„ 55, foot-note, 4.—Read 424-25 for 224-25

„ 230, line 23.—Add note : The year 108 when the Kailvan inscription was engraved undoubtedly relates to a date long before the rise of the Imperial Guptas and the foundation of the Gupta era in 319 A. D. This fact shows that the theories assigning the beginning of the Kanishka era to 248 A.D. and later are improbable and that it should better be ascribed to the second half of the first century A.D. and not to the second century. That the Kanishka era is identical with the Śaka era of 78 A. D. is further indicated by the following evidence. The Chorasmian archives from Toprakkala in Central Asia contain documents dated in the years 207 and 231 of some era. Archaeological data suggest that the local palace and the archives were abandoned at the end of the third century and the beginning of the fourth. The capital of Chorasmia was transferred from Toprakkala to the city of Kyat on the Amu Darya during the reign of the Chorasmian king Afrig who came to power in 305 A.D. according to Birūnī. Thus the era used in the documents started in the last quarter of the first century A.D. This must be the same as the Śaka era of 78 A. D. and the years in the said documents referred to dates between 285 and 309 A. D. The use of the Śaka era in Central Asia can only be satisfactorily explained if it is identified with the Kanishka era. See Modern Review, December 1959, p. 452.

No. 1—ERRAGUDI EDICTS OF ASOKA

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

The village of Erragudi lies approximately at 77° 39' E. and 15° 12' N. in the Pattikonda Taluk of the Kurnool District of the Andhra State, near the southern border of the District. It is about eight miles to the north-west of Gooty, headquarters of the Taluk of that name in the Anantapur District of the same State, on the Gooty-Pattikonda road. Gooty is a station on the Madras-Raichur line of the Southern Railway. The name of the village is often written in English as Yerragudi in accordance with a peculiarity of regional pronunciation. The inscriptions of Asoka¹ are incised on six large boulders in a range of low hills stretching towards the west from the neighbourhood of the village. The hill containing the boulders is locally known as Yenakonḍa (i.e. 'elephant hillock') or Nallayenakonḍa (i.e. 'black elephant hillock'). It is difficult to determine whether this name was due to the existence of the figure of an elephant in the vicinity of the inscriptions as in the case of the Rock Edicts of Asoka on the hills at Dhauḷi, Girnār and Kālsī. No representation of an elephant could be traced on the hill near Erragudi.

About the end of the year 1928, A. Ghose of Calcutta, an officer of the Geological Survey of India, discovered the inscriptions on the rocks near Erragudi while prospecting for precious minerals in the Kurnool District. He recognised the letters Devānam . . . Piyakasi in one of the inscriptions and realised that they belong to the great Maurya emperor Asoka (circa 272-232 B.C.), whose records of the same kind are known from various places. In January 1929, Ghose communicated full information regarding the whereabouts of the inscriptions to H. Hargreaves, then officiating Director-General of Archaeology in India. A photograph of one of the inscribed rocks received from Ghose was supplied to D. R. Sahni, then Deputy Director-General of Archaeology for Explorations, who was deputed to examine and copy the inscriptions and submit a report on them to the Director-General. Sahni accompanied by H. Sastri, then Government Epigraphist for India, visited Erragudi in the second week of February and examined and copied all the inscriptions on the rocks excepting Rock Edicts VI and XII which were traced and copied in the following August by S. V. Viswanatha, then Assistant Archaeological Superintendent for Epigraphy, attached to the Madras Circle. The discovery was announced by the Director-General of Archaeology in the newspapers in a communiqué dated the 11th February 1929.

Sahni and Sastri prepared transcripts of the edicts from the rocks and it was proposed that Sastri would edit the records in the Epigraphia Indica. Sastri's article on the subject, however, was not complete before his retirement from the post of Government Epigraphist for India in December 1933. Sahni then wanted to edit the records; but he passed away without finishing the work. N. P. Chakravarti, who succeeded Sastri as Government Epigraphist for India, then undertook the responsibility of editing the inscriptions. Chakravarti also visited Erragudi and prepared fresh transcripts of the edicts from the original rocks. But he was transferred from the Epigraphic Branch in May 1940 before the completion of his article on the records. About this time, B. M. Barua of the University of Calcutta appears to have received from Chakravarti a set of impressions of the Erragudi inscriptions and possibly also his tentative transcripts of the edicts. Barua's translation of the records appeared in his Inscriptions of Aśoka, Part II, which was published by the University of Calcutta in 1943. But he could not publish Part I of the said work (pp. 1-178), in which he had incorporated the text of the Erragudi version of Aśoka's edicts, as Chakravarti himself was inclined to publish them. After his retirement from the Department of Archaeology a few years ago, Chakravarti found time to complete his articles on the Hatun rock inscription of Patoladeva¹ and the Brāhmi inscriptions from Bandhogarh² and was going to take up the Erragudi inscriptions for study. In the meantime, in the first half of 1956, I was advised by the Director-General of Archaeology in India to arrange for the publication of all the unpublished inscriptions of Aśoka as early as possible. Consequently I began to write on the Rājula-Mandagiri and Gujarā inscriptions myself and was pressing Chakravarti for his article on the Erragudi inscriptions. I received from Chakravarti for scrutiny a copy of his transcripts of the records, which he had prepared long ago. Unfortunately, before the completion of the article, the cruel hand of death snatched him away from us in October 1956. I then tried to secure from Chakravarti's table whatever notes he might have left on the inscriptions, but received only 2½ pages of sparsely typed matter dealing with the story of the discovery of the Erragudi records and the circumstances leading to the delay in their publication.

My association with the study of the Erragudi inscriptions of Aśoka dates back to my student days. About the end of 1929, shortly after I had been admitted to the post-graduate classes of the University of Calcutta in Ancient Indian History and Culture, my teacher, the late Professor D. R. Bhandarkar, showed me a copy of the Telugu periodical Bhārati for September 1929. That issue contained a rather unsatisfactory facsimile of an inscription on one of the Erragudi rocks and I was advised to transcribe the epigraph. My tentative transcript of this inscription, containing a version of Aśoka's Minor Rock Edicts I-II, was published in the Indian Historical Quarterly, Vol. VII, 1931, pp. 737 ff. B. M. Barua later published an improved transcript of the edicts in the same journal, Vol. IX, 1933, pp. 113 ff. About this time, D. R. Sahni's transcript of the same inscription appeared with a good facsimile in his paper on the discovery of the Erragudi version of the edicts of Aśoka in the Annual Report of the Archaeological Survey of India for the year 1928-29, 1933, pp. 161 ff. Barua again dealt with the inscription in the Indian Historical Quarterly, Vol. XIII, 1937, pp. 132 ff. It will thus be seen that the text of the Minor Rock Edicts I-II found at Erragudi has been published, but that the Erragudi version of the fourteen Rock Edicts remains as yet unpublished.

For the sake of convenience the inscribed boulders have been designated A, B, C, D, E and F by Sahni who has provided us with a good account of the whereabouts of the inscriptions that are scattered on the hill. Boulder A is the largest in size and occupies the summit of the hill. The other boulders lie on its eastern slope. The inscribed surfaces of the boulders are very rough and there is no trace of any attempt to smooth them before the inscriptions were engraved. With the exception of the records engraved on Boulders A (northern face), B (right half), D and F, the others are very unsatisfactorily incised or preserved and parts of them can be deciphered with very great difficulty. Many letters of some of these records are unrecognisable on the impressions. Some letters may be somehow discerned on one impression but not on another.

Boulder A lies above a precipice about 20 feet high. Its lower portions are cut away at both the inscribed faces in the north and east. The eastern face is 17 feet 6 inches wide and contains Rock Edicts I-II at the left end, Rock Edicts III and VI in the middle and Rock Edict XIV in a depression at the upper right corner. Rock Edicts I-III and VI are not separated from one another and, owing to the unsatisfactory preservation of the writing, it is difficult to determine the end of one edict and the beginning of another. The northern face of this boulder (designated A-1) is 15 feet 6 inches wide and contains Rock Edicts XI, V and VII. Rock Edict XI is engraved at the left end. It comprises six lines of writing, of which lines 1-5 measure between 3 feet 3 inches and 4 feet in length while the last line is only 2 inches long. Rock Edict V, consisting of seven lines of writing, covers a rectangular space measuring 8 feet 6 inches by 1 foot 8 inches, although the last line is only 3 feet long. A blank space, about 3 feet in width, separates this area from the space occupied by Rock Edict XI. Rock Edict VII is engraved on the upper right corner and is separated from Rock Edict V by a blank space only 6 inches wide. It consists of five lines of writing which cover an area measuring 3 feet 3 inches by 1 foot 2 inches. The preservation of the writing of these edicts is fairly satisfactory although a portion at the right end of Rock Edict V is defaced.

Boulder B lies a little to the east of the eastern face of Boulder A. The inscribed eastern face of this boulder is 13 feet in width from north to south. It is pointed towards the top and is divided by a roughly chiselled line, running from top to bottom, into two triangular sections. The portion at the right contains Rock Edicts IV, VIII and X. These edicts are well preserved although three letters at the beginning of line 2 of Rock Edict VIII are defaced. The three edicts contain respectively fourteen, four and five lines of writing and are separated one from another by short chiselled horizontal lines at the left end. The lines of writing are fairly straight in the upper part but irregular in the lower. There is a crack which runs from the left just above the last line of Rock Edict IV upwards to the right. This may have existed before the incision of the edicts as the letters appear to have been engraved outside it. The preservation of the writing on the triangular section in the left part of this boulder (designated B-1) is unsatisfactory. It contains the first 29 lines of Rock Edict XIII, the writing being continued on Boulder C which is 5 feet 6 inches wide and lies a few feet to the south of Boulder B. The lines of Rock Edict XIII on Boulder B are very closely engraved and difficult to decipher. The decipherment is also rendered difficult by the existence of the crack referred to above. Boulder C contains the last seven lines (lines 30-36) of Rock Edict XIII.

Boulder D stands 27 feet to the south-east of the eastern face of Boulder A. It contains Rock Edict XII written in twelve lines. The preservation of the writing is fairly satisfactory. Sahni speaks of faint traces of one line of writing below the last line of the edict at the right extremity.

Boulder E lies 27 feet to the east of Boulder B. It contains Rock Edict IX on its vertical face looking west. The lines of writing (lines 1-11) are not straight and parallel.

Boulder F is situated between Boulders C and E; but its position is lower (i.e. nearer the ground) than that of the latter. It is the most easily accessible among the inscribed rocks near Erragudi and the inscription on it, representing a version of Minor Rock Edicts I-II, seems to have been engraved earlier than the series of the fourteen Rock Edicts engraved on Boulders A-E. It is indeed worthy of note that the Minor Rock Edicts, which appear to have been issued earlier than any of the known edicts of Asoka, are engraved here on a boulder at the bottom of the hill while Boulder A, bearing the first few edicts (Rock Edicts I-III) of the series of fourteen Rock Edicts, stands on its summit. The Minor Rock Edicts on Boulder F are the most satisfactorily preserved among the edicts of Asoka at Erragudi.

The characters employed in the Erraguḍi edicts are Brāhmī and do not call for any special remark. But the writing of Minor Rock Edicts I-II on Boulder F exhibits some unique characteristics not hitherto noticed in any inscription discovered in India. In the first place, while most of the lines have to be read from left to right as is usual in Brāhmī and its derivatives, some of them are to be read from right to left as in Kharoṣṭhī. Secondly, there are some half lines to be read from left to right or from right to left. Thirdly, there are some lines, one part of which has to be read from the left but the other part from the right. Fourthly, there are several cases where a group of letters is engraved not in its proper place but elsewhere in a different line. Besides these peculiarities, the writing also exhibits several cases of the total omission of groups of letters. These irregularities show that the engraver of the inscription did not do his job carefully. The tendency to write passages to be read from right to left may have been due to the fact that the scribe or engraver was a person, who, like Chapaḍa¹ of the Mysore versions of the Minor Rock Edicts, hailed from North-Western Bhāratavarsha and was used to write in Kharoṣṭhī.

As regards the Prakrit language of the Erraguḍi edicts of Aśoka, a remarkable difference is noticed between the Minor Rock Edicts on the one hand and the Rock Edicts on the other. This seems to be due to the fact that the two sets of edicts were received at the place separately on different occasions and dates.

In respect of language and orthography, the Erraguḍi text of the Minor Rock Edicts resembles that of some other South Indian versions of the same records, such as those in Mysore, while the text of the Rock Edicts at Erraguḍi resembles their Dhauli and Jaugaḍa versions and also in many points the Kālsī version. There are some cases of inconsistency in the use of case-endings with reference to the number and gender of particular words in both the sets.² This feature is also noticed in other versions of the edicts of Aśoka.

The language of the Minor Rock Edicts of Aśoka is what is called the Magadha dialect. The Pillar Edicts and Pillar Inscriptions of Aśoka, the Dhauli and Jaugaḍa versions of his Rock Edicts and his Barabar Hill Cave Inscriptions are couched in this dialect, although the Kālsī text of the Rock Edicts also exhibits some features of the same dialect. But, while the chief characteristic of the Magadha dialect is the change of r of Sanskrit to l, the consonant r is retained in the text of the Minor Rock Edicts at Erraguḍi as also at some other places in South India. In this respect, the language of the Erraguḍi version of the Minor Rock Edicts resembles that of the Gīrnār, Shāhbāzgarhī and Mānsehra texts of the Rock Edicts.

In spite of the close resemblance of the language of the Erraguḍi version of the Minor Rock Edicts to that of their Mysore texts, referred to above, some differences are also noticed between the two. While the consonant ṛ is used in the Mysore versions in some places for Sanskrit ṛ or ṛ, it is conspicuous by its absence in the Erraguḍi text of these edicts. In a few cases, the use of ś for Sanskrit s is noticed in the Mysore versions; but s is invariably used for the three sibilants in our text. In these respects, the language of the Erraguḍi version of the Minor Rock Edicts is closer to the Magadha dialect, in which ṛ is replaced by ṛ and ś and sh by s. The interesting case of Sandhi in the expression hem=eva (Sanskrit evam=eva), exhibiting the elision of va, is found in both the Erraguḍi and Mysore versions; but the Erraguḍi text offers another similar case in the expression hev=āha (Sanskrit evam=āha) not found elsewhere excepting the Rājula-Manḍagiri copy of the same records.³ The Brahmagiri text of the Mysore versions has hevam āha in its place.

² Cf. chira-thitkā . pakame (Minor Rock Edict I, lines 9-10), lipi likhita (Rock Edict I, line 5), osadhāni cha manie-opaka (Rock Edict II, line 3), etc.

The Erraguḍi text of Minor Rock Edict I closely follows the text of the Mysore versions. But the passages saṁānā, kāmañ tu kko, iyañ cha athe and vaḍhisiti are absent from our text (V, VIII and X), while we have sakiye (VIII) for sakiye or sake, elāya cha aṭhāya (IX) for elāy-aṭhāya, and khudaka-mahalakā (X) for khudakā cha mahātpā cha. There is considerable difference between the Erraguḍi text of Minor Rock Edict II and its Mysore versions, from which a number of sentences as found in the Erraguḍi copy (II-IV, X-XII, etc.) are omitted. For rpā(prā)-nesu drahyaṭavayam of the Mysore texts, we have rpā(prā)nesu dayitaviye (VII). The sentence mentioning the scribe is wanting in the Erraguḍi version.

A marked difference between the language of the Minor Rock Edicts and that of the Rock Edicts at Erraguḍi is that the latter exhibits the change of r of Sanskrit to l in all the cases. The Erraguḍi version of the Rock Edicts also exhibits other characteristics of the Magadha dialect.¹ It uses n for both ñ and ṇ, and s for ś and ṣ. The nominative singular case-ending for both masculine and neuter words ending in a is generally e and the locative singular case-ending for the same is si. In point of language, the Erraguḍi copy of the Rock Edicts closely resembles that of the Dhauli and Jaugaḍa versions; but its draft is in some places closer to the Kālsī text, although it does not exhibit the use of ś and ṣ and of the redundant subscript y noticed so often at Kālsī. An interesting fact about the vocabulary of the Erraguḍi text of the Rock Edicts is that the word mana, mina or minā standing for Sanskrit punaḥ occurs in it for no less than seven times.² In many of these cases, the corresponding passages in the other versions of the edicts have pana or puna for Sanskrit punaḥ.³ But pana or puna (Sanskrit punaḥ) itself occurs several times in the Erraguḍi text of the edicts; cf. Rock Edict XIII, line 30 (XX); Rock Edict XIV, line 4 (V); and Minor Rock Edict II, line 21 (XV). The word mina or minā, however, occurs in the third sentence of Pillar Edict III of Aśoka and it is generally taken to stand for Sanskrit manāk.⁴ But the sense of Sanskrit punaḥ in these cases would suit the context equally well.

The relation of the Erraguḍi text of the Rock Edicts with other versions of the records, especially the Dhauli, Jaugaḍa and Kālsī texts, and some of its linguistic features may be illustrated by an analysis of a few of the edicts. Rock Edict I at Erraguḍi generally agrees with the Dhauli, Jaugaḍa and Kālsī texts. But we have ālabhisu (lines 4-5, VI) and ālabhisanti (line 6, IX) instead of ālabhiyisu and ālabhiyisanti respectively. The forms of the verb in our text may be compared with those found in the other versions, such as ārabhisu (Girnār), arabhisu (Mānsehra) and arabhisanti (Shāhbāzgarhī). Similar is the case with Rock Edict II. But we have Satika-pute and tasa sāmāntā Aṁtiyogasa (lines 1-2, I) and not Satiya-pute (or Sātiya-pute) Kelala-pute and tasa Aṁtiyogasa sāmāntā, as also munis-opakā cha pasu-opakā cha (line 3, II) instead of munis-opagāni pasu-opagāni cha. The change of g to k in upaka (Sanskrit upaga), found also at Shāhbāzgarhī and Mānsehra, is not a characteristic of the Magadha dialect. Our text (lines 4-5, IV) has lukhāni lōpāpitāni udupānāni cha khānāpitāni after Kālsī and not udupānāni khānāpitāni lukhāni cha lōpāpitāni as in Dhauli and Jaugaḍa. In line 4 (III), we have suṇata ata ata nathi instead of the expected ataata nathi savatu. Rock Edict III of our version has vijite (line 2, III) instead of vijitasi after Girnār and Shāhbāzgarhī and nikhamāntu (line 2, III) after Kālsī in the place of nikhamāvū at Dhauli and Jaugaḍa. The passage imāye dhamm-ānusathīye athā amnāye pi kammāne in the Erraguḍi text (line 3, III) follows the order of the expressions as at Kālsī, while Dhauli and Jaugaḍa have athā amnāye pi kammāne imāye dhamm-ānusathīye. But Kālsī has kammāye for kammāne. Instead of the compound māta-pitu-sususā (line 3, IV), the Dhauli, Jaugaḍa and Kālsī texts have °pitisu separately. For māta-samhuta-nātikānam (line 4, V), Kālsī has °nālikyānam and Dhauli and Jaugaḍa °nālisu. Similarly our text has samana-bambhanānam (line 4, V), while the order of the two words in the compound is the reverse in all the other texts, and Dhauli and Jaugaḍa have bambhanu-samanēhi (Sanskrit brāhmanu-sramaṇebhyaḥ). The word pānānam (line 4, VI) follows Kālsī, while Dhauli and Jaugaḍa have jivesu. The order of the words in the expression gamanasi yutāni (line 5, VIII) is the reverse at Dhauli and Jaugaḍa.

² While quoting variant readings, we have referred to Sahnī's and Barua's transcripts of these two edicts published respectively in ARAJ, 1928-29, pp. 166-67, and in IHQ, Vol. XIII, pp. 132-34. The text of these edicts quoted in my Select Inscriptions follows Barua's transcript.

¹² This word is redundant.

²² Sahni and Chakravarti : janesu.

TRANSLATION

Minor Rock Edict I

(I) Thus saith the Beloved of the Gods.

(II) It is (now) more than [two years and a half] that I have been an upāsaka (i.e. a lay follower of the Buddha).

⁸ This letter stands at the end of line 20(a).

¹² Barua : nātikesu which is the word found in the Mysore versions of the edict.

¹⁵ This line has to be read from right to left.

(III) I was, however, not energetic (in the practice and propagation of Dharma) for one year (at the beginning of the above period).

(IV) It is (now) more than a year that I have indeed been intimately associated¹ with the Saṅgha (i.e. the Buddhist Clergy) and have been excessively energetic (in the cause of Dharma).

(V) Those men, who were unmingled (with gods) during this period, have now been mingled with gods.²

(VI) This is [the result] of (my) exertion (in the cause of Dharma).

(VII) [Indeed, it is not] attainable only by the rich man.

(VIII) Even the poor man, if he is energetic (in the cause of Dharma), can attain even the great heaven.³

(IX) It is for this purpose that the proclamation has been made (by me).

(X) So that the poor and the rich⁴ should also be energetic in this exertion (in regard to the practice and propagation of Dharma), that the peoples living beyond the borders (of my empire) should know (this matter) and that (this matter) will increase to a great extent (at least) roughly to one and a half times.

(XI) This proclamation is being issued by me (when I have been) on tour (for) 256 (days).⁵

Minor Rock Edict II.

(I) Thus saith the Beloved of the Gods.

(II) You should do as (you have been) told (to do) by the Beloved of the Gods.

(III) The (officers entitled) Rajjuka⁶ should be ordered (by you in respect of this matter).

(IV) He (in his turn) will then order the people of the countryside as well as the (officers entitled) Rāshtrika⁷ (in the following words);

(V) "One should be obedient to one's parents.

(VI) "One should likewise be obedient to one's elders.

(VII) "One should be kind to the living beings.

(VIII) "One should speak the truth.

(IX) "One should propagate these attributes of Dharma."

(X) Thus you should pass orders in the words of the Beloved of the Gods.

³ The great heaven was possibly regarded as higher than the world of the gods.

⁵ See my Maski Inscription of Asoka, pp. 29-30.

(XI) In this way you should pass orders on the elephant-riders, the scribes and charioteers and (the teachers of) the Brāhmaṇa (community).¹

(XII) Thus you should instruct your pupils in accordance with what is the ancient usage.

(XIII) This (order) should be obeyed.

(XIV) Whatever honour is (enjoyed) by the teacher (lies) really in this.

(XV) Then again, this (principle underlying the order) should be propagated in the proper manner by the teacher's male relations among the female² relations (he may have).³

(XVI) This should also be propagated (by the teacher's relatives) in the proper manner among (his) pupils in accordance with what is the ancient usage.

(XVII) You should thus guide and instruct your pupils in the proper way, so that this (principle underlying the order) grows (among them) abundantly.⁴

(XVIII) Thus orders the Beloved of the Gods.

Barua : "Thus instruct the elephant-riders, the Kāruṇakas, the chariot-trainers, and the Brahmins" (Inscriptions of Asoka, Part II, p. 200). At p. 345 of this work, Barua prefers to read kāranakāni and equates kāranaka with kāraṇika used in the Mahābhārata (II, V. 34) in the sense of 'a teacher of the princes'. This meaning also suits the context. The sentence refers to several classes of people who used to initiate pupils in particular professions.

² The Mysore versions have 'relations' instead of 'female relations'.

³ Sahni : "Thus should you admonish the pupils : he (i.e. the teacher) should be obeyed according to the ancient rule and so also the relatives of the teacher by way of showing veneration to the teacher, they should also behave in a suitable manner towards (their own) relatives." Barua : "You should thus establish your pupils according to the good old rule : This is to be hearkened to : whatever is estimable (in me), all that is due to my teacher, the teacher acting properly as teacher. The neighbours are to propound it to the neighbours as far as practicable."

⁴ Sahni : "Thus should you direct and admonish the pupils that he (i.e. the teacher) may enjoy three-fold comfort (ti-r-oka ?)." Barua : "As it may remain unimpaired as far as practicable so should you instruct and establish the pupils." "This is to be respectfully attended to indeed for the sake of the honour of the teacher. Or again, if (there be) relatives of the teacher, this should likewise be fittingly propounded to (his) relations, so also among the citizens should (it) be fittingly propounded, so that it may be excessively bright" (Inscriptions of Asoka, op. cit., p. 200).

⁵ Many of the letters of these and the other edicts transcribed below are indistinct on the impressions.

(I) This record relating to Dharma has been caused to be written by king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods.

(II) Here no living being should be slaughtered for sacrifice.

(III) And also no festive gathering should be held.

(IV) For the Beloved of the Gods sees manifold evil in festive gatherings.

(V) There is, (however), one kind of festive gatherings, which is considered good by king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods.

(VI) Many hundred thousands of living beings were formerly slaughtered every day in the kitchen of king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods, for the sake of curry.

(VII) But now, when this record relating to Dharma is written, only three living creatures are killed (daily) for the sake of curry, (viz.), two birds and one animal.²

(VIII) Even this animal is not (slaughtered) regularly.

(IX) These three living beings too shall not be killed in future.

(IV) The reporters should report to me the affairs of the people at any time and place, whether I am engaged in eating (or) in the harem (or) in the bed-chamber (or) on a promenade (or) in the carriage (or) on the march.¹⁴

(V) And I am now attending to people's affairs at all places.

(VI) And, when I issue an order orally in connection with any donation or proclamation or when an emergent work presses itself upon the Mahāmātras (and) in case there is, in connection with that matter, a controversy among (the Ministers of) the Council or an argumentation¹ (in the Council in favour of a particular view), the fact must be reported to me immediately at any place and at any time.

(VII) Thus have I ordered.

(VIII) I am never complacent in regard to (my) exertion and the dispatch of people's business (by me).

(IX) I consider it my (only) duty (to promote) the welfare of all men.

(X) But exertion and prompt dispatch of business (lie at) the root of that.

(XI) There is verily no duty which is more (important to me) than promoting the welfare of all men.

(XII) And whatever effort I make is made in order that I may discharge the debt which I owe to all living beings, that I may make them happy in this world, and that they may attain heaven in the next world.

(XIII) Therefore this record relating to Dharma has been caused to be written by me (on stone) for the following (purpose, viz.) that it may last for a long time and that my sons and grandsons may exert themselves for the welfare of all men.

(XIV) This, indeed, is difficult to accomplish without the utmost exertion.

TRANSLATION

(I) This record relating to Dharma has been caused to be written by king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods.

(II) (In the series of records) there are, for sooth, (texts written) in a concise form, or in a medium form, or in an elaborate form.

⁷ Chakravartī: vā

(III) And all (the items of the series) have not been put together in all places.

(IV) For (my) dominions are wide, and much has been written, and I shall certainly cause still a lot (more) to be written.

(V) There are (some topics which) have been repeated over and over again owing to their sweetness, so that people may act accordingly.

(VI) Thus there may be some (topics which) have been written incompletely either as the (particular) place (of a record) was considered (unsuitable for them) or as a (special) reason for abridgment was believed (to exist), and also owing to a fault of the scribe.

(I) Thus saith the Beloved of the Gods.

(II) There is no such gift as the gift of Dharma, (no such acquaintance as) acquaintance through Dharma, (no such act of dividing as) the separation of Dharma (from what is not Dharma), (and no such kinship as) kinship through Dharma.

(III) The following (are comprised) in them, (viz.) proper courtesy to slaves and servants, obedience to mother and father, liberality to friends, acquaintances and relatives (as well as) to the Brāhmanas and Śramanas, (and) abstention from the slaughter of living beings.

(IV) (In respect of this), (whether one is a person's) father, or son, or brother, or master, or friend, or acquaintance, or (even) a (mere) neighbour, one ought to say (to him): "This is meritorious. This ought to be done".

(V) Thus, if he acts in this manner, (happiness in) this world is attained (by him) and endless merit is produced (for him) in the next world by the said gift of Dharmas.

- (III) He who starts doing good (to others) accomplishes what is difficult (indeed).
- (IV) Many a good deed has, however, been performed by me.

- (VI) But whosoever amongst them will abandon even a part of it will do an act of demerit.
- (VII) It is indeed easy to commit sin.
- (VIII) And formerly, in the ages gone by, there were no (officers) called Dharma-Mahāmātras.
- (IX) So indeed I created the (posts of) Dharma-Mahāmātras thirteen years after my coronation.

(XII) They are (similarly) engaged with the fettered persons (in the prisons, for working in) the following order : for the distribution of money to those amongst them who are encumbered with progeny, for the unfettering of those who have (committed crimes) under the instigation (of others),³ and for the release of those who are aged.

(XIII) They are engaged everywhere—here⁴ and elsewhere in all the towns, in the households of my brothers and sisters and other relatives.

(XIV) These Dharma-Mahāmātras are engaged everywhere in my dominions amongst the adherents of Dharma (to determine) whether a person is (only) inclined towards Dharma or is (fully) established in Dharma or is given to charity.

TRANSLATION

(I) In times past, for many hundreds of years, slaughter of lives, cruelty to living creatures, disrespect to relatives and disrespect to the Śramaṇas and Brāhmaṇas increased indeed.

(II) But now, as a result of the practice of Dharma on the part of king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods, (every) proclamation by the beating of drums has become the proclamation of Dharma.

³ Chakravarti : dasayiptu.

⁶ The letter is chipped off as stated by Chakravarti.

⁹ Chakravarti : natale.

¹¹ Chakravarti : "Some space is left between nā and De. This could not be inscribed owing to the roughness of the stone."

¹³ There is a short line below bhisitēnā in line 14 to separate this edict from the next record (Rock Edict VIII).

(III) Abstention from the slaughter of life, absence of cruelty to living creatures, seemly behaviour to relatives, seemly behaviour to the Śramaṇas and Brāhmaṇas, obedience to mother and father (and) obedience to the aged have increased now owing to the instruction in Dharma (imparted) by king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods, in such a degree as was not possible to achieve for many hundreds of years in the past by (means of) showing to the people the (representations of) celestial cars and (celestial) elephants, masses of fire (i.e. hell-fire) as well as (many) other heavenly forms.¹

(IV) The practice of Dharma of the above kind as well as of various other kinds have increased and king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods, will certainly cause such practices of Dharma to increase (still more).

(V) Further, the sons, grandsons and great-grandsons of king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods, will promote this practice of Dharma till the time of universal destruction and, (themselves) abiding by Dharma and good conduct, will instruct (people) in Dharma.

(VI) Verily, instruction in Dharma is (considered by him to be his) supreme duty.

(VII) But the practice of Dharma is not possible for a person devoid of good conduct.

(VIII) Therefore, in the matter (of Dharma), an increase is good as also its non-decrease.

(IX) This (record) has been caused to be written for the following purpose, (viz.) that the promotion of Dharma should be adhered to and that no decrease of it should be countenanced.

(X) This record has been caused to be written by king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods, twelve years after his coronation.

⁵ Chakravarti : "There is a depression after da which looks like m on the impression ; but it is too high up."

⁷ Chakravarti : "There is no letter on the rock after thi."

⁸ There is a short line below *dhamma-pali*⁹ showing the division of this edict from the next (Rock Edict IX).

(II) During such (toys), hunting and other pastimes of the kind used to be (enjoyed by them).

(III) Now, king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods, visited Sambodhi ten years after his coronation.

(IV) Thence started these pilgrimages for Dharma.

(V) During these (pilgrimages), the following take place, (viz.) visiting the Śramaṇas and Brāhmaṇas and making gifts (to them), meeting the aged and making provision of money (for them), and contacting the people of the countryside, instructing (them) in Dharma and discussing (with them) the principles of Dharma, this being conducive to the (above, i.e. their initiation into Dharma).

(VI) This is the supreme delight to king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods.

TRANSLATION

(I) King Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods, does not consider either glory (in this life) or fame (after death) as of great consequence, except (in regard to) the following, (viz.) that, at present as well as in future, the people (of his dominions) would practise obedience to Dharma (as instructed) by him⁷ and also that they would act in accordance with the principles of Dharma.

(II) On this account (alone), king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods, desires glory and fame.

(III) Whatever endeavours are made by king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods, all those are made only for the sake of (the people's happiness in) the other world (and) in order that all men should have little pollution.

(IV) And what is sinful is pollution.

⁷ The original has me, i.e. 'by me', here.

(V) This (freedom from pollution) is indeed difficult to achieve both for the poor class and the rich¹ if they do not make great efforts by renouncing all (other aims).

(VI) Between (the two classes), (this) is certainly (more) difficult for the rich (to achieve).

TRANSLATION

(I) (The country of) the Kaliṅgas was conquered for king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods, eight years after his coronation.

(II) (In this war in Kalinga), men and animals numbering one hundred and fifty thousands were carried away (captive) from that (country), (as many as) one hundred thousands were killed there (in action), and many times that number perished.

(III) After that, now that (the country of) the Kaliṅgas has been conquered, the Beloved of the Gods is devoted to a zealous discussion of Dharma, to a longing for Dharma and to the inculcation of Dharma (among the people).

(IV) Now, this is (due to) the repentance of the Beloved of the Gods on having conquered (the country of) the Kaliṅgas.

(V) Verily, the slaughter, death and deportation of men, which take place there in the course of the conquest of an unconquered country, are now considered extremely painful and deplorable by the Beloved of the Gods.

(VI) But what is considered even more deplorable by the Beloved of the Gods is (the fact that) injury to or slaughter or deportation of the beloved ones falls to the lot of the Brāhmanas, the Śramaṇas, the adherents of other sects and the householders, who live in that country (and), among whom are established such (virtues) as obedience to superior personages, obedience to mother and father, obedience to elders and proper courtesy and firm devotion to friends, acquaintances, companions and relatives as well as to slaves and servants.

⁴ Chakravarti : "The sign for m is not clear on the rock." He omits ch=er.

⁸ Chakravarti : ma vijā.

⁹ Chakravarti : "The letter si is not clear on the rock."

¹¹ Chakravarti : sa.

(VII) And, if misfortune befalls the friends, acquaintances, companions and relatives of persons who are full of affection (towards the former), even though they are themselves well provided for, (the said misfortune) as well becomes an injury to their own selves.

(VIII) (In war), this fate is shared by all classes of men and is considered deplorable by the Beloved of the Gods.

(IX) Excepting the country of the Yavanas, there is no country where these two classes, (viz.) the Brāhmaṇas and the Śramaṇas, do not exist.

(X) And there is no place in any country where men are not indeed (sincerely) devoted to one sect (or other).

(XI) Therefore, (the slaughter, death or deportation) of even a hundredth or thousandth part of all those people who were either slain or died or were carried away (captive) at that time in Kaliṅga, is now considered very deplorable by the Beloved of the Gods.

(XII) Now the Beloved of the Gods thinks that, even if (a person) should wrong him, the (offence) would be forgiven if it is possible to forgive it.

(XIII) And the forest-[folk] (who live) in the dominions of the Beloved of the Gods, even then he entreats and exhorts (in regard to their duty).

(XIV) (It is hereby) explained (to them) that, in spite of his repentance, the Beloved of the Gods possesses power (enough to punish them for their crimes), so that they should turn (from evil ways) and would not be killed (for their crimes).

(XV) Verily the Beloved of the Gods desires (the following) in respect of all creatures, (viz.) non-injury (to them), restraint (in dealing with them), impartiality (in the cases of crimes committed by them, and) mild behaviour (towards them).

(XVI) So, what is conquest through Dharma is now considered to be the best conquest by the Beloved of the Gods.

(XVII) And such a conquest has been achieved by the Beloved of the Gods not only here (in his own dominions) but also in the territories bordering (on his dominions), as far away as (at the distance of) six hundred Yojanas, (where) the Yavana king named Antiyoka (is ruling and where), beyond (the kingdom of) the said Antiyoka, four other kings named Turamāya, Antikeni, Makā and Alikasudara (are also ruling), and towards the south, where the Choḍas and Pāṇḍyas (are living), as far as Tāmraparṇī.

(XVIII) Likewise here in the dominions of His Majesty, (the Beloved of the Gods), — in (the countries of) the Yavanas and Kambojas, of the Nābhakas and Nābhapāṇktis, of the Bhojas and Paitryanikas and of the Andhras and Paulindas,¹ everywhere (people) are conforming to the instructions in Dharma (imparted) by the Beloved of the Gods.

(XIX) Even where the envoys of the Beloved of the Gods have not penetrated, there too (men) have heard of the practices of Dharma and the ordinances (issued and) the instructions in Dharma (imparted) by the Beloved of the Gods, (and) are conforming to Dharma (and) will continue to conform to it.

(XX) So, (whatever) conquest is achieved in this way, verily that conquest (creates an atmosphere of) satisfaction everywhere (both among the victors and the vanquished).

(XXI) In the conquest through Dharma, satisfaction is derived (by both the parties).

(XXIII) Only happiness (of the people) in the next world is what is regarded by the Beloved of the Gods as a great thing (resulting from such a conquest).

(XXIV) And this record relating to Dharma has been written (on stone) for the following purpose, (viz.) that my sons and great-grandsons (who may flourish after me) should not think of any fresh conquest (by arms) as worth achieving, that they should adopt (the policy of) forbearance and light punishment (towards the vanquished, even if they) themselves achieve the conquest (of a people by arms), and that they should regard the conquest through Dharma as the (true) conquest.

(XXV) Such (a conquest) brings happiness (to all concerned both) in this world and in the next.

(XXVI) And let all their intense joys be what is pleasure associated with Dharma.

(XXVII) For this brings happiness in this world as well as in the next.

TRANSLATION

(I) King Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods, honours men of all religious communities with gifts and with honours of various kinds, (irrespective of whether they are) ascetics or householders.

(II) But the Beloved of the Gods does not value either the (offering of) gifts or the honouring (of people) so (highly) as the following, viz. that there should be a growth of the essentials (of Dharma) among (men of) all sects.

(III) And the growth of the essentials (of Dharma is possible in) many ways.

(IV) But its root (lies) in restraint in regard to speech, (which means) that there should be no extolment of one's own sect or disparagement of other sects on inappropriate occasions and that it should be moderate in every case even on appropriate occasions.

(V) On the contrary, other sects should be duly honoured in every way (on all occasions).

(VI) If (a person) acts in this way, (he) not only promotes his own sect but also benefits other sects.

(VII) But, if (a person) acts otherwise, (he) not only injures his own sect but also harms other sects.

(VIII) Truly, if (a person) extols his own sect and disparages other sects with a view to glorifying his own sect owing merely to his attachment (to it, he) injures his own sect very severely by acting in that way.

(IX) Therefore restrained speech¹ is commendable, because people should learn and respect (the fundamentals of) one another's Dharma.

(X) This indeed is the desire of the Beloved of the Gods that persons of all sects become well-informed (about the doctrines of different religions) and acquire pure knowledge.

(XI) And those who are attached to their respective (sects) should be informed as follows :

(XII) "The Beloved of the Gods does not value either the (offering of) gifts or the honouring (of people) so (highly) as the following, viz. that there should be a growth of the essentials (of Dharma) among (men of) all sects."

(XIII) Indeed many of my officers are engaged for the (realisation of) the (said) end, (such as) the Mahāmātras in charge of (the affairs relating to) Dharma, the Mahāmātras who are superintendents (of matters relating to) the ladies (of the royal household), the officers in charge of (my cattle and) pasture lands and other classes (of officials).

(XIV) And the result (of their activities, as expected by me) is the promotion of one's own sect and the glorification of Dharma.

TRANSLATION

(I) Thus saith king Priyadarśin, Beloved of the Gods.

(II) People perform various (kinds of) auspicious ceremony on the occasions of illness, the weddings of sons, the weddings of daughters, (and) the birth of children.

³ Chakravarti : " The letter chu is partly visible on the rock. "

⁴ Chakravarti : " The letter ja looks like jām on the rock. " He reads janiyo.

⁵ Chakravarti : " The engraver seems to have inscribed ya at first and then changed it into thi. "

⁶ Chakravarti : " The letter ne is faintly visible on the rock. "

⁹ Chakravarti reads [pā]ṭev[e]si[yena] and says that the last two letters look like lene on the rock.

¹⁴ Chakravarti : " The letter taṁ is not visible on the rock. "

¹⁵ Chakravarti : " The letter taṁ is only partly visible on the rock. "

¹⁶ Chakravarti : " The letter la is completely rubbed off. "

¹⁷ Chakravarti omits pi.

¹⁹ Chakravarti : " The sign for ṁ after pu is not visible on the rock. " He reads ubhe and palate.

(III) On these and similar other occasions, people perform many (kinds of) auspicious ceremony.

(IV) And on such (occasions), the womenfolk (in particular) perform many and diverse (kinds of) ceremony which is trivial and meaningless.

(V) An auspicious rite, however, should certainly be performed.

(VI) But the said (kind of rites) in fact produces meagre results.

(VII) (On the other hand), such a ceremony as is associated with Dharma produces great results.

(VIII) In it are comprised the following, (viz.) proper courtesy to slaves and servants, reverence to elders, restraint in (one's dealings with) living beings, (and) liberality to the Śramanas and Brāhmanas.

(IX) These and similar other (virtues) are indeed the ceremonies of Dharma.

(X) Therefore, whether (one is a person's) father, or son, or brother, or friend or acquaintance, or (even) a (mere) neighbour, one ought to declare (to him as follows) :

(XI) This (kind of rite associated with Dharma) is good.

(XII) "One should observe this practice until one's (desired) object is attained and (resolve that) this (practice) will be observed by him¹ again (and again) even after the object is attained."

(XIII) The auspicious ceremony (of kinds) other than this is indeed of dubious (value).

(XIV) Perchance a person may attain his object (by performing those ceremonies), perchance he may not.

(XV) Moreover, (performance of those ceremonies) may produce results in this world only.

(XVI) But the (said) rite of Dharma is not restricted to time.

(XVII) If (a person performs it but) does not attain his object in this world, even then endless merit (for him) is produced (by it) in the next world.

(XVIII) And, if (a person) attains his object in this world, both the results are obtained (by him, viz.), that the (desired) object (is attained) in this world as also endless merit is produced (for him) in the next world by that ceremony of Dharma.

No. 2—SOPĀRĀ FRAGMENT OF ROCK EDICT IX OF ASOKA

(1 Plate)

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

In 1882 Bhagvanlal Indraji discovered a broken slab of basalt bearing parts of some lines of Rock Edict VIII of Aśoka¹ (roughly one-third of the edict) in a place near the Bhātelā pond to the east of the town of Sopārā (ancient Sūrpāraka in Aparānta) in the Bassein Taluk of the Thana District, Bombay State.² The discovery suggested that a complete set of the fourteen Rock Edicts of Aśoka must have originally existed near Sopārā. This possibility has received further support from the recent discovery of another broken slab of basalt containing parts (a little above half) of Rock Edict IX of the series in the same neighbourhood. On the 1st of January 1956, Mr. N. A. Gore, Librarian of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, discovered this fragment in the village of Bhūlgaon near Sopārā. Both the fragments are now preserved in the Prince of Wales Museum of Western India, Bombay. When I visited the Museum in January 1957, the authorities were kind enough to allow me to examine and copy the inscription.

The inscribed surface of the slab is oval in shape. Its length is about 26 inches and height about 22 inches. It contains eleven lines of writing. The number of letters in the lines is as follows : 1—13, 2—14, 3—20, 4—20, 5—21, 6—20, 7—19, 8—19, 9—18, 10—17 and 11—17. Each letter is about 1½ inches in height. The preservation of the writing is on the whole satisfactory, although a few letters are damaged here and there in most of the lines. In several cases, flaws in the stone look almost like vowel-marks attached to particular consonants. Since there are what may be regarded as traces of two or three letters of a twelfth line beneath the concluding part of line 11, the preservation of all the letters in the other lines may be taken to suggest that only the lower part of the inscribed face of the slab has broken away. But we have to take into account the oval shape of the slab as well as the facts that none of the letters are lost at the beginning and end of any of the lines and that the lines about the middle contain more letters than those in the upper and lower parts of the inscribed face which is elliptical in size. These seem to suggest that the few marks beneath line 11 may not actually be traces of a lost line and that the face of the slab contains the whole of the original writing of the inscription which was continued on another slab. In any case, at Sopārā, the Rock Edicts were apparently engraved in groups on separate slabs just as at Erraguḍi.

As expected, the characters of the inscription are Brāhmī and its language is Prakrit. The letter r is of the cork-screw type while y is of both of the Indian plough and tripartite types (cf. Devā nampiye Piyadasi in line 1 and amñāye chu edisāye in line 4). Dh has its back to the right of the vertical. The text does not strictly follow the draft of any of the published versions of the edict. Thus pajūpadāye (line 3 ; instead of putra-lābhesu or pajupadane) connects it with Dhauli, Jaugaḍa, Mānsehrā and Erraguḍi; amñāye (line 4 ; instead añamhi or añāye) with the Dhauli, Jaugaḍa and Kālsī texts (although, for amne in line 10, Mānsehrā has also añe instead of añe); pitinā (line 11 ; instead of pitā or pitunā) with the same versions; ambaka-janiko, literally 'mothers and wives' (line 5 ; instead of mahidāyo, ūhi or striyaka meaning 'ladies' or 'women') with the Erraguḍi, Kālsī and Mānsehrā texts ; and bambhana-samanānam (lines 9-10 ; instead of samana-bamhanānam or śramaṇa-bramaṇana) with the Gīrnār text which, however, retains n of the

Sanskrit spelling of the words. The use of n for ṇ in baṁbhana-samana (Sanskrit brāhmaṇa-sramaṇa) also connects our record with the Kālsī, Dhauli, Jaugada and Erraguḍi texts. But there are some peculiarities of the orthography of the present text of the edict, which are not noticed in any other versions. In retaining r of Sanskrit without changing it to l, our text shows affinity with the Gīrnār, Mānsehrā and Shāhbāzgarhī versions as against the Dhauli, Erraguḍi, Jaugada and Kālsī texts. But the present text exhibits the interesting feature of changing l of Sanskrit to r not generally noticed in any other version of the edict. Indeed this characteristic is found only in a few cases in the Gīrnār, Mānsehrā and Shāhbāzgarhī versions of the fourteen Rock Edicts (cf. the root ārabh for Sanskrit ālabh in Rock Edict I). The Sanskrit words maṅgala and phala have been modified to maṅgara (six times in lines 2, 4, 6, 6-7, 8 and 10-11) and phara (twice in line 7). The word samiya in samiya-patipati (Sanskrit samyak-pratipatti) in lines 8-9 is spelt in the other versions as samiya, samiyā or samīma. The modification of k into y in nirathiyam (line 6) is noticed in several other texts of the edict; but the elision of y in e (Sanskrit yah) in line 7 is noticed at Dhauli and Erraguḍi while the other texts (except Jaugada which is damaged in this part) have ye, although the same consonant in Sanskrit yāvat is elided in all the versions except Shāhbāzgarhī which retains it in one out of two cases.¹ The introduction of h in heta (Sanskrit atra; cf. eta in line 5) in line 8 is noticed in the Kālsī and Erraguḍi texts. But edise (Sanskrit etādrisak) in line 10 is found as heḍise in the Kālsī, ediśa in the Mānsehrā and etārisam in the Gīrnār version. In dāsa-bhaṭakasi (Sanskrit dāsa-bhṛitake) our text differs from the Gīrnār version which has dāsa-bhatakamhi.

NO. 3—KALEGAON PLATES OF YADAVA MAHADEVA

D. G. KOPARKAR, AHMEDNAGAR

Kālēgāon where the grant was discovered is situated on the southern bank of the Gōdāvari about sixteen miles east of Nēvāsā in the Ahmednagar District, Bombay State. The following account of Kālēgāon is found in the Gautamī-māhātmya section of the Brahma Purāṇa. Saramā, the divine bitch, had two pups whom Yama fondled. She used to guard the sacrificial cows of the gods. The demons once enticed her with sweet words and bribes and stole away the cattle of the gods. Bṛhaspati came to know Saramā's disloyal behaviour and informed Indra about it. The latter in anger kicked her and she vomitted milk, a direct evidence of her faithlessness. Indra cursed her to go to the mortal earth. The two pups of Saramā approached Yama, their master, for help and he sought the advice of his father, the Sun, in the matter of getting the curse lifted. The Sun directed him to go to the Daṇḍaka forest, bathe¹ in the Gautamī (Gōdāvari) and worship Brahman, Viṣṇu, Sūrya and Śiva. Yama with the dogs did as directed and Saramā recovered from the effect of the curse. The place where Yama performed penance is called Yamatīrtha and Śiva is said to be present there under the name Yamēśvara. It is believed to be a holy place having power to relieve men of all sins committed by themselves and their forefathers.² Yamēśvara is now known as Kālēśvara. The village seems to have been originally called Kālagrāma, then Kālugaṃva and lastly Kālēgāon.

Kālēgāon was granted as an Inām to Rāvaji Mahādēva Vyāsa by the Peshwā Bālaji Bājirāva in 1756 A.D. In recognition of his integrity in submitting true accounts of the possessions of even those who lost their lives in the struggle, Rāvaji received a big prize. Out of it, he built the holy Kuśāvarta at Tryambakēśvara. Kālēgāon continued as a hereditary Inām till August 1955 with 181.5 acres of unarable and 2854.17 of arable land and a total assessment of Rs. 3,004.

Among the old sites in the village are the Wādā of the Jahagirdar, the Kālēśvara temple (said to have been built by Shri Panse, a former Jahagirdar of Tuljāpur), the dilapidated Gaḍhī of the Panses and a bastion and an extensive plinth of a building built after the Hēmāḍpanta style. This last site is locally known as maḥh, from Sanskrit maṭha, 'monastery, school'. Between the remains of the Gaḍhī on the one hand and the bastion on the other goes the trodden path which at this point is inclined. Heavy monsoon showers washed away the earth on the path and there was exposed to view, on the 22nd September 1955, a nicely chiselled slab of stone. The villagers dug out the slab and were surprised to hear a metallic sound from its interior when it was turned upside down. On examination they found that the huge slab consisted of two pieces firmly joined together to form something like a safe. It was opened in the presence of the Pañchas and three massive copper plates, strung on a stout copper ring bearing seal, were discovered inside the stone covers.³ The upper stone measures 1' 10" × 1' 3.5" × 7" and has a hollow (4.5" in depth) carved in it, while the lower measures 2' × 1' 4.5" × 7" with a similar hollow 1.5" deep. The plates measure 1' 3" × 11" × .25" each and the three of them weigh 4½, 4½ and 4½ seers respectively. They are made thicker at the edges with a view to preserve the engraved matter from friction. The seal bears the Yādava emblem which is a small copper image of Garuḍa sitting with hands folded and wings stretched out.¹ The ring passes through the aperture at the base of the image and through the holes in the three plates. The Garuḍa image is 4.5" in height and 4" in width and weighs 59 tolas. The ring is 12" in circumference and 22.5 tolas in weight.

² Brahma Purāṇa, Anandāśrama ed., 131, 50-51.

Being well-protected between the stones, the charter is quite legible. The Dēvanāgarī script employed in the document represents the peculiarities of the century to which it belongs. Prishthamātrās are commonly used. The following letters are sometimes confusingly similar: va and ba, da and ḍa, tha and dha, stha and chchha, dva and ddha, vya and dhya. To the bottom of the vertical bar of p is, in some cases, added a sharp curve so that the letter looks almost like z. The anusvāra is generally a hollow circle. The language is Sanskrit. As regards orthography, the consonant following r is often doubled. In a few places, ṣ is substituted for s.² The details of the date, quoted in the record correspond to the 29th August 1261 A.D. Its importance will be discussed later on.

The first thirty verses of the charter are important as they depict the career of the donor and some of his predecessors. As the Yādavas are said to have descended from the moon, the Purāṇas are drawn upon by the court poet. Verses 1-5 give the genealogy of the lunar race from Brahman, born of Vishṇu's navel, to Yayāti's son Yadu after whom the family came to be called Yādava-varṇa. From their original home in Mathurā, some Yādava families migrated to Saurāṣṭra and to Gujarāt and Mahārāṣṭra.³ Dṛiḍhaprahāra (c. 795 A.D.), the son of Subāhu, is traditionally held to be the first ruler of Chandradityapura or Chandrapura which is identified with Chāndvaḍ, Chāndōḍ or Chāndōr in the Nasik District. According to Hēmādri, however, the capital was Śrinagara or Sinner in the same District, called variously Sindhinagara, Siṇḍinagara and Siṇḍinērā in the inscriptions. In the beginning, these Yādavas were feudatories of the Chālukyas of Kalyāṇa and protected their northern frontier.

Verse 6 speaks of Rāja (c. 850 or 900 A.D.) who is also called Rājagi or Rājugi in other inscriptions. Ten kings, placed after him by Hēmādri, are omitted by our poet. Verse 7 says how in this royal house was later on born Siṅghaṇa (i.e. Siṃhana I or Siṃharāja, c. 1100 A.D.) who adopted the title Sāhasāṅka. It is stated that he subdued the king of Karpāṭa, vanquished the Pāṇḍya chief and raised a pillar on the sea shore to commemorate the victory, and scared away the Gūrjara leader from the battle-field by his superior valour.⁴ Verse 8 introduces his son, Mallugi (also called Mailugi) who amassed much wealth belonging to the enemy kings. Verses 9-11 state that he was succeeded by Bhillama (i.e. Bhillama V, 1187-91 A.D.).⁵ He is called a Sārvabhauma. He routed the lord of the Vindhyas and erected a column of victory on that mountain.⁶ He also put down the Chālukya monarch, conquered the south and uprooted the Kākatyas (i.e. Kākatyas of Warangal in the north-eastern Deccan). Bhillama's victory over the Vindhyas king and the Kākatyas, if real, is learnt for the first time from this grant. The other facts are already known. Thus in 1187 A.D. he is known to have founded the new capital, Dēvagiri, after having defeated the Chālukya king Sōmāśvara IV. Similarly, the conquest of the south refers to the defeat of the Hoysala-Yādava king Narasiṃha (the father of Vīra-Ballāḷa) who ruled at Haḷebīḍ in Mysore. Later on, however, Bhilla-ma's imperial status was challenged by Vira-Ballāla and it appears that his son, Jaitugi, who led the army, was completely defeated at Lakkupdi near Gadag. Bhillama also lost his life in this battle.¹ Verses 12-13 state how he was followed on the throne by Jaitugi (or Jaitrapāla, 1191-1210 A.D.) who killed the king of Trikalīnga (i.e. Kākatīya Rudra) and, instead of annexing that territory, liberated from prison Gaṇapati who was the nephew of Rudradēva and nominated him king.² According to verses 14-20, his son was Śiṅhaṇadēva (i.e. Śiṃhana or Śiṃha II, 1210-47 A.D.) who defeated king Hammīra.³ He was a redoubtable warrior, a royal sage, a benevolent and just administrator and a patron of poets and learned men.

According to the Kīrtikaumudī of Sōmēśvara, Śiṃhaṇa II invaded Gujārāt at least twice; but he lost his commander Rāma, son of Khōlēśvara, and made peace with the Vāghēla kings representing a branch of the Chaulukyas of Anahillapattana. Verse 21 introduces his son Jaitugi (i.e. Jaitugi II) 'whose feet were kissed by the crest-jewels of all the kings in the three worlds and who was irresistible like the sun rising with all its lustre'.

According to verse 22, Jaitugi's son was Śrīrāyanārāyaṇa Kṛishṇadēva (also called Kanhara, 1247-60 A.D.) who made a river of the blood of the Gūrjara heroes flow. Verses 23-30 speak of his younger brother and successor, Mahādēva (1261-71 A.D.), who enjoyed the birudas: *Rāyanārāyaṇa*⁴, Rāyabhujabalabhīma,⁵ Rāyapitāmaha,⁶ Rāyajagaddala, etc. He launched such an onslaught on Visala (i.e. Viśala or Viśaladēva, the Vāghēla king of Gujārāt) that the latter lost all his wealth and fame of valour (as also his life?) on the battle-field. This Viśaladēva (1235-60 A.D.) was the son of Viradhavala and grandson of Lavaṇaprasāda. He had formerly offered strong resistance to Śiṅhaṇa II and was defeated by Kṛishṇa. Mahādēva seems to have helped his brother in the struggle and was held responsible for the defeat (and death?) of Visala. The reference is made here in connection with Mahādēva's assumption of purple robes. It appears that when the elder brother was the king, the younger acted as his general.⁷ We are told that Mahādēva led a successful encounter on the sea against the Śīlāhāras of the Konkan in 1260 A.D. Such victories in 1260 A.D. attributed to Mahādēva have led some historians⁸ to believe that he became king some time before 1260 A.D. The present grant, however, proves that he ascended the throne in 1261 A.D. and that Kṛishṇa must have breathed his last some time the same year.

The prose portion after verse 30 mentions the date of the grant which is the expired Śaka year 1182,⁹ Durmati (current), Monday, the second day of the bright half of Bhādrapada. This corresponds to the 29th August 1261 A.D. The grant clearly states that it was made on the occasion of Mahādēva's coronation and with the belief that it would lead to the prosperity and expansion of his kingdom. We come to know this date for the first time from this grant.

² Ind. Ant., Vol. XIV, p. 318. According to an inscription (above, Vol. III, p. 119) of 1222 A.D., from Bahāl in Khandesh, Gaṇapati was the king of Andhradēśa, while the Targaon plates (Khare, Sourc. Méd. Hist. Dec., Vol. III, pp. 9-16; cf. above, Vol. XXVII, pp. 208 ff.) of Yādava Kṛishṇa says that Jaitugi defeated the Andhra king.

⁷ [As Mr. S. Sankaranarayanan points out to me, Amalānanda's Vēdāntakalpataru (Introduction, verse 13; Conclusion, verse 7) refers to the joint rule of Kṛishṇa and Mahādēva. B. K. No. 185 of 1933-34, dated Śaka 1177, Rākshasa, su. 15, Monday (June 21 or November 15, 1255 A.D.) also refers to Kanharaḍṭha-Mahādēva-vijaya-rājya. Works on astrology dealing with the auspicious moments for particular functions give a number of details regarding the mūhūrta of coronation. Tuesday¹ and Wednesday² are to be avoided; Sunday, Monday and Friday are all right if they are sabala;³ Uttarāyana is to be preferred but Chaitra, Āshāḍha and an intercalary month are to be excluded,⁴ as also Śrāvaṇa and Bhādrapada.⁵ The rikta-tithis 4, 9, 14 and 30 and the night are similarly to be avoided.⁶ It is generally believed that the first day of a month is not favourable for any auspicious undertaking. The period when the sun is in the Vṛścika, Tūlā or Kanyā rāśi is recommended for coronation.⁷ We find from Pillai's Indian Ephemeris that the sun was in the Kanyā rāśi on the 29th August 1261 A.D. and the intercalary Bhādrapada was over two days earlier. Most of these general rules are found observed in the selection of the date recorded. The only question is about Dakṣiṇāyana and Bhādrapada, during which the coronation should not take place according to the astrologers. The explanation of this question is to be found in the following remark of the author of the Mūhūrtaprakāśa: mṛte rājñi na kālasya niyamō=tra vidhīyatē. In the case of a sudden death of the reigning king, the kingdom should not remain without a lord for a long time.⁸ It may be supposed that such an emergency arose and hence the coronation took place during the Dakṣiṇāyana and Bhādrapada, though normally they are to be avoided.

The charter records the grant of the village of Kālugaṁva in favour of fifty-two Brāhmaṇas on the occasion of the king's coronation. The name of the gift village was changed to Paṭṭavardhanapura apparently with reference to the occasion of the grant. The fifty-two donees of the grant belonged to twenty-two different gōtras. Thirty of them claim to be Bahvṛicha or Rgvēdin, twenty-one Taittirīya or Yajurvēdin and only one Chhandōga or Sāmavēdin. The details are furnished in the following table.

The usual convention was that the grants of older kings should be continued by later rulers even though they may have belonged to a different royal house. It is therefore interesting to note that the village granted to fifty-two Brāhmanas in 1261 A.D. was again given as an Inām to the Vyāsas by a Peshwā. It seems that, for some reason or other, Kālēgaon was deserted by the descendants of the donees of this grant.

Among the privileges enjoyed by the donees of the grant, the expression ashta-bhōga normally stands for the following eight kinds of enjoyment fixed by usage (grāma-maryādā): nidhi (treasure trove); nikshēpa (also called upanidhi, deposits on the soil); jala (water reservoirs); pāshāṇa (stones, mines and quarries); akshinī (actual privileges); āgāmi (future profits); siddha or siddhāya (what is already brought under cultivation); sādhyā (waste land that may in future be turned into a cultivable land).¹ In our grant, however, eleven types of enjoyments are named and besides some more are implied by the expression ity-ādā, and still they are called ashṭa-bhōga. This means that all possible privileges or conditions with reference to the gift village were transferred to the donees. The donees of the brahmadēya grants used to receive all the taxes payable by the inhabitants to the king, but themselves had to pay nothing.²

Of the above list, the first four-bhōgas occur in our grant. Among the other privileges, śulka is the same as bhūt-ōpātta-pratyāya, a tax on what has been produced or manufactured (bhūta) and what has been imported (upātta), i.e. some general excise and octroi duties.³ The terms vāt-ādēya, āvāta, vāta-pratyāya and akara-vāt-ōttara occur in inscriptions; but in all these upātta seems to have been Prakritised as āvāta or vāta. Danḍa is danḍāya, i.e. the right to receive the fines imposed upon the delinquents.⁴ Dāṇa seems to be some kind of customs duty; cf. Gujarātī dāṇacōrī (smuggling) and the Marāṭhī surname Dāṇī. The latter is explained in the Mahārāshṭra Śabdakōśa as 'the officer collecting the tax on corn', 'the officer to store the corn collected as tax from the farmers'.⁵ Kāruka is some tax on the artisans and craftsmen.⁶ Maulika means traditional or customary tax.⁷ Dr. Altekar explains maulika-arhaṇas, 'perquisites of hereditary officers', as the receipts of the headman who enjoyed the taxes in kind and used to receive a share of most of the articles produced or sold in their villages.⁸ Alternatively, we may connect maulika with Marāṭhī mōlī 'the burden of grass or fuel that a man can carry on his head'. In that case, the term may indicate some octroi duty in kind over the imported goods. *Śrōtra*⁹ is a fiscal term of uncertain import. MM. D. V. Potdar suggested to me that it might be a Sanskritisation of ślōtra or silōtra from Sanskrit śilōttara. According to the Mahārāshṭra Śabdakōśa, ślōtarā, ślōtari or ślōtrī means the tax in kind (a maund per bighā) to be collected from the cultivator by the person (called vjārdār) taking possession of Government land on contract for a fixed period. Tēja, also written tējas,¹⁰ is a puzzle. In several inscriptions,¹¹ tēja-svāmīya is mentioned over and above the ashṭa-bhōga.

