II, 23; Vi. II, 15.	118.
99. } Ga. X, 57, 60; Vi. II, 14;	119. Ga. X, 16, 41; see also
100. } Yâ. I, 120.	above, VII, 88.
101.	120. Va. XIX, 37.
102. Ga. VII, 4; Âp. I, 18, 5-8,	121. Ga. X, 56; Yâ. I, 120.
14-15.	122.
103. Va. XXVII, 9.	123.
104. Yâ. III, 41.	124. Ga. X, 61.
105.	125. Ga. X, 58-59.
106.	126. } Ga. X, 64-65; Yâ. I, 121,
107.	127. } 262.
108.	128.
109.	129. Ga. X, 63.
110.	130.
111. Âp. I, 28, 11; Va. XX, 45-	131.

MANU XI.

1. Mah. XII, 165, 1; Ga. V,	12. Mah. XII, 165, 7; Ga.
21; Ba. II, 5, 19; Âp. II,	XVIII, 25.
10, 1-2.	13. Mah. XII, 165, 8; Ga.
2. Mah. XII, 165, 2 ^b .	XVIII, 24.
3. Mah. XII, 165, 3 ^b ; Ga. V,	14. Mah. XII, 165, 9; Ga.
22; Ba. II, 5, 20.	XVIII, 26-27.
4. Mah. XII, 165, 4.	15. Mah. XII, 165, 10.
5. Âp. II, 10, 3.	16. Mah. XII, 165, 11; Ga.
6.	XVIII, 28-29; Yâ. III, 43.
7. Mah. XII, 165, 5 ^{b-c} ; Va.	17. Mah. XII, 165, 12; Ga.
VIII, 10; Vi. LIX, 8-9; Yâ.	XVIII, 30; Yâ. III, 43.
I, 124.	18.
8.	19.
9.	20.
10.	21. Mah. XII, 165, 13; Ga.
11. Mah. XII, 165, 6.	XVIII, 32.

22. Mah. XII, 165, 14^a; Ga. XVIII, 31; Yâ. III, 44.
 23. Mah. XII, 165, 14^b.
 24. Vi. LIX, 11; Yâ. I, 127.
 25. Yâ. I, 127.
 26.
 27. Mah. XII, 165, 15^a; Vi. LIX, 10; Yâ. I, 126.
 28. Mah. XII, 165, 15^b.
 29. Mah. XII, 165, 16.
 30. Mah. XII, 165, 17.
 31. Mah. XII, 165, 18.
 32.
 33.
 34. Mah. XII, 165, 20^b-21^a; Va. XXVI, 16.
 35. Mah. XII, 165, 19^b-20^a.
 36. Mah. XII, 165, 21^b-22^a; Ga. II, 4; Âp. II, 15, 18-19; Va. II, 6.
 37. Mah. XII, 165, 22^b-22^c.
 38. Mah. XII, 165, 23.
 39. Mah. XII, 165, 24.
 40. Mah. XII, 165, 25.
 41. Ga. XXII, 34; Va. I, 18; XXI, 27; Vi. LIV, 13.
 42.
 43.
 44. Mah. XII, 34, 2; Ga. XIX, 2; Ba. III, 10, 2; Va. XXII, 1; Yâ. III, 219-220.
 45. Ga. XIX, 3-6; Va. XX, 1-2; Ba. III, 10, 3-5; Va. XXII, 3-5; Yâ. III, 226.
 46. Yâ. III, 226.
 47.
 48. Va. XX, 43; Vi. XLV, 1.
 49. Va. I, 18; XX, 6; XX, 44; Vi. XLV, 3-6; Yâ. III, 209.
 50. Vi. XLV, 7-10; Yâ. III, 211.
 51. Vi. XLV, 11-14; Yâ. III, 210.
 52. Vi. XLV, 20-21, 31.
 53. Vi. XLV, 32^{*}.
 54. Yâ. III, 220.
 55. Ga. XXI, 1; Âp. I, 21, 8; Va. I, 19-21; Vi. XXXV, 1-2; Yâ. III, 227.
 56. Ga. XXI, 10; Vi. XXXVI, 1; XXXVII, 1-3; Yâ. III, 228.
 57. Ga. XXI, 1; Âp. I, 21, 8; Vi. XXXVI, 2; XXXVII, 4-5; Yâ. III, 228-229.
 58. Ba. II, 2, 3-4; Vi. XXXVI, 3; Yâ. III, 230.
 59. Ga. XXI, 1; Ba. II, 2, 13; Âp. I, 21, 8-9, 17-18; Vi. XXXVI, 4-7; Yâ. III, 231.
 60. Ga. XXI, 1, 11; Âp. I, 21, 9-10; Va. I, 23; Vi. XXXVII, 6, 9-10, 13; Yâ. III, 234, 235, 237, 239-240.
 61. Ga. XXI, 11; Vi. XXXVII, 15-18; Yâ. III, 234-235, 238.
 62. Ga. XXI, 11; Ba. II, 2, 13; Yâ. III, 236-238.
 63. Ga. XXI, 11; Ba. II, 2, 5; Vi. XXXVII, 14, 19-21; Yâ. III, 234-235.
 64. Ga. XXI, 11; Vi. XXXVII, 22-26; Yâ. III, 240, 242.
 65. Ga. XXI, 11; Âp. I, 21, 14-15; Vi. XXXVII, 7, 24, 27; Yâ. III, 239-240.
 66. Ga. XXI, 11; Ba. II, 2, 13; Vi. XXXVII, 28-30, 32; Yâ. III, 234, 242.
 67. Ga. XXI, 1, 11; Va. I, 23; Vi. XXXVII, 13, 31, 33; Yâ. III, 236-237, 239.
 68. Vi. XXXVIII, 1-6.

69. Vi. XXXIX, 1.
 70. Ba. II, 2, 6; Vi. XL, 1.
 71. Ba. II, 2, 15-16; Âp. I, 21, 12-17; Vi. XLI, 1-4.
 72. Ga. XXII, 1; Ba. II, 1, 1.
 73. Ga. XXII, 4-6; Ba. II, 1, 2-3; Âp. I, 24, 11-20; I, 28, 21-29, 1; Vi. L, 1-6, 15; Yâ. III, 243.
 74. Mah. XII, 35, 4; Ga. XXII, 2-3; Âp. I, 25, 11; Yâ. III, 248.
 75. Ga. XXII, 10; Ba. II, 1, 4.
 76. Mah. XII, 35, 5^a.
 77. Mah. XII, 35, 5^b-6^a; Yâ. III, 250.
 78. Yâ. III, 249.
 79. Âp. I, 24, 18.
 80. Par. VIII, 42*; Ga. XXII, 7; Va. XX, 27; Yâ. III, 244-245.
 81. Ga. XXII, 8; Âp. I, 24, 21; Va. XX, 28; Yâ. III, 246.
 82.
 83. Ga. XXII, 9; Ba. II, 1, 5; Âp. I, 24, 22; Vi. XXXV, 6; Yâ. III, 244.
 84.
 85. See above, IX, 317; I, 93-95.
 86. See below, XII, 112.
 87.
 88. Ga. XXII, 12-13; Ba. II, 1, 12; Âp. I, 24, 6-9; Va. XX, 23-24, 34-36; Vi. L, 7-9; Yâ. III, 251.
 89. Vi. L, 10.
 90. Ga. XXI, 7; Ba. II, 1, 6.
 91. Mah. XII, 165, 48^a; Ga. XXIII, 1; Ba. II, 1, 18; Âp. I, 25, 3; Va. XX, 22; Yâ. III, 253.
 92. Yâ. III, 253.
 93. Vi. LI, 1; Yâ. III, 254.
 94.
 95. Vi. XXII, 82*.
 96.
 97.
 98.
 99.
 100. } See above, VIII, 314-316.
 101. }
 102. Âp. I, 25, 10; Vi. LII, 3; Yâ. III, 258.
 103.
 104. Ga. XXIII, 8-9; Ba. II, 1, 13-14; Âp. I, 25, 2; Va. XX, 14; Vi. XXXIV, 2; Yâ. III, 259.
 105. Mah. XII, 165, 50^b-51^a; Ga. XXIII, 10-11; Ba. II, 1, 15; Âp. I, 25, 1; Va. XX, 13; Yâ. III, 259.
 106. Vi. LIII, 1; Yâ. III, 260.
 107. Vi. LIII, 6; Yâ. III, 260.
 108.
 109. Ga. XXII, 18; Âp. I, 26, 1; Va. XXI, 18; Vi. L, 16; Yâ. III, 263.
 110. Vi. L, 22.
 111. Vi. L, 16; Yâ. III, 263.
 112. Vi. L, 17-18.
 113. Par. VIII, 41*; Vi. L, 19-20.
 114. Par. VIII, 39*; Vi. L, 21.
 115. Par. VIII, 40*.
 116. Vi. L, 24.
 117. Yâ. III, 263.
 118. Vi. XXXVII, 35.
 119. Ga. XXIII, 17; Ba. II, 1, 31-33; Âp. I, 26, 8-9; Va. XXIII, 1-3; Yâ. III, 280; Pâ. Gri. III, 12, 1-3.
 120. Ga. XXV, 4; Ba. II, 1, 35.
 121. Vi. XXVIII, 48*; Ba. II, 1, 30; Va. XXIII, 4.
 122. Ga. XXV, 1-2.

123. Vi. XXVIII, 49*; Ga. XXIII, 18; Pâ. Gri. III, 12, 6-8.
 124. Vi. XXVIII, 50*; Ga. XXIII, 19; Pâ. Gri. III, 12, 8.
 125. Vi. XXXVIII, 7*.
 126. Vi. XXXIX, 2; XL, 2; XLI, 5.
 127. Ga. XXII, 14-16; Ba. II, 1, 8-10; Va. XX, 31-33; Vi. L, 12-15; Yâ. III, 266-267.
 128. Ga. XXII, 14; Ba. I, 19, 1; Âp. I, 24, 1, 4; Yâ. III, 266.
 129. Yâ. III, 266.
 130. Ga. XXII, 15; Ba. I, 19, 2; Âp. I, 24, 2, 4; Yâ. III, 267.
 131. Ga. XXII, 16; Ba. I, 19, 2; Âp. I, 24, 3-4; Yâ. III, 267.
 132. Ga. XXII, 19; Ba. I, 19, 6; Âp. I, 25, 13; Va. XXI, 24; Vi. L, 30-32; Yâ. III, 270.
 133. Yâ. III, 270.
 134. Ga. XXII, 23, 25; Vi. L, 34-35; Yâ. III, 273.
 135. Ga. XXII, 24; Vi. L, 36-39; Yâ. III, 271, 273-274.
 136. Ba. I, 19, 6; Vi. L, 33; Yâ. III, 272.
 137. Ba. I, 19, 4; Vi. L, 25-28; Yâ. III, 271.
 138. Vi. L, 29, 40-41; Yâ. III, 272-273.
 139. Ga. XXII, 26; Yâ. III, 268.
 140. Va. XXI, 26; Yâ. III, 274.
 141. Vi. L, 46*; Ga. XXII, 20-21; Âp. I, 26, 2; Va. XXI, 25; Yâ. III, 269.
 142. Vi. L, 47*; Ga. XXII, 22; Yâ. III, 275.
 143. Vi. L, 48*; Yâ. III, 276.
 144. Vi. L, 49*; Yâ. III, 275.
 145. Vi. L, 50*; Yâ. III, 276.
 146.
 147. Ga. XXIII, 2; Ba. II, 1, 19, 21; Va. XX, 19; Vi. LI, 4; Yâ. III, 255.
 148. Ba. II, 1, 22*; Va. XX, 21; Vi. LI, 23-24.
 149.
 150. Mah. XII, 165, 76^b; Ga. XXIII, 6; Vi. LI, 25.
 151. Ga. XXIII, 3; Va. XX, 20; Vi. LI, 2; Yâ. III, 255.
 152. Va. XX, 18*; Par. XII, 3*; Ba. II, 1, 20; Vi. LI, 5.
 153. Va. XIV, 33; Vi. LI, 50, 54, 56; see above, IV, 222.
 154.
 155.
 156. Vi. LI, 27, 34.
 157. Ga. XXIII, 4-5; Va. XXIII, 30; Vi. LI, 3-4.
 158. Va. XXIII, 12; Vi. LI, 43-44.
 159. Va. XXIII, 11; Vi. LI, 45; Yâ. III, 282.
 160. Va. XXIII, 11; Vi. LI, 46-47.
 161. Ga. XXIII, 26.
 162.
 163. Âp. I, 25, 10; Vi. LII, 5.
 164. Vi. LII, 6.
 165. Vi. LII, 7.
 166. Vi. LII, 8.
 167. Vi. LII, 9.
 168. Vi. LII, 10.
 169. Vi. LII, 11, 13.
 170.
 171. Ga. XXIII, 12-13, 32; Ba. II, 2, 13-14; Va. XX, 15-16; Vi. XXXIV, 2; LIII, 1; Yâ. III, 233.
 172.
 173. Ba. II, 1, 37-38.
 174. Ga. XXII, 36; XXIII, 34; Âp. I, 26, 7; Vi. LIII, 4, 7; Yâ. III, 288.

175. Vi. LIII, 4; Yâ. III, 291.
 176. Ba. II, 4, 14*; II, 4, 13;
 Va. XXIII, 41; Vi. LIII, 5-6.
 177. Mah. XII, 165, 63^b; Vi.
 LIII, 8.
 178.
 179. Vi. LIII, 9*; Âp. I, 27,
 11*; Ba. II, 2, 11*; Par. VII, 10*.
 180.
 181. Mah. XII, 165, 37; Ba. II,
 2, 35*; Va. I, 22*; Ga. XXI,
 3; Vi. XXXV, 3-5; Yâ. III, 261.
 182. Vi. LIV, 1.
 183. Ga. XX, 4-6; Ba. II, 1, 36;
 Va. XV, 12-13; Yâ. III, 295.
 184. Ga. XX, 4, 7; Va. XV, 12,
 14; Vi. XXII, 57.
 185. Ga. XX, 8-9; Va. XV, 15-
 16; Yâ. III, 295; see above,
 IX, 201.
 186. See above, IX, 201.
 187. Ga. XX, 10; Ba. II, 1, 36;
 Va. XV, 17-21; Yâ. III, 296.
 188. Ga. XX, 11-14; Ba. II, 1,
 36; Yâ. III, 296.
 189. Yâ. III, 297.
 190. Vi. LIV, 31*.
 191. Vi. LIV, 32*; Yâ. III, 299.
 192. Vi. LIV, 26*; Âp. I, 1, 23-
 2, 10; Va. XI, 76-79.
 193. Vi. LIV, 27*.
 194. Vi. LIV, 28*.
 195. Vi. LIV, 24*; Yâ. III, 290.
 196. } Ba. II, 1, 36; Yâ. III, 300.
 197. }
 198. Vi. LIV, 25*; Âp. I, 26, 7;
 Yâ. III, 289.
 199. Yâ. III, 289.
 200. Ga. XXIII, 7; Va. XXIII,
 31; Vi. LIV, 12; Yâ. III, 277.
 201.
 202. Yâ. III, 291.
 203.
 204. Vi. LIV, 29*.
 205. Par. XI, 49*; Yâ. III, 292.
 206. Par. XI, 50*; Yâ. III, 292.
 207.
 208. Mah. XII, 165, 45^b-46^a.
 209. Ba. II, 1, 7*; Vi. LIV, 30*;
 Par. XI, 51*; Yâ. III, 293.
 210. Vi. LIV, 34*; Yâ. III, 294.
 211.
 212. Ga. XXVI, 2-5; Ba. II, 2,
 38; IV, 5, 6-7; Âp. I, 27, 7;
 Va. XXI, 20; Vi. XLVI, 10;
 Yâ. III, 320.
 213. Ba. IV, 5, 11*; Va. XXVII,
 13*; Par. X, 29*; Vi. LIV,
 19; Yâ. III, 315.
 214. Ba. IV, 5, 8*; Ga. XXVI,
 18-19; Ba. II, 2, 40; Va.
 XXIV, 1-2; Yâ. III, 320.
 215. Ba. II, 2, 37; IV, 5, 10; Va.
 XXI, 21; Vi. XLVI, 11; Yâ.
 III, 318.
 216. Ba. IV, 5, 15*; Vi. XLVI,
 18; Yâ. III, 321.
 217. Va. XXVII, 21*; Par. X,
 2*; Ga. XXVII, 12-13; Ba.
 III, 8, 10, 19-23; Va. XXIII,
 45; Vi. XLVII, 4-5; Yâ. III,
 324.
 218. Ga. XXVII, 14; Ba. III, 8,
 26; IV, 5, 17; Va. XXVII,
 21; Vi. XLVII, 3, 6.
 219. Ba. IV, 5, 19*; Vi. XLVII, 7.
 220. Ba. IV, 5, 18*; Vi. XLVII, 8.
 221. Ba. IV, 5, 20*; Ga. XXVII,
 18; Ba. III, 8, 31; Vi. XLVII,
 9; Yâ. III, 325, 327.
 222. Ba. III, 8, 30; Vi. XLVII,
 10.

223. Ga. XXVI, 1-6; XXVII, 2; Ba. III, 8, 3, 7-9, 12-13.	247. Va. XXVII, 1-2.
224. Ba. III, 8, 17; Yâ. III, 326.	248.
225. Ba. III, 8, 14-16.	249. Ba. IV, 1, 29*; Va. XXVI, 4*; Vi. LV, 2.
226. Va. XXIV, 46; Yâ. III, 309.	250. Va. XXVI, 5*; Vi. LV, 4; Yâ. III, 304.
227. Va. XXV, 3.	251. Va. XXVI, 6*; Yâ. III, 304.
228.	252. Va. XXVI, 7*; Vi. LV, 6; Yâ. III, 305.
229.	253.
230. Mah. XIII, 112, 5.	254. Ga. XXIV, 2-3; Ba. IV, 2, 4-5.
231.	255.
232.	256.
233.	257.
234.	258.
235.	259.
236.	260. Ga. XXIV, 10, 12; Ba. III, 5, 2-5; Va. XXVI, 8; Yâ. III, 302.
237.	261. Vi. LV, 7*; Ba. IV, 2, 15.
238.	262. Va. XXVII, 3*.
239. Vi. XCV, 17*.	263. Ba. III, 9, 1-21; IV, 5, 29.
240.	264.
241.	265.
242.	266.
243.
244.
245.
246. Va. XXVII, 7*; Yâ. III, 311.