The boundaries of the gift village are carefully noted in the grant: Gaṅgā (Gōdāvarī) in the north; Nāigaum and Khāmbhagaum in the west; Nimbavāṇ in the east; and Rāñjanagaum and Dahīṅgaum in the south. The modern equivalents of these names are: Limbārī or Nimbārī (two miles to the east of Kālēgaon), Dahigaon and Rāñjanī (four miles to the south), Khāmbgaon (three miles to the west). Nāigaum is a difficulty. About four miles to the west of Kālēgaon there is an old village named Varakhēd which was formerly a centre of Brahmanic learning and where even at this day live certain Brāhmaṇa families belonging to the Rīgvēda and the Vasishṭha, Viśvāmitra and Jāmadagnya gōtras. In the list of the donees of this grant we do find Rīgvēdins with these gōtras and this fact may be regarded as supporting the identification of Varakhēd with ⁵ Cf. sa-dhānya-hirānya-dēya, 'assessment of revenue in the form of gold coins or corn' (Bhandarkar, op. cit., p. 228).

The term maṭakāva (or vum) occurring in an inscription (Sukthankar Comm. Vol., II, p. 238) is phonetically related to maulika.

Nāigaum. Varakhēḍ is famous for its old shrine of Nāgēśvara. Its older name therefore may have been Nāgagrāma modified later to Nāyagāma and lastly to Nāigaum. This suggestion is borne out by the evidence of the *Brahma Purāṇa*¹ wherein the following story is told about the name of the place. King Śūrasēna of the lunar dynasty ruling at Pratiṣṭhāṇa had no issue. After a time his queen gave birth to a snake named Nāgēśvara who was really a son of Śēsha and had been cursed by Śiva. He studied the Vēdas and Śāstras and was later married to Bhōgavatī, the daughter of king Vijaya ruling in the east. Bhōgavatī and Nāgēśvara bathed in the Gōdāvarī and devoutly worshipped Śiva. The place where they worshipped came to be known as Nāga-tīrtha and the līnga worshipped by them as Nāgēśvara.

Sēunadēśa, mentioned in verse 30 (line 76), is the country named after Sēunachandra I (c. 800 A. D.), the son of Dṛiḍhaprahāra. The kingdom founded by his father was expanded by Sēunachandra on both banks of the Godāvarī from Nasik to Devagiri so as to include the modern Districts of Aurangabad and East and West Khandesh as well as portions of Ahmednagar and Nasik. Our grant fittingly styles Gōdāvarī as the ornament of the Sēuna country.

⁴ This verse was quoted from earlier records (cf. Khare, Sourc. Med. Hist. Dec., Vol. III, p. 75).

⁶ The stanza exhibits Atīkayōkti.

Read samaram=abha°.

² There is Upamā. The splendour of the enemy kings is compared to the shadow of trees. Pratāpa-taraṇi is to be explained as pratāpaḥ taraṇiḥ iva or pratāpaḥ taraṇiḥ iva or pratāpa-yuktah taraṇiḥ. The third foot gives Chhākānuprāsa due to the repetition of t, r and n. [Pratāpa-taraṇi exhibits Rūpaka only.—Ed.]

⁴ We may suggest Bhīlamma° for the sake of the metre.

⁷ The daṇḍa is unnecessary.

¹ The first foot of the stanza exhibits Kēvalaparamparita-rūpaka not based on pun. The superimposition of tīmira on Hamira leads to that of tarani on the king. There is also Mālā-rūpaka as tarani and sankrama are upamānas to the same Singhapa.

² The danḍa is unnecessary.

⁴ The two danḍas are unnecessary.

¹ In verses 25-26, Mahādēva, like the great Śiva, is said to have subdued and destroyed the elements. The lustre (tējas) of all the objects known to possess it (especially the lustre of the enemies) fades into insignificance when Mahādēva with the superior lustre of his white stallions is speeding on the battlefield. When his army is on the move, huge columns of dust arise and settle on the surface of the ocean. Thus the water element is destroyed (cf. karnagamyā) by Mahādēva. The element of wind is destroyed (samhṛita) inasmuch as Mahādēva withdraws (cf. samhṛita) the life-breath of all enemy kings. The members of the royal families of the enemies are required to take shelter in mountain caves [and forest recesses] when the enemies are no more. This means that the ākāśa element which is nothing but śūnyatā (emptiness) is also destroyed in the caves. All this disaster of the deluge sets in because Mahādēva subdues the earth. But after that he creates tējas in the form of his valour, water (i.e. tears) from the eyes of the enemies' wives, wind from their sighs and ākāśa (void, loneliness) in their houses. Thus there is Vastu-dhvani (i.e. suggestion of the superb valour of the king). In verse 26, there is Anuprāsa as also Sāgarāpaka in that there is the superimposition of Īśvara and his divine deeds on Mahādēva and his achievements.

² There is Atīśayōkti of the asambandhē sambandha type at the basis of Tulyayōgitā (cf. Phaṇi-nāyaka, Kai-lāsa-saila and Vāsava-vāraṇa with a single kriyā). [There is Mālarāpaka, not Tulyayōgitā.—Ed.]

No. 4—RASHTRAKUTA CHARTERS FROM CHINCHANI

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

In its issue of the 28th of June, 1955, The Times of India, Bombay, announced the discovery of a number of inscriptions in the village of Chinchani in the Dahanu Taluk of the Thana District, Bombay State. It was stated that an agriculturist of the said village found nine copper plates bearing inscription while digging in his fields. The villager handed over the plates to the Mamlatdar of Dahanu, who brought the discovery to the notice of higher authorities. Ultimately the plates were transferred to the office of the Collector of Thana, from whom they were received by the Director of Archives, Bombay. In January 1957, I visited Bombay in the course of my annual tour in search of inscriptions. The Director of Archives kindly allowed me to examine the plates and copy the inscriptions in his office. It was found on examination that the nine plates formed five different records. One of the five sets consisted of three plates; two of the sets contained two plates each; and the remaining two plates each contained a complete record. Two of the five charters belong to the Imperial Rāshtrakūṭas, one pertaining to the reign of Indra III (915-28 A.D.) and the other to that of Kṛishṇa III (939-67 A.D.). These are edited here with the help of impressions prepared by me. The other three inscriptions belonging to the local chiefs of Saṁyāna (modern Sanjan, 20° 12'N., 72° 52'E., in the Dahanu Taluk of the Thana District) are being edited in a separate article. My thanks in this connection are due to Dr. P. M. Joshi, Director of Archives, Government of Bombay, and Dr. Motichandra, Director of the Prince of Wales Museum of Western India, Bombay.

1. Grant of the time of Indra III, Śaka 848

This is a set of three plates each measuring 9·6 inches in length, 5·8 inches in height and ·115 inch in thickness. The plates are strung on a ring passing through a hole in them. The joint of this ring is secured beneath a seal bearing the blurred representation of an emblem which looks more like a recumbent bull facing the proper left than Garuḍa generally found on the seals of the Rāshtrakūṭa emperors, together with the symbols of the sun and moon above. The first and third plates bear writing only on the inner side while the second plate is engraved on both the obverse and reverse. The inscription has altogether 67 lines of writing, there being 16 lines on the first plate, 19 and 16 lines respectively on the obverse and reverse of the second plate, and 16 lines on the third plate. The writing is neatly done and is in a satisfactory state of preservation. The three plates together with the ring bearing the seal weigh 236 tolas.

The characters belong to the North Indian alphabet of the tenth century. The letter ṣ is indicated by the sign for v. The upadhmaniya is once used in line 22 and the avagraha once in line 60. The numerical figures 4 and 8 occur in line 60. The following initial vowels are found in the inscription: a in lines 5, 24, 44, 53 (twice) and 60; ā in lines 20, 38 and 51; i in line 57; u in line 15; and ē in lines 6 and 36. Final t occurs in lines 10, 15 and 67, final n in lines 16, 21 and 25, and final m in line 26. The language is Sanskrit and the record is composed in prose and verse. As regards orthography, mention may be made of the reduplication of some of the consonants following r and in rare cases also those preceding r. The change of the final m to both the anustāra and the class-nasal is noticed. It has been wrongly changed to n in one case in line 18. It is often wrongly changed to anusvāra and is found wrongly conjoined with the following v in a few cases in lines 25, 59 and 60. In one case in line 43, final n has been wrongly changed to anusvāra. The rules of Sandhi have in some cases been ignored.

The date of the charter is quoted in lines 58-60 as Śaka 848, Vyaya, Vaiśākha-śu. 3, Akshata-tṛtīyā, (i.e. Akshaya-tṛtīyā), Monday. The details correspond to the 17th April, 926 A.D.

The inscription begins with the Siddham symbol. Then follows an introductory section in four stanzas, the first of which is in adoration of Girisutā and Hara (i.e. Pārvatī and Śiva). Verse 2 is also in adoration of Durgā, i.e. Pārvatī. The sage Agastya is adored in verse 3 and the Ārya-dēśīyā Mahā-parshad in verse 4. Since Agastya was regarded as the leader of the Aryanisation of trans-Vindhyan India, he was an object of special veneration to the Brahmanists of the south. The Ārya-dēśīyā Mahā-parshad seems to have been an assembly of learned Brāhmaṇas hailing from what was called Āryāvarta (roughly, India to the north of the Vindhyas) in ancient Indian literature. The contents of the record would suggest that this assembly belonged to the city of Saṁhyāna which is the modern Sanjan about 22 miles to the north of the findspot of the inscription. The same assembly is apparently mentioned in lines 29-30 as the Pañcha-Gauḍīya-Mahā-parshad.

The next four stanzas (verses 5-8) introduce the Yadu or Yādava dynasty. This section speaks of the moon, his son Budha, his son Purūravas, and his son Āyus. It also mentions Yayāti as one of the imperial rulers born in the said family and Yadu as the son of Yayāti and the progenitor of the Yadu-varṇśa. Verse 9 refers to the birth of Gōvindarāja in the same family otherwise called the Rāshtrakūṭa dynasty.¹ This Gōvindarāja is the Rāshtrakūṭa king Gōvinda I, son of Indra I and grandson of Dantivarman I. The next stanza (verse 10) mentions the following four kings who ruled successively: (1) Kakkarāja (Kakka I), son of Gōvindarāja; (2) Indrarāja (Indra II), son of Kakkarāja; (3) Dantidurga (Dantivarman II, 742-56 A.D.), son of Indrarāja; and (4) Kṛishṇarāja (Kṛishṇa I, 756-75 A.D.), the younger brother of Dantidurga's father. Verse 11 similarly speaks of the following successive rulers of the Rāshtrakūṭa dynasty: (1) Gōvindarāja (Gōvinda II, 775-80 A.D.), son of Kṛishṇarāja; (2) Dhruvarāja (780-94 A.D.), younger brother of Gōvindarāja; (3) Jagattuṅga (Gōvinda III, 794-814 A.D.), son of Dhruvarāja; and (4) Amōghavarsha (i.e. Amōghavarsha I, 814-80 A.D.), son of Jagattuṅga. Verse 12 not only mentions Kṛishṇarāja (Kṛishṇa II, 878-915 A.D.), son and successor of Amōghavarsha, but also refers to his own successor who was the son of his son named Jagattuṅga.

The name of the grandson and successor of Kṛishṇa II is given in verse 13 as Indrarāja (Indra III, 915-28 A.D.) while the next stanza (verse 14) describes him as grihīta-Dāhāla-nāyaka-kapāla and uttara-dig-baddha-ruchi. In the first of these two epithets, Dāhāla is no doubt the name of the territory under the rule of the Kalachuris of Tripurī near Jabalpur in Madhya Pradesh, and nāyaka possibly means a lieutenant of the contemporary Kalachuri king. The claim therefore may refer to the slaughter of a Kalachuri general. We know that Lakshmi, mother of Rāshtrakūṭa Indra III, was the daughter of Kalachuri Saṅkaragaṇa Raṇavīraha, son of Kōkalla I.²

¹ That the Rāshtrakūṭas did not originally claim the Yādava lineage seems to be suggested by the description of Gōvinda III in his records. It is stated that the Rāshtrakūṭa family became unconquerable to its foes owing to the birth of Gōvinda III just as the Yādava race had been after the birth of Madhu-ripu, i.e. Kṛishṇa-Vishṇu (cf. Ind. Ant., Vol. VI, p. 66, verse 11) thereby making a distinction between the two dynasties. The Sanjan plates (above, Vol. XVIII, p. 243, verse 3) of Amōghavarsha I, dated 871 A.D., refer to the birth of Rāshtrakūṭa Gōvinda I in the Yadu dynasty thus suggesting the identification of the two families. The Huvina-Hippargi inscription (862 A.D.) of the same Rāshtrakūṭa king mentions Kṛishṇa I as Yādav-ānāt-śābhava, probably meaning an incarnation of Kṛishṇa, the Yādava par excellence. Cf. Bombay-Karnatak Inscriptions, Vol. I, part i, p. 5, No. 9, text line 1.

and that his own queen Vijāmbā was a great-granddaughter of the same Kōkkalla I.¹ As yet there was no clear evidence of a struggle between Indra III and the Kalachuris. The other epithet pointing to his success in the north seems to refer to his conquest of Mahōdaya (Kanauj in the Farrukhabad District, U. P.) which was the capital of the Gurjara-Pratihāras. According to a record² of Gōvinda IV, son of Indra III, his father's cavalry crossed the Yamunā at Kālapriya (modern Kalpi in the Jalaun District, U. P.) and destroyed the city of Mahōdaya. It is difficult to determine whether nāśita-kām-ātmā, 'destroyer of the licentious', alludes to any particular event in the king's career.

Verses 16-20 introduce a subordinate of the Rāshtrakūṭa king. It is said that, when Indra III (915-28 A.D.) was reigning, there was a ruler named Madhumatī who belonged to the Tājika (i.e. Arab) community, and that he had received the entire maṇḍala or territorial division of Samyāna from Kṛishṇarāja (Kṛishṇa II, 878-915 A.D.). Madhumatī is no doubt the Sanskritised form of the Arabic name Muḥammad.³ This Arab chief was thus appointed the governor of Samyāna by Kṛishṇa II and was continuing in his post during the rule of Indra III. It is stated that Madhumatī conquered the chiefs of all the harbours (vēlākula) of the neighbourhood, apparently on behalf of his master, and placed his own officials in them (verse 18). Verse 19 says that Madhumatī's other name was Sugatipa and that he was the son of Sahiyārahāra or Hiyārahāra or Yārahāra. Unfortunately it is difficult to determine the Arabic forms of these two names under their Indian garb. Verse 20 says how this Arab governor of Samyāna established free ferry on two streams [near Samyāna, apparently on the Sanjan river] and also a feeding house [at Samyāna] where Śālī rice, curries and ghee were catered free of cost. Verse 21 states that Madhumatī Sugatipa's minister was Puvvaiya.

Verse 22 states that there was a Brāhmaṇa named Nārāyaṇa-bhaṭṭa who was the son of Vāsudēva and belonged to the Bhāradvāja gōtra. This Nārāyaṇa-bhaṭṭa had a son named Annaiya (later also called Annammaiya) who was a friend of Madhumatī-Sugatipa's minister Puvvaiya and an obedient servant of Nityavarsha (i.e. Indra III). Annaiya or Annammaiya constructed a mathikā, i.e. a monastery or temple, at Samyāna. The next stanza (verse 23) says that he also created an endowment consisting of landed property with the permission of Nityavarsha (Indra III). The nature of his endowment is made clear in the following part of the record in prose.

The prose portion in lines 27 ff. states that, at the request of Annammaiya (the same as Annaiya of verse 22) who belonged to the Bhāradvāja gōtra and Maitrāyaṇī śākhā and was the son of Nārāyaṇa-bhaṭṭa and grandson of Vāsudēva, Sugatipa alias Madhumatī made a grant of the village of Kāpāḍuka situated in the Kōlimahāra vishaya within Samyāna-maṇḍala (cf. śa in line 32) together with half a Dhura of land in the village of Dēvīhara (cf. line 39), with the permission of Paramabhaṭṭāraka Mahārājādhirāja Paramēśvara Indrarājadēva (Indra III). The Dhur is regarded as $\frac{1}{16}$ of a Biswa which is $\frac{1}{16}$ of a Bighā. But the word used in our record possibly indicates a bigger area of land. The purpose of the creation of the endowment was that the income accruing to it would be utilised for the repairs of the mathikā constructed by Annaiya or Annammaiya and also for the offering of naivedya to the goddess Dāsami (apparently a form of the Mother-goddess Durgā or Pārvati often called merely the

³ The same Arabic name is Sanskritized as Madhumada in the Panjim plates of Kadamba Jayakṣṇin I (circa 1050-80 A.D.) of Goa. Madhumada is stated to have belonged to the Tājika (i.e. Tājika or Arab) vaṇśa and to have been the son of Āliyaṇa and the father of Chhaḍama who was a capable and popular administrator under the Kadamba king. See C.P. No. 3 of 1951-52; cf. QJBISM (Marāṭhī), Vol. XXXI, No. 4, pp. 27 ff.; Moraes, The Kadamba Kula, p. 396 (cf. pp. 172, 185-86).

Dēvi or *Bhagavatī*¹ and the feeding of nine persons belonging to the Pañcha-Gaudīya-mahā-parshad of Saṁyāna. The goddess Dāsamī was no doubt worshipped in the mathikā constructed by Annaiya or Annammaiya. The Pañcha-Gaudīya-mahā-parshad seems to be the community of Gaudīya or North Indian Brāhmaṇas settled at Saṁyāna. The five classes of these Brāhmaṇas are called : (1) Sārasvata, (2) Kānyakubja, (3) Gauḍa, (4) Maithila, and (5) Utkala.²

Although it was Annaiya or Annammaiya who created the endowment according to verse 23, the prose part of the record refers to it as one created by the governor of Saṁyāna. This is because the creation of a rent-free holding was the prerogative of the government. The creation of the endowment was declared by the governor at an assemblage of the Haṁyamana-pauras, Dhruvas and Vishayik-ādihikārikas of Saṁyāna. Of these, the third expression indicates the officers of the various administrative offices of the district round Saṁyāna. The Dhruvas were superintendents of the collection of the royal share of the produce of the fields from the farmers.³ The expression haṁyamana-paura (or, haṁjamana-nagara-paura) is met with in some records of the Northern Konkan region and it has often been understood in the sense of 'the citizens of Haṁyamana', i.e. Saṁyāna.⁴ Unfortunately Haṁyamana cannot be regarded as another form of the name of Saṁyāna since the latter name itself occurs in the compound immediately before haṁyamana. J. J. Modi seems to be right in tracing the origin of the word to Avestic hanjuman and Persian anjuman and in taking it to indicate the settlement of the Parsees.⁵ He also thinks that this Parsee colony stood at Sanjan which was therefore called Haṁjamana or Haṁyamana. No doubt our inscription may refer to the Parsee community of Saṁyāna; but it does not support the suggestion that Haṁyamana was another name (or another form of the name) of Saṁyāna. In the records⁶ quoted by Modi, the reference may be to the Parsee colony in different cities of the Northern Konkan and not to a particular city of theirs, since the said charters appear to have had little to do particularly with the town of Sanjan.

The boundaries of the village of Kāṇḍuka are quoted in lines 33-35 as : in the east—a hill and a stream in its western side; in the south—the stream flowing from the said hill, a locality called Sēmbaka and the southern part of Bhammaharōṅgarikā to the west of Sēmbaka; in the west—certain trees at the eastern fringe of Kallagrāma, a locality called Chinānu and the stream to the south of Hīṅguvāra; in the north—the localities called Hīṅguvāra and Chavaśū and the stream running by the south of Vāghavāsa and flowing from its eastern part. The village was granted with the rights called udraṅga (i.e. major tax), parikara (i.e. aparikara, minor tax or cess), bhōga-bhūga (i.e. periodical offering of fruits, etc., and the royal share of the produce of the fields), daṇḍa-das-āparādha (i.e. fines for the ten major crimes), dhānya-hiraṇy-ādēya (i.e. taxes in grains and cash), utpadyamāna-vishṭi-pratyāya (i.e. tax payable in lieu of free labour), abhyantara-siddhi (i.e. enjoyment of things found underground) and a-chāṭa-bhaṭa-pravēśa (i.e. inadmissibility of royal agents). But the rights did not include the following three : nūdhāna (i.e. treasure trove), alipaka (also called aliyaka, possibly meaning 'indestructible objects' or 'metal ores') and kumāri-sāhasa-dōsha (i.e. fines for the violation of the modesty of unmarried girls). The gift lands were made a permanent endowment.

Some of the usual imprecatory and benedictory stanzas (verses 24-34) are quoted in lines 40-58, with a similar passage in prose in lines 45-50. The date when the charter was written is given in words and figures in lines 58-60. It is stated in lines 60-63 that the document was written by Sugata, son of Ajita who had been the Sāndhivigrahika (minister for war and peace) of Dhruvarāja, with the cognisance of Vathaiya, a Dhruva of Saṁyāna, and under orders from Sugatipa who received instructions in this matter from Paramēśvara Paramabhāṭṭiraka Mahārājādhirāja Nityavarshadēva (Indra III) meditating on the feet of his predecessor Akalavarshadēva (Kṛishṇa II). As in many other records of the kind, the document is stated to be authoritative even if here and there a letter was omitted from it or unnecessarily put in it. Verse 35 prays for the continuous rule of the chief Sugatipa, represented as the donor of the village of Kāṇāduka together with half a Dhruva of land at Dēvihara, and for the rehabilitation of Annaiya (Annammaiya), Rēvaṇa and Kautuka, apparently after their death, in the mountainous abode of the gods (i.e. on the Sumēru), through the grace of the Dēvī. This Dēvī is no other than Bhagavati Daśamī who is mentioned in line 30 and whose image was installed in the maṭhikā constructed by Annaiya or Annammmaiya at Saṁyāna. The mention of Rēvaṇa and Kautuka along with Annaiya (Annammaiya) in this stanza suggests that they were also responsible for the construction of the temple and the installation of the Dēvī in it. Indeed the other inscription from the same place, edited below, seems to refer to the said maṭhikā as built by Kautuka alone. This may have been due to the fact that Annaiya and Rēvaṇa were the younger brothers of Kautuka. The last stanza (verse 36) of the inscription contains the prayer that the charter might last for ever through the grace of the Dēvī. There is a benedictory passage of the usual type at the end of the record in line 67.

The inscription raises several interesting points, the most important among them being its date. It shows beyond doubt that the Rāshtrakūṭa king Indra III surnamed Nityavarsha ruled at least down to April 926 A.D. The Nausari plates¹ of Indra III record a grant made on the occasion of his paṭṭa-bandh-ōtsava, or festival of coronation, on the 24th February 915 A.D. The Dandapur inscription² of the 23rd December 918 A.D., referring to the reign of Prabhūtavarsha (Gōvinda IV, son of Indra III), led scholars to believe that Indra III died before that date, even though the Cambay plates³ of Gōvinda IV were issued on the occasion of his own coronation (paṭṭa-bandha) on the 10th May, 930 A.D. In The Rāshtrakūṭas and their Times, published in 1934, Prof. A. S. Altekar suggested that Indra died in 917 A.D.,⁴ although Sewell's The Historical Inscriptions of Southern India, published two years earlier, refers to Nos. 271-72 of 1918, dated 922 A.D., as belonging to the reign of Nityavarsha Indra III.⁵ But, some years later, R. S. Panchamukhi and A. S. Ramanatha Ayyar referred to certain inscriptions of Indra III, the latest of which (from Kamalāpuram in the Cuddapah District) is dated the 23rd of December 925 A.D.⁶ They also suggested that the Haleritti inscription of Nityavarsha Nirupama-Vallabha, dated December 927 A.D., also belongs to the same Rāshtrakūṭa monarch. But none of the stone inscriptions quoted by Panchamukhi and Ayyar gives the genealogy of the king. Some of these inscriptions mention the king under his biruda Nityavarsha and it was sometimes believed that Gōvinda IV was also called Nityavarsha like his father.⁷ Thus the inscription under study, which not only quotes a verifiable date but also a complete genealogy of the Imperial Rāshtrakūṭas from Gōvinda I to Nityavarsha Indra III, throws further light on the point of controversy and clearly supports the views of Panchamukhi and Ayyar. But the recent suggestion of Prof. K. A. Nilakanta Sastri, based on an inadequate appreciation of the evidence discussed by the said scholars, that Indra III ended his rule in the year 927 A.D.¹ is apparently wrong. The Bhādāna grant² of Śilāhāra Aparājita clearly states that Amōghavarsha II, elder brother of Gōvinda IV, ruled for one year, while, as already shown above, the coronation of Gōvinda IV took place on the 10th May 930 A.D. and he must have ascended the throne shortly before that date. Besides the Dandapur inscription, probably issued during his governorship over the region in question under his father, the earliest inscriptions of the reign of Gōvinda IV are the Gaonri plates and the Kalas inscription dated respectively the 17th and 30th January of 930 A.D.³ He, therefore, does not appear to have ascended the throne much earlier than the beginning of the year 930 A.D. Thus the one year's reign of Amōghavarsha II may be regarded as roughly corresponding to the year 929 A.D. Indra III, therefore, seems to have ruled till the end of 928 A.D.

The governorship of a Tājika or Arab over Saṁyāna under the Rāshtrakūṭa kings Kṛishṇa II and Indra III, known for the first time from the inscription under study, supports the statements of certain early Arab writers. The Balharās (Ballaharāyas or Vallabha-rājas, i.e. the Rāshtrakūṭa monarchs) of Mānkīr (i.e. Mānyakhēṭa or Mālkheḍ) find mention in the writings of Sulaimān (851 A.D.), Abū Zaid (before 916 A.D.), Ibn Khurdāduba (before 912 A.D.), Al Ma'sūdī (932-33 A.D.), Al Istakhri (about 951 A.D.) and Ibn Haukal (between 943 and 968 A.D.).⁴ These authors give the general impression that the Balharās and their subjects were extremely partial to the Arab Musalmans and, according to Ibn Haukal and Al Istakhri, Musalman governors of cities were employed by the Balharās. It is also stated by them that none but Muslims ruled over their co-religionists living in that empire, apparently meaning thereby that the Rāshtrakūṭas appointed Qāzīs to look after the religious and judicial affairs of their Muslim subjects who were mostly of Arab nationality. Since, however, Muslim administrators did not so long figure in the epigraphical records of the Rāshtrakūṭas, Prof. A. S. Altekar considered the statements of the Arab writers as unreliable.⁵ But the present inscription proves the veracity of the statements of Ibn Haukal and Al Istakhri. Since Madhumati Sugatipa was appointed governor of Saṁyāna sometime before the end of the rule of Kṛishṇa II in 915 A.D., he was continuing to hold the important post for more than a decade. He must have been a successful administrator capable to preserve friendly relations with the peoples of communities and creeds other than his own. The way he associated himself with the construction of a Hindu monastery or temple, the installation of an image therein and the creation of a permanent endowment in its favour throws welcome light on the outlook of the Arab Musalmans of those days. This is in striking contrast with the policy of most of the later Muslim rulers of India.

The Arab governor's rule over the district around Saṁyāna during the reigns of the Rāshtrakūṭa kings Kṛishṇa II (878-915 A.D.) and Indra III (915-28 A.D.) throws interesting light on the history of the Śilāhāras of the Northern Konkan. We know that, during the reign of Amōghavarsha I (814-80 A.D.), the Śilāhāras claimed to be rulers of the whole of the Konkan as feudatories of the Rāshtrakūṭa monarch and that they again became powerful in the area after the decline of Rāshtrakūṭa power about 973 A.D.¹ It now appears from the present inscription that, with the appointment of a governor over Saṁyāna-maṇḍala, comprising wide areas of the Northern Konkan, during the reign of Kṛishṇa II, the Śilāhāras became rulers of only parts of the territory over which they had been ruling as feudatories of Amōghavarsha I.

Among the geographical names mentioned in the inscription, the reference to Pañcha-Gauḍa is very interesting. The name Gauḍa has been used here to indicate North India mentioned elsewhere in the record as Āryadēśa, i.e. Āryāvarta. The name is known to be used variously as that of a city in Eastern India, of the country around the said city, of the countries of Eastern India collectively and of the whole of Āryāvarta or Northern India.² It is well known that the name Saṁyāna, applied to both a city and a maṇḍala or territorial division, is preserved in that of modern Sanjan in the Thana District of Bombay. Whether the district called Kōlimahāra-vishaya owed its name to the Koli tribe of the Northern Konkan³ or of the port of Kolai about 15 miles to the north of Sanjan⁴ cannot be determined. I am also not sure about the location of the villages called Kāṇāḍuka and Dēvthara. The names of certain localities are mentioned in the inscription in the enumeration of the boundaries of Kāṇāḍuka, one of them being Kallagrāma.

2. Grant of the time of Kṛishṇa III

This is a single plate measuring about 17·5" in length, 8·8" in breadth and ·1" in thickness. It weighs about 130 tolas. There is no seal fixed with the plate which is engraved only on one side. There are 50 lines of writing. The engraving is as neatly done as in the other epigraph from the same place, edited above. The preservation of the writing is satisfactory.

The characters belong to the North Indian alphabet of the tenth century A.D. and closely resemble those of the inscription of the time of Indra III, edited above. The initial vowels a (lines 21, 22, 27 and 39), ā (lines 18, 40, 43 and 48) and i (lines 17 and 20) occur in the inscription. Final t, n and m are found respectively in lines 50, 10 and 22, while the avagraha occurs in lines 37 and 38. The numerical figures 4 and 0 have been used in line 39. The sign for v has been employed in indicating b.

The language is Sanskrit and the document is written in prose and verse. In point of orthography also the record resembles the record edited above. In a few cases, the rules of Sandhi have been ignored even in verses (lines 10, 26). Although final m has been used (line 22), it has often been changed wrongly to anusvāra. Certain consonants have been reduplicated in conjunction with r.

The inscription bears no date. Since, however, it refers itself to the reign of the Rāshtrakūṭa king Kṛishṇa III (939-67 A.D.), it may be assigned roughly to the middle of the tenth century A.D.

The inscription begins with the Praṇava which is followed in lines 1-35 by 19 verses. Verse 1 is in adoration of the Mother-goddess. The next stanza (verse 2) introduces the Yadu or Yādava dynasty, to which the Rāshtrakūṭa kings are stated to have belonged. Verse 3 speaks of the following rulers of the family : (1) Dantidurga (742-56 A.D.) ; (2) his successor Kṛishṇarāja (Kṛishṇa I, 756-75 A.D.) ; (3) Gōvindarāja (Gōvinda II, 775-80 A.D.), successor of Kṛishṇarāja ; (4) Nirupama (Dhruva, 780-94 A.D.) ; (5) Jagattuṅga (Gōvinda III, 794-814 A.D.) ; (6) Amōghavarsha (i.e. Amōghavarsha I, 814-80 A.D.), and (7) Amōghavarsha's son Akālavarsha (Kṛishṇa II, 878-915 A.D.). The next stanza (verse 4) refers to Indrarāja (Indra III, 915-28 A.D.), while verse 5 speaks of Amōghavarsha (i.e. Amōghavarsha II, 928-29 A.D.) who succeeded Indrarāja. Verse 6 mentions Gōvindarāja (Gōvinda IV, 929-34 A.D.) surnamed Suvarṇavarsha and verse 7 Amōghavarsha (i.e. Amōghavarsha III, 934-39 A.D.). The following four stanzas (verses 8-11) describe the reigning king Kṛishṇarāja (Kṛishṇa III, 939-67 A.D.), son of Amōghavarsha. It will be seen that all the rulers of the Imperial Rāshtrakūṭa dynasty from Dantidurga to Kṛishṇa III are mentioned in correct order, although the relationship between the successor and his predecessor has not been indicated in all the cases. It is interesting to note that the reign of Amoghavarsha II has been recognised in the record.¹

About the reigning monarch Kṛishṇa III, verse 10 says that he conquered certain enemies even when he was a crown-prince, while verse 11 enumerates the following as bowing down to his feet : the Pāṇḍyas, Ōdras, Sīṃhalas, Chōlas and Pārasīkas, the Andhra king, the Draviḍas, Varvaras and Tajjikas, and the Vanikīnas, Hūnas, Khasas, Gūrjaras and Mālavīyas. The success of Kṛishṇa III against the Pāṇḍyas, Sīṃhalas, Chōlas and Gūrjaras (i.e. the Gurjara-Pratihāras of Kanauj²) is referred to in some of his records.³ The name Draviḍa seems to have been applied to the Palavas. A Paliava king named Anṇiga is known to have been subdued by him.⁴ The Mālavīyas were probably the Paramāras who owed allegiance to him.⁵ The Tajjikas (i.e. Tājikas) were the Arabs, some of whom, as we have seen above, were serving under the Rāshtrakūṭa kings, while the Pārasīkas or Persians appear to be the Parsees who had settled at places like Sanjan in the western coast land forming a part of the Rāshtrakūṭa empire.⁶ The king's relations with the remaining peoples mentioned in the verse are not known from any other source.

Verses 12-14 speak of the god Bhillamāladēva, also called Madhusūdana (i.e. Viṣṇu), worshipped at the unspecified place whence the charter was issued. The deity is stated to have been installed by the descendants of the merchants of Bhillamāla which is the modern Bhinmāl in the Jodhpur region of Rajasthan. Verses 15-19 state that, at the same place, there was another mathikā, i.e. monastery or temple, which had been constructed by Kautuka and at the gate of which the goddess called Bhagavatī had been installed for worship. It is clear that the god Bhillamāladēva alias Madhusūdana was installed in the temple standing near another made by Kautuka for the Mother-goddess. There is little doubt that Kautuka's mathikā enshrining Bhagavatī was the religious institution built by Annaiya (Annamaiya), Kautuka and Rēvaṇa at Saṃyāna and that the goddess is no other than Bhagavatī Daśamī installed in it, both mentioned in the grant of the time of Indra III, edited above. Verse 19 of the record under study refers to the Anagha-parshad (called Mahā-parshad in line 35) in connection with the goddess and this is apparently the Ārya-dēśīyā Mahā-parshad or Pañcha-Gauḍīyā-mahā-parshad of Saṃyāna mentioned in the other epigraph.

The following section in prose in lines 35 ff. records a vyavasthā which means 'a legal decision in a dispute' in the present context. It is very interesting to note that, in this case, the decision emanates from a deity and his attendants and not from any judicial or administrative authority. In this respect, the inscription under study offers a peculiar instance.

It is stated that a vyavasthā based on an order was offered to the mathikā (i.e. the monastery or temple of the goddess) and the svādhyāyikas or scholars belonging to the Mahā-parshad attached to it by the god Bhillamāladēva and his vārikas. The word vārika is known to have been used in the sense of 'an official' and, in the present context, it no doubt means a priest or Paṇḍā of the temple of Bhillamāladēva at Saṃyāna.⁷ Apparently the decision of the temple authorities was passed as the order of the god ; but whether any device was adopted to convince the people that it was really the will of the god is uncertain. The terms of the vyavasthā, which follow, were that the mathikā of the goddess should pay forty drammas to the god Bhillamāladēva and his vārikas as śrōtaka for a small piece of land that belonged to the god but had been enclosed within the northern compound wall of the maṭhikā. The word śrōtaka is not found in Sanskrit lexicons but was apparently a kind of rent, since the periodical nature of its payment is indicated by the stipulation that the amount was to be paid on each occasion of dīp-ōtsava-bhaṅga, i.e. the end of the festival of lights, obviously in the maṭhikā of the goddess.¹ The Dīp-ōtsava seems to be no other than the dīpāvalī, a festival with illuminations held on the new moon of Āśvina or Kārttika in honour of the goddess Pārvatī. The dramma was a coin of copper or silver.² The inscription seems to specify the payment in coins minted by a trader named śrēṣṭhīn Gaṁibhuvaka. It appears that this tradesman of Saṁyāna enjoyed a license for minting coins on behalf of the ruling authority.³

It is further stated that, now that the vyavasthā was offered (cf. adhunā), if any devotee of the god (i.e. Bhīllamāladēva), whether he is a Brāhmaṇa or a merchant, commits suicide or creates any other trouble with a view to increasing the amount of the śrōtaka or to the removal of the wall of the maṭhikā enclosing the piece of land belonging to Bhīllamāladēva, he should be looked upon as a dog or a donkey or a Chāṇḍāla even if he is dead. If a merchant was involved in such a case, his whole property should have to be confiscated by the government. On the other hand, in case the śrōtaka was not duly paid to the vārikas of the god Bhīllamāladēva, if any one out of the persons belonging to the Mahā-parśad attached to the maṭhikā, who kept the door of the maṭhikā open to the public, or of outsiders who conducted worship of the goddess, committed suicide, he would also share a similar fate even if he was dead. It is stated that this vyavasthā, based on the sthiti or decree, was a permanent one and had to be observed by both the parties of the dispute, viz. the devotees of the god Bhīllamāladēva and those of the goddess worshipped in the maṭhikā. To the above is added the statement that anybody who would appropriate the piece of land in his attempt to avoid the payment of the śrōtaka should be endowed with all the greater and minor sins.

It is clear from the words of the inscription that a small piece of land belonging to the temple of the god Bhīllamāladēva, which seems to have been situated in the vicinity of the maṭhikā of the goddess, was lying within the compound wall of the latter and was in wrongful possession of the devotees of the goddess. It is also clear that, while the devotees of the god were trying to recover the land by all means including the offer of hunger-strike, the other party attached to the goddess was trying to obstruct the release of the plot equally obstinately in the same way. The decision to ease this state of tension by fixing an amount of annual rent for the piece of land, payable by the party in the possession of it, was therefore a good one. The respectful mention of the goddess in the present record exhibits a spirit of compromise which is commendable.

The above section of the record is followed in lines 46-47 by a sentence meaning to say that the giver of the decision, viz. the god Bhīllamāladēva along with his vārikas, expressed his desire in the words of the document as written by the scribe. The following sentence saying that the god favoured the document with his assent is a well known formula with which the royal donors put their signature to a charter originally written on a perishable material and later incised on copper plates. This section is in the style of the charters issued by the contemporary rulers of the area in question.⁴

The charter ends with a stanza (verse 20) followed by a short benedictory passage. The verse mentions the person who was responsible for writing the document with the consent of both the parties, viz. the devotees of the god and those of the goddess. This writer was a Kāyastha named Śambhudēva who was the son of Ambaipa (Ambaiya ?) and grandson of Jōggapaiya.

The place where the temples of the god and the goddess were situated is not mentioned in the record. But, as we have seen, they must have stood at Saṁyāna within the dominions of the Rāshtrakūṭa king Kṛishṇa III. As indicated above, Saṁyāna is modern Sanjan in the Thana District of Bombay. Among the geographical names mentioned in the inscription, Bhilla-māla, as already pointed out, is modern Bhinmāl about 100 miles to the south-west of Jodhpur in Rajasthan. It is interesting to note that there was a well-organised settlement of merchants of Bhinmāl origin at Sanjan and that they had installed a Vaishnavite deity of their own and named it after their home town. A large number of peoples of various countries are mentioned in the description of Kṛishṇa III. Most of these tracts are wellknown. The Pāṇḍyas lived in the Madurai-Ramanathapuram-Tirunelveli region, the Ōḍras in modern Orissa and the Sinhālas in Ceylon. The original territory of the Chōlas was in the Tanjavur-Tiruchirappalli area and of the Pārasikas in Persia. The name Andhra was apparently used to indicate the kingdom of the contemporary Eastern Chālukya king of Vēṅgi, while the name Draviḍa was probably applied to Ṭop-daimaṇḍalam, the territory of the Pallavas in older times. It is difficult to locate the Varvaras known from early Indian literature as a people of the north-west of India.¹ The Tajjikās or Tājikas were the people of Arabia and Vaṅkīpa may be the same as Vōkkāṇa mentioned in Varāhamihira's Bṛhat-saṁhitā (XIV, 20) and identified with modern Wakhan in Central Asia.² The Hūṇas³ appear to have lived in the Punjab and the Khasas⁴ in Kashmir and Nepal. The Pratihāras of the Gurjara stock ruled over wide areas of North India; but, even as late as the first half of the eleventh century, Al Bīrūnī speaks of the Jodhpur-Alwar-Bharatpur region of Rajasthan as Gujarāt, i.e. Gurjaratrā or the home of the Gurjaras.⁵ Mālava, the land of the Mālavīyas, seems to have included in this age the territory around Ujjayinī.

No. 5—THREE GRANTS FROM CHINCHANI

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

Two of the five copper-plate grants discovered at Chinchani in the Dahanu Taluk of the Thana District, Bombay, have been edited in the foregoing article. One of them pertains to the reign of king Indra III (915-28 A.D.) and the other to that of Kṛishṇa III (939-67 A.D.), both the rulers belonging to the Imperial Rāshtrakūṭa dynasty of Mānyakhēṭa (Māḷkhēḍ). Of the three other copper-plate charters discovered at the same place, two were issued by a Mōḍha chief of Saṁyāna (Sanjan in the Thana District). The name of the family to which the issuer of the remaining charter from Chinchani belonged is not mentioned in the record; but he was also a ruler of Saṁyāna and seems to have been a Mōḍha. The family name, viz. Mōḍha, associates these chiefs of Saṁyāna with the Brāhmaṇa and Bāniyā communities of the same name now residing in various parts of the Northern Konkan and its neighbourhood.¹ No ruler of this dynasty was known so far from any other source.² The three charters are dated respectively in Śaka 956 (1034 A.D.), Śaka 969 (1048 A.D.) and Śaka 975 (1053 A.D.). Before the inscriptions are taken up for discussion, a few words may be said about the circumstances leading to the rise of the Mōḍhas at Saṁyāna.

We have seen above³ how an Arab governor was ruling over the territorial division of Saṁyāna on behalf of the Rāshtrakūṭa kings Kṛishṇa II (878-915 A.D.) and Indra III (915-27 A.D.). It is well known that the Śilāhāras claimed to be the rulers of the Northern Konkan with their capital at Purī since the days of Amoghavarsha I (814-80 A.D.).⁴ The founder of the Śilāhāra house was Kapardin I whose son Pullaśakti (843-44 A.D.)⁵ and grandson Kapardin II (851-78 A.D.)⁶ are known to have enjoyed the title 'lord of the Konkan' or 'lord of the entire Konkan' as feudatories of the said Rāshtrakūṭa monarch. The Śilāhāra inscriptions give the names of the following rulers of the family after Kapardin II: (1) his son Vappuvanna, (2-3) Vappuvanna's sons Jhañjha and Gōggi, and (4) Gōggi's son Vajjaḍa I. Little is known about these rulers, although Al Mas'udi speaks about 916 A.D. of Jhañjha as governor of the Lār (Lāṭa) country and

For the same sub-caste of the Brāhmaṇas in Kutch, Kathiawar, Poona, Rewa Kantha and Thana, see respectively Vol. V, p. 45; Vol. VIII, p. 146; Vol. XVIII, part i, p. 163; Vol. VI, pp. 23-24; and Vol. XIII, p. 80. For the Mōḍha Bāniās in Gujarat, Kutch, Kathiawar and Thana, see respectively Vol. IX, part i, p. 72; Vol. V, p. 50; Vol. VIII, p. 148; and Vol. XIII, p. 112.

² For a Mōḍha named Kumyara who was the son of Vajjala and a Mahākṣhapatalika of Chaulukya Bhīma II, see an inscription of V. S. 1256 in Ind. Ant., Vol. XI, p. 72, text lines 41-42. See also Sankalia, Archaeology of Gujarat, p. 208 and note 1.

⁴ Bomb. Gaz., Vol. I, part ii, pp. 538 ff. The identification of the city of Purī is not definitely settled. Different scholars have identified it variously with Thāpa (chief town of the Thana District), Ghāṭapūrī (Elephanta), Rājapūrī in Kolaba and Rājapūr in Ratnagiri. See ibid., pp. 263-84. Some of the Śilāhāra records were issued from Sthānaka or Thāpa. It is sometimes also believed that Thāpa was the capital of the Śilāhāras while Purī was their secondary capital (Ind. Cult., Vol. II, p. 402).

of Samur or Chaul as lying within his territory¹ and Aparājita, son of Vajjaḍa I, is known to have ruled in 993-97 A.D.² The recently published grant³ of Chhadvai, who was a younger brother of Vajjaḍa I and a feudatory of Rāshtrakūṭa Kṛishṇa III (939-67 A.D.), seems to have been issued about the close of the Rāshtrakūṭa king's reign. Chhadvai is not mentioned in the later records of the family and may have really been a usurper of the throne which rightfully belonged to his brother's son Aparājita.⁴ In spite of the fact that Aparājita ruled after the end of Rāshtrakūṭa supremacy, he also clearly speaks of the subservience of his ancestors to the Rāshtrakūṭa monarchs. It seems, however, that, during the reigns of Kṛishṇa II and Indra III and probably for sometime more, the territorial division called Saṁyāna-maṇḍala, comprising wide areas of the Northern Konkan, was under governors who were directly responsible to the Rāshtrakūṭa monarchs and had little to do with the Śilāhāras. This fact appears to explain the temporary decline of Śilāhāra power in the Northern Konkan after the reign of Kapardin II as indicated by the paucity of Śilāhāra records of the period in question and also by the Chinchani inscription of the time of Indra III and Madhumati Sugatipa who governed Saṁyāna-maṇḍala on behalf of Rāshtrakūṭa Kṛishṇa II and Indra III. In this period, the Śilāhāras appear to have been ruling only over parts of the territory held by Kapardin II. The Chinchani plate of the reign of Kṛishṇa III (939-67 A.D.) does not mention the local rule of any Śilāhāra feudatory probably because it was issued at a time when the hold of the Śilāhāras over Saṁyāna had not yet been fully re-established.

The Śilāhāra grants mention the descendants of Aparājita in the following order: (1-2) Vajjaḍa II and Arikēsarin or Kēsīdēva (1017 A.D.),⁵ sons of Aparājita, and (3-5) Chhittarāja (1026-34 A.D.),⁶ Nāgarjuna and Mummuni or Māmvāṇi (1049-60 A.D.),⁷ sons of Vajjaḍa II. The earliest of the three grants of the chiefs of Saṁyāna edited here was issued in Śaka 956 (1034 A.D.). In this record, the chief, who appears to have belonged to the Mōḍha dynasty, although it is not so stated in the inscription, acknowledges the suzerainty of the Śilāra or Śilāhāra ruler called Chhitturāja which is no doubt a variant of the name Chhittarāja.⁸ It is stated that Saṁyāna-pattana was received by the chief from the Śilāhāra ruler. That Śilāhāra Chhittarāja was ruling at least down to 1034 A.D. is not only known from the present record but also from the Berlin Museum plates⁹ issued by himself. It is, however, interesting to note that the other two records from Chinchani, dated respectively in Śaka 969 (1048 A.D.) and Śaka 975 (1053 A.D.), in both of which the donor is described as a Mōḍha, are conspicuous in their silence about the allegiance of the ruler of Saṁyāna to the Śilāhāras. This fact may suggest that, for some time about the middle of the eleventh century, Śilāhāra hold on Saṁyāna became weak. This seems to be further indicated by the record of Śaka 975 (1053 A.D.) in which the Mōḍha chief is endowed with the typical Śilāhāra title 'lord of Tagarapura' and is stated to have been ruling over 'the new kingdom' obtained by the strength of his own arms (line 8). In the inscription of Śaka 969 (1048 A.D.), he calls himself Saraṇāgata-vajra-pañjara in imitation of the Śilāhāras. We have also to note that the Saṁyāna chiefs enjoyed the same feudatory titles as the Śilāhāra rulers and that one of them claimed to have ruled over nearly a half of the Northern Konkan. It was probably Śilāhāra Mummuni or Māmvāṇi who subdued or supplanted the Mōḍhas and re-established Śilāhāra authority over the Saṁyāna region shortly after the middle of the eleventh century. The Kharepatan plates¹ (Śaka 1016=1095 A.D.) of Anantadēva or Anantapāla, son of Nāgārjuna and successor of Mummuni or Māmvāṇi, speak of his success against a calamity facing the Śilāhāras of the Northern Konkan owing to dāyāda-vairi-vyasana,² although it is difficult to say whether the chiefs of Saṁyāna were encouraged to rule without reference to the Śilāhāras in the period of trouble referred to in that record.

¹ See Bomb. Gaz., Vol. I, part ii, p. 23; Ind. Cult., Vol. II, p. 404. The Yādava ruler Bhīlana II married the daughter of Jhaṇḍa while his son Vēsugi married the daughter of Gōgi. R. G. Bhandarkar was inclined to identify Jhaṇḍa and Gōgi with Jhaṇḍa and Gōggi of the Śilāhāra dynasty of the Northern Konkan (Bomb. Gaz., Vol. I, part ii, pp. 232-33); but Fleet did not support the identifications (ibid., pp. 425, 513, 514 note 2).

1. Grant of Chāmunḍarāja, Subordinate of Śilāhāra Chhinturāja, Śaka 956

This is a single plate measuring 10·5" in length, 7·5" in height and '1" in thickness. There are altogether 32 lines of writing, 20 on the first side and 12 on the second. A ring-hole disturbs the continuity of writing in the first two lines both on the obverse and the reverse of the plate. But no ring or seal was found with it. Since the writing was completed on both sides of a single plate, no ring bearing seal may have been attached to it. The plate weighs 77½ tolas.

The characters belong to the Northern Class of alphabets and closely resemble those of the Śilāhāra inscriptions of the tenth and eleventh centuries A.D.³ The draft of the record as well as its engraving exhibits an amount of carelessness. The letter ś has been written in two different ways; cf. śaṁda and śrī in line 2. Although medial ē is generally of the prishtha-mātrā type, its śrīṁ-mātrā form is also used in a few cases (cf. *maṇḍalē*⁴ in line 6). The language is Sanskrit and the record is written in prose and verse. In point of orthography and style also the inscription resembles the contemporary Śilāhāra records and little calls for special mention. The date of the charter is quoted in lines 15-16 as Śaka 956 expired, Bhāva, Bhādrapada-badi 15, both in words and figures. The date seems to correspond to the 15th September 1034 A.D. It may be recalled in this connection that the Berlin Museum plates of Śilāhāra Chhittarāja were issued only a few months earlier on Dvitiya-Chaitra-sudi 14 of the same year, viz. Śaka 956, Bhāva.⁴

The inscription begins with the symbol for Siddham followed by the maṅgala: 'May there be victory and prosperity.' Next follows a stanza in adoration of the god Gaṇanāyaka (Gaṇēśa). We know that many of the Śilāhāra grants begin with the same passage and the same stanza.⁵ Lines 2-4 introduce the reign (kalyāṇa-vijaya-rājya) of Mahāmaṇḍalīśvara Chhinturāja described as 'the supreme lord of Tagarapura', 'the illustrious Silāra (Śilāhāra) king' and 'one horn in the family of Jīmūtavāhana'. As in many other records of the Śilāhāra dynasty, Chhinturāja is credited with the banner bearing the golden Garuḍa and endowed with the titles Abhimāna-mahōdadhi and Śaraṇāgata-vajra-paṇjara. As already pointed out above, Chhinturāja of our inscription is no other than the well-known king Chhittarāja of the Northern Konkan branch of the Śilāhāra family.

Lines 4-6 speak of the Mahāmātya Nāgapaiya and the Mahāsāndhivigrahika Nāupyaiya, both of whom served under the Śilāhāra king and are already known to us,¹ and of Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Chāmuṇḍarāja who was governing Samyāna-pattana, i.e. the town of Samyāna, granted to him by Chhinturāja. Besides the usual feudatory titles Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara, Samadhi-gat-āśēsha-paṇcha-mahāśabda and Mahāsāmaniādhipati, Chāmuṇḍarāja is endowed in lines 7-9 with the titles Niṣa-bhuja-vikram-āditya, Sāhasa-chakravartin, Lāṭa-prākāra-rāja-dhvaṁsaka, Tribhuvana-nīla and others. Among these, Lāṭa-prākāra-rāja-dhvaṁsaka seems to refer to Chāmuṇḍarāja's success against some ruler or rulers of Lāṭa identified by scholars with the present Nausari-Broach region.

Lines 10-14 state that, while ruling over Samyāna, Chāmuṇḍarāja passed an order regarding a grant, to be made by him, to his subordinates and others including the elders (mukhya) of the hamyamana (i.e. the Parsee community),² the courtiers and officials as well as the officers like Alliya, Mahara and Madhumata, the city elders named Śrēṣṭhin Kēsarin, Suvarṇṇa and Kakkala, the merchants such as Uva, Suvarṇṇa and Sōmaiya, the district officer (vishayin) Vērthalaia, the sālā-sthāna-mukhya Yājñikara, the district officials such as Kshita, Limbaiya, Vēlaiya and Kēsavaia, and the members of the Mahā-parshad such as Agasti, Gavi, Siluva, Bhāskara, Arjuna, Dinakara, Dēdē, Ārya, Sindūra, Ādityavarṇa, etc. Chāmuṇḍarāja's officials called Alliya, Mahara and Madhumata appear to have been foreigners as the names are apparently of Arabic origin. The name Madhumata (Arabic Muḥammad) is found in the form Madhumati in the Chinchani plates of the time of Indra III, which apply it to a Tājika or Arab governor of the Rāshtrakūṭa king, while a Tājika (i.e. Tājika or Arab) officer of the Kadambas of Goa is known to have borne the name Madhumata.³ Alliya appears to be the same as the well-known Arabic name 'Alī. Whether the word sālā in sālā-sthāna-mukhya means 'a stable' is difficult to determine. The Mahā-parshad is no doubt the same as the Paṇcha-Gauḍiya or Ārya-dēśiya Mahā-parshad of Samyāna mentioned in both the Chinchani epigraphs of the time of Indra III and Kṛishṇa III, edited above.⁴

Lines 14-21 describe the object of the record which was the grant of a ghāṇaka or oil-mill, made by Chāmuṇḍarāja in favour of the Kautuka-maṭhikā, i.e. the temple or monastery built at Samyāna by Kautuka and others and known from the two Chinchani records of the time of the Rāshtrakūṭa monarchs, referred to above. This section begins with the stanza Chalā vibhūtiḥ, etc., found in so many Śilāhāra records,⁵ and is followed by the date already indicated above. The purpose of the grant was to burn a lamp in front of the Bhagavati known from both the Chinchani inscriptions of the time of Indra III and Kṛishṇa III to have been worshipped in Kautuka's maṭhikā at Samyāna, as well as for besmearing oil on the feet of the svādhyāyikas or scholars apparently belonging to the Mahā-parshad attached to the maṭhikā and of the Brāhmaṇa visitors to the mathikā. The svādhyāyikas of the Mahā-parshad or Kautuka-mathikā of Saṁyāna are mentioned several times in the Chinchani plate of the reign of Rāshtrakūṭa Kṛishṇa III as well as in the last of the three grants edited here. One of the svādhyāyikas, Chihada by name, received the gift which was made as a namasya-vṛtti (i.e. a permanent tax-free holding), free from all obligations. People were warned not to cause any obstacle in the enjoyment of the oil-mill by the donee. It is stated that the mill was granted together with the oil and oil-cakes (ghatika for Sanskrit khalika) produced by it probably meaning that the produces of the mill were free from taxation like the mill itself.

Lines 21-28 quote some of the usual imprecatory and benedictory stanzas together with certain prose passages of similar import, which are both generally met with in the Śilāhāra charters. The concluding part of the record in lines 29-32 states, in the style of the Śilāhāra grants, how the donor made his decree known through the language of the charter as drafted by the scribe and how the authoritative character of the grant could not be challenged on the basis of mistakes creeping into the text. The sentence beginning with mataṁ mama in this section refers in the usual way to the signature of the donor put on the original document later incised on the plates. But a peculiarity of the present inscription is that Chāmuṇḍarāja's name is mentioned here together with a string of epithets. One of these refers to the 64 black horses received by him from an unspecified source. In the passage in question, Tribhuvana-nīla Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Chāmuṇḍarāja is represented as the son of Ahava-nīla Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Vijja-rāṇaka. The charter is stated to have been written by Dhruva Mammalaiya. The official designation Dhruva is a contraction of Dhruv-ādhipikarāṇika, etc., which indicate an officer in charge of the collection of the royal share of the produce from the farmers.

The importance of the inscription lies in the fact that it introduces Chāmuṇḍarāja, ruler of Saṁyāna under Śilāhāra Chhinturāja (Chhittarāja), as also Vijja-rāṇaka, father of Chāmuṇḍarāja and probably an earlier ruler of Saṁyāna under the same Śilāhāra king. The family to which Vijja and Chāmuṇḍa belonged is not mentioned. Since, however, the name Vijja-rāṇaka or Vijjala was also borne by the Mōḍha chief of Saṁyāna who issued the other two charters to be edited below, it is not impossible that the two Vijja-rāṇakas belonged to the same family. Thus Chāmuṇḍa may have belonged to the Mōḍha dynasty. But it should be admitted that the relationship that may have existed between Chāmuṇḍa, who issued the present grant in 1034 A.D., and Vijja or Vijjala, who issued the other two grants a few years later in 1048 and 1053 A.D., cannot be determined without further light being thrown on the subject by future discoveries.

Of the geographical names mentioned in the inscription, Tagarapura, to which the Śilāhāras appear to have traced their origin, is now generally identified with Ter in the Naldrug District of the former Hyderabad State.¹ Chāmuṇḍa is stated to have been ruling over the pattana or town of Saṁyāna (elsewhere called only Saṁyāna), which had been granted to him by Śilāhāra Chhinturāja (Chhittarāja). Saṁyāna-pattana is of course the present town of Sanjan in the Thana District. But the exact extent of the land under Chāmuṇḍa's rule cannot be determined, although it may have been much smaller than the Saṁyāna-maṇḍala under Madhumati Sugatipa of the Chinchani plates of the time of Indra III and the Saṁyāna-pattana 700 mentioned in the second of the two sets of Chinchani plates of Mōḍha Vijja, to be edited below. Chāmuṇḍa is also stated to have destroyed certain ruler or rulers of the Lāṭa country in the present Nausari-Broach region. The inscription does not state where the Kautuka-mathikā was situated; but we know from the Chinchani plates of the time of Indra III that the mathikā was built by Kautuka and others at Saṁyāna itself.

2. Grant of Vijjala, Śaka 969

This is a set of two plates, each measuring 7.35" in length, 5.425" in height, and .1" in thickness. They have writing only on the inner side and are strung on a ring, the ends of which are affixed beneath a seal. The counter-sunk surface of the seal bears the figure of a standing deity looking like Vishnu or the Sun-god. The inscription consists of 30 lines of writing, 14 of which are engraved on the first plate and 16 on the second. The weight of the two plates together with the ring bearing the seal is about 140 tolas.

The characters resemble those in the grant of Chāmunda-rāja, edited above. For the two types of ś referred to in connection with the other epigraph, see śavda in line 2 and śayana in line 4. There is close similarity between the two records also in regard to language and orthography and little calls for special remark in these respects. The date of the charter is quoted in the last line (line 30) as the Śaka year 969 (written in figures only) without any other details. But the occasion of the grant is referred to as the Māgha-saṅkrānti in lines 11-12. The grant therefore seems to have been issued on the 22nd January in the year 1048 A.D.³

The record begins with the symbol for Siddham followed by the word svasti and the maṅgala : 'May there be victory and prosperity.' But there is no stanza in adoration to any deity as in the record edited above. Then in lines 1-6 Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Vijjaladēva, also styled Samadhigat-āśēsha-pañcha-mahāśabda, is represented as flourishing at Vijayapura. Vijjala is endowed with several other epithets, of which Saraṇāgata-vajra-pañjara was imitated from the Śilāhāras, although it is found in the records of some other royal families as well. He is also described as 'the sun that opened the lotus bud which is the illustrious Mōḍha family'. Another of his epithets seems to refer to his success against certain adversaries called Sādhāra, Sella and Sahasrabāhu. They appear to have been small local chiefs; but their identification is uncertain. In the description of Vijjala, there is a stanza in lines 6-7, saying that he was successful against his enemies even when he was the Yuvarāja. The same stanza is found in the Rāshtrakūṭa records in the description of Kṛishṇa III (939-67 A.D.) and must have been adopted from the said source. But whom Vijjala served as Yuvarāja cannot be determined.

² Ṣandhi has not been observed here. The word trakisa is difficult to explain.