MANU XII.

1.	14.
2.	15.
3.	16.
4.	17.
5. Yâ. III, 134.	18.
6. Yâ. III, 135.	19.
7. Yâ. III, 136.	20.
8.	21.
9. Yâ. III, 131, 134-136.	22.
10.	23.
11.	24. Yâ. III, 182.
12. Maitr. Up. III, 3.	25.
13.	26.

27. Mah. XII, 194, 31; 219, 29.	66. Vi. XLIV, 35-37; Yâ. III, 214-215.
28. Mah. XII, 194, 32; 219, 30.	67. Vi. XLIV, 38-43; Yâ. III, 214.
29. Mah. XII, 194, 33; 219, 31.	68. Vi. XLIV, 44*; Yâ. III, 217.
30.	69. Mah. XIII, 111, 130; Vi. XLIV, 45*.
31. Yâ. III, 137.	70.
32. Maitr. Up. III, 5; Yâ. III, 138.	71.
33. Yâ. III, 139.	72.
34.	73.
35.	74.
36.	75. } Yâ. III, 206; see above,
37.	76. } IV, 88-89.
38.	77.
39.	78.
40. Yâ. III, 137-139.	79.
41.	80.
42.	81.
43.	82.
44.	83. Yâ. III, 190.
45.	84.
46. ?	85.
47.	86.
48.	87.
49.	88.
50.	89.
51.	90.
52. Yâ. III, 219.	91. Îsâ. Up. 6; Âp. I, 23, 1.
53.	92.
54.	93.
55. Yâ. III, 207.	94.
56. Yâ. III, 207.	95.
57. Yâ. III, 208.	96.
58. Yâ. III, 208.	97.
59.	98.
60. Yâ. III, 212.	99.
61. Yâ. III, 213.	100.
62. Vi. XLIV, 14-20; Yâ. III, 214-215.	101. Va. XXVII, 2*.
63. Vi. XLIV, 21-25; Yâ. III, 211, 215.	102.
64. Vi. XLIV, 26-30; Yâ. III, 215.	103.
65. Vi. XLIV, 31-34; Yâ. III, 213.	104.

105.	115. Ba. I, 1, 11 *; Va. III, 6 *;
106.	Par. VIII, 13 *.
107.	116.
108. Ga. XXVIII, 48.	117.
109. Va. VI, 43 *; Ba. I, 1, 5-6;	118.
Âp. II, 29, 13-14; Va. I, 6-7.	119.
110. Ga. XXVIII, 49; Ba. I, 1, 7, 9.	120.
111. Ba. I, 1, 8 *; Va. III, 20 *;	121.
Par. VIII, 34 *.	122.
112. Yâ. I, 9.	123.
113. Ga. XXVIII, 50.	124.
114. Ba. I, 1, 16 *; Va. III, 5 *;	125.
Par. VIII, 12 *.	126.

INDEX.

INDEX.

- Abhigit sacrifice, XI, 75.
 Ābhira caste, X, 15.
 Abhivasta, one accused of mortal sin, II, 185; III, 159; IV, 211.
 Abortion, V, 90. See Penance for destroying embryo.
 Actions, classification of, XII, 1-11.
 Activity, quality of nature or of Self, XII, 24, 26, 28, 32, 36, 38.
 — conditions caused by, XII, 40, 45-47.
 Actor, excluded from Śrāddha, III, 155.
 — food of, forbidden, IV, 214, 215.
 — not qualified to be witness, VIII, 65.
 — punishment for adultery with wife of, VIII, 362-363.
 Adhvaryu priest, receives a chariot, VIII, 209.
 Ādityas, III, 284; XI, 222.
 Adoption. See Son, adopted.
 Adulteration of merchandise, VIII, 203; IX, 286; XI, 50.
 Adulteress, son of, excluded from Śrāddha, III, 156, 174-175.
 — food of, forbidden, III, 158; IV, 217.
 — husband of, III, 155.
 Adultery, a great crime, IV, 133-134; VIII, 352-353.
 — an Upapātaka, XI, 60.
 — definition of, VIII, 356-358.
 — penance for, XI, 177-179.
 — punishments of females for, VIII, 371; in next life, V, 164; IX, 30; of males, VIII, 359, 363, 372-379, 382-385; in next life, XI, 52; XII, 60.
 — witnesses in cases of, VIII, 72. See Guru, Wife.
 Agastya, a sage, V, 22.
 Ages of the world, I, 68-73, 81-86; IX, 301-302.
 Aghamarsha hymn, XI, 260-261.
 Agigarta, a sage, X, 105.
 Agni, III, 85, 86, 211; XI, 120, 122; XII, 121, 123; king to behave like, IX, 303, 310. See Fire.
 Agnidagdha manes, III, 199.
 Agnihotra sacrifice, II, 15; IV, 10, 25; V, 167; VI, 9; XI, 42; Add. and Corr. p. 613.
 Agnishoma sacrifice, II, 143.
 Agnishrut sacrifice, XI, 75.
 Agnishvāta manes, III, 195, 199.
 Agnyādheya sacrifice, II, 143; VIII, 209; XI, 38.
 Āgrāyana sacrifice, IV, 26-28; VI, 10.
 Agreements. See Non-performance of.
 Agriculture, called Pramrita, IV, 4-5.
 — excludes from Śrāddhas, III, 165.
 — forbidden to Brāhmana, III, 64, X, 83-84.
 — obligatory on Vaiśya, I, 90; X, 79.
 — one of the ten modes of subsistence, X, 116. See Cultivator, Seed-corn.
 Āgyapa manes, III, 197.
 Ahina sacrifices, XI, 198.
 Āhinsika caste, X, 37.
 Ākamaṇa. See Sipping-water.
 Ākārya. See Teacher.
 Ākārya caste, X, 23.
 Akshamālā, wife of Vasishtha, IX, 23.
 Ambashtha caste, X, 8, 13, 15, 19, 48.
 Ambassador, VII, 63-68.
 Anagnidagdha manes, III, 199.
 Anantara sons, X, 6, 14, 41.
 Andhatāmisra hell, IV, 88, 197.
 Andhra caste, X, 36, 48.
 Aṅgas of the Veda, p. xxvi; II, 141, 242; III, 184, 185; IV, 98.
 Āngiras, I, 35; II, 151; III, 198.
 — sacred texts of, XI, 33.
 Animals, classes of, I, 43-45.
 — eatable and forbidden. See Food.
 — slaying of, XI, 60, 69, 71. See Meat, Penance for killing.

- Annaprâsana rite, II, 34.
 Antyâvasâyin caste, IV, 79; X, 39.
 Antyeshri rite, II, 16.
 Anulomas. See Castes, mixed.
 Anvashraka days, IV, 150.
 Apapâtra races, X, 51.
 Âpastambîya Dharma-sûtra, pp. xi, xviii, xlix, li, lix, lxv, lxix, lxxi, xciii, xcix, ci, cxix.
 Apâtrîkarana sins, XI, 70. See Penance for.
 Apaviddha. See Son, cast off.
 Appointment of daughters. See
 Daughter appointed.
 — of widows and wives, pp. xciv,
 cix; III, 160, 173.
 — forbidden, IX, 64-68.
 — permitted, IX, 57-63, 120-121,
 145-146, 159, 162-165, 167, 190-
 191.
 Apsarases, I, 37; XII, 47.
 Architect, excluded from Srâddha,
 III, 163.
 Arms, trade of, excludes from Srâd-dha, III, 162. See King, Kshatriya, duties of.
 Ârsha marriage, III, 21, 53.
 — affects succession to woman's property, IX, 196.
 — description of, III, 29.
 — permitted to whom, III, 23-24.
 — results of, III, 38-40, 42.
 Arson. See Incendiary.
 Artisan, disqualified to be witness,
 VIII, 65.
 — food of, forbidden, IV, 219.
 — hand of, always pure, V, 129.
 — may speak to married women,
 VIII, 360.
 — to do work for king, VII, 138; X,
 120.
 Âryan, acting like non-Âryan, and non-Âryan like Âryan, X, 73.
 — has three births, II, 169.
 — lawful residence of, II, 24.
 — may take roots &c. on a journey,
 VIII, 341.
 — may take up arms, VIII, 348-351.
 — offspring of Âryan father and non-Âryan mother preferable to offspring of non-Âryan father and Âryan mother, X, 66-72.
 — to be witness for Âryan of the same kind, VIII, 68.
 Âryâvarta, X, 34; boundaries of, II,
 22-23.
 Asahâya, commentator of Nârada,
 pp. xvii, cvii.
 Asamvrita hell, IV, 81.
 Ascetic, dress and utensils, VI, 41,
 44, 52-54.
 — duty of meditation and Veda-study, VI, 49, 61-84.
 — dwelling and manner of life, VI,
 41-43.
 — entrance into order, VI, 33-40.
 — food and manner of begging,
 VI, 43, 50-51, 55-59.
 — general disposition, VI, 41, 44-49, 60.
 — not to be made a witness, VIII, 65.
 — pays no toll at ferry, VIII, 407.
 — personal purification, V, 137.
 — produced by Goodness, XII, 48.
 — receives alms at Vairavadeva, III, 94.
 — informal, IV, 257-258; VI, 86,
 94-96.
 — punishment for intercourse with female, VIII, 363.
 Ashrakâ days, manes worshipped on,
 IV, 150.
 — Veda-study interrupted on, IV,
 119.
 Asipatravana hell, IV, 90; XII, 75.
 Assassin. See Self-defence.
 Assault, results of, on a Brâhmaṇa,
 IV, 165-169; XI, 207-208.
 — to be avoided by Snâtaka, IV, 83, 164.
 — a title of the law, VIII, 6, 279-301.
 — witnesses in cases of, VIII, 72.
 See Homicide, Hurt, Mischief.
 Assembly legal. See Parishad.
 Assessors in a law-court, VIII, 1, 10-19.
 Astrologer excluded from Srâddha,
 III, 162.
 Astrology, practice of, forbidden to ascetics, VI, 50.
 Astronomy, science of, p. li.
 Âsura marriage, III, 21.
 — affects succession to woman's property, IX, 197.
 — description of, III, 31.
 — permitted to whom, pp. lxxvii-lxxviii; III, 23-25.
 — results of, III, 41-42. See Daughter, sale of.
 Asuras, I, 37; III, 225; XI, 20.
 Âsvalâyana-smṛiti, p. xxii.
 Âsvamedha. See Horse-sacrifice.
 Atharvan, sacred texts of, XI, 33.

- Atheism, -ist, II, 11; III, 150; IV, 163; VIII, 22; XI, 67.
- Atikrikkbra penance, XI, 209; description, XI, 214.
- Atri, a sage, I, 35; III, 196; quoted, p. xxvii; III, 16.
- Aurasa. See Son, legitimate.
- Austerity, best form of, II, 166; IV, 148.
- leads to final liberation, XII, 83.
- power of destroying guilt and producing other effects, IV, 148; XI, 228, 234-235.
- sole duty in Kṛita age, I, 86.
- to be performed by ascetic, VI, 75; by hermit, VI, 8, 22-23, 30.
- Autami Manu, I, 62.
- Avakīrṇin. See Penance for breach of student's vow, Student.
- Āvantya caste, X, 21.
- Āvrita caste, X, 15.
- Āyogava caste, descendants of, X, 15, 26, 32, 35.
- occupation, X, 48.
- origin of, X, 12, 16.
- Bali offering, III, 70, 74, 108, 265.
- description of, III, 87-94, 121.
- duty of performing for householder, III, 80-81; for hermit, VI, 7.
- Barber, food of, permitted to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 253.
- Bard, excluded from Śrāddha, III, 158; may speak to married woman, VIII, 360. See Singer.
- Barhishad manes, III, 196, 199.
- Basket-maker, food of, forbidden, IV, 215.
- Bathing, rules of, IV, 45, 129, 152, 201-203; a penance, VI, 69.
- Baudhāyana's Dharmasāstra, pp. xx, xlix, li-liii, lxv, xciii, xcix, cii, civ, cxix.
- Begging, a mode of subsistence, IV, 4-5; X, 116.
- rule of, for ascetic, VI, 43, 50-51, 55-58; for hermit, VI, 27-28; for student, II, 48-50, 108, 182-185, 187; when permitted to Snātaka, IV, 33; XI, 1-6.
- Bestial crime, XI, 174.
- Betrothal, manner of, III, 35.
- once made binding, IX, 47, 71; except when bride is blemished, IX, 72-73.
- Betrothal, source of husband's power, V, 152. See Bride, Bridegroom.
- Betting, IX, 221-228.
- Bhadrakālī, III, 89.
- Bharadvāga, a sage, X, 107.
- Bhaviṣya-purāṇa, pp. cx-cxi.
- Bhrigu, expounds Manu's laws, pp. xii-xiii, xvii; I, 59-60; V, 1-3; XII, 2, 126.
- origin of, I, 35.
- opinion of, quoted, p. xxvi; III, 16.
- Bhūtas, III, 70, 74, 80-81, 90.
- Bhūtātman, XII, 12.
- Birth. See Impurity, Transmigration.
- Blacksmith, food of, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 215.
- Blind man, excluded from inheritance, IX, 201; from Śrāddha, III, 161, 177.
- Boatmen, hire of, VIII, 406; liability for damage, VIII, 408-409.
- Bond, renewal of, VIII, 154-155.
- Booty, distribution of, VII, 96-97.
- Boundary, disputes, a title of the law, VIII, 6, 245-266.
- not lost by lapse of time, VIII, 149.
- punishment for destroying mark of, IX, 291.
- Brāhma marriage, III, 21.
- affects succession to woman's property, IX, 196.
- description of, III, 27.
- permitted to whom, III, 23-24.
- results of, III, 37, 39-40, 42, 184.
- Brahman, I, 50; II, 82-84; III, 70, 89; IV, 182, 260; VI, 32, 79, 81, 85; VII, 14; VIII, 81; XII, 102, 123, 125.
- composed Manu-smṛiti, p. xii; I, 58.
- court of, VIII, 11.
- day and night of, I, 68-73.
- muhūrta of, IV, 92.
- origin of, I, 11; XII, 50.
- tīrtha of, II, 58-59. See Puruṣa, Svayambhū, Soul.
- Brahman priest, receives a horse, VIII, 209.
- Brāhmaṇa, a class of works, IV, 100.
- Brāhmaṇa (caste), definition of a true, II, 87.
- duties, livelihood, and occupations of, I, 88, 102-110; IV, 2-

- 13; X, 1-2, 74-76; in times of distress, VIII, 339; XI, 11-23; X, 81-94, 101-114, 116-117; following forbidden occupations, III, 64-65, 150-166; VIII, 102; or neglecting duty, XII, 71. See Penance for following forbidden occupations.
- Brāhmana, feeding of, III, 96-109, 125-129; IV, 29-30, 192-197.
- gifts to. See Gift, King, duties of.
 - inherits property of Brāhmana, IX, 188-189.
 - judicial functions of, to be assessors in court, VIII, 1, 10-11, 391; judges, VIII, 9, 20; present at examination of witnesses, VIII, 87; to impose penances, XI, 86; to settle doubtful points of law, XII, 108-116.
 - manes of, III, 197, 199.
 - marriage-rites lawful for, III, 23-24.
 - may forcibly appropriate property, VIII, 339; XI, 11-21.
 - offences against: (1) killing a, a mortal sin, IX, 235; XI, 55; also execution, VIII, 380-381; see Penances for; punishment, criminal, for, IX, 237; in another life, XI, 49; XII, 55. (2) other offences, assaulting and threatening, IV, 165-169; XI, 68; see Penance for threatening, &c.; defaming, VIII, 267; seizing property of, XI, 26.
 - offences by, acceptance of property from thieves makes Brāhmana a thief, VIII, 340; adultery and rape, VIII, 378-379, 383-385; defamation of equal caste, VIII, 269; of lower, VIII, 268, 276; not inviting virtuous neighbours to a festival, VIII, 392; perjury, VIII, 123-124; theft, greatness of guilt, VIII, 338.
 - origin of, I, 31, 87, 93; XII, 48.
 - power and rank of, I, 93-101; II, 135; IX, 245, 313-322; X, 3; XI, 31-35.
 - reverence due to, IV, 39, 52, 58, 135-136, 142, 162; see King, duties of; irreverence towards, degrades, X, 43.
- Brāhmanas, seniority among, II, 155.
- shall employ indigent Kshatriya and Vaiśya, VIII, 411-412.
 - special rules for, of administration of oath, VIII, 113; betrothal, III, 35; burial, V, 92; of examination as witness, VIII, 88; of impurity, V, 83, 99; of initiation, II, 36-38, 41-42, 44-46; of Keśānta, II, 65; of naming, II, 31-32; of payment of fine, IX, 229; of purification, II, 58, 62; of saluting, II, 122-127; of studentship, II, 49, 190.
 - why subject to death, V, 4.
 - wives permitted to, III, 13-19. See Snātaka, Śrotiya, Sons by wives of several castes.
- Brahmāṅgali, ceremony, II, 70-71.
- Brāhmaṇī, daughter of, inherits from co-wives, IX, 198.
- prerogatives of, wife, p. lxxiv; IX, 85-87.
 - punishment of adultery with, VIII, 374-378.
- Brahmarākshasa, XII, 60.
- Brahmarshis, country of, II, 19; customs, II, 20.
- Brahmasattra, II, 106; IV, 9.
- Brahmāvarta, boundaries, II, 17; customs, II, 18.
- Bride, defamation of, VIII, 225.
- given away by whom, V, 151.
 - open declaration of blemishes required, VIII, 205; fine for concealment of blemishes, VIII, 224. See Betrothal, Marriage, Wife.
- Bridegroom, receives honey-mixture, III, 119; way to be made for, II, 138.
- Brīhaspati, XI, 120, 122.
- Brīhaspati-smṛiti, pp. xvi-xvii, xciv, xcvi, cviii-cx.
- Brīhat Manu, pp. xcii, xcvi-xcvii.
- Brīhat Saṅkha-smṛiti, pp. xxi-xxii.
- Brother, begetting son with pre-deceased brother's bride or widow, III, 160, 173; IX, 57-68, 120-121, 143-147.
- gives sister in marriage, V, 151.
 - must give one-fourth share to unmarried sister, IX, 118.
 - elder, honour shown to, II, 225-