Lines 7-19 record the grant of the siriḍḍikā (apparently a sort of tax or cess) relating to the village of Kapāḍḍa-grāma in the possession of the Kavatika-maṭhikā in favour of the house-holders Bahudhara and Kāṅkua as well as the scholars Mahādēva and Lakshmidhara, all of them apparently attached to the maṭhikā of Kavatika, on the occasion of the Māgha-saṅkrānti. There is no doubt that Kavatika is a modification of Kautuka, the name of one of the builders of the maṭhikā at Saṁyāna, which is not only known from the record of Chāmuṇḍarāja, edited above, but also from the Chinchani plates of the time of Rāshtrakūṭa Indra III and Kṛishṇa III. Lines 8-9 state that the grant was made in consultation with the ministers (mantrin) including Varishṭhaka Mummuraka and Thakkura Dōmbalaiya, the first of the two being the chief minister (sarv-ādhikāra-niyukta). It is also stated that it was made by the chief after having worshipped the lord Mayūkha-mālin, i.e. the Sun-god. This fact coupled with the possible representation of the Sun-god on the donor's seal seems to suggest that the Mōḍhas of Saṁyāna were devotees of the said deity. The well-known stanza beginning with chalā vibhūtiḥ is quoted in this section. The grant was made on a permanent basis (apparently as a permanent endowment) and people were warned not to create any obstacle in the enjoyment of the gift by the donees.

Some of the usual imprecatory and benedictory verses are quoted in lines 20-27. Another stanza in lines 27-29 prays for the continued rule of Vijjala, the donor of the grant. The date in the Śaka year is quoted in lines 29-30. The charter ends with the statement that it was written by Limbāditya.

Of the geographical names mentioned in the record, Vijayapura seems to have been the name of the capital of the chief Vijja or Vijjalā. The name, apparently coined after that of the chief, may have been applied to a suburb of Saṁyāna. I am not sure about the location of Kapāḍḍa-grāma (same as Kāṅḍuka?) in the possession of the Kavatika-maṭhikā (Kutuka-maṭhikā). As stated above, the maṭhikā is known from other records to have been situated at Saṁyāna, modern Sanjan in the Thana District.

3. Grant of Vijala (Viḷa, Viḷa or Viḷja), Śaka 975

This is also a set of two plates, each measuring 10" in length, 7-15" in breadth, and 15" in thickness. They have writing only on the inner side. A ring bearing the seal of the issuer of the charter passes through a hole made in the side of the plates. The ends of this ring are soldered beneath the seal. The figure on the countersunk surface of the seal is similar to that found on the seal attached to the second of the two inscriptions edited above. There are in all 50 lines of writing on the two plates, 24 of them on the first and 26 on the second. The two plates together with the ring and seal weigh 278½ tolas.

In respect of palaeography, language and orthography, the inscription resembles the two other epigraphs from Chinchani edited above. Initial i has been written for yi in lines 25 and 31. The draft of the document and its engraving exhibit considerable carelessness on the part of the scribe and the engraver. The date of the charter is quoted in lines 27-29 as the expired Śaka year 975 (in words only), Vijaya, Kārttika-badi 15, and the occasion of the grant is stated to have been a solar eclipse. The details of the date work out correctly and it corresponds to the 13th November 1053 A.D.

The inscription begins with the symbol for Siddham followed by the Praṇava. Next follow the passages: 'Salutation to Vināyaka (Gaṇēśa)', and 'May there be victory and prosperity'. The above is followed by the stanza in adoration of Gaṇanāyaka (Gaṇēśa), which is also found in the Chinchani plate of Chāmuṇḍa, edited above, and several Śilāhāra grants. Lines 3-4 introduce the chief Viḷa-rāṇaka who is described as born in the Mōḍha family and as having obtained the grace of the goddess Khadirāvatī, apparently the family deity of the Mōḍhas of Saṁyāna. The name of the ruler also occurs elsewhere in the inscription in lines 4, 7, 8, 48 and 49 in various forms. In lines 8 and 48 it is spelt as Viḷja, while in lines 7 and 49 it is written respectively as Viḷala and Viḷa.

In the sentence referred to above (lines 3-4), Viḷa-rāṇaka is stated to have been śrī-Dimarāka-śrī-Aigala-suta. This passage may mean to say that Viḷa-rāṇaka was the son of Aigala alias Dimarāka. But considering the carelessness of the scribe and engraver exhibited by the inscription, it is not impossible that a word like pautra has been omitted through oversight after the mention of Dimarāka, so that the passage was really intended to indicate that Viḷa-rāṇaka was the son of Aigala and grandson of Dimarāka. No royal title is applied to either of the two names. The next sentence in the same ruler's description in lines 4-5, which is extremely corrupt, states that he was responsible for the prosperity of the Mōḍha family even when he was a child. It is, however, interesting to note that this sentence is a modification of a stanza in the description of the Śilāhāra ruler Chhittarāja as found in the records of the Śilāhāra dynasty probably suggesting that Chhittarāja ascended the throne fairly early in his life. The same may have been the case with the Mōḍha chief who issued the charter under review. The following sentence or clause in lines 5-8 speak of Viḷaladāva of the Mōḍha family, described as Mahāmuṇḍalēvara, Samadhiḡat-āśēḡa-pañcha-mahāśabḡa, Mahāsāmantādhipati and Tagurapura-paramēvara. It is really unnecessary and uncalled for in the text. But apparently it was modified from a passage in the earlier records of the Mōḷha family referring to the contemporary Śilāhāra ruler to whom the Mōḍhas then owed allegiance. This suspicion seems to be supported by the typical Śilāhāra title 'supreme lord of Tagarapura' applied here to Mōḍha Vijala apparently through oversight. It was over-looked by the officer responsible for the draft of the present charter that, while replacing the name of a Śilāhāra ruler by that of a Mōḍha chief in the passage in question, a title suiting only the former was left unmodified.¹

It may be argued that Mōḍha Vijala mentioned in line 7 is different from Mōḍha Vija of line 4 and that the latter was a subordinate of the former. But I do not think it possible to agree with such a view. In the first place, Vijala is phonetically the same as Vijjala which is again a mere variant of Vijja. It is a popular Kannaḍa name and is generally found in the various forms Vijjala, Vijjana, Vijjana, Bijja, Bijjana, Bijjala and Bijjala.² Secondly, the issuer of the present charter is apparently identical with the Mōḍha chief Vijjala of the Chinchani plates of Śaka 969 (1048 A.D.) edited above, in which the chief does not represent himself as a subordinate of any other ruler. Since the Śilāhāras were still a ruling power in the Northern Konkan, it is difficult to believe that the ruler of Saṁyāna, who issued the present grant, would have acknowledged allegiance to anybody other than a ruler of the Śilāhāra dynasty. There is no evidence of the emergence of a Mōḍha king in the Northern Konkan in the period in question, to whom the Mōḍha chief of Saṁyāna could have offered allegiance. Thirdly, we have to note the fact that, as will be shown below, the Mōḍha chief of Saṁyāna seems to have been ruling over a wider territory in 1053 A. D. than he was holding without reference to a master five years earlier in 1048 A. D. While the chief now claimed to have ruled over the Saṁyāna 700 division, the Śilāhāra king Chhittarāja, to whom the rulers of Saṁyāna originally owed allegiance, claimed to have held the Konkana 1400 country.³ About 1053 A. D., the Mōḍhas were thus ruling about a half of the Northern Konkan.

Lines 8-12 state that, when Maṇḍalika Vijja-rāṇaka was ruling over the Saṁyāna-pattana 700 which was a Maṇḍala or district consisting of 4000 draṅgas and extending as far as Ākāśikā, the burden of the administration of his kingdom lay on the head of Varishṭhaka Mummuraka and that of the administration of Saṁyāna (apparently meaning the town which was the headquarters of the Mōḍha territory) on the head of Mahāṭhakkura Dēmbalaiya, while there were other chief officers such as the Mahāpradhāna Buddhappaia. As we have already seen, the chief minister Mummuraka and the minister Dēmbalaiya are also mentioned in the Mōḍha chief's earlier record issued in Śaka 969 (1048 A. D.).

The chief's order in respect of the grant to be made was addressed to the following subordinates (lines 12-15): the future princes, ministers, priests, administrative officers (amātya) and chief officials (pradhāna-niyōgika) as well as the officers in charge of the rāshṭras (territorial units), the cities and the Dhruvas, as also the people of the countryside. It was also addressed with due respect to the haṁyamana (Parsee community), the citizens, and the Mōḍha Brāhmaṇas of Śrīsthāna (i.e. modern Thāna). The Mōḍha Brāhmaṇas mentioned here probably hailed from Śrīsthāna and were settled at Saṁyāna. Then follows in lines 16-26 a long section in prose and verse dealing with the transitoriness of life and wealth, the propriety of giving grants, etc. It is found in some Śilāhāra grants⁴ and, in a smaller form, not only in most of the Śilāhāra charters but also in the two records edited above. It also contains some of the usual imprecatory and benedictory stanzas. Lines 26 ff. state how, on the date and occasion indicated above, the Mōḍha chief made a grant after having worshipped Trailōkyachakshus (i. e. the Sun-god) and Trailōkyasvāmin (either Śiva or Vishnu). The language of the passage recording the grant, which follows in lines 30 ff., is defective ; but it apparently means to say that the amount of three drammas received by the government as śirīḍikā (the same as sirīḍirkā of the previous record, meaning a sort of tax or cess) on account of the village of Kēpasā-grāma in the possession of the Kautuka-maṭhikā was granted in favour of the householders and scholars attached to the maṭhikā in the form of a permanent endowment for the purpose of feeding 25 Brāhmaṇas probably per day. It will be seen that Kautuka's maṭhikā at Saṁyāna is mentioned in all the five grants discovered at Chinchani, including the three edited here, although, in the second of the three epigraphs now under study, the name Kautuka is spelt as Kavatika. The endowment has been called a bhōjan-ākshayanī or bhōjan-ākshayanī, the word ākshayanī or akshayanī being a corruption of Sanskrit akshaya-nivī meaning 'a permanent endowment'. The expression thus means a permanent endowment created for the purpose of providing food free of cost. In line 42, the endowment is referred to merely as bhōjana and in line 46 as grāsa.

The following section in lines 33-47 in prose and verse contains some more of the benedictory and imprecatory stanzas. Lines 47-48 contain the statement that the donor's decree was contained in the text of the document as written by one of his officers styled Dhruva (i. e. the collector of the royal share of the produce from the farmers). This is followed in lines 48-49 by the sentence : 'Confirmed by me, the Maṇḍalēśvara, the illustrious Vijja-rāpaka', in the well-known style of putting the signature of the donor on a document later engraved on copper plates. The next sentence says that Dhruva Mammalaiya wrote the document at the request of both the parties (i.e. the donor and the donees) under orders of Maṇḍalēśvara Vija-rāpaka. It is further stated in line 50 that the text of the charter was to be regarded as authoritative. The record ends with a maṅgala of the usual type.

Of the geographical names mentioned in the charter, the most interesting is the Saṁyāna-pattana 700 forming a maṇḍala consisting of 4000 draṅgas. It was apparently the district round the town of Saṁyāna (Sanjan). But it is difficult to explain the passage used in the inscription to indicate the territorial unit. We know that expressions like 'Saṁyāna-pattana 700' normally meant 'the Saṁyāna-pattana division consisting of 700 villages or hamlets' although the number may have been conventional or exaggerated.¹ But the word draṅga generally means 'a town' and it is impossible to believe that a territorial division consisting only of 700 villages or hamlets contained as many as 4000 towns. It therefore seems that draṅga in the inscription is a mistake for dramma. The intended meaning of the passage in question may therefore be that the annual revenue income of the territory under the rule of the Mōḍha chief of the Saṁyāna district consisting of 700 villages or hamlets was 4000 drammas possibly meaning coins of silver. A locality called Ākāśikā is stated to have stood on the borders of the said district. The donor seems to have made a permanent endowment out of the śirīḍikā tax or cess amounting to 3 drammas, probably payable annually or periodically to the government by the Kautuka-maṭhikā at Saṁyāna on account of a village called Kēpasā-grāma in its possession. I am not sure about the location of this village.

No. 6—GOLD COINS OF DANDINAGOVA

(1. Plate)

P. B. DESAI, DHARWAR

In November 1956 plaster casts of ten gold coins were received for examination in the office of the Government Epigraphist for India from the Prince of Wales Museum of Western India, Bombay. These coins with two more, according to the information furnished, were sent to the said Museum by the Mamlatdar of Ramdurg, Belgaum District, Mysore State. The details regarding the discovery of the coins as communicated by the Numismatist of the said Museum in his letter, dated the 24th January 1957, are as follows :

"The coins were found on the 16th June 1950 by one Shri Namadevappa Ningappa Badiger in a field belonging to Shri Shankarappa Devarayappa Badiger in the village of Mudakavi, six miles from Ramdurg, about a furlong from the Ramdurg-Badami Road. It is said that the man, while going through the field, noticed a small earthen pot lying there. On breaking it, he recovered the 12 gold coins which were later deposited at the Ramdurg Police Station."

These ten coins which are circular in shape bear close resemblance to one another in their mould and design. Their diameter is about 1.5 centimeter on average. Their weights ignoring slight variations are stated to be as follows: Nos. 1-2—60 grains; Nos. 3-8—59.75 grains; No. 9—60.25 grains and No. 10—59 grains.

On the obverse of the coins is depicted under decorations the figure of a warrior facing right, going for a fight. He wears a helmet and armour, holding in the right hand a long dagger pointing to the front and a hawk in the left hand which is bent and turned upwards. Figures of the sun and crescent moon are shown to the right and left of the warrior's head. This figure apparently represents the issuer of the coins, whose identity is discussed below. The reverse bears the legend in Kannada characters of the 12th century, inscribed within two circles, the outer one of which is dotted. The coins appear to have been struck from more than one die. On account of the difference in the arrangement of the letters in the legend, it is clear that at least two different dies were used for the two legends. The readings of the legend on the two types are as follows :

- 1 Nigāṣaṁ-
2 kamala-Daṁḍi-
3 naḡḡa

- Srī-Niga-*
[o(m)]kamala-Do(m)-
3 dinagō[va]*

The above legend is a combination of two titles Nigajāṅkamalla and Dandīnagava. Both these titles are familiar to the students of Kannaḍa epigraphy as having been enjoyed by different rulers of various dates. But, for the identification of the particular chief who issued these coins under his titles only, interesting information is available from an inscription of the area.

This inscription¹ comes from Torgal in the Ramdurg Taluk. It is dated 1187-88 A.D. and describes the achievements of a local chief by name Barma-bhūpāla who was administering the areas round about Toragale (modern Torgal) which was his capital. By virtue of his valour, this chief earned the distinctive title Danḍinagōva meaning 'the protector of the army like the Cowherd God'. He is also referred to in the record by another title Niḡaḷanka which is an abbreviation of Niḡaḷankamalla meaning 'a warrior adorned with the chain of distinction'. The inscription further relates that this Barma-bhūpāla proceeded at the behest of his overlord and suzerain on a conquering expedition along the four quarters and acquired the tracts of Lōkāpura-Twelve, Hoḷalgunda-Thirty, Doḍḍavāḍa, Navilgunda-Forty and Koḷenūru-Thirty, all of which came under his direct rule. The areas mentioned above as being governed by Barma-bhūpāla embrace parts of the present Bijapur, Belgaum and Dharwar Districts.

An examination of the above details together with the provenance of the coins leads us to the conclusion that it was this Barma-bhūpāla who issued them under his distinguished title Danḍinagōva. The period in which Barma-bhūpāla lived was characterised by a state of uncertainty caused by the decline of imperial power, both the later Chālukyas of Kalyāṇa and their adversaries of the Kalachuri dynasty having virtually vanished from the political arena, making way for enterprising leaders like Bhillama of the Yādava family. It was under these circumstances that Barma-bhūpāla appears to have made a bold bid for territorial expansion and power and issued coins as an independent king.

As for the remaining two coins of the group, they appear to be what are known as Paḍma Tanḡas, generally associated with the rulers of the Kadamba family. One of them (No. 11) is identical with the coin published in Elliot's Coins of Southern India, Plate II, No. 67. The other coin (No. 12) is of a similar pattern, though not identical in all respects.

I am indebted to Shri Parameswari Lal Gupta, Numismatist, Prince of Wales Museum, who was kind enough to give me an opportunity for studying these interesting coins.¹

No. 7—SACRIFICIAL INSCRIPTION FROM SONDA

P. B. DESAI, DHARWAR

This inscription was copied by me at Honnehalli, near Sōndā, in January 1940, in the course of an epigraphical survey of the Sirsi Taluk, North Kanara District, formerly in the Bombay State, but now in Mysore. The slab bearing the epigraph was set up near the Narasimha shrine inside the Svārṇavallī maṭha.¹ The record² is edited here for the first time with the help of impressions taken under my supervision.

The slab measures 31 inches long and 28 inches broad. Its upper part is shaped into a broad curve. In the space at the top above the inscription proper are cut in relief the figures of the sun and the crescent. Above, below and to the right of these symbols are engraved the two invocations in Kannaḍa characters, Viṣṇēśvarō jayati and śrī-Nṛsiṃhō jayati, and another in the Nāgarī script referring to a third deity.³ About the middle of the slab are carved in relief four figures which are eminently conspicuous. The main figure at the centre is elongated and made up of four curves. The one to its north is almost a square; another towards the east is a semi-circle and the third one to the south is a circle. The significance of these figures will be pointed out below.

The inscription is engraved in the Kannaḍa alphabet and language. The characters are late being normal for the date of the record. Noteworthy is the form of initial ā (line 12), its length being denoted by a sign attached to it and looking like the medial ā mark. In some cases a superfluous curve is appended to the lower limb of t giving the impression that it is doubled; cf. sarasvatī in line 3 and pratiṭṭāṣi in line 6. The doubling of the letter l in halli in line 3 and beḷli in line 9 is denoted by a curve affixed to its lower part. In line 8 the word śrauti is misspelt as śraūti.

The epigraph commences with the date which is given as Śālivāhana-Śaka 1595, Pramādi, Māgha-śu. 4, Saturday. This date regularly corresponds to the 31st January 1674 A.D. It is stated that at this time Savāyi Rāmachandra-nāyaka, the chief of Sōde, was ruling the principality. The object of the epigraph is to commemorate the completion of a sacrifice which was caused to be performed by Sarvajña-sarasvatī, a pontiff of Honnehalli, for the prosperity of the above chief. The ritual was conducted by Agnihōtrin Kēśava-bhaṭṭa of Kaḍatōke under the guidance of Śrauti Viśvapati-bhaṭṭa who was specially invited for the occasion from the holy city of Kāśī. The performance lasted for five days and was completed on Wednesday, the 8th of the bright half of the above month. The passage at the end of the inscription indicates that the stone bearing the record was set up to mark the sacred site where the sacrificial ceremony actually took place. From the duration of the sacrifice it appears to have been a Sōma-yāga.⁴

An interesting part of the epigraph is the representation, on the commemorative tablet itself, of the sacrificial spot, which, as described above, consists of four figures. The central elongated figure stands for the Vēḍi or the raised seat intended for the performer. The adjoining three figures to the south, east and north respectively depict the three pits wherein the three sacred fires, known as Gārhapatya, Daskhiṇa and Āhavanīya, are kept burning throughout the performance.⁵ The tablet thus presents a unique instance of sacrificial memorial.⁶

² B. K. Coll., No. 15 of 1939-40.

⁴ Cf. A. Chinnaśwami Sastri's Yajñatattvaprakāśa, ed. A. M. Ramanatha Dikshita, for illustrations of the sacrificial fire-pits.

The chief Savāyi Rāmachandra-nāyaka of Sōde who was instrumental for the sacrificial performance is not known from other sources. The principality of Sōde, more familiarly known as Svādi,¹ played a significant role in the later period of Karnātak history and an authentic account of its Nāyaka rulers remains to be worked out in detail with the help of epigraphical, literary and archaeological sources.

In this context it would be worthwhile to review briefly the contents of a few epigraphs bearing on the Nāyaka chiefs of Sōndā, copied by me while conducting an epigraphical survey of the Sirsi Taluk. An inscription² in the Sōndā fort called Hosakōte belongs to the reign of the Vijayanagara king Dēvarāya II and is dated 1432 A.D. It introduces his subordinate Mahāprabhu Arasappa of Sōvade, who was the son of Samkanna. This is the earliest epigraph mentioning the Sōndā chiefs so far known. This Arasappa appears to be the first ruler of the name who founded the principality and his father's name is disclosed here for the first time.

Arasappa-nāyaka I, it appears, continued to rule during the subsequent reigns of the Vijayanagara kings. For instance, a record³ from Hulekal belonging to the reign of Virūpāksha and citing the cyclic year Hēvilambi (1478 A.D.) introduces Arasappa-nāyaka of Sōde, and another from Chalgār,⁴ dated 1478 A.D., refers to a ruler of Sōde having the same name.

Arasappa-nāyaka II was the next distinguished chief who is said to have ruled from 1555 to 1598 A.D.⁵ As the gap between Arasappa-nāyaka I and Arasappa-nāyaka II is fairly big, we have to assume that another chief whose name is not known to us ruled in the interval.

We have five records for Arasappa-nāyaka II. The earliest from Honnehalli,⁶ dated 1556 A.D., speaks of Arasappa-nāyaka as ruling at Sōmadāpuri. The next one⁷ is dated 1569 A.D. in the reign of the Vijayanagara king Sadāśiva. The information furnished by this epigraph is that this chief claimed his descent from the solar lineage and had a daughter named Arasamma. The third epigraph,⁸ which apparently has to be assigned to this chief, belongs to the reign of the Vijayanagara king Veṅkaṭapati and cites the date 1593 A.D. The fourth record⁹ from Hulekal referring to the death of a warrior in the service of Arasappa-nāyaka gives the date, Dūrmukha, Vaiśākha-paurṇimā, Sunday, corresponding to May 2, 1596 A.D. The last epigraph from Karasvalli¹⁰ is dated in 1602 A.D. and extends the rule of this chief by four years. Two more inscriptions on hero-stones, one at Hulekal and another at Pañchaliṅga,¹¹ the dates of which cannot be determined with precision, may also be assigned to this ruler.

¹ Sōde has become Sōndā under the influence of English. For the variants of this name and importance of the place, see above, Vol. XXVIII, p. 292. In an inscription from Guttal, Haveri Taluk (B.K. Coll., No. 51 of 1932-33), dated 1162-63 A.D., mention is made of a Vaddabyavahāri (i.e. merchant-chief) described as an ornament of the Sōnde family. This appears to be the earliest reference to Sōndā so far known. [See below, p. 81, note 2.—Ed.]

³[The Nāgarī passage reads Śrī-Dhūmḍhir-jayati....—The language of lines 3-6 seems to suggest that Sarvajña-Sarasvatī and Rāmachandra were ruling together and that the sacrifice was performed under their orders.—The name of the sacrifice performed is not mentioned; but the ritu indicated does not seem to suit a Sōmayāga. NO. 8—TWO INSCRIPTIONS FROM GUNTUR DISTRICT

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

It is now nearly a decade and a half that Mr. P. Seshadri Sastri of Guntur, who is an energetic student of the antiquities of the Guntur District of the Āndhra State, published the tentative transcripts of two interesting early epigraphs in the now-defunct periodical entitled Journal of Āndhra History and Culture.¹ The first of these two stone pillar inscriptions was found at Velpūru² in the Sattenapalle Taluk and Mr. Sastri's short note on it was published in the said journal, Vol. I, No. 2 (July 1943), p. 64, with a small facsimile. He published his short note on the second epigraph, stated to have been found 'at some distance from Rentachintala in the Palnad Taluk', in the same journal, Vol. II, No. 2 (July 1944), pp. 68-69, without any facsimile. On reading Mr. Sastri's notes, I, as one interested in the early history of the area in question, felt that the inscriptions should be properly edited with good illustrations. In January 1957, when I was camping for a few days at Guntur, Mr. Sastri showed me a few estampages of both the records and requested me to edit them in the Epigraphia Indica. This roused in me a special interest in the inscriptions. I visited Velpūru where I examined the original stone bearing the first of the two records and prepared fresh impressions of it. The pillar was found lying in front of the temple of the god Rāmalingēśvara, although it is stated to have been formerly built into the shrine of the village goddess by the road-side in the neighbourhood of the other temple. I was told that the second inscription had been found in the village of Mañchikallu in the Palnad Taluk. But, on reaching the village, I learnt that the inscribed stone had been removed to the Taluk office at Gurazala some six months previously. I went to Gurazala but only to learn from the Tahsildar that the inscription had been transferred to the Bungalow of the Collector of the District at Guntur. I therefore came back to Guntur where the inscribed stone, which is the fragment of an octagonal pillar, was ultimately traced in the Collector's old Bungalow. In the search of the inscriptions, I received considerable help from Dr. R. Subrahmanyam, Superintendent of the Nagarjunikonda Excavations Project, who takes great interest in matters relating to the early history of Āndhra.

1. Velpūru Inscription of Aira Mā[na]sada

The inscription consists of six lines of writing covering an area about eleven inches in length and twelve inches in height. Individual aksharas are roughly about 1"×1" or slightly bigger. The inscribed surface of the stone is damaged at both the left and right ends of the writing and a letter at the beginning or end of the lines is generally damaged or broken away. In a few cases, two letters at the commencement of the lines are similarly affected. The first three letters at the beginning of the last line are now completely lost; but the second and the third of them are traceable on the impressions of the inscription prepared by Mr. Seshadri Sastri in 1939. The layer of stone had broken away even before the Epigraphic Branch copied the record in 1940-41. Some aksharas in the central part of lines 3-6 are also damaged. An original defect in the stone which compelled the engraver to leave some space further affects the same lines.

¹ A few volumes (Volume I, 1943; Volume II, 1944) of this Journal were published from Guntur under the editorship of Dr. M. Rama Rao. Both the inscriptions are noticed in the Annual Report on South Indian Epigraphy as No. 468 of 1940-41 and No. 22 of Appendix E of 1939-40. See the Reports for the years 1939-40 to 1942-43, pp. 127, 229, and for the years 1943-44 to 1944-55, p. 85.

² Macron over long e and o has not been used in this article.

The characters resemble very closely those of the inscriptions¹ of the Sātavāhana king Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi (circa 106-30 A.D.) and his son Vāsishṭhīputra Puṣumāvi (circa 130-59 A.D.) from Nāsik, Amarāvati and other places.² The inscription may therefore be assigned to a date about the first half of the second century A.D. The alphabet employed in the inscription under study is decidedly earlier than the Jaggayapeta³ (Nandigama Taluk, Krishna District) and Nāgārjunikoṇḍa⁴ (Paland Taluk, Guntur District) inscriptions of the Ikshvāku king Virapurushadatta who flourished about the middle of the third century A.D.⁵ The letter n has a straight horizontal base, while l has not the angular or flat base noticed in the Ikshvāku inscriptions. The letter t also does not exhibit the looped type noticed occasionally in the Sātavāhana epigraphs of the age of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi and Vāsishṭhīputra Puṣumāvi but generally in the Ikshvāku records of the time of Virapurushadatta. The forms of the letters l, t and n, as found in the present epigraph, may be compared with their forms generally noticed in the later Sātavāhana inscriptions discovered in the Krishna-Guntur region and its neighbourhood such as the Amarāvati inscription⁶ of Vāsishṭhīputra Puṣumāvi, the Kodavali inscription⁷ of Chaṇḍa or Chandra Śāta, the Myakadoni inscription⁸ of Puṣumāvi and the Chinna inscription⁹ of Yajña Śātakarṇi. The comparison would suggest that the inscription under study should have to be assigned to a date about the time of Vāsishṭhīputra Puṣumāvi and not to the period after the end of Sātavāhana rule in the said area about the close of the first quarter of the third century A.D.¹⁰

The language of the inscription is Prakrit and no influence of Sanskrit is noticed in it except in the use of the vowel ai in the word Airasa in line 2. As regards orthography, there is no case of the reduplication of consonants or the use of conjuncts. But the modification of j to y in the word mahārāyasa (lines 2-3) is interesting to note.

⁷ Above, Vol. XVIII, pp. 316 ff. and Plate. This inscription has been differently read and interpreted by Sten Konow and Krishna Sastri. We are inclined to disagree with the views of both the scholars and to read the epigraph as follows:

- 1 Sidham ramho Vāsiṭhi-
- 2 putasa sāmi-sir[i]-
- 3 Cha[m]ḍa[sāta]sa [sava]chhare
- 4 [10 1] he pa 2 diva[sa] 2 []
- 5 amacha-Sa[ta]mi[t]ene(na) dhama
- 6 thāp[i]ta |

The inscription therefore seems to be dated on the second day of the second fortnight of Hemanta (i.e. winter) of the eleventh regnal year of Vāsishṭhīputra Chaṇḍa Śāta (or Chandra Śāta), when his amātya (i.e. a minister or executive officer) named Satyamitra established a dharma in the vicinity of the inscription. The word dharma here apparently means a religious object or institution, traces of which have been noticed near the findspot of the record (cf. op. cit., p. 317).

Ibid., Vol. XIV, p. 155 and Plate.

⁸ JASB, Vol. XVI, 1920, Plate XVI. The palaeography of this record closely resembles that of the Ikshvāku inscriptions of about the middle of the third century and does not look earlier than the Kodavali and Myakadoni inscriptions, although the rulers mentioned in these two records are generally supposed to have flourished later than Yajña Śātakarṇi.

¹⁰ Cf. The Successors of the Sātavāhanas, p. 163.

Considering the length of the other lines, it is clear that two letters at the beginning of line 1 are lost, although traces of the second of these two are visible. These lost aksharas appear to have been sidha or sidham (Sanskrit siddham), the maṅgala found at the commencement of numerous early records. The above is followed by the words namo Bhagavato (Sanskrit namah Bhagavate), 'Obeisance to the Lord'. This kind of adoration without mentioning the name of the deity in question is known from other inscriptions.¹ The Ikshvāku inscriptions often begin with the maṅgala: namo Bhagavato Budhasa, 'Obeisance to the Lord Buddha'. But the word following the word Bhagavato in the present record is not Budhasa and does not appear to be the name of a deity. The first two letters of this expression, viz. gala, are engraved at the end of line 1 and the third letter at the beginning of line 2 is broken away, while the last two letters are clearly yasa. It is not possible to restore the word with any amount of certainty. But it is tempting to suggest Gala-[re]yasa* (Sanskrit Gālaveyasya), 'of the Gālaveya', Gālaveya possibly being the gotra or clan name of the king mentioned further on. The following letters of line 2 are Airasa Mahārāja° with a partially damaged sa (completing the second of the two expressions) at the beginning of line 3. It is clear from this passage that the king, whose name follows, enjoyed the royal title Mahārāja and claimed to have belonged to the Aira family. Aira as a family name also occurs in the inscriptions of the Chedi-Mahāmeghavāhanas of Kalinga.² Some scholars think that the word stands for Sanskrit Aila (i.e. a descendant of Ilā) while others equate it with Sanskrit ārya through the Prakrit forms ariya > ayira > aira. We are inclined to agree with the second group of scholars, especially because the change of r to l does not appear to be a characteristic of the language of the inscription under study. Moreover, the forms ayira and aira (for Sanskrit ārya), from which aira seems to have been derived, are actually found in the Amarāvati and Nāgarjunikoṇḍa inscriptions.³

The letters following the damaged sa in line 3 are: Hārītī[putasa si]r[i-Mā]. The name of the king, who enjoyed the metronymic Hārītīputra, 'born of a lady belonging to (i.e. whose father belonged to) the Hārīta gotra', cannot be determined with certainty as the letter following Mā at the beginning of line 4 is damaged, although the following three aksharas read sadasa. Traces of the damaged letter in the facsimile published by Mr. Seshadri Sastri, however, appear to suggest the reading na.⁴ Now, it may be supposed that the letters dasa go with the following expression and that sa preceding dasa represents the sixth case-ending added to the king's name in two syllables. The name of the king in that case may be Māna, if our view regarding the reading of the second letter is accepted. Since, however, dasa added to the following word scarcely gives any sense, the suggestion does not seem to suit the context. The other possibility is that the king's name was written in four syllables beginning with mā and ending with sada. In that case, the name of the king may be taken, at least tentatively, to be Mānasada; but whether sada representing the second half of the name stands for Śāta cannot be determined. A ruler named Sivamaka Sada

is known from an Amarāvati inscription¹ and the latter part of the name is generally taken to stand for Sātakarṇi or Sātavāhana. Consequently, Sivamaka Sada is assigned to the Sātavāhana family.² The present epigraph, however, does not look like a Sātavāhana record and seems to show that a king of the Krishna-Guntur region bearing a sada-ending name belonged to the Aira (possibly also called Gālaveya) and not to the Sātavāhana family. Whether Sivamaka Sada, whose inscription has to be attributed to the same age as the epigraph under study on grounds of palaeography, belonged to the Aira family cannot of course be determined without further evidence.³

The next word in the latter half of line 4 reads: disidhārikāya (Sanskrit dhīśi-dhārikayā),⁴ 'by the female torch-bearer'. The first letter of the name of this female official of the Aira king contained in the first word of line 5 is lost, the following two letters of the word reading [vā]ya, 'by ... vā'. The name was therefore something like Revā, Devā, etc.

The following four letters of line 5 are damaged; but the second and third appear to read gava and the expression may be restored as Bhagavato, 'of the Lord' which is followed by what looks like Bhūtagā[ha][ka]sa* containing the name of a deity. Of this name, which may be compared with the word Bhūtagrihya meaning a class of domestic spirits, the fourth letter is partially damaged at the end of line 5 while the last letter was broken away at the beginning of the next line even when Mr. Sastri copied the inscription eighteen years ago. As already indicated above, sa (the last akṣhara of the above expression) and ma (the first letter of the following word maḍa[pā(po)]) were lost at a slightly later date. The above is followed in line 6, with which the inscription concludes, by the words eko [ni]vāhito, the passage Bhagavato Bhūtagāhakasa maḍapo eko nivāhito (Sanskrit Bhagavataḥ Bhūtagrāhakasya maṇḍapaḥ ekaḥ nirvāhitaḥ) meaning 'one maṇḍapa of the god Bhūtagrāhaka has been completed.' The word maṇḍapa may mean here 'a building consecrated to a deity [in the vicinity of his temple]' The inscription thus appears to record the construction of a building for a god called Bhūtagrāhaka by a lady in the service of a Mahārāja of the Aira family and probably of the Gālava gotra.

The importance of the inscription lies in the fact that the rule of the Aira (Ārya) family over the Guntur District and the adjoining areas in the second century A.D. is known from it for the first time. We know that about the end of the first century B.C., the Chedi-Mahāmeghavāhana king Khāravela of Kalinga, who claimed Aira (Ārya) descent, ruled over the territory lying to the immediate east of the dominions of the contemporary Sātavāhana king Sātakarṇi and that the former besieged the city called Asikanagara (Sanskrit Rishikanagara) situated on the bank of the river Kanhaveṇā (Sanskrit Krishnavenā, i.e. the modern Krishna) probably within the latter's dominions.⁵ In the absence of any reference to the Chedi-Mahāmeghavāhana family in our inscription and of epithets like Hārītiputra in the records of the Chedi-Mahāmeghavāhanas of Kalinga, it is difficult, in the present state of our knowledge, to determine the exact relation of the Aira king mentioned in our epigraph with the family of Khāravela. But it is equally difficult

to dissociate the rule of the Airas over the Guntur region in the valley of the Krishna in the second century A.D. from the above facts of the early history of Kalinga especially in view of the title Mahārāja claimed by Mānasada, which was popular with the Chedi-Mahāmeghavāhanas but not with the Sātavāhanas. It is thus not impossible that Aira rule was established in the Krishna-Guntur region as a result of one of Khāravela's expeditions in those areas.

In the second century A.D., the title Mahārāja, enjoyed by the Aira king in our record, indicated an imperial status. The Aira rule in the Krishna valley in the period in question seems to go against the suggestion that the Sātavāhanas, called Andhras in the Purāṇas, ruled over the Krishna-Guntur region in the heart of the present Āndhra country from the post-Maurya age down to the beginning of the third century A.D.¹ Elsewhere we have suggested that the Andhra people were originally living in the northern parts of the Deccan, that the early rulers of the Sātavāhana family belonging to the Andhra race ruled over territories to the north of the Krishna and that it was Vāsishṭhīputra Puṣumāvi (circa 130-59 A.D.) who conquered the Krishna-Guntur area in the second quarter of the second century A.D.² The main argument in favour of the suggestion is that no inscription of the Sātavāhanas down to the days of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi (circa 106-30 A.D.) has been discovered in the area in question and that no land lying to the south of the Krishna seems to be included in the long list of territories quoted in the Nasik inscription³ of the nineteenth regnal year of Puṣumāvi as comprised in his father's dominions. The present inscription seems to support our view. It now appears that the Airas ruling over the Krishna-Guntur region were supplanted by the Later Sātavāhanas. This is indicated by the existence of many Later Sātavāhana epigraphs in this region such as the Amarāvati (Guntur District) inscription⁴ of Vāsishṭhīputra Puṣumāvi, Chinna (Krishna District) inscription⁵ of Gautamīputra Yajña Śātakarṇi, Kodavali inscription⁶ of Chaṇḍa or Chandra Śāta and the Myakadoni (Bellary District) inscription⁷ of Puṣumāvi.

TRANSLATION

May there be well! Obeisance to the Lord. One Maṇḍapa for the Lord Bhūtagrāhaka has been completed by . vā who is the Drīṣi-dhārikā (i.e. the female torch-bearer) of the illustrious Māhārāja MĀ[na]sada, the son of Hārītī (i.e. the queen belonging to the Hārita gotra), the Aira (and) the Gālaveya.

2. Mañchikallu Inscription of Pallava Śiṃhavarman

The area covered by the writing measures about seventeen inches in length and nine inches in height. The lower part of the inscription is broken away and lost. There are altogether five lines of writing. The first letter of line 4 is damaged and the last two or three aksharas of it are broken away, while only a few letters of line 5 are visible. The aksharas, each measuring about $\frac{3}{8} \times \frac{1}{2}$ or more, are boldly and neatly engraved; but some of them about the middle of all the lines are severely damaged.

The characters very closely resemble the Ikshvāku inscriptions from Jaggayapeta, Nāgarjunikoṇḍa and other places and little calls for special remark in this connection. The consonant t has a looped (cf. vardhamntike in line 2, kātūṇa in line 3, tethikāna in lines 3-4 and kātaṃ in line 4) as well as an unlooped (cf. sagottena in line 1, saṃnti in line 2 and kurtakā in line 4) form. The letter n generally exhibits the unlooped form (cf. vardhamntike and saṃnti in line 2, tethikāna in lines 3-4). But n shows both the looped (cf. dhareṇa in line 1, yāyaṇaṃ in line 3) and unlooped (cf. Palavāṇaṃ in line 1, vaṃmaṇa in line 2, kātūṇa in line 3) forms. Y is of two types; cf. Bhāradaya in line 1 and vejayike in line 2. The medial ū mark in kātūṇa in line 3 is interesting to note. Double daṇḍa has been used to indicate the mark of punctuation after siddham in line 1. The record can be assigned, on palaeographical grounds, to a date about the second half of the third century A.D. to which the Ikshvāku epigraphs have been attributed, although the language and internal evidence, as discussed below, would suggest the close of the century. The letters niya, in Telugu-Kannada characters of about the seventh century A.D., are found at the end of line 2 while there are traces of similar aksharas at the end of line 3 as well. These appear to have belonged to a different record which had nothing to do with the inscription under study and is now almost completely lost.

The language of the record is Prakrit; but its orthography is considerably influenced by literary Prakrit and Sanskrit. Reduplication of consonants is noticed in siddham and sagottena in line 1, ap[p]aṇo in line 2 and bhaṭṭā in line 4, while in line 5 we have the word kurtaka which not only exhibits the influence of Sanskrit in its spelling but is also of lexical interest. In vaṃmaṇa in line 2, however, anuvāra has been employed instead of the reduplication of m. Double nasal has been used in vardhamntike and saṃnti in the same line. In most cases, n has been changed to ṇ, although its use is noticed in a few words (cf. nti twice occurring in line 2 and na at the beginning of line 4). The seventh case-ending in e is used in pādamūle in line 5 and in vejayike and vardhamntike in line 2; but in the last two words the seventh case-ending seems actually to be meant for the fourth. These features are also noticed in other records; e.g., the Mayidavolu plates of Pallava Śivakandavarman¹ have the passage: Sivakāṇḍavammo Dharmākaḍe vāpataṃ ānapayāti amhehi dāni amhavejayike dharm-āyu-bala-vadhanike ya gāmo sampadatto (Sanskrit Śiva- skandavarmā Dhānyakate vyāpṛitam=ājñāpayati asmābhiḥ idānim=asmad-vaijayikāya dharm-āyut-bala-vārdhanikāya cha...grāmaḥ sampradattāḥ)¹. A consideration of some of these characteristics of the language and orthography would suggest for the inscription a date about the end of the third century.²

The inscription begins with the maṅgala: Siddham, followed by a double danḍa. Then the Pallava king Siṃhavarman of the Bhāradvāja gotra is introduced in the passage (lines 1-2): Bhāradaya-sagottena.....[dha]reṇa Palavāṇaṃ Siṃhavarmaṇa (Sanskrit Bhāradvāja-sagotreṇa.....dhareṇa Pallavāṇaṃ Siṃhavarmaṇā), 'by Siṃhavarman who belongs to the Pallavas (i.e. the Pallava family), who is.....dhara, [and] who belongs to the Bhāradvāja gotra'. The epithet of king Siṃhavarman ending in dhara cannot be satisfactorily restored.

The next passage in lines 2-3 runs: ap[p]ano vejayike.....[la]-vārdhamntike sam-nti-sathiyāyaṇaṃ kātūṇa (Sanskrit ātmanaḥ vaijayikāya.....la-vārdhanikāya śānti-svastyayanaṃ kṛtvā), 'having performed śānti-svastyayana for his own victory and increase of.....'. The traces of the damaged letters before la-vārdhamntike in line 2 appear to suggest dhamma-ba° and probably not dhamm-āyu-ba° as in the Mayidavolu plates. We may have here a reference to the increase of the merits and prowess of the king, for which the śānti-svastyayana was performed. The expression śānti-svastyayana means certain propitiatory rites, śānti being a rite for averting evil and svastyayana for attaining prosperity.

The concluding part of the sentence in lines 3-4 reads: Bhagavato.....Jivaśivasvāmisa tethikāna kurtakā(k-o)pahārakādi kātāṃ (Sanskrit Bhagavataḥ.....Jivaśivasvāmināḥ tairthika-bhyaḥ kurtak-opahārakādi kṛtāṃ), 'made presents of kurtakas and other [benefactions] in favour of the tairthikas of Lord...Jivaśivasvāmin'. The word lost before the name of the god seems to be siri (Sanskrit śrī). The whole sentence in lines 3-4 thus means to say that the Pallava king Siṃhavarman of the Bhāradvāja gotra made certain presents including the present of kurtakas in favour of the tairthikas of the god Jivaśivasvāmin on the occasion of certain propitiatory rites apparently performed by the tairthikas for the victory and increase of merits, etc., of the king. The expressions tairthika and kurtaka used in the concluding section of the sentence quoted above are of lexical interest. The word tīrthika or tairthika means 'an adherent or head of any other than one's own creed.' In the present context, the word tethika=tairthika seems to be used to indicate the priests of the temple of Jivaśivasvāmin who was probably a representation of the god Śiva. The word kurtaka is not found in Sanskrit lexicons; but kuttaka is recognised in Pali in the sense of 'a woollen carpet'. Our inscription seems to use kurtaka in this sense. The word does not appear to have any relation to kurtā and kurti current in Hindi, Bengali, etc., in the sense of 'a shirt, tunic, bodice or jacket', as these are believed to be borrowed from Turkish during the Muslim period. Moreover, in India (especially in South India), the priests of a temple scarcely use such a garment.

The next sentence of the inscription in lines 4-5 cannot be fully read. It refers to the Bhaṭṭāraka (i.e. a male divinity) worshipped in a devakula or temple, the name of which is doubtful. The letters sa pādāmūle, 'at the feet of.....', in line 5 suggest that the king made a gift in favour of the deity worshipped in the temple referred to.

The importance of the inscription lies in the fact that it is the earliest epigraphic record of the Pallava family. There is no doubt that king Siṃhavarman, to whom it belongs, was an ancestor of Śivaskandavarman who issued from the city of Kāñchī the Mayidavolu plates¹ as a Yuvamahārāja (crown-prince) and the Hirahadagalli plates² as a Dharmamahārājādhirāja. While the first grant was issued very probably during the reign of Śivaskandavarman's father, the second records the renewal of a grant originally made by his father mentioned as māhārāja-bappa-svāmin (i.e. the lord who was the issuer's father and enjoyed the title Mahārāja) without quoting his personal name.³ The first record shows that Andhrāpatha with its headquarters at Dhānyakṣa (Amarāvati near Dharanikota in the Guntur District) formed a part of the Pallava empire when Śivaskandavarman was the crown-prince apparently during the reign of his father. The present inscription seems to suggest the presence of king Śimhavarman in the said area. It is thus not impossible that it was he who extended Pallava power in the Krishna-Guntur region and annexed it to the dominions of the Pallavas of Kāñchī. Considering the proximity between the date of the inscription under study (i.e. about the close of the third century A.D.) and that of the Mayidavolu and Hirahadagalli plates of Śivaskandavarman (i.e. about the first quarter of the fourth century A.D.), as suggested by their language,⁴ it is also possible to conjecture that Śimhavarman was the father and immediate predecessor of Śivaskandavarman. The close resemblance between the palaeography and language of the present epigraph and those of the Ikshvāku records would further suggest that it was the Ikshvākus who were supplanted from the Krishna-Guntur area by the Pallavas about the end of the third and the beginning of the fourth century A.D. The presence of Pallava Śimhavarman in the vicinity of the Ikshvāku capital of Vijayapura situated in the Nāgārjunikoṇḍa valley, as suggested by the inscription under study, seems to show that it was he who was responsible for the destruction of that city together with its Buddhist establishments. The bull crest of the Pallavas, as indicated by their coins and the seals attached to their copper-plate charters,⁵ appears to point to their Śaiva inclinations. In this connection it may be noted that many of the Pallava kings who flourished between the fifth and eighth centuries A.D. claimed to have been Kaliyuga-dosh-āvasanna-dharm-oddharaṇa-nitya-sannaddha which seems to refer to the fact that they were determined to revitalise their Brahmanical faith which had been encroached upon by heretical doctrines like Buddhism during the age of the Later Sātavāhanas and the Ikshvākus.⁶

² Above, Vol. XXIX, pp. 170-71. Such characteristics are noticed in a few records of the time of Iṣṭhāvaku king Ehuvula Śāntamūla, son of Virapurushadatta. Cf. Select Inscriptions, p. 229.

(Lines 1-4) May it be well. Presents of woollen carpets and other (presents) have been made by Sirihavarman who belongs to the Pallavas (i.e. the Pallava family), is...dhara, and belongs to the Bhāradvāja gotra, in favour of the tairthikas (probably, priests of the temple) of the lord, the illustrious Jivaśivasvāmin, after having performed śānti and svastyayana for his own victory (and) the increase of his merits and prowess.

¹ The first akṣara may also be read as ka and the second as pa. The last akṣara of the name of the devakula looks like ūhi, so that the name may be Kiāūhi. But, if the second letter is pa, there was possibly another akṣara between this and the last letter.

No. 9—VUNNA GURAVAYAPALEM PLATES OF PARAMESVARAVARMAN I, YEAR 19

(1 Plate)

D.C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND, and P. SESHADRI SASTRI, GUNTUR

Some time ago a set of three inscribed copper plates strung on a copper ring bearing a bronze seal was shown to Sastri by the son of the Village Munsif of Vunna Guravayapalem in the Podili Taluk of the Nellore District of Andhra. Sastri had prepared a transcript of the inscription and got the surface of the seal and the inscribed faces of the plates photographed before the record was returned. The photographs of the plates, however, were taken without cutting the ring holding them together and taking them out of it.¹ Thus some letters on all the inscribed faces of the plates are seen covered by a portion of the ring in the photographs. In January 1957, a set of the photographs was received by Sircar from Sastri. Sircar then tried to secure the original plates for examination with the help of the State Government; but the attempt was a failure.

Each one of the three plates is of almost the same size as any of the three inscribed plates of the Rēyūru grant² of the Pallava king Narasimhavarman II who, as will be seen below, was the son and successor of the issuer of the charter under discussion. But they have writing on the inner side of the first and third plates and on both sides of the second, while the Rēyūru grant has writing also on the reverse of the third plate. The number of lines in the inscriptions on both the sets of plates is the same. The twenty five lines of writing in the present epigraph are distributed on the plates as follows: I—6 lines, IIa—6 lines, IIb—6 lines and III—7 lines, whereas the Rēyūru grant has five lines each on the inner side of the first and third plates and on both sides of the second and six lines on the outer side of the third plate. The hole about the left border of the plates, for the seal-ring to pass through, was made in both the records before the incision of the documents in question. The space between the hole and the border of the plates is slightly bigger in the present set than in the Rēyūru grant. The size of the letters in the inscription under study is slightly smaller than in the other epigraph, although they are almost as neatly and carefully engraved.

The ends of the ring holding the plates together are soldered to the bottom of the seal having a circular surface. The central part of this counter-sunk surface of the seal bears the representation of a recumbent bull with its head towards the proper left and face slightly turned towards front. There appear to be a crescent and a liṅga above the head of the bull which is known to have been the emblem of the Pallavas. The upper part of the surface, above the back of the bull is occupied by the crude representation of what looks like a deity seated on a throne. Below the bull, there is a legend in three aksharas which appear to read Śrī-nadī apparently standing for Śrī-Nandī. This was probably a biruda of the Pallava king Paramēśvaravarman I (sometimes called Paramēśvarapōtavarman or Iśvarapōtarāja) who issued the charter under review.³ It has, however, to be admitted that this secondary name of the Pallava king is as yet unknown, although we know many of his other birudas such as Atyantakāma, Śrīnidhi, Śrībhara, Raṇajaya, Tarnṇ-

² Above, Vol. XXIX, pp. 89-97 and Plates. There are two more uninscribed plates in this set.

āṅkura, Kāmarāga, Anugraṣila, Kālakāla, Samaradhanañjaya, Atiraṇachaṇḍa, Vidyāvinita, Lōkālitā and Ugradaṇḍa.¹

It will be seen that, in spite of the bull emblem, the seal described above does not resemble those attached to the Sanskrit charters of the Early Pallava kings as they do not bear any legend.² It is interesting to note that the seal of the Rēyūru grant of Narasiṃhavarman II resembles in this respect the seals of the Early Pallavas of the Sanskrit charters, whereas the seal of the Kurram plates³ of Paramēśvaravarman I, who was the father of the said king and issued the present charter as well, bears a legend. Still more interesting is the fact that the seal of the Kurram plates and that of the present charter, both issued by the same Pallava king, do not exhibit any close resemblance between them. The seal of the former grant has been described by Hultzsch in the following words: "The seal is about 2½ inches in diameter and bears a bull which is seated on a pedestal, faces the left and is surmounted by the moon and a liṅga. Further up, there are a few much obliterated syllables. A legend of many letters passes round the whole seal. Unfortunately it is so much worn that I have failed to decipher it."⁴

The date of the record is quoted (lines 23-24) as Sunday, Pausa-sukla 13 in the nineteenth regnal year of king Paramēśvaravarman I. In line 13, the Ayana or Uttarāyana (i.e. the Makara-saṅkrānti) is mentioned as the occasion of the grant. The importance of the date will be discussed later on.

The characters belong to the Telugu-Kannaḍa alphabet of the seventh century A.D. They generally resemble the characters employed in the Rēyūru grant, although some akṣaras, e.g. āch, y, r, etc., have different forms, and on the whole the present record exhibits an earlier look. Of initial vowels, a occurs in lines 12, 15 and 17; ā in lines 13, 22 and 24; i in line 19; u in line 13; and e in lines 17 and 23. The upadhmanīya has been employed many times in lines 4 (twice), 8 (twice), 9 (twice), 14, 15 and 18, while the jihvāmūliya only once in line 8.

The language of the inscription is Sanskrit. The major part of it is written in prose, although there are three stanzas in the Anuṣṭubh metre in lines 19-23. Two of these are the usual imprecatory and benedictory verses. The third stanza contains the name of the executor of the document and is also found in a modified form in the Rēyūru grant.

Among orthographical peculiarities, mention may be made of the general reduplication of many of the consonants following r. The rules of Sandhi, which are optional in prose composition, have not been observed in some cases. Cases of Sandhi in expressions like *pāpaś-sārīra*⁵ in line 19 are interesting. The writing exhibits a general tendency to use the class nasal and, excepting a few cases (cf. saṃra[m]jana* in line 8, saṃbhūtō in line 29), the anusvāra has been changed to class nasals in Sandhi. The final m at the end of a stanza has in one case (line 20) been wrongly changed to anusvāra. In another case (line 24,) it has been similarly changed before a vowel. Double nasal has been used in saṃnīcharantaḥ in line 18.

In style, the record under discussion closely resembles that of the Sanskrit charters of the Early Pallava rulers.⁶ Among copper-plate charters of the Later Pallavas of Siṃhavishṇu's line, this characteristic is noticed only in the Rēyūru grant of Narasimhavarman II and not even in the Kurram plates of Paramēśvaravarman I who issued the present charter. The records of the early rulers of the Later Pallava house (i.e. the branch represented by Simhaviṣṇu and his descendants) are mostly on stone. The only copper-plate grants of this house, issued by rulers who flourished before Nandivarman Pallavamalla (a descendant of Bhīmanavarman, brother of Simhaviṣṇu), are only three in number, viz. the Kuram plates and the present record belonging to Paramēśvaravarman I and the Rēyūru grant of Narasimhavarman II. Of these, the Kurram plates bear close affinity in respect of the script and style with the grants of Nandivarman Pallavamalla such as the Udayendiram and Kasakudi plates.¹ It is an elaborate praśasti written in Sanskrit prose and verse and Tamil prose and in the Grantha and Tamil alphabets and contains, besides the details of the grant, three lengthy sections, viz. an invocation, a legendary account of the origin of the Pallavas and a description of the issuer of the charter and his ancestors. The style of the present record as well as of the Rēyūru grant, on the other hand, is, like that of the Sanskrit charters of the Early Pallavas, much simpler. Many of the passages occurring in the Early Pallava grants have been used in these two records without any modification or with slight modification.² The same or similar epithets applied to different rulers in different records would suggest that the officers who drafted the documents were scarcely very scrupulous about the accuracy of statement. The number of epithets used with reference to the donor and his ancestors in the present record is smaller than in the Rēyūru grant.

² See above, Vol. XXIV, Plate facing p. 297. The Prakrit charters of the earlier Pallava ruler Śivaskandavarman (about the first quarter of the fourth century A.D.) have, however, seals bearing legend (cf. Select Inscriptions, pp. 433, note 3, 437).

Ant.*, Vol. V, p. 50); Omgodu, Pikira, Mangalur and Vilavatti grants of Siṃhavarmān (above, Vol. XV, p. 246; Vol. VIII pp. 159 ff.; Ind. Ant., Vol. V, p. 154; above, Vol. XXIV, p. 301).

As in the case of the Rēyūru grant and many of the Sanskrit charters of the Early Pallavas the inscription begins with the auspicious word svasti followed by the maṅgala : jitam Bhagavatā, "Victorious is the Lord". The next passage refers to the issue of the charter from Kāñchīpura. Then (lines 1-2) the Pallava family, to which the donor of the charter belonged, is introduced as belonging to the Bhāradvāja gōtra and as having performed many sacrifices including the Aśvamēdha. As in many Early Pallava charters, this no doubt refers to the horse-sacrifice celebrated by two of the Early Pallava kings, viz. Śivaskandavarman and Kumāravishṇu.³ In lines 2-10, the donor of the grant, king Paramēśvaravarman I, is introduced as the son of Mahēndravikramavarman (i.e. Mahēndravarmān II, circa 668-69 A.D.), the grandson of Narasimhavarman I (circa 630-68 A.D.) and the great-grandson of Mahēndravarmān I (circa 600-30 A.D.). The epithets sva-vīry-ādhiḡata-rājya, pratāp-ōpanata-rāja-maṇḍala, madhyama-lōka-pāla and lōka-pālānām-pañchama, applied in the present record to Mahēndravarmān I, are used with reference to his grandson Mahēndravikramavarman or Mahēndravarmān II in the Rēyūru grant and in connection with some other rulers in the Early Pallava charters. It is difficult to believe that all the rulers called sva-vīry-ādhiḡata-rājya succeeded in adding any territory to their paternal kingdom; but the epithet seems to suit Mahēndravarmān I (son of Simhaviṣṇu) better than his grandson of the same name. We do not agree with the view⁴ that the epithets madhyama-lōka-pāla and lōka-pālānām-pañchama refer to the god Varuṇa. As we have elsewhere⁵ shown, the four Lōka-pālas or the guardians of the four different quarters were Yama, Varuṇa, Kubēra and Vāsava,⁶ and the king's description as the fifth Lōka-pāla means to say that he was a protector of the earth like those divine guardians of the quarters. In classical Sanskrit literature also the king is often called madhyama-lōka-pāla or protector of the central world (i.e. the earth bounded by the four quarters guarded by the Lōka-pālas).⁷

⁷ Cf. Raghuvamśa, II, 16. Madhyama-lōka may also mean the earth lying between the heaven and the lower world.

Among the three epithets applied to Narasimhavarman I in the present record, the Rēyūru grant applies bahu-samara-labdha-yaśaḥ-prakāśa and vidhi-vihita-sarva-maryāda to Paramēśvaravarman I and vasudhātāl-aika-vīra (forming the latter part of a bigger epithet) to Narasimhavarman II. In the inscription under study, Paramēśvaravarman I has been called prajā-saṁhram-jana-paripālana-nitya-yukta and Kaliyuga-dōsh-āvasanna-dharm-ōddharana-nitya-sannaddha while these epithets are applied to Narasimhavarman II in the Rēyūru grant in the slightly modified forms : prajā-saṁhram-jana-paripālana-ōdyōga-satata-satya-vrata-dikshita and Kali-yuga-dōsh-āpahṛita-dharm-ōddharana-nitya-sannaddha. The claim of the Pallava rulers from the fifth century down to the age of the present charter to have up-lifted Dharma above the dōsha of the Kali age seems to suggest that their ideal was to revitalise their Brahmanical faith which had been encroached upon by heretical doctrines like Buddhism.¹ The donors of both the Rēyūru grant and the present charter are called 'devotee of the feet of the lord, the father'; but, while the Rēyūru grant describes Narasimhavarman II as a paramabhāgavata (i.e. devotee of the Bhagavat or the god Viṣṇu), paramamāhēśvara (i.e. devotee of Mahēśvara or Śiva) and paramabrahmaṇya (i.e. devotee of the god Brahman or devoted to the Brāhmaṇas), his father was a paramamāhēśvara and a paramabrahmaṇya but not a paramabhāgavata according to the present grant.

Another interesting fact is that the Rēyūru grant applies the epithet yathāvad-ābhīṣṭi-āśvamēdh-ady-anēka-kratu-yājīn to Paramēśvaravarman I. The present record of Paramēśvaravarman I himself, however, does not credit him with the celebration of the horse-sacrifice. On the other hand, it applies the same epithet to the Pallava family. This shows that the epithet has been wrongly applied in the Rēyūru grant to Paramēśvaravarman I who did not perform the Āśvamēdh till his nineteenth regnal year (i.e. the date of the present grant) and probably never at all.

Lines 10-17 record the grant proper. It is stated that the king made the grant on the occasion of the Ayana, i.e. the Uttarāyana-saṁkrānti (Makara-saṁkrānti) in this case since the month specified in line 23 is Paushya. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Dēvaśarman who was the son of Dōṇaśarman (Drōṇaśarman?) and grandson of Svāmīśarman. The donee's family hailed from the village called Urpuṭūru-grāma and belonged to the Maudgalya gōtra and Āpastamba sūtra. His grandfather is described as an expert in the Vēdas, Vēdāṅgas, Itihāsas and Purāṇas exactly as the grandfather of the donee of the Rēyūru grant.

The gift village was Kubupūru situated on the right or southern bank of the river Musuna within the Pūmi rāshṭra. The village was made a brahmadēya and endowed with all kinds of exemptions. In the description of the village, there is an expression which seems to read Muvuṇḍya-mārggē which either means 'on the road leading to Muvuṇḍya' or 'in the subdivision called Muvuṇḍya'. The king's order was addressed to the inhabitants of the said village which is stated to have been granted for the increase of the longevity and health of the donor. This seems to suggest that the grant was made in connection with the king's recovery from an illness. The officers were ordered to exempt the gift village from the collection of taxes and other levies while on their tours of collection. The transgressor of the order was liable to physical punishment.

The above section is followed in the document in lines 19-21 by two of the usual imprecatory and benedictory stanzas. Another verse that follows in lines 21-23 says that the executor of the grant was Kuḷavarman who was the son of Nagi^o or Tagi-pallava and the ruler of Nandakurra. This stanza is also found in lines 20-21 of the Rēyūru grant in the following modified form :

The executor of the Rēyūru grant was therefore Rājāditya who was the son of Sōmāditya and the ruler of Nandakurra. The word nripēśvara in these cases apparently means 'a ruler' and not 'a king of kings' or 'a ruler named Īśvara'.¹ The chiefs of Nandakurra were no doubt feudatories of the Pallava kings of Kāñchi at least during the reigns of Paramēśvaravarman I and Narasimhavarman II. Rājāditya, son of Sōmāditya, was preceded in the rulership of Nandakurra by Kuḷavarman, son of Tagī° or Nagī-pallava whose name seems to point to his descent from the Pallava family. But what relations existed between the two cannot be determined without further evidence.

Lines 23-25 record that the document was written by Viśēshavidita belonging to the Ghanaskandha family (or, the family of Ghanaskandha who may have been an ancestor of the scribe) on Sunday, Paushya-sudi 13 in the nineteenth regnal year of Paramēśvaravarman I. The record then ends with the maṅgala: svasty=astu gō-Brāhmanēbhyah, "Let happiness come to the cows and Brāhmaṇas."²

The importance of the present inscription lies in its date. No dated inscription of Paramēśvaravarman I has hitherto been published and this happens to be the first record of the king, which offers a verifiable date. So long there was no means to determine the date of this king's accession with any amount of certainty. Now, with the help of this record and the Rēyūru grant which is the only dated inscription of his son, the reign period of Paramēśvaravarman I can be determined with a fair degree of precision.

The Pallava king Narasimhavarman I seems to have been living about the year 668 A.D. when, with his help, Mānavarman succeeded in seizing the throne of Ceylon,³ whereas the Chālukya monarch Vikramāditya I is known from the Gadval plates,⁴ dated the 25th April, 674 A.D., to have fought with the three successive Pallava kings named Narasimha (i.e. Narasimhavarman I), Mahendra (i.e. Mahendrarvarman II), and Īśvara (i.e. Paramēśvaravarman I). These facts show that the death of Mahendrarvarman II and the accession of his son Paramēśvaravarman I took place sometime between 668 A.D. and the 25th April of 674 A.D. Now the charter under study was issued in the nineteenth regnal year of Paramēśvaravarman I, that is to say, sometime between 687 A.D. and April 693 A.D. The exact date when the charter was written is Paushya-sudi 13, Sunday, while the grant was made on the occasion of the Ayana or Uttarāyana-saṅkrānti (i.e. Makara-saṅkrānti).

In his recent work entitled A History of South India,⁵ Prof. K. A. Nilakanta Sastri gives the duration of the rule of Paramēśvaravarman I as 670-80 A.D. and of his son and successor Narasimhavarman II as 680-720 A.D., while we have suggested the following reign-periods for these two Pallava kings: Paramēśvaravarman I, circa 670-95 A.D.; Narasimhavarman II, circa 695-722 A.D.⁶ In the absence of any dated record of the time of the rulers in question, difference of opinion as regards the duration of their reign-periods was of course inevitable. But now we have a record of each of the two kings, both of them bearing verifiable dates. From the present epigraph we learn that Paramēśvaravarman I ruled at least down to his nineteenth regnal year and that, in the said year of his reign, Paushya-sudi 13, was a Sunday, although whether Uttarāyana occurred on the same day or a few days earlier or later cannot be determined from the words of the epigraph since the document may have been written sometime after the grant had been made on the day of the Uttarāyana-saṅkrānti or a few days before to keep the document ready for the occasion of the grant to be made on the day of the saṅkrānti. If therefore Paramēśvaravarman I ascended the throne about 670 A.D., he could not have ended his rule much earlier than 689 A.D. Similarly, the Rāyūru grant was issued on the occasion of a lunar eclipse on the full-moon day of Vaiśākha in the twelfth regnal year of Narasimhavarman II and, about the approximate period of this king's rule, lunar eclipse occurred on the full-moon of Vaiśākha only in the years 701, 702, 711 and 720 A.D. suggesting that his first regnal year roughly corresponded to 690, 691, 700 or 709 A.D.¹

We have seen that the nineteenth regnal year of Paramēśvaravarman I could not have fallen earlier than 687 A.D. and later than April 693 A.D. During this entire period, Pausa-sudi 13 fell on a Sunday only in the year 687 A.D., although the Uttarāyana-saṅkrānti occurred on the previous day. The date corresponds to the 22nd of December 687 A.D., while the saṅkrānti took place on the 21st of the same month. Thus the 19th regnal year of Paramēśvaravarman I fell between December 686 and December 688 A.D. He therefore ascended the throne between December 688 and December 669 A.D. His first regnal year should probably be regarded as having corresponded to 669-70 A.D. His son and successor Narasimhavarman II seems to have ascended the throne about 690-91 or 700 A.D.

The following geographical names are mentioned in the inscription : Kāñchīpura whence the charter was issued ; Kubupūru-grāma which was the subject of the grant ; Pūmi-rāshṭra in which the gift village was situated ; the Muvuvaḍya(?)-mārga and the Musuṇa-nadī near the gift village ; Urputūru-grāma where the donee's family lived ; and Nandakurra which seems to have been the capital of the chief who executed the grant. Of these, Kāñchīpura, the capital of the Pallavas, is well-known, while Nandakurra has been tentatively identified with modern Nandavaram in the Udayagiri Taluk of the Nellore District. The Musuṇa-nadī seems to be no other than the modern Musi which runs along the boundary line between the Kandukuru Taluk in Nellore and the Ongole Taluk in Guntur and falls in the Bay of Bengal to the north of the mouth of the Palēru. Since the village of Kubupūru stood on its southern bank, it seems to have been situated in the present Podili-Kandukuru region of Nellore. The Pūmi rāshṭra, to which it belonged, appears to have comprised parts of the Nellore District lying to the south of the ancient Muṇḍa-rāshṭra. Urputūru is apparently the present village of Upputūru in the Bapatla Taluk of the Guntur District.

No. 10—KILUR INSCRIPTION OF NANDIVARMAN, YEAR 16

K. G. KRISHNAN, OOTACAMUND

The inscription¹ edited here is engraved on a rock in the prākāra of the Virattānēśvara temple at Kilūr, Tirukkōvilūr Taluk, South Arcot District. The text of the record has been published in the South Indian Inscriptions, Vol. VII, No. 925. Palaeographically the inscription may be attributed to the ninth century A. D. The script as well as the language of the record is Tamil. The inscription is dated in the sixteenth year of the reign of Kō-Vijaiya-Nandivikramaparumaṇ and records a gift by Maṇavaṇ Pūdi alias Tennavaṇ Iṇṅōvēlār. The gift consisted of twentyfour kaḷaṇṇu of pure gold weighed by Viṭṭēviṭṭu, the standard stone, out of the interest of which the Nagarattār of Tirukkōvalūr undertook to supply ghee for burning a lamp day and night in front of Mādēva of Tiruvirattāṇam at Tirukkōvalūr.

The record is important in that it proves the contemporaneity of Bhūti Vikramakēśari, the earliest well-known Koḍumbālūr chief, with the Pallava king Nandivarman (III). The genealogy of the family of the Irukkuvēls, to which this chief belonged, has been thoroughly discussed by Shri K. V. Subrahmanya Iyer and Shri K. S. Vaidyanathan.²

The name of the donor in this record consists of two words, viz. Maṇavaṇ and Pūdi. While the former stands for his father's name, the latter is his own name and is only a Tamil variant for Sanskrit Bhūti.³ It is known from the Mūvarkōyil inscription⁴ of Bhūti Vikramakēśari that Vikramakēśari was a title earned by him for his success in battle against the Pallava king as well as Vira-pāṇḍya and Vaṇji Vēl (i.e. the Chēra king). Maṇavaṇ Pūdi alias Tennavaṇ Iṇṅōvēlār figures in a number of inscriptions of Rājakēśarivarman who has been identified with Āditya I. Of these, a record⁵ from Tiruppalāttuṇai, dated in the 27th regnal year of a Rājakēśarivarman, mentions one Tennavaṇ Iṇṅōvēlār alias Maṇavaṇ Pūdiyār. Kaṇṇālī, the wife of Tennavaṇ Iṇṅōvēlār alias Maṇavaṇ Pūdi who is the same as the donor of the present record, figures as the donatrix in another inscription⁶ from Tiruppalāttuṇai. It is not unlikely that the same Kaṇṇālī is spoken of as one of the wives of Bhūti Vikramakēśari in his Mūvarkōyil record. Varaguṇā, his other wife, may be identified with the homonymous lady mentioned as the wife of Tennavaṇ Iṇṅōvēlār in another inscription⁷ of Rājakēśarivarman. Bhūti Parāntakaṇ, a son of this chief according to the Mūvarkōyil inscription, built a stone temple for the god at Andanallūr in the fourteenth regnal year of Parakēsarivarman¹ and gave land as kānikkaḍamai five years later² to Araiyaṇ Vira-śōḷaṇ who in his turn gave it back to the ūrār of Andavanallūr after a period of six years.³ The date of this last transaction is the twentyfifth year of Parakēsarivarman's reign, which is too high for any king bearing the said title and ruling in the period in question except Parāntaka I. It follows that Bhūti Vikramakēśari, the father of Bhūti Parāntaka, was a contemporary of Āditya I. It will thus be seen that Maṇavaṇ Pūdi is the same as Bhūti Vikramakēśari who was the husband of Kaṇṇaḷi and Varagunā and was a contemporary of both Nandivarman and Āditya I.

The donor's relationship with the Chōḷas may be examined here. His mother Anupamā was a Chōḷa princess according to the Mūvarkōyil inscription. One Pūdi Mādēvaḍigaḷ⁴ is mentioned as the queen of Kaṇṇaradēva who may be identified with the homonymous son⁵ of Āditya I, as she figures as the donatrix in an inscription⁶ dated in the 6th year of Maduraikoṇḍa Parakēsarivarman, i.e. Parāntaka I. This Pūdi Mādēvaḍigaḷ was probably a sister of Maṇavaṇ Pūdi.⁷ A record⁸ dated in the third year of the reign of Parāntaka I mentions Pūdi Āditta Piḍāri, the wife of Prince Arikulakēśari and the daughter of Teṇṇavaṇ Ilaṅgōvēḷār. Thus Bhūti Vikramakēśari seems to be allied to the Chōḷa family through his female relatives, viz. his mother Anupamā, sister Pūdi Mādēvaḍigaḷ, and daughter Pūdi Āditta Piḍāri. It is interesting to note that within a few years from the date of the present record, the Chōḷa kings succeeded in weaning away the allegiance of the family ultimately from the Pallava side.

Maṇavaṇ Pūdi alias Bhūti Vikramakēśari claims, in his Mūvarkōyil inscription, to have fought against Vira-pāṇḍya who has been identified with Chōḷan-talai-koṇḍa Vira-pāṇḍya, the adversary of Sundara-chōḷa and Āditya II. It may be noted here that Vira-pāṇḍya was a junior contemporary of Rājasimha, the opponent of Parāntaka I. In one of Rājasimha's inscriptions,⁹ a servant of Vira-pāṇḍya is referred to and hence it may be presumed that Vira-pāṇḍya continued the feud between the Chōḷas and the Pāṇḍyas after Rājasimha's flight to Ceylon. Therefore it is possible to surmise that Bhūti Vikramakēśari encountered Vira-pāṇḍya during the reign of Parāntaka I. This may very well explain the vigour with which Āditya II fought and ultimately killed Vira-pāṇḍya who was perhaps a continued source of trouble for the Chōḷas from the days of Parāntaka I.

The Pallava king mentioned in the record under study may be identified with the last king of that name, viz. Nandivarman III. Of all the inscriptions referring to Maṇavaṇ Pūdi, only the present record belongs to the reign of Nandivarman III and therefore its date may be taken as the ² Ibid., Vol. VIII, No. 668. The inscription refers to the nineteenth regnal year of Parakēsarivarman. It may be noted that the transactions recorded in the inscriptions referred to in this and the next foot-note conclusively prove the identity of the kings mentioned in them as well as the date of Bhūti Vikramakēśari.

She is first referred to (without her name being mentioned) in a record (ibid., Vol. XIII, No. 321) dated in the 27th year of a Rājakēsarivarman who has been identified with Āditya I. Another inscription (ibid., Vol. VIII, No. 554) in which she figures as a donatrix is dated in the 23rd year of a Parakēsarivarman who is no doubt Parāntaka I as the regnal year is too high for any other Parakēśari of this period.

earliest for Bhūti Vikramakēsari. Another epigraph, dated in the 3rd year of Parakēsari-varman identified with Parāntaka I and referring to Pūdi Āditta Piḍāri, the queen of Arikulakēsari and the daughter of Teṇṇavaṇ Ilaṅgōvēlār, seems to provide the latest reference to this chief. The range of the period covered by these inscriptions, which is less than fifty years, does not allow us to suggest the existence of different chiefs bearing the same title Teṇṇavaṇ Ilaṅgōvēlār. Moreover every member of this family adopted a different title in order to distinguish himself from the others¹ and Maṇavaṇ Pūdi was the only chief with the title Teṇṇavaṇ Ilaṅgōvēlār. In view of the identification of his Pallava overlord mentioned in the present record with Nandivarman III, Bhūti Vikramakēsari's claim to have defeated a Pallava king's army (cf. Pallavasya dhvajjyāḥ)² on the banks of the Kāvērī deserves to be studied in the context of Parāntaka's claim to have conquered the Pallavas.³

The association of Tirukkōvilūr, the findspot of the present record, with one of the forebears of the Vēlirs of Koḍumbāḷūr is clearly referred to in some of the verses in the Saṅgam literature.⁴ Malaiyamāṇ Tirumuḍikkāri, a chief of this region, was famous for his philanthropy. Very interesting is the statement⁵ that the three kings (i.e. the Chēra, Chōḷa and Pāṇḍya) vied with each other in enlisting the support of this chief. We have already seen how the Koḍumbāḷūr family was wooed and ultimately admitted into the circle (vaṛga) of the Chōḷas. The common patronage bestowed upon Vikkiyaṇṇaṇ, probably a Vēlir chieftain, by both the Chēra Sthāṇu Ravi and the Chōḷa Āditya I furnishes a clear contemporary evidence⁶ of the unique position enjoyed by the Vēlirs in the Tamil country.

No. 11—INSCRIPTIONS OF CHANDRAS OF ARAKAN

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

In February 1957, the Director of the Archaeological Survey of Burma, Mandalay, kindly sent to me for examination photographic prints of two small inscriptions recently found at Vēsālī near Mrohaung in the Akyab District, Arakan. While informing him of the results of my examination of the epigraphs, I requested him to send me a few inked impressions of the records for further study and publication. He was kind enough to comply with my request and estampages of the epigraphs reached me in March together with an impression of a third record from the same place.

The first inscription is engraved on a slab recovered from the ruins of a Stūpa on the U-nhissaka hill at Vēsālī. The slab bearing the second record belongs to what is called the Ānanda-chandra Stūpa standing on a hill near Vēsālī. It is still in situ. The third epigraph is incised on an octagonal pillar six feet high. It belongs to a Stūpa traditionally known to have been constructed by a ruler named Sūryachandra.

The slab bearing the first inscription is stated to measure eighteen inches in length, ten inches in height and six inches in thickness. There are only five lines of writing. The lines are about thirteen inches long, although line 2 is slightly bigger owing to two letters, originally omitted through oversight, being engraved in the left margin. The highest number of letters in a line is 18 (line 2) and the smallest only 13 (line 4).

The second inscription, consisting of four lines of writing, covers an area about ten inches in length and four inches in height. The letters are slightly smaller in size than in the first epigraph. The preservation of the writing in both these records is fairly satisfactory although a few letters are damaged or rubbed off here and there. The third inscription, which is fragmentary, shows traces of six lines of writing covering an area about twentyfour inches in length and nine inches in height. In this inscription, only traces of a few letters in the first line remain while a number of letters in all the other lines are broken away. Some of the extant letters of the record are also worn out and difficult to decipher.

The characters of the first epigraph closely resemble those of a votive inscription in two lines on a monastery bell found at Vēsālī, which was published with an illustration by the late Prof. E. H. Johnston in the Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies, Vol. XI, 1943-46, pp. 358 ff.¹ The alphabet of both the records has a close resemblance with that used in certain inscriptions of the fifth and sixth centuries A.D., discovered in Eastern India. There is, however, an amount of local development noticed in the palaeography of all the three epigraphs now under study. This element is just slightly exhibited by Inscription No. 1 which is the earliest of the three. It is a little more pronounced in Inscription No. 2 which is a few decades later than the first inscription, while Inscription No. 3 belonging to a still later date exhibits it in a more considerable degree than even the second epigraph.

In a careful analysis of the characters of the Vēsālī bell inscription which may be assigned on palaeographical grounds to the same age as our Inscription No. 1, Johnston observes that the date of the record 'is shown by its forms for the letters ka and sa and its tripartite ya to be probably not later than A.D. 650' and that 'other indications, particularly the forms of sa and ma, suggest the unlikelihood of its being much earlier.¹ He further notes the close resemblance of the script with that of the Faridpur plate (A)² of Dharmāditya and the Faridpur plate³ of Gōpachandra. He doubts the genuineness of the Faridpur plate (B)⁴ of Dharmāditya and suggests that Gōpachandra's inscription may be earlier than Dharmāditya's. In this connection, he observes, "Sa has the triangle on the left in both plates (Dharmāditya's A and Gōpachandra's); but, while it is normal in Gōpachandra's, there are two instances, ll. 14 and 19, in 1722 (Dharmāditya's A), where the triangle is enlarged and the apex reaches right up to the top line, as in the bell. Ma is nearly normal in 1724 (Gōpachandra's plate), but shows the beginning of the process whereby the bell form is reached; 1722, on the other hand, has it in a form even more exaggerated than the bell and in l. 20 for instance the point of the angle is only just below the main line." After pointing out a few more differences between Dharmāditya's and Gōpachandra's inscriptions and comparing some of the letters in the bell inscription with those in certain other inscriptions of Eastern India, Johnston concludes, "These comparisons are sufficient to prove that we are dealing in the bell with a script which was derived from Eastern Bengal, descending possibly from a variety slightly later than any of those describe l..... if the date is fixed on the palaeographical evidence as somewhere in the first half of the seventh century A.D. the margin of error is likely to be small."

The above views on the date of the Vēsālī bell inscription (of the same age as our Inscription No. 1) do not appear to be fully justified as the inscription seems to be somewhat earlier. In the first place, the palaeography of our Inscription No. 1 closely resembles not only that of the Faridpur plates of Dharmāditya and Gōpachandra who flourished in the sixth century A.D. but also in respect of most of the characteristics that of certain earlier records of about the middle of the fifth century A.D. such as the Kalaikuri-Sultanpur plate⁵ of the Gupta year 120 (439 A.D.) and the Baigram plate⁶ of the Gupta year 128 (448 A.D.) even though the affinity may be slightly closer with the epigraphs of the sixth century. Secondly, the suggestions that Gōpachandra's plate is earlier than Dharmāditya's plates A and B and that the bell inscription is closer to the latter in respect of letters like s and m are both confusing. Pargiter seems to be justified in suggesting a later date for Gōpachandra's inscription as compared to Dharmāditya's epigraphs on the basis of the forms of the letter y' while similar forms of s and m are also noticed in earlier records like the Baigram plate of 448 A.D. There is also no reason to doubt the genuineness of Dharmāditya's plate B. Thirdly, on the other hand, forms of letters like y and h and signs like that of medial i as exhibited by our inscription (as also earlier records like the Baigram plate) are not met with in Bengal inscriptions later than the sixth century A.D.⁷ Of course h and medial i do not appear in the bell inscription. Fourthly, the internal evidence of our Inscription No. 1 seems to go against Johnston's dating if his own views on the date and evidence of the Mrohaung inscription¹ of Ānandachandra are taken into consideration. On palaeographical grounds and other considerations, Johnston places Ānandachandra's epigraph 'in the first half of the eighth century' and more precisely to a date not 'much later than A.D. 700'. Now, as will be shown below, our inscription was engraved during the reign of king Nitichandra who ascended the throne, according to the epigraph of Ānandachandra, 209 years before the incision of the latter's record. This would place Nitichandra's accession 'not much later than' 491 A.D. As a matter of fact, Johnston's dating of Ānandachandra's inscription was influenced by his views that the coins of Dēva-chandra (who ended his rule 266 years before Ānandachandra's accession) and Dharmavijaya (who began to rule 55 years before Ānandachandra) should be assigned on palaeographic grounds to the first half of the fifth and seventh centuries respectively. Our Inscription No. 1 as the Vēsālī bell inscription may be actually assigned on palaeographical grounds to the first half of the sixth century A.D. In our opinion, their characters may have descended from a variety slightly earlier than the Faridpur plates of Dharmāditya and Gōpachandra.

We have referred above to an amount of local development in the palaeography of the inscriptions under study. In Inscription No. 1, the letter h is written with a vertical line and a curve opening upwards or towards the right and joining the vertical towards the left not at the latter's bottom but slightly or considerably above it. This form of h is not noticed in East Indian inscriptions, in which the letter has its bottom curved towards the left. A vertical similar to that of h is sometimes noticed in ch as well (cf. line 2). Sometimes the form of m (cf. *mahā*² in line 2) appears to be more cursive than noticed in the East Indian records. Inscription No. 2 exhibits the same type of h. Medial ā in this inscription is in many cases indicated by a curve opened towards the right and placed at the head of the consonant.³ The vowel mark in jā in bhūbhujā (line 1) is also of this type, though this form of the letter is not found in Indian epigraphs. In several cases, medial ā sign ends in an inward bend almost making a loop. This resembles medial ī as used in some Indian inscriptions as well as in the modern Tamil alphabet. The form of the letter ṇ in svārthēṇa in line 1 (cf. also °rāgēṇa in the same line) exhibits a cursive form more developed than that found in Inscription No. 1. Generally, however, the palaeography of the present record resembles that of the other epigraph and appears to be only a few decades later than that of the latter. This is supported by the internal evidence of Inscription No. 2 which was incised during the reign of king Virachandra, the successor of Nitichandra of Inscription No. 1 according to Ānandachandra's epigraph referred to above although it quotes the name slightly differently. This record may be palaeographically assigned to a date about the last quarter of the sixth century. Nitichandra is stated to have ruled for 55 years and his successor, called Viryachandra in Ānandachandra's inscription but Virachandra on his coins, for 3 years only. The palaeography of the two records appears to suggest that Inscription No. 1 was engraved fairly early in Nitichandra's reign. It is interesting to note that the second epigraph writes Buddha with b while in Eastern India b was generally written by the sign for v from the seventh century A.D.

Inscription No. 3 exhibits the tripartite form of y as in the other two records as well as the same type of h. That, however, it was somewhat later than Inscriptions Nos. 1-2 seems to be suggested by the later danda-like medial ā sign and the slightly more developed sign of medial u (cf. also medial ū) resembling subscript y and rising to the level of the top mātrā of the consonant to its right. A local development seems to be exhibited by the serif at the top of these signs for medial u and ū.

² This form of the sign may be compared with that in certain East Indian records. See, e.g., śkū in line 3 of the Barganga inscription (above, Vol. XXX, Plate facing p. 67).

This tendency is noticed once in subscript y in Inscription No. 2 as well (cf. mya in line 2 with jyē in line 4). The form of m in Inscription No. 3 also shows some modification when compared to the same letter as found in the other two epigraphs. This type of m is not generally noticed in East Indian inscriptions. The epigraph possibly belongs to a date not much earlier than the second quarter of the seventh century A.D.

The language of Inscriptions Nos. 1-2 is corrupt Sanskrit. The first inscription begins with the Buddhist formula which is a stanza in the Āryā metre and Pali language; but it is found in a Sanskritised form in our record as in some votive epigraphs discovered in India.¹ The word param-ōpāsikasya has been wrongly used for param-ōpāsikāyāh. Of orthographical interest is the female name Chandraśrī(śrī)yā for Sanskrit Chandraśrī. Chandraśrī(śrī)yā of this record may be compared with names like Śrīyādēvi found in Indian epigraphs.² In dēyya-dharmma (line 5), dēyya is a Pāli word standing for Sanskrit dēya. The use of double nasal in dharmmo=yaṇm and *salvānāṇm=anu*³ (line 5) is noteworthy. The mute m at the end of the first of the two expressions has been retained before the following s of the word sarvva. Some consonants following r have been reduplicated.

Inscription No. 2 contains only two stanzas in the Anushtubh metre. The language is not faulty as in Inscription No. 1. But its orthography is characterised by the wrong use of n for ṇ in several cases. Final m has been wrongly changed to anusvāra in maṇḍanam (line 3) and final k in the word samyak (line 2) similarly to n (instead of ṇ) before the following n in sandhi.

The language of Inscription No. 3 seems to be corrupt Pali. Its purport is, however, not clear, although it seems to contain a Buddhist tract. The passages that can be read in this fragmentary inscription are : dhmma cha at the end of line 2 ; °sēkinō cha tu dayatu saṅpa° about the middle and mahiddhikō at the end of line 3 ; [Sa]°ṇvō(bō)dhēm(dhī)m=avayan=niṇu° about the middle and vishayam bhūtena at the end of line 4 ; dvārē phusantu sivaṇ=uttama[m] at the end of line 5 ; and sādhū sādhū ti || in the last line.

The first two lines of Inscription No. 1 contain the stanza 'Yē dharmmā°', etc. The language of the remaining three lines (lines 3-5) is corrupt; but the sentence covering them appears to say that the stone bearing the inscription, apparently meaning the object or structure to which it belonged, was the gift (dēyya-dharmma) of the param-ōpāsikā named Sāvitām-Chandraśrīyā who was the queen (dēvī) of the illustrious Nitichandra. The letters in the king's name are damaged; but the reading is certain. Whether the anusvāra in the name Sāvitām is unnecessarily added cannot be determined. There is an epithet applied to the king's or queen's name, which seems to read chandravat-parchhināsya and is unintelligible unless the reading is amended. The purpose of the gift is quoted as 'the anuka(or kta)ma . . . of all beings,' there being no space for more than two or three letters after anukama or anuktama at the end of the line (line 5), although the expression expected here is anuttama-jñān-āvāptayē.⁴ The letters anuka(kta?)ma in our record possibly stand for anuttama with the letters jñānāya lost at the end of the line.

The two stanzas in Anushtubh in Inscription No. 2 state that the illustrious Virachandradēva constructed a hundred Buddha-stūpas, out of his love for the Satya-dharma, with his own money. The expression Buddha-stūpa appears to mean Stūpas built on the relics of the Buddha while Satya-dharma or the true faith refers to the Buddhist religion usually called the Sad-dharma by its followers.⁴ One of the epithets of the king says that he obtained his kingdom or sovereignty through Dharma. This probably suggests that he normally succeeded his predecessor on the throne and was not a usurper.

The importance of the two inscriptions lies in the fact that they are the only epigraphic records of kings Nītichandra and Virachandra of the Buddhist royal family of the Chandras of Arakan although both the rulers are known from their coins as well as the Mrohaung pillar inscription of Ānandachandra. Nīti-chandra's coins bear the legend Nīti or *Nīti*chandra while Virachandra is similarly called Vīra or *Vir*achandra on his coins.¹ As pointed out above, the Mrohaung inscription of Ānandachandra mentions Virachandra as Viryachandra.

The Mrohaung pillar inscription gives very valuable information regarding the genealogy and chronology of the Chandras of Arakan, who had their capital at Vēsālī. It is a prāśasti of king Ānandachandra belonging to a family called Dēv-āṇḍaj-ānvaya or śrī-Dharmarāj-āṇḍaja-vamśa. Ānandachandra's father Dharmachandra seems to be described as belonging to the Is-ānvaya, probably meaning 'a family of kings' or 'a royal family', while an ancestor of Ānandachandra, named Vajrasakti, is called 'born in the Dēva family' either to impart the same idea or to indicate that his mother belonged to the Dēva dynasty. The word āṇḍaja means a bird and dēv-āṇḍaja possibly indicates the divine bird Garuḍa. The expression śrī-Dharmarāj-āṇḍaja-vamśa possibly means 'the bird (Garuḍa) family of the illustrious and virtuous kings'. The inscription was written for recounting Ānandachandra's pious activities in the first nine years of his reign and was apparently engraved in his ninth regnal year. While the second part of the inscription is a eulogy of Ānandachandra, its first part contains three sections quoting the names of the kings together with the duration of their reigns, who were believed to have ruled over the area in question before Ānandachandra. The first of these three sections deals with certain kings who altogether ruled for 1016 or 1060 (sahasraṁ śaḍ-daś-ādhikam) years. The beginning of this section is damaged; but, as all the five kings at the commencement of the extant portion are stated to have each ruled for 120 years, it is clear that this section (or at least its earlier part) is mythical. The second section deals with the Chandra kings, sixteen of whom are stated to have ruled for 230 years. The list, however, enumerates only thirteen names although their reign-periods as quoted in it come up to 230 years. This is possibly because three kings of the dynasty, who may have ruled for a few weeks or months, were omitted from the list. The last of the three sections deals with the family to which Ānandachandra belonged and quotes the names of his eight predecessors stated to have together ruled for 119 years and 9 months. While the first section reminds us of the mythical account of the ancient history of Kashmir in the earlier chapters of Kalhaṇa's Rājataranginī, the second and third sections resemble the genealogical part of the inscriptions of such dynasties as the Eastern Chālukyas of Vēṅgī and the Imperial Gaṅgas of Kalinga² and have the appearance of being based on fairly authentic information. It has, however, to be pointed out that Indian inscriptions, earlier than Ānandachandra's record, often quote the names of the predecessors of a king generally without the duration of their reigns.

The chronology of the Chandras of Arakan depends on the determination of the date not only of their coins and the inscriptions now under study but also of the Mrohaung pillar inscription of Ānandachandra. Johnston points out how the script of Ānandachandra's record is 'almost entirely identical' with that of the Nalanda inscription³ of Yaśōvarman 'both in the form of the letters and in the style of writing'.¹ This Yaśovarman is known to have sent an embassy to the Chinese emperor in 731 A.D. and was defeated by king Lalitāditya Muktapīḍa of Kashmir, who ruled in the period circa 726-60 A.D.² He seems to have died in or shortly before V.S. 811=754 A.D.³ Yaśovarman's reign may thus be assigned approximately to the period 725-54 A.D. The Nalanda inscription seems to have been incised fairly early in his reign since Nalanda lay outside his own dominions in the territories of the Gauda king of Bengal and Bihar, whom Yaśovarman defeated and killed sometime before his own defeat at the hands of king Lalitāditya of Kashmir about 733 A.D.⁴ We may therefore assign the incision of the Nalanda inscription to a date in the period 725-33 A.D., say, to 729 A.D. If Ānandachandra's inscription is assigned approximately to the same date, his accession may be tentatively assigned to 720 A.D. On this basis, Ānandachandra's eight ancestors' rule of nearly 120 years may be roughly assigned to the period 600-720 A.D. and the 230 years of Chandra rule approximately to the period 370-600 A.D. On the same basis, the rule of the individual Chandra kings may be tentatively assigned to the following periods :

No. 12—VELUR INSCRIPTION OF VIJAYA-NARASIMHAVARMAN

K. D. SWAMINATHAN, MADRAS

The subjoined inscription¹ is engraved on a hero stone set up in the Vēdiappaṇ temple² at Vēlūr in the Chengam Taluk of the North Arcot District. Below the inscription is the representation of a warrior in bas-relief in a defiant attitude, holding a bow in his left hand and a sword in the right. There is also the representation of a small structure near his feet. I edit the inscription with the kind permission of the Government Epigraphist for India.

The language of the inscription is Tamil and the alphabet Vatteluttu. But the forms of certain aksharas remind us of Tamil characters; e.g., y in visaiya (line 1), *Paraiya*³ (line 3) and māliyār (line 4); l in Mēl (line 3); lu in Vēlūr and ālum (in line 3). In respect of palaeography, the epigraph closely resembles the Hanumantapuram inscription⁴ of Vijaya-Īśavaravarman. The form of ñ in ñāṇru (line 4) is slightly different from the usual form found in the inscriptions of the same period copied from the southern Districts.⁵ The characters are assignable to the 9th century A.D. The orthographical peculiarities do not call for any remarks. The word toru occurs also in Kannada⁶ and Telugu⁷ epigraphs of almost the same period.

The inscription is dated in the 2nd year of king Vijaya-Narasiṅgavarman (Narasimhavarman) and records the death of Paraiyamāliyār, the chief of Mēl-Vēlūr in Mikoṇṇai-nāḍu and a servant of Vāṇakōṇ Adiyaraiśar, in a cattle raid. Only four inscriptions of Vijaya-Narasimhavarman are so far known, though he ruled for at least 24 years. Two of them dated the 3rd and 18th years of his reign are found at Kīl-Muṭṭugūr⁸ in the North Arcot District, while a third dated the 24th year comes from Baṅgavāḍi⁹ in the Kolar District of Mysore, on the borders of the North Arcot District. The fourth record is found at Chinna-Nāgapūṇḍi¹⁰ in the Tiruttani Division of the Chittur District. The present inscription offers the earliest date for Narasimhavarman.

The importance of the record lies in its being the only inscription of Narasiṅgavarman in the Vatteluttu script, while the alphabet used in his other known inscriptions is Tamil. The use of Vatteluttu in an epigraph found so far north as Vēlūr is noteworthy. The existence of a number of similar hero stones in and around North Arcot¹¹ testifies to the disturbed state of the region during the 9th century A.D. The major portion of this District, with the bordering portions of Salem and Kolar, were under the sway of local chiefs who ruled contemporaneously with the Bāṇas, Nolambas and Gaṅgas during the eighth and ninth centuries A.D. During this period of confusion, Narasiṅgavarman of our record may have assumed the status of an independent ruler.

VELUR INSCRIPTION OF VIJAYA NARASIMHAVARMAN

Scale: One-fifth

As the figures of the elephant and the swan are found sculptured beneath the record of Narasimhavarman at Kil-Muttugūr, Hultzsch was inclined to assign this chief to the Gaṅga family.¹ There are two interesting epigraphs of the Western Gaṅga king Śrīpuruṣa in Vaṭṭeḷuttu characters at Oddapaṭṭi² in the Uttaraṅgarai Taluk of the Salem District bordering on the North Arcot District. Inscriptions of other Gaṅga chiefs are also found in the North Arcot District. From Nammiyēndal in the Polur Taluk comes an epigraph recording an order of Gaṅgaraiyaṅ Ālappirandān, who claims to have been born in the Gaṅga family and bore the titles 'lord of Kuvalāla', Kāvērivallabhaṅ and Nandagirināthaṅ, to the Ūravar of Ammai-ēndal assigning their village with its taxes as maḍapp-uram to the maṭha of Aghōraśiva-Mudaliyār at Tiruvaṅṇāmalai to be enjoyed permanently by him and his disciples in succession.³ A hero stone from Venmaṇi bearing an epigraph assignable to the 9th century A.D. records the death of one Gaṇavayaṅ who is described as the disciple of the preceptor (āśāṇ) Tennavaṅ, when Venmaṇi was destroyed in the time of Valluvilkaṇṇaraiyaṅ.⁴ During the second half of the ninth century, a branch of the Western Gaṅga family is known to have flourished in parts of the North Arcot District.⁵ All these show that North Arcot was under the sway and influence of the Gaṅgas during the ninth century. The emblem of the elephant in the Kil-Muttugūr record suggests the association of Narasimhavarman with the Gaṅgas. It is, however, not possible to say precisely the nature of this association. He may have been an early member of the branch of the Western Gaṅga family which held sway over the North Arcot District. It may be said that he was an independent ruler and was the overlord of the Bāṇa chief Vāṇakōṇ Adiyaraiśar, mentioned in the inscription. Vāṇakōṇ Adiyaraiśar appears to be the same as Skandha Bāṇādhiraṇja who figures in the Baṅgavāḍi inscription of Narasimhavarman.

The use of the Vaṭṭeḷuttu script in this inscription requires explanation. The scribe who engraved the record may have hailed from the west coast where Vaṭṭeḷuttu was popularly used, or the warrior Paraiyamāliyaṅ who was killed in action might have been a native of that region and the inscription recording his death might have been engraved in the script used in his native place. Instances of inscriptions engraved in characters unusual to a particular area are not wanting.⁶

Mikoṇrai-nāḍu as the name of a territorial division in the North Arcot District is also known from other inscriptions.⁷ Mēl-vēḷūr may be identified with Vēḷūr, the findspot of the record under review.

No. 13—INDRAGADH INSCRIPTION OF NANNAPPA, V. S. 767

KRISHNA DEVA, BHOPAL

This inscription¹ was discovered in March 1954 at the old site of Indragadh situated two miles north of Bhānpurā, headquarters of a Tahsil of that name in the Mandasaur District of Madhya Bharat (now Madhya Pradesh). The inscription was unearthened in the course of digging for building stones and was found about 3 feet below the surface amidst the excavated remains of an early medieval temple. The remains consisted of a shrine of sandstone with a Śivaliṅga in situ and many Śaiva images and architectural fragments of the early medieval period, which point to the existence of a Śiva temple in the age to which the inscription belongs. The place is studded with ancient remains and is picturesque, being enclosed by a rivulet on two sides and a hill containing an old ruined fort on the third side.

The sandstone slab, bearing the inscription, measures 29" long, 20" broad and 3½" thick. The record consists of 19 lines which are neatly and beautifully engraved. The characters belong to the North Indian Kuṭila script of the early 8th century A.D. and closely resemble those of the Jhalrapatan stone inscription² of the time of king Durgagaṇa of V.S. 746 and Kanaswa stone inscription³ of Śivagaṇa of V. S. 795. Among noteworthy forms may be mentioned final ṭ in mahat (line 13) and the conjuncts ñch in krañcha (line 14), jñ in sañjñā (line 7), ry in āchāryō* (line 6), etc. Medial u is expressed usually by means of a wedge-shaped attachment as in vasudhā (line 1) and occasionally by the curly form as in *gupai*⁴ (line 10). Medial ū is generally indicated by a double curl as in pūjanā (line 15); but two variant forms are noticed in the same line in pūrvā and pūrvaja. Medials i, ī and o have ornamental curly forms in line 1. The letter b has been indicated by the sign for v. Short wedge-shaped strokes have been frequently used in the place of a daṇḍa to mark the end of the first half of a stanza. As regards orthography, the consonants joined with a subscript r have not been generally doubled, while those in conjunction with a superscript r have been occasionally doubled. For cases of wrong sandhi, cf. gasmin=ittham (line 2; but see jvalan=iva in line 9). Final m has been wrongly changed to anusvāra before a vowel in some cases.

The language is Sanskrit and the major portion of the record is in verse, composed in elegant kāvya style. The record opens with the symbol for Om and an obeisance to Śiva, followed by two invocatory verses in praise of Śiva and Gaurī. Verse 4 describes the excellence and war-like exploits of king Nannappa who was the son of Bhāmāna of the Rāshtrakūṭa lineage. In the following four stanzas are praised two teachers of the Pāsupata sect, viz. Vinītarāśi and his disciple Dānarāśi. The ninth verse refers to the construction of a stone temple of Śiva by Dānarāśi. This is followed by two stanzas charging the city (i.e. the council of the elders of the city) for the maintenance of the temple. The next verse is merely imprecatory. Verses 13 and 14 supply the year and the season when the temple was constructed. Verse 15 which is the last stanza in the record under study mentions Durgāditya who was the son of Śaṅkara and hailed from Gauḍa-dēśa.¹ Then follows a section in prose which, after stating that the record was engraved by one Chāmuṇḍasōma, furnishes details of the endowments made in favour of the temple. This section, written in faulty and ungrammatical Sanskrit, was obviously drafted by a person other than the one who composed the beautiful verses; but the entire record appears to have been engraved by the same hand.

The date of the record is expressed in words (verses 13-14 in lines 13-14). It is stated that the temple was constructed during winter when seven hundred years exceeded by sixty-seven of the [era of the] world-famous Mālava kings had elapsed. Year 767 of the Mālava (Vikrama) era corresponds to 710-11 A.D.

The object is to record the construction of a temple of Śiva by the Pāśupata ascetic Dānarāśi. It is obviously represented by the excavated ruins of the temple that yielded the inscription. The inscription also records the endowments made to Guhśvara,² which appears to be the name of the deity enshrined in the temple, by Dēullikā, Takshullikā and Bhōginikā, daughters of one Kumāra of the Prāgvāta caste. The endowments included a house situated near the street in the western part of the fort which may be identified with the fort of Indragadh existing in ruins on the hill adjoining the site.³

The inscription is interesting in various ways. Firstly, it provides epigraphic evidence of the antiquity of the Indragadh site. Secondly, it furnishes the names of two Pāśupata teachers, Vinitarāśi and his disciple Dānarāśi who built the Śiva temple at Indragadh. Incidentally it proves the existence of the Pāśupata sect of Śaivism in Malwa during the early medieval period. Thirdly, by showing that the city was charged with the responsibility of carrying out repairs to the shrine and maintaining worship therein, the inscription throws light on one of the functions of the ancient city administration. Fourthly, this record dated in the year 767, supplies the latest date in 'the Mālava era' to be found in Malwa, which is 178 years later than the Mandasaur inscription of Yaśōdharman Viśṇuvardhana of the Mālava year 589.⁴ Fifthly, the name Nannappa, ending in the Kannāḍa honorific appa, affords another proof of the Kannāḍa origin of the Rāshtrakūṭas.⁵

But the importance of the inscription lies in the fact that it supplies the names of two new Rāshtrakūṭa chiefs, viz. Nannappa and his father Bhāmāna. From the way the name of Nannappa is mentioned in the record it is plausible to conclude that he was the reigning prince of Malwa in Mālava year 767=710-11 A. D. Now a Rāshtrakūṭa prince called Nannarāja is mentioned in the Multai plates⁶ dated Śaka 631 (709-10 A. D.), Tiwarkhed plates⁷ dated Śaka 553 (631-32 A. D.) and Sangalooda plates⁸ dated Śaka 615 (693-94 A. D.). In these plates, which all come from Berar, Nannarāja is called son of Svāmikarāja. Prof. Mirashi has shown the Tiwarkhed plates to be spurious.⁹ The dates provided for Nannarāja by the Multai plates, viz. Śaka 631 (709-10 A. D.), and by the Sangalooda plates, viz. Śaka 615 (693-94 A. D.), come very close to the Mālava year 767 (710-11 A. D.) furnished by the present record and one is tempted to identify Rāshtrakūṭa Nannarāja of the Berar plates with Rāshtrakūṭa Nannappa of the present record. The only discrepancy is that the name of the father of Nannarāja of the Berar records is given as Svāmīkarāja, while that of Nannappa is mentioned as Bhāmāna; but this discrepancy can be solved by assuming that Bhāmāna was the biruda of Svāmīkarāja and that, in the metrical composition of the present record (verse 4), the biruda suited the exigencies of the metre better than the name. Nannarāja would thus become identical with Nannappa, appa being the Kannaḍa honorific attached to the name Nappa or Nanna.¹ If this identification be accepted, it will show that Rāshtrakūṭa Nannarāja or Nannappa reigned from 693 to 712 A. D. and that his rule extended from Berar in the south to Malwa in the north. But from the undated Uṇḍikavāṭikā grant² of Rāshtrakūṭa Abhimanyu we know of another Rāshtrakūṭa family ruling in circa seventh century A. D. over the Hoshanagabad-Mhow region which falls between Berar and Malwa.³ How could two ruling families hold sway over the same region simultaneously? The difficulty is resolved by assuming that either the two Rāshtrakūṭa families were friendly and had agreed to have concurrent jurisdiction over the Mhow-Hoshangabad region or the two families were mutually at war trying to grab each other's territory. It is, however, more probable that the family of Abhimanyu had already passed out of the stage before the rise, in circa 693 A. D., of Nannarāja-Nannappa who could thus hold undisputed sway over the region extending from Berar in the south-east to Malwa in the north-west.

² Guhśvara as the name of Śiva also occurs in the Ellora plates of Dantidurga (above, Vol. XXV, pp. 26ff.).

We have one more inscription mentioning Nannarāja from Berar, viz. Nagardhan plates⁴ of Svāmīrāja, dated in the year 322 of an unspecified era. These plates were issued from Nāṇḍivardhana by Nannarāja, brother of the reigning prince Svāmīrāja and differ from the other Berar plates of Nannarāja not only in respect of palaeography, but also in leaving the era as well as the name of the dynasty unspecified and in calling Nannarāja a brother of Svāmīrāja instead of a son of Svāmīkarāja. As the year 322 of the record has been shown⁵ to refer to 573 A. D., this grant antedates the Multai and Sangalooda plates by over a century, thus indicating that Nannarāja of the Nagardhan plates was different from Nannarāja of the other Berar plates. The similarity of the names and the identity of territory, however, may show that Nannarāja and Svāmīrāja of the Nagardhan plates were probably earlier members of the same family. If this view is accepted, we have to conclude that Nāṇḍivardhana (modern Nagardhan near Ramtek, Nagpur District), the place of issue of the Nagardhan plates, was the earlier capital of the family. Their capital was subsequently shifted to Achalapura (modern Ellichpur) which is prominently mentioned in literature as well as in the spurious Tiwarkhed plates. Padmanagara, the place of issue of the Sangalooda plates, has been identified with Padmin near the town of Akola.⁶ It appears to have been an important town in the time of Nannarāja-Nannappa, if not the new political seat of the family.

Nanna appears to have been a popular name among the Rāshtrakūṭas and Rāshtrakūṭa chiefs bearing this name are also known from other inscriptions. One Nanna Guṇāvalōka is mentioned as the grandfather of Rāshtrakūṭa Tuṅga Dharmāvalōka in the latter's Bodhgaya stone inscription,⁷ dated in the year 15 of a regnal reckoning. Nanna Guṇāvalōka of this inscription, which is palaeographically assignable to circa 9th century A. D., is obviously not the same as Nanna of our record (710-11 A. D.). Similarly, Nanna referred to as the father of Rāshtrakūṭa Śaṅkara-gaṇa who issued the Daulatabad plates¹ dated Śaka year 715 (793 A. D.), too, cannot be identified with Nanna of our record due to the considerable gap of time between the two. A Rāshtrakūṭa Nannarāja is mentioned in a Prakrit inscription engraved in nail-headed characters of the 8th or 9th century A. D. on the back wall of the chapel between caves XXVI and XXVII at Ajanta.² On account of closer proximity of time and place, Nannarāja of the Ajanta inscription may more plausibly be identified with Nanna of the Daulatabad plates than with the homonymous chief of our record.

The Bayana memorial stone inscription,³ palaeographically datable in circa 8th century A. D., also refers (without specifying the family name) to a prince called Nanna during whose reign one Durgāditya was killed in the course of a fight at a place called Pimpala-Gaṇḍala. Mere identity of name and similarity of script do not warrant the identification of this prince with Nanna of our record, as the tract of Bayana is not contiguous with the known extent of Nannarāja-Nannappa's kingdom.⁴

The feudatory status of the family of Nannarāja-Nannappa is indicated by the non-assumption of paramount titles by any member of the family. We should also note the fact that Svāmīrāja of the Nagardhan plates bears the significant epithet bhaṭṭāraka-pādānuddhyāta. The paramount rulers of Berar in the time of Svāmīrāja (573 A. D.) were the Kalachuris who were ousted early in the 7th century A. D. by the Chālukyas of Badami. The territories of Pulakēśin II (610-42 A. D.) who is credited with the conquest of the three Mahārāshtrakas included Berar and also probably Malwa which continued to form part of the Chālukya empire in the time of his successors, viz. Vikramāditya I (655-80 A. D.), Vinayāditya (681-96 A. D.), and Vijayāditya (697-733 A. D.). The last two were the Chālukya suzerains of Nannarāja-Nannappa.⁵

⁵ [This is extremely doubtful. There is as yet no evidence to show that the Indragadh region formed a part of the dominions of the Chālukyas of Badāmi. It is also not certain that Nannappa was a feudatory ruler.—Ed.]

No. 14—THREE CHANDELLA CHARTERS

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

About the middle of 1955 I went to Banaras in order to examine and copy the inscriptions preserved at the Bhārat Kalā Bhavan, now attached to the Hindu University. On that occasion, Rai Krishnadasji, the founder-curator of the Kalā Bhavan, was kind enough to lend me pencil-rubbings of four copper-plate grants for examination. The rubbings enabled me to decipher the major parts of all the four inscriptions. But, for the publication of the records, an examination of the original plates was necessary. I therefore requested Rai Krishnadasji to secure the inscriptions for the Kalā Bhavan and also to give me an opportunity of examining them when acquired. About the end of the year, I was glad to receive for examination three out of the four inscriptions, which, I was told, had been secured for the Kalā Bhavan through the generosity of Seth G. D. Birla. All the three grants belong to the Chandēlla dynasty, one to king Madanavarman (known dates between 1129 and 1163 A. D.) and two to his grandson and successor¹ Paramardin (known dates between 1167 and 1202 A. D.). These three inscriptions are edited in the following pages with the permission of Rai Krishnadasji. I was not supplied with any information regarding the findspot of the records and the story of their discovery; but, when I visited Banāras again about the close of 1957, I was informed that all the four copper-plate grants had been purchased from Shri Thakur Das Jain alias Jain Master of Tikamgarh (also called Tehri), capital of the former Orchha State which was originally merged in Vindhya Pradesh and now forms a part of Madhya Pradesh. From whom and where the said gentleman secured the plates, however, remains as yet unknown. It may be mentioned in this connection that the last of the four inscriptions, obtained by the Kalā Bhavan from the source referred to above, was received by me sometime later about the end of 1956 and was found on examination to be a charter issued by the Pratihāra king Harirāja from his camp at Siyadōni in Vikrama Samvat 1040 (984 A. D.) on the occasion of a solar eclipse. This inscription has already been published in the pages of this journal.² I take this opportunity to offer my sincere thanks to Rai Krishnadasji for his kindness which has enabled me to place the results of my study of the records before the students of Indian history.

The three Chandēlla charters published below resemble other known copper-plate grants of the family in respect of palaeography, orthography and style. Among the three grants, the resemblance in these respects is of course closer between the two records of Paramardin than between those and the charter of Madanavarman. The engraving of the letters is carefully and beautifully done in all the plates, although the preservation of the writing on Paramardin's inscriptions is more satisfactory than in the case of Madanavarman's charter. There is little difference between the forms of the letters ch and v and this fact renders the reading of personal and geographical names doubtful in some cases. The same difficulty is sometimes also noticed in determining the value of a sign which may be taken to be either as the ā-mātrā of the preceding consonant or the ē-mātrā of the following letter. The subscript r often resembles the subscript v. The sign for v indicates b as well; but the sign for b seems to be used in Ambarisha in line 26 of Madanavarman's grant. Subscript g in rgg looks like n. As regards orthography, it may be noticed that often the class nasal is used for anusvāra and vice versa. Some consonants have been redoubled in conjunction with r. The spelling of sankrānta (for saṅkrānta) and purassara respectively in lines 7 and 15 of Madanavarman's grant is interesting.

1. Plates of Madanavarman, V. S. 1192

This is a set of two plates which are rather thick and heavy and have writing only on the inner side. Each of the plates measures about 17·6" by 16". For the protection of the writing, copper bands are fixed with copper rivets on the margins of the inscribed sides of the plates. There is a hole in both the plates apparently to hold them together by means of a ring. But the ring seems to be lost. The figure of seated Gajalakshmi is engraved in a space measuring 2·1" by 1·7" about the middle of the upper part of the inscription on the first plate, thereby disturbing the continuity of the writing in lines 1-3. This was the royal emblem, by which the Chandēllas used to authenticate their charters in lieu of a regular seal. There are altogether 43 lines of writing, 22 on the first plate and 21 on the second. The two plates together weigh 600 tolas.

The charter was issued by the Chandēlla king Madanavarman on Tuesday, Chaitra-vadi 5, Vishuva-saṅkrānti, in V.S. 1192. The date corresponds to the 24th March 1136 A.D. if the month is regarded as Amānta.

The record begins with a variant of the symbol for siddham followed by the word svasti. Then follows the stanza generally used in Chandēlla grants to introduce the family of the Chandrātreyā (Chandēlla) kings. This is followed by a passage in prose which introduces the reigning monarch, Paramabhaṭṭāraka Mahārājādhirāja Paramēśvara Madanavarman who was a devout worshipper of the god Mahēśvara (Śiva) and the lord of Kālānjara. The king is described as the successor of Paramabhaṭṭāraka Mahārājādhirāja Paramēśvara Prithvīvarman who himself succeeded Paramabhaṭṭāraka Mahārājādhirāja Paramēśvara Kirtivarman and as belonging to the family rendered famous by the birth of such heroes as Jayaśakti and Vijayaśakti. The above is followed in lines 4-7 by two stanzas eulogising king Madanavarman. The first of these, already known from the Semra plates¹ of Paramardin, says how the creator endowed the king with a multitude of good qualities. The second verse says how the king's liberality put the mythical wish-fulfilling trees on the golden mountain (Sumēru) to shame.

The grant portion begins in line 7 and records the king's order addressed to the Brāhmanas and other people including officials, agriculturists, scribes, messengers, physicians, mahattaras (heads of villages), Mēdas and Chaṇḍālas, assembled at Valabauḍā-grāma in the vishaya or district of Mahisiṇēha. The order was in respect of the grant of 2½ padas out of 8 padas of cultivated land in the said village, which was made by the king on the date discussed above from his camp at Parēyī-grāma. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa, Paṇḍita Sōmēśarman, who belonged to the Kantsa gōtra and the Āṅgīrasa, Āmbarisha and Yauvanāśva pravaras. He was the son of Thakkura śrī-Śrīpāla, grandson of Dviveda Sabāraṇa and great-grandson of Avasathin (probably meaning 'the teacher of a school') Dēvaḍha. His family hailed from the Bhaṭṭāgrahāra of Pāṭaliputra. Whether the gift land was made a rent-free holding is not clearly stated in the inscription.

The record of the above grant is followed by that of others made in favour of two other Brāhmanas,² the first of whom was Dikshita Nārāyaṇasarman who belonged to the Gautama gōtra and the Gautama, Āṅgīrasa and Ayāśya pravarus. He was the son of Dikshita Dēvēndra, grandson of Dikshita Vāmanasyāmin and great-grandson of Dikshita Kēśava, and his family hailed from the Bhaṭṭ-āgrahāra of Papikavaḍa. It is stated that originally Astavāla-grāma in Ērachchha-pattalā was granted to Nārāyaṇaśarman in exchange for the lands in his possession at Pīpalahā in Tintirī-pattalā, Vasauhā in Kōlavā-pattalā, Gōulā in Vāndiuri-pattalā, Dādari in Navarāṭha-pattalā and Dēnavāḍa in Mahisiṇēha-pattalā. Now the king granted to the same Brāhmaṇa four padas of land (apparently at Valahauḍā-grāma in Mahisiṇēha-pattalā) in exchange for Astavāla-grāma and the land in his possession at Pīpalahā-grāma in Tintirī-pattalā as well as his lands at Valahauḍā-grāma in Mahisiṇēha-pattalā and Ḍāvaha (or Ḍavēha)-grāma in Nandāvāṇa (or Nandavēṇa)-pattalā which he had received respectively from Nādūka, the priest attached to Rājñī Lakhamādēvī, and Sōmēka, son of Ṭhakkura śrī-Śrīpāla.¹

² They received the grants in the same village in exchange for other lands in their possession apparently for the sake of convenience.

The third donee was the Brāhmaṇa Sahajūsarman who was a brother of Sōmēsarman or Sōmēka mentioned above. It is stated that he received from the king $1\frac{1}{2}$ padas of land (apparently at Valahauḍā-grāma in Mahisiṇēha-pattalā) in exchange for his lands at Pīpalahā-grāma in Tintirī-pattalā and Mahuāli-grāma in Kōlavā-pattalā. He is stated to have received the lands in the two villages respectively from Mahārājñī Vālhanadēvī and Rājñī Chāṇḍaladēvī (or Chandēladēvī). It is said that these grants were made by the queens with the king's permission.

The conditions of the grant, which are the same as in other Chandēlla charters, are quoted in lines 29-33. Some of the usual imprecatory and benedictory stanzas are quoted in lines 34-40. This is followed by a passage conveying the king's consent to the grants and must have been originally endorsed by the king himself on the original document that was later engraved on the plates. Then follow in lines 41-43 two stanzas, the first of which says that the copper-plate charter was written by the Dharma-lēkhin Sūḍha who belonged to the Vāstavya community. The same person also wrote the Āṅgasi plate² of the same king. The contractions ṭha and śi before his name in that record stand for ṭhakkura and śrī respectively. The same verse was utilised with slight modification by Pṛithvīdhara and Subhānanda who wrote respectively the Semra³ and Pachar⁴ copper-plate grants of Paramardin. The present plates were engraved by the vijñānin Chēṇa who belonged to the Ritikāra (i.e. Kāṁsyakāra or brazier) community. The record concludes with a maṅgala and a set of three symbols or contractions thrice quoted. The meaning of these cannot be determined.

Of the geographical names mentioned in the inscription, Kālāṇjara is the well-known hill-fort in the Banda District of U. P., which was one of the centres of Chandēlla power. The grant was made when the king was staying at Parēyī-grāma while the various plots of gift land were situated at Valahauḍā-grāma in the vishaya or pattalā (i.e. district) of Mahisiṇēha. The families of the donees hailed from Pāṭaliputra, rather inaccurately called a Bhaṭṭ-āgrahāra (i.e. a rent-free locality in the possession of learned Brāhmaṇas), and Panikavaḍa-bhaṭṭāgrahāra. Pāṭaliputra is no other than the well-known ancient city of that name, which stood near modern Patna in Bihar. The other villages mentioned are : (1) Pīpalahā in Tintirī-pattalā, (2) Vasauhā in Kōlavā-pattalā, (3) Gōulā in Vāndiuri-pattalā, (4) Dādari in Navarāṭha-pattalā, (5) Dēnavāḍa in Mahisiṇēha-pattalā, (6) Astavāla in Ērachchha-pattalā, (7) Ḍāvaha or Ḍavēha in Nandāvāṇa (or Nandavēṇa)-pattalā and Mahuāli in Kōlavā-pattalā. The pattalā of Nandāvāṇa or Nandavēṇa is mentioned in the Ichchhawar plate⁵ of Paramardin as Nandāvāṇa-vishaya which may be identified with the district round Ichchhawar in the Pailani Tahsil of the Banda District. Ērachha-pattalā may be the same as the Ērachha vishaya of the Mahoba plate,¹ the name of which has been preserved in that of modern Erich on the Betwa, about sixty miles from Mahoba. Navarāṣṭha-pattalā seems to be the same as the Navarāṣṭha-maṇḍala vishaya of the Charkhari plates,² while the names of Vāndiuri, Tintirī-pattalā and Pipalāhā remind us respectively of the Banda District, the Teonthar Tahsil of the former Rewa State and the Pipalāu ḍurga mentioned in the Alha-ghat inscription.³ The district of Navarāṣṭha was situated on the river Yamunā.

2. Plate of Paramardīn, V. S. 1239

This is a single plate measuring about 15·2" in length and 11·7" in height. In order to protect the writing, which is on one side of the plate, four copper bands of a width of about $\frac{1}{2}$ " are fixed with copper rivets on all the four borders of the inscribed side. There are altogether 20 lines of writing. In the central part of the upper section of the inscription, a space about 2·3" square is occupied by the engraved figure of seated Gajalakshmi which has disturbed the continuity of the writing of lines 1-4. In the middle of the last line of the inscription a space measuring 1·6" in length is left blank apparently for a hole that would have been required if the inscription had continued on a second plate. The plate together with the rivetted border bands weighs 282 tolas.

The date of the document is quoted in lines 8-9 as Tuesday, Phālguna-vadi 4, V.S. 1239. It corresponds to the 23rd February 1182 A.D. if the year is regarded as current.

The beginning of the record in lines 1-6 is similar to that of Madanavarman's grant edited above. But, instead of Madanavarman, Paramabhaṭṭāraka Mahārājādhirāja Paramēśvara Parama- rdīn, who was likewise a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara and the lord of Kālañjara, is introduced here as the successor of Paramabhaṭṭāraka Mahārājādhirāja Paramēśvara Madanavarman who himself succeeded Paramabhaṭṭāraka Mahārājādhirāja Paramēśvara Prithivivarman and as belonging to the family of the Chandrātreyā rulers. There is no versified eulogy of the reigning monarch in the present record as in Madanavarman's grant.

The grant portion beginning in line 6 records the king's order addressed to the Brāhmanas and others assembled at Vavaudā-grāma in the Duḍuhī vishaya. The order relates to the grant of the said village, made by the king when he was stationed at Sallakshaṇavilāsapura, on the date discussed above, in favour of Paṇi Padumadharaśarman (i.e. Paṇḍita Padmadharaśarman) who belonged to the Kautsa gōtra and Vājasaneyā sākhā and was the son of Ṭha (i.e. Ṭhakkura) Dhāin, grandson of Ṭha Śrīpāla and great-grandson of Ṭha Sahāraṇa. His family hailed from Pāṭaliputra-nagara. It will be seen that the donee of this grant was the son of a brother of Sōmēśarman or Sōmēka known from Madanavarman's charter.

The conditions of the grant (lines 13-17) are similar to those of Madanavarman's charter. The imprecatory and benedictory stanzas are quoted in lines 17-19. This is followed by the king's endorsement on the original document that was later copied on the plates. Line 20, with which the record ends, mentions the Dharma-lēkhin Ṭhakkura Vishṇuka who wrote the charter and Pālhaṇa who engraved it on the plates. The other charters of Paramardin were also engraved by Pālhaṇa who is called a pūtalahāra (brazier) in the Semra plates¹ of 1165 A. D., śilpin and varṇa-ghoṣṭanā-vaidagdhī-viśvakarman in the Ichchhawar plate² of 1171 A. D. and the Pachar plate³ of 1176 A. D. and vijñānin in the Mahoba plate⁴ of 1173 A. D. But Vishṇuka was not the writer of any of those charters. The writer of the first three grants was Prithivīdhara and that of the fourth charter Śubhānanda, both belonging to the Vāstavya-Kāyastha community.