- 226; IV, 180, 184; IX, 110; marrying or sacrificing after younger, III, 154, 170-172; XI, 61; punished for cheating his younger brother, IX, 213; punishment for defaming, VIII, 275.
- Brother, younger, marrying or sacrificing before elder, III, 154, 170-172; XI, 61.
- Brothers have all male offspring through one son, IX, 182.
- Brother's wife, manner of saluting, II, 132. See Inheritance, Partition, Sons, eldest, second, younger, youngest.
- Burglary. See Robbery.
- Burial. See Infants; Brāhmaṇa, Kshatriya, Vaiśya, Sūdra, special rules for.
- Carpenter, food of, forbidden, IV, 210.
- Caste, change of, VII, 42; X, 42-43, 64-65.
- exclusion from, XI, 183-186.
- readmission to, XI, 187-191, 196-197.
- Castes, four original, X, 4; their origin, I, 31, 87; X, 45.
- mixed, enumeration, origin and occupation of, X, 6-56; signs for detecting them, X, 57-61.
- duties of all, X, 63.
- law of castes, VIII, 41-42, 46. See Āryan, Brāhmaṇa, Kshatriya, Vaiśya, Sūdra, Occupations.
- Cattle, rearing or tending, duty of Vaiśya, I, 90; VIII, 114; IX, 326-328; X, 79.
- forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, III, 154, 166; VIII, 102; except in times of distress, X, 82. See Damage, Herdsman.
- Coins. See Weights of copper, &c.
- Concerns among partners, a title of the law, VIII, 4, 206-211.
- Conduct, rule of, most important, I, 107-110; IV, 145-146, 156-158, 175.
- of those who know Veda authoritative, II, 6, 18; IV, 145.
- Confession destroys guilt, XI, 228-229.
- Connubial intercourse, duty of, III, 45-50; IX, 4.
- Connubial intercourse, when forbidden, III, 45-47; IV, 40-42, 128.
- Conquest, duty of king and Kshatriya, VII, 94-110; IX, 251; X, 119; duties after — has been made, VII, 201-203.
- one of the modes of acquiring property, X, 115.
- Contract, for carriage, VIII, 156-157.
- regarding crops, IX, 52-53.
- when null and void, VIII, 163-168. See Bond, Debt.
- Coparcener. See Partition.
- Cow, food smelt at by, impure, IV, 209.
- killing an Upapātaka, XI, 60. See Penance for.
- reverence towards, IV, 38, 45, 48, 52, 58-59, 72, 142, 162.
- Creation, account of, pp. lxxxiii-xc; by Manu, I, 1-59; by Bhṛigu, I, 60-110.
- Cultivator, food of Sūdra, lawful for Brāhmaṇa, IV, 253.
- negligent, punished for loss of crop, VIII, 243. See Agriculture, Boundary, Damage by cattle.
- shares crop, IX, 53.
- Custom, source of the law, II, 6, 12, 18; VIII, 41-42, 46.
- of conquered country, to be upheld, VII, 203.
- Daityas, XII, 48; manes of, III, 196.
- Daiva marriage, III, 21.
- affects succession to woman's property, IX, 196.
- description of, III, 28.
- permitted to whom, III, 23-24.
- results of, III, 38-40, 42.
- Dakṣha, a Pragāpati, IX, 128-129.
- Dākṣhāyana sacrifice, VI, 10.
- Dakṣiṇā. See Sacrificial fee.
- Damage done by boatmen, VIII, 408-409; by cattle, VIII, 240-242. See Hurt, Mischief.
- Damages for injury to person, VIII, 287.
- Dancers, to be banished, IX, 225.
- Darada race, X, 44.
- Darkness, quality of nature or of Self, I, 5; XII, 24, 29, 33, 35, 38.
- conditions produced by, I, 49; XII, 40, 42-44.

- Darśapūrṇamāsa sacrifices, IV, 25 ; VI, 9.
- Dāśa caste, X, 34.
- Dasyu race, V, 131 ; VIII, 66 ; X, 32 ; XI, 18 ; XII, 70.
- definition of term, X, 45.
- Dattaka. See Son, adopted.
- Daughter, inherits from mother, IX, 192, 195 ; of Brāhmaṇi wife inherits from co-wives, IX, 198 ; unmarried, inherits fourth-share from father, IX, 118 ; separate property of mother, IX, 131.
- position and treatment of, IV, 180, 185 ; IX, 130.
- sale of, forbidden, III, 51-54 ; IX, 98-100 ; rule regarding, VIII, 204. See Āsura marriage, Nuptial fee.
- to be married at proper time, IX, 4, 88-89, 94 ; or to choose husband, IX, 90-93.
- appointed, p. cix ; III, 11 ; IX, 127 ; inherits, IX, 130 ; husband of, inherits, IX, 135 ; son of, inherits from maternal grandfather, IX, 131-134, 136 ; offers funeral sacrifice, IX, 140.
- Daughter's daughter inherits from maternal grandmother, IX, 193.
- son, entertained at Śrāddha, III, 148, 234-235 ; inherits from maternal grandfather, IX, 136, 139.
- Dealer in weapons, excluded from Śrāddha, III, 160 ; food of, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 215, 260.
- Debt, non-payment of or recovery of, VIII, 4, 47-60, 139-143, 151-155, 158-167, 176-177.
- Debts, three, to gods, &c., IV, 257 ; VI, 35-37 ; non-payment of, XI, 66.
- Defamation, VIII, 6, 225, 267-278.
- anybody may be witness in cases of, VIII, 72.
- Defiling a maiden, XI, 62 ; punishments for, VIII, 367-370.
- Deposits, VIII, 4, 149, 179-196.
- Dhanvantari, III, 85.
- Dharaṇa, value of, VIII, 135-137.
- Dharma, duty, law or justice personified, I, 81-82 ; VIII, 15-16 ; IX, 129 ; XII, 50.
- Dharmaśāstra, pp. xxv, li-liv ; II, 10 ; III, 232 ; XII, 111.
- Dharma-sūtras, pp. xi-xii, xviii-xix, xxiv, xxvi, lii-liii, lxii, xciv, cxix.
- Dhigvaṇa caste, X, 15, 49.
- Dialectics, institutes of, II, 11 ; science of, VII, 43. See Logician.
- Dikshita. See Sacrifices, Śrauta. one initiated for.
- Dīnāras, pp. xvii, cv, cvii.
- Diseases, punishments of crimes, xi, 49-53 ; exclude from Śrāddhas, III, 151, 153-155, 159, 165, 177.
- Disputes between owners of cattle and herdsman. See Herdsman.
- regarding boundaries. See Boundaries.
- Documents, written, pp. xcix-ci ; VIII, 154-155, 168, 255 ; IX, 232.
- Domestic priest, IV, 179 ; VII, 78 ; XII, 46.
- Dravida caste, X, 22, 44.
- Dress, indivisible property, IX, 219.
- of ascetic, VI, 44, 52.
- of hermit, VI, 6, 15.
- of Snātaka, IV, 34-36, 66.
- of student, II, 41, 64, 174.
- Drinking spirituous liquor, a mortal sin, IX, 235 ; XI, 55.
- punishment for, IX, 237 ; in another life, XI, 49 ; XII, 56 ; other consequences, III, 159 ; IV, 207.
- women addicted to, v, 90 ; IX, 13, 80.
- sins equal to, XI, 57. See Penance for drinking spirituous liquor.
- Drishadvatī river, p. xlv ; II, 17.
- Duties, on traders, VIII, 398, 400. See Taxes, Tolls.
- Dvāpara age, I, 85-86 ; IX, 301-302.
- Earth, creation of, I, 13 ; king behaving like, IX, 303, 311.
- Eating, rules of, II, 51-57 ; III, 116-117 ; for Snātaka, IV, 43, 45, 55, 58, 62-63, 65, 74-76.
- purification after, V, 145.
- Edicts, royal, IX, 232.
- Egg, mundane, I, 9-13.
- Ekoddishra Śrāddha, III, 247 ; IV, 110-111.
- Elements, I, 6, 75-78.

- Emigrant, wife of, IX, 74-76.
- Eunuch, excluded from inheritance, IX, 201; from sacrificing, IV, 205-206; from Śrāddhas, III, 150.
- food of, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 205.
- son of, inherits, IX, 203.
- Evidence, punishment for refusal of, VIII, 107; what is admissible as, VIII, 74. See Penance for giving false evidence, Perjury, Witness.
- Exclusion from caste, see Caste;— from inheritance, see Inheritance.
- Families, law of, authoritative, VIII, 41.
- Fasting, V, 155; a penance, XI, 167, 204. See Parāka.
- Father, gives daughter in marriage, V, 151; must do so at proper time, IX, 4, 88-89; loses power over daughter, IX, 93.
- impure on birth of child, V, 62-63.
- inherits from childless son, IX, 185; from childless daughter, IX, 197.
- offences against, III, 157, 159; XI, 60; punishment for defaming, VIII, 275; for forsaking, VIII, 389. See Daughter, Son.
- keeps recovered property, IX, 209.
- partition by, IX, 215.
- reverence towards, and veneration of, II, 145-148, 225-237; IV, 162, 179-180, 182. See Guru, Sale, Son.
- Father-in-law, entertained at Śrāddha, III, 148.
- how saluted, II, 130.
- receives the honey-mixture, III, 119.
- Fellow-student, impurity on death of, V, 71.
- Field, acceptance of, X, 114.
- settlement of boundaries of, VIII, 262.
- Fines, amounts of three degrees of, VIII, 138.
- how to be paid, IX, 229.
- son not liable for unpaid, VIII, 159.
- Fire, reverence to be shown towards, IV, 48, 53-54, 58, 142. See Agni, Sacred fire.
- Flag, punishment for destroying, IX, 285.
- Food, forbidden and lawful, IV, 205-225, 247-250, 253; V, 5-56; in times of distress, X, 104, 106-108.
- eating forbidden, an Upapātaka, XI, 65; punishment for, in next life, XII, 59. See Penance for eating forbidden food.
- indivisible property, IX, 219.
- lawful for hermits, VI, 3, 12-21, 27-28.
- obtained by begging, always pure, V, 129.
- Force, vitiates all transactions, VIII, 168.
- Forgery, IX, 232.
- Fornication, XI, 59.
- excludes from Śrāddhas, III, 164.
- penance for, XI, 171.
- punishments for, VIII, 364-366.
- Fortress, royal, VII, 70-76; IX, 252.
- Fortune-tellers, to be punished, IX, 258.
- Fraud, vitiates every transaction, VIII, 165; punishment of, VIII, 193. See Brother, eldest; Trader.
- Friend, betrayer of, excluded from Śrāddha, III, 160.
- disqualified to be witness, VIII, 64.
- impurity on the death of, V, 82.
- killing, XI, 57.
- not to be fed at Śrāddha, III, 138-141.
- wife of, adultery with, XI, 171.
- Funeral ceremonies. See Antyeshtri; Impurity, behaviour of mourners.
- Funeral sacrifices. See Śrāddhas.
- Gādhī, son of, VII, 42.
- Gambling, pp. lxx-lxxi; excludes from Śrāddha, III, 151, 159, 160.
- forbidden to Snātakas, IV, 74; to kings, VII, 47, 50.
- punishable, IX, 226-228, 258.
- Gāndharva marriage, III, 21; affects succession to woman's property, IX, 196; description of, III, 32; permitted to whom, p. lxxvii;

- III, 23-24, 26; results of, III, 41-42.
- Gandharvas, VII, 23; origin of, I, 37; XII, 47; manes of, III, 196.
- Garbhādhāna, rite of conception, II, 16, 26, 142.
- Garden, boundaries of, VIII, 262; selling, a crime, XI, 62.
- Gautama, a lawgiver, quoted, p. xxvi; III, 16.
- Gautamīya Dharmaśāstra, pp. xviii, xx, xxiv, xxxiv, lxv, lxix-lxx, lxxii, xcvi, xcix, cii, civ, cxix.
- Gâyatrī. See Sāvitrī.
- Gift, acceptance of, lawful for Brāhmaṇa, I, 88; X, 75-76, 115; but dangerous, IV, 186-191; from wicked or low men forbidden, III, 179; IV, 84-91; XI, 24-25, 42, 70; except when offered unasked or in times of distress, IV, 247-250, 251-252; X, 102-114.
- made once only, IX, 47.
 - obligatory, IV, 31-32, 226-228; VII, 82; XI, 1-6.
 - of friends, on marriage and with honey-mixture is separate property, IX, 206.
 - rewards for making, III, 95; IV, 229-235; VII, 83-86; XI, 23.
 - void, VIII, 159, 165, 168. See Resumption of gift.
 - worthy recipients of, III, 96-97, 128-137, 142-143, 149, 168; IV, 31. See Liberality.
- Girdle, sacred of student, II, 42-43, 64, 174.
- Goblins, III, 90. See Bhūtas.
- Gods, age of the, I, 71; creation or origin of, I, 36; III, 201; XII, 40, 49.
- daily offerings and worship, III, 70-90; IV, 152; VI, 24.
 - debt due to. See Debts, three.
 - images of, IV, 39, 130; VIII, 87. See Temple.
 - property of, XI, 20; punishment for seizing, XI, 26.
 - tīrtha of, II, 59.
- Goldsmith, impure, IV, 215, 218; XII, 61.
- punishment of fraudulent, IX, 292; of negligent, IX, 286.
- Goodness, quality of nature or of Self, XII, 24-26, 37-38.
- Goodness, conditions produced by, XII, 40, 48-50.
- Gosava sacrifice, XI, 75.
- Goshṭhī-srāddha, III, 254.
- Government. See King, Ministers, Officials, Police, Policy.
- Govindarāga, a commentator of Manu, pp. xiii-xiv, cxxvi-cxxviii.
- Grammar, science of, pp. l-li.
- Great one, the, I, 15; XII, 14, 24, 50.
- Guardian. See Minor, Woman.
- Guest, definition of, III, 102, 103, 110.
- duty of feeding for householder, III, 70, 72-74, 80, 94, 100, 115, 118; IV, 29; by hermit, VI, 7-8.
 - manner of reception, III, 99-113.
 - persons not to be received as, IV, 30.
 - quarrels with, forbidden, IV, 179, 182. See Honey-mixture.
- Guhyakas, XII, 47.
- Guilds, law of, authoritative, VIII, 41.
- Guru, definition of term, II, 142, 149.
- duty of maintaining, IV, 251-252; XI, 1.
 - impurity on death of learned, v, 82.
 - manner of saluting, II, 130.
 - reverence towards, IV, 130, 162; XII, 83. See Father, Mother, Teacher, &c.
 - adultery with wife of, a mortal sin, IX, 235; XI, 55; punishment for, IX, 237; in next birth, XI, 49; XII, 58. See Penance for adultery with wife of Guru.
- Gātakarman, birth-rite, II, 27, 29.
- Gātibhramsa sins, XI, 68. See Penance for Gātibhramsakara.
- Gballa caste, X, 22; XII, 45.
- Gīva, XII, 13.
- Gyaishṛbha, month, VIII, 245.
- Gyeshṭha-sāman, III, 185.
- Hara, XII, 121.
- Havirbhug manes, III, 197.
- Havishmat manes, III, 198.
- Havishpāntīya hymn, XI, 252.
- Hells, III, 249; IV, 81, 165, 197; IX, 138; XII, 16-22, 54.
- enumeration of, IV, 88-90.
- Herdsmen, food of Sūdra, lawful for Brāhmaṇa, IV, 253.
- disputes from transgressions of

- owners of cattle and, VIII, 5, 229-243.
- Heretics, IV, 61; no libations offered to dead, v, 89-90; not to be fed, IV, 30; to be banished, IX, 225.
- doctrines and books of, XI, 66; XII, 95-96.
- Hermit, dress of, VI, 6, 15; duties: must not accept anything, VI, 8; may beg, VI, 27-28; may keep sacred fire and offer sacrifices, VI, 4-5, 7, 9-12; may give up both, VI, 25; must be hospitable, VI, 7-8; must perform austerities, VI, 8, 22-24; must recite Veda and study Upanishads, VI, 8, 29-30.
- food of, VI, 3, 12-21, 27-28.
- may starve himself to death, VI, 31.
- mode of personal purification, v, 137.
- pays no toll at a ferry, VIII, 407.
- produced by the quality of Goodness, XII, 48.
- High-treason, punishment of, IX, 275.
- Himālaya, II, 21.
- Hiranyakesi Dharma-sūtra, pp. xx, xl, li.
- Homicide, XI, 55, 57, 67.
- punishment of, VIII, 296; IX, 235. See Penance for killing, Self-defence.
- Honey-mixture, III, 3, 119-120; v, 41.
- present received with, is separate property, IX, 206.
- Horse-sacrifice, XI, 75, 83.
- Hospitality. See Guests.
- Hotri-priest, receives a horse, VIII, 209.
- House, decision concerning boundaries of, VIII, 262.
- Householder, duties of: marriage, III, 5-44; connubial intercourse, III, 45-50; treatment of female relatives, III, 51-62; performance of daily and domestic rites, III, 67-121; of Srāddhas, III, 122-286.
- entrance into order, III, 2; IV, 1.
- excellence of order of, III, 77-78; IV, 89-90.
- Householder, livelihood of, IV, 1-12.
- mode of personal purification, v, 136-137. See Occupations, Snātaka.
- Hunter, food of, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 212.
- Hurt, done by carriage, VIII, 290-298. See Assault.
- Husband, duties of, IX, 2, 5-16, 74, 101-102.
- one with wife, IX, 45-46.
- inherits from childless wife, IX, 196. See Connubial intercourse, Marriage, Son of wife, Wife; Woman, treatment of.
- power over wife, v, 147-154; IX, 3; source of that power, v, 152.
- Hypocrite, excluded from hospitality, IV, 30, 192-197; from Srāddha, III, 159.
- food of, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 211.
- produced by Darkness, XII, 44.
- sanctimonious, to be punished, IX, 258, 273.
- Idiot, excluded from inheritance, IX, 201.
- property of, not lost by lapse of time, VIII, 148.
- Images, punishment for destroying, IX, 285. See Gods, images of.
- Impurity (Sūtaka), on birth, v, 58, 61-63, 71, 77, 79.
- on carrying out corpse, v, 64-65, 85.
- on death of Sapinda, v, 58, 60, 75-77, 83-84; of teacher, v, 65, 80; of teacher's son or wife, v, 80; of infants, v, 67, 69; of fellow-student, v, 71; of unmarried females, v, 72; of remote relative, v, 78; of Srotriya, v, 81; of pupil, v, 81; of maternal uncle, v, 81; of officiating priest, v, 81; of maternal relative, v, 81; of king, v, 82; of friend, v, 82; of learned Guru, v, 82.
- on following corpse, v, 103.
- on miscarriage, v, 66.
- on touching corpse, v, 64, 85.
- on two deaths or births following each other, v, 79.
- behaviour of mourners during, v, 73.

- Impurity, exceptions to rules of, v, 89-90, 93-98.
 — rite at end of period of, v, 99.
 — causes interruption of Veda-study, IV, 109-110, 127.
 — makes food of giver unacceptable, IV, 212.
 Impurities of the body, v, 135. See Purification.
 Incantations. See Magic.
 Incest, XI, 59, 171. See Guru, adultery with wife of.
 Indivisible property. See Property.
 Indra, III, 87; IV, 182; v, 96; VII, 4, 7; VIII, 344; XI, 120, 122; XII, 123.
 Infant, burial of, v, 68-69.
 — committing nuisance, IX, 283.
 — disqualified to be witness, VIII, 66; exceptions, VIII, 70-71; to sacrifice or recite Veda, II, 171-172; XI, 36-37.
 — no libations offered to, v, 70.
 — special punishment for, IX, 230.
 — treatment of, III, 114; IV, 179; VIII, 312. See Impurity, Minor.
 Informer, excluded from Śrāddha, III, 161; food of forbidden, IV, 212; punishment in next life, XI, 50. See Spy.
 Inheritance, a mode of acquiring property, x, 115. (1) Succession to male: sons, IX, 104, 156-157, 185; eldest son alone, IX, 105, 108; unmarried daughter inherits one-fourth share, IX, 118; appointed daughter, IX, 130; son of appointed daughter, IX, 131-134, 136; husband of appointed daughter, IX, 135; son of daughter not appointed, IX, 136, 139; adopted son, IX, 141-142; son of appointed widow or wife, IX, 120-121, 145-146, 190-191; six kinds of subsidiary sons, IX, 158; among subsidiary sons each better one inherits before the rest, IX, 165, 184; illegitimate son of Śūdra, IX, 179; father and brothers, IX, 185; Sapiṇḍas, Sakulyas, teacher and pupil, IX, 187; learned Brāhmaṇas, IX, 188-189; the king, IX, 189; children of eunuch, &c., IX, 203; son born after partition, IX, 216; mother and paternal grandmother, IX, 217. (2) Succession to female: son, IX, 104, 192, 195; daughter, IX, 192, 195; unmarried daughter, IX, 131; daughter of Brāhmaṇi wife, IX, 198; daughter's daughter, IX, 193; husband, IX, 196; mother and father, IX, 197. (3) Succession to reunited coparcener, IX, 210-212. (4) Exclusion from inheritance, IX, 143-144, 147, 201, 213 (?), 214; XI, 185-186.
 Initiation, a second birth, II, 148, 169-170.
 — description of, II, 36-47.
 — neglect of. See Penance for neglect; Vratya.
 — second, XI, 147, 151-152.
 Injury to living beings, excludes from Śrāddha, III, 164.
 — forbidden, IV, 148, 170, &c.; particularly to ascetics, VI, 39, 46, 52, 68-69, 75. See Animals.
 Institutes of dialectics. See Dialectics.
 — of the sacred law. See Dharma-śāstra.
 — of science, IV, 19-20.
 Interest, kinds and rate of, p. xxix; VIII, 140-143, 150-155, 156 note, 157.
 Judge, takes king's place on the bench, VIII, 9, 11; must be a Brāhmaṇa, never a Śūdra, VIII, 9, 20-21; must be just, VIII, 12-19; if unjust, to be fined, IX, 234; behaviour in court, VIII, 23.
 Judicial procedure, pp. xcix, ciii; constitution of the court, VIII, 1-2, 9-12, 20-23; eighteen titles of the law, VIII, 3-7; decisions to be just, VIII, 12-19; suits to be heard according to the order of plaintiff's caste, VIII, 24; law of castes, families, &c., authoritative, VIII, 41-42, 46; lawsuits not to be begun or hushed up by king or his servants, VIII, 43; causes of failure of suits, VIII, 53-58; method of judicial investigation: inferences from facts, VIII, 25-26, 44-46, witnesses, VIII, 45, 52-55, 61-108,

- 117-123, oaths, VIII, 109-113, ordeals, VIII, 114-116, special trial in disputes regarding deposits, VIII, 182-184; punishments, degrees of, VIII, 124-130; technical names of metal-weights or coins, VIII, 131-137; three degrees of fines, VIII, 138; void legal transactions, VIII, 163-168; fines, how paid, IX, 229; reversal of unjust decisions by king, IX, 234; thief to be executed only, if taken 'in flagranti,' IX, 270. See Parishad.
- Kaivarta caste, X, 34.
- Kālasūtra hell, III, 249; IV, 88.
- Kali age, I, 85-86; IX, 301-302.
- Kalpa, a vedāṅga, p. xxvi; II, 140.
- Kāmadhenudīpikā of Nārāyaṇa, p. cxxx.
- Kāmandakīya Nītisāra, quotes Manu, pp. xxxvi-xxxvii.
- Kāmboga caste, pp. cxiv, cxvii; X, 44.
- Kānina. See Son of unmarried daughter.
- Karāṇa caste, X, 22.
- Kārāvara caste, X, 36.
- Kārshāpāṇa, value of, VIII, 136.
- Kārusa caste, X, 23.
- Karyapa, IX, 129.
- Kāṭhaka Dharma-sūtra, pp. xxi, xxiii; quotation from p. xxi, note.
- Kāṭhaka school, pp. xv, cxxiv.
- Kātyāyana-smṛiti, p. cx.
- Kātyāyanīya Dharma-sūtra, p. cxix.
- Kavi, father of manes, III, 198; son of Āngiras, II, 151-154.
- Kesānta rite, clipping the hair, II, 65.
- Khasa caste, X, 22.
- Khila texts, III, 232.
- King, cannot be made a witness, VIII, 65.
- duties of: to protect and not to oppress subjects, VII, 2-3, 35, 80, 88, III, 112, 142-144; VIII, 172, 303-309; IX, 253; X, 80, 119; to punish the wicked, VII, 14-34; VIII, 302-303, 310-311, 335, 343-347; IX, 252-293, 312; to honour, support, and make gifts to learned Brāhmaṇas, VII, 37-38, 79, 82-86, 88, 134-136, 145; VIII, 395; IX, 313-323; XI, 4, 21-23; to be humble, p. cxiii; VII, 39-42; to study the Veda and sciences, VII, 43; to shun the eighteen vices, VII, 44-53; to appoint ministers, VII, 54-58; and other officials, VII, 59-68, 80-81, 114-126; to select a residence and to build fortress, VII, 69-76; to wed a queen, VII, 77; to appoint a domestic and officiating priests, VII, 78-79; to fight bravely and honourably, VII, 87-95, 184-200; X, 119; distribution of booty, VII, 96-97; to make conquests, VII, 99-100, 201-203; IX, 251; X, 115, 119; to settle taxes and duties, VII, 127-133, 137-140; X, 118, 120; to sacrifice, VII, 79, 145; to give audience, VII, 145-146, 223; to consult regarding state affairs and to follow the principles of Nīti, VII, 146-183, 205-216; IX, 294-299; to inspect army, VII, 222; to decide lawsuits either personally, VIII, 1-8; IX, 233-234, or through judge, VIII, 9-10; to be just, VIII, 18-19, 126-129, 170-175; IX, 249; to protect minors and women, VIII, 27-29; to deal with found property, VIII, 30-34; and with treasure-trove, VIII, 35-39; to restore or make good stolen property, VIII, 40-44; to uphold law of castes, &c., VII, 203; VIII, 41-42, 46; not to begin or hush up lawsuits, VIII, 43; to settle rates of sale, VIII, 401-402; to have weights and measures examined, VIII, 403; to avoid taking property of men guilty of mortal sins, IX, 243-247; to be active and energetic, IX, 301-311; to seek death in battle, IX, 323.
- King, food of, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 218.
- gifts of wicked, not to be accepted, IV, 84-91.
- impurity of, causes interruption of Veda-study, IV, 110.
- impurity on death of, V, 82.
- incarnation of eight deities, V, 96; VII, 4-7.
- majesty of, VII, 8-13.
- never impure, V, 93-94, 97.

- King, offences by, VIII, 336.
- receives the honey-mixture, III, 119-120.
 - receives sixth part of subject's demerit or merit, VIII, 304-305; of Brāhmaṇa's merit, XI, 23.
 - recreations allowed to, VII, 216-217, 224-225.
 - service under, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, III, 64, 153.
 - shadow of, not to be trod on, IV, 130.
 - Sūdra, IV, 61. See Edicts, High-treason, Kshatriya, Vassals.
- Kirāta race, X, 44.
- Kratu, a Pragāpati, I, 35.
- Krikkbra, or hard penance, V, 21; XI, 106, 125, 140, 159, 163, 178, 192, 198, 209.
- description of, XI, 212.
- Krishṇala, value of, VIII, 134-135.
- Kṛta age, I, 81, 83, 85-86; IX, 301-302.
- Kṛta. See Son, bought.
- Kṛtrima. See Son, made.
- Kshatriya caste, and Brāhmaṇa, II, 135; IV, 135-136; IX, 313-322.
- causes of degradation of, X, 43-45.
 - duties and occupations, I, 89; X, 77-79, 115; in battle, VII, 87-95, 144; in times of distress, VIII, 411-412; X, 83, 95, 117; punishment of neglect of, in next life, XII, 71.
 - guilt of, in case of theft, VIII, 337.
 - killing man of, XI, 67. See Penance for killing.
 - manes of, III, 197.
 - not a guest, but to be fed, III, 110-111.
 - origin of, I, 31, 87; XII, 46.
 - punishment for adultery, VIII, 375-377, 382; for defamation, VIII, 267, 269, 276.
 - special rules, of administration of oath, VIII, 113; of burial, V, 92; of examination as witness, VIII, 88; of impurity, V, 83, 99; of initiation, II, 36-38, 41-42, 44-46; of Keśānta, II, 65; of marriage, III, 44; of naming, II, 31-32; of purification, II, 62; of saluting, II, 127; of studentship, II, 49, 190.
 - wives permitted to, III, 13-14.
- See King, Sons by wives of several castes.
- Kshatriyas, seniority among, II, 155.
- Kshatriyā, female, punishment for adultery with, VIII, 382-385.
- Kshattri caste, X, 13, 19, 26.
- occupations of, X, 49.
 - origin of, X, 12, 16.
- Kshetrāga. See Son, begotten on widow of wife.
- Kshetrāgṇa, XII, 13-14.
- Kubera, V, 96; VII, 4, 7, 42.
- Kuśmala hell, IV, 89.
- Kuhū, goddess, III, 86.
- Kukkuraka caste, X, 18.
- Kullūkabhaṭṭa, a commentator of Manu, pp. xiv-xvii, xxv, c, cx, cxi, cxxi, cxxxi-cxxxii.
- Kumārīlabhaṭṭa, pp. cxxi-cxxii; Add. and Corr. p. 613.
- Kurus, plain of, II, 19; VII, 193.
- Kūshmānda texts, VIII, 106.
- Kutsa, hymn of, XI, 250.
- Kaitra, month, VII, 182.
- Kākshusha Manu, I, 62.
- Kandāla caste, III, 92, 239; IV, 79; V, 131; IX, 87; X, 108; XII, 55.
- castes descended from, X, 26-31.
 - intercourse with female of, penance, XI, 176; punishment, VIII, 373.
 - origin of, X, 12, 16.
 - position and occupations of, X, 51-56.
 - purification on touching, V, 85.
- Kāndrāyana, or lunar penance, V, 20; VI, 20; XI, 41, 107, 155-156, 164, 172, 178.
- description of, XI, 217-226.
- Kāraṇa, demigods, XII, 44.
- Kāturmāsya-sacrifices, IV, 26; VI, 10.
- Kāṇdogya-upanishad, pp. lx-lxi.
- Kina race, X, 44.
- Koda race, X, 44.
- Kūḍākarma, tonsure, II, 27, 35; V, 58, 67.
- Kuṅku caste, X, 48.
- Land, false evidence concerning, VIII, 99, 263.
- wrongful appropriation of, XI, 58.
- Languages, of Mlekkhas and Aryans, X, 45; various, of men, IX, 332.
- Law, eighteen titles of, VIII, 3-7.

- Law, institutes of. See Dharmaśāstra.
- manner of investigation of, XII,
105-106.
- of castes, families, &c., VIII, 41-42, 46.
- settlement of doubtful points, XII,
108-115.
- sources of, II, 6-25.
- special schools of, pp. xlix, li-lvii.
- the tenfold, VI, 91-93. See Dharma.
- Lawsuits. See Judicial procedure.
- Learning, property acquired by, IX, 206.
- Leather-cutter, impure, IV, 218.
- Lending money, occupation of Vai-śya, I, 90; IX, 326; X, 115.
- permitted to Brāhmaṇa and Kṣha-triya in times of distress, X, 117.
See Debt, Interest, Usury.
- Libations to the dead, V, 69-70, 88-
90; to the manes, II, 176; III,
70, 74, 81-82, 283; VI, 24.
- Liberality, duty of, I, 86; IX, 333;
X, 79.
- destroys guilt, XI, 228. See Gift.
- Liberation, final, VI, 36-37, 42, 44,
74, 75, 78-81, 85; XII, 83-104.
- Likṣvivi race, X, 22.
- Limitation, law of, VIII, 145-149.
- Livelihood, various means of, p. lxviii; IV, 2-13. See Occupations.
- Logician, member of Parishad, XII, 111; not to be entertained as guest, IV, 30.
- Lohatāraka hell, IV, 90.
- Lohasāṅku hell, IV, 90.
- Lunar penance. See Kāndrāyana.
- Madanapāla, prince of Kāśhībā, pp.
cxxiv-cxxv.
- Madgu caste, X, 48.
- Madhuparka. See Honey-mixture.
- Madhyadeśa, boundaries of, II, 21.
- Madman, excluded from inheritance,
IX, 201, from Śrāddha, III, 161.
- special punishment for, IX, 230.
- Māgadha caste, X, 26.
- occupation of, X, 47.
- origin of, X, 11, 17.
- Magic, practice of, an Upapātaka, XI, 64; punishable, IX, 258, 290;
permitted to Brāhmaṇa, XI, 31-34.
- Mahābhārata and Manu's laws, pp.
xiv, xvi, xxxviii, lx, lxii-lxiii, lxxiv-xcii, xcvi-xcviii, cvii.
- Mahānaraka hell, IV, 88.
- Mahāpātaka, mortal sin, enumeration of, IX, 235; XI, 55; punishments for, IX, 236-242. See Brāhmaṇa, offences against;
Drinking spirituous liquor;
Guru, adultery with wife of;
Theft of gold.
- Mahāraurava hell, IV, 88.
- Mahāvīki hell, IV, 89.
- Māhitrā hymn, XI, 250.
- Maintenance, allowed to outcast women, XI, 189; to subsidiary sons, IX, 163; to those excluded from inheritance, IX, 202.
- Maitrāyana-brāhmaṇopaniṣad, pp.
xliv-xlv.
- Maitrāyaṇīya school. See Mānava school.
- Maitreyaka caste, X, 33.
- Malāvaha sins, XI, 71. See Penance for.
- Malla caste, X, 22; XII, 45.
- Mānava Dharmaśāstra, traditional account of origin of, pp. xii-xviii; I, 58-60, 102, 119; XI, 244.
- recast of a Dharma-sūtra, pp.
xviii-xlv.
- composed by a special law-school,
pp. xlvi-lvi.
- causes of sanctity of, pp. lvilxv.
- old and modern parts of, pp. lxvilxxiii.
- sources of modern parts, pp.
lxxiv-xcii.
- successive recasts of, pp. xciixcviii.
- antiquity and date of, pp. xcixcxviii.
- commentaries on, pp. cix-cxxxvi.
- by whom to be studied, I, 103;
II, 16; to be taught, I, 103.
- rewards for studying, I, 104-106.
- contents of, I, 111-118, agree with Veda, II, 7.
- secret portion of, XII, 107.
- Mānava-saṃhitā, astrological, p. xcvi.
- Mānava Dharma-sūtra, quoted, pp.
xv-xxiii, xxx-xxxii, xxxv, xxxvii.
- Mānava Grihya-sūtra, pp. xxxix-xl, xciii.