Of geographical names, the inscription mentions, besides Kālānjara, Sallakshaṇavilāsapura, whence the grant was made by the king, and the gift village of Vavaudā in Duḍuhī-vishaya. Sallakshaṇavilāsapura seems to have been named after Sallakshaṇavarman who was the elder brother of Prithivivarman, great-grandfather of Paramardin. The locality may be the same as Vilāsapura whence Paramardin issued his Ichchhawar and Pachar plates. It has been suggested that Vilāsapura is the same as modern Pachar about 12 miles to the north-east of Jhansi in U. P.⁵ Duḍuhī-vishaya seems to have been the district round modern Dudahi in the Lalitpur subdivision of the Jhansi District. The name of the place, whence the donee's family hailed, is quoted here as Pāṭaliputra-nagara (not Pāṭaliputra-bhaṭṭāgrahāra as in Madanavarman's grant).

3. Plate of Paramardin, V. S. 1247

This is also a single plate which is rather thick and heavy and weighs 108 tolas. The plate contains 18 lines of writing on one side only. In the centre of the last line, there is a hole as if the writing continued on another plate and the two plates were held together by means of a ring passing through the hole in both of them. The diameter of this hole is about 7". In the central part of the upper section of the inscription, a space about 2.4" square is occupied by the engraved figure of seated Lakshmī instead of the usual Gajalakshmī. For the protection of the writing, copper bands were fixed on the margins of the inscribed side of the plate by means of copper rivets. These bands are now broken at some places where only the small holes in the plate meant for the rivets can be seen.

The date of the charter is quoted in lines 9-10 as Saturday, Phālguna-śudi 14, V.S. 1247. It corresponds regularly to the 9th February 1191 A.D.

The beginning of the document is similar to that of Paramardin's grant of V. S. 1239 edited above. The grant portion commencing in line 6 refers to the king's order addressed to the Brāhmaṇas and other people assembled at Itālā-grāma in the Pāsupi vishaya in respect of the grant of 10 kāvas of land in the said village. The king made the grant on the date discussed above when he was at the Maṇikarṇikā-ghaṭṭa at śrī-Vārāṇasī (i.e. modern Banāras in U.P.) apparently in the course of a pilgrimage. In the present state of our knowledge, it is difficult to believe that the Banāras region formed a part of Paramardin's dominions about the time of the record. The Gāhaḍavāla kings are known to have had their headquarters at Vārāṇasī and, according to tradition, the contemporary Gāhaḍavāla monarch Jayachandra (c. 1170-93 A. D.) maintained friendly relations with Paramardin whom he is said to have helped in his wars against the Chāhamāna king Prithvirāja III (c. 1177-92 A. D.).¹ A recent writer has, however, suggested that Chandēlla Paramardin was really on hostile terms with Gāhaḍavāla Jayachandra.² But there is really no proof in favour of this suggestion and the present inscription referring to the Chandēlla king's stay at Vārāṇasī seems to go against it. If Paramardin succeeded in capturing the Gāhaḍavāla capital even for a short time, that fact is not expected to have been suppressed in his records like the one under review.

The donee of the present charter was Padmadharasārman already known from the other grant of the king edited above. The conditions of the grant, quoted in lines 12-16, are the same as in the other record. The document ends with the imprecatory and benedictory stanzas quoted in lines 16-18. It seems that the writing was continued on another plate which is now lost. But the inscription on this lost plate would have contained only the passage sva-hastō-yaṁ rāja-śrīmat-Paramarddidēvasya matam mama together with a reference to the names of the writer and engraver of the document.

Of geographical names, besides Kālāñjara, the inscription mentions Maṇikarṇikā-ghaṭṭa at Vārāṇasī (i.e. the well-known Maṇikarṇikā Ghāt at Banāras), where the king was staying at the time of making the grant, and the village of Itālā in Pāsupi-vishaya, where the gift land was situated. The name of the locality, whence the donee's family hailed, is quoted in the present record as Pāṭalipura instead of Pāṭaliputra or Pāṭaliputra as found in the two inscriptions edited above. The locality is mentioned here as a Bhaṭṭāgrahāra.

No. 15—JAVAKHEDA PLATES OF AMOGHAVARSHA I, SAKA 742

D. R. BHAT, DHULIA

Javakhēda is a small village in the Shahada Taluk of the West Khandesh District, Bombay. It is situated on the bank of the Gōmī, a tributary of the Tāptī. The Gōmī, also called Gōmatī, has its origin in Madhya Bharat and meets the Tāptī near Prakasha where the Department of Archaeology recently conducted excavations. The copper-plate grant was discovered while digging a pit for the repairs of a public road in February 1953. I came to know of the discovery in May 1954. On making enquiries, I learnt that the plates were with Shri Bhuskute, a P. W. D. contractor of Dhulia. He very graciously handed them over to me. The Rajwade Sanshodhan Mandal, Dhulia, is very thankful to him for his kindness.

The inscription, like most other Rāshtrakūṭa grants, is written on three plates. The outer sides of the first and last plates of the set are blank. The inner sides of these plates and both sides of the middle plate are inscribed. Each plate is nearly 11½" long and 8½" high. The breadth of the plates in the middle is slightly less than at the borders. The middle plate is nearly ½" thick and the outer plates are slightly thinner. The plates were strung on a ring passing through a hole (roughly ¾" in diameter) near the left edge of each plate. The ring is nearly 4½" in diameter and is made of a round bar ⅝" thick in the middle and ½" near the extremities which are soldered to the seal. The seal bears a representation of the goddess Lakshmi.¹ The goddess is squatting on a lotus and has a swan on each lap under her arms. It appears that the goddess in her right hand behind the bird holds a chowry and in her left a ladle or a paratu. On the right and left respectively near the head of the goddess are seen the sun and the moon. The image is finely executed in relief in a circle 1½" in diameter. This appears to be the first seal of the Malkhed Rāshtrakūṭas bearing an image other than that of Garuḍa or Śiva.¹

The characters resemble those of other Rāshtrakūṭa records of the ninth century as the Vāpi Dīṇḍōri plates of Gōvinda III, dated Śaka 730.² They are well engraved. The preservation of the writing is satisfactory with the exception of 7 or 8 letters in the first line on the obverse of the second plate. The language is Sanskrit. The text of the record contains some grammatical and orthographical errors.

The twenty stanzas engraved on the inner side of the first plate and the obverse of the second are also found in the Radhanpur plates of Gōvinda III, dated Śaka 731.³ These are followed by five verses in praise of Amoghavarsha and the details of the grant and the date of issue in a passage in prose on the reverse of the second plate.

The grant was made by the Rāshtrakūṭa king Amoghavarsha I at the request of one Bhaṭṭārikā (noble lady) Asagavvā⁴ on Friday the 8th of the bright half of Āshāḍha of the Śaka year 742 expired (current 743), which corresponds to the 22nd of June, 820 A.D., on the occasion of the Dakṣiṇāyana-saṅkrānti. The king made the grant when he was residing at Śrī-Nisvapūraka to a Brāhmaṇa named Jōgaḍḍi-bhaṭṭa who was the son of Rēvaḍḍi-bhaṭṭa and belonged to the

Kaundinya gōtra and Taittiriya śākhā. The name of the gift village was Vōyipadraka. The village was bounded by Laghu-Mōyipadraka in the east, Umbarōpika-grāma in the south, the boundary of the same village in the west, and the Vindhya mountain in the north. Vōyipadraka is stated to be in the Ēkāśāya division.

Two years after the accession of Amōghavarsha I, i.e. about the year 816 A. D., his feudatories and the enemies of the house were up against him and, as a result of the confusion and anarchy that followed, he was deposed. This state of affairs lasted for about three or four years.¹ The earliest known record issued after Amōghavarsha's restoration is the Surat plates of Karka, dated the 13th May, 821 A.D. The charter under study was issued by Amōghavarsha I himself on the 22nd June, 820. A. D. It is clear that his restoration must have taken place some time before this date.

Amōghavarsha is obviously not the name of the boy king but a biruda like Prabhūtavarsha, Akālavarsha, etc. The proper name of the king was Śarva (cf. verse 22). The present record shows for the first time that he also enjoyed the biruda Tribhuvanavallabha.

Lady Asagavvā, at whose request the grant was made, probably belonged to the Rāshtrakūṭa house. There is little likelihood of her being Amōghavarsha's wife, as Amōghavarsha I (born about 808 A. D.) was a boy of about twelve only at the time of the grant. Besides her name has been mentioned without any indication of her status as the empress.²

Amōghavarsha made this grant while residing at Śrī-Nisvapuraka which can be identified with modern Nisarpur near Kukahi in Madhya Bharat. Probably Nisvapuraka was his capital³ which was later transferred to Mālkhēḍ.

No. 16—FRAGMENTARY GRANT OF PARAMARAS OF ABU

SADHU RAM, DELHI

An impression of the present copper-plate inscription was very kindly given to me for editing by Dr. B. Ch. Chhabra, Deputy Director General of Archaeology in India, New Delhi. The record is incomplete and the impression relates to the inner side of the first plate of a grant made by some Paramāra ruler of Arbuda (modern Abu). It was discovered by the late Pandit Gaurishankar Hirachand Ojha during his tour in the former Sirohi State. It was then in the possession of a gardener of the village of Rohera in that State.

From the estampage, the plate seems to have been in a good state of preservation. The record consists of 18 lines of writing. The characters are Nāgarī of the 12th century A.D. The letter b is generally indicated by the sign for v. As regards orthography, some consonants are often reduplicated in conjunction with r. Its language is Sanskrit. There are altogether 11 verses and a part of what appears to be a passage in prose in line 18. There is one more line at the bottom, which is inscribed in a different hand and gives no sense. It was probably added later and has no connection with the original record.

This inscription has been noticed in the Annual Report of the Working of the Rajputana Museum for the year ending 31st March, 1932, and in G. H. Ojha's Rājputāṇkū Itihās, Vol. 1, 2nd ed., pp. 190ff. The importance of the record lies in the fact that it gives a complete genealogy of the Paramāra rulers of Abu from Utpalarāja to Dhāravarsha.

The Paramāra Rājputs originally ruled over the territory around Abu,¹ from where they spread over Mārwar, Sindh, a part of modern Gujarāt, and Mālwa. From their other inscriptions, we find that the name of their ancestor was Dhūmarāja. The word dhūma forming the first half of the name means 'smoke' which arises from fire. The second verse of our record alludes to the birth of the first Paramāra king from the fire in the sacrificial altar of the sage Vasishṭha. This may be a poetic way of referring to the name of the progenitor of the family and, at the same time, may have given rise to the legend of the family having sprung from fire. The story that is told in the Paramāra inscriptions and a later poem, entitled Navasāhasāṅkacarita by Padmagupta alias Parimala, says that the cow Nandini of the sage Vasishṭha was deceitfully carried away by Viśvāmītra, the son of Gādhi. Vasishṭha thereupon got enraged and performed a sacrifice. Out of the fire of the sacred altar, there sprang a heroic person who defeated the foe and recovered the cow. The sage gave the name Paramāra (literally, 'the destroyer of foes') to the hero who afterwards became the founder of the Paramāra family.

The first verse of the inscription is invocatory, asking for the readers the protection of god Śiva in his amorous aspect as the lover of the mountain-born Pārvatī, round whose knot of matted hair the holy river Gaṅgā twines like a jasmine wreath. The second verse describes the birth of the progenitor of the family from Vasishṭha's sacrificial fire-altar. It also states that the fire-born king humbled the pride of Viśvāmītra, the son of Gādhi, and was named Paramāra. In his family was born king Utpalarāja who had king Aranyarāja as his son. After the latter, came the victorious king Kṛishnarāja who was the very image of his father (Aranyarāja).

Kṛishnarāja's son Dharapīvarāha succeeded to the throne after him. The latter was succeeded by his two sons Dhūrbhata and Mahipāla¹ who perhaps divided the kingdom and ruled in their respective territories (verse 3). Thereafter Dhandhūka, the son of Mahipāla, ruled over his own territory after driving away all his enemies (verse 4). Dhandhūka had three sons, viz. Pūrnapāla, Dantivarman and Kṛishnadēva, who ruled one after the other (verse 5).² Dantivarman's son was Yōgarāja, the conqueror of the earth, and Kṛishnadēva's son was Kākaladēva (verse 6). The son of Yōgarāja was Rāmadēva who was a terror in the battle-field while that of Kākaladēva was king Vikramasimha (verse 7). The son of Rāmadēva was king Yaśodhavalā who crushed in battle Ballāla, the king of Mālava (verse 8).³ His son Dhārāvaraha, the lord of Arbuda (Ābu), was an ornament of the Paramāra family and was the foremost among kings. He was well-versed in the Śāstras and clever in the use of weapons. He was a man of dominating personality and the influence of his virtuous life on his subjects, whom he had won over by love, was considerable (verse 9). He put to rout the brave soldiers of Mālava with a volley of his arrows on the bank of river Parṇā; but, in the meantime, Vikramasimha's son Rapasimha captured the territory of his father (verse 10).⁴ Then Dhārāvaraha, having pleased his master by means of his wisdom, devotion and valour, got back his own kingdom through his (i.e. his master's) favour (verse 11).⁵ He had a wife named Rājyaśrī (?)⁶ of the Cāhamāna (Chauhān) family, who was the daughter of the illustrious Kālpadēva.⁷

¹ Ojha wrongly considers Dhūrbhata to be a second name of Mahipāla (op.cit., pp. 193, 203).

² Pūrnapāla and Dantivarman ruled for a short time one after the other. It appears that the former had no son. But, although Dantivarman had a son, the throne was occupied by his younger brother Kṛishnadēva. Thus Yōgarāja and Rāmadēva, respectively the son and grandson of Dantivarman, were deprived of their right of succession, and the kingdom passed on to Kākaladēva, the son of Kṛishnadēva.

⁶ [The name of the queen is uncertain. See below, p. 138, note 1. The present charter seems to have been issued by Dhārāvaraha.—Ed.]

⁷ After this, the record is lost in the missing plate or plates. For a brief history of the Paramāras, see Ojha, op.cit., pp. 190 ff. Ojha (op.cit., p. 198) states that Dhārāvaraha married Śringārādēvī and Gigādēvī, the daughters of the Chauhān king Kālpapa of Nāḍōla.

The inscription offers the following genealogy of the Paramāras of Ābu :—

No. 17—MANDHATA PLATES OF PARAMARA JAYASIMHA-JAYAVARMAN,
V. S. 1331

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

In November 1939, Mr. R. B. Deshpande of Dhār, formerly Assistant Engineer of the old Dhār State in Central India and in charge of the archaeological monuments at Māṇḍū, learnt from a Brāhmaṇa named Subrahmanya Shastri about the existence of a new copper-plate inscription in the possession of Rao Saheb Sobhag Singhji, the then Rao of Māṇḍhātā. The inscription is said to have been discovered in 1927 at Māṇḍhātā on the southern Bank of the Narmadā, when some people were clearing the ground near the Kāśī-Viśvāśvara temple for the Kārttikī Mēlā. Mr. Deshpande visited Māṇḍhātā in the company of Shastri and succeeded in examining the inscription through the kindness and courtesy of the Rao Saheb. The plates, which were thoroughly covered with verdigris at the time of their discovery, were cleaned and Mr. Deshpande took a few sets of impressions of the writing. The inscription was then studied by Pandit Babu Shastri of Dhār and his transcript with a Hindi translation was published in the monthly journal called Ushā, published by the Bhōj Prakāśan, Dhār, in its issues for January-February 1953, p. 46 ; March 1953, p. 14 ; November 1953, p. 44 ; December 1953, p. 11 ; February 1954, p. 28 ; March 1954, p. 9 ; August 1954, pp. 27-28 ; and October-November 1954, pp. 41-42. Mr. Deshpande also published an introductory note in English on the importance of the inscription in the same journal in its issues for November 1953, p. 43, and December 1953, pp. 20-21.

About the beginning of 1955 I received information about the existence of the inscription and tried to secure it on loan for examination from the Rao Saheb of Māṇḍhātā. But I was informed that the record was then being examined by Dr. H. V. Trivedi, Curator of the Indore Museum. Failing to secure the original plates, I then tried to secure a set of its impressions from Mr. R. B. Deshpande. This attempt was luckily successful and about the middle of the year I received one set of inked impressions of the record from Mr. Deshpande and copies of the issues of the Ushā, containing the articles of Pandit Babu Shastri and Mr. Deshpande, from Mr. Y. W. Wankar of Dhār, formerly Lecturer in Geography in the Government College, Dhār. The impressions were photographed in my office and returned to Mr. Deshpande. In this connection I received very considerable help from Mr. N. S. Purandare of Dhār, formerly Principal of the Government College, Mandasaur.

Since, however, the impressions received from Mr. Deshpande were not quite satisfactory, I requested Dr. Trivedi to send me either the original plates on loan or a set of good impressions of the inscription. I also requested him to publish the record in the Epigraphia Indica. Unfortunately nothing was received from Dr. Trivedi till the beginning of the year 1957 and I took up the photographs of Mr. Deshpande's impressions for study in April 1957. On examination it was found that the inscription throws welcome light on the history of the Paramāras of Malwa, although Pandit Babu Shastri's transcript is not free from inaccuracies and his translation is full of errors while Mr. Deshpande's views on the importance and interpretation of the record are all misconceived. The inscription is edited here from the photographs referred to above.

The set consists of four plates, each measuring about 17 inches in length, 13 inches in height and between $\frac{1}{8}$ and $\frac{3}{8}$ inch in thickness. Their weight has not been recorded. The edges of the plates were raised to the thickness of about $\frac{1}{4}$ inch for the protection of the writing. The four plates are held together by two copper rings passing through holes made in them. While the first plate has writing only on the inner side, the other three plates bear inscription on both obverse and reverse. In the left side of the empty space beneath the writing on the reverse of the last plate, the figure of Garuḍa, the royal emblem of the Paramāras, is engraved as in so many other Paramāra charters.¹ There are altogether 140 lines of writing in the inscription and they are distributed on the inscribed faces of the plates in the following order : I—21 lines ; IIA—22 lines ; IIB—23 lines ; IIIA—23 lines ; IIIB—23 lines ; IVA—23 lines ; IVB—5 lines.

The characters of the inscription are Nāgarī. Its language is Sanskrit. The record is written in a mixture of prose and verse. Its palaeography and orthography do not call for any special remark. The letter b is indicated by the sign for v. There is a general tendency to represent class nasals by anusvāra. Final m is often wrongly changed to anusvāra at the end of the second and fourth feet of verses, although it is generally used correctly at the end of sentences in the prose part of the document. The date of the charter is quoted in words in lines 91-92 as Friday, Maitra (Anurādhā)-nakshatra, Bhādrapada-sudi 7 in the year (Vikrama Samvat) 1331 called Pramāthin (according to the Northern Cycle of Jupiter). The details of the date correspond regularly to those of the 10th of August in the year 1274 A. D.

The object of the document is to record a grant of land made by Sādhavika Anayasimhadēva while he was staying at Maṇḍapa-durga, with the permission of the Paramāra king Jayavarman alias Jayasimha, described as the lord of Dhārā, after having worshipped the husband of Pārvatī, i.e. the god Śiva. Anayasimha's order in this respect was addressed to the officials as well as the villagers including Brāhmaṇas and Paṭṭakilas (i.e. Patels) who were associated with the following localities : (1) Kumbhaḍānda-grāma in Vardhanāpura-pratijāgaraṇaka, (2) Vālauda-grāma in the same Pratijāgaraṇaka (i.e. Pargana), (3) Vaghāḍī-grāma in Saptāśīti-pratijāgaraṇaka and (4) Nāṭiyā-grāma in Nāgadaha-pratijāgaraṇaka. It is stated that Anayasimha, together with his four sons named Kamalasingha, Dhārasimha, Jaitrasimha and Padmasimha, granted the said four villages in favour of a number of Brāhmaṇas residing in the Brahmapuri (i.e. Brāhmaṇa settlement) at Māndhātṛi and belonging to various gōtras and sākhās, whose families hailed from several localities. It is interesting to note that the four villages were divided into 16 parts, each called a paḍa and that, while 14 of these paḍas were granted to the 14 Brāhmaṇa donees, 2 paḍas were made over by Anayasimha to his own self. It may be that Anayasimha purchased the four villages from the Paramāra king for the purpose of creating a rent-free holding to be granted in favour of Brāhmaṇas, although he was allowed to retain a small part of the land for himself. There are other instances of this kind in inscriptions.²

The donees mentioned in the list are the following : (1) Dī(Dīkshita) Padmanābhaśarman, son of Avasathin Vidyādharaśarman and grandson of Cha(Chaturvēdin) Kamalādharaśarman of the Gautama gōtra, the Āṅgīrasa, Auvathya and Gautama pravaras and the Rīgvēda sākhā and hailing from Takārī ; (2) Cha(Chaturvēdin) Mādhavaśarman, brother of No. 1 ; (3) Paṇ(Paṇḍita) Śrīkaṇṭhaśarman, son of Pañchapī(pā)ṭhin Mīśra Uddharaśarman and grandson of Mīśra Dharmadharaśarman of the Bhāradvāja gōtra, the Āṅgīrasa, Bārhaspatya and Bhāradvāja pravaras and the Rīgvēda sākhā and hailing from Takārī ; (4) Dvī(Dvivēdin) Gōvardhanaśarman, son of Paṇ(Paṇḍita) Vidyāpatiśarman and grandson of Cha(Chaturvēdin) Bhūpatiśarman of the Kāśyapa gōtra, the Kāśyapa, Āvatsara and Naidhruva pravaras and the Rīgvēda sākhā and

² See IHQ, Vol. XXIII, p. 238. The Baud plates of Prithvimahādēvi appear to offer another instance (cf. above, Vol. XXIX, p. 211 and note 1) ; but the expression dāna-patī (i.e. the person creating a rent-free holding with the approval of the royal authority) has been misunderstood by the editor of the inscriptions.

An interesting feature of the list of the donees quoted above is that, in several of the cases, the family names were not still stereotyped in the families since the donee and his father and grandfather have not the same distinctive designation. In one case, Avasathin Vidyādharaśarman is stated to have been the son of Chaturvēdin Kamalādharaśarman and the father of Dikshita Padmanābhaśarman and Chaturvēdin Mādhavaśarman. The mention of the gōtra of the Kshatriya family of the Chāhamānas is also worth noting. But more interesting seems to be the fact that, while the list enumerates only 14 Brāhmaṇas getting one paḍa or share each, along with the Chāhamāna Kshatriya Anayasimha receiving two paḍas, line 127 specifically gives the number of donees as '16 Brāhmaṇas'. It is therefore not impossible that the 16 shares in which the 4 gift villages were divided had been originally planned to be allotted to 16 Brāhmaṇas but that the plan was later modified to the advantage of Anayasimha. Whether this was done with the king's consent or by Anayasimha on his own initiative without his master's knowledge cannot be determined, although the mention of the 15 donees including himself as '16 Brāhmaṇas' looks rather suspicious. Line 133 also refers to the donees of the grant as 'these Brāhmaṇas'.

The fact that Anayasimha is stated to have granted the charter, albeit with the king's permission, points to his power and prestige in the court of the Paramāra king. He is stated to have been staying at Maṇḍapa-durga and is called a Sādhānika. His immediate ancestors also appear to have enjoyed the same designation. The expression Sādhānika is the same as Prakrit Sāhaṇia meaning 'the commander of an army'.¹ An inscription (V. S. 1237)² of a Paramāra chief named Jadaṇa, from Nāṇa in the old Jodhpur State, uses the same word as Sāhaṇi (cf. the family name Sāhni) which has been supposed to indicate 'the master of the royal stables'. In Mērutuṅga's Prabandhachintāmaṇi the expression Mahāsādhānika is used in the sense of a chieftain or military governor.³

We have seen that the list of donees discussed above mentions Sā° Salakhaṇasimhavarman and Sā° Palhaṇadēvavarman respectively as the father and grandfather of Chāhamāna Anayasimha. Verses 57-66 (lines 75-86) of the introductory part of the inscription offer further information about this Chāhamāna family owing allegiance to the Paramāras. Verses 75-76 speak of Rāutta (i.e. Rāvat from Sanskrit Rāja-putra) Rāta and his son Palhaṇadēva (respectively the great-grandfather and grandfather of Anayasimha) and of the power of their arms. The master of Palhaṇadēva is vaguely referred to without disclosing his name, although he must have been the contemporary Paramāra king. Verse 59 mentions Palhaṇadēva's son Salakhaṇasimha who is stated to have assisted Arjunadēva in his battles. This Arjunadēva is no doubt the Paramāra king Arjunavarman whose known dates are V. S. 1267 (1211 A. D.), 1270 (1213 A. D.) and 1272 (1215 A. D.).⁴ It is not impossible that the said Chāhamāna chief is identical with Rājān Salakhaṇa mentioned as the Mahāsāndhi (i.e. Mahāsāndhivigrahika) in Arjunavarman's Bhopal plates (Set 2).⁵ A very interesting instance of military assistance rendered by Salakhaṇasimha to the Paramāra king is offered by verse 60. It is stated that the Chāhamāna leader of Paramāra forces defeated the army of Simhaṇadēva, no doubt the Yādava king of that name who ruled in c. 1210-47 A. D., and captured seven plumes (chāmarāṇi which appear to have been fitted with the turban) from the general Sāgaya-rāṇaka, apparently a leader of Simhaṇadēva's forces, after having pulled the general down from his horse which was in the middle of a contingent. This feat of valour pleased both Simha and Arjuna (i.e. Paramāra Arjunavarman) who shook their heads in appreciation.

The Bahal inscription⁶ of Yādava Simhaṇa and the Paithan plates⁷ of his great-grandson Rāmachandra (c. 1271-1310 A. D.) refer to Simhaṇa's victory over Arjuna who is none other than the Paramāra king Arjunavarman of Malwa. The Hammīramadamardana relates how Chāhamāna Sindhurāja, brother of Arjunavarman's feudatory Simha of Lāṭadēsa, was killed by Yādava Simhaṇa.⁸ This Simha of Lāṭa seems to be mentioned as appreciating the valour of Chāhamāna Salakhaṇa in verse 60 of our inscription, referred to above. The stanza, therefore, probably refers to the Yādava invasion of Lāṭa which formed a part of the dominions of Arjunavarman. Sāgaya-rāṇaka, who was a leader of the Yādava army and was defeated by the Chāhamāna general of the Paramāra king, may be the same as the cavalry officer Saṅga mentioned in a Yādava inscription⁹ of Śaka 1119 (1197 A. D.).

The following six stanzas (verses 61-66) describe the activities of Anayasirṇha, the son of Salakhaṇa and the donor of the grant. He is stated to have built a temple for the god Śiva and excavated a tank at Dēvapālapura. This locality seems to have been named after the Paramāra king Dēvapāla who succeeded Arjunavarman. Another temple was built by him at Śākapura for the goddess Ambikā. This locality may have been the headquarters of the Pargana called Śākapura-pratijāgarāṇaka which is mentioned in the Piplianagar plates of Arjunavarman. Anayasirṇha also built a temple for the god Jambukēśvara Śiva in the vicinity of the Ōṅkāra (i.e. Ōṅkā-rēśvara) temple and excavated a tank near the former. In the fort of Maṇḍapa, he excavated a tank and granted in favour of Brāhmaṇas, with the king's permission, a purī or township having a surrounding wall, a gate, a big shrine and a pond and containing 16 temples endowed with golden jars [forming their pinnacles]. This purī is apparently the Brahmapurī at Maṇḍapa-durga, mentioned as the habitation of the Brāhmaṇa donees of the grant under discussion and already referred to above. Similar pious works were also done by Anayasirṇha at Māṇdhātṛi-durga.

The earlier part of the inscription before the introduction of the feudatory family of the Chāhamānas, to which the donor Anayasirṇha belonged, may be divided into two sections, the first containing invocation to various deities and the second the genealogy of the Imperial Paramāras of Malwā. The first section begins with the Pranava and a passage in prose in adoration to Dharma described as purush-ārtha-chūdāmaṇi. The same invocation is found in several other grants of the Paramāra kings.² The above is followed by eleven stanzas (verses 1-11) in adoration of the following deities: 'the lord of sacrificers', i.e. the Moon-god (verse 1) who is similarly invoked at the beginning of some other Paramāra charters;³ Rāma, i.e. Paraśurāma (verse 2); Rāma, i.e. Rāma Dāsarathi (verse 3); Puradrub, i.e. Śiva (verse 4); Śarva having eight forms, i.e. Śiva (verse 5); Ōṅkāra (verse 6), identical with Paśupati or Śiva and having his temple on the bank of the Rēvā or Narmadā (verse 7), the description of the shrine near the junction of the Rēvā and the Kāvērī being continued in the following stanza (verse 8); Kaiṭabhajit or Vishṇu in his Boar incarnation (verse 10); and Pitāmaha, i.e. Brahman (verse 11).

The said section is followed by the mythical account of the origin of the Paramāra dynasty. Verse 12 relates how the god Brahman created out of his own mind the Seven Sages, one of whom was Vasishṭha. The next stanza (verse 13) refers to the quarrel between Vasishṭha and Kauśika, i.e. Viśvāmitra, wellknown from the epics and Purāṇas, while verse 14 states how Vasishṭha created out of his sacrificial fire-pit a hero named Paramāra for punishing his foes (i.e. Viśvāmitra's forces) who were the enemies of Dharma. Verse 15 says that this Paramāra was the progenitor of a royal family [bearing his name]. This mythical account of the origin of the Paramāras is first noticed in records of the eleventh century⁴ when it seems to have been fabricated. The myth has been interpreted to mean that the Paramāras were Hinduised foreigners of the Hūṇa-Gurjara stock.⁵ The theory is of course not disproved by the evidence of the Harsola plates,⁶ according to which Bappairāja (Vākpatirāja I) was descended from the family of the Rāshtrakūṭa king Akālavarsha Kṛishṇa III (939-66 A.D.), since this apparently refers to Bappairāja's relations with the Rāshtrakūṭa house on his mother's side as otherwise, if the Paramāras were direct descendants of the Rāshtrakūṭa emperors, the Paramāra rulers would have continued to mention the fact even in their later records.

The above account of the mythical origin of the Paramāra family is followed by a long list of Paramāra kings ending with the ruler, during whose reign the charter under study was issued. There are altogether 24 names in this section, the first 9 of which are unhistorical. These imaginary names are: Kamaṇḍaladhara, king of Dhārā (verse 16); his son Dhūmarāja whose name was justified by the smoke arising from the cities of his enemies that were burnt by him (verses 17-18); his son Dēvasiṃhapāla (verse 19); his son Kanakasimha (verse 20); his son Śrīharsha (verse 20a); Jagaddēva king of Mālava (verses 21-22); Sthirakāya (verse 23); Vōsari, lord of Dhārā (verse 24); and his son Virasiṃha (verse 25). These names forming a group are introduced in the genealogy of the Imperial Paramāras for the first time in the present record. Of the nine names, Dhūmarāja seems to have been adopted from the genealogy of the Paramāras of Arbuda¹ while Virasiṃha, although he is called the son of an imaginary Vōsari, may be a modification of the name of Vairisiṃha who was the father of Vākpati I mentioned in our inscription in the following stanza (verse 26). A king named Jagaddēva no doubt flourished in the family, but at a much later date than the period indicated by our inscription.² There was no Śrīharsha in the family, who was the son and successor of a king named Kanakasimha.³ It will be seen that imagination and confusion have both played a part in the genealogy of the Imperial Paramāras quoted above from the inscription under study.

Verses 26-56 give the names of 15 Paramāra rulers of the Imperial house, although some of the kings have been omitted. Vākpatirāja is mentioned in verse 26 as famous for his sūktis in the Prakrit language; but the well-known literary merits of his great-grandson Muñja (Vākpati II) who is separately mentioned in verses 28-29 of our record, appear to be reflected in this statement. Verse 27 mentions Siyā (i.e. Siyaka alias Śrī-Harsha, c. 948-74 A.D.) who was the grandson of Vākpati, and omits Vākpati's son Vairisiṃha alias Vajraṭa. The next two stanzas (verses 28-29) describe Muñja (who was the son and successor of Siyaka and ruled in c. 974-95 A.D.) without specifically mentioning his relations with Siyā, while verses 30-31 mention Sindhurāja (who was the brother and successor of Muñja and ruled in c. 995-1010 A.D.) similarly without stating his relations with Muñja. The following four stanzas (verses 32-35) describe the achievements of Bhōja (c. 1010-55 A.D.), son of Sindhurāja, in vague terms. Verse 36 passes over Bhōja's son and successor Jayasimha (c. 1055-60 A.D.) and mentions Udayāditya (c. 1060-90 A.D.) who appears to have been a distant cousin of Bhōja. Udayāditya is stated to have recovered the kingdom from the Gūrjara ~~kings~~. This reference to the Gūrjara occupation of Malwa no doubt alludes to the Paramāra king's struggle with the Chaulukyas of Gujarāt. According to the Ras Mālā, supported by the Prabandhaśhīntāmaṇi, Kalachuri Karṇa (c. 1041-72 A.D.) of Dhāhala and Chaulukya Bhīma (c. 1022-64 A.D.) of Gujarāt jointly attacked king Bhōja of Ujjayinī, defeated and killed him and destroyed the city of Dhārā.⁴ The reference may also be to Udayāditya's struggle with Chaulukya Karṇa I (c. 1064-94 A.D.), son of Bhīma I. While a Chitorgarh inscription⁵ of

³ The Paramāra king Siyaka alias Śrī-Harsha (known dates between V.S. 1005=949 A.D. and V.S. 1028=973 A.D.) succeeded his father Vairisiṃha alias Vajraṭa (loc. cit.) and he is apparently mentioned as Siyā in verse 27 of our inscription.

Kumārapāla's time merely credits Karṇa I with a victory over the Mālavas at the Sūdakūpa pass, the Prithvirājavijaya, Sukṛitasamkīrtana and Surathōtsava refer to his conquest of the Mālava country.¹ An inscription² in the Nagpur Museum refers to Udayāditya's conquest of the earth (i.e. the Paramāra kingdom) which had been occupied, jointly with the Karṇātas, by Karṇa who is identified by some scholars with Chaulukya Karṇa I but by others with the Kalachuri king of Dāhala bearing the same name.³

Verses 36-37 speak of Naravarman (c. 1101-1135 A.D.), son of Udayāditya, but pass over his elder brother Lakshmadēva or Jagaddēva (c. 1090-1101 A.D.) in silence. The next stanza (verse 39) mentions Yaśōvarman (c. 1135-45 A.D.) without specifying the fact that he was the son and successor of Naravarman. Verses 40-41 speak of Ajayavarman, son of Yaśōvarman,⁴ while the next two stanzas describe Ajayavarman's son Vindhavarman (verse 42) and grandson Subhatavarman (verse 43) without stating the fact that Subhatavarman was the son and successor of Vindhavarman. Arjunadēva (i.e. Arjunavarman, known dates between V.S. 1267 and 1270, i.e. 1211-15 A.D.), son of Subhatavarman, is mentioned in verses 44-45, in the first of which he is described as devoted to Kṛishṇa.

There is a valuable reference to a historical event in verses 46-48 in the description of the next king Dēvapāla (known dates between V.S. 1275 and 1289, i.e. 1218-32 A.D.) who is mentioned without specifying his relationship with Arjunavarman. Dēvapāla belonged to a branch of the Paramāra family, being the grandson of Mahākumāra Lakshmivarman (known date V.S. 1200, i.e. 1144 A.D.) who was a brother of king Ajayavarman of the main line. In the branch line, ruling independently over the region about Bhopal, Indore, Hoshangabad, Khandesh and Nimar, Lakshmivarman was succeeded as Mahākumāra by his son Hariśchandra (known dates V.S. 1235-36, i.e. 1179-81 A.D.) whose successor was his son Mahākumāra Udayavarman (known date V.S. 1256, i.e. 1200 A.D.). Dēvapāla was the younger brother and successor of Udayavarman. With Dēvapāla's accession to the throne of Arjunavarman of the main branch of the Paramāra family, the two parts of the Paramāra kingdom became reunited.

Verse 48 states that Dēvapāla killed an adhipa (i.e. a king or chief) of the Mlēcchhas in a battle fought near the city of Bhaillaavāmin. This no doubt refers to the invasion of the city of Bhaillaavāmin (modern Bhilsā) by Iltutmish (1212-36 A.D.), the Turkish Sultān of Delhi. According to Muslim historians, in 632 A.H. or 1233-34 A.D., Iltutmish reduced Gwalior to subjection and turned his arms against Malwa; he captured the fort of Bhilsā where the temple of Bhaillaavāmin was demolished and marched into Ujjayinī where he destroyed the great temple of the god Mahākālā.⁵ The claim of Dēvapāla in the stanza of our inscription, referred to above, seems to suggest that the Paramāra king succeeded in recovering the city of Bhilsā shortly after its conquest by Iltutmish. The Mlēcchhādhipa mentioned in the verse was probably the Muslim governor in whose charge the city was placed by the Sultān. That the Paramāras reconquered Bhilsā is also suggested by the fact that, after half a century, the Khaljī Sultāns of Delhi had to reconquer the city from the Hindus.⁶

Dēvapāla's son and successor was Jaitugi (known dates V.S. 1292-1300, i.e. 1236-44 A.D.) mentioned in verse 49. Verses 50-56 describe the Paramāra king during whose rule the charter under discussion was issued. He was the younger brother of Jaitugi; but the relationship between the two is not indicated in our record. It is interesting to note that he is called Jayavarman in verses 50 and 56 (as well as in line 87 and verse 72 below) but Jayasimha in verses 51-52. This king was so far known under the name Jayavarman (it is doubtful whether the name is Jayasimha in one of the cases) from the following inscriptions of his time: (1) Rahatgarh stone inscription¹ of V.S. 1312 (1256 A.D.); (2) Modi stone inscription² of V.S. 1314 (1258 A.D.), and (3) Mādhātā plates³ of V.S. 1317 (1261 A.D.). The Pathari inscription⁴ of V.S. 1326 (1269 A.D.) belongs to the reign of a Paramāra king named Jayasimha and there is a controversy amongst scholars whether Jayavarman mentioned in the Rahatgarh, Modi and Mādhātā records is identical with Jayasimha of the Pathari inscription.⁵ That a Paramāra king named Jayasimha ruled from Maṇḍapa some time before V.S. 1345 (1289 A.D.) is also suggested by the Balvan inscription⁶ of Chāhamāna Hammira of Raṇastambhapura as his father Jaitrasimha who died in V.S. 1339 (1283 A.D.) is stated to have defeated the said king. The present inscription, dated V. S. 1331 (1274 A.D.) and mentioning the Paramāra king by both the names Jayavarman and Jayasimha, shows clearly that scholars like Ganguly who regard Jayasimha of the Pathari inscription as different from Jayavarman of the Rahatgarh, Modi and Mādhātā (V.S. 1317) inscriptions are wrong. Ray's suggestion⁷ that Jaitugi may have also been known by the name Jayasimha is equally wrong since the two brothers, Jaitugi and Jayavarman, could not both of them have enjoyed the common name Jayasimha. The rule of Paramāra Jayasimha-Jayavarman may be assigned to the period 1255-75 A.D.

Verse 52 of our inscription seems to suggest that Jayasimha-Jayavarman was regarded as both a dauhitra (daughter's son) and a pautra (son's son) with reference to his succession to the Paramāra throne. This statement seems to throw some light on the controversy whether Dēvapāla of a branch line of the family succeeded Arjunavarman of the main line by overthrowing the latter by violence or because Arjunavarman died without leaving any male heir.⁸ If the stanza in question means to say that Jayasimha-Jayavarman claimed to be a dauhitra of Arjunavarman, Dēvapāla may be regarded as having succeeded Arjunavarman as the latter's son-in-law and heir.

Verse 54 speaks of Jayasimha-Jayavarman's success against the king of Dākṣhinātya lying to the south of the Vindhya. This may refer to his struggle with the Yādava king Rāmachandra who, according to his Thana plates⁹ of Śaka 1194 (1272 A.D.), defeated the Mālavas. The Udari stone inscription¹⁰ of the same king, dated Śaka 1198 (1276 A.D.), speaks of his victory over king Arjuna of Mālava, who was apparently the immediate successor of Jayasimha-Jayavarman and may be regarded as Arjunavarman II. The same Paramāra king is also mentioned in the Balvan inscription¹ (V.S. 1345=1288 A.D.) of Chāhamāna Hammira (c. 1233-1301 A.D.) of Raṇastambhapura. Hammira is stated to have defeated Arjuna in battle and wrested the glory of Mālava by force.²

According to lines 128 ff., the four villages, having well-defined boundaries, were granted as a permanent endowment together with trees, houses, house-sites, granaries and threshing floors, tala-bhēdhyā (pits ?) and cow-sheds. The donees' rights included certain taxes payable by the tenants in kind and described as handfuls of vegetables, small measures of oil and vesselsful of liquids or grains. They were granted the right over objects grown in the space above the earth and treasures and deposits under the ground as well as over temples, gardens, tanks, step-wells, wells, etc. They were further allowed to enjoy taxes in cash, periodical offerings and the customary share of grains, and also the tax on temporary tenants as well as other incomes including fines. But the donees were not allowed to have any right over any part of the land already in the possession of gods and Brāhmaṇas. The Paṭṭakilas and villagers were ordered to pay to the donees the usual share of the produce, periodical offerings and taxes in cash as well as to obey their orders. Some of the ordinary imprecatory and benedictory stanzas are quoted in lines 134-38. According to verse 72 in line 139, the writer of the charter was Śrīkaṇṭha who was a courtier of king Jayavarman. The document was engraved by Rūpakāra (artisan) Kānhāka who may be the same as Kānhāḍa, the engraver of the Māndhātā plates of V.S. 1317 (1261 A.D.), issued by the same king.

The following geographical names are mentioned in the inscription : (1) Rōvā, i.e. the river Narmadā ; (2) Kāvērī, a branch of the Narmadā ; (3) Māndhātṛi or Māndhātṛi-durga, i.e. modern Māndhātā ; (4) Dhārā, i.e. modern Dhār ; (5) Bhaillasvāmipura, i.e. modern Bhilsā ; (6) the Vindhya mountain range ; (7) Dākshinātya, apparently meaning the dominions of the Yādavas of Dēvagiri ; (8) Dēvapālapura, probably modern Dipalpur, 27 miles to the north-west of Mhow ; (9) Śākapura probably the headquarters of a Pratijāgarāṇaka or Pargana of the same name identified by some with the present Shujalpur Pargana ;³ (10) Maṇḍapa-durga, i.e. modern Māṇḍū ; (11) Vardhanā-pura-pratijāgarāṇaka ; (12) Kumbhaḍāuda-grāma ; (13) Vālauda-grāma ; (14) Saptāśīti-pratijāgarāṇaka, literally 'a Pargana consisting of 87 villages' ; (15) Vaghāḍī-grāma ; (16) Nāgadaha-pratijāgarāṇaka, a Pargana probably having its headquarters at Nagdah near Ujjain ; (17) Nāṭiyā-grāma (modern Nāvṭiyā near the Birwania railway station in the Ujjain District.); (18) Takārī;¹ (19) Lakhaṇapura; (20) Tōlāpauha; (21) Tēpi; (22) Mālava, i.e. the dominions of the Paramāras roughly comprising modern Malwa; and (23) Bhārata, i.e. India.

² The successor of Arjunavarman II on the Paramāra throne seems to have been Bhōja II. According to the Hammirama-lākṣya of Nayachandra, Chāhamāna Hammira of Raṇastambhapura also defeated king Bhōja of Dhārā, encamped at Ujjayinī and worshipped Mahākālā (Ind. Ant., Vol. VIII, pp. 64-65). The Muslim writers speak of one Kōkā (sometimes called Haranand), the Rājā of Malwa, who was defeated by 'Alāuddīn Khālji in 1305, A.D. (Tarikh-i-Firishta, Briggs' trans., Vol. I, pp. 361-62 ; Ray, op. cit., pp. 907-08). In an inscription of V.S. 1496 (Bhandarkar's List, No. 784) the same ruler is called Gōgādeva, king of Mālava, who was defeated by Guhila Lakshmasimha, a contemporary of the Khālji Sultān. Kōkā thus appears to have been either identical with or a contemporary of Bhōja II. Wassāf, who wrote his Taziyatul Amsār in 1300 A.D., says : " It may be about thirty years previous to my laying the foundation of this book that the king of Malwa died and dissension arose between his son and minister. After long hostilities and much slaughter, each of them acquired possession of part of that country " (Elliot and Dowson, op. cit., Vol. III, p. 31). It is not impossible that the king of Malwa and his son referred to here are Arjunavarman II and Bhōja II. In such a case, Kōkā may be the minister who became the king of a part of Malwa at the time of Bhōja II during whose reign Wassāf seems to have written his book. Muslim authors sometimes call Kōkā a Pradhān of king Mahlak Deo of Malwa (Elliot and Dowson op. cit., p. 76). This Mahlak Deo may have been the successor of Bhōja II. He was probably succeeded by Jayasimha whose Udaypur inscription (Bhandarkar's List, No. 661) is dated in V.S. 1366 (1310 A.D.). But Jayasimha must have been ruling over a part of the country, its other parts then being in the hands of the Muslim conquerors.

No. 18—JHARIKA GRANT OF RASHTRAKUTA GOVINDA III, SAKA 725

V. B. KOLTE, NAGPUR

These plates were discovered on the 13th of April 1954 by Shri Achyutrao Gulabrao Deshmukh in the dilapidated mud wall on the south-west side of a small fortress owned by him at Sirso,¹ a village two miles north of Murtizapur, the headquarters of a Taluk of that name in the Akola District, formerly in Madhya Pradesh but now in Bombay State. Shri B. G. Deshmukh, E. A. C., the younger brother of Shri A. G. Deshmukh and an erstwhile pupil of mine, kindly sent them to me through Shri J. B. Kadam alias Nanasaheb, M. L. A. I am indebted to these gentlemen for permitting me to edit the plates.

The plates are strung together on a ring (about .4" in thickness and 3" in diameter), the ends of which are soldered into the socket of a circular seal (1.8" in diameter), containing in relief, on a counter-sunk surface, the figure of Garuḍa, facing full front, squatting on a lotus and carrying a serpent in each hand. The ring was intact when the plates reached my hands. I got it cut through the Curator, Nagpur Museum. The weight of the plates is 175 tolas and that of the ring together with the seal 51 tolas.

The plates are three in number, each measuring from 9.5" to 10" in length and 7" in breadth. Their ends are slightly raised for the protection of the writing. The first and third plates are inscribed on one side only and the second on both the sides. At the centre of the proper right and about .8" from the end, each plate has a circular hole about .8" in diameter for the ring to pass through. When I received the plates, they were all covered with verdigris. After cleaning them, it was found that they were corroded in many places. Several letters on each plate have been damaged, especially the letters in lines 51 and 52 on the second side of the second plate. This has rendered the decipherment of the names of the boundary villages very difficult, although the introductory part of the inscription could be read without much difficulty with the help of cognate records. There are 73 lines in all, 17 of them occurring on the first plate, 19 and 20 on the first and second sides of the second plate, and the remaining 17 on the third plate. The penultimate line on the first side of the second plate is short in length by 1.5" and the last line incised on the right side at the bottom, is only 1.7" in length and contains only seven letters. The last line on the second side of the second plate is also only 1.5" in length and contains only five letters incised at the bottom on the right side. The size of the letters therefore is not the same everywhere. They are generally $\frac{1}{8}$ " to $\frac{1}{4}$ " in height, but are slightly bigger in lines 72 and 73 and smaller in line 39. The engraving is careless and, in certain places, some syllables and words are omitted or repeated (cf. e.g., the confusion in line 34).

Medial ā is generally denoted by adding a short downward stroke at the end of the top mātrā, e.g., maṇḍalā in line 2. In some places, it is a long full-fledged stroke, e.g., nīṣāta in line 12. Sometimes it is indicated by a horizontal stroke turned upwards, e.g., parākrama in line 17 while often it is a short vertical stroke on the top of the letter, e.g., vasudhā and dattā in line 67. Medial u is denoted by a short horizontal stroke at the foot of a letter, e.g., in rājasu in line 3, and sometimes by a curve open to the left, e.g., kānt-ēṇḍu in line 1. Medial ū is represented in many cases by a curve-open to the right, e.g. pūjā-pūjita in line 72, and sometimes by a horizontal stroke slanting to the right; e.g. bhūmi in line 60. The forms of ru and rū may be noted in ruchirō in line 8 and rūpaṁ in line 24. Medial ē or ō is shown either by a short vertical or a slanting downward stroke to the left of the top mātrā of a letter or by a slanting line cut on its head. The letters are generally uniform; but k, v, p, etc., have different forms. The letter n has two forms, one North Indian and the other South Indian.

The language of the inscription is Sanskrit which is not accurate in all cases. Sometimes ś is used for s and vice versa. In certain places, anusvāra is used for final n (cf. °mānakām for mānakān in line 46). Attention may also be drawn to the use of tri for tri (line 6) and gri for gri (line 12). There are instances of short vowels being used for long ones and vice versa. As an example of metathesis may be cited jāga for gaja in line 23.

Some discrepancy is noticed in the date as recorded in lines 55-58 of the inscription. The Śaka year, given both in words and in figures, is 726 according to the former and 725 according to the latter. A lunar eclipse is stated to have occurred on the full moon of Kārttika during the year in question. According to Pillai's Indian Ephemeris, there was a lunar eclipse on the full-moon day of Kārttika in the expired Śaka year 725. There was no eclipse on Kārttika purnimā of the preceding and following few years. The Śaka year intended here was therefore 725 (expired).¹ The corresponding Christian date is the 2nd November 803 A.D.

The plates were issued by the Rāshtrakūṭa king Gōvinda III from his victorious camp on the bank of the river Tuṅgabhadrā near Alampura. The genealogy of the king recounted here is the same as in his other copper-plate grants, viz. Gōvinda I; his son Karkka I; his son Indra; his son Dantidurga; his uncle Kṛishṇa, son of Karkka I; his son Gōvinda II; his younger brother Dhruva; and his son Gōvinda III, the donor of the present charter. In line 45 he is referred to as Śrī-Vaṭṭabha-narēndradēva.

The introductory stanzas are mostly the same as in the Paithan plates² of Śaka 716, except that verses 20, 24 and 27 of the present plates do not occur in the latter and that verses 24, 26 and 27 of the Paithan plates do not occur in the present record. An interesting point to be noted is that verses 20 and 21 of the Paithan plates, which do not occur in any previous records of the Rāshtrakūṭas, are found in the present plates (verses 21-22). Verse 24 of the present inscription is not found in any other charter.

Although the present inscription contains no new facts about the genealogy of the Rāshtrakūṭas, it is useful for elucidating the time of the southern campaigns of Gōvinda III. According to our epigraph the king was camping on the bank of the Tuṅgabhadrā near Alampura on the 2nd November 803 A.D. According to the Sanjan plates³ which describe the exploits of Gōvinda III, this king is stated to have launched an offensive against the Draviḍa kings after his campaigns in the north. While engaged in this southern expedition, he was encamped at Hēlāpura. In the other records of Gōvinda III, he is said to have spent the rainy season at Śrībhavana after his northern expedition and thence proceeded to the banks of the Tuṅgabhadrā.

¹ In most of the charters issued by Gōvinda III the Śaka year mentioned is expired and the system followed is the northern luni-solar one. Sometimes the Śaka year is a current one, though it is said to be an expired one, as in the present plates. Besides this grant, there are two more records in which the date is mentioned as above. They are the Wāṇi-Diṇḍōri plates (Ind. Ant., Vol. XI, p. 159) and the Bahulāwād plates (Sources of the Medieval History of the Deccan, Vol. II, p. 21). In the present charter, notwithstanding the expression Śaka-nṛipa-kāl-ātita, the year 726 has to be taken as current, the year intended being 725 (expired).

It is very probable¹ that Alam̐pura of the present charter is identical with Hēlāpura of the Sanjan plates.² According to the British Museum plates,³ Gōvinda III was camping at Rāmēśvara-tīrtha on the bank of the Tuṅgabhadra on the 4th April of 804 A.D. after his victorious expedition against the Pallava ruler. From this we are led to surmise that his southern expedition was carried on between the date of the present charter and that of the British Museum plates, i.e., between the 2nd November of 803 A.D. and the 4th April of 804 A.D.

As pointed out by Prof. Mirashi,⁴ the charters of Gōvinda III fall into two groups, the first consisting of the Paṭṭhaṇ and Añjanavatī plates, in both of which the draft of the introductory part follows for the most part the text of the earlier records of the Rāshtrakūṭa family. Under the second group fall all other charters commencing with the Nēsarī plates of Śaka 727. In this series, a new draft was employed for the introduction describing the victories of the king over his northern and southern adversaries. The new draft is also found in the Maṇṇe plates of his brother Stambha dated Śaka 724 which was therefore taken to be the starting point of the second series by Prof. Mirashi. The genuineness of the Maṇṇe plates was questioned by Dr. Altekar who pointed out that as Gōvinda III was still engaged in his southern campaign in Śaka 726 according to the British Museum plates, the new draft could not have been composed prior to this date. To obviate this difficulty, Prof. Mirashi argued that the southern expedition mentioned in the British Museum plates must have been a second expedition of a later date. But an examination of the inscription shows that there is no ground for such an assumption.⁵

The present inscription proves the spurious nature of the Maṇṇe plates. The first group of charters issued by Gōvinda III is represented by the Paṭṭhaṇ and Añjanavatī plates and the present record is a new and important addition to it. While the Paṭṭhaṇ and Añjanavatī plates were issued before the Maṇṇe plates, the charter under study was issued one year later than that record. It can therefore be inferred that even in Śaka 725 the old draft was being used by the king. If the new draft was already composed and used in the Maṇṇe charter, there was no point in continuing with the old one in a charter issued one year later. The combined evidence of the Jharikā and British Museum plates shows that, during Śaka 725 and 726, Gōvinda III was still engaged in his southern campaign which he carried on from his camp at Alam̐pur on the bank of the Tuṅgabhadra and that after this expedition, on his way back to the capital, he had the new draft prepared. It was used, as far as evidence goes, for the first time in the Nēsarī charter of Śaka 727. Prof. Mirashi's inference that Gōvinda III's expedition against the southern kings occurred in Śaka 722 and 723 needs revision.⁶

⁶ [For the controversy on the nature of the Maṇṇe plates between Dr. Altekar and Prof. Mirashi, neither of whom regards the inscription as spurious, see above, Vol. XXIII, pp. 293-97. For the former's views on the chronology of Gōvinda III's campaigns, see also Acārya-Puṣpāñjali Volume, pp. 153 ff., and History and Culture of the Indian People, Vol. IV, p. 8, where he has accepted the date of Gōvinda's southern campaign as suggested by Prof. Mirashi.—P. B. D.]

The donee of the present plates is Bhaṭṭa Risiyapa of the Kāśyapa gōtra, who was a resident of Dhārāśiva, belonged to the family of *Traividya*s (i.e. learned in three Vēdas) and was a student of the Rīgvēda. He was the son of Bhaṭṭa Annasvāmin. It is to be noted that with some variations of spelling in the name the figures in the same capacity in three more records of Gōvinda III, viz. the Sisavai,¹ *Daśapura*² and *Lōhārā*³ grants. The grandfather of Risiyapa is not mentioned in the present grant. According to the Sisavai charter he was Vishṇu-chaturvēda who, it may be noted, belonged to the family of *Chāturvidya*s and not *Traividya*s as stated in other grants. He is called māś-ōpavāsīn in the Lōhārā and Daśapura plates.

As stated in the last two lines of the record, the charter was written in the presence of the king by Kukkāyya who was the son of the general Gauḍa, honoured by the five great titles, and by Dēvayya,⁴ officer in charge of the records. Kukkaika who wrote the Añjanavatī charter seems to be identical with this Kukkāyya. The same person seems to be responsible for the writing of the Paithan plates, as the last sentence in the record (line 73) can be read as likhitaṃ cha Paramēśvar-ādra(jña)yā Sri-Kukkāyēyē(n=ē)ti, although Kielhorn, its editor, did not decipher this portion. Thus it seems that Kukkāyya wrote the charters in which the old draft was used and that Aruṇāditya wrote the others in which the new draft was utilised.

As for the places mentioned in the present grant, Alampura is the present Alampūr, near the Alampūr Road railway station on the Central Railway, 3 miles to the north of the Tuṅgabhadra river. Jharikā, the donated village, may be modern Zari in the Kelapur Taluk of the Yeotmal District. Pōṇa, the headquarters of the territorial unit in which Jharikā was situated, may be modern Pōhanā on the bank of the Wardhā river in the Hinganghat Taluk of the Wardha District. Of the boundary villages, Taluti may be identified with the present Tarōḍi, 3 miles to the east, Vidurāmra with Umbari about 4 miles to the south, and Māragrāma with Mārōgāon 5 miles to the north of Zari. Talabhi cannot be identified.

No. 19—KALYANA INSCRIPTION OF SULTAN MUHAMMAD, SAKA 1248

P. B. DESAI, DHARWAR

Kalyāṇa is a small town in the Humnabad Taluk of the Bidar District, Mysore State. Its original name was also Kalyāṇa and this was modified as Kalyāṇi during the Muslim regime. The latter form of the name is still recognised in official quarters, although the common people prefer to call it by its earlier name. Kalyāṇa figures in hundreds of inscriptions of the rulers of the Later Chālukya family, who made it their principal headquarters about 1033 A.D.¹ This seat of political power was occupied by the usurpers of the Kalachuri family for some time in the latter part of the 12th century. It was also the scene of the religious conflict between Kalachuri Bijjala II and his minister Basavēśvara, the founder of Virāśaiva school, when it witnessed the great upsurge of the latter's followers. These memorable events are remembered to the present day and a visitor to Kalyāṇa is shown various sites associated with the activities of the historical personages.² An attempt is made in certain quarters even to restore the place-name as Basava-Kalyāṇa after the great leader of the Virāśaiva movement.³

Kalyāṇa, until recently included in the Hyderabad State, was in the possession of a family of petty Nawabs or Jāgirdārs who constructed a fort at the place. In the courtyard of this fort have been kept a large number of antiquities such as inscriptions, sculptures and remains of architectural constructions, brought over from various sites inside the town and also from the neighbouring villages. In the course of my official tour in search of inscriptions, I visited Kalyāṇa in January 1957 and copied 16 inscriptions kept in the said place, and two more in the Nawab's Bungalow. Of these, seven belong to the reign of Vikramāditya VI, one to that of his son Sōmēśvara III and three to that of the latter's successor Jagadēkamalla II. One more in the former place is the epigraph under study here. I edit the inscription from the estampages taken during my visit. It was previously edited in A. R. Arch. Dept., Hyderabad, 1936-37, pp. 43 ff.

The inscribed area of the stone slab bearing the epigraph is clearly demarcated by lines drawn on its four sides and it measures 45·7" long and 21·3" broad. At the top of this space are engraved figures of the crescent on the left and of the sun on the right. The stone has peeled off at the left corner of the bottom, resulting in the loss of a few letters. There are in all 32 lines of writing and in most cases they are in a fair state of preservation.

³ Annual Report of Basavēśvara Dēraśthāna, 1954-55, and other publications (Hindi) of the institution.

The characters are Nāgarī, being normal for the period to which the inscription belongs. The following peculiarities, however, deserve to be noted. The top mātrā which is generally a straight line is sometimes curved towards the left, the curve being turned into a loop in a few cases; see for instance t in °rōpita in line 7 and d at the beginning of the next line. The letters t and n are not distinguished in many cases; e.g. tanayō in line 17. The letter ś presents two forms; e.g. Śākē in line 1 and śudī in line 2. In regard to orthography, two rare instances of the doubling of the consonant after r are available and they are confined to one letter only which is t in varṭta-mānē in line 7 and varṭtatē in line 13. Sh is written for kh, e.g. Shōjā in line 7. The language of the inscription is Sanskrit and the composition both prose and verse. There are four verses which are numbered. Of the large number of errors that have crept into the writing, a few may be attributed to the insufficient knowledge of the language on the part of the person who prepared the draft and the majority to the incompetence of the scribe who apparently failed to follow the draft fully. These blemishes are particularly glaring in verses 3-4 which have become difficult to decipher and interpret.

After the auspicious symbol the inscription mentions the date which is cited as Śaka 1248, Kṣhaya,¹ Kārttika śu. 15, Monday (lines 1-2). This regularly corresponds to the 10th November 1326 A.D. The epigraph then states that Mahārājādhirāja Suratāṇa Mahamada was ruling at this time (lines 2-4). Next we are introduced to his subordinate Mahāpradhāna Mallika Kāmadīna who was in charge of the whole administration and was governing Mahārāshṭra-maṇḍala (lines 4-6). The phrase found in this context, viz. samasta-mudrā-vyāpārān paripamthayati is interesting. The expression paripamthayati as it occurs here cannot be traced in the lexicons, although it seems to have been used in the sense of 'conducting' or 'executing'. This phrase appears to have passed into the administrative terminology of this period as seen from its occurrence elsewhere also.² Next comes a local official under the provincial governor. He was in charge of the area of the town of Kalyāṇa and called Shōjā (i.e. Khōjā or Khvājā) Ahamada (lines 7-8).