- Mānava school, pp. xviii, xxxvii, xlv;
works of, p. xli.
- Mānava Srāddhakalpa, pp. xl-xliv.
- Mānavâtārya, p. lxiii.
- Mandapāla, a sage, IX, 23.
- Manes, Bali-offering for, III, 91.
- classes and origin of, I, 37; III, 194-201, 284; XII, 49.
- day and night of, I, 66.
- debt due to, IV, 257.
- libations to. See Libations.
- sacrifices to. See Srāddha.
- tirtha of, II, 59.
- Mantrasamhitā, IV, 100. See Samhitā.
- Manu, descended from Brahman, pp. xii, lvii; I, 33, 63; VI, 54.
- etymology of the name, p. xiv.
- identified with Brahman, pp. xiii, lvii; XII, 123.
- king, pp. xiii, lviii-lix; VII, 42.
- lawgiver, pp. xiii-xviii, lxi-lxii; I, 1-4, 58, 102, 119; II, 7.
- Pragāpati, p. lvii; I, 34; IX, 17.
- other myths regarding, pp. lvii-lxiii.
- quoted in the Mānava Dharmaśāstra, III, 222; IV, 103; V, 41, 131; VI, 54; VIII, 124, 139, 168, 204, 242, 279, 292, 339; IX, 158, 182-183, 239; X, 63, 78.
- Manus, seven, I, 36, 61-63.
- Manvâtārya, p. lxiii.
- Manvantara, period of a Manu, I, 79-80.
- Mārgaśrisha, month, VII, 182.
- Mārgava caste, X, 34.
- Marīki, a Pragāpati, I, 35, 58; III, 195.
- Mārkaṇḍeya, author of a recast of Manu's laws, pp. xvii, xcv.
- Marriage, expenses of first, may be obtained by begging, XI, 1, 5.
- forbidden degrees and impediments, III, 5-9, 11; XI, 172-173. See Outcasts.
- intermarriage between different castes, III, 12-19, 43-44, 64. See Sons by wives of several castes; Wives of several castes.
- present received on, is separate property, IX, 206.
- punishment for substitution of another bride, VIII, 204.
- results of low, III, 63.
- rites, pp. xxxix note, lxxvii-lxxviii; description, III, 20-42, 51-54; affect succession, IX, 196-197.
- Marriage, second, of widows, forbidden, V, 161-164; IX, 65; of virgin widows permitted, IX, 69-70, 176. See Woman, re-married.
- suitable ages of men for, IX, 94; of women, IX, 4, 88, 90-94.
- when complete, VIII, 227.
- with sacred texts for virgins, VIII, 226.
- the Vedic sacrament of women, II, 67. See Betrothal, Husband; Wife, repudiation and super-session.
- Maruts, III, 88; XI, 120, 122, 222.
- Māsha, value of, VIII, 134.
- Maternal aunt, II, 50, 131.
- Maternal grandfather, entertained at Srāddha, III, 148. See Daughter's son.
- Maternal uncle, entertained at Srāddha, III, 148.
- impurity on death of, V, 81.
- manner of saluting, II, 130.
- quarrels with, forbidden, IV, 179, 183.
- receives the honey-mixture, III, 119.
- Maternal uncle's wife, II, 131.
- Matsya-purāṇa, p. cxi.
- Matsyas, a tribe, II, 19; VII, 193.
- Measures, examined by the king, VIII, 403.
- Meat, allowed to be eaten, V, 16, 18, 22-23, 27-33, 36, 39-42.
- forbidden to be eaten, IV, 213; V, 7, 11-15, 17-18, 34, 36-38, 43-56.
- sale of, disqualifies for Srāddha, III, 152; forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, X, 88.
- Medhātithi, a commentator of Manu, pp. xiii-xvii, xcv, cvii-cviii, cxviii-cxxvi.
- Merchants. See Traders.
- Mīmāṃsā, pp. xlvii, lii, cxix.
- Mīmāṃsaka, member of Parishad, XII, 111.
- Ministers, royal, IX, 294.
- chief of, to be a Brāhmaṇa, VII, 58; takes king's place, VII, 141, 226.
- consultations with, VII, 56-59, 146-216.
- number of, p. xxxvii; VII, 54.
- punishment of, for unjust decisions, IX, 234. See Officials.

- Minor, cannot make a contract, VIII, 163.
 — property of, not lost by lapse of time, VIII, 148-149; protected by king, VIII, 27. See Infants.
- Mischief, punishment of, VIII, 285, 288-289; IX, 279, 281, 285, 289, 291.
- Miser, food of, forbidden to Brâhmana, IV, 210.
- Mitra, deity, XII, 121.
- Mlekkhas, barbarians, II, 23; X, 45.
- Monopoly, royal, VIII, 399.
- Mortal sin. See Mahâpâtaka.
- Mortgage, VIII, 165.
- Mother, begging from, II, 50.
 — forsaking, a crime, III, 157; XI, 60; punishment for, VIII, 389.
 — impurity of, on birth, V, 62.
 — inherits from daughter, IX, 197; from son, IX, 217.
 — punishment for defaming, VIII, 275.
 — reverence towards and venerability of, II, 145, 225-237; IV, 162, 180, 183. See Daughter, Son.
- Mother's sister, II, 133.
- Mother-in-law, II, 131.
- Mrita, alms, IV, 4-5.
- Murder. See Homicide, Penance for killing.
- Musician, food of, forbidden, IV, 210.
- Muttered prayers, efficacy of, II, 85-87. See Veda-study, private.
- Nâgas, snake-deities, I, 37; III, 196; VII, 23.
- Nahusha, a king, VII, 41.
- Nairukta, pp. xxvi, lvii; XII, 111.
- Nakshatreshri sacrifice, VI, 10.
- Nâmādheya, rite of naming child, II, 30-33; V, 70.
- Nandanâçârya, a commentator of Manu, pp. cxxxiii-cxxxv.
- Nârada, a Pragâpati, I, 35.
- Nârada-smṛiti, pp. xv, xvii, xcii, xcvi, ci-cii, civ, cvii, cxii, cxxii.
- Nârâyana, commentator. See Sarvagña-Nârâyana.
- Nârâyana, deity, I, 10.
- Nâsa caste, X, 22; XII, 45.
- Nemi, a king, VII, 41.
- Nigama, IV, 19.
- Nirriti, deity, XI, 105, 119.
- Nirukta, pp. xxvi, 1; XII, 111.
- Nishâda caste, descendants of, X, 18, 34, 36-37, 39.
 — food of, forbidden to Brâhmana, IV, 215.
 — occupation of, X, 48.
 — origin of, X, 8.
 Nishka, value of, VIII, 137.
- Nishkramana, first leaving the house, II, 34.
- Nîti. See Policy, royal.
- Niyoga. See Appointment of widows; Son begotten on widow or wife.
- Non-payment of wages. See Wages.
- Non-performance of agreements, VIII, 5, 218-221.
- Nuisance, punishment for committing, IX, 282-283.
- Nuptial fee, sulka, VIII, 204; IX, 100. See Daughter, sale of.
- Oath, administered in doubtful cases, VIII, 109; in boundary disputes, VIII, 256.
 — formerly sworn by gods and sages, VIII, 110.
 — manner of swearing, VIII, 113-114.
 — sanctity of, VIII, 111. See Perjury.
- Occupations, of four castes, I, 88-91; X, 74-80; in times of distress, X, 81-117. See Brâhmana, Kshatriya, Sûdra, Vaiçya.
- of higher caste never to be adopted by lower, X, 95-96.
 — of mixed castes, X, 32-39, 47-52.
 — pursuit of forbidden, punishable, IX, 225; results of, IV, 30. See Penance for forbidden occupations.
- Officials, royal, appointment and classes of, VII, 60-68, 80-81, 114-121.
 — punishment of corrupt, VII, 123-124; VIII, 34; IX, 231, 259; of negligent, IX, 272.
 — supervised by spies, VII, 122.
- Officiating priest, definition of term, II, 143.
 — entertained at Srâddha, III, 148.
 — impurity on death of, V, 81.
 — manner of saluting, II, 130.
 — payment of fees to, VIII, 206-210; XI, 38-39.

- Officiating priest, punishment of, for forsaking sacrificer, VIII, 388.
 — punishment of sacrificer for forsaking, VIII, 388.
 — quarrels with, forbidden, IV, 179, 182.
 — receives the honey-mixture, III, 119.
 — to be chosen by king, VII, 78.
 Oilman, impure, III, 158; IV, 84-85.
 Om, syllable, VI, 70; XI, 249.
 — is a secret Veda, XI, 266.
 — origin of, II, 76.
 — pronounced in beginning recitation of Veda, II, 74-75.
 — sanctity of, II, 83-84.
 Ordeals, pp. ci-cii.
 — by fire and water, VIII, 114-116.
 Orders, four, VI, 87-88.
 — comparison of, III, 77-78; VI, 89-90.
 — disputes regarding duties, how settled, VIII, 390-391.
 — duties of all, VI, 91-93. See Ascetic, Hermit, Householder, Student.
 Organs, enumeration of, II, 90-92.
 — deficiency in, disqualifies for Śrāddhas, III, 161, 177-178, 242; excludes from inheritance, IX, 201.
 — duty of restraining, II, 88, 92-100; IV, 246; V, 105; VI, 4, 52, 60, 72, 92; X, 63, &c.
 Outcast, associating with, forbidden, III, 150, 157; IV, 79, 213; IX, 238-239; XI, 185, 190; a mortal sin, XI, 55; punishment for, in next life, XII, 60. See Penance for associating with outcast.
 — food laid on the ground for, III, 92.
 — marriage with daughter of, II, 238, 240 note.
 — purification on touching, V, 85.
 — treatment of female, XI, 189. See Abhivasta; Caste, exclusion from, readmission into.
 Pahlava race, pp. cxiv-cxvii; X, 44.
 Pairsāka marriage, III, 21.
 — description of, III, 34.
 — forbidden, pp. lxxvii-lxxviii; III, 23, 25.
 — results of, III, 41-42.
 Pākayagñas, II, 86, 143; XI, 119.
 Pala, value of, VIII, 135.
 Paṇa, value of, VIII, 136.
 Pāṇḍusopāka caste, X, 37.
 Pañṣṭagavya, the five products of the cow, XI, 166.
 Pañṣṭālas, a tribe, II, 19; VII, 193.
 Pañktidushaṇa, defiler of a company, III, 150-182.
 — penance for, XI, 201.
 Pañktipāvana, sanctifier of a company, III, 183-186.
 Pārada race, X, 44.
 Pārāṣava caste, X, 8; son, IX, 178.
 Parents. See Father, Mother.
 Parishad, legal assembly, p. lii; XII, 108-115.
 Parivettri. See Brother, younger, marrying, &c.
 Parivitta. See Brother, elder, marrying, &c.
 Partition, made after parents' death, IX, 104, or by father, IX, 215; meritorious, IX, 111.
 — once made final, IX, 47.
 — between brothers legitimate, of equal caste, IX, 104, 156-157; shares, IX, 112-119, 213.
 — between younger brother and son begotten on widow of elder, IX, 120.
 — between sons of elder and younger wives, IX, 122-126.
 — between twins, IX, 126.
 — between son and appointed daughter, IX, 134.
 — between sons of wives of different castes, IX, 148-155.
 — between legitimate and subsidiary sons, IX, 162-165.
 — between sons by different fathers, IX, 191.
 — of acquisitions by brothers, IX, 204-208, 215.
 — of property of reunited coparceners, IX, 210-212.
 — of property afterwards discovered, IX, 218. See Inheritance; Property, indivisible, self-acquired of father; separate of sons.
 Partners. See Concerns among.
 Parva-days, III, 45; IV, 150, 153.
 Pasture-ground, around villages and towns, VIII, 237.
 — indivisible, IX, 219.
 Pataṅgali, pp. li-lij, cxii.

- Paternal aunt, manner of saluting, II, 131, 133.
 — grandmother, inherits, IX, 217.
 — uncle, manner of saluting, II, 130.
 Pathin hell, IV, 90.
 Paundraka race, X, 44.
 Pāvamāni texts, V, 86; XI, 258.
 Pavitra, means of purification, VI, 41.
 Penance, for adultery with Guru's wife, XI, 104-107; with other women and for other carnal offences, XI, 171-179.
 — for Apātrikarāṇa sins, XI, 126.
 — for associating with outcasts, XI, 180-182.
 — for bite of impure animals and men, XI, 200.
 — for breach of student's vows, II, 181, 187, 220-221; XI, 119-124, 158-159.
 — for casting of suppliant, XI, 199.
 — for cutting or destroying plants, XI, 143, 145.
 — destroying embryo of Brāhmaṇa, XI, 88.
 — for drinking spirituous liquor, XI, 91-99, 147-152.
 — for eating forbidden food, IV, 222; V, 20-21; XI, 153-162.
 — for false evidence, VIII, 105-106; XI, 89.
 — for following forbidden occupations, XI, 193.
 — for Gātibhramśakara sins, XI, 125.
 — for improperly divulging Veda, XI, 199.
 — for injuring living beings, VI, 69.
 — for killing Brāhmaṇa, XI, 73-87, 90; menstruating Brāhmaṇi, XI, 88; friend, XI, 89; Kshatriya or Vaiśya engaged in sacrifice, XI, 88; wife, XI, 89; cow, XI, 109-117; Kshatriya, XI, 127-129; Vaiśya, XI, 127, 130; Śūdra, XI, 127, 131; various animals, XI, 132-134, 135-138, 140-142, 144; eunuch, XI, 134; adulterous women, XI, 139.
 — for Malāvaha sins, XI, 126.
 — for neglecting duties of Snātaka, XI, 202-204; initiation, XI, 192; sacred fire, XI, 41; twilight devotions, II, 220-221.
 — for offences against teacher, XI, 89.
 Penance, for performing forbidden sacrifices, XI, 198.
 — for performing obsequies of a stranger, XI, 198.
 — for Samkarikarāṇa sins, XI, 126.
 — for secret sins, XI, 248-266.
 — for swallowing ordure, &c., XI, 151.
 — for teaching and sacrificing for wicked men, X, 111; XI, 194, 198-199.
 — for theft of deposit, XI, 89; of gold, XI, 100-103; of other property, XI, 163-170.
 — for those excluded from social repasts, XI, 201.
 — for threatening, striking, or hurting a Brāhmaṇa, XI, 205-209.
 — for unlawfully accepting gifts, X, 111; XI, 194-195, 198.
 — for Upapātaka sins, XI, 118.
 Penances, description of various, XI, 212-247.
 — how imposed, XI, 86, 210.
 — necessity of and reasons for performing, XI, 44-47, 54.
 — not to be performed under the pretence of vows, IV, 198.
 — vicarious for punishments, IX, 235, 240-242.
 Perjury, equal to drinking spirituous liquor, XI, 57.
 — permissible in certain cases, VIII, 103-105, 112.
 — punishments for, VIII, 119-123, 257, 263.
 — suborner to, excluded from Śrāddha, III, 158. See Oath, Penance for perjury, Witness.
 Phālguna, month, VII, 182.
 Physician, impure, III, 152, 180; IV, 212, 220.
 — unskilful, punished, IX, 259, 284.
 Piśākas, III, 141; V, 50; XI, 96; XII, 57.
 — origin of, I, 37, 43; XII, 44.
 Pitṛimiedha, V, 65.
 Pledge, VIII, 143-145, 149, 150.
 Pole, punishment for destroying, IX, 285.
 Police, patrols and stations, where to be placed, VII, 114; IX, 264-266.
 Policy, royal, four expedients of, VII, 159.

- Policy, royal, six measures of, VII, 160-215.
 — theory of, IX, 294-300.
- Possession without title no proof of ownership, VIII, 200. See Limitation, law of.
- Pragâpati, the lord of creatures, II, 76-77, 84, 226; IV, 225, 248; V, 28; IX, 46, 327; XI, 244; XII, 121.
 — horse sacred to, XI, 38.
 — ishri sacred to, VI, 38.
 — oblation to, III, 86.
 — penance revealed by. See Krik-kbra penance.
 — sacrifice of, V, 152.
 — world of, IV, 182.
- Pragâpatis, I, 35; XII, 50.
- Prâgâpatya marriage, III, 21.
 — affects succession to women's property, IX, 196.
 — description of, III, 30.
 — permissibility of, III, 23-24.
 — results of, III, 38-40, 42.
- Praketas, a Pragâpati, I, 35.
- Pramrita, agriculture, IV, 4-5.
- Prânâyâma, suppression of breath, II, 75; VI, 69-71; XI, 200, 202, 249.
- Pratilomas. See Castes, mixed.
- Praushlapada, month, IV, 95.
- Prayâga (Allahabad), II, 21.
- Pretas, III, 230; XII, 59, 71-72.
- Prices of merchandize, fixed by king, VIII, 401-402.
- Priests. See Adhvaryu, Brahman, Domestic priest, Officiating priests, Udgâtri.
- Primogeniture. See Son, eldest.
- Prisoner, excluded from Srâddha, III, 158.
 — food of, forbidden to Brâhmana, IV, 210.
- Prisons, where to be placed, IX, 288.
- Prithu, a king, VII, 42; IX, 44.
- Property, acquisition of, IX, 44; seven modes of, X, 115.
 — indivisible, IX, 200, 219.
 — lost and found, VIII, 30-34.
 — self-acquired, of father, IX, 209.
 — separate, of sons, IX, 206.
 — stolen, to be restored or made good by king, VIII, 40. See Limitation; Minor, Woman, property of.
- Prostitute, food of, forbidden to Brâhmana, IV, 209, 219.
- Prostitute, to be punished, IX, 259.
- Publican, food of, forbidden to Brâhmana, IV, 216.
 — to be banished, IX, 225.
- Pukkasa caste, IV, 79; X, 38; XII, 55.
 — occupation of, X, 49.
 — origin of, X, 18.
- Pulaha, a Pragâpati, I, 35.
- Pulastya, I, 35; III, 198.
- Pulkasa, varia lectio for Pukkasa.
- Punarbhû. See Woman remarried.
- Punishment, degrees of, VIII, 129-130, 310.
 — places for inflicting, VIII, 124-125.
 — purifies offender, VIII, 318. See King, duties of.
- Pupil, impurity on death of, V, 81.
- inherits, IX, 187.
 — may be asked for money, IV, 33.
 — may be beaten, IV, 164; VIII, 299-300.
 — who may become, II, 109-115. See Student, Teacher.
- Purâna, value of, VIII, 136.
- Purânas, pp. xvi, lxv, xci; III, 232.
- Purchase, one of the modes of acquiring property, X, 115. See Rescission of sale and purchase, Sale.
- Purification, of persons, II, 53; V, 85-87, 134-145. See Sipping water.
 — means of, V, 105-109, 127-128; of ascetic, VI, 41.
 — of things, V, 111-126.
- Purohita. See Domestic priest.
- Purusha, the Male, I, 11, 19; VII, 17; XII, 122.
 — hymn, addressed to, XI, 252.
- Pushpadha caste, X, 21.
- Pushya-day, IV, 96.
- Put hell, IX, 138.
- Pûtimrîtika hell, IV, 89.
- Qualities, three, of nature or of self, I, 15; XII, 24-50.
- Ragas. See Activity.
- Râghavânanda, commentator of Manu, pp. xiii, c, cxxxii-cxxxiii.
- Rahasya, secret portion of the Veda, II, 140, 165. See Upanishad.
- Raivata Manu, I, 62.
- Râkshasa marriage, III, 21.
 — description of, III, 33.

- Rākshasa, permissibility of, pp. lxxvii-lxxviii; III, 23-24, 26.
 — results of, III, 41-42.
- Rākshasas, III, 170, 204, 230, 280; IV, 199; VII, 23, 38; XI, 96.
 — manes of, III, 196.
 — origin of, I, 37, 43; XII, 44.
- Rape, punishment of, VIII, 364, 378.
- Raurava hell, IV, 88.
- Receivers of stolen goods, IX, 278.
- Repentance, removes guilt, XI, 228, 230-232.
- Repudiation. See Wife.
- Rescission of sale and purchase, VIII, 5, 222-228.
- Resumption of gifts, VIII, 4, 212-214.
- Reunited coparceners, IX, 210-212.
- Rig-veda, II, 158; III, 131, 142, 145; IV, 124; XI, 262-265; XII, 112.
 — origin of, I, 23.
 — passages quoted from, II, 181; V, 86; VIII, 106; XI, 250-258, 260-261.
- Rigīsha hell, IV, 90.
- Rishis. See Sages.
- Rīta, gleaned corn, IV, 5.
- Robbers, manner of discovering, IX, 261-269.
- Robbery, VIII, 6. See Violence.
 — definition of, VIII, 332.
 — punishment of, IX, 275-276, 280; of those who give no assistance in cases of, IX, 274.
- Rogues, classes of, IX, 257-260.
 — duty and manner of discovering and punishing, IX, 252-255, 261-293.
- Rudra, hymn to, XI, 255.
- Rudras, III, 284; XI, 222.
- Sacraments, for males, II, 26-47; for females, II, 66-67.
 — not allowed to mixed castes, X, 68; nor to Sūdras, X, 126.
- Sacred fire, kindling, rule for, III, 67; neglect of, XI, 66.
 — neglecting or extinguishing, III, 153; XI, 60. See Penance for.
 — offerings to, II, 108, 176, 186-187; IV, 145-146; VII, 145. See Agnihotra.
 — repositing in oneself, VI, 25, 38.
 — reverence shown towards, IV, 58. See Fire, reverence to.
- Sacred fires, keeper of five, sanctifies company, III, 185.
- Sacrifices, not to be performed by fools, infants, women, &c., II, 171-172; IV, 205-206; XI, 36-37.
- Sacrifices, great daily, enumeration of, III, 70-74.
 — description of, III, 81-121.
 — duty of performing, for householders, III, 75-80, 93; IV, 21-24; for hermits, VI, 5.
 — reason for performing, III, 68-69.
 — remove guilt, XI, 246.
- Sacrifices, forbidden, III, 151, 164; IX, 290; XI, 64. See Penance for performing forbidden sacrifices.
- Sacrifices, Srauta, II, 28. See Sattra, Soma-sacrifices.
 — duty of performing, IV, 25-28; by a king, VII, 78-79.
 — forbidden to eunuchs, women, &c., IV, 205-206; to poor men, XI, 38-40.
 — initiation to, a third birth, II, 169.
 — materials for, may be taken by force, XI, 11-15; not to be begged from Sūdras, XI, 24.
 — property destined for, is indivisible, IX, 219; seizing such property, XI, 26.
 — person initiated for, II, 128; IV, 130, 210; VIII, 360. See Penance for killing.
 — substitute for, XI, 27-30.
- Sacrificer, produced by Goodness, XII, 49.
 — punishment for forsaking, VIII, 388.
- Sacrificial fee, due, must be given, XI, 38-40.
 — payment and distribution of, VIII, 206-210.
- Sacrificial string (thread), II, 44, 63-64, 174; IV, 36.
- Sacrificing for oneself, duty of, I, 88-90; X, 75, 77-78.
- Sacrificing for others, occupation of Brāhmaṇa, I, 88; X, 75-76.
 — for unworthy men, forbidden, III, 65; XI, 60; permitted in times of distress, X, 103, 109-111. See Penance for teaching and sacrificing for wicked men; Sūdra, sacrificing for.
- Sādhya, deities, I, 22; III, 195; XI, 29; XII, 49.

- Sages, or great sages, address Manu, I, 1-4; Bhrigu, V, 1-2; XII, 1.
 — debt due to. See Debts, the three.
 — fathers of the manes, III, 201.
 — origin of, I, 34-36; XII, 49.
 — worship of, II, 176.
 Sagotra relative, IX, 190.
 Sâhasa. See Violence.
 Sahodba. See Son of pregnant bride.
 Sairandhra caste, X, 32.
 Sakâkola hell, IV, 89.
 Sakulya relative, IX, 187.
 Sale, forbidden of adulterated goods, VIII, 203; of children, XI, 62; of daughter, see Daughter; of garden, tank, &c., XI, 62; of wife, IX, 46; XI, 62.
 — forbidden to Brâhmana, various goods, III, 152, 159; X, 86-94; XI, 63.
 — fraudulent, forbidden, VIII, 203; void, VIII, 165. See Trader.
 Sale without ownership, VIII, 4, 197-202.
 Saluting, duty of, II, 117, 120-121; IV, 154.
 — various modes of, II, 122-137.
 Sâmāna, XI, 265. See Gyeshibāsāman, Sâmā-veda.
 Samānodaka relative, XI, 183.
 — definition of term, V, 60.
 — impurity on birth or death of, V, 64, 71, 74, 78.
 Samāvartana, student's rite on returning home, II, 108; III, 4.
 Sâmā-veda, I, 23; III, 145; IV, 123-124; XI, 263; XII, 112.
 Samdhyâ worship. See Twilight devotions.
 Samghâta hell, IV, 89.
 Samgivana hell, IV, 89.
 Samhitâ of Veda, XI, 78, 201, 259. See Mantrasamhitâ.
 Samkarikarana sins, XI, 69. See Penance for.
 Sampratâpana hell, IV, 89.
 Samskâras. See Sacraments.
 Sâmtapana Kriktbra penance, V, 20; XI, 125, 165, 174.
 — description of, XI, 213.
 Sapinda relative, II, 247; XI, 183.
 — begetting son with widow of Sapinda, IX, 59, 147.
 — definition of term, V, 60; another definition, IX, 186.
 Sapinda, impurity on birth or death of, V, 58-59, 61-64, 67-70, 72-79, 83-84.
 — inherits, IX, 187.
 — marriage with female, forbidden, III, 5; XI, 172-173.
 Sapindakarana, III, 247-248.
 Sârahgi, wife of Mandapâla, IX, 23.
 Sarasvatî, goddess, oblation to, VIII, 105.
 — river, p. xlv; II, 17; XI, 78.
 Sarpas, snake-deities, I, 37.
 Sarvagña-Nârâyana, commentator of Manu, p. xiii, xxxvii, c, cxi, cxxviii-cxxx.
 Sarvâtmabhûti, deity, III, 91.
 Sattrâ, performer of, sacrifice never impure, V, 93.
 Sattva. See Goodness.
 Sâtвата caste, X, 23.
 Satyânrita trade, IV, 4, 6.
 Saumya manes, III, 199.
 Sâvitri rite. See Initiation, Vrâtya.
 Sâvitri verse, II, 148; XI, 195, 226.
 — efficacy of recitation, II, 78-82, 102, 118.
 — manner of recitation, II, 101, 104.
 — mother of the student, II, 170.
 Sâyana-Mâdhava, p. xlix.
 Sea, trade by, VIII, 157, 406.
 — voyages by, forbidden, III, 158.
 Seed-corn, offences with respect to, IX, 291.
 Self. See Soul.
 Self-defence permitted, VIII, 348-351.
 Seniority. See Brâhmana, Kshatriya, Srotriya, Sûdra, Vaisya, Wife.
 Service, excludes from Srâddhas, III, 153.
 — forbidden to Brâhmana, IV, 4, 6.
 — with Sûdras, a sin, XI, 70. See King, service of; Sûdra, duties of.
 Singer, adultery with wife of, VIII, 362-363.
 — excluded from Srâddha, III, 155.
 — following profession of, an Upapâtaka, XI, 66.
 — to be banished, IX, 225. See Bard.
 Sins, classification of, XI, 55-71. See Penance.
 Sipping water, II, 222; V, 86-87, 138, 142-145.

- Sipping water, manner of, II, 58-62 ;
V, 139.
- Sister, II, 50, 133. See Brother,
Incest.
- Skanda-purāṇa, pp. xcvi, cvi.
- Slave, classes of, IV, 253-256 ; VIII,
415.
- disqualified to earn property, VIII,
416-417 ; to be witness, VIII,
66 ; exception, VIII, 70.
- food of Sūdra, eatable, IV, 253.
- quarrels with, forbidden, IV, 180,
185.
- offspring of female, IX, 55. See
Son, illegitimate, of Sūdra.
- sexual intercourse with female,
VIII, 363.
- Sleeping, purification after, V, 145.
- rules regarding, for student, II,
108 ; for Snātaka, IV, 57, 75, 92.
- at sunset and sunrise forbidden,
II, 219-221 ; IV, 55.
- Smṛiti. See Tradition.
- Smṛitimaṅgarī, of Govindarāga, pp.
xxi, cxxvii.
- Smṛitiviveka, of Medhātithi, p. cxxiii.
- Snātaka (Brāhmaṇa who has completed his studentship).
- definition of term, IV, 31.
- duties of: acceptance of food,
IV, 205-225, 250, 253 ; of gifts and begging, IV, 33-34, 84-
91, 186-191, 247-252 ; X, 113-
114 ; XI, 1-6 ; bathing, IV, 45,
129, 152, 201-203 ; dress, IV,
18, 34-36, 66 ; eating, rules for, IV, 43, 45, 55, 58, 62-63, 65, 74-76 ; general behaviour, righteousness, truthfulness, &c., IV, 15-16, 18, 72, 145-146, 155-
185, 204, 236-246 ; hospitality,
IV, 29-32 ; liberality, IV, 192-197, 227-235 ; interruptions of Veda-study, IV, 101-127 ; performance of daily rites, IV, 14, 21-24, 92-94, 152 ; of Srauta-sacrifices, IV, 25-28, 226 ; residence, IV, 60-61 ; sleeping, IV, 57,
75, 92 ; studying the Veda, &c., IV, 17-20, 95-100, 146-149 ;
voiding excrements, IV, 45-52,
152 ; miscellaneous rules, IV,
37-42, 44, 53-59, 63-83, 128,
130-144, 150-154.
- may retire from the world, IV,
257-258.
- Snātaka, receives the honey-mixture, III, 119.
- way to be made for, II, 138-139.
- Soma, deity, III, 87, 211 ; IX, 129 ;
XI, 255.
- plant, sale of, forbidden, III, 158,
180 ; X, 80.
- Somapa manes, III, 197-198.
- Soma-sacrifices, IV, 26 ; XI, 7-10.
- Somasad manes, III, 195.
- Son, duties towards parents, II,
145-148, 225-227. See Father, Mother.
- duty of begetting a, II, 28 ; reward for fulfilment of, IX, 137-138. See Debts, the three.
- forsaking, an Upapātaka, XI, 60 ;
punishment for, VIII, 389.
- has no property, VIII, 416 ; exceptions, IX, 206.
- has no right to parents' estate during their lifetime, IX, 104.
- inherits from father, IX, 104, 156-
157, 185 ; from mother, VIII,
104, 192, 195.
- liable for father's debts and exceptions, VIII, 159, 166.
- may be beaten, IV, 164 ; VIII,
299-300.
- offences against parents, III, 157,
159. See Father, Mother.
- punishment for defaming, VIII, 275.
- quarrels with, forbidden, IV, 180,
184.
- adopted, IX, 141-142, 159, 168.
- begot on wife or widow, IX, 31-
56 ; IX, 143-147, 159, 162-165,
167, 190-191. See Appointment of widows.
- born after partition, IX, 216.
- born secretly, IX, 159, 170.
- bought, IX, 160, 174.
- cast off, IX, 159, 171.
- eldest, excellence of, IX, 106-107,
109 ; inherits alone, IX, 105, 108-
109 ; share of, IX, 112-114, 115,
117, 119. See Brother, eldest.
- illegitimate, of Sūdra, IX, 179.
- legitimate, IX, 159, 162-166.
- made, IX, 159, 169.
- middlemost, share of, IX, 112-113.
- of appointed daughter. See
Daughter, appointed.
- of pregnant bride, IX, 160, 173.
- of remarried woman, III, 155, 181 ;
IX, 160, 175-176.

- Son, of Sūdrā wife, IX, 151, 153-155, 160, 178.
- of unmarried daughter, IX, 160, 172.
- second, share of, IX, 117.
- self-given, IX, 160, 177.
- youngest, share of, IX, 112-113.
- Sons, by wives of different castes, share of, IX, 148-155.
- seniority among, by wives of equal caste, IX, 122-126, 156-157.
- subsidiary, enumeration, IX, 159-160; character of, IX, 161, 181; right to inherit or share, I, 165, 180.
- Son-in-law, entertained at Srāddha, III, 148. See Bridegroom.
- Sopāka caste, x, 38.
- Sorcery. See Magic.
- Soul, XII, 12-14.
- knowledge of supreme, leads to final liberation, VI, 29, 49, 82-84; XII, 83, 85, 91-93, 118-125.
- Spiritual guide. See Teacher.
- Spirituous liquor, kinds of, XI, 94-95.
- debt for, not recoverable, VIII, 159. See Drinking spirituous liquor; Publican; Woman, fine for drinking spirituous liquor.
- Spy, employed by king, VII, 122, 153-154, 223; IX, 256, 261, 298.
- Staff, of Snātaka, IV, 36.
- of student, II, 45-47, 64, 174.
- Strīdhana. See Woman, property of.
- Student, breach of vow of, III, 155. See Penance for.
- cannot be made a witness, VIII, 65.
- does not become impure by births and deaths, v, 93.
- duration of residence with teacher, III, 1.
- duties of and restrictions imposed on, II, 41-75, 108, 117-139, 144-150, 161-162, 173-212, 216-240.
- entertained at Srāddha, II, 189-190; III, 186; not to be entertained, III, 151.
- may perform obsequies of teacher, parents, &c., v, 65, 91, but must not offer libations to other relatives, v, 88.
- mode of personal purification, v, 137.
- Student, must not pay stipulated fee, II, 245; III, 156.
- pays no toll at ferry, VIII, 407.
- personating a student, an offence, IV, 200.
- receives alms at Vairavadeva, III, 94.
- perpetual or professed, II, 242-244, 247-249.
- returned home, II, 245-246; III, 2-4. See Pupil, Teacher.
- Subrahmanya texts, IX, 126.
- Sub-teacher. See Upādhyāya.
- Subtraction of gifts. See Resumption.
- Sudās, a king, VII, 41; VIII, 110.
- Sudhanvan caste, x, 23.
- Suicide, no libations offered to, v, 89.
- Sukālin manes, III, 197.
- Sumati Bhārgava, recast of Manu's laws by, pp. xvii, xc.
- Sumukha, a king, VII, 41.
- Suparnas, bird-deities, VII, 23.
- manes of, III, 196.
- origin of, I, 37; XII, 44.
- Supersession. See Wife.
- Suppression of breath. See Prāṇāyāma.
- Surā. See Spirituous liquor.
- Surety, VIII, 158-162, 169.
- Sūta caste, x, 26.
- occupation of, x, 47.
- origin of, x, 11, 17.
- Suvarṇa, value of, VIII, 134, 137.
- Svargit sacrifice, XI, 75.
- Svāroṣha Manu, I, 62.
- Svayambhū, I, 3, 6, 92, 94; v, 39; IX, 138. See Brahman.
- Svayamdatta. See Son, self-given.
- Sabara-bhāshya, p. cxii.
- Saikha caste, x, 21.
- Saka race, pp. cxiv, cxvii; x, 44.
- Sākala oblations, XI, 201, 257.
- Sālmala hell, IV, 90.
- Sivasamkalpa text, XI, 251.
- Srāddha, funeral sacrifice, causes interruption of Veda-study, III, 188; IV, 110-111, 117.
- offered by son of appointed daughter, IX, 127, 132, 140; by adopted son, IX, 142; to three ancestors, IX, 186.
- daily, III, 70, 72, 74, 80-83, 283.
- for lately deceased person. See Ekoddishā.