What follows (lines 8-10) is highly interesting though difficult to interpret fully on account of the faulty text. It seems that in connection with the revolution (viparyaya) caused by Bāhabādīnu, Khōjā Ahamada, the officer of Kalyāṇa, along with Jaṇḍamala, went to Syāra Mallika. This gave room for confusion which was taken advantage of by the unruly elements who seem to have caused serious damage to the temple of Madhukēśvara and even broken the Śiva-liṅga. Soon after this, some devotees of the god from the Karpāṭa section of the population appear to have made a premature offer to embellish the temple. The text of the relevant passage after correction stands as Kārpāṭa-lōkaiḥ aṅjana-buddhiḥ kṛtā. But this move was not encouraged by the trustees of the temple.

After some time when the governor of the town returned, a representation was made to him in the matter of reinstating the deity and resumption of ceremonial worship as usual by Ṭhakkura

Malla,¹ son of Vainasimha or Vainapāla, who was in charge of the management of the temple. The request was granted by the governor in consultation with his secretary.² The governor is stated to have given the verdict that as it (i.e. worship in the temple) was the religious duty of the petitioners, they should follow it (lines 11-14).

Then come four verses, all in the Śārdūlavikrīḍita metre. In verse 1 the Sultan is mentioned as Mahimada. Verses 1-2 together summarise the main facts stated before. The only additional information furnished by them is that the said Malla was a Kāyastha and that the installation of the deity took place according to the prescribed rites such as the chanting of the mantras at night during the Rōhiṇī nakshatra. It is interesting to note that on the date cited previously the Kṛttikā nakshatra lasted till 34, followed by Rōhiṇī thereafter. Verse 3 seems to allude to the Puranic episode of the destruction of the Three Cities by the god Śiva. Verse 4 praises the deity Madhukēśvara, i.e. Śiva, as the supreme god and invokes his blessings. In the prose passage that follows (lines 29-30) is introduced Vijāditya who wrote (i.e. drafted) the charter. He is described as one respected by Syara Sihādā-rāja³ who appears to have been an officer of some importance, probably a prince of the royal family. It is not unlikely that he is identical with Syāra Mallika mentioned in line 8. This Vijāditya appears to have been a person of some learning, though his composition has been spoiled by the ignorant engraver. The last two lines (31-32) are damaged. Line 31 again refers to Thakura and Madhukēśvara.

The inscription is of unique historical importance. The ruling king introduced as Mahārājādhirāja-śrī-Suratāna must no doubt be Sultan Muhammad Shah bin Tughluq. The epithet Suratāna is a Prakrit form of Suratrāna (cf. lines 14-15) which is a Sanskritised form of Sulṭān. Muhammad Shah's accession took place a few days after the death of his father Ghiyās-ud-dīn Tughluq in February or March 1325 A.D.⁴ The areas around Kalyāna might have been annexed by Muhammad Shah himself in the course of his campaigns against Warangal and Bidar during the life-time of his father when he was acting as the viceroy of the southern provinces under his original name Ulugh Khan.⁵ Our inscription dated 1326 A.D. falls in the second year of Muhammad Shah's reign. It thus furnishes the earliest epigraphic evidence so far known for the reign of the king.⁶

² The name of this secretary appears to be Jamḍadāsa (lines 12-13). It is not unlikely that the same person is mentioned as Jamḍamala in line 8 immediately after Shōjā Ahamada. Compare the name of Mulla's father mentioned with variations as Vainapāla (line 12) and Vainasimha (line 17).

Another piece of historical information which was not known hitherto and which is offered for the first time by our epigraph is that Mahārāshtra-maṇḍala was placed at this time under the governance of Mallika Kāmadīna.¹ This Mahārāshtra-maṇḍala seems to have comprised the erstwhile dominion of the Dēvagiri kings, as the latter is sometimes referred to as Mahrattā.² A subordinate officer of this Kāmadīna, Shōjā (i.e. Khōjā or Khvājā) Ahamada, was in charge of the small area around Kalyāṇa. Although included in Mahārāshtra for the exigency of administration, Kalyāṇa must have been a Kannaḍa area as seen from the numerous Kannaḍa inscriptions from earlier centuries found there. This fact, curiously enough, is indicated by an allusion to Kārṇāṭa (i.e. of Kārṇāṭa) occurring in the present inscription itself.

The charter under study incidentally offers confirmatory evidence in favour of a tumultuous event in the reign of Muhammad bin Tughluq, which looms large in the history of South India. This was the rebellion, in the second year of his reign, of his cousin Bahā-ud-dīn Gursāsp, who held the fief of Sāgar, near Shorāpur,³ in the present Gulbarga District. The expression Bāhabadīnu-viparyaya occurring in line 8 of our inscription undoubtedly alludes to this episode. The region of Kalyāṇa which is not far away from Sāgar seems to have been affected by the disturbances following this revolt. What took place is not clearly stated in our record; but it appears that the governor of Kalyāṇa had to leave his headquarters in this connection, probably for advice and aid from another officer of the Sultan, posted in the adjoining area. This officer seems to be one who is mentioned as Syāra Mallika⁴ in line 8 and Syara Sihādā in line 29.

It is stated in verse 1 that the temple of Madhukēśvara which became a victim of vandalism during these disturbances was situated at Kalyāṇa itself. The magnanimous view taken by the Muslim governor of Kalyāṇa in respect of the reinstallation of the Hindu deity and the resumption of traditional worship therein, particularly at the time when the communal feelings ran so high, deserves high appreciation.

The following geographical names are mentioned in the epigraph: Mahārāshtra-maṇḍala, Kārṇāṭa and Kalyāṇa. The first of these has been discussed above. The reference to Kārṇāṭa separately either as a territory or as its people is interesting, as this province under its distinct name generally does not find a place as an independent unit in the official records of the period. Kalyāṇa is of course still known by its old name.

No. 20.—HOSUR INSCRIPTION OF VIRA-BALLALA, [SAKA] 1129

B. R. GOPAL AND SHRINIVAS RITTI, OOTACAMUND

This inscription, edited here with the kind permission of the Government Epigraphist for India, is engraved on a pillar in the Trikūṭeśvara temple at Hosūr in the Gadag Taluk of the Dharwar District, Mysore State. It was copied in 1926-27 and noticed in the Annual Report on South Indian Epigraphy for the year.¹ The record covers a space of about 1' 2.5" × 1' 2" and is in a fair state of preservation, though a few letters in the middle are worn out. It contains 19 lines of writing.

The record is in Kannaḍa and is written in prose throughout.

The palaeography of the record is regular for the period to which it belongs, i.e. early half of the 13th century A.D. However, the following points deserve notice. Anusvāra is used in place of anunāsika as in Chikka-[Nara]śiṃgayyaṃgaḷu, line 7. The use of the prosthetic y in Yēḷunūrv-vara, (line 9), may be noted. The cursive forms of v and m are used, e.g. gāvumḍa, (line 8) and mukhyav° (line 9). The following may be noted in orthography : the doubling of letters preceded by r as in sarvādhikāri and Chakravartti (line 6, etc.), the use of ś for sh as in āśāḍha, (line 4) and varuśa, (line 3), and the wrong use of l for l, e.g. [Nara]śiṃgayyaṃgaḷu and Muḷugunda in line 7, Tuppa-dahalli in line 14, etc. The long mā in samkramāna in line 5 is a scribal error for ma.

The purpose of the record is to register a gift of land to the god Morakēśvaradēva by Chikka-Narasimṃgayya who is described as Mahāpradhāna and Sarvādhikāri and as the second son of the sovereign. He is stated to be governing Muḷugunda Twelve. The gift land was obtained by the donor from the Seven-Hundred of Hosavūr, headed by Mahābala-gāvunḍa. Mahābala-gāvunḍa along with others figures in another record² of this place, dated in 1192 A.D.,³ as the recipient of the income derived from taxes as a compensation for the damage caused to the town of Hosavūru, when king Vira-Ballāla had camped there. It is likely that the gift was made in the course of the king's campaign against Yādava Bhīllama which took place between 1191 and 1192 A.D.

The record under review is dated in 1129, apparently of the Śaka era, Prabhava, Āśāḍha śu. 11, Sunday, Karkkataka-samkramana. The details of the date are irregular. The samkramana occurred on Wednesday, the 27th June in the year 1207 A.D., when the tithi was śu. 1, the month being Nija Āśāḍha. The given tithi, however, corresponds to July 7 of the same year when the week-day was Saturday and not Sunday as stated in the record. The details do not work out correctly in the Adhika Āśāḍha either.

The record is important inasmuch as it furnishes certain details pertaining to the Hoysala family which were hitherto not properly assessed. Chikka-Narasimṃgayya is introduced as the second son (dvitīya kumāra) of Vira-Ballāla. It is well known that Vira-Ballāla was succeeded by his son Narasimha II in 1220 A.D.⁴ If Chikka-Narasimṃgayya, apparently Narasimha II, was the second son of the king, who was his first son and what became of him? In his account of the Hoysalas, Fleet has referred to a record from Śravaṇa Belgola which mentions Sōmēśvara as a kumāra or son of Ballāla.¹ But he dismisses the fact, not supported as it was by any other known record, with the remark that there was probably some mistake about either the original or the transcript.² Commenting on the same epigraph, Rao Bahadur R. Narasimhachar contended that Sōmēśvara mentioned in the record must have called himself the king's son by courtesy; for, Ballāla had no son of his own by that name. He has, however, shown that the record could be attributed, undated as it is, to 1206 A.D., judging from the internal evidence of the mention of Nayakirtti's disciples in this record as in some other dated records allied with this epigraph.³ It may be noted that the cyclic year Akshaya corresponding to 1205-06 A.D. cited in this record as the year from which the tax exemptions alluded to in it were to take effect, falls well within the reign-period of Ballāla II (1173-1220 A.D.). It may not be unreasonable to presume that the inscription itself should have been actually engraved and set up sometime prior to Akshaya inasmuch as its object was to proclaim the grant of exemptions of specified taxes and the proclamation itself was to take effect from the year Akshaya. This we will discuss in the sequel.

The date of Narasimha II's birth, viz. Śaka 1105, Śubhakṛit (1182 A.D.), is furnished by an epigraph from Alesandra.⁴

The earliest record⁵ mentioning him as administering in association with his father bears the date Śaka 1128, Krōdhana (=1205 A.D.).⁶ He should have been a young man about this period. To revert to the Śravaṇa-Belgoḷa epigraph, in the light of the categorical expression dvitīyam kumāraṁ applied to Narasimha in the record under review, it appears that the Sōmēśvara mentioned in the former inscription was the elder son of Vīra Ballāla. The record has been attributed to 1205-06 A.D. for reasons already referred to. But the cyclic year Akshaya from which or rather from the commencement of which (by inference) the tax-exemptions proclaimed in the record were to be effective and which corresponded to 1206 A.D. could not have been the year in which the record was set up. Allowing a reasonable time for the proclamation to be effectively made known to the public concerned, we may suppose that the inscription might have been set up some time in the year Krōdhana preceding the year Akshaya. But we have seen above that Narasimha figures already in Krōdhana actively in association with his father in the administrative activities of the kingdom in an inscription⁷ from Gañjigaṭṭe in Chitaldurg, which bears the date Śaka 1128, Krōdhana, Chaitra, paurṇamī, Monday, San̄kramaṇa-vyātīpāta, the details corresponding to 1205 A.D., April 4, Monday, f.d.t., 47, on which day there occurred a lunar eclipse not mentioned in the record. Whether Sōmēśvara was still living on this date and was also associated with his father in the administrative activities of the kingdom, we do not know. If he was dead by this date, then his Śravaṇa-Belgoḷa record must have been set up at the very commencement of the year Krōdhana itself or sometime prior to it. Further evidence by future research alone can settle these points. Since Ballāla's father himself was Narasiṃha, his own son is called Chikka-Narasimṡayya.

The geographical names that occur in the record are Muḷugunda, Hosavūr and Tuppadahalli besides the well-known Vāraṇāsi, i.e. Banaras which is usually mentioned in the imprecatory portion of such records. Muḷugunda can be identified with modern Muḷgund in the Gadag Taluk and Hosavūr apparently is the modern Hosur, the findspot of the record. Tuppadahalli, however, cannot be identified, since no village of that name is now found in the vicinity of Hosur.

TRANSLATION

Lines 1-10. Hail! In the year 1129² of the illustrious Yādava-Nārāyaṇa Pratāpachakravartti Vira-Ballāladēva of the Hoysala family and the year Prabhava, on Sunday, the 11th day of the bright half of Āśāḍha, when there were vyatipāta (yōga) and Karkāṭaka-samkramaṇa, Mahāpradhāna and Sarvvādhikāri Chikka-Narasimṡayya, the second son of the emperor, while administering (the division of) Muḷugunda Twelve, obtained with the pouring of water from the Seven-Hundred of Hosavūr headed by Mahābaḷagāvumḍa, land, free from all imposts.

Lines 11-16. (And) he made a gift (of that land) for the aṅga-bhōga, burning of a perpetual lamp and offerings to god Morakēśvaradēva. The gift land measures one mattaru by Hiriyakōlu (i.e. the big rod) and its situation is as follows : (it lies) to the north of the eastern field of the god ; to the east of the field of Koṇḍa[ra*]sa ; to the south of the field of Brahmapuri and to the west of the road to Tuppadahaḷli.

Lines 16-19. The kings ruling over the country should protect this righteous deed. Those who do not, will incur the sin of slaughtering a thousand cows in Vārāṇasī, i.e. Vārāṇasī.

No. 21.—AMUDALAPADU PLATES OF VIKRAMADITYA I, YEAR 5

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

The inscription was published in the Telugu journal Bhārati for May 1957, pp. 86 ff., by Pandit Gadiyaram Ramakrishna Sarma¹ who secured the plates for examination from Mr. Narayana Reddi, a pleader of Vanaparti in the Mahbubnagar District of the old Hyderabad State, now in Andhra, through Mr. Dumpali Rami Reddi. Mr. Narayana Reddi got the plates about 20 years ago from an inhabitant of the village of Amudālapāḍu in the Alampur Taluk, formerly of the Raichur District of Hyderabad but now forming a part of the Mahbubnagar District of Andhra.

The inscription is incised on four plates each measuring about 7·1" in length and about 3" in height. They are strung on a ring, the ends of which are secured beneath a seal containing the well-known Varāha emblem of the Chālukyas. The borders of the plates are not raised. Of the four plates, the first and the last are inscribed on the inner side only while the second and third plates have writing on both the sides. There are altogether 48 lines of writing in the inscription. They are distributed on the inscribed faces of the plates as follows: I—7 lines; IIA—7 lines; IIB—8 lines; IIIA—9 lines; IIIB—8 lines; IV—9 lines. The last line on IIIA consists only of two letters. The weight of the plates is 75 tolas and that of the ring with the seal 16·5 tolas.

The characters belong to the old Telugu-Kannaḍa alphabet and closely resemble those of the published records of the issuer of the charter, viz. Chālukya Vikramāditya I (655-81 A.D.) of Bādāmi.² As regards palaeography, it is difficult in some cases to distinguish between the medial signs for i and ī and between the consonants ch and v, n and ṇ, etc. The language of the record is Sanskrit. In point of orthography and style, the inscription closely resembles most other charters of Vikramāditya I. The orthography of the record is characterised by the tendency to use class-nasals in preference to anusvāra and the rare use of the upadhmāniya (cf. line 9). There are several instances of visarga-sandhi as in mātrībhis=sapta (line 3) and *gurōś=śriya*³ (line 19). The grant is dated in the 5th regnal year of the king. As Vikramāditya I is known to have ascended the throne in 654-55 A.D.,⁴ the issue of the grant may be assigned to 659-60 A.D. Since the tithi on which the grant was made is stated to have been the Vaiśākha-paurṇamāsī, the actual date seems to be the 30th April 660 A.D.

² For three sets of his plates from Karnul, see JBBRAS, Vol. XVI, pp. 233 ff., pp. 238 ff., pp. 240 ff.; for the Talamanchi, Gadval and Hyderabad plates, see respectively above, Vol. IX, pp. 98 ff.; ibid., Vol. X, pp. 100 ff.; and Ind. Ant., Vol. VI, pp. 72 ff. For the Honnur plates, see A. R. Mys. Arch. Dep., 1939, pp. 129 ff. Good facsimiles of most of the inscriptions have been published along with the articles on them.

The record begins with the well-known stanza Jayaty-āvisṣkṛitāḥ, etc., found at the beginning of numerous charters of the Chālukyas and their subordinates. As in the other grants of Vikramāditya I, the king's great-grandfather is introduced as belonging to the family of the Chālukyas (Chālukyas) who claimed to be Hārītīputras of the Mānavya gōtra, to have increased through the favour of the Seven Mothers, to have obtained prosperity through the protection of the god Kārttikēya and to have overpowered their enemies who submitted at the very sight of the Boar emblem which the family acquired through the grace of Lord Nārāyaṇa. The Chālukya king is represented, as in most of his records, as the great-grandson of Pōlikēśivallabha-mahārāja (i.e. Pulakēśin I) who celebrated the Aśvamēdha sacrifice, as the grandson of Kīrtivarman-Prithivivallabha-mahārāja (i.e. Kīrtivarman I) who subdued the territories of his adversaries including the land of Vanavāśī (i.e. the capital of the Kadambas), and as the dear son of Satyāśraya Śrīprithivivallabha-mahārājādhirāja-paramēśvara (i.e. Pulakēśin II) who obtained the second name Paramēśvara as a result of his victory over Harshavardhana, the lord of the entire Uttarāpatha (meaning here the northern half of India lying to the north of the Vindhya). King Vikramāditya I, the issuer of the charter, is stated to have overthrown, with the help of his charger Chitrakaṇṭha and his sharp sword, the three kings who were responsible for the disappearance of his father's royal fortune and to have restored the properties belonging to gods and Brāhmaṇas in the kingdoms of the said three kings who had confiscated them. The above introductory part of the record is concluded with a stanza saying that king Anivārīta-Vikramāditya (i.e. Vikramāditya I) recovered the prosperity of his family as a result of his conquests over many adversaries in different directions. This verse is found in the earlier charters of the king, while the later Gadval (674 A.D.) plates add to it four more stanzas referring to his success against his three adversaries belonging to the Pallava royal family of Kāñchi.

None of the facts recorded in the introductory part of the inscription, discussed above, is new. It is well known that the Pallava king Narasimhavarman I (c. 630-68 A.D.) defeated and killed Pulakēśin II about 642 A.D. and occupied the southern part of the Chālukya empire including the capital city of Bādāmi while Vikramāditya I succeeded in recovering the lost part of the kingdom and in establishing himself on his father's throne about 655 A.D., although his struggle with the Pallavas continued till the early years of Paramēśvaravarman I (c. 669-90 A.D.), the grandson of Narasimhavarman I.¹ But two points deserve notice in this connection. In the first place, the statement that Pulakēśin II assumed the second name Paramēśvara after his victory over king Harshavardhana of Northern India does not appear to be strictly accurate. As we have elsewhere² suggested, the Chālukya king probably assumed that name after saving his homeland from enemies and restoring Chālukya sovereignty in the territories of the disaffected neighbours while an additional significance was later attached to it after his victory over Paramēśvara (i.e. the imperial ruler) Harshavardhana. Secondly, it is well known that the reference to the regal fortune of Pulakēśin II, which had been interrupted by three kings, and to the re-establishment of the grants to gods and Brāhmaṇas (which had been confiscated by the three kings) by Vikramāditya I was understood by Fleet as an allusion to the Chālukya king's success against his three Pallava rivals, viz. Narasimhavarman I (c. 630-68 A.D.), Mahēndravarmān II (c. 668-69 A.D.) and Paramēśvaravarman I (c. 669-90 A.D.).³ This view is, however, clearly wrong, because the claim is noticed in the records of Vikramāditya I, including the one under study, which bear dates much earlier than the end of the rule of Narasimhavarman I. It has also to be noticed, as already indicated above, that the stanzas referring to his success against the said three rulers of the Pallava family are found for the first time in the Gadval plates of 674 A.D.¹ They appear therefore to have been added to his prastāvi after the accession of the Pallava king Paramēśvaravarman I some time about 669 A.D.² One of the three kings who shadowed the royal fortune of Pulakēśin II must have been Pallava Narasimhavarman I while the two others were apparently his allies, although their identity is not clear. The allusion to the three kingdoms of the hostile rulers, in which Vikramāditya I re-established his family's prestige, does not appear to suggest that three kingdoms were established in the southern part of the Chālukya empire, which had been conquered by the enemies of Pulakēśin II. The implication of the passage in question seems to be that Pulakēśin II conquered the three kingdoms in which he created certain endowments, in favour of gods and Brāhmaṇas, that the rulers of those kingdoms later defeated and killed Pulakēśin II and confiscated the properties involved in the endowments and that Vikramāditya I sometime afterwards reconquered the three kingdoms and restored the endowments. This seems to be supported by the Aihole inscription,³ according to which Pulakēśin II defeated the Pallava king of Kāñchī and went to the land to the south of the Kāvērī, where he became the source of prosperity to the Chōḷas, Kērajas and Pāṇdyas. It appears that Pulakēśin II succeeded in winning over the allegiance of the southern neighbours of the Pallavas. Since it is very probable that it is two of these three smaller powers of the south that sided with Pallava Narasimhavarman I in his successful encounter against Pulakēśin II, the Chālukya king's policy of befriending the neighbours of the Pallavas, referred to above, appears to have been successful only for a short time. But which one of the four southern kings, viz. the Pallava, Chōḷa, Pāṇḍya and Kēraja, is omitted in the reference to the three kings (avanipati-tritaya) and their kingdoms (rājya-traya) in the records of Vikramāditya I is difficult to determine, although it may be Kēraja. It is, however, interesting to note that the inscriptions of Vinayāditya (681-96 A.D.), son of Vikramāditya I, credits his father with success against all the four rulers.⁴ Vinayāditya speaks of his father as °Pallavapati-parājay-ānantara-grihīta-Kāñchīpura (i.e. one who captured Kāñchīpura after having defeated the Pallava king) and *°dalūa-Chōḷa-Pāṇḍya-Kēraja-dharaṇīdhara-māna*⁵ (i.e. one who curbed the pride of the Chōḷas, Pāṇḍyas and Kērajas). Vinayāditya himself also claims to have arrested, under his father's orders, the power or forces of trairājya-Pallava or trairājya-Kāñchīpati. These expressions have been variously interpreted; but the reference is apparently to the same achievements ascribed to the Chālukya king's father separately, i.e. to the success against the Pallava king of Kāñchī and against the three kingdoms of the Chōḷas, Pāṇḍyas and Kērajas.⁶ The explanation of the omission of one of the four powers in the records of Vikramāditya I seems to be that he had no occasion to enter into that particular territory. The presence of the Chālukya king in the Chōḷa country is well known from his Gadval plates issued from Urugapura (i.e. the Chōḷa capital) situated in the Chōḷika vishaya on the southern bank of the Kāvērī.⁷ But the references in the passages under study appear to point to his exploits in the southern kingdoms before his occupation of the throne of Bādami about 655 A.D.

The object of the inscription is to record the grant of the village of Ipaṇṇkal, situated in Vaṇḍūravāḍi-vishaya, by Mahārājādhirāja Paramēśvara Vikramāditya Satyāśraya Śrīpri- thivivallabha (i.e. Vikramāditya I), when he was stationed at the village of Maṣṣūra, in favour of Sudarśanāchārya in payment of guru-dakṣhiṇā on the occasion of the king's Śiva-maṇḍala-dīkṣhā on the full-moon day of Vaiśākha in the fifth year of his reign.

² As already noted above, the stanzas in question are not found in the Honnur plates, dated the 9th April 670 A.D.

It is clear that the Chālukya king underwent Śaiva-dīkṣhā, i.e. initiation into the Śaiva faith, at the hands of his guru or preceptor Sudarśanāchārya who received the village as his dakṣhiṇā or perquisite for the performance of the initiation ceremony.¹ It is further stated that the Āchārya (i.e. the king's preceptor Sudarśanāchārya) distributed plots of land in the gift village among the following twentyseven Brāhmaṇas: (1) Rudraśivāchārya of the Kāśyapa gōtra; (2) Gāyatrīśiva of the Kauṇḍinya gōtra; (3) Śivasvāmin of the Hārīta gōtra; (4) Gōllabhāṭṭi of the Bhāradvāja gōtra; (5) Paramaśiva of the same Bhāradvāja gōtra; (6) Vāmanasvāmin of the Kauśika gōtra; (7) Kāśavasvāmin of the same Kauśika gōtra; (8) Kōkīlasvāmin of the Maitrēya gōtra; (9-10) Nārāyaṇa and Vāmana of the Kāśyapa gōtra; (11) Rēvaśarman of the Sāṅkṛityāyana gōtra; (12-15) Rudraśarman, Rēvaśarman, Ādityaśarman and Tātaśarman of the Kāśyapa gōtra; (16-19) Bhīmaśarman, Durgāśarman, Bhōyiśarman and Bādiśarman of the Bhāradvāja gōtra; (20) Nāgaśarman of the Kauṇḍinya gōtra; (21) Brahmaśarman of the Bhāradvāja gōtra; (22) Ādityaśarman of the Śāṇḍilya gōtra; (23) Ravisvāmin of the Kāśyapa gōtra; (24) Śravaṇasimhaśarman of the Kauśika gōtra; (25) Dāmasvāmin of the Bhalāndana gōtra; (26) Dāmōdarasvāmin of the Kāśyapa gōtra; and (27) Mādusarman of the Bhāradvāja gōtra. Of these Brāhmaṇas, Śravaṇasimhaśarman is stated to have received two shares or plots of land, probably implying thereby that the others received only one share each. It seems that one share of land was also allotted to Sudarśanāchārya's wife. There is little doubt that the said Śaivite Brāhmaṇas assisted Sudarśanāchārya in the celebration of the dīkṣhā ceremony of Vikramāditya I. It may be noted that the king's guru Sudarśanāchārya has been mentioned without the name of his gōtra. This was possibly due either to an oversight of the scribe or of the engraver, or because he was an ascetic who had renounced the world. The first alternative is more probable since Sudarśana's wife seems to be mentioned in the record.

We know that the Early Chālukyas were devoted to the Seven Mothers, to the god Kārttikēya (the son of Śiva according to Hindu mythology) and to Lord Nārāyaṇa (Vishṇu) and that their emblem was the boar representing the Varāha avatāra of the god Vishṇu. Their title Śrī-prithivī-vallabha (literally, 'the husband of Śrī and Prithivī') seems to allude to their claim to having been incarnations of Vishṇu, the husband of Śrīdēvī and Bhūdēvī. The early members of the family thus appear to have been Vaiṣṇavas, with leanings towards Śaivism and the cult of the Mother-goddess. It may be recalled in this connection that Maṅgalēsa (597-610 A. D.), younger brother and successor of Kīrtivarman I, is described as a Paramabhāgavata (i.e. a devout worshipper of Vishṇu, the Bhagavat) in one of his inscriptions,² but that he not only made grants in favour of the Vaiṣṇava cave-temple at Bādāmi but also supplemented an endowment of the god Makuṭēśvaranātha (Śiva) made by his father and elder brother.³ His successor Pulakēśin II, father of Vikramāditya I, is called a Paramabhāgavata in one of his records, viz. the Lohaner plates.⁴ Under these circumstances, the initiation of Vikramāditya I into the Śaiva faith is a very interesting fact. The Nausāri plates of the feudatory prince Śrīyāśraya Śilāditya, dated 671 A. D., mention Vikramāditya I as a Paramamūhēśvara (i.e. a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara or Śiva) and meditating

¹ In Indian epigraphy, there are other instances of the grant of land in payment of guru-dakṣhiṇā on the occasion of a king's initiation. See B. Ch. Chhabra, Antiquities of Chambai State, Part II, pp. 58, 64, 68, 76, 78 (especially p. 76 where the expression pūjā-mantra-grahana has been used for dīkṣhā). See also A.R.Ep., 1953-54, A.p. B. on the feet of Śrī-Nāgavardhana who is believed to have been a god or a religious teacher.¹ It is not impossible that the king's guru Sudarśana was the head of a Śaiva religious order and that Nāgavardhana was one of his successors in that position. But the Talamanchi plates² of Vikramāditya I speaks of one, Śrī-Mēghāchārya of the Vāsishṭha gōtra, as his svakīya-guru. This grant was issued on the 13th July 660 A. D. in the sixth regnal year of the king, i.e. shortly after the issue of the charter under study. This may suggest that Sudarśanāchārya was succeeded as head of the order or organisation in question, soon after the king's initiation, by Mēghāchārya who was probably himself succeeded by Nāgavardhana. It is interesting to note that Mēghāchārya and Nāgavardhana are not mentioned in the list of Brāhmaṇas who were benefited by the grant under discussion and do not therefore appear to have taken part in the initiation ceremony of the Chālukya king. Alternatively it may be suggested that Mēghāchārya was the king's śikṣhā-guru just as Sudarśana was his dīkṣhā-guru, though in such a case his relationship with Nāgavardhana cannot be determined.

The devotees of the great god, called variously by such names as Śiva, Pāśupati and Mahēśvara, were generally known in early times as Śaiva, Pāśupata or Mahēśvara, although the three expressions gradually came to indicate different sects of the god's votaries. In epigraphic and numismatic records, the royal devotees of the deity usually call themselves Mahēśvara. The *Mahā-bhāṣya*³ of Patañjali, who flourished in the second century B.C., mentions a sect of Śiva-worshippers as Śiva-bhāgavata (i.e. devotees of Śiva, the Bhagavat; identified with Kāpālika in Nāgārjuna's Uddṛṣṭa), who used to carry an iron lance in the hand. The same work also alludes to the construction of images of Śiva as well as of Skanda and Viśākha, for sale.⁴ In the first or second century A. D., a great Śaiva saint named Lakulin (literally, 'the bearer of the club') or Lakulīśa, flourished at Kāyāvarōhana (modern Karvan in the Dabhoi Taluk of the old Baroda State now in Bombay) and he founded a new school of Śaivism.⁵ Owing to the great popularity and influence of this school Lakulin came to be regarded as an incarnation of the god Śiva and Lakula became another name of the Śaiva, Pāśupata or Mahēśvara faith. Lakulin is said to have had four pupils, viz. Kuśika, Garga, Mitra and Kaurushya, while his ascetic followers are stated to have resorted to the yōga of Mahēśvara and besmeared their bodies with ashes.⁶ According to the Chinese traveller Hsien-tsang who visited India in the seventh century, the ascetics devoted to Mahēśvara went about naked, tied their hair in a top-knot and besmeared their bodies with ashes.⁷ Gradually the name Pāśupata came to be more or less specially applied to the said ascetics.

The present Kannada-speaking area was a great stronghold of Śaivism, especially of the school of Lakulin, in the early medieval period. A sculpture on the outer wall of the temple of Virūpākṣa (built by a queen of Chālukya Vikramāditya II, 733-45 A.D.) at Paṭṭadakal in the Bijapur District represents Śiva in the form of Lakulīśa.⁸ In Karnaṭaka was born a great Śaiva ascetic, named Muninātha Chilluka-bhaṭṭāra, who, according to an inscription of 943 A.D. from Mysore, was regarded as an incarnation of Lakulin.⁹ An ascetic is called an ornament of the Lākula school and another a follower of the same faith in an inscription of about 1078 A. D.,¹⁰ while a record of 1103

A. D. mentions a student of the Nyāya and Vaiśeṣika philosophies, by name Sōmēśvara-sūri, as having caused the Lākula-siddhānta to bloom.¹ A record of 1117 A. D., from Dharwar, registers a gift entrusted to Āchārya Sōmēśvara-paṇḍita who was well-versed in the Lākul-āgama.² In an inscription of 1177 A. D. certain ascetics are mentioned as the upholders of the Lākul-āgama-samaya (i.e. the religious system following the views of Lakulin) and the adherents of the Kālāmukha sect,³ and in another of 1213 A. D. a person is described as an upholder of the system of Lakulin.⁴ An epigraph of 1285 A. D. similarly refers to a supporter of the Lākula system.⁵

Medieval authors like Vāchaspati, Bhāskara, Yāmunāchārya and Rāmānuja mention four schools of Śaivism, viz. Śaiva, Pāsupata, Kāpālīka, and Kālāmukha, this last also called Kārūka-siddhāntin, Kāphaka-siddhāntin or Kārūnika-siddhāntin⁶ and supposed by some scholars to have been followers of Kaṇva who was a disciple of Lakulin.⁷ The Kāpālīka and Kālāmukha sects represented two extremist orders of Śaivite ascetics, while the doctrines of the Śaivas were even more moderate and rational than those of the Pāsupatas.⁸ The sect of the Virāśaivas or Liṅgāyatas of the Kannaḍa-speaking area is believed by Bhandarkar to have developed out of the moderate Śaiva school.⁹

The foundation of the Virāśaiva (Liṅgāyata) sect is attributed to Basava, a contemporary of the Southern Kalachuri king Bijjala (c. 1156-67 A. D.) of Kalyāṇa; but Bhandarkar suggests that the system came into being before the days of Basava.¹⁰ He points out how, according to the Basava Purāṇa, Śaiva saints like Viśvēśvarārādhyā, Paṇḍitarādhyā, Ēkōrāma and others flourished from time to time and worked for the establishment of Śiva-bhakti amongst the people before Basava's age.¹¹ He also draws our attention to certain works¹² describing the dīkṣā (i.e. the Bhandarkar (Vaishnavism, Śaivism and Minor Religious Systems, Poona edition, p. 172), relying on the faulty translation of the record in op. cit., trans., p. 126, speaks in this connection of 'Vāgi-Lākula, i.e. the system of the learned Lakulin' although the letters vāgi form a part of another expression (nandā-dīpīgav-āgi, i.e. 'for a perpetual lamp') and can in no way be connected with Lākula.

ceremony of initiation) of a Virāṣaiva or Liṅgāyata when he chooses his guru or preceptor.¹ In connection with the ceremony, it is necessary to place four metallic vessels full of water at the four cardinal points with a fifth in the middle. This last vessel belongs to the person to be consecrated as the guru who is supposed to represent an old Āchārya named Viśvārādhyā (Viśvā-varārādhyā) while the others belong to four other Āchāryas pertaining to the schools respectively of Rēvaṇasiddha (also called Rēṇukāchārya), Maruṣasiddha, Ēkōrāma and Pāṇḍitārādhyā² and connected with certain Maṭhas. The five vessels are consecrated to the five faces of Śiva, viz. Sadyōjāta, Vāmadēva, Aghōra, Tatpurusha and Iśāna, and the five Āchāryas are believed to have sprung from the five forms of Śiva.³ Bhandarkar notes that, of the five names of the teachers mentioned in this connection, at least three are stated in the Basava Purāṇa to have flourished before Basava and comes to the conclusion that the Virāṣaiva or Liṅgāyata creed, known to its followers as the Śaiva-darśana or Siddhānta-darśana, was affiliated to the moderate or sober school of Śaivism. He further suggests that this creed was reduced to a shape by learned Śaiva Brāhmaṇas called Ārādhyas, while subsequent reformers gave it a decidedly uncompromising and anti-Brahmanical character.⁴ The inscription under study appears to support these views inasmuch as the Śiva-maṇḍala-dīkṣhā referred to in it seems to have some resemblance with the initiation of the Virāṣaivas described above, though some authorities prescribe only Jñāna-dīkṣhā for kings.

We have seen how the Chālukya king Vikramāditya I of Bādāmi granted a village to Sudarśanāchārya in payment of guru-dakṣhiṇā (i.e. fees to be paid to the preceptor on the occasion of one's initiation) at the time of his Śiva-maṇḍala-dīkṣhā (i.e. initiation into Śiva's circle)⁵ and how the said Āchārya (i.e. his preceptor Sudarśanāchārya) allotted portions of the land in the gift village to as many as twentyseven other Brāhmaṇas as well as to his own wife. The names of the Brāhmaṇas who received shares of the land in the gift village and must have assisted Sudarśanāchārya in the performance of the king's dīkṣhā ceremony have been quoted above.⁶ That at least one of them acted in the capacity of a subordinate Āchārya, as in the case of the four assistant Āchāryas in the initiation of a Virāṣaiva (Liṅgāyata), referred to above, seems to be suggested by the suffix āchārya added to the name of Rudraśivāchārya who heads the list of the twentyseven Brāhmaṇas. Another interesting fact is the name-ending śiva affixed to the names of three of the Brāhmaṇas, viz. Rudraśiva, Gāyatrīśiva and Paramaśiva. As Bhandarkar has pointed out, the

² The word ārādhyā is often also affixed to the names of Rēvaṇa (Rēṇuka), Maruṣa and Ēkōrāma. The Ārādhyā-Brāhmaṇas appear to have been also known as Śiva-Brāhmaṇas.

³ In a Kannada work entitled Māhēśvaradīkṣhāvidhi by Kāśīnātha Śāstri, to which my attention was drawn by Dr. G.S. Gai, it is stated in connection with the svastivāchana ceremony associated with Śiva-dīkṣhā that two new vessels, either metallic or earthen, are placed, one in the north and the other in the south. They are filled with sacred water, etc., and four Māhēśvaras take their seats, two behind each vessel.

suffixes śakti, jīya, śiva and rāśi were generally affixed to the names of the more extremist sects of the Śaiva school.¹ Although therefore most of the Brāhmanas participating in the dikṣhā of Vikramāditya I, including his preceptor Sudarśana, thus appear to have belonged to the more moderate and rational school of Śaivism, a few of them were ascetics of the extremist orders. This fact again seems to suggest that there was no general antagonism between the sober and extremist sects of the followers of Śiva at least in the Kannada country during the seventh century A. D.

Of the geographical names mentioned in the inscription, Vanavāsī and Uttarāpatha are well-known. As suggested by Sarma, the village of Maṅṅūra, where the king was staying at the time of making the grant, may be one of the two localities called Chinna Maṅṅūra and Pedda Maṅṅūra on the bank of the Krishna in the present Kollapuram Taluk of the Mahbubnagar District. There is a ruined temple at Chinna Maṅṅūra. It seems that the king visited the village for his initiation ceremony and that Sudarśanāchārya was a resident of the said locality. The name of the Vaṅṅuravādi viśaya seems to be preserved in that of the modern village called Vāṅṅūru in the Kalvaparti Taluk of the same District, about 40 miles from the villages called Maṅṅūra. Pandit Sarma who published the inscription in the Bhārati is inclined to identify Ipaṅṅurūkal with the present village of Vipanaṅṅūla about 10 miles from the localities named Maṅṅūra.

No. 22—TWO INSCRIPTIONS OF PARANTAKA, YEAR 9

K. A. NILAKANTA SASTRI AND T. N. SUBRAMANIAM, MADRAS

There are three Tamil inscriptions of Parāntakadēva, all dated in the 9th year of his reign, which 'pose one of the minor problems' in Chōla history.¹ Of these, the text of the one found at Tiruvālaṅgāḍu in the Chittoor District of the Andhra State has already been published.² The other two inscriptions, one from Kōyil-Tēvarāyaṇ-pēṭṭai in the Tanjavur District (referred to in the sequel as A)³ and the other from Tiruvaḍatturai in the South Arcot District (marked B in the sequel),⁴ both in the Madras State, are now published from the inked impressions kindly placed at our disposal by the Government Epigraphist for India.

Inscription A is found engraved on the south wall of the central shrine of the Matsyapurīśvara temple at Kōyil-Tēvarāyaṇ-pēṭṭai which is included in the present village of Paṇḍāravāḍai, a Railway station in the Papanasam Taluk, Tanjavur District. It is called Tiruchchēyalūr or Tiruchchēlūr in inscriptions and is said to be included in Rājakēsari-chaturvēdimāṅgalam, a brahmadēya on the southern bank of the river Kāvēri.⁵ This Chaturvēdimāṅgalam was evidently founded by the Chōla king Āditya I, after whom it was named and one of its hamlets was known as Paṇḍitavatsalachchēri after one of the surnames of his son Parāntaka I.⁶

The other record B is found on the south wall of the maṇḍapa in front of the central shrine in the Tirthapurīśvara temple at Tiruvaḍatturai, a village about four miles from Pennāgaḍam, on the north bank of the river Vellāṅgu. This place is connected with the life of the Śaivite saint Tirujñāpasambandha. The story is that it was at this place that, when he, as a tender child, was no longer in a position to continue his journey either on foot or on the shoulders of his aged father, the god miraculously intervened to offer him a palanquin and an umbrella, both made of pearls.⁷ This tradition finds support in the inscriptions wherein the god of this place is called Tirumuttiṇ śivigai kuḍuttarūliya Nāyaṇār.⁸ In inscriptions as well as in the hymns of the Tēvāram, this village is known as Tiruvaḍatturai-Nelvāyil to differentiate it from other places bearing the name of Aṭatturai.

The two inscriptions are in the Tamil language and script with an admixture of Grantha letters here and there, and palaeographically they may be assigned to circa 1100 A.D.

The only orthographical peculiarity that deserves notice here is the use of double chch in Tiruchchēlūr in line 10. In the conjunct letter chchē, the doubled consonant is written after the vowel sign of ē. The letters n and ṇ are used quite indifferently. The rules of sandhi have not been properly observed.

The object of inscription A is to record the gift, by purchase, of a piece of land to meet the expenses of offerings to the god Tiruchohēlūr-Mahādēva in Rājakēsari-chaturvēdimangalam, a village in Nallūr-nādu, a sub-division of Nittavinōda-vaḷanādu, by Araiyan Kappappan alias Rājakēsari Pērayan of Kālikuḍi, a village in Kiliyūr-nādu, a sub-division of Pāṇḍikulāṣaṇi-vaḷanādu, in the 9th year of the reign of the king Parakēsari-varman alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Śrī-Parāntakadēva.

Inscription B is incomplete and stops after mentioning the date, i.e. the 9th year of the reign of the king who is styled here as Rājakēsari-varman alias Chakravartin Śrī-Parāntakadēva.

Both these inscriptions contain a new prasasti or meykkīrtti which commences with the words Pūmaṅgai vaḷara in A and Puṇi māṅgai vaḷara in B. Even though there are some slight variations in the wording between them in the first two metrical lines of the meykkīrtti, yet we can safely take both of them as identical, as these variations do not make any difference and as such variations are found in the standard versions of similar meykkīrttis of other Chōla kings also.¹ We have already mentioned that the king is styled Parakēsari-varman and Tribhuvanachakravartin in A, while he is named Rājakēsari-varman and Chakravartin in B. The third inscription of the king at Tiruvālaṅgādu, the text of which has already been published,² does not contain any meykkīrtti, but mentions him as Parakēsari-varman and Tribhuvanachakravartin as in A. Considering that the two complete records call him Parakēsari-varman and Tribhuvanachakravartin, we may not be wrong in assigning these titles to him, ignoring the title of Rājakēsari-varman of the incomplete record B.³

The importance of these records lies in the problem of the identity of the king in whose time they were issued.

We have so far known only of two kings, grandfather and grandson, having the name Parāntaka. The former, more famous, with the title Madiraikoṇḍa, was a Parakēsari-varman and the latter, otherwise known as Sundarachōla, was a Rājakēsari-varman. Neither of them had the title Tribhuvanachakravartin which came into vogue only during the time of Kulōttuṅga I. Parāntakadēva of the present records is quite different from the two Parāntakas mentioned above and lived at a much later period.⁴

The names of the territorial divisions mentioned in the record A, viz. Nittavinōda-vaḷanādu and Pāṇḍikulāṣaṇi-vaḷanādu came into existence during the reign of Rājārāja I after whose titles Nityavinōda and Pāṇḍyakulāṣaṇi these divisions were named. Again the temple at Tiruvaḍatturai wherein the record B is found engraved does not contain any inscription earlier than the time of Virarājendra-chōla. The Tiruvālaingādu inscription¹ already referred to, in mentioning Kulōttuṅgaśōla-valanādu in Śōlamanāḍalam, makes it clear that the Parāntakadēva of this inscription must have ruled later than Kulōttuṅga I after whom the valanādu was named. Thus the king Parāntakadēva in whose time these records were issued cannot be placed earlier than the time of the Chōla king Kulōttuṅga I, and the palaeography of these records supports this conclusion.

³ It was possibly due to some such mistakes having crept in, that the record was left incomplete.

We have not so far known of any Chōla king with the name Parāntaka about this time. On the other hand, we have references to a prince of the royal blood of that name ruling one of the provinces of the Chōla empire. Several inscriptions in the Telugu script found in the Bhīmēśvara temple at Drākshārāma in the Ramachandrapuram Taluk of the Godavari District in Andhra Pradesh mention a certain Parāntakadēva as ruling over the Eastern Chālukya country of Vēṅgī in the early years of the 12th century A. D. One of them² dated in Śaka 1034, corresponding to 1112-13 A. D., mentions the gift of fifty inpa edlu for burning a lamp in front of the god Bhīmēśvara by Parāntaka Brahmādhirāya for the benefit of his mother. There the donor is described as the military commander of Parāntaka, the head-ornament of the Chālukya-vaṁśa (Chālukya-vaṁśa-tilakasya Parāntakasya sēn-ādhipō dvijapatiḥ). The official title of the commander indicates that he rose to prominence during the days of Parāntaka whose name the general obviously adopted. Another inscription³ at the same place dated in Śaka 1038 (given by the chronogram gaja-Rāma-vijayachandra) registers the grant of the village Silā to meet the expenses of offerings to the goddess Pārvatī set up in the temple by king Parāntakadēva. In some other inscriptions found there,⁴ the king is introduced with the characteristic Eastern Chālukyan title Sarvalōkāśraya śrī-Vishṇuvardhana-mahārājulu, and is referred to as a Chakravartin ruling over the Chālukya kingdom (Chālukya-kṣhīti).⁵ In addition, he has also the characteristically Tamil title Kōṇērinmaikondāṇ.⁶ Another inscription⁷ dated in the 45th year of Kulōttuṅga I at Bhīmavaram in the same Taluk registers the gift of a lamp and twenty she-buffaloes by Mādhava alias Rājavallabha Pallavaraiyaṇ, a minister of Parāntaka, to the temple of Nārāyaṇa founded by Vaiśya Maṇḍayya. Parāntaka⁸ under whom he was serving as a minister is described therein as Śrīsa-samē Parāntaka-nriṇe Chālukya-rājya-śriyaṁ prāptām rakshati, i.e. 'while king Parāntaka who resembled the lord of Śrī (i.e. Vishṇu) was protecting the fortune, namely the Chālukya kingdom acquired [by him]'. This officer is perhaps identical with the Rājavallabha Pallavaraiyaṇ who figures as the sandhivigrahin in the Smaller Leyden plates of Kulōttuṅga I issued in the 20th year of his reign.⁹ There is also an inscription¹⁰ of Parāntaka engraved on a pillar in the ruined Kanakadurgā-maṇḍapa at the foot of the Indrakīla hill at Vijayavāḍa, dated in the 5th year of his reign coupled with Śaka 1037 and the cyclic year Manmatha, corresponding to 1115-16 A.D. This record, though damaged, seems to confer the office of the headmanship (reḍḍikam) of Vijaya-vāda on a certain Bhīmāna who is described as the Vēṅgi-Chālukya-aṅkakāra¹ and whose brother Boddana had originally obtained the same office from Kulōttuṅga I described therein as the son of king Rājamahēndra.² The record bears at its end a royal confirmatory order dated in the 47th year of a king who is described as Samastabhuvanāśraya, Rājādhirāja, Rājaparamēśvara, Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Ravikulatilaka, Satyāśrayavarmēya, Chālukyābharāṇa, Tribhuvanachakravartī, Permānādīdeva.³ This king can be no other than Kulōttuṅga I as evidenced by the titles Satyāśrayavarmēya, Chālukyābharāṇa and Ravikulatilaka applied to him, and by the date mentioned in the inscription which agrees with the king's corresponding regnal year. This record would yield c. Śaka 1033 or c. 1111-12 A.D. for the accession of Parāntaka. It will be clear from the above that Parāntaka was ruling over the Vēṅgi country in the closing years of the reign of Kulōttuṅga I as a semi-independent ruler under the aegis of the Chōlas and that he was a prince of the Chōla-Chālukya line, probably one of the seven sons of Kulōttuṅga. We may safely identify Parāntaka of the Telugu inscriptions cited above with king Parakēsarivarman Parāntakadēva in whose reign the Tamil records under review were issued. Then, these two records of the 9th year will have to be assigned to c. 1119-20 A.D., corresponding to the 50th or the last year of the reign of Kulōttuṅga I.

We know that Kulōttuṅga I, on the death of his uncle Vijayāditya after a reign of 15 years, got possession of the Vēṅgi country in 1076-77 A.D. and appointed his sons in succession as viceroys there. The first to be so appointed, Rājarāja Mummaḍi-chōla, preferred living under the same roof as his parents to the enjoyment of a distant viceroyalty and at the end of a year relinquished his office. His younger brother Vira-chōda was then chosen as the viceroy, and he continued to rule there for six years from the date of his anointment in Śaka 1001 (1078-79 A.D.). From 1084 to 1089 A.D. another son of Kulōttuṅga, by name Rājarāja Chōdaganga, the eldest, was the viceroy when he was succeeded by Vira-chōda again in his second term of viceroyalty. Vira-chōda was there till at least 1092-93 A.D.⁴ What became of the viceroyalty after that date is not clear. It is generally believed that Vikrama-chōla, another son of Kulōttuṅga I, who succeeded his father on the Chōla throne, became the viceroy of Vēṅgi and continued in that office till he was summoned to the south in 1118 A.D. by the aged Kulōttuṅga to become the co-regent (heir-apparent to the Chōla throne). No inscription of Vikrama-chōla issued during the time of his viceroyalty of Vēṅgi or directly referring to it has come to light so far. But that he was a viceroy for some time in Vēṅgi is borne out by his meṃkkīrtti itself.⁵ The Piṭhāpuram inscription of Mallapadēva dated Śaka 1124 (1202-03 A.D.) states that Kulōttuṅga ruled for fifty years the five Drāviḍas together with the Andhra country and that, when Vikrama-chōla went to rule the Chōla country, the land of Vēṅgi became bereft of its lord (Vēṅgi-bhūmir=nāyaka-rahitā jālā), i.e. fell into a state of anarchy. The inscriptions found at Drākshārāma point out that Parāntaka was the viceroy of Vēṅgi during roughly the last ten years of the reign of Kulōttuṅga I, and from the Tamil inscriptions edited below we may surmise that he was probably chosen as heir-apparent by Kulōttuṅga I and crowned as such with the title Parakēsarivarman and continued in that capacity till the last year of the reign of his father Kulōttuṅga I, corresponding to 1119-20 A.D.

³ It is worth noting that many titles, characteristically Western Chālukyan, are borne by Kulōttuṅga I.

But Kulōttuṅga was succeeded on the Chōla throne by Vikrama-chōla and not by this Parāntaka. If the statement in the Piṭhāpuram pillar inscription of Mallapadēva that Vikrama-chōla was ruling over Vēṅgī up to the time of his departure for the south to ascend the Chōla throne is to be accepted, then we have to identify this Parāntaka with Vikrama-chōla. The meykkīrtti of Parāntaka contains identical expressions and appears more or less the same as the earlier portion of the meykkīrtti beginning with the words, Pūmādu puṇara, etc., of Vikrama-chōla.¹ This may also be cited in support of the above presumption.²

But there are difficulties in accepting this identification. The meykkīrtti beginning with the words Pūmādu puṇara appears in the inscriptions of Vikrama-chōla even in the second year of his reign³ (thus practically from its commencement) and it contains a reference to his Kaliṅga expedition which took place in the reign of his father Kulōttuṅga I, when he (Vikrama-chōla) was only a child.⁴ But the meykkīrtti of Parāntaka of which we have the version brought up to the 9th year of his reign does not contain any reference to this Kaliṅga war. Moreover it is purely a eulogistic one of the more or less conventional type containing no reference to any event of importance. There is also no evidence, epigraphical or literary, that the title of Parāntaka was borne by Vikrama-chōla, though we know of his other titles like Tyāgasamudra.

Vikrama-chōla counts his regnal years from the date of his accession to the Chōla throne which took place on or about the 29th June, 1118 A.D.⁵ But we have seen above that Parāntaka counted his regnal years from some date in Śaka 1033 or 1111-12 A.D. and that such a reckoning was continued by him up to 1119-20 A.D., the date of the two records now under publication, i.e. even beyond the initial date of 1118 A.D. claimed for Vikrama-chōla.

Again, according to the Piṭhāpuram pillar inscription⁶ of Mallapadēva, Vikrama-chōla must have left his Vēṅgī viceroyalty and come over to the south before the date of his accession to the Chōla throne in 1118 A.D. But Parāntaka appears to have continued in Vēṅgī even after that date. An inscription⁷ from Drākshārāma registers a gift to the temple of Parāntakēśvara built there, and perhaps also points to the presence of Parāntaka there in the 49th year, 333rd day of the reign of Kulōttuṅga I, i.e. on or about the 7th May, 1119 A.D.

We have therefore to account for two persons, Vikrama-chōla and Parāntaka, both claiming to be Parakēsarivarmans and ruling as co-regents along with their father Kulōttuṅga I during the last two years of the latter's reign. This position is anomalous in Chōla history and has to be explained. It cannot be said that Kulōttuṅga I chose and anointed both of them as heirs-apparent. The Vijayavāḍa inscription⁸ referred to above clearly points out that Parāntaka was chosen as heir-apparent and entrusted with the governance of the Vēṅgī country, nearly seven years prior to the date claimed for the accession of Vikrama-chōla to the Chōla throne. Parāntaka's position, not only as successor-designate but also as ruler de facto was recognised both in the Telugu country of Vēṅgī and in the Tamil area of the Chōla dominion proper. On the south wall of the Kōḍaṇḍarāma temple at Madhurāntakam in the Chingleput District of the Madras State, there is a Tamil inscription⁹ dated in the 7th regnal year of a Parānta[ka]dēva without any distinguishing title and without any meykkīrtti but in characters of about the 12th century A.D., registering the grant of land as tiruvīḍaiyāṭṭam to Tiruvayōttipperumāḷ of Śrī-Madhurāntaka-chaturvēdimāṇḍalam, a taṇiyūr in Kaḷattūr-kōttam, a sub-division of Jayaṅgoṇḍaśōḷamaṇḍalam.¹ This Parāntakadēva can be no other than the king Parāntakadēva of the two inscriptions now being edited.

It cannot also be said that Vikrama-chōḷa was chosen by his father Kulōttuṅga I to succeed him on the Chōḷa throne because of the demise of Parāntaka, for, we find from the Drākshārāma inscription referred to above² that Parāntaka was alive on or about the 7th May, 1119 A.D., i.e. more than ten months after the date of the accession of Vikrama-chōḷa.

The only alternative therefore left for us is to presume that Vikrama-chōḷa did not recognise the selection of Parāntaka as co-regent and claimed that he alone was the rightful person for that position. If that be the case, Vikrama-chōḷa could not have asserted his right and achieved his object by peaceful means. There must have been a civil war between these two brothers for the Chōḷa throne.

The Tanjavur temple inscription of Vikrama-chōḷa dated in the 4th year of his reign contains a significant passage in his meykkīrtti beginning with the words Pūmālai miḍaindu, which runs: 'He joyfully stayed [a while] in the Vēṅgai-maṇḍalam and put on the garland of victory over the northern region, and in the south he put on the sacred-jewelled crown by right so as to put an end to the commonness of the goddess of the sweet-smelling lotus-flower (i.e. Lakshmi) and the loneliness of the good earth-maiden who had the Poṇṇi (i.e. the river Kāvēri) for her garment.'³ It means in other words that Lakshmi, the wealth of the southern country, had become common (i.e., ownerless) and the land of the Kāvēri lonely (i.e. unaccompanied) and that both of them found a remedy for their situation in the coming of Vikrama-chōḷa. This very same passage, describing the state of the southern region at the time of the accession of Vikrama-chōḷa to the throne is also found in the meykkīrtti of Kulōttuṅga I beginning with the words Pugaḷ sūṇḍa punari,⁴ thereby indicating that Vikrama-chōḷa had to face the same situation⁵ as prevailed at the time when Kulōttuṅga I ascended the Chōḷa throne.⁶

The indifferent use of both the titles Rājākēsarivarman and Parakēsarivarman for Vikrama-chōla might also be construed as pointing to such a conclusion; but it may also be merely the result of a mistake of the kind, of which other instances are also known. Kulōttuṅga, being a Rājākēsarivarman, his immediate successor on throne should have been a Parakēsarivarman. The occasional use of the title Rājākēsarivarman by Vikrama-chōla¹ presupposes the existence of another king with the title Parakēsarivarman between him and Kulōttuṅga even though Vikrama-chōla did not perhaps recognise such a position and, claiming himself as the direct successor of his father Rājākēsarivarman Kulōttuṅga I, used the title Parakēsarivarman which is generally found applied to him in his inscriptions.

There are about half a dozen undated inscriptions of Parāntakadēva at Drākshārāma registering the oaths of fealty taken by certain persons to serve Parāntakadēva faithfully.² The occasion which necessitated such a step is not clear. But it is significant to note that these oaths were taken to serve faithfully Parāntakadēva personally and not in respect of the throne or kingdom of the Chōla or Chālukya as the case may be, probably indicating that there was another person at that time claiming equal rights as Parāntakadēva and that the oath was meant to safeguard the interests of their liege-lord Parāntakadēva against the other person.

It may also be said that the political condition of the country at this period was favourable to Vikrama-chōla for embarking on a civil war.

We know that towards the end of his reign, Kulōttuṅga I lost some portions of his territory, both in the west and in the north. In the west, the province of Gaṅgavāḍi was lost to the Hoysalas. Bittiga Viṣṇuvardhana, the Hoysala ruler of the period claims the title Talakāḍu-konḍa which is applied to him for the first time in an inscription dated in 1117 A.D.,³ and in the same year he is described as ruling in Talakāḍu and Kōlāḷa (Kolar) and over the whole of Gaṅgavāḍi Ninety-six Thousand as far as Kōṅgu.⁴ This province which was under the Chōlas at the time and was regularly administered as a division of the Chōla empire was conquered for the Hoysala by Daṇḍa-nāyaka Gaṅgarāja. This event is graphically described in several of the Hoysala inscriptions.⁵ The success of the Hoysalas was complete and this was followed by the expulsion of the Chōlas from Gaṅgavāḍi. That this campaign was not in the nature of a mere raid and that the Hoysala was well-pleased with the result will be evident by his assuming the title Talakāḍu-konḍa and by the issue of gold coins bearing the legend śrī-Talakāḍu-gonḍa.

The victory gained in Gaṅgavāḍi was pursued by the Hoysalas even in regions beyond its frontiers. Of Puṇṇa-rāja, another general of the Hoysalas, who also seems to have taken part in the expedition against Gaṅgavāḍi, it is said in an inscription dated 1117 A.D. that he 'frightened the Todas [of the Nilgiris], drove the Kōṅgar underground (or to the low-country), slaughtered the Pōluvas, put to death the Maleyālas, trifled king Kala (Kalapāla) and offered the peak of the Nilagiri to the goddess of victory.'⁶ It also adds that on receiving the king's order, Puṇṇa 'seized Nilādri, and pursuing the Maleyālas captured their forces and made himself master of Kēraḷa before showing again in Poṅgal-nāḍu.' The Pōluvas slaughtered by him are evidently the Pōluvas, a community of the Kōṅgu country,⁷ round about Avināśi. The region also came to be known as Pūluva-nāḍu and places like Śēvūr in the Avināśi Taluk and Perumānallūr in the Gopichettippalaiyam Taluk of the Coimbatore District are said to be in the Pūluva-nāḍu.¹ Similarly, Poṅgal-nāḍu captured by Puṇṇa in the course of the campaign seems to be the Poṅgalūrkkā-nāḍu of the Koṅgu inscriptions. The village of Kiraṇūr in the Paḷaṇi Taluk of the Madurai District was included in those days in the Poṅgalūrkkā-nāḍu.² The Hoysala inscriptions of this period mention Koṅgu, Chēram and Ānamale as forming the southern extremities of Viṣṇuvardhana's kingdom. Viṣṇuvardhana claims to have squeezed Madurai in the palm of his hand³ and extended his victorious march even up to Rāmēśvaram.⁴ One record states that, 'on the Pāṇḍya flourishing his sword', Hoysalēśa 'cut him down with his own sword, and left only half a man to look on in the Tigula army.'⁵

This does not appear to be a mere hyperbole, as we find an echo of Viṣṇuvardhana's invasion in the inscriptions of the Tiruchirappalli District. A record⁶ from Āḍuturai in the Perambalur Taluk dated in the 4th year of the reign of Parākrama Pāṇḍya renews with the additional privilege for some money collection, 'an old charter said to have been issued to certain Paḷḷi residents in the 4th regnal year of Vikrama-chōḷadēva under peculiar circumstances. It is stated that 'during the war of Periya-vaḍuḡaṇ, when the images of gods and Nāyanmārs were carried away to be deposited at Dōrasamudra (Halēbid in Mysore), [the Paḷḷis] rescued them, reconsecrated them in the temple, and agreed to provide for the expense of maintaining the worship of these images, making it a part of their communal obligation, in return for which act of service, the members of the community were to enjoy 'the temple honours of silk parivattam and aruḷappāḍu'. It is also said that the above arrangement was approved and sanctioned by Perumāḷ Kulōttuṅga Chōḷadēva,' thereby indicating that the rescue of the idols was effected immediately after they were removed and within the life-time of Kulōttuṅga I. It is not clear from the inscription who the Periya-vaḍuḡaṇ waging war in the Tamil country was; but the mention of Dōrasamudra makes it evident that the Hoysalas were among the invaders. Another damaged inscription⁷ from Karūr, one of the capitals of the Koṅgu kingdom, dated in the 3rd year of the reign of Vikrama-chōḷa, corresponding to 1120-21 A.D., states that the idol of Kūttanār (i.e. Natarāja) in the temple of Tiruvānilai-Āḷudaiya Nāyanār at Karuvūr in Veṅḡala-nāḍu, a sub-division of Virāṣōḷa-maṇḍalam which had been lost in the [days of the] revolt (kalahattil śēman-tappiṇamaiyil) was brought back after a search and set up by the Śiva-Brāhmaṇas of the temple who also made provision for worshipping the same. Evidently the country seems to have suffered very much in the hands of the Hoysalas who were probably unscrupulous in striking terror in the hearts of the people.⁸

⁸ SII, Vol. IV, No. 387.