- Śrāddha*, monthly, description of, III, 187, 203-253, 256-265, 279, 282.
 — materials for, III, 123, 267-272.
 — number of guests at, III, 125-126, 129.
 — persons not to be fed at, III, 150-167.
 — persons to be fed at, II, 189-190; III, 128-149, 183-186.
 — results of feeding unworthy guests at, III, 133, 168-182.
 — rewards for performing, III, 127, 277, 282.
 — times for performing, III, 122, 273-282.
 — special kinds of, III, 254.
Srauta-sacrifices. See Sacrifices.
Śrāvana, month, IV, 95.
Śrī, deity, III, 89.
Srotriya, a learned Brāhmaṇa, pp. xlviii-xlix; IV, 205; VIII, 394.
 — cannot be made a witness, VIII, 65.
 — descendant of, sanctifies company, III, 184.
 — fine for not entertaining virtuous, VIII, 393.
 — free from taxes, VII, 133.
 — gift of food to, IV, 31.
 — impurity on death of, V, 81.
 — niggardly, and liberal usurer, IV, 224-225.
 — property of, not lost by law of limitation, VIII, 149.
 — receives the honey-mixture, III, 120.
 — to be honoured and supported by king, VII, 134-136; VIII, 395.
Srotriyas, seniority among, II, 134.
Śruti. See Veda.
Suddhidipikā, of Nārāyaṇa, p. cxxx.
Sūdra, caste, cannot commit an offence causing loss of caste, X, 126.
 — disabilities, not allowed to be initiated, X, 4; to be judge, VIII, 20-21; to carry out dead Brāhmaṇa, V, 104; to fulfil the sacred law except certain portions, IV, 223; X, 126-127; to hear, learn, recite, or teach Veda, III, 156; IV, 99; X, 127; to receive leavings at Śrāddha, III, 249; to receive spiritual advice from Brāhmaṇa, IV, 80-81; exception, X, 2; to sacrifice, III, 178; to travel with Snātaka, IV, 140.
Sūdra, duties and occupations, I, 91; VIII, 410, 418; IX, 334-335; in times of distress, X, 99-100, 121-129.
 — food and gifts of, unlawful for Brāhmaṇa, III, 164; IV, 211, 218, 223; XI, 24-25; exception, IV, 253.
 — forcible appropriation of Sūdra's property by Brāhmaṇa, VIII, 417; XI, 13.
 — guilt of, in cases of theft, VIII, 337.
 — killing a, an Upapātaka, XI, 67. See Penance for killing.
 — kings, IV, 61.
 — labourers to work for king, VII, 138.
 — manes of, III, 197.
 — origin of, I, 31, 87; XII, 43.
 — position of, naturally a slave, VIII, 413-414.
 — presence of many, destroys a country, VIII, 22.
 — punishment for adultery with Āryan woman, VIII, 374; for assaulting men of higher caste, VIII, 279-283; IX, 248; for defaming men of higher caste, VIII, 267, 270-277; for neglect of duty in next birth, XII, 72.
 — residence of, II, 24.
 — rules of inheritance, IX, 157, 179.
 — special rules of administration of oath, VIII, 113; of burial, V, 92; of examination as witness, VIII, 88; of impurity, V, 83, 99; of marriage, III, 44; of naming, II, 31-32; of purification, II, 62; of saluting, II, 127, 137; of shaving, V, 140; of sipping water, V, 139-140.
 — visitor not a guest, but fed, III, 110, 112.
 — witness for Sūdras, VIII, 68.
 — wives permitted to, III, 13; IX, 157.
Sūdras, seniority among, II, 155.
Sūdrā, female, marriage and sexual intercourse of Āryans with, p. xxvii; III, 13-19, 44, 64, 155, 191, 250; VIII, 383-385; XI, 179. See Son of Sūdrā wife.
Sulka. See Nuptial fee.
Sūrasenakas, a tribe, II, 19; VII, 193.
Śvapāka caste, III, 92.
 — origin of, X, 19.
 — position and occupation of, X, 51-56.

Svavṛitti, service, IV, 4, 6.

Tailor, food of, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 214.

Tamas. See Darkness.

Tāmasa, Manu, I, 62.

Tāmisra hell, IV, 88, 165; XII, 75.

Tank, punishment for destroying, IX, 279.

— sale of, a crime, XI, 62.

— settlement of boundary of, VIII, 262. See Water.

Tapana hell, IV, 89.

Taptakrikkbra penance, XI, 157, 215.

Taratsamandīya hymn, XI, 254.

Tarpana. See Libation to the manes.

Taxes, VII, 118, 127-132, 137-139; X, 118, 120.

— exemptions from, VII, 133-136; VIII, 394.

— son not liable for unpaid, VIII, 159.

Teacher, âtārya, definition of term, II, 140.

— duties of, II, 69, 73, 159-161; IV, 164.

— duties towards. See Student.

— entertained at Srāddha, III, 148.

— fee of, II, 245-246; III, 95; stipulated fee forbidden, III, 156; XI, 63.

— impurity on death of, v, 80.

— inherits from pupil, IX, 187.

— non-Brāhmanical, II, 238, 241-242.

— not a guest, III, 110.

— offences against, III, 153; XI, 56, 60; punishment for offences, VIII, 275. See Penance for adultery with Guru's wife.

— presents a cow and the honey-mixture to student, III, 3.

— receives the honey-mixture, III, 119.

— reverence towards and venerability of, II, 144-154, 170-171, 225-235; IV, 130, 162, 179, 182.

— selection of pupils by. See Pupil.

— Śūdra, III, 156.

Teacher's son, behaviour towards, II, 208-209, 247.

— impurity on death of, v, 80.

Teacher's teacher, II, 205.

Teacher's wives, behaviour towards, II, 210-212, 216-217, 221.

— impurity on death of, v, 80.

Teaching, duty of the Brāhmaṇa, I, 88; X, 1-2, 75-76, 80.

Teaching, unworthy men permitted, X, 103, 109-111.

Temple, punishment for violation of, IX, 280, 285.

Temple-priest, excluded from Srāddha, III, 152, 180.

Theft, VIII, 6.

— anybody may be witness in cases of, VIII, 72.

— definition of, VIII, 332; exceptions, VIII, 339, 341; XI, 11-23.

— guilt of men of various castes in cases of, VIII, 336-337.

— punishments for, criminal, VIII, 314-315, 319-331, 333-334; IX, 277, 280, 293; in next life, XI, 50-52; XII, 60-68. See Property, stolen.

Theft of gold, a mortal sin, IX, 235; XI, 55.

— penance for. See Penance.

— punishment for, criminal, IX, 237; in next life, XI, 49; XII, 57.

— sins equal to, XI, 58.

Thief, disqualified to be a witness, VIII, 67.

— excluded from Srāddha, III, 150.

— food of, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 210.

— to be executed only, if taken with stolen goods, &c., IX, 270.

Thieves, abettors of, to be punished, IX, 271, 278.

— manner of discovering, IX, 261-269. See Rogues.

Time, divisions of, I, 24, 64-73.

— origin of, I, 24.

Times of distress. See Castes mixed, Occupations; Teacher, non-Brāhmanical.

Tirthas, parts of the hand, II, 58-59.

Tolls, at a ferry, VIII, 404-405, 407.

Town, pasture-ground around, VIII, 237.

— punishment for destroying, wall, gate, &c. of, IX, 289.

— to be built by king, VII, 70.

Trade, degrades Brāhmaṇa, III, 64, 152, 181; VIII, 102.

— obligatory on Vaiśya, I, 90; VIII, 410, 418; IX, 326, 329-333; X, 79.

— permitted to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 4, 6; in times of distress, X, 85; restrictions, X, 86-94.

- Trade, permitted to Kshatriya in time of distress, x, 95.
 — regulated by king, VIII, 401-402. See Contract, Duties, Sea, Taxes.
 Trader, punishments of dishonest, VIII, 399; IX, 257, 286-287, 291.
 Trades, theory of, VII, 43.
 Tradition, sacred, definition of, II, 10.
 — source of the sacred law, II, 6, 9-12.
 Trainer of dogs, elephants, &c., excluded from Śrāddha, III, 162, 164.
 — food of, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 216.
 Transmigration, I, 28-29, 55-56; V, 164; VI, 61-65; IX, 30; XI, 25; XII, 15-22, 41-81.
 Treasure-trove, VIII, 35-39.
 Tretā age, I, 83, 85, 86; IX, 301-302.
 Tridandin, definition of, XII, 10.
 Trināṅketa, III, 185.
 Trisuparṇa, III, 185.
 Trivṛt sacrifice, XI, 75.
 Truthfulness, duty of, II, 179; IV, 138-139, 170-178, &c.
 Turāyana sacrifice, VI, 10.
 Twice-born man. See Āryan.
 Twilight-devotions, II, 101-104, 222; IV, 93-94. See Penance for neglect of.
 Udgātri priest, receives a cart, VIII, 209.
 Ugra caste, x, 13, 15, 19.
 — food of, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 212.
 — occupation of, x, 49.
 — origin of, x, 9.
 Unnatural crime, XI, 174-175.
 Upādhyāya, sub-teacher, definition of, II, 141.
 — may be buried by student, v, 91.
 — venerability of, II, 145.
 Upākarma, opening of school-term, IV, 95, 119.
 Upanishads, VI, 29; XI, 263. See Rahasya.
 Upapātaka sins, enumeration of, XI, 60-67. See Penance for.
 Uśanas-smṛiti, pp. xxvii, xxxv, lxii.
 Usurer, excluded from Śrāddha, III, 153, 180.
 — food of, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 210, 220.
 Usurer, liberal and niggardly Srotriya, IV, 224-225.
 Usury, an Upapātaka, XI, 62. See Interest, Lending money.
 Utathya, son of, p. xxvi; III, 16.
 Vaideha caste, x, 19.
 — descendants of, x, 26, 31, 33, 36-37.
 — occupation of, x, 47.
 — origin of, x, 11, 17.
 — position of, x, 13.
 Vaidiks, pp. xlvii-xlviii.
 Vaikhāṇasa. See Hermit.
 — Sūtra, pp. xxvii-xxix; VI, 21.
 Vaimānika deities, XII, 48.
 Vaisvadeva offering, III, 83, 108, 121.
 — description of, III, 84-86.
 Vaisvānarī ishṛi, XI, 27.
 Vaisya, caste, duties and occupations of, I, 90; VIII, 410, 418; IX, 326-333; x, 78-80; in times of distress, x, 98.
 — forcible appropriation of Vaisya's property by Brāhmaṇa, XI, 12.
 — guilt in cases of theft, VIII, 337.
 — indigent, to be employed by Brāhmaṇa, VIII, 411-412.
 — killing a, an Upapātaka, XI, 67. See Penance for killing.
 — manes of, III, 197.
 — origin of, I, 31, 87.
 — punishment of Vaisya for adultery, VIII, 375-377, 382, 384; for defamation, VIII, 267, 269, 277; for neglect of duty, in next life, XII, 72.
 — special rules of administration of oath, VIII, 113; of burial, v, 92; of examination as witness, VIII, 88; of impurity, v, 83, 99; of Kesānta, II, 65; of naming, II, 31-32; of purification, II, 62; of saluting, II, 127; of studentship, II, 41, 42, 44, 45, 46, 49, 190.
 — visitor not a guest, but fed, III, 110, 112.
 — wives permitted to, III, 13.
 Vairya female, punishment for adultery with, VIII, 382-383, 385.
 Vairyas, seniority among, II, 155. See Sons, by wives of several castes.
 Vaivasv. Manu, I, 62.
 Vāmadeva, a sage, x, 106.

- Varâhamihira, p. xcvi.
- Varuna, III, 87; V, 96; VII, 4, 7; VIII, 82, 106; IX, 244-245, 303, 308; XI, 253, 255.
- Vasishtha, lawgiver, quoted, pp. xxix-xxx; VIII, 140.
- Pragâpati, I, 35; III, 198.
- sage, VIII, 110; IX, 23.
- hymn of, XI, 250.
- Vâsishtha Dharmasâstra, pp. xviii-xx, xxii, xxx-xxxiv, lii, lxviii, lxix, xcix, cii, cxix.
- Vassals of king, punishment of negligent, IX, 272.
- Vâstoshpati, deity, III, 89.
- Vasus, III, 284; XI, 222.
- Vâradhâna caste, X, 21.
- Vatsa, sage, VIII, 116.
- Vâyu, deity, V, 96; VII, 4, 7; IX, 42, 303, 306; XI, 120.
- Veda, conflicting passages of, all authoritative, II, 14-15.
- definition of the term, II, 10.
- first source of the law, II, 6-15.
- greatness and power of, I, 21; XII, 94-104.
- offences against, cavilling at, III, 161; IV, 163; XI, 57; divulging, see Penance for; Sûdra, disabilities; forgetting, XI, 57; scorning, II, 11.
- origin of, I, 23; XII, 49.
- purifying power of, XI, 264. See Veda-study.
- recitation of. See Veda-study.
- riddles from, III, 231.
- stealing the, II, 116; XI, 51. See Atharvan; Brâhmana, Mantra-samhitâ, Rahasya, Rig-veda, Samhitâ, Sâman, Sâma-veda, Upanishads, Yagur-veda.
- Vedânta, II, 160; VI, 83, 94.
- Vedasamnyâsika. See Ascetic, informal.
- Veda-study, ceremonies on beginning, II, 70-74; V, 145.
- destroys guilt, XI, 246-247. See Veda, purifying power.
- duration of annual term, pp. xlv-xlvii; IV, 95-96.
- duty of, II, 28, 156-158, 164-168; IV, 17-20, 35; VI, 36-37, 83; VII, 43; X, 1, 75-78; XII, 83.
- general rule of, IV, 99-100.
- interruptions of, III, 188; IV, 101-127; exceptions, II, 105-106.
- Veda-study, neglect of, III, 151. See Penance for neglecting.
- private daily, duty of, II, 106, 166-167; III, 70, 74, 81; IV, 58, 145-149; VI, 8.
- neglect of, an Upapâtaka, XI, 60; results of, III, 63. See Penance.
- rewards for, II, 107; III, 66. See Muttered prayer, Vows.
- Vedic schools, development and disruption of, pp. xlii-lxiii.
- Vedotsarga, IV, 96-97, 119.
- Vena, king, VII, 41; IX, 66-67.
- Vena caste, X, 19, 49.
- Vice, the eighteen vices of a king, VII, 45-53.
- Vigâman caste, X, 23.
- Vikhanas, institutes of. See Vaidikânasa-sûtra.
- Village, boundaries of. See Boundaries.
- pasture-ground around, VIII, 237.
- Vinâsana, a place, II, 21.
- Vindhya mountains, II, 21.
- Violence, anybody may be witness in cases of, VIII, 72.
- a title of the law, VIII, 6, 344-351.
- Virâg, deity, p. lxiv; I, 32-33; III, 195.
- Vîrâsana, a posture, XI, 111.
- Vishnu, XII, 121.
- Vishnu-smriti, pp. xxi-xxiii, xlv, lxvi, lxx-lxxi, lxxiii, cxxii.
- Virvagit sacrifice, XI, 75.
- Virvâmitra, sage, VII, 42; X, 108.
- Virvesvara-bhâra, p. cxxv.
- Vows, for the Veda-study, II, 28, 165, 173-174.
- Vrâtya, II, 39; X, 20; XI, 63.
- descendants of, X, 21-23.
- intercourse with, forbidden, II, 40.
- sacrificing for, XI, 198.
- sexual intercourse with female, VIII, 373. See Initiation; Penance for neglect of initiation.
- Vridhdha Manu, pp. xcii, xcvi-xcvi.
- Vridhdhi-jrâddha, III, 254.
- Vyâhritis, II, 76, 78, 81; VI, 70; XI, 223, 249.
- Wages, non-payment of, VIII, 5, 215-218.
- of herdsmen, VIII, 231.
- of royal servants, VII, 125-126.

- Warfare, rules of, VII, 87-94, 164-167, 170-171, 181-199.
- Washerman, food of, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 219.
- rules for washing, VIII, 396.
- Water, indivisible property, IX, 219.
- penance for stealing, XI, 164.
- prohibition against defilement of, IV, 46, 48, 56; XI, 174.
- punishment for diverting or stealing, III, 163; IX, 274, 281.
- Water-pot, duty of carrying, IV, 36.
- how replaced, II, 64.
- Way, right of, II, 138-139.
- Weaver, amount of cloth to be returned by, VIII, 397.
- Weights, enumeration of, of copper, silver, and gold, VIII, 131-137.
- to be examined by king, VIII, 403.
- Well, boundaries of, VIII, 262.
- Widow, duties of faithful, V, 156-160, 165-166.
- keeps ornaments, worn during husband's lifetime, IX, 200.
- son of, excluded from Śrāddha, III, 156, 174-175. See Appointment of widow; Marriage, second; Son begotten on widow; Son of remarried woman.
- Wife, acquires qualities of husband, IX, 22-24.
- and husband indissolubly united, IX, 45-46.
- dines separately, IV, 43.
- duties and position of, V, 148-151, 153-156; IX, 2-7, 10-11, 26-30, 96, 101-102; of wife of emigrant, IX, 74-76.
- explanation of term, IX, 8.
- fine for drinking spirituous liquor, &c., IX, 84.
- has no property, VIII, 416; exceptions. See Woman, property of.
- inherits, IX, 187 note.
- manner of burning dead, V, 167-168.
- may be beaten, VIII, 299-300.
- not to make hoard from husband's property, IX, 199.
- penance for unfaithful, XI, 177-178.
- punishment for defaming, VIII, 275; for forsaking, VIII, 389.
- Wife, qualifications required for, III, 4-11; exceptions, II, 238-240.
- repudiation and supersession, IX, 46, 77-85, 95.
- sale of, IX, 46; an Upapātaka, XI, 62.
- Wind. See Vāyu.
- Witnesses, conflict of, VIII, 73.
- duty of speaking the truth, VIII, 74, 76.
- exhortation of, VIII, 79-86, 89-101.
- manner of examination, VIII, 87-88.
- moral guilt of perjured, VIII, 75, 82, 89, 93-101; exceptions, VIII, 103-106, 112.
- number of, required, VIII, 60, 66, 77.
- persons disqualified to be, VIII, 64-67.
- persons qualified to be, VIII, 62-63; in special cases, VIII, 68-72, 254, 256, 258-262.
- punishment of, for refusal of evidence, VIII, 107; for perjury, see Perjury.
- suffer for others, VIII, 169.
- to whom misfortune happen, pay debt, VIII, 108. See Evidence.
- Wives, all mothers through one son, IX, 183.
- of several castes, III, 12-13; IX, 85-87.
- seniority among, of equal caste, IX, 124-125. See Adultery, Connubial intercourse, Husband, Marriage, Son begotten on widow or wife.
- Woman, adhering to heretical sect, receives no libation, V, 90.
- always dependent, V, 147-149; IX, 2-3.
- causing abortion, receives no libation, V, 90.
- impure on birth of child, IV, 212; V, 85.
- impurity on death of, V, 72.
- killing a, an Upapātaka, XI, 67; disqualifies for readmission into caste, XI, 191. See Penance for killing.
- killing husband, receives no libation, V, 90.
- menstruating, III, 45-46; IV, 40-41, 57, 208; V, 66, 85, 108; XI, 174.