⁹ There are inscriptions of the 47th and 49th years of the reign of Kulōttuṅga I (e.g. Nos. 620 and 647 of 1909 respectively at Tiruchirai and Kōṇērārapuram in the Tanjavur District) stating that the lands of tenants who had deserted the villages unable to pay the taxes for over two years were confiscated and sold to the temples, and these are significant considering the time and the large number of such cases (see also Rangacharya, A Topographical List of Inscriptions in the Madras Presidency, Tj. 74, 1219).

The Hoysala incursions into the Chōla dominion were not restricted to the southern part. They appear to have carried on the expedition in the eastern direction also in the course of which Teṇeyūr and Kōyāttūr (modern Laddigam in the Chittoor District) became subject to Vishṇuvardhana who is also credited with the conquest of Kāñchī, on which he took the title of Kāñchigonda which is very often met with in his inscriptions.¹ That this was not again a mere boast will be clear from the statements found in his inscriptions that 'he made proclamations of his victories over numerous kings by sound of drum in Kāñchīpura',² that 'he was like a fierce forest-fire to the territory of the Toṇḍai chieftain'³ and that 'after conquering Kāñchī and Madurai he burnt Jananāthapura'.⁴ It is also said that he slew an Andhra king.⁵

It is significant to note that the capture of Kāñchī and the burning of the city of Jananāthapura are claimed not only by the generals of Vishṇuvardhana, but also by the generals of another monarch, viz. Vikramāditya VI, the Western Chālukya ruler of Kalyāṇa, at about the same time. We know that the Hoysalas were from the very beginning the feudatories of the Western Chālukyas of Kalyāṇa and that they continued to be so even at that time. It is therefore quite possible that the Hoysalas were waging war in the northern front as the subordinates and under the banner of their suzerain power, the Western Chālukyas.

Viewed in this light, the Periya Vaḍugaṇ mentioned in the Āḍuttuṇṇai inscription⁶ referred to above as waging war in the heart of the Tamil country would only mean the 'big (or elder) or great northerner', i.e. the Western Chālukya king Vikramāditya VI. Similarly, the exploits of 'displaying his valour before Māṇikyadēvī of the Chakrakūṭa throne', 'burning the city of Jananāthapura through his general' and the like in the north that the Hoysala is credited with, should be deemed to have taken place when he was in the service of his overlord Vikramāditya. Vikramāditya was waiting long only for an opportunity of making reprisals for his earlier failure in his wars against Kulōttuṅga I. Such an opportunity presented itself now. His plan was evidently to take advantage of Kulōttuṅga's preoccupation with the affairs in the south and create a diversion in the north by proceeding against the kingdom of Vēṅgi and its vassal-states.

The exact course of the events of this campaign is not clear. But that at the end of this campaign, practically the whole of the Telugu country came under the sway of Vikramāditya VI is evident from the provenance of his inscriptions. A stone record⁷ from Kollūru in the Tenālī Taluk of the Guntur District dated in the cyclic year Manmatha, the 40th year of the reign of Tribhuvanamalladēva (Vikramāditya VI), i.e. 1115-16 A.D., refers to his famous general Anantapālayya and mentions the officers such as the mantrin, purōhita, sēnāpati, etc., in whose presence, the king made a certain gift. There are inscriptions of the next year Durmukha, the Chālukya-Vikrama year 41, at Māgoḷa and Raṅgāpuram in the Hadagalli Taluk of the same District, in one of which Padmaladēvī, a queen of Vikramāditya VI, is referred to as ruling over the agrahāra of Māṅgola.⁸ In Śaka 1039 (December, 1117 A.D.), the Kākatiya chief Prōḷa of Anumakoṇḍa acknowledges the supremacy of the Western Chālukya ruler and records that the Anumakoṇḍa territory was conferred on his father Bēta some time before by the same sovereign.⁹ About a year later, in the cyclic year Viḷambin, corresponding to the Chālukya-Vikrama year 43 (December, 1118 A.D.), we find Mahāsāmantādhipati Mahāprachandaṇḍanāyaka Anantapālayya actually ruling over Vēṅgī 14000 as a subordinate of Vikramāditya when a certain Nāyaka made some gift to god Agastyēśvaradēva at Kommūru, in the Bapatla Taluk of the same District.¹ About 1120 A.D., Anantapāla's wife made a gift to the celebrated shrine of Bhīmēśvara at Drākshārāma.² The gifts made by Velanāṇṭi Rājendra in the same year and by Mayilamma, the wife of a Telugu-Chōḍa chief, in the year after that, at Drākshārāma are recorded in inscriptions dated in the Chālukya-Vikrama era.³ Another inscription from Tripurāntakam⁴ in the Markapuram Taluk of the Kurnool District, dated in the Chālukya-Vikrama year 51, Parābhava (corresponding to Tuesday, June 22, 1126 A.D., a solar eclipse occurring on this date), states that Anantapālarasa, the Danḍanāyaka, was ruling over Vēṅgī 12,000 and Emmedale 6,000 as a subordinate of Vikramāditya. This record states that Anantapāla had the pleasure of seeing his nephew and son-in-law Gōvindarasa who was ruling over Koṇḍapalli 300, pursue the Chōḷa, conquer the Chōḷa country and carry away as booty a large number of elephants, soldiers, treasures and all the belongings of the Chōḷa king. Gōvindarasa also attacked Jananātharājapura, another name of Drākshārāma, then the provincial capital of Vēṅgī, and brought from it everything of Kumāra, captured Dōcheya and Goṅka (probably the aṅkakāras of the Chōḷa viceroy)—a feat which was considered as amounting to the capture of the person of the king himself, and burnt Vēṅgīpura.⁵ Anantapāla is said to have earned, as a consequence, the title Chōḷa-kaṭaka chūrakāra. "The same victory is also claimed by Ēchapa, a subordinate of Anantapāla, who is said to have pursued the Chōḷa forces from the village Uppinakatte in Vēṅgī to Kāñchī and gained for himself the title Chōḷa-rājya-nirmūlana."⁶ It will thus be seen that Vēṅgī was completely conquered by Vikramāditya VI who carried his arms even as far as Kāñchī. This eclipse of the Chōḷa-Chālukya power in Vēṅgī continued till the death of Vikramāditya VI in 1126 A.D. Thus Vikramāditya VI and his Hoysala subordinate Viṣṇuvardhana, together overran the entire Chōḷa empire in the west and north. It was at this time when the whole dominion of the Chōḷas was overrun by foreign invasion resulting in much loss of territory that Vikrama-chōḷa began to assert his right to the Chōḷa throne and wage the civil war with his brother or half-brother Parāntakadēva. It may even be supposed that these troubles started after he proclaimed himself as the rightful heir to the Chōḷa throne. An inscription on a pillar in front of the Chōḷēśvara temple at Niḍubrōlu in the Guntur District registering the gift of land and lamps to the temple of Goṅkēśvara at Chērakumballi or Ikshupalli by Māraya Paṇḍa, the general of Velanāṇṭi Goṅka, is dated in Śaka 1054 and the 17th regnal year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Vikrama-chōḷa yielding Śaka 1038 (1115-16 A.D.) as the date of his accession, three years earlier than the date usually assigned to him.⁷ And Kulōttuṅga I was alive when these two sons of his were fighting one another for the throne. We do not know what his attitude towards them was or whom he supported. But it is natural to presume that having already chosen Parāntaka as heir-apparent and associated him with the government, he would have espoused the cause of that son as against Vikrama-chōḷa unless it be that Parāntaka had in the meanwhile turned a traitor; there is indeed no ground to suppose such a situation. On the other hand, the inscriptions of Parāntaka show in unmistakable terms that his administration had the entire approval of his father and the reigning monarch, Kulōttuṅga I.

Then Vikrama-chōḷa would have had to contend against both his brother Parāntakadēva and his father Kulōttuṅga I to achieve his object. His ultimate success, even during the lifetime of his father, clearly implies that he must have had the active support not only of some strong and influential local faction, but also of some strong foreign power, mightier than that of the Chōla. We have pointed out elsewhere¹ that Vikrama-chōla was the son of Kulōttuṅga, not by Madhurāntakī, the Chōla princess, but by a Hoysala princess. The invasion of the Chōla dominion by Hoysala Viṣṇuvardhana with the support of his ally and overlord the Western Chālukya Vikramāditya VI who was the avowed enemy of the reigning Chōla monarch Kulōttuṅga I was perhaps partly motivated by the Hoysala king's desire to install Vikrama-chōla, his nephew, on the Chōla throne. The Hoysala bore the brunt of the war in the south as well as in the north, just before the formal proclamation of the accession of Vikrama-chōla.

It is also to be noted in this connection that the regions of Gaṅgavāḍi in the west and Vēṅgī in the north lost by the Chōlas in the closing years of the reign of Kulōttuṅga I were not recovered by Vikrama-chōla. So far as Gaṅgavāḍi was concerned, the bulk of it was lost for ever. And as for Vēṅgī, so long as Vikramāditya VI was alive, the Chōlas do not appear to have set their foot in it and their erstwhile subordinates, the local rulers, acknowledged the suzerainty of the Western Chālukyas. Towards the end of the reign of Vikramāditya VI, we find an Eastern Chālukya prince Sarvalōkāśraya Viṣṇuvardhana entrusted with the administration of Vēṅgī. An inscription on a stone pillar now in the Rajahmundry Museum,² which once probably belonged to the temple of Virabhadraśvara at Paṭṭēsam, registers the gift of 25 cows to the temple by a resident of Penugonda on a day in Śaka 1067 coupled with the 21st regnal year of Sarvalōkāśraya Viṣṇuvardhana-mahārāja, corresponding to the 25th December 1145 A.D. This would yield Śaka 1047 or 1125-26 A.D. as the date for his accession. We have records of Chālukya Vikramāditya VI dated in his 51st regnal year³ which commenced in June 1126 A.D., and his son and successor, Sōmēśvara III ascended the throne some time between July 24 and October 5 of the same year. The Western Chālukyas were in complete occupation of Vēṅgī when this Eastern Chālukya prince commenced his rule there. An inscription⁴ in Sanskrit incised on a pillar lying in front of the Kōśavasvāmin temple at Yenamalakuduru in the Gannavaram Taluk of the present Guntur District records the gift of the town of Vijayavāḍa to the temple of Mallēśvara by Bhīma, the son of Boddana. It is stated therein that Boddana obtained the town as a gift for the prosperity of his family from the Chōla king Tripurāntaka and the Karnāṭa king (Karnāṭa-bhūbhujah), i.e. the Western Chālukya monarch. Another record,⁵ a Telugu version of the same, incised on the same pillar gives some additional particulars. It states that Bhīma belonged to the Pallava family and gives his genealogy for three generations. But it is not known who this Chōla prince Tripurāntaka was. The fact that the grant made by him was confirmed by the Western Chālukya king would show that he was ruling over Vēṅgī as a subordinate of the Western Chālukya and this could have happened only after the conquest of that country by Vikramāditya VI. We have already noticed that Vijayavāḍa was originally granted by Kulōttuṅga I to a certain Boddana and that the gift was renewed by Parāntaka and confirmed by Kulōttuṅga I in 1115-16 A.D. in favour of Bhīmana who was the brother of the above Boddana and had been enjoying the property even during the life-time of his brother. The same was now conferred on Boddana by Tripurāntaka-chōla and confirmed by the Western Chālukya king, probably Vikramāditya VI. Tripurāntaka's name is not found elsewhere and he is a Chōla prince unknown hitherto. In an inscription⁶ from the Telingana districts a general of Kumāra Sōmēśvara, son of Vikramāditya VI, states that he captured the Chōlaga and his younger brother. Probably Tripurāntaka was that brother whom subsequently Vikramāditya VI set up to rule over Vēṅgi. It is quite likely that this prince was set up to rule over Vēṅgi during the last days of Vikramāditya VI, presumably to continue the hold of the Western Chālukya rule over the area permanently and to prevent the return of the country to the Imperial Chōlas.

Thus at the time of Vikrama-chōla's accession to the throne, the Chōla empire had lost Gaṅga-vāḍi in the west and Vēṅgi in the north. Probably such cession of territory to the Chālukya was the price which Vikrama-chōla had agreed to pay for the help rendered to him by Vishṇuvardhana and Vikramāditya VI in securing the Chōla throne. It is true that evidences are not quite clear and that some of the foregoing statements may not be capable of individual proof at present; but there is nothing implausible in the surmises made, the correctness of which will have to be confirmed by future discoveries.

Our thanks are due to Dr. N. Venkataramanayya who helped us by drawing our attention to the Telugu records referred to in the discussion above.

No. 23—SIRRAMBAKKAM INSCRIPTION OF PARAMESVARAVARMAN, YEAR 1

P. B. DESAI, DHARWAR

This inscription was found at Sirrambakkam alias Tenkāraṇai, a village in the Tiruvallūr Taluk, Chingleput District, Madras State. It was copied by a member of the office of the Government Epigraphist for India in the course of the epigraphical survey of the Taluk in 1947-48. It is registered as No. 83 of Appendix B and noticed at page 1 of the Annual Report on Indian Epigraphy for that year. I edit the record here for the first time with the kind permission of the Government Epigraphist for India.

The epigraph is engraved on a slab of stone used as a step at the entrance of the Chelliamman temple in the above village. The slab is almost square in dimensions measuring about 29 inches long and 28.5 inches broad. In the central part of the stone is carved a floral design consisting of melon-shaped petals arrayed within the space formed by two concentric circles. The diameter of the inner circle is about 8 inches and that of the outer one 15.5 inches. The space inside the inner circle is left blank. The margin on the four sides of this design contains the writing. The inscription is made up of six lines, two of which are incised in the upper space, followed by two more in the right. Next comes one line at the bottom and another towards the left. The record is partly damaged and a few letters in lines 3 to 5 are obliterated. As the inscription speaks of the erection of a temple, it seems likely that this inscribed slab was originally fixed into a wall of that temple.

With the exception of the four letters of the Grantha alphabet, viz., ś, m, h and j in the first line, the characters are archaic Tamil of the unornamental variety and belong to the 7th century. They may be compared with those employed in the cave inscription at Vallam¹ and some of the labels on the rocks near Pūñjēri.² Among the individual letters may be noted the initial a in line 5 and cursive y in line 6.

The language is Tamil. We may note the honorific plural varummar of Sanskrit varman in line 1. The vowel-ending plural form Sōmāśiyāru in the compound Sāmāśiyāru-marumagan is also noteworthy. Two similar forms are met with in the Vallam cave inscription, namely, Mayēndirappōttareśaru-aḍiyāṇ in line 3 and Vayandappiriareśaru-magan in line 4. The full import of the expression Tūṇaṇ-giḷavar in line 2 is not known. The word kiḷavar, which, however, forms part of it, may stand for 'chiefs' or 'headmen.' The expression taḍumā in line 6 is difficult to explain.

The inscription refers itself to the first regnal year³ of Mahārāja Paramēśvaravarman. Considering the palaeography of the epigraph and the historical facts known about the Pallavas of Kāñchī, who had risen to power at this time and were wielding authority in the region represented by the present record, we are justified in identifying this Mahārāja Paramēśvaravarman with the Pallava ruler Paramēśvara I (circa 670-700 A. D.). The date of our epigraph would thus be about 670 A.D.

The object of the epigraph is to record the construction of a temple by the sister's son of Sōmāśiyār¹ who appears to claim some distinction. The name of this relative is partially preserved in the expression Kumā[raṇ]. This appears to be the earliest known reference to the construction of a structural temple in the Tamil country.

The epigraph is of importance on account of the fact that it is one of the few early inscriptions on stone written in archaic Tamil. Added to this is another fact that it is also one of the few inscriptions referring to the reigns of the early Pallava rulers and citing the regnal years. The epigraphs of the early Pallava kings of the Simhavishnu line are characterised by the following notable features. They are incised generally on rocks and in caves; their script is Pallava-Grantha of the ornamental variety and their language is Sanskrit. Most of them are of the nature of mere labels comprising royal titles and epithets. Even if we take into account a few more Tamil inscriptions of the early period belonging to private agencies,² purely Tamil epigraphical records as such containing specific allusions to the contemporary rulers are conspicuous by their paucity. Only two such instances have come to our notice so far. One is the Vallam cave inscription mentioning Pallava Mahēndravarmaṇ I and the other the Tirukkalikupram epigraph referring to his successor Narasimhavarman I.³ The present record, therefore, makes a welcome addition to this meagre list.

There is probably only one place-name mentioned in the record and it is Ālavāy. This place is usually identified with Madura. But if we connect the word Ālavāyil with eḍupitta occurring later, it will show that the temple was constructed at Ālavāy which may have been an early name of Teṅkāraṇai, the provenance of the record.⁴

No. 24—PATTALI GRANT OF YUVARAJA RAJENDRAVARMAN, GANGA YEAP 313

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

This inscription was published by Mr. Manda Narasimham in the Telugu journal Bhārati, June 1954, pp. 574 ff. In April 1956, it was purchased from Mr. Narasimham for the Epigraphical Gallery in the Office of the Government Epigraphist for India. Nothing is known to us about the findspot of the record and the story of its discovery. Mr. Narasimham's article in the Bhārati does not disclose any fact in these respects. But there is little doubt that the plates were discovered somewhere in the Srikakulam District of Andhra Pradesh.

The inscription is written on three copper plates held together by a ring bearing the seal of the issuer of the charter. The plates are rectangular in shape and measure each $7\frac{1}{2}$ inches in length and $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches in height. They have slightly raised rims. There is a hole (about $\frac{3}{4}$ inch in diameter) in the left side of the plates for the ring to pass through. The diameter of the ring is about $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches while its thickness is about $\frac{1}{2}$ inch. The ends of the ring are soldered to the bottom of a thick circular seal about 1 inch in diameter. On the countersunk surface of the seal, which is considerably corroded, there are traces of the figure of a standing animal which is no doubt a bull that was the emblem of the Eastern Gaṅga kings. The three plates together weigh about 94 tolas and the ring and the seal about 38 tolas.

There are altogether 37 lines of writing in the inscription. But line 30 containing only three aksharas written between the beginning of lines 29 and 31 is not a continuous line, while the last line contains only one akshara followed by a danda. The inscription is incised on the inner side of the first plate and both the sides of the second and third plates. It has, however, to be noticed that, through oversight, the engraver originally began to incise the concluding part of the record (lines 34 ff.) on the outer side of the first plate instead of on the corresponding side of the third plate, which is its proper place. But the mistake was detected when only one line and a half had been engraved on the reverse of the first plate.

The characters belong to the later Kalinga script and resemble those of many early medieval inscriptions discovered in the Srikakulam region. The letter dh has the form of dḥh in some cases as noticed often in inscriptions in the later Kalinga alphabet. The language of the record is corrupt Sanskrit and it is written in prose with the exception of a few imprecatory and benedictory stanzas at the end. In point of orthography, the record resembles other epigraphs of the area and age in question. The grant was issued in the year 313 of the Gaṅga era, which fell in the period between 809 and 811 A. D. The date is written both in words and in figures; but there are no other details of the date.

The charter was issued from Kalinganagara by Yuvarāja Rājēndravarman, described as the son of Mahārājādhirāja Paramēśvara Parambhātāraka Anantavarman of the Eastern Gaṅga family. It records the grant firstly of the village of Pāṭṭali (elsewhere called Pāḍali) situated in the territorial unit called Kṛishṇamaṭṭamba, in favour of the goddess Kañchipōṭṭi-bhattārikā, in order to provide for her offerings, etc., by Yuvarāja Rājēndravarman himself and secondly of Kuśasaṅkīra-grāma in Dāpupaśchālī and Arālī-grāma in Jāmbhōṭṭa-paśchālī in favour of the same deity by Rājēndravarman's mother Lōka-mahādēvī. The primary object of the charter was to record the grant of Pāṭṭali-grāma since the order of the Yuvarāja was issued to the inhabitants of that village only. That Lōka-mahādēvī's grant of the villages of Kuśasaṅkīra and Arali was added to the main charter as a subsidiary issue is further suggested by the fact that the boundaries of the gift land quoted in lines 24 ff. refer to the village of Pādali (i.e. Pāṭṭali) only.

The village of Pāṭṭali or Pādali was bounded in the east by a naidhāni-silā (probably meaning 'a boundary pillar') and a bilva tree; in the south by a pit and another naidhāni-silā; in the west by a pit (called Bhūṭṭaka probably after the name of the locality or its owner) and a mango tree; and in the north by a pit (called Kāsimbi probably after the name of the locality or its owner) and certain forests. The above section of the charter is followed in lines 26 ff. by some of the well-known imprecatory and benedictory verses. The date of the grant, viz. year 313, is quoted in lines 34-35 as the year of the victorious reign of the Gāṅgēya dynasty. The document was written by Mahāsāndhivigrahika (i.e. the officer in charge of war and peace) Sāmīrāja and the plates were engraved by the akṣhaśālin (i.e. goldsmith) Dāmachandra.

The importance of the inscription lies in the fact that it is one of the few charters issued by a crown-prince, the most well-known instance of this class of documents being the Mayidavolu plates¹ of the Pallava Yuvamahārāja Śivaskandavarman who flourished in the first half of the fourth century A. D. The circumstances leading to the issue of a charter by the crown-prince instead of the king himself in these cases cannot be determined.

In order to determine the identity of the Gaṅga crown-prince Rājēndravarman, son of king Anantavarman, we have to take note of the following records of the family: (1) Alamanda plates² of Anantavarman son of Mahārāja Rājēndravarman, dated year 304; (2) Indian Museum plates³ of Mahārāja Dēvēndravarman, son of Mahārāja Rājēndravarman, dated year 308, (3) Tekkali plates⁴ of the same king, dated year 310; (4) Nāmpali grant⁵ of Yuvarāja Rājēndravarman, son of king Anantavarman, dated year 314; and (5) Mandasa plates⁶ of Rājēndravarman, son of Anantavarman, dated year 342. These records show that the Gaṅga king Rājēndravarman was succeeded by his sons Anantavarman (year 304) and Dēvēndravarman (years 308 and 310) and that Dēvēndravarman was succeeded by Rājēndravarman, son of his elder brother and predecessor Anantavarman. The charter under study, issued by Anantavarman's son Rājēndravarman as Yuvarāja in the year 313, is therefore the third of his known records, the other two being his Nāmpali grant issued likewise as Yuvarāja in the year 314 and his imperfectly deciphered Mandasa plates of the year 342 probably issued as king. The present epigraph mentions Lōka-mahādēvī, mother of ¹ Above, Vol. VI, pp. 86 ff. Another such instance is the Uruvupalli grant (Ind. Ant., Vol. V, pp. 5 ff.) of the Pallava Dharma-Yuvamahārāja Viśhnugōpa; but the record is dated in the regnal year of the reigning monarch Śīṃhavarman. If, however, the dating would have been in an era, as in the present case, Śīṃhavarman's name could have been omitted since it is not mentioned in the formal part of the grant. Cf. the Halsi plates of the Kadamba Yuvarāja Kākusthavarman, probably dated in the Gupta year 80 (Suc. Śāl., p. 334). For a grant issued by a Mahāyuvārāja, see B. Ch. Chhabra, Antiquities of Chamba State, Part II, p. 64.

Rājēndravarman and queen of Anantavarman, for the first time. The Nāmpali charter records the grant of Nāmpali-grāma situated in Nidijēru-vishaya in favour of Sāmirāja, son of Gulāmarāja (wrongly read as Guṇamarāja) of the Ayana-kula. It was written by Mahāsāndhivigrahin Raha (i.e. Rahasya or Rahasyādhikṛita) Śrī-Sāmanta¹ and engraved by Akshaśālin Dāmachandra. It will be seen that the same Akshaśālin Dāmachandra was also the engraver of the charter under study while Sāmirāja, donee of the Nāmpali grant, seems to be none other than Mahāsāndhivigrahi Sāmirāja who was its writer. It is interesting to note that the Mandasa plates, issued by Rājēndravarman more than quarter of a century later, was written by Sandhivigrahin Raṇḍmēya who was the son of the said Sāmirāja.²

An interesting feature of the records of Rājēndravarman, issued by him as Yuvarāja during the years 313 and 314, is that they do not refer to the rule of his uncle Dēvēndravarman who is known to have issued charters in the years 308 and 310. It should also be noticed that Yuvarāja Rājēndravarman's grants dated in the years 313 and 314 and Dēvēndravarman's charters dated in the years 308 and 310 were all issued from the city of Kaliṅganagara. In the present state of insufficient information on the point, it is difficult to suggest any hostility between Rājēndravarman and his uncle only on this ground. We know that the Early Eastern Gaṅga kings generally represented themselves each as the son of his father and not as the successor of his predecessor. As for instance, Dēvēndravarman's charters describe him as the son of Rājēndravarman and not as the successor of his elder brother and predecessor Anantavarman. But Yuvarāja Rājēndravarman's case is somewhat different since he issued the charters in question as a crown-prince when his uncle Dēvēndravarman may have been on the throne. As, however, the Mayidavolu plates were similarly issued by the Pallava Yuvamahārāja Śivaskandavarman without any reference to the reigning Pallava king who was probably his father, it is not easy to arrive at a conclusion from this fact.

Besides Kaliṅganagara, the capital of the Eastern Gaṅgas, identified generally with modern Mukhalingam near Srikakulam, and the well-known Mahēndragiri peak on the borders between the Ganjam and Srikakulam Districts, the inscription mentions the following geographical names; the villages of Pāṭṭali or Pādali, Kuśasaṅkira and Arali as well as the districts of Kṛishṇamaṭṭamba, Dāpu-pañchālī and Jāmbōṭṭa-pañchālī. I am not sure about their location. There are other instances of the use of the word pañchālī to indicate a territorial unit in the inscriptions of the area in question.³

No. 25—FRAGMENTARY MAURYA INSCRIPTION FROM MATHURA

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

A fragment of an inscribed stone slab was discovered in 1954 at Katra Keshavdev within Mathurā city, headquarters of the District of that name in Uttar Pradesh. It was presented by the Shri Krishna Janmabhumi Trust, Mathurā, to the local Archaeological Museum. In April 1955, I received two impressions of the fragmentary inscription from Mr. K. D. Bajpai, Curator of the said Museum. I am thankful to Mr. Bajpai for giving me an opportunity to study the inscription which was found on examination to be of considerable historical importance.

The inscribed fragment measures 22½ inches in height, with a small piece of stone broken away both from the top and from the bottom. The width of the stone is not uniform since it is mutilated at both the sides. The breadth of the upper part is 11 inches while that of the lower portion is only about 8 inches. There are altogether 15 lines of writing in the inscription. But a few letters are noticed in the upper left corner of the stone, although they appear to be scribblings of a slightly later date, having little to do with the original record under study. The letters of the epigraph are carefully engraved but they are not uniform in shape. As for instance, letters in line 1 are considerably smaller in size than those in lines 2-10. The letters in lines 11-15 are also somewhat smaller. The space between the lines is likewise not uniform, that between lines 1 and 2 being more than in any other case. Some letters are broken away from the beginning and end of all these lines. The major part of the record is written in verse and so the number of the lost syllables can be easily determined.

The characters resemble those of such inscriptions of the seventh and eighth centuries belonging to the western parts of Northern India as the Banskhera plate¹ of Harsha (606-47 A.D.), the Kundesvar inscription² (V.S. 718=661 A.D.) of Aparājita, the Jhalrapatan inscription³ (V.S. 746=689 A.D.) of Durgagana, the Kudarkot inscription⁴ of about the second half of the seventh century, the Nagar inscription⁵ (V.S. 741=684 A.D.) of Dhanika, and the Kanaswa inscription⁶ (V.S. 795=738 A.D.) of Śivagana. Some of the vowel-marks and subscripts are often of the ornamental type. For the ordinary and ornamental types of the medial signs of i, ī and ē, see respectively śirō and vēshṭitum in line 9, śrī in lines 3 and 4, and °ānvayē in line 3 and mūlyēna in line 8, while, for subscript r, see śrī-Chandra° in line 4. The difference between the ornamental forms of medial i and medial ē is that the former is extended towards the left after a sharp curve in the middle. The form of rū in line 2 is interesting. In many cases, the letter d has a marked protrusion at the back as in the modern Śāradā and Gurumukhī alphabets (cf. dyutayē in line 1, °d=Ārya° and Chandra° in line 4, dinam in line 13). In some cases, the globular limb of n is not joined with the vertical hanging from the top mātrā (e.g. in nṛpatiḥ in line 4). The letter k shows the older type only when it is the superscript in a conjunct or a vowel-mark is added to its bottom (cf. Krishṇa° in line 3, Karkkaḥ in line 4). The letter b is indicated by the sign for v. On palaeographical consideration, the inscription may be assigned to the latter half of the seventh century or the first half of the eighth, preferably to the former period.

The language of the record is Sanskrit and, with the exception of the invocatory passage at the beginning and the sentence mentioning the engraver in line 15, the whole epigraph is written in verse. As regards orthography, the inscription resembles contemporary records of Northern India. Final m is changed to anusvāra at the end of the second and fourth feet of stanzas. The extant part of the inscription bears no date.

The inscription contains a prāśasti in five stanzas in all. The composer offers his adoration to a god in verse 1. Verse 2 introduces the royal personage, the recording of one of whose pious activities was the object of the inscription, while verse 3 speaks of the particular meritorious deed performed by him. Verse 4 prays for the permanency of the object made and verse 5 mentions the author of the prāśasti. A passage in prose at the end of the record mentions the engraver. It is not possible to determine whether the date in figures was incised at the end of the line and is now broken away.

The first akshara in the extant part of line 1 seems to be a damaged ḥyē which is followed by a double daṇḍa and a symbol for Siddham. It is not possible to restore the word ending in ḥyē unless it is believed that the scribblings above the beginning of the line were meant to write the same. These scribbled letters appear to read Yadu-ra(rū)ḥyē which follow what looks like a damaged Siddham symbol. But it has to be admitted that such a passage at the beginning of an inscription is rather unusual. The Siddham symbol in line 1 is followed by a passage which appears to read namah } and what follows in lines 1-2 is a stanza in the Anuṣṭubh metre in adoration of a god whose epithets kāl-āñjana-rajah-puñja-dyuti, [ma] hāvarāha-rūpa and jaṅgama have only been preserved. There is no doubt that the reference is to the god Vishṇu since the expression mahāvarāha-rūpa certainly speaks of the Boar incarnation of that deity.

Verse 2 in lines 3 ff., while introducing the hero of the prāśasti, speaks, in the first foot, of a king named Kṛishṇarāja who is stated to have belonged to the royal family of the Mauryas. The second foot of the stanza mentions another king, apparently named Āryarāja, who is described as the son of Chandragupta. The words indicating the relationship between Kṛishṇarāja and Āryarāja are lost; but the intention of the prāśastikāra appears to have been to represent Chandragupta's son Āryarāja as born in the family of Kṛishṇarāja of the Maurya lineage. The second half of the stanza speaks of a person known by two names, viz. Ḍiṇḍirāja and Karka, one of which was given to him [by the people] in recognition of what he did with reference to the invincible Kānyakubja. This Ḍiṇḍirāja alias Karka was no doubt a ruler who was probably the son or successor of Āryarāja, although the words indicating their relationship cannot be traced in the extant part of the verse. The verb indicating the nature of the achievement of Karka Ḍiṇḍirāja with reference to the city of Kānyakubja is also imperfectly preserved; but the idea may have been to represent him as one who burnt the city. This seems to be suggested by the preserved last akshara of the verb (viz. hya which may be the remnant of nirāhya) as well as the fact that the word karka has 'fire' as one of its meanings. Ḍiṇḍirāja may thus have well been called Karka or 'the Fire' because of his success in burning the city of Kānyakubja.

Verse 3 describing the meritorious deed performed apparently by Ḍiṇḍirāja Karka, which was the subject of the prāśasti, is damaged and its purport is not quite clear. The first half of the stanza has, however, the expression pun्य-avyavachchitti and the passage mahatā mūlyēna yat-kāritam(tam) and the latter half the letters [Sau] rēḥ śrō vāḥṣitum mālākā...lavāha(bāha)-vyam=avyāhatam(tam). It therefore seems that the king performed the deed in question in the chain of many other pious works and at the cost of a large sum of money. The purpose seems to have been to put garlands around the head of a deity whose name seems to read Sauri (i.e. Vishnu; cf. the Vaishnavite adoration in verse 1). The aksharas mālākā may suggest mālākāra-nikāya, i.e. a guild of florists. In that case, it is possible to think that the king deposited a good sum of money with a guild of florists as a permanent endowment for the supply of garlands regularly for adorning the head of the deity he worshipped. The next stanza (verse 4) contains the prayer [pra]tidinam tāvat-samārō[hatu] which, together with the preserved parts of certain other passages, suggests that the garlands were meant to be placed on the deity's head every day so long as the sun and the moon would shine. In this context, the passage va(ba)[ndha]nam mahad-idam sva-srēyāsē would show that the pious work of Diṇḍirāja Karka related to bandhana (possibly mastaka-bandhana of the deity) and that it was done for his own merit.

According to verse 5, the eulogy (a word of this import is lost) was composed by a person whose name seems to be Bālasēna and whose father's name ended in the aksharas llaka (cf. names like Mallaka, Gollaka, etc.). The prose passage following this stanza was meant for mentioning the name of the engraver of the record; but the name is lost. The word karaṇika qualifying the lost name is, however, clear on the impressions.

The importance of the inscription lies in the fact that it mentions certain hitherto unknown rulers of the Maurya family, who flourished in the early medieval period. The genealogical information supplied by the present record may be tentatively tabulated as follows:

None of these rulers is known from any other source. The name of Chandragupta seems to suggest that the tradition of the mighty Chandragupta (c. 324-300 B.C.), the great founder of the Maurya dynasty of Magadha, was not totally forgotten in the family as late as the early medieval period. The reference to Kānyakubja, which is modern Kanoj in the Farrukhabad District of Uttar Pradesh, probably suggests that the territory over which these early medieval Mauryas held sway included, as is also indicated by the findspot of the record, some of the south-western areas of Uttar Pradesh.

It is interesting to note in this connection that three early medieval branches of the Maurya dynasty are so far known.¹ The first of these are the Mauryas of the Konkan, who are represented in the inscriptions of the Chālukyas as having been subdued by the Early Chālukya king Kirtivarman I (566-98 A.D.) and Pulakēśin II (610-42 A.D.) of Bādāmi.² An inscription³ from Kanaswa in the old Kotah State of Rajasthan, dated in the Mālava year (i.e. V.S.) 795-738 A.D., belongs to the Brāhmaṇa prince Śivagaṇa who was a feudatory of king Dhavala or Dhavalātman of the Maurya lineage. Another inscription¹ from Waghli near Chalisgaon in West Khandesh mentions the Maurya chief Göyindarāja who was the twenty-first descendant of the chief Kīkaṭa of the Maurya dynasty of Valabhī (i.e. modern Wala in Kathiawar) and ruled in Śaka 991=1069 A.D. as a subordinate of the Yādava Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Sēunachandra II of the Sēuṇa country (i.e. modern Khandesh). But the facts that the palaeography of the inscription under study closely resembles that of the Kanaswa inscription and that the Malwa-Rajasthan region is much closer to Mathurā than the Konkan and Khandesh appear to connect the Mauryas mentioned in our epigraph with the Maurya king Dhavala of the Kanaswa inscription. It was probably these Mauryas who are referred to in the Nausari plates² of the Gujarat Chālukya chief Pulakēśin Avanijanāśraya, dated in the Kalachuri year 490-738 A.D. It is stated in that record that the Chālukya chief repulsed a Tājika (i.e. Arab) army which, after destroying the Saindhava, Kachchhella, Surāshṭra, Chāvōṭaka (i.e. Chāpōṭkaṭa), Maurya and Gurjara kings and wishing to penetrate the Dakṣiṇāpatha country, came to reduce the Navasūrikā territory under his rule. It was probably the Maurya king Dhavala who was defeated by the Arabs then in occupation of Sind.

D. R. Bhandarkar³ was inclined to identify Maurya Dhavala of the Kanaswa inscription with Paramabhaṭṭāraka Mahārājādhirāja Paramēśvara Dhavalappa, overlord of Guhilaputra Dhanika of Dhavagartā, mentioned in the Dhod inscription probably dated in the Gupta year 407⁴=726 A.D. Dhavalappa, however, appears to be a South Indian (probably Kannaḍa) name and the king may have been related to Rāshtrakūṭa Nannappa, bearing a similar appa-ending name, of the Indragarh (Mandasaur District, Madhya Pradesh) inscription⁵ of the Mālava year (i.e. V.S.) 767=710 A.D. It has, however, to be admitted that the Maurya king's name is given in the Kanaswa inscription as Dhavalātman which may be a Sanskritisation of Dhavalappa. If Bhandarkar's identification is accepted, the southern name of a Maurya king of the Malwa-Rajasthan region may be explained by supposing that these Mauryas were related to the Mauryas of the Konkan in the south.

As already indicated above, it is very probable that Maurya Dhavala of the Kanaswa inscription belonged to the family referred to in the inscription under study. It also seems that the Mauryas of the Malwa-Rajasthan region were descendants of one of the Kumāra viceroys of the western province of the ancient Maurya empire, which had its headquarters at the city of Ujjayini. Since the Kanaswa inscription of V.S. 795 (738 A.D.) appears to be slightly later than the present record, king Dhavala may be tentatively regarded as one of the successors of Diṇḍirāja Karka of our epigraph. The genealogy of these Mauryas would thus stand as follows :

Mauryas of the Malwa-Rajasthan Region

FRAGMENTARY MAURYA INSCRIPTION FROM MATHURA

Scale : Four tenths

The only geographical name mentioned in the inscription is Kānyakubja, modern Kanoj in the Farrukhabad District, Uttar Pradesh. In the present state of our knowledge, it is not possible to determine who the Kānyakubja contemporary of Dīṇḍirāja Karka was. But he may have been an ancestor of the great Yaśōvarman who ruled from Kanoj in the first half of the eighth century A.D.

¹ From impressions. I am indebted for a few suggestions to Dr. B. Ch. Chhabra. At the left upper end of the inscribed stone, there are four akṣaras which appear to be preceded by a damaged Siddham symbol and to read Ya[du]-ra(rā)jy[ē]. As already noted above, these characters are slightly later than those of the record under study and are probably not a part of it.

² There are traces here of an akshara which may be juē. It is difficult to determine its significance and to say whether the passage incised above this part and referred to in note 1 above was written at a later date in imitation of the one that had been engraved here.

* Expressed by symbol.

⁴ The lost syllables may be conjecturally restored as Vishnav namah.

⁵ An expression like mahātmanē would suit the context.

* The remnant of this vowel-mark suggests that it was of the ornamental type found in šrī in line 3.

⁷ We may suggest the restoration of a word like ball or jay here.

⁸ The lost akṣaras may be conjecturally restored as *Tad-ratnāḥ-bhām*⁸. The letter read as dā should not be confused with ndā. Cf. ndra in line 4 and dinam in line 13.

* The intended word is no doubt 'ātma-jāṇ.

¹¹ The expression may be conjecturally restored as pratāp-āśrayaś.

²² The words may be conjecturally restored as tan-nirda-ya.

¹² The intended word is most probably °chchkillayē.

¹⁸ The akshara before reḥ looks like śau; but the lower part of the right limb of ś is not ornamented as found elsewhere in the epigraph.

²⁰ The word intended here may have been again.

⁶ The intended word is apparently samārōhatu.

⁸ The name seems to have been Bālasēna and the expression Vā(Bā)lastēna.

⁹ The name seems to have been written in three aksharas with an i-mātrā attached to the second of them.

The traces suggest amukēn=ēti.

No. 26—NELKUNDA GRANT OF CHALUKYA ABHINAVADITYA

(1 Plate)

P. B. DESAI, DHARWAR

As a contributor of an article on the antiquity of Bellary, I received a complimentary copy of the September (1953) issue of the Kannaḍa journal Śaraṇa Sāhitya, Bangalore, in October 1953. This issue also contained an article on a copper-plate record of Chālukya Abhinavāditya¹ by the late Shri Hullūru Shrinivasa Joyis of Chitradurg,² Mysore State. The importance of the charter at once arrested my attention and I requested the Government Epigraphist for India to secure the original plates for examination and study. The plates were received in January 1954 through the Director of Archaeology, Mysore, and returned soon after. I edit the inscription on these plates here with the kind permission of the above authority from the set of impressions preserved in his office³ at Ootacamund.

According to the information contained in the above-mentioned article of Shri Joyis, the plates were the ancestral property in the possession of the family of Pūjāri Bhīmanna, a resident of the village of Gaṇjagatti in the Holalkere Taluk, Chitradurg District, Mysore State. They were obtained by S. Kesavayya, a relative of the owner, and handed over to Shri Joyis for decipherment and study. The plates appear to have been later deposited in the local archaeological museum at Chitradurg.

This is a set of three copper-plates held together by a circular ring. The first and third plates are engraved on one side only while the second contains writing on both the sides. There is a ring-hole about $\frac{5}{8}$ inch in diameter, in the left margin of each plate for the ring to pass through. The plates measure almost uniformly $7\frac{1}{2}$ inches in length and $3\frac{3}{16}$ inches in breadth. The thickness of each plate is about $\frac{1}{16}$ inch. The ring is fastened to the bottom of a circular seal. The diameter of the ring is 3 inches and its thickness $\frac{1}{2}$ inch. The seal is about one inch in diameter. In the counter-sunk surface of the seal is the emblem of what looks like a boar facing left. The plates along with the ring and seal weigh 70 tolas, while the ring and seal weigh $18\frac{1}{2}$ tolas.

The charter comprises 28 lines of writing, which are distributed evenly on all the four sides of the plates. The characters are Telugu-Kannaḍa of the 7th century, being normal for the period. They may be compared with those of the Karnul plates⁴ of Ādityavarman and, allowing some margin of difference, with other cognate records such as the Talamañchi plates⁵ of Vikramāditya I.

Some of the letters exhibit cursive forms; for instance, ṇa in Nārāyaṇa (line 7), and l in lāṇḥkhana (line 8) and vallabha (line 13). Initial u occurs twice, in udīta in line 2 and uchchaśringa in line 25. Medial i and ī are distinguished, the former being indicated by a circle and the latter by a spiral at the top of the letter, e.g., Hārītī in line 4. Except in one or two cases, anusvāra is generally retained. In udītam= mā° in line 2, it is turned into nasal in sandhi with the following letter.

⁵ Above, Vol. IX, plate facing p. 100.

In regard to orthography, the consonant following r in a conjunct is doubled. This rule which is optional is wrongly applied even in the case of an exceptional letter sh, e.g., in Harshasha (line 10).

The language is Sanskrit and except for two verses, one at the beginning and another at the end, the composition is in prose throughout. The text is accurate excepting a few scribal errors.

The inscription commences with the expression svasti. This is followed by a verse in the Anushṭubh metre in praise of a foot of the god Hari, described as lustrous like the rising sun, and stated to have been raised to measure the earth and to crush the darkness in the form of the demon (Bali). The composer of the record has deliberately used the expression abhinav-āditya meaning the 'new sun' in the above description to convey through double entendre an allusion to the ruling king Abhinavāditya who issued the charter. Next are recounted the usual prākāśī of the Chalukya or Chālukya house and the genealogy of the rulers belonging to it. In the genealogy are mentioned only three kings, viz., Paramēśvara Satyāśraya-prithivīvallabha who vanquished Harshavardhana, i.e. Pulakēśin II, his son Ādityavarman, and the latter's son Satyāśraya-prithivīvallabha alias Abhinavāditya who issued the present charter. As in the case of Pulakēśin II, both Ādityavarman and Abhinavāditya are endowed with the imperial titles Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara.

King Abhinavāditya is stated to have issued an order to the concerned persons announcing the gift of the village Nelkunda, situated in the Uchohasringa viśaya, free of all imposts to the Brāhmaṇa Kuppasārman of the Dēvarāta-Kauśika gōtra, who was well-versed in the Vēdas along with the Vēdāṅgas and engaged in performing the six-fold karman. The grant was made on the full-moon day of Bhādrapada in the increasingly victorious reign of the king, the specific year of the reign, however, not being mentioned. The epigraph concludes with the usual imprecatory verses.

The inscription is of great historical importance, as it not only reveals for the first time the existence of a hitherto unknown prince of the early Chālukya house of Bādāmi, but seems also to let in some new light on the dark period of its history following the defeat of Pulakēśin II at the hands of his adversary, Pallava Narasiṃha I. Pulakēśin II vanishes from the political scene in 642 A.D. and his son Vikramāditya I emerges as a victor who re-established Chālukya supremacy in 655 A.D. About 13 years that intervened between these two events are characterised by paucity of historical information. It has been surmised that during this period a part of the Chālukya kingdom was under the occupation of the Pallavas and that although several sons of Pulakēśin II aspiring for the Chālukya throne were ruling in different areas, none of them was powerful enough to drive away the enemy and assert his authority over the feudatories.¹

An elder son of Pulakēśin II, who seems to have claimed sovereignty over the Chālukya empire during this period of anarchy, although, in fact, his sway was apparently confined to the region of the Kurnool District, was Ādityavarman.² That the area under his authority might have also included parts of the adjacent Districts of Bellary and Chitradurg is indicated by the present plates.³ This Ādityavarman⁴ must no doubt be identical with his namesake whose

son Abhinavāditya issued the charter under study. Abhinavāditya who was also called Satyāśraya-prithivīvallabha, evidently after his grandfather Pulakēśin II, is known for the first time through our record. It is noteworthy that like his father Ādityavarman, Abhinavāditya also claimed the imperial titles, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara, which imply his right over the Chālukya empire. As it is reasonable to assume that no other prince of the Chālukya house claiming sovereign status was permitted to rule in any part of the kingdom after the accession of Vikramāditya I in 655 A.D., we may assign the rules both of Ādityavarman and his son Abhinavāditya within the span of 13 years, 642 to 655 A.D. With the ascendancy of Vikramāditya I, Abhinavāditya, a rival as he was, might have been dislodged from his position and reduced to a state of nonentity.

Only two geographical names are mentioned in the record. Uchchaśringa-vishaya wherein the gift village was situated, must evidently have taken the name after its chief town Uchchaśringa. This place is identical with the present village of Uchchaṅgidurga in the Harpahalli Taluk, Bellary District. On account of its well-fortified and strategic situation, it played a conspicuous role in the history of the region during the early and medieval period. A copper-plate charter of the Early Kadamba king Harivarman was issued in the fourth year of his reign from Uchchaśringī.¹ This place appears to have been made their headquarters by a few more members of the Early Kadamba line.² It was one of the capitals of the Nolamba-Pallava rulers.³ A later line of the Kadamba feudatories⁴ and chiefs of Pāṇḍya extraction also ruled here.⁵ It was one of the strongholds subjugated by Hoysala Viṣṇuvarḍhana in the course of his northern expedition.⁶

An inscription at Uchchaṅgidurga itself,⁷ dated 1064 A.D., describes the place as having been situated in the district of Kadambavāḍi. Indulging in a legendary account of its different names, it further states that it was known as Māghanāda, Vira-Kanakagiri, Uttuṅga-parvata and Uchchaṅgi-parvata, respectively in the Kṛita, Trētā, Dvāpara and Kali ages. The gift village Nelkunda has to be identified with the modern village of Nalkunda situated in the Dāvanagere Taluk, Chitradurg District. It thus appears that Uchchaśringa-vishaya embraced areas in the adjacent Districts of Bellary and Chitradurg.

No. 27—KUNTAGANI PLATES OF KADAMBA RAVIVARMAN, YEAR 12

G. S. GAI, OOTACAMUND

These plates were published about fifteen years ago by Dr. H. D. Sankalia in the New Indian Antiquary, Vol. IV (1941-42), pp. 178-81 (Plate opposite page 220). As I felt that the reading of the text and its interpretation could be improved, I requested Dr. Sankalia to send me the original plates which were in the Deccan College Research Institute, Poona. Dr. Sankalia very kindly arranged to send the plates to me and also permitted me to re-edit them. Accordingly, the inscription¹ is edited in the pages of this journal with the kind permission of the Government Epigraphist for India.

The plates are known to have been found at Kuntaganī, a village about 50 miles north-west of Banavasi in the Sirsi Taluk of North Kanara District in the present Mysore State.² This village is included in the Ankola Taluk of the same District. The set consists of three copper-plates, each measuring 6.4 inches by 1.9 inches. There is a hole, about .5 inch in diameter, on the left side of each plate, through which passes the ring with the seal. The ring is about 2 inches in diameter, while the seal which is oval in shape, measures 1.2 inches by 1 inch. In the counter-sunk surface of the seal is a figure which is rather difficult to make out. Possibly it represents the standing figure of an animal. The first and the third plates are inscribed on the inner side only while the second plate has writing on both sides. The first and the second plates contain 3 lines of writing each and the third plate has 4 lines. Each line contains about 20 akṣharas, except the last line of the third plate which has about 12 akṣharas. As some portions of the plates have flaked off, the letters are damaged in these portions. The plates, together with the ring and the seal, weigh 45 tolas.

The characters belong to the southern class of alphabets and are regular for the period to which the record belongs. They resemble the alphabet of the Sirsi³ and Halsi⁴ plates of the same king. As regards individual letters, t is written throughout without the loop, whether used as single or in conjunction. The closed or box-type of b is found in lines 3, 4, and 11. Attention may be drawn to the form of l in line 5, the sign for ph is found in lines 9 and 12 and that for upadhāniya in line 2. As regards orthography, it may be observed that the consonant following r is reduplicated⁵ while the sibilant śh is correctly not so reduplicated.

The language of the record is Sanskrit and, except the two imprecatory verses at the end, the text is in prose.

The inscription belongs to the reign of the Kadamba Maharaja Ravivarman of the Early Kadamba dynasty. It records that, on the full-moon day of the month of Śrāvaṇa in the twelfth year of his reign, the king granted 24 nivartanas of land situated on either side of a tank-bund which he caused to be constructed in the village of Variyakā. The donee of the grant was one Bhavasvāmin of the Dhaumya gōtra, who was well-versed in the Vēdas.

⁵ For a discussion on this feature, see above, Vol. XXVII, pp. 143-47.

The inscription does not supply any new historical information either with regard to the king or to his date. As many as seven inscriptions belonging to his time have been discovered so far and the present record will be the eighth. Two of his copper-plate grants have been already published in the pages of this journal.¹ His Sirsi plates are dated in his 35th year showing that he ruled at least for 35 years. According to the revised chronology of the Kadamba dynasty, Ravivarman has been assigned to the period circa 484-519 A. D.²

The grant was issued from Vijaya-Paṅktipura. The other known grants of this king have been issued either from Vaijayanti or Palāśikā.³ So the present inscription is the only one known so far, which is issued from Paṅktipura. I have shown elsewhere⁴ that this Paṅktipura should be identified with modern Hangal in the Dharwar District of Mysore State and that it is not another name of Vaijayanti as supposed by Dr. Sankalia. Paṅktipura is also mentioned as Pāṁktipura in the Kirukuppatūr grant of Kadamba Kṛishṇavarman II.⁵ Here it occurs as Pāṁktipura-vishaya which is evidently the region round about Hangal. In later records the place-name appears as Pāntipura or Pānthipura⁶ and is subsequently replaced by Pānuṅgal which is the earlier name of modern Hangal.

In connection with the gift of the land the following expression occurs in the record : Kārppatēśvara[m=iti chaturvīmśati-nivartianam pukkōli kshētram] . . .

The portion given in brackets is damaged as a chip of the copper has peeled off there. However the traces of the letters can be seen and the reading chaturvīmśati can be restored without difficulty. But it is difficult to make out the two aksharas after Kārppatēśvara which I have proposed to read as m=iti. If this reading is accepted, then Kārppatēśvara may be the name of the land granted. Probably the land belonged originally to a person or god called Kārppatēśvara. The meaning of pukkōli is also not clear to me. It might suggest the variety or kind of land granted. This expression occurs also in the Sirsi plates referred to above and in a copperplate grant of the Bhōja king Kāpālivarman.⁷ At the end of the record, there is an endorsement referring to a house-site and some land in the village. The purport of this endorsement is not clear.

The village Variyakā may be modern Bargi about 14 miles to the south-west of Kunṭaganī.

No. 28—GRANT OF MAHARAJAKULA JATRASIMHADEVA, V. S. 1347

SADHU RAM, NEW DELHI

The present inscription¹ is engraved on a set of two copper plates measuring 18.5" x 12" each and weighing both together 497 tolas. They are preserved in the Prince of Wales Museum, Bombay. The first plate is engraved on one side only, while the second bears writing on both the sides. There are two holes, $\frac{1}{4}$ " in diameter, along the longer side on both the plates, evidently meant for the rings to keep them together. The rings seem to have been lost.

The record is composed in Sanskrit verse and prose, of which the panegyrical portion is in verse and the documentary part in prose. The poetry is laboured and highly artificial, and abounds in alliterations. The record is written in the Nāgarī script of the 13th century A. D. The execution of engraving on the first plate is better and contains fewer errors than that on the two sides of the second plate, which appears to have been done by an apprentice. As regards orthography, there is v for b except in some words. The medial vowels ē, ai, ō and au are formed with a prishṭha-mātrā stroke. There is a good deal of confusion between the execution of the letters n and l, y and p, m and s, etc. I have avoided to make the transcribed text cumbersome by inserting too many such corrections within brackets, and have often given the correct readings as they should have been.

The record is dated in the year 1347 of the Vikrama era, which corresponds to 1290 A. D. It records of the grant of the village of Takāri by Mahārājakula Jaitrasimhadēva to twenty six Brāhmanas of the Śrīmāli caste,^a whose names, along with the gōtra and the name of each one's father, are given from line 33 to 44. Takāri is described as situated in the jurisdiction of Nandapadra, which is probably identical with Nandapura on the bank of the Rāvā (v. 10), and was the capital of the kingdom during the reign of Visaladēva, the elder brother of Jaitrasimhadēva. The genealogy of this ruling family (rāja-vamśa), called Vaijavāpāyana in v. 2 and merely Vijapāyana in line 31, is given as follows :

Mahārājakula Chāohigadēva

Mahārāṇaka Sōdhaladēva

Mahārāṇaka Jēsaladēva

Visaladēva

Mahārājakula Jaitrasimhadēva

It is rather difficult to identify this Vaijavāpāyana family. We have a reference to a Vaijavāpa gōtra in the Rastikapriyā, a commentary on Jayadēva's Gītagōvinda by Rāṇā Kumbhakarna, in which Bappa (V. S. 1342), the founder of Gōhila-varṇsa is referred to as dvija-puṅgava and belonging to the Vaijavāpa gōtra. In view of this, all that we can hazard is that this Vaijavāpāyana family may have been a branch of the same Gōhila stock.

The problem of identification is also complicated by the fact that the names occurring in this genealogy were very common among the Rājput families of that period. For instance, one

■ The caste derives its name from the district of Śrīmāla and the town situated in it.

Jaitrasimha is mentioned in the Balvān (Kotah District) inscription of the Chāhamāna Hammira of Rāṇastambhapura, dated V. S. 1345, almost contemporaneous with the present grant which is dated V. S. 1347. Similarly, there are a number of Chāchigadēvas and Visaladēvas, but none of them belonged to the Vaijavāpāyana or Vijapāyana family.

We shall, therefore, try to locate the family from whatever historical information we can glean from the text of the inscription. We know that Mahārājakula and Mahārāpaka are not royal titles, but only feudatory epithets, notwithstanding the extravagant praise the panegyrist has lavished on their owners. Mahārājakula Chāchigadēva, the founder of the family, is called nripa. Being the great-grandfather of Jaitrasimhadēva, the donor of the present grant, dated V. S. 1347, he must have lived somewhere about V. S. 1270, and was most probably a feudatory of the Chaulukya king Bhīma of Gujarāt. In the inscription he is described as the extirpator of the Mālavas. The possible explanation of this feat of his valour that we can offer is that he might have helped Lavaṇaprasāda and his son Viradhavala, the faithful Vāghelā adherents of Bhīma, in defeating Dēvapāla, the Paramāra king of Mālava in a battle fought at Ābu in V. S. 1288. The panegyrist may have made a big boast of it in order to please his patron.

Chāchigadēva's son Sōḍhala is said to have been described as Maṇḍalēśa gaja-kēśarin by the minstrel tribes in their songs (v.5). He may have put down some Maṇḍalēśvaras, the feudatory chiefs or provincial governors, who had often rebelled against the kingdom of Gujarāt during the reign of Bhīma or even later during the reign of the Vāghelās who supplanted the Chaulukyas in Gujarāt. Among the offsprings of Sōḍhala, was one Jēsala who proved himself to be the jewel of a ruler by bringing happiness and prosperity to his subjects. Unfortunately, he lost his life in a fierce battle against certain enemies whose names are not mentioned. Both Sōḍhala and Jēsala bore the title of Mahārāpaka, and were, therefore, the feudatories of the king of Gujarāt like their ancestor.

The name of Jēsala's son Visaladēva is omitted altogether from the genealogy repeated in the documentary prose portion of the record. While still a youngster, he is said to have pleased Arjuna, the king of the Gūrjaras by his courage in the battles. This Arjuna was probably no other than the Chaulukya Vāghelā king of Gujarāt of that name who fought against the Yādavas in order to foil their repeated attacks to capture Bhrīgukachchha. He might have entrusted the sole command of these military expeditions to Visaladēva, his faithful feudatory, and, being pleased with his valorous achievements, given him the territory of Nandapadra as a reward for his services (verse 10). This would justify the encomium bestowed on Visaladēva by the panegyrist in verse 14. Visaladēva ruled over Nandapura (his capital) very benevolently as a semi-independent ruler. This Nandapura was near Bhrīgukachchha (modern Broach) in the Narmadā-tatā maṇḍala. Later on, Visaladēva dared an attack on a Muhammadan ruler who had a very powerful army, and was killed in action. No clue is given as to the identity of this Muhammadan ruler. It is interesting to note that the names of more than one Visaladēvas are associated with the extirpation of the Mlēcchhas or Turushkas (both terms indiscriminately applied to Muhammadans or even other foreigners). On the Aśoka pillar at Koṭla Fīroz Shāh, Delhi, we have an inscription of the Śākambharī king Visaladēva, also called Vīgraharāja (V. S. 1220), who is described as the exterminator of the Mlēcchhas.¹ Again, in the Paṭṭanārāyaṇa inscription² of Paramāra Pratāpasimha (V. S. 1344), we find Visala, the son of Bhādadēva and the ruler of Mālava, extolled as the sole conqueror of the Turushka hosts (cf. verse 42).

This Visaladēva was, however, alive in 1344 V. S., and may have been a representative of Śaraṅgadēva, the son and successor of Arjuna on the throne of Gujarāt. Evidently, he was a different person from Visaladēva of this grant, though he appears to have been his contemporary. Visaladēva of our grant does not seem to have ruled for a long time. After his premature death, he was succeeded by his younger brother Jaitrasimhadēva, the donor of this grant, who, we learn from verse 25, was a feudatory chief, owing allegiance to the king of Gujarāt like his elder brother.

Unless the vague allusions in the record, such as (i) the extirpation of the Mālavas (v. 3) by Chāchigadēva, (ii) the fierce battle of Jēsaladēva with unnamed enemies (v. 8), and (iii) the unnamed powerful Muhammadan ruler (Mlēchchhēśvara) who was attacked by Visaladēva (v. 10), are understood with some sort of certainty, it is difficult to identify the family under question and fix its place in history. Let us hope more literary or inscriptional evidence might be discovered to shed some light on the problem.

Among the geographical names in the inscription, Nandapadra or Nandapura is modern Rājpiplā which name was introduced in the place of Nāndōd about 1920 in order to avoid its confusion with Nāndōd and Nāndōl (near Ahmedabad) and Nāndōl (in Marwar). It is still popularly called Nāndōd and people remember its ancient names Nandapura and Nandapadra. It is mentioned in early epigraphs as Nāndipurī and Nāndipura and in medieval inscriptions as Nandapadra. The village Takārī (modern Taṅkārī) is situated about 8 miles to the west of Sahirāvi (modern Sēhrāv opposite Tilakvādā) and about 25 miles to the east of the village of Rūṇḍha. The word shaṇḍa (line 49) corresponds to Prakrit khaṇḍa, meaning 'a nullah'. Āṅkuli and Dhāmaṇi were the local names of the nullahs. The second of the two nullahs is still extant under the name of Dhāmni Khāḍī.¹

In line 48, we have trivaṣṭyām (for trivaṣṭyāyām or trivaṣṭyām) which appears to be derived from Sanskrit tri-varṣman and may mean 'near a place where three roads meet'. Or, like Pañchavaṭī, Trivaṣṭi may be the name of a place where there was a group of three banyan trees. Ekahala-halaikasya ('hālīkasya?) probably means 'of the farmer possessing only one plough'. In Bhāmbhībūṣṭyā (line 50), būṣṭyā is a Gujarātī word meaning 'a knoll or small mound'. Bhāmbhī may have been its local name.²

V.1. Ōm². May the swan-shaped water-jar, ever held in the lotus-like hand of Brahman, dispense happiness—the jar, from whose neck-spout the fair Gaṅgā, gushing forth, imitates the grace of the lotus-fibres.