- Woman, mouth of a, always pure, v, 130.
- naked, not to be looked at, iv, 53.
 - names of, II, 33; III, 9.
 - naturally wicked nature of, II, 213-215; IX, 17-20.
 - not allowed to recite Veda, IX, 18; nor to sacrifice, IV, 205-206; XI, 36-37.
 - pregnant, committing a nuisance, IX, 283; pays no toll at a ferry, VIII, 407.
 - property of, appropriation by males punishable, VIII, 29; definition of, IX, 194; succession to, IX, 104, 131, 192-193, 195-198.
 - punishment of wicked, in next life, XII, 69.
 - remarried, husband of, excluded from Śrāddha, III, 166. See Marriage, second; Son of remarried woman.
 - rights to, not lost by law of limitation, VIII, 149.
 - rule of sipping water for, v, 139.
 - sacraments for, performed without Mantras, II, 66.
- Woman, six causes of the ruin of, IX, 13.
- special punishment for a, IX, 230.
 - unchaste, food of, forbidden to Brāhmaṇa, IV, 211, 220; receives no libation, v, 90.
 - without guardian, protected by king, VIII, 28.
 - without male relative, food of, forbidden, IV, 213.
- Women, treatment of, III, 55-62; witnesses for women, VIII, 68. See Betrothal, Bride, Daughter, Marriage, Mother, Sister, Widow, Wife.
- Writing, pp. xcix-ci; VIII, 154 note, 168. See Documents, Edicts.
- Yâg#avalkya-smṛiti, pp. xlviii, xlix, lv, lxxiii, xcix, ci-civ, cvii, cxvii.
- Yâg#ikas, pp. xlviii, l.
- Yagur-veda, pp. xvi, lx; I, 23; IV, 124; XI, 263, 265; XII, 112.
- quoted, VIII, 106; XI, 251, 257.
- Yakshas, I, 37; III, 196; XI, 96.
- Yama, III, 87, 211; v, 96; VI, 61; VII, 4, 7; VIII, 86, 92; IX, 303, 307; XII, 17, 21-22.
- Yavana race, pp. cxiv, cxvii; x, 44.

ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS.

Page xx, ll. 26-33. The tradition which asserts that the Gautamiya and Vāsishṭha Dharmaśāstras originally were the property of Vedic schools, studying the Sāma-veda and the Rig-veda, has already been mentioned by Colebrooke in his Essay on the Mīmāṃsā. It goes back to Kumārila, who adduces it in his Vārttika on Mīmāṃsā-sūtra, I, 3, 11 (Tantra-vārttika, p. 179, Benares Sanskrit Series). The same author states there that the Dharmaśāstra of Saṅkha and Likhita belonged to the Vāgasaneyins.

P. xxxix, add at the end of note 3: 'It is, however, found in some other Grīhya-sūtras.'

P. lvii, add at the end of note 4: 'The copy of the Munich MS. No. 83 has मन्ः.'

P. cxii, l. 1. More important is the fact that Kumārila, who, as I hold with Professor Max Müller, cannot be placed later than 700 A.D., knew our Manu-smṛiti. In the portions of the Tantra-vārttika, published in the Benares Sanskrit Series, I find the following verses quoted, i, 21^b (p. 203, l. 14); ii, 140 (p. 178, l. 8); iv, 178 (p. 138, l. 17); v, 56 (p. 111, l. 11); viii, 57 (p. 199, l. 23); ix, 182 (p. 135, l. 2); xi, 30 (p. 110, l. 19); xi, 93 (p. 136, l. 19); xi, 94 (p. 136, l. 24); xi, 96^b (p. 137, l. 7); xii, 95 (p. 117, l. 20); xii, 105, 106^b (p. 80, l. 18). Most of these quotations show some variae lectiones, which, however, are not very important, and possibly, nay probably, are due to inaccuracy on Kumārila's part. One verse, quoted p. 241, l. 22, is not traceable in our Manu. Kumārila names Manu throughout as the first and most venerable authority on the sacred law. His predecessor, the author of the metrical Tīkā, on the Mīmāṃsā-sūtra, which he quotes at great length, holds the same opinion, and clearly and frequently alludes to our Manu-smṛiti.

P. 11, ch. I, ver. 19, add at the end of the note: 'The idea that seven Purushas make up man, occurs Satapatha-brāhmaṇa VI, 1, 1, 3, and 6.'

P. 32, ch. II, v. 15, add at the end of the note: 'The passages referred to in the text are quoted in the Sabarabhāṣya on Mīmāṃsā-sūtra, II, 4, 8.'

P. 33, ch. II, v. 21, for 'to the east of Prayāga and to the west of Vināṣana' read 'to the west of Prayāga and to the east of Vināṣana.'

P. 39, ch. II, v. 52, for 'truthfulness, if he faces the east' read 'truthfulness, if he faces the north.'

P. 58, ch. II, v. 151, for 'old enough to be) fathers' read 'old enough to be his) fathers.'

- P. 94, ch. III, v. 103 note, read at the end: 'âgatam apy atithim na vidyât.'
- P. 101, ch. III, v. 141 note, for 'paisakî' read 'Paiśākî.'
- P. 105, ch. III, v. 159, for 'substances used for flavouring' read 'condiments.'
- P. 112, ch. III, v. 202 note, for 'akshayâyakalpate' read 'akshayâyopak.'
- P. 121, ch. III, v. 251, for 'Rest either (here or at home)' read 'Take rest.'
- P. 126, ch. III, v. 274 note. The passage quoted by Vigñānēśvara on Yâgñ. I, 217, is to the following effect: 'When the moon stands in the (asterism) sacred to the manes (Maghâb) and the sun in the (asterism) Hasta, that lunar day is sacred to Yama; it is called the elephant's shadow.' Another explanation of the same term from the Malamāsātattva, quoted in the Petersburg Dictionary, asserts that it means an eclipse of the sun.
- P. 137, ch. IV, v. 55, after 'let him not take off his garland' add '(with his own hands).'
- P. 141, ch. IV, v. 80 note, add 'Regarding the consequences of giving spiritual advice to a Sûdra, see also Mah. XIII, 10, 55.'
- P. 144, ch. IV, note to vv. 95-97, for 'The Pushya-day is the sixth lunar day of each month' read 'The Pushya-day of the month of Pausha is the day of the full moon; see Bâpudeva Sâstrî, note on Sûryasiddhânta, p. 94, s. 16.'
- P. 147, ch. IV, v. 113 note, add 'Some parallel passages make the latter meaning more probable.'
- P. 172, ch. V, v. 16 note, add 'For Sasalkas on all (occasions,' Medh., Gov.) Ku. proposes 'Sasalkas of all (kinds).'
- P. 182, ch. V, v. 82 note, for 'such a one who is mentioned' read 'such a one as is mentioned.'
- P. 189, ch. V, v. 115, for 'for solid things' read 'for things piled up.' The commentators give as examples 'couches, beds, and the like,' and apparently refer to the cushions and mattresses used for such purposes.
- P. 199, ch. VI, v. 6. The translation 'a dress made of bark or grass' ought to be placed in the text, instead of 'a tattered garment.'
- P. 206, ch. VI, v. 43 note, for the first 'asamkasukab' read 'asamkusukab.'
- P. 222, ch. VII, v. 43. In accordance with the explanation of Medh., 'the science of dialectics, (which gives) self-knowledge' ought to be inserted in the text, instead of 'the science of dialectics and the knowledge of the (supreme) Soul;' see Introduction, p. xxxvii.
- P. 234, ch. VII, v. 118 note, insert 'or Mahattara' after 'Grâmakûta,' and 'are' before 'the so-called haks.'
- P. 241, ch. VII, v. 157, for 'consists)' read '(consists).'
- Pages 253, 255, superscription, for 'ceremonial' read 'criminal.'
- P. 253, ch. VIII, v. 4 note, insert at beginning 'Rinasyâdânām.'
- P. 257, ch. VIII, v. 25 note, for 'âkâra' read 'âkâra' (twice).

- P. 263, ch. VIII, v. 53 note, for 'apadesam' read 'adesam.'
- P. 265, ch. VIII, v. 65 note, for 'includes according to Nâr., Gov., Nand., Medh. also ascetics,' read 'includes according to Nâr., Gov., Medh. also ascetics, or, refers to the latter alone, Nand.'
- P. 288, ch. VIII, v. 192 note, for 'Nâr. takes' read 'Nâr. and Nand. take.'
- P. 292, ch. VIII, v. 210 note. Add after the quotation from Âsv. Srauta-sûtra, 'Âp. Srauta-sûtra XIII, 5, 12.'
- P. 295, ch. VIII, v. 227 note, dele 'Nand. omits this verse and the next.'
- P. 295, ch. VIII, v. 228 note, add 'Nand. omits this verse.'
- P. 296, ch. VIII, v. 237 note, add after 'The samyâ is,' 'either the wedge at the yoke, or.'
- P. 308, ch. VIII, v. 309 note, for 'who takes the goods of Brâhmanas or injures them' read 'who takes the goods of Brâhmanas, injures, or abandons them.'
- P. 331, ch. IX, v. 20 note, add 'The Pratîka of this verse is quoted by Vi. LXXIII, 12; see also Âp. Srauta-sûtra I, 9, 9, where a somewhat different version occurs.'
- P. 339, ch. IX, vv. 64-68 note, for 'Aupagandhani' read 'Aupagaṅghani,' which latter is the correct form of the name.
- P. 352, ch. IX, v. 128 note, add 'The story agrees exactly with Mah. XII, 343, 57; see also Vishṇu-purâṇa, vol. ii, p. 10 (ed. Hall).'
- P. 362, ch. IX, v. 170, for 'Gûdhotpanna' read 'Gûdhotpanna.'
- P. 398, ch. IX, v. 315 note, add at end, 'see also Mah. XIII, 33, 17.'
- P. 399, ch. IX, v. 323. Mah. XII, 65, 1 seq. recommend âhave deha-tyâgam, 'death in battle,' for a king.
- P. 405, ch. X, v. 19 note, for 'the name of caste' read 'the name of the caste.'
- P. 406, ch. X, v. 22. The form Likkbivi for Likkbavi actually occurs.
- P. 407, ibid., for 'waters' read 'water.'
- P. 416, ch. X, v. 64 note, for 'Sacred Books of the East, II,' read 'S. B. E. XIV.'
- P. 425, ch. X, v. 111, for 'offering sacrifices for teaching' read 'offering sacrifices for, or, teaching.'
- P. 443, ch. XI, v. 64 note, add 'Yâ. III, 240 favours Nâr.'s explanation of mahâyāntṛapṛavartana.'
- P. 457, ch. XI, v. 134, for 'a spade of black iron' read 'a mattock of black iron.'
- P. 479, ch. XI, v. 242, for 'penance' read 'austerity' (twice).
- P. 480, ch. XI, v. 250, for '(that seen) by Vasishṭha' read 'the three verses (seen) by Vasishṭha.' Make the same correction in the note, and add, 'the correct reading in the text is prati tryikam.'
- P. 481, ch. XI, v. 253, add at the end, or, 'Thus, verily thus.'
- P. 512, ch. XII, v. 120 note, add 'Compare for this verse and the next, Rig-veda X, 90, 13-14.'

TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS ADOPTED FOR THE TRANSLATIONS
OF THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

CONSONANTS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pahlavi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
Gutturales.
1 Tenuis	k	क	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	k
2 " aspirata	kh	ख	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	kh
3 Media	g	ग	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗
4 " aspirata	gh	घ	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘
5 Gutturo-labialis	q	ङ	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙
6 Nasalis	h (ng)	ङ	𐬚	𐬚	𐬚	𐬚	𐬚
7 Spiritus asper	h	ह	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	h, hs
8 " lenis	,	ह	𐬜	𐬜	𐬜	𐬜	𐬜
9 " asper faucalis	'h	ह	𐬝	𐬝	𐬝	𐬝	𐬝
10 " lenis faucalis	'h	ह	𐬞	𐬞	𐬞	𐬞	𐬞
11 " asper fricatus	'h	ह	𐬟	𐬟	𐬟	𐬟	𐬟
12 " lenis fricatus	'h	ह	𐬠	𐬠	𐬠	𐬠	𐬠
Gutturales modificatae (palatales, &c.)
13 Tenuis	k	क	𐬡	𐬡	𐬡	𐬡	𐬡	k
14 " aspirata	kh	ख	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	kh
15 Media	g	ग	𐬣	𐬣	𐬣	𐬣	𐬣
16 " aspirata	gh	घ	𐬥	𐬥	𐬥	𐬥	𐬥
17 " Nasalis	ñ	ङ	𐬦	𐬦	𐬦	𐬦	𐬦

CONSONANTS (continued).	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlevi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
18 Semivocalis	y	य	𐬨𐬀 𐬨𐬀 𐬨𐬀	𐬨	𐬨	ي	י	y
19 Spiritus asper	(y)
20 " lenis	(y)
21 " asper assibilatus	s	श	𐬰𐬀	𐬰	𐬰	ش	ש	. . .
22 " lenis assibilatus	z	𐬰𐬀	𐬰	𐬰	ز	ז	z
Dentales.
23 Tennis	t	त	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢	ت	ת	t
24 " aspirata	th	थ	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢	تھ	ת	th
25 " assibilata	d	. . .	TH	द	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢	د	ד	. . .
26 Media	dh	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢
27 " aspirata
28 " assibilata	DH	न	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢	ن	נ	. . .
29 Nasalis	n	न	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢	ن	נ	n
30 Semivocalis	l	ल	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢	ل	ל	l
31 " mollis 1	l	ळ	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢
32 " mollis 2	L	स	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢	س	ס	s
33 Spiritus asper 1	s	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢	س	ס	s
34 " asper 2	s (ʃ)	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢	س	ס	. . .
35 " lenis	z	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢	ز	ז	z
36 " asperimus 1	z (ʒ)	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢	ز	ז	. . .
37 " asperimus 2	z (ʒ)	𐬢𐬀	𐬢	𐬢	ز	ז	. . .

VOWELS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.		III Class.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
1 Neutralis	0			ॐ					—	ǎ
2 Laryngo-palatalis	ē								—	...
3 " labialis	ō								—	...
4 Gutturalis brevis	a			अ	𐬀	𐬀	𐬀	ا	א	...
5 " longa	ā	(a)		आ	𐬁	𐬁	𐬁	آ	א	...
6 Palatalis brevis	i			इ	𐬂	𐬂	𐬂	ي	י	...
7 " longa	ī	(i)		ई	𐬃	𐬃	𐬃	י	י	...
8 Dentalis brevis	u			उ	𐬄	𐬄	𐬄	𐬄
9 " longa	ū			ऊ	𐬅	𐬅	𐬅	𐬅
10 Lingualis brevis	ri			रि	𐬆	𐬆	𐬆	𐬆
11 " longa	rī			री	𐬇	𐬇	𐬇	𐬇
12 Labialis brevis	u			उ	𐬄	𐬄	𐬄	𐬄
13 " longa	ū	(u)		ऊ	𐬅	𐬅	𐬅	𐬅
14 Gutturo-palatalis brevis	e			ए	𐬈	𐬈	𐬈	𐬈
15 " longa	ē	(ai)		ऐ	𐬉	𐬉	𐬉	𐬉
16 Diphthongus gutturo-palatalis	ai	(ai)		ऐ	𐬉	𐬉	𐬉	𐬉
17 " "	ei	(ēi)		ई	𐬃	𐬃	𐬃	𐬃
18 " "	oi	(ōu)		औ	𐬊	𐬊	𐬊	𐬊
19 Gutturo-labialis brevis	o			ओ	𐬋	𐬋	𐬋	𐬋
20 " longa	ō	(o)		औ	𐬋	𐬋	𐬋	𐬋
21 Diphthongus gutturo-labialis	au	(au)		औ	𐬋	𐬋	𐬋	𐬋
22 " "	eu	(ēu)		ऐ	𐬉	𐬉	𐬉	𐬉
23 " "	ou	(ōu)		औ	𐬋	𐬋	𐬋	𐬋
24 Gutturalis fracta	ä			अ	𐬀	𐬀	𐬀	𐬀
25 Palatalis fracta	ī			इ	𐬂	𐬂	𐬂	𐬂
26 Labialis fracta	ū			ऊ	𐬅	𐬅	𐬅	𐬅
27 Gutturo-labialis fracta	ö			औ	𐬋	𐬋	𐬋	𐬋

U. C. BERKELEY LIBRARIES

C042458053

165