V.2. In the illustrious royal family of Vaijavāpāyana, lauded by hosts of eminent poets, there was a king, Chāchigadēva by name, whose fame could not be contained in the three worlds.

V.3. He was a portent for (the destruction of) the hostile kings and a comet (i.e. evil star) for the extirpation of the Mālavas. Resplendent, he shone (in his body) and by his great prowess as a life-sustainer like the very sun on the face of the earth.

V.4. To him was born the king Sōḍhala of a strong mind, who was the very death for the annihilation of his enemies, and, before the advancing tide of whose valour the families of his foes could never take root.

V.5. Him, who had a host of brave soldiers and was like a serpent, in putting to rout the warriors of his arrogant foes, the minstrel clans described as a lion overpowering the elephants that were the other Maṇḍalēśvaras (i.e. feudatory chiefs) on this earth.

V.6. His son, king Jēsala, with whom, possessed of benign splendour, the whole earth became luminous at once, was a rare gem among the mortals.

V.7. By him, the all powerful one, his blue-steel sword was flung on the crooked persons of impure mind, and his fame, as bright as the spotless moon, among the noble persons of pure mind.

² See p. 222, note 5.

V.8. Having played the role of Yama in a war with the kings who were irresistible in fighting, he, with higher ambition, became the friend of the lord of the gods (i.e. Indra) within a few years (i.e. died).

V.9. When the illustrious Jēsala, the moving tree of paradise, had become the ornament of the land of the gods (i.e. attained heaven), then his son, Visala by name, who was of as lovely a form as Kāma himself, became the king.

V.10. Who, the resplendent one, even as a youngster, having pleased in battles Arjjuna, the king of the Gūrjjaras, shone brilliantly, spreading cheer in the city of Nandapura which was a gem set in the ornament of the land on (the banks of) the Rēvā (i.e. Narmadā).

V.11. The offspring of Jēsala-dēva, dispelling the darkness and setting the people on the path of virtue, shone as if he were the moon on the earth's surface in the dark night of the destruction of his enemies.

V.12. With a smile that made his lotus-face bloom, who could assume the leadership of the tribe of the brave, no wonder! (that the same) Vijayārkadēva, his minister, who was clever at devising effectual plans, too, shone brilliantly.

V.13. In him, who was fashioned (as it were) from the same stuff as that of the Brave, the Noble and the goddess Lakshmi, the inherence of (the qualities of) prowess, modesty and majesty shone out most conspicuously.

V.14. Who, all alone, having stemmed repeatedly the numerous hordes of the king of the Yādavas, makes his very fame in the country, the (barring) door to the soldiers of the South.

V.15. The illustrious Visala of virtuous disposition, having thus enjoyed with facility the highest prosperity on this earth, made an assault on a Muhanmadan (Mlēchchha) ruler who was formidable with his large troops which were irresistible and had broken the pride of all the princes.

V.16. Making the battle-field strewn with the broken pieces of the swords, arrows, bows and the bodies of the rancorous Muhammadans (Turushkas), he entered the abode of Indra (i.e. was killed) while the frown still glowed over his brow, striking terror into (the hearts of) the scampering soldiers (of the enemy).

V.17. As the fatigue of Visala was being removed by the sprout-like hands of the amorous belles of heaven (i.e. after his death), Jaitrasimha, his brother, came to share the enjoyment of the prosperity of a large kingdom.

V.18. With the skin of their bodies thickly covered with the dust of the ground close to his palace, his enemies, with their pride lowered like the slaves, always display nothing but humility.

V.19. By that very person (i.e. Jaitrasimha), radiant with happiness and valour, a unique moonlight¹ was created in the form of his glory, which caused burning affliction to his enemies and made the hearts and faces of the noble to expand like the petals of the lotuses.

V.20. Whose mind, having associated with the noble people, was radiant with a natural and charming elevation : his grown up son and excellent queen.....²

V.21. He, who, wielding here a singularly heavy sword, capable of felling a big tree when plied with the might of his arm, was extolled as Khadgarāja (sword-king) by the bards singing laudatory poems in the assemblage of the kings.

V.22. What wonder, if he shines as Jaitra-pañchānana (the victorious lion=Jaitra-simha) on this earth, when there are a hundred of noble persons to praise his virtues before him with a hundred mouths!

² The sense of the second hemistich of this verse is obscure.

V.23. This illustrious king Jaitrasimha, thundering with his irresistible arms, alone is victorious over the circle of the excellent soldiers who are like a chaplet of gems and are the champions of the battle-field ; and his bee-black sword, thrust into the heart of the enemy, wears the semblance of a slender column of smoke rising up from his (i.e. the enemy's) ever-burning anguish.

V.24. It is the good conduct of this very Jaitrasimha, pure as the waters of Gaṅgā, that triumphs as it washes away the moral impurities of the wicked, and which, being capable of removing severally the errors of many a learned man and of putting an end to the unrestrained movements of the enemies, pervades throughout the ends of the quarters.

V.25. By him has been given away, after getting the approval of his overlord, the village of Takārī into the hands of twenty-six Brāhmaṇas of the Śrīmāla caste, along with its nine treasures, pools, etc., for the great bliss of final emancipation of Visala and his mother and father.

V.26. Let these Brāhmaṇas live in this village free from fear as long as these stars, shy at the sight of the bright moon, their spouse, continue to twinkle on the wide expanse of the sky, and as long as the sun continues to occupy its place in the heaven.

V.27. While Vijayārkaḍēva, the son of Vallanadēva who was the crest-jewel of the Śrīmāla family, was the minister with supreme powers, this grant was bestowed upon the Brāhmaṇas by Jaitra in the year reckoned by the (Sun's) horses (7), the Vēdas (4), the primary qualities (guṇas—3), and the moon (1) :

Lines 30-33. (that is to say) when thirteen hundred years increased by forty-seven had elapsed since the reign of the illustrious Vikramāditya. At such a time, viz. (the year) 1347, there had been the illustrious Mahārājakula Chāchigadēva of the Vija(Vaijavā)pāyana family ; his son the illustrious Mahārānaka Sōḍhaladēva ; his son the illustrious Mahārānaka Jēsaladēva ; his son the illustrious Mahārājakula, Jaitrasimhadēva :

Line 33. By him,—

Lines 44-48. for the bliss of final emancipation of his elder brother the illustrious Mahārājakula Visala, and his mother and father, and for the continuous performance of all the obligatory as well as accidental religious rites prescribed by the Vēdas and the Smṛitis, has been donated, with libations of water, the village of the name of Takārī up to its boundaries on four sides, situated in the jurisdiction of Nandapadra which is the pride of the banks of the Narmadā, free from all taxes and along with all the property like the nine treasures existing within its four bounds, to all these Brāhmaṇas of Śrīmālī family, 26 in number,¹ to be enjoyed in an uninterrupted succession of their sons and sons' sons for the same time as the moon and the sun endure.

Lines 48-51. The four boundaries of this village are, for instance :—the boundary on the northern side is beyond the Trivatī (?) fields ; on the eastern side the boundary is along the Āṅkuli nullah and in the same (?) direction the Āghāṭa-boundary extends beyond the banyan tree by the side of the Sahirāvi village ; on the southern side the boundary is along the Dhāmaṇī nullah ; on the western side the boundary is in the Ujāna (garden ?) of the Ēkahala-halaika (?) beyond the village Rūṇḍha ; and on the western side in a corner, the Āghāṭa-boundary extends beyond the fields of Bhāmbhī-būṭṭyā.

Lines 51-53. This village should be enjoyed by these Brāhmaṇas up to its four bounds, in equal shares. While these Brāhmaṇas carry their personal effects useful for their household to and from (the village), the gifts [should be free from all taxes at] the toll-booth (Dānamāṇḍapikā)² in all the territories adjoining Nandapadra.

No. 29—BHUBANESWAR INSCRIPTION OF GANGA NARASIMHA

D. C. SIRCAR AND K. G. KRISHNAN, OOTACAMUND

The inscription¹ under study is engraved on a stone tablet which was discovered in the course of an excavation of a site for the foundation of a monastery near the Gaurī-Kēdāra temple at Bhubaneswar, Orissa. The inscribed stone was made over to Mr. Ganapati Sircar of Calcutta by His Holiness Swami Kesavananda Brahmachari who had arranged for the excavation of the site in July 1916. Recently the stone was secured for the Asutosh Museum of Indian Arts attached to the University of Calcutta. The inscription was published by Sircar with a good illustration in the Journal and Proceedings of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. XX, 1924, pp. 41 ff. Since the text has not been properly read and interpreted, it is re-edited here.

The inscribed slab measures about 26½" in height, 23" in breadth and 5½" in thickness. About the middle of the top part, there is an image of Gaṇeśa measuring 8½" in length, 6" in breadth and 1½" in depth, engraved in bas-relief. The whole stone is stated to weigh nearly five maunds (about 400 pounds). The space in the right side of the surface of the stone is occupied by an Oriya inscription in Gaudīya characters, the first 15 lines of which cover an area 8½ inches wide by the side of the figure of Gaṇeśa while the width of the area covered by the remaining 22 lines below the above is 11 inches. The height of the area covered by the record in 34 lines is 24 inches. The space in the left half of the stone is similarly occupied by an inscription in the Tamil language in Tamil and Grantha characters, the lower part of which, lying below the figure, is separated from the Oriya epigraph by a space about 1" broad. The letters vary in size from ½" to ¾" in height as well as in breadth. They are thicker in shape in the Oriya part than in the Tamil section. The writing is in a fairly good state of preservation although a layer of stone has broken away from the left hand side of the top part with the result that a few letters at the right end of the first three lines in the Tamil portion are lost. But the lost letters can be confidently restored with the help of the excellent photograph of the slab published along with Sircar's article referred to above.

As already indicated, the inscription consists of two parts, one engraved in Tamil occupying the left hand side and the other in Oriya engraved in the right side. The last three lines of the Tamil portion are, strangely enough, engraved in three vertical columns on the left face of the slab exactly in the Chinese fashion. The letters have to be read in these lines from top to bottom while the lines have to be read from right to left. Both the Oriya and Tamil sections of the inscription refer to a transaction between a debtor and a creditor, the former being the pontiff of a Maṭha of Tamilian Śaivas at Bhubaneswar and the latter a local Oriya moneyed man. That is why the document is written in two different versions, Oriya and Tamil.

The characters of the Oriya part of the record belong to the Gaudīya class, some of them resembling either their modern Bengali or Oriya forms. The record may be assigned on palaeographical grounds to a date not much earlier than the fourteenth century. Letters like ṭ, ḍh and ṣ and the signs of medial u and ū exhibit Gaudīya forms, while a, ā, ñch, m, r, ṛ(=b) and ṣ, as found in the inscription, are the same as in Gaudīya and in Bengali. Similarly, letters like i, kh, gh, p and ph in the record are found in the medieval Gaudīya epigraphs found in Orissa and resemble their Oriya forms, although the letter h (cf. also the peculiar form of hi in line 3) has a curved form which appears to be the origin of the modern Karanī (i.e. pertaining to the writer caste) form of the letter.¹ But the most interesting letter is ḷ which is found only in Oriya and not in Bengali. This letter has not been traced in Orissan epigraphs earlier than the thirteenth century.² Medial i, which has been only once used in line 29, is of the Oriya type. Of initial vowels, the inscription uses a (lines 16, 18, 24), ā (lines 10, 20-21, 24, 26-27, 31), i (lines 15-16, 20, 23, 25, 29, 31-32), u (lines 11, 15-16, 27) and ē (lines 7, 10, 12-14, 16, 20, 22-23, 26, 28-30, 33). The numerical figures 1, 2, 5, 7, 8 and 0 are found in the record (cf. lines 3, 11, 18). Of these, 1 is of the Telugu, 2 of the Oriya, 5 of the Telugu-Oriya and 8 of the Gaudīya-Oriya type. The Siddham symbol at the beginning and the two punctuation marks (meant for a double danḍa) at the end look like the figure for 2.

The language is Oriya though there is a little influence of Sanskrit at the beginning of the epigraph. The composition exhibits carelessness on the part of the scribe. Some of the expressions used in the record are not found in modern Oriya. The orthography is characterised by a tendency to use the medial forms of i and ā instead of medial i and u respectively. Indeed medial i has been used only once in bhikṣhā (line 29, the word being elsewhere spelt as bhikṣhā) and medial u once in suḷya (line 33) for Sanskrit sūrya. We know that y, when it is initial or the component of certain conjuncts, is pronounced as j in the East Indian dialects in which v is pronounced as b and kṣ as kkh. The inscription uses y for j in vā(vi)yē (line 2) for Sanskrit viḷaya (cf. jētē kālā for Sanskrit yat-kālā in lines 32-33) and represents the original sound of y by ia as in aia (line 24) for Sanskrit aśitika. Interesting are the following modifications of Sanskrit words: siḷgha for siḷha, dēvaśa for dēvasya, pravradhamāna for pravardhamāna, viyē-rājē for viḷaya-rājyē, Kātrika-kṛishṇa for Kārttika-kṛishṇa, Ravi for Ravi, Kittivāsa for Kṛittivāsa (or Kīrttivāsa), Siddhēsvara for Siddhēśvara, maḷha for maṭha, āśa and āuśa for āyus, Taparāja-māhāmuni for Tapārāja-mahāmuni, Duggābhata-āchāya for Durgābhata-āchārya, Utrāsara-nāḷka for Uttarēśvara-āyaka, trihēka for triṃśatka, sūnā for svārṇa, kaḷantara for kal-antara, Siva for Śiva, Tapachakravartī for Tapaschakravartin, sthānā-patī for sthāna-pati, rāsī for rāśi, Pāḷḍī for Pāḷḍya, etc. The expressions aikṣhā kari (line 31), āchāvanta (line 31), tapasāṅkā (line 32) and chandra (line 33) are defective, standing respectively for dikṣhā lābha kari, āchāravanta, tāpasāṅka (or tāpasāmāṅka) and chandra. There are several other errors of this kind in the epigraph. The case-endings added to bases in a are: ē for both nominative singular (as in Duggābhataē in line 15, āchāyē in line 21) and locative singular or plural (as in rājē=Sanskrit rājyē in line 2, dēsē=Sanskrit dīśēshu in line 30); kī (as in Chakravatikī in line 25) and ṅka or ṅkara (as in °dēvaṅkara in lines 5-6, °nāḷkaṅkara in line 12, tapasāṅkā for tāpasāṅka in line 32, kālāṅka in line 24) for genitive singular or plural; kai or ṅkai for dative singular (as in kilākai in line 24, āchāyāṅkai in line 10); rai (for rē in modern Oriya) for locative singular or plural (as in hātharai=hātharē); ṅkara-takū for ablative (as in °nāḷkaṅkara takū in line 12). Among verbal derivatives, the following forms of the gerund occur in the epigraph: dēi (i.e. having given) in line 16, sūṇi (i.e. having heard) and vōḷi (literally 'having spoken' but used in the sense of 'because') in line 22, hōi (i.e. having been) in lines 30-31, kari (i.e. having done) in line 31. The following are verbs in the Past Tense: kalā (i.e. did or made) in lines 10 and 16, ghēṭalā (i.e. took or borrowed) in line 12, hōḷā (i.e. became) in lines 19-20, 22-23, dhilā for dīlā (i.e. gave) in line 26. For the verbal forms dēi in line 8 and karāi in lines 28-29, see dēv in Plate VI B, lines 5 and 11 of the Puri Plates (B) of Narasimha IV.³ The expression vaṇḍhā kalā (i.e. gave in mortgage) in line 10, aṅka kalā (i.e. calculated the sum) in line 16, mūḷo-kaḷantara karante (i.e. on the capital and interest having been done=calculated) in line 17, Siva-prāpti (i.e. on having obtained Śiva=after death) in lines 18-19, janilā hōi (i.e. having been born) in lines 30-31, āchā[ra]vanta hōilā tāpasāṅka* (i.e. of the ascetics who have been [devoted] followers of the rules of conduct) in lines 31-32, jēṭe kāḷa cha[n]-dra-sujya vrata* (i.e. so long as the sun and the moon exist) in lines 32-33, ēṭeka kāḷaṅka vasa vrati-vāka (i.e. to exist for this much time) in lines 33-34, etc., are interesting.

The expression ēkaūti (line 16) seems to mean the same thing as Sanskrit ekatra or ekatrita (i.e. brought together) while asiā-satakē kilākai (line 24) appears to mean 'in respect of a written [document] involving one hundred and eighty [gold coins]'. The word maḍāmaḍe in the locative in line 31 seems to stand for maṭh-āmaṭhē in the sense of 'in various maṭhas', i.e. in any maṭha in the three countries mentioned in the context, viz., Chōḍa-dēśa, Pāṇḍya-dēśa and Kāñchi-dēśa. But Sanskrit maṭha is modified to maḍha in line 5.

The Tamil section of the record exhibits some paleographical and linguistic features which are apparently due to the inscription being written in Orissa. Grantha characters have often been used in Sanskrit words. The use of medial i exhibiting a tendency towards the formation of a loop at its right, which distinguishes it from medial i, is clear in Kīrtti (line 6), pri (line 12) and nir (line 29). The sign for medial i in vanilā in line 32 is indicated by projecting the top mātrā of the letter n almost making a loop of it. This may be compared with the slightly different form of the same akshara in tanisu in lines 15-16. The letter ḥ(=ḍ) in the word māḍai is written in two different ways. In lines 23 and 27 it is written in the usual Tamil form, while in lines 16 and 17 it is written with a downward curve as in Grantha, the latter form being comparable with ḥ in bhaṭṭar in lines 8 and 21 and in poṭṭi in line 27. It is possible that the pronunciation of the word māḍha was not clear to the person who drafted the Tamil section of the epigraph. The rēpha is indicated by a vertical stroke even where the Tamil forms of the Sanskrit words are used, e.g., Kārttikai in line 3 and Kīrtti-vāsattil in line 6, though the corresponding sign in Tamil was not unknown to the engraver (cf. vārttu in line 29).

The use of the expressions rāṣi-maitram (lines 21-22) and iḷandu (line 24) is interesting. Rāṣi-maitram means the friendship arising from two persons being born under the same rāṣi or zodiacal sign. This interpretation is made clear in the Oriya part (lines 20-23) of the record. The other expression iḷandu seems to have been used in the sense of 'having written off'. The significance of the expression maḍāmaḍam (line 31) is not clear, though the context seems to suggest the meaning 'in various monasteries'.

Both the Oriya and Tamil parts of the inscription bear the same date and refer to the same transaction, though with slight difference in the details. The inscription is dated in the 22nd year of Śrī-Vira-Naranārasimhadēva or Śrī-Vira-Nārasimhadēva and the details of the date are quoted as Kārttika-ba. 7, Sunday. The reigning Gaṅga monarch is called Naranārasimha in the Oriya part (lines 1, 27) and Nārasimha in the Tamil section (lines 1-2, 30); but in line 5 of the former and lines 10-11 of the latter a king named Narasimha is mentioned with the distinguishing epithets vaḍa in Oriya and periya in Tamil, both meaning 'big'. Apparently the elder Narasimha was one of the predecessors of Nārasimha or Narasimha during whose reign the inscription under study was incised. A Telugu inscription¹ from the Simhachalam temple, dated Śaka 1305, Chatira-ba. 6, Wednesday, corresponding to the 25th March 1383 A.D., records the gifts of the queens of Gajapati Peda-Narasimharāja and Vira-Bhānudevārāja. The word peda or pedda means 'big' in Telugu exactly as Oriya vaḍa and Tamil periya.² The Simhachalam epigraph belongs to the reign of Gaṅga Narasimha IV (1378-1402 A.D.) and king Bhānu mentioned in it can be none other than his father Bhānu III (c. 1353-78 A.D.). Peda Narasimha seems to be his grandfather Narasimha III (c. 1327-53 A.D.) who was apparently distinguished from his reigning grandson bearing his own name by the said distinguishing epithet. There is thus some evidence to show that the Gaṅga king Narasimha III was referred to as the 'big' Narasimha in the records of the time of his grandson Narasimha IV. Although this does not preclude the possibility of an earlier Narasimha being distinguished from one of his predecessors of the same name in a similar way, we are inclined to identify the king, during whose reign the inscription under review was engraved, with Narasimha IV as the palaeography of the record seems to support this identification. Moreover the details of the date quoted in the inscription do not appear to suit the reign of Narasimha II or Narasimha III.

Manmohan Chakravarti, in his account of the chronology of the Eastern Gaṅga kings,¹ fixed 1378-79 A.D. as the initial year of Narasimha IV. The details of the date in our record, viz., Anka 22 (i.e. 18th regnal year), Kārttika(Pūrṇimānta)-ba. 7, Sunday, would thus correspond regularly to September 24, 1396 A.D.

The Oriya part records that an area of 12 Vāṭis of land called Vāghamarā (situated at Vāghamarā according to the Tamil version) was granted as Ēkādaśa-Rudra-bhikṣhā in favour of the Siddhēśvara-maṭha at the illustrious Kṛttivāsa-kṣētra (modern Bhubaneswar) for the longevity and fulfilment of the desires of the elder Narasimhadēva who was apparently one of the past kings of the country. The significance of the expression Ēkādaśa-Rudra-bhikṣhā is clear from the Tamil part which states that the grant was meant for the feeding of Śaiva ascetics for the favour of the eleven Rudras. Some time after the creation of the endowment, Tapōrāja-mahāmuni, the pontiff of the Maṭha, mortgaged the land to Durgābhaṭṭa-āchārya from whom he borrowed 150 [gold] Māḍhas. He also borrowed ten [gold] Māḍhas and 30 Pauṭis of paddy from Uttarēśvara-nāyaka. Pauṭi is a measure of capacity prevalent in Orissa, which is equal to ten maunds. The word is probably derived from Sanskrit pravarti or pravartikā which was equal to five khāris according to Sarvānanda's Tikāsarvasva on the Amarakōśa, II, 9, 89. The same measure is possibly mentioned in certain inscriptions from Bengal and Orissa.²

Durgābhaṭṭa-āchārya paid up Tapōrāja-mahāmuni's debt to Uttarēśvara-nāyaka and calculated the total amount including interest, payable to him by Tapōrāja-mahāmuni, to be altogether 180 [gold] Māḍhas. This no doubt included 150 Māḍhas lent by himself and 10 [gold] Māḍhas paid by him to Uttarēśvara-nāyaka as well as the interest accruing to these amounts and the price of the paddy with interest. Meanwhile Tapōrāja-mahāmuni passed away and he was succeeded in the pontificate by Tapaśchakravartin. Since Durgābhaṭṭa-āchārya and Tapaśchakravartin were born under the same rāśi or zodiacal sign, the former became a friend of the latter. Hence Durgābhaṭṭa-āchārya wrote off the debt of 180 [gold] Māḍhas, due to him from the head of the monastery, for the continuance of the Ēkādaśa-Rudra-bhikṣhā for the longevity and the fulfilment of the desires of the reigning monarch Vīra-Naranārasimhadēva.

The Tamil version of these transactions while giving some additional information also differs in some details. The purpose of the original grant is stated to have been the feeding of the Māhēśvaras (i.e. devotees of Mahēśvara or Śiva) for the propitiation of the eleven Rudras. The amount borrowed by Taparāja-muniḡaḡ is stated to be 148 Māḍais only as against 150 Māḍhas mentioned in the Oriya part. The reason of this discrepancy seems to be that 2 out of the 150 Māḍhas were paid to the writer and engraver of the document concerned. Thus while the creditor's version of the transaction in the Oriya part refers to the gross amount, the debtor's version puts the net amount he received after deducting the amount paid to the writer and the engraver. After the death of Taparāja-mūnigaḷ, Tapachchakravartigaḷ became the head of the Maṭha. The next stage of the transaction as mentioned in the Tamil section is the writing off of 148 Māḍais by Durgābhaṭṭar since he was a rūḍi-mitra of Tapachchakravartigaḷ. Durgā-bhaṭṭar also undertook to repay the 10 Māḍais and 30 Pottis of paddy which had been additionally borrowed (by Tapōrāja-mahāmuni according to the Oriya version) from Uttarēśvara-nāyaka who was Durgā-bhaṭṭar's father-in-law (or maternal uncle).

In the final portion of the Tamil section, the land is stated to have been re-dedicated for the purpose of the training of the ascetics, who hailed from the three Maṇḍalas (i.e. the Chōḷa, Pāṇḍya and Kāñchi dēśas according to the Oriya section) and were trained in the conventional code of conduct in the various Maṭhas (apparently of the three Maṇḍalas), no doubt in the Siddhēśvara-maṭha at Bhubaneswar for the long life, health and prosperity of Vira-Nārasimhadēva. The Oriya part records the re-dedication of the land for the continuance of the Ēkādaśa-Rudra-bhikṣhā which was meant for the ascetics who were born in the three countries, viz., Chōḷa-dēśa, Pāṇḍya-dēśa and Kāñchi-dēśa, and became devout followers of āchāra as a result of their initiation in the various Maṭhas. The word āchāra has been used in the Tamil part in connection with sampra-dāyam no doubt referring to the conventions of a particular Śaiva school that flourished in the Tamil country. The reference to the three Maṇḍalas in the Tamil section is clearly explained in the Oriya part. It is interesting to note that the third of the three divisions of the Tamil country is mentioned as Kāñchi-dēśa, i.e. Tonḍai-maṇḍalam, which ceased to be a political unit after the fall of the Pallavas about the beginning of the tenth century but continued as a geographical and social unit. The Siddhēśvara-maṭha at Kṛittivāsa-kṣhētra (i.e. Bhubaneswar) apparently owed its origin to a religious school hailing from the Tamil country, though we have no means at present of tracing its history. It may be noted that the names of the pontiffs of the monastery, viz., Tapōrāja-mahāmuni and Tapaśchakravartin, were only titles. They were no doubt Tamilians in origin. Durgābhaṭṭa-ācharya and Uttarēśvara-nāyaka appear to have been residents of Bhubaneswar and were apparently Oriyas.

The location of some of the geographical names mentioned in the records has already been indicated above. The village called Vāghamarā or Vāghamārā, where the gift land was situated, may be identified with the modern village of Bāghmāri which lies about 24 miles due west of Bhubaneswar.¹

(Lines 1-4) May there be success ! In the increasingly victorious reign of the illustrious Vira-Naranārasīṅghadēva—Year 22, Kārttika-kṛishṇa 7, Sunday.

(Lines 4-18) Formerly (an area of) 12 Vāṇis of land (at) Vāghamarā was granted as Ekādāśa-Rudra-bhikshā in favour of the Siddhēśvara-maṭha at the illustrious Kṛittivāsa-kshētra (i.e. Bhubaneswar) for the longevity and (fulfilment of) the desires of the elder Narasīṅghadēva. (He also) borrowed from Uttarēśvara-nāyaka. (In) this (case), ten (gold) Māḍhas and thirty Paṇḍis of paddy. Having deposited these two (items, viz.,) paddy (and) gold (that had been borrowed by) Tapōrāja-mahāmuni, to Uttarēśvara-nāyaka, Durgābhāṭṭa-āchārya calculated the sum (payable to him by Tapōrāja-mahāmuni). On the paddy and gold being considered together (and) the capital and interest being calculated, (the whole amount was found to be) one hundred and eighty (gold) Māḍhas—180.

This Tapaschakravartin's rāśi (i.e. the constellation under which he was born) was the same as that of Durgābhaṭṭa-āchārya. Having learnt (this), Durgābhaṭṭa-āchārya became a friendly party (to Tapaschakravartin) because (both of them) belonged to the same rāśi. Durgābhaṭṭa-āchārya poured water in the hands of (i.e. made a ceremonial offering in favour of) Tapaschakravartin in respect of the written (document) involving one hundred and eighty (gold coins and) entitling (him) to enjoy the said twelve Vāṭis of land (at) Vāghamarā.

No. 30—VILASA GRANT OF PROLAYA-NAYAKA

(I Plate)

N. VENKATARAMANAYYA AND M. SOMASEKHARA SARMA, MADRAS

This grant was originally discovered long ago, nearly a century back, in the village of Kandarāda, near Pithapuram in the East Godavari District, by Sri Hundi Venkata Rao Pantulu Garu. He and his partner in business, a Vaiśya whose name is said to have been forgotten, heard a metallic sound one morning while digging the earth for a brick-kiln of joint enterprise, when they further dug deep having been curious to know the cause of that sound. Then they found fourteen copper plates attached to a ring. Since it was a joint enterprise Sri Venkata Rao and his Vaiśya partner both divided this new property equally between themselves, and got seven plates each. The ring also went to the share of the Vaiśya partner who had copper vessels made out of the plates and the ring. The plates which went to the share of Sri Venkata Rao were preserved in his family with superstitious care as a unique treasure. Two generations after, their existence was revealed to Sri Sabnavis Satyakesava Rao Pantulu Garu, a public worker and scholar of repute, who was connected with that family by marital ties, and who, being educated in English, knew the value of copper-plate grants in general to history. Much interested in history, he made the discovery public, and was curious to know the contents of the plates. Some two decades back, when Sri M. Somasekhara Sarma, one of the editors of the grant under study, had gone to Visakhapatnam, Sri Hundi Venkata Rao Pantulu, the owner of the plates and the great grandson of their original discoverer, was good enough to place them in the hands of Sri Sarma for decipherment and publication.¹ Sri Somasekhara Sarma takes this opportunity to convey his grateful thanks to all those concerned for placing this record in his hands. The inscription is very valuable specially for the history of the Āndhras, and throws a flood of light on the political conditions of the Āndhrā country subsequent to the fall of Warangal in 1323 A. D. The plates are now preserved in the Government Museum, Madras. It is fortunate that the seven plates that went to the share of Sri Venkata Rao Pantulu Garu, record a grant complete in itself, as the other seven plates probably do another one, and that these plates of one grant had not got mixed up with those of the other.

When these plates were with Sri Somasekhara Sarma they were sent to the Assistant Superintendent for Epigraphy for being reviewed in his Annual Report. This set is marked as No. 5 of Appendix A in the Report for 1938-39 and finds a comprehensive notice in Part II. The inscription on the plates is now edited with the help of a set of excellent inked impressions, kindly placed at the disposal of the editors by Sri N. Lakshminarayan Rao, retired Government Epigraphist for India.

The following is an extract from the description of the plates given in the Annual Report:—

"This is a set of seven thick copper-plates the first and last of which are slightly bigger than the others measuring about 10½" long by 4½" broad, while the others (plates 2 to 5) measure about 9½" by 4½". Their writing, which is engraved on the inner side of the 1st plate and on both sides of the other six, is well preserved and protected by broad and raised rims covering their

¹ The following friends, the late lamented patriot and scholar, Sri Marepalli Ramachandra Kavi Garu, President of the Kavita Samiti, Visakhapatnam, Sri Gobburi Venkatananda Raghava Rao Pantulu Garu, whose researches in Hindu astronomical lore are very widely known throughout the Āndhra country and the young poet and enthusiast, Sri Puripanda Appalaswami Garu, Secretary of the above mentioned Samiti, all of whom were interested in having this charter published, deserve mention in this connection. edges on three sides, while the right margin is left plain. This rim is about $\frac{3}{16}$ " broad and is also as much in thickness. The plates are numbered in serial order on their inner sides in the breadth of this rim. They have ring holes about $\frac{1}{4}$ " in diameter near their left margin but the ring which must have passed through them and held them together is now missing. The plates weigh 510 tolas. In the right margin of the 2nd and 4th plates there is a slight knob-like projection, the purpose of which is not clear."

The inscription on the plates is neatly executed and is in a good state of preservation. The letters, almost all of which attained their modern forms by the date of this record, are deeply inscribed and are very beautiful. Very rarely do we come across such specimen of handsome Telugu writing in the grants issued in the early post-Kākatīya period. The script is Telugu which was current in the first half of the fourteenth century A. D. in the Āndhra country and is akin to that found in the Dōnepūṇḍi grant of Nāmaya-nāyaka.¹

No distinction is made between the vowels short and long e (ll. 118, 125 and 126), the letters bā and bhā, ḍ and ḍh, and the secondary forms of the vowels e and ē and o and ō. The sign for the aspirate, seen in the grant in a few cases in ḍha, pha and bha, resembles a small inverted crescent attached below the right arm of the letter. It definitely came into use by the first quarter of the thirteenth century. It can clearly be seen in ratna-garbhāyāḥ (1.8), °bhiddā vibhinnaṁ, and vibhaktē (1. 11), °lābhē (1. 33), °phalairi (1.60), °prauḍha (1. 117), etc. This, however, is not always used uniformly. The remaining aspirated letters have quite distinct forms to differentiate them from their unaspirated counterparts. Superscript r, resembling the modern avagraha in a diagonal position, is attached at the right top of the letter. The final forms of t and n occur frequently, as in ll. 30, 32 and 33. In almost all cases the anusvāra has taken the place of final m. The only letters in the record that differ from those of the present day are ṭ, ḍ, ḍh, ṣ and ṣ. The only difference between ṭ and ḍ lies in the top stroke. The letter ḍ exactly resembles ḍ of the present day, but without the loop inside in the right arm and ḍh resembles the present day ḍ. N can easily be identified even though it differs slightly from its present form. Among orthographical peculiarities, a superfluous anusvāra is sometimes inserted before double n, or before n followed by a consonant as in °rumnnala (1.61), Pumnnny-ādhyāpaka (1.132), ṭāmnyā (1.151, 155); ḍhḍh is written instead of ḍḍh if the letter ḍh is doubled after r (ll. 70, 140, 141, and 144); the consonants, g, ch, j, n, ṭ and ḍ sometimes and y invariably are doubled after r; the palatal ṣ is often used in the names of the donees for the dental s as in Siddhaya (1. 110), Ṣingaya (1. 117) and so on.

The language of the inscription is Sanskrit with the exception of the passage in Telugu describing the boundaries of the village granted. The language, excepting the passage describing the boundaries, is chaste and is entirely in verse. This is a beautiful inscriptional kāvya in Sanskrit, replete with alamkāras, the like of which is rarely seen in the grants of the medieval period. Unfortunately the name of the composer is not given. Another noteworthy feature of this grant is the absence in it of the usual imprecatory verses that are generally found at the close of the inscriptions. The inscription ends with the signature of the donor which reads as Prōlā-nēni vṛālu (the signature of Prōlā-nēḍu).

The passage describing the boundaries is shabbily inscribed, quite in contrast with the preceding Sanskrit part. The Telugu forms kālī and kāluva are both used to denote a canal; of these the former form has gone out of use now. Kroppuṁ-gāluva (1. 147) means a canal that was dug. This is a compound of krochchu and kāluva, of which the former is a verbal adjective. Krochchu is the root. It means 'to make a low depression, to dig with an iron crow-bar or other instrument'. This expression is also used in inscriptions in the sense of inscribing. Kara (l. 149, 154, 155) means an earthen bank. The form imchika (l. 147) meaning a little, is obviously the older form of imchuka. The expression avuru-bāḍe (l. 151) is really made up of two words avuru and pāḍe. The latter means 'a swamp or marsh'. Avuru-bāḍe is a compound of avuru, (a kind of grass) and pāḍe. In the passage mūṇḍ-ūḷḷa-muttala-Māṅgāpu-pumta (l. 157) muttala is a compound of mūḍu and tala; mūṇḍ-ūḷḷa-muttala means at the junction of the three villages. Māṅgāpu-pumta is the narrow way (pumta) belonging to the village of Māṅgām, the present Māgam, a boundary village.

The inscription begins with the invocation of the god Vishnu and his Varāha incarnation (ll. 1-4). This is followed by an account of the creation. It is stated that at first the whole world was submerged under waters; that on perceiving this, the god Nārāyaṇa, assuming the form of Brahmā, created all the worlds, in the midst of which was the earth adorned by the Golden Mountain and surrounded by the islands and the seas; that in the centre of the earth and encircled by the salt seas was the Jambūdvīpa divided into nine khaṇḍas or continents, of which that extending from the Himalayas to the Southern Ocean was known as Bhārata-varsha comprising many countries, where different languages and customs prevailed; and that one of them named Tiliṅga, through which flowed many holy rivers, contained several rich towns and cities, beautiful mountains, impenetrable forests, deep tanks, and unassailable fortresses (ll. 4-13).

Several kings of both the Solar and Lunar families held sway over this country extending from the sea, without swerving from the path of righteousness. During the Kali Age, the kings of the Kākati family ruled over Tiliṅga from their capital Ēkaśilā, like the Ikshvākus from Ayōdhyā. When several rulers of the dynasty passed away, Pratāparudra, a monarch famous for his prowess ascended the throne and ruled the country with truth and justice so that such famous monarchs of yore as Yayāti, Nābhāga and Bhagīratha were completely forgotten. While king Pratāparudra was ruling the kingdom in this manner, bitter hostility arose between him and Ahammada Suratrāṇa, the lord of the Turushkas. The Suratrāṇa, who was the Yama (Death) to the kings, stamped out the remnants of the royal families left undestroyed by Jāmadagnya (Paraśurāma). Although Pratāparudra vanquished that Suratrāṇa who had an army of 900,000 horses seven times, he had to submit to that Turushka at last, despite his military strength, and unrivalled skill in diplomacy, owing to the decrease of the good fortunes of the people of the earth. While being carried away as a prisoner by the Turushka monarch to his capital Delhi, Pratāparudra departed, by the decree of the Providence, to the world of the gods on the banks of the river Sōmōdbhavā, i.e. Narmadā (ll. 13-28). When the sun, viz. Pratāparudra, set, the world was enveloped in the Turushka darkness. The evil (adharmā), which he had up to that time kept under check, flourished under them, as the conditions were very favourable for its growth. The cruel wretches subjected the rich to torture for the sake of their wealth. Many of their victims died of terror at the very sight of their vicious countenances; the Brāhmanas were compelled to abandon their religious practices; the images of the gods were overturned and broken; the agrahāras of the learned were confiscated; the cultivators were despoiled of the fruits of their labour, and their families were impoverished and ruined. None dared to lay claim to anything, whether it was a piece of property or one's own wife. To those despicable wretches wine was the ordinary drink, beef the staple food, and the slaying of the Brāhmanas the favourite pastime. The land of Tiliṅga, left without a protector, suffered destruction from the Yavanas like a forest subjected to devastating wild fire (ll. 28-39). Then was born, as if an amśa of the god Vishnu, who took pity on the sufferings of the people, had descended from heaven, king Prōla of the Musunūri family of the fourth caste, who assumed the sovereignty of the earth. He destroyed the power of the Yavanas, who abandoned their forts and fled to unknown places unable to resist his might. The very people who suffered at the hands of the Yavanas sought protection under him, and turned against them and put them to death. Having overcome the Yavanas in this fashion, he restored to Brāhmaṇas their ancient agrahāras confiscated by them, and revived the performance of the sacrifices, the smoke issuing from the firepits of which spreading over the countryside cleaned it of the pollution caused by the movements of those evil-doers. The agriculturists surrendered willingly a sixth of the produce of the soil to the king; and he set his hand to the task of repairing the damages caused by the Pāraśikas. King Prōla established himself at Rūkapalli on the Gōdāvarī at the foot of the Mālyavanta mountain; and having entrusted the administration to his younger brothers such as Kāpaya-nāyaka, he devoted himself to the performance of charitable and meritorious deeds. He granted many agrahāras and large sums of money to deserving scholars (11. 39-78). In the gōtra of the famous sage Bhāradvāja was born a Brāhmaṇa scholar of the name of Annaya, son of Vennaya, and grandson of Annaya, devoted to the study of the Yajurveda. He had two sons, Vennaya and Gaṇapaya, who were distinguished by their learning, lofty character, wealth and liberality. Considering that of the two brothers, the former was worthy of honour, Prōlaya-nāyaka requested him to accept the gift of an agrahāra. Vennaya who was accustomed to make gifts rather than take them complied with the king's request somewhat reluctantly (11. 78-98). King Prōlaya granted to Vennaya on the occasion of a lunar eclipse the fertile village of Vilasa in Kōṇa-maṇḍala which lay on the bank of the Gōdāvarī as an agrahāra. Having divided it into one hundred and eight shares, Vennaya changed its name into Prōlavaram after king Prōlaya-nāyaka and gave it in turn to several learned Brāhmaṇas of good lineage and excellent character, proficient in the śāstras and the vēdas, with all the rights of possession, enjoyment, etc. (11. 98-105). There were in all 82 donees including the two deities Gautamēśvara and Kēśava of the village. The names of the donees and the distribution of shares among them are given in a table in the sequel.

The charter under review throws a flood of light on the history of Āndhra in the years immediately following the Muslim conquest and the downfall of the Kākatiya dynasty. While describing the circumstances in which the gift registered in the charter came to be made, the political changes through which the country had just then passed are briefly recounted. The following points which are therein touched upon call for a few words of elucidation:—(1) The history of Pratāparudra, his enmity with Aḥammadū Suratrāpa of Delhi, his early victories over the Muhammadans, and his ultimate defeat, captivity and death; (2) the character of the Muslim rule, (3) the rise of the Musunūri family and the formation of the Confederacy of Āndhra Nāyakas under the leadership of Prōlaya-nāyaka; (4) the conquest of Tilinga by Prōlaya-nāyaka and the re-establishment of the Hindu dharma; and (5) his benefactions, especially the gift of the village of Vilasa in Kōṇa-maṇḍala to the Brāhmaṇa scholar Vennaya of the Bhāradvāja gōtra.

The problem that deserves consideration first is the hostility between Pratāparudra and Aḥammadū Suratrāpa, the lord of the Turushkas, who is described as the laya-kāla (death) of kings and the destroyer of the remnants of the royal families that were left undestroyed by Jāmadagnya (Paraśurāma). The identity of Aḥammadū Suratrāpa is not difficult to discover; for, his final victory over Pratāparudra whom he despatched to Delhi as a prisoner and the latter's death on the way to the imperial capital clearly show that he could have been none other than Muḥammad Bin Tughluq. Therefore, it is not unreasonable to assume that Aḥammadū is a mistake for Muḥammad due either to the remissness of the engraver, or to the confusion in the mind of the composer of the inscription himself.¹ The statement that Sultān Muḥammad suffered defeat no less than seven times at the hands of Pratāparudra before he could ultimately vanquish him furnishes interesting information on the history of Muslim invasions of Tiling and demands careful examination. The Muslim histories of the period refer to a number of expeditions, which the

Sultāns of Delhi despatched against Tiling. According to Baranī, Sultān 'Alā-ud-dīn Khaljī planned an invasion of Tiling as early as 1301 A. D. 'Four or five months after the Sultān left Rantambhōr', says he, 'Ulugh Khān collected a large force with the intention of attacking Tiling and Ma'abar, but his time was come, and the angel of destiny took him to the blessed city. His corpse was conveyed to Delhi and buried in his own house'.¹ The expedition to Tiling did not obviously proceed. The idea was not, however, abandoned. Some two years later, 'at the time when the Sultān was engaged in the siege of Chitor, Malik Fakhr-ud-dīn Jūna, daḍbak-i-Hazarat and Malik Jhāju of Karra, nephew of Nusrat Khān, had been sent with all the forces of Hindustan against Arangal'. On their arrival there the rainy season began and proved such a hindrance that the army could do nothing and in the beginning of the winter returned, greatly reduced in numbers, to Hindustan.² The expedition thus ended in disaster. Although the Muslim historians attribute the failure to the outbreak of rains, it is not unlikely that they came into conflict with the Tiliṅgas and were worsted by them in the fight.

The failure of the expedition rankled in the mind of 'Alā-ud-dīn; and in 1309-10 A. D., he despatched another expedition under the famous Malik Nā'ib Kāfūr and Khawāja Hājī, the 'ariz-i-Mamūlik. This expedition, according to the unanimous testimony of Muslim historians, was a resounding success of Muslim arms. The details of it are far too well known to need description. The Muslim armies marched to Warangal by way of Dēvagiri without meeting serious opposition on the way; defeated the Kākatīya forces, laid siege to and captured the outside mud fort, and invested the inner stone fort. Pratāparudra sued for peace. Malik Nā'ib Kāfūr agreed to accede to his request on condition that he surrendered all his wealth, together with his elephants and horses, jewels and valuables and promised to send every year a certain amount of treasure and a certain number of elephants by way of tribute to Delhi. Pratāparudra who had no alternative accepted the conditions and Malik Nā'ib Kāfūr raised the siege, and marched away to Delhi laden with booty.³

Of the next invasion, which was sent from Dēvagiri in 1318 A. D. by Sultān Qutb-ud-dīn Mubārak Shāh, two conflicting accounts have come down to us. The cause of the expedition was the failure of Pratāparudra to pay the annual tribute for some years. To collect the arrears of this tribute, the Sultān sent Khusru Khān at the head of an army to Tiling. According to Amīr Khusru, Pratāparudra offered resistance, but was defeated and had to purchase peace at a very heavy price. Amīr Khusru's account of Khusru Khān's expedition to Tiling reads like another version of Malik Nā'ib Kāfūr's invasion in 1310 A. D. The encounter with Pratāparudra's forces, their defeat, the investment and capture of the mud fort, the attack on the stone fort, and Pratāparudra's surrender of all his wealth besides elephants and horses, follow the same pattern.⁴ Iṣāmī, who also describes Khusru Khān's expedition to Tiling, narrates the events differently: he does not refer to hostilities. Pratāparudra, on the contrary, is said to have received Khusru Khān with respect, paid the tribute due to the Sultān readily and sent him back to Dēvagiri well satisfied.⁵ Which of these two accounts is true is not easy to decide.

² Ibid., p. 189, Nizām-ud-dīn Ahmad makes a casual reference to this expedition. 'The flower of the Sultān's army had, however, marched to the extreme south of the Dakin, to conquer Arangal' (Tabaqat-i-Akbarī, Eng. trans., Vol. I, p. 173). Ferishta also states that owing to the absence of his army, which went on an expedition to Warangal, 'Alā-ud-dīn was in no condition to face the Mughal invader Targhī on equal terms (Briggs, Ferishta, Vol. I., p. 354).

³ Ibid., p. 202-03.

⁵ Futūḥ-us-Salātīn (Madras edn.), pp. 361-63.

Two more expeditions came during the time of the Tughluqs, who succeeded the Khaljis on the throne of Delhi. Both were despatched by Sultān Ghiyās-ud-dīn Tughluq Shāh (1320-25 A. D.), under the command of his son Ulugh Khān (the later Muḥammad bin Tughluq) in 1323 A. D. The first of these ended in disaster. Ulugh Khān suffered defeat, partly due to dissensions in his camp and the treachery of his officers, under the walls of Warangal, and was compelled to retreat at first to Dēvagiri and thence to Delhi. He returned, however, within four months at the head of a fresh and powerful army, and succeeded after a siege of six or seven months in capturing not only Warangal but also Pratāparudra, whom he sent to Delhi as a prisoner of war.

The Muslim historians thus enumerate five expeditions between 1303 and 1323 against Tiling, of which three were successful and the rest abortive. The Hindu records on the other hand refer to several Muslim expeditions—eight according to the present grant—of which all, excepting the very last, ended in the defeat of the Muslim armies and their expulsion from Tiling. Although these are said to have taken place in the reign of Pratāparudra, the exact time of their arrival and the circumstances in which they suffered defeat are not known. There is reason to believe that the Kākatiyas came into conflict with the Mussalmans long before 'Alā-ud-Dīn Khalji's attack on Dēvagiri in 1296 A. D. An epigraph in the temple of Chhāyā-Sōmanātha at Pānugallu in the Nalgonda District of Andhra Pradesh dated 1267 A. D. describes the victories of Prince Śārṅgapāpīdēva, the son of the Sēuṇa king Singhana and a subordinate of Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Manuma-Rudradēva-mahārāja, i. e. the Kākatiya queen Rudrāmbā or Rudramadēvi. Among his exploits enumerated in the inscription, his victory over the Mussalmans deserves particular mention. Śārṅgapāpīdēva is spoken of in this record as the Primeval Boar who rescued the earth from the Turushka calamity.¹

The Mussalmans also seem to have descended upon the Deccan a little later from another quarter. In an epigraph at the Kallēśvaradēva temple at Haḷuvāgilu in the Bellary District dated Ś. 1204, Chitrabhānu (1282 A. D.), the Yādava king Rāmachandra, that is, Rāmadēva, the adversary of 'Alā-ud-dīn Khalji, is described as a rescuer of earth from the depredation of Turushkas.²

The circumstances in which these Turushka invasions took place are not on record. Some of the expeditions sent by Balban against the Central Indian Hindu kingdoms probably penetrated into the Deccan, but being worsted in the fight by the Kākatiyas and the Yādavas they were compelled to retreat homewards.

The Muslim invasions of Tiling began in right earnest after Pratāparudra's accession in 1296 A.D. According to the present grant, which was issued within a decade of the Muslim conquest, the Muslims attacked Tiling no less than eight times. Pratāparudra is said to have defeated the Sultān of Delhi seven times, but was vanquished, owing to the misfortune of the earth; on the last occasion by that Turushka sovereign, and while being carried away as a prisoner to Delhi, died by the decree of Providence on the bank of the Sōmōdbhavā (Narmadā) river. This is not the only record that refers to the defeat of the Muhammadans. An inscription, noticed by the Mackenzie Surveyors in the fort of Warangal, refers to a victory of Manaraṅgodarirāju and Layiṅgayadēva over the Turakas in Saṁvat 1362 (1304-05 A.D.).³ The proximity of the date of this inscription to that of the first recorded Khalji expedition seems to indicate that Manaraṅgodarirāju and Layiṅgayadēva opposed the Turakas successfully on this occasion and forced them to return to their country. A damaged epigraph at Śrīśailam in the Kurnool District states that the Kākatiya general, Mahārāyasthāpanāchārya Kāchaya-reḍḍi, son of Mailaya-reḍḍi, who placed the Kākita throne on a firm footing, vanquished the Turaka king, who invaded the Teluṅga country after subjugating Gauḷa, Gūrjara, Mālava, Mahārāshṭra and other countries.¹ The Turaka king vanquished by Kāchaya-reḍḍi was in all probability 'Alā-ud-dīn Khalji; for though he is not known to have conquered Gauḷa (Lakhnāuti), the other countries mentioned in the record were subjugated between 1296 and 1310 A.D. either by 'Alā-ud-dīn himself or one of his generals. The occasion when Kāchaya-reḍḍi defeated the Turakas cannot, however, be ascertained definitely; for, in the first place, the Śrīśailam epigraph which registers his victory bears no date. Secondly, it cannot be referred to either of the two expeditions which 'Alā-ud-dīn is known to have sent against Tiling. The first of these which was despatched in 1303 A.D. no doubt ended, as pointed out already, in disaster; but the conquest of Mālava and Gūrjara referred to in the Śrīśailam record was not effected, by that time. 'Alā-ud-dīn was still engaged in Rajputana. Mālava was conquered in 1305 A.D. and Gūrjara (Gujarat) in 1309 A.D. The Śrīśailam epigraph must be assigned therefore to a date subsequent to the conquest of these countries. The second invasion according to the unanimous testimony of all the Muslim historians was a great triumph of the Sultān's armies; and it is highly improbable that Kāchaya-reḍḍi effected the destruction of Turaka forces on this occasion. Therefore Kāchaya-reḍḍi's victory must have taken place in the course of another expedition, which is not recorded for some reason by the court historians of Delhi.

Telugu literary tradition handed down from the beginning of the fifteenth century A.D. preserves also the memory of several victories of Pratāparudra and his generals over the Eussalmans. The poet Śrinātha, who flourished at the courts of the Redḍi kings of Koṇḍaviḍu and Rajahmundry in the first half of the fifteenth century refers, in the introduction to his Bhīmēśvara Purāṇamu, to Prōlaya Anna, one of Pratāparudra's ministers as the "fire of destruction to the Yavanas".² The Śivayōgasāram speaks of Mahāpradhāni Gannaya Preggaḍa, another minister of Pratāparudra, as the vanquisher of the Turakas and the protector of the fort of Warangal.³ The Velugōṭivāri Vamśāvali, a chronicle of the Rēcherla chiefs of the Velugōḍu family alludes to the battle of Kolachelamapura, in which Rēcherla Yācha, son of Prasāditya, put to flight the Turakas and having captured their horses took them to the court.⁴ The birudāvali of some of the Nāyaka families that were in the service of the Kākatiya monarchs alludes also to the Hindu victories over Muslim armies of Delhi.¹ The Pratāpacharitra, a late quasi-historical prose work, states, like the present record under consideration, that there were no less than eight Muslim invasions against Warangal, and that though Pratāparudra vanquished and put them to flight on the first seven occasions, he suffered defeat during the last expedition. Warangal fell into the hands of the Turakas, and he himself was carried away as a prisoner to Delhi.²

Though the Muslim and the Hindu sources are in perfect agreement regarding the final conquest of the Kākatiya kingdom and the captivity of Pratāparudra, they are at variance about the number of Muslim expeditions and the events that happened in them. Whereas contemporary epigraphic evidence fixes their number at eight, Muslim historians mention only five. The difference is perhaps due to the omission, by the latter, of abortive attempts of conquest, which they considered unworthy of notice. While the Hindu sources claim victory uniformly over the Mussalmans in all expeditions excepting the last, the Muslim historians admit defeat only twice which they attribute to unforeseen circumstances. There is reason to believe that the Kākatiyas were not so uniformly successful against the Mussalmans as the Hindu records would have us believe. Chātu verses addressed to Pōtugaṇṭi Maili, one of the Nāyakas in the service of Kākatiya Pratāparudra, describe an event which happened in the court of 'Alā-ud-dīn Khālji at Delhi. For some reason unknown at present Maili is said to have vanquished the Telugu-Chōḍa chief Bijjana at Dakhōl in Delhi in the presence of Sultān 'Alā-ud-dīn, Malik Nēmār (Malik Nā'ib Kāfūr?), the unrivalled hero, and the seventy-seven Nāyakas (of Pratāparudra's court).³ The presence of so many Kākatiya nobles at Delhi, and the duel between Maili and Bijjana at Dakhōl before 'Alā-ud-dīn and Malik Nēmār seem to indicate the existence of intimate political relations between Delhi and Warangal. The Muslim historians refer, as a matter of fact, to the arrival of Kākatiya officials to the court of the Sultān to pay the annual tribute into the imperial treasury.⁴ Maili and Bijjana probably escorted the tribute to Delhi on one of the occasions, when during their stay in the capital, the duel described in the Chātu verses was fought.

⁴ Elliot, History of India, Vol. III, p. 204 : "At the end of the same year (H. 711) twenty elephants arrived in Delhi from Laddar Deo, Rāi of Tilāṅg, with a letter stating that he was ready to pay at Dēvgīr, to any one whom the Sultān would commission to receive it, the treasure which had been engaged to pay, thus fulfilling the terms of the treaty with Malik Kāfūr." On another occasion, some of the Kākatiya officials who were on their way to Delhi are said to have paid tribute to the Malik Nā'ib Kāfūr whom they met in his camp on the banks of the Narmadā. See Khusrū, Khaznī Khaz-ul-Futūḥ, p. 83 :

"After the rivers, mountains and valleys had been crossed, a present of twenty-three elephants, huge as Elburz, arrived from the Rāi of Tilāṅg."

Isāmy also alludes to Pratāparudra's practice of payment of tribute to Delhi.—

"I am a slave of the king", said Rudradēx, and "I shall go to the Khān, the commander of his forces. It was in my mind to send the tribute to the king in the capital; but as the roads are infested with malefactors I hesitated to send it to the court." See Futūḥ-us-Salātīn (Madras edn.), p. 362.

The association of the Kākatiya and the Muslim forces in the war against the Pāṇḍya kingdom to restore Sundara-pāṇḍya to his ancestral throne points also in the same direction. Wassāf, it may be remembered, refers to the flight of Sundara-pāṇḍya to Delhi. 'Sundara Pandi, trembling and alarmed', says he, 'fled from his native country and took refuge under the protection of 'Alā-ud-dīn of Delhi.'¹ Although no information is available from Muslim sources as to what happened afterwards, one of the inscriptions at Tirukkalar in the Mannargudi Taluk of the Tanjore District, dated in the 25th regnal year of Jaṭavarman Śrīvallabha (1316 A.D.), alludes to the arrival of the Muhammadan forces in support of Sundara-pāṇḍya. It is stated that sometime before the date of the inscription, Rājarāja Sundara-pāṇḍya came with the Tulukkar, when a certain chief called Okkūruḍaiyan died together with his brothers and followers obviously in a fight against them.² The Tulukkar were not the only supporters of Sundara-pāṇḍya. A large Kākatiya force under Pratāparudra's famous general Muppiḍi-nāyaka was at the same time operating on his behalf in the Tamil country. An inscription at Vṛiddhāchalam in the South Arcot District dated in 13+1st year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Kōṇēriṇmaikoṇḍāṇ Sundara-pāṇḍyadēva (1315 A.D.) registers the assignment of income from lands in some villages for conducting a service named after Muppiḍi-nāyaka, the ruler of Vikramasimhapattana (Nellore) and one of the ministers of Kākatiya Pratāparudradēva, in the temple of the god Vṛiddhagiriśvara.³ From this it is evident that Muppiḍi-nāyaka, the minister of Kākatiya Pratāparudradēva, was an ally of Sundara-pāṇḍya who caused the service to be instituted in the temple to honour him. Though the cause of Muppiḍi's presence in the Pāṇḍyan territory is not disclosed in the record, the Śrīraṅgam epigraph of Dēvari-nāyaḍu, dated 1317 A.D. leaves no room for doubt that the Kākatiya armies came there to restore Sundara-pāṇḍya to his ancestral throne.⁴ If Rājarāja Sundara-pāṇḍya of the Tirukkalar record is the same as Sundara-pāṇḍya of the inscription from Vṛiddhāchalam cited above, it may be surmised that the Muhammadan and Kākatiya forces were both fighting in the Pāṇḍyan kingdom in and around 1315 A.D., and that they were both allies of Sundara-pāṇḍya. It is not unreasonable to believe that the Kākatiya monarch sent his armies to the south at the instance of Sultān 'Alā-ud-dīn Khaljī to support the contingent of Muhammadan forces sent thither by the latter to restore Sundara-pāṇḍya to his kingdom. Therefore, it is not possible to accept without reserve the statement in the Vilasa grant and some other later records that Pratāparudra was invariably victorious over the Muslim armies on all occasions excepting the last.

Next, the present inscription throws some new light on the circumstances in which Pratāparudra met with his death. According to Shams-i-Shirāj Afif, the Rāi of Tiling, whom Sultān Muhammad sent to Delhi, died upon the road.⁵ The correctness of the statement has, however, been questioned. On the authority of inscriptions, it has been said that Pratāparudra did not die on his way to Delhi; he was not only rescued and freed by some Nāyakas from captivity, but continued to rule his kingdom for some years after that. An inscription at Santamāgalūru in the Narasaraopet Taluk of the Guntur District dated 1326 A.D. mentions Pratāparudra as the ruler of the kingdom, and registers a gift for his merit by Kolani Rudradēva, one of his mahāpradhānis. This furnishes, as pointed out by H. Krishna Sastri, a date 'four years later than the latest date given for Pratāparudra.'⁶ Coupled with the evidence of this record, the title Rāya-bandī-vimōchaka, said to have been borne by Rēcherla Siṅgama I, one of the Nāyakas in the service of Pratāparudra, has given rise to the belief that he rescued the king from captivity and that the latter continued to rule his kingdom even after the fall of Warangal in 1323 A.D.¹ Now, the Santamāgalūru inscription is a solitary record unsupported by other evidence; and no trace of Pratāparudra's rule is found anywhere subsequent to his capture by Ulugh Khān. Moreover, the Muslim forces were still busy with the subjugation of the country and they would not have tolerated Pratāparudra's rule in any part of it. The setting up of an inscription at Santamāgalūru by Kolani Rudradēva in 1326 A.D. must be attributed to the feelings of loyalty to his old master and his irreconcilable hostility to the Mussalmans who had overthrown his authority. The title Rāya-bandī-vimōchaka is of uncertain origin. There is no evidence to show that it was ever borne by Siṅgama I. None of his records has come down to us; and the Velugōtivāri Vamśāvali does not associate the title with his name. It occurs for the first time in an inscription of his son Anavōta I, dated 1369 A.D., at Ayyanavōlu in the Warangal District.² Anavōta I was not a contemporary of Pratāparudra, and he could not have participated in that monarch's wars with the Muhammadans. Therefore, the origin of his title Rāya-bandī-vimōchaka must be traced to some event which must have taken place in his (Anavōta's) own time.

The present inscription, which must have been issued within about a decade or so of the Muslim conquest of Tiling, not only confirms the evidence of Shams-i-Shirāj 'Afif that Pratāparudra died on his way to Delhi but also specifies the locality where his death had taken place as the bank of the river Sōmōdbhavā (verse 20). There is reason to believe that he did not suffer natural death, but put an end, unable to bear perhaps captivity, to his own existence. In the Kaluvachēru grant of the Redḍi queen Anitalli dated 1423 A.D., exactly a century after the fall of Warangal, it is stated that Pratāparudra departed to the world of the gods by his own desire.³ This seems to suggest that he either committed suicide or was slain at his own instance by one of his own followers.

The statement that, on the death of Pratāparudra, the entire Āndhra country passed into the hands of the Muhammadans is corroborated by the evidence of other contemporary and nearly contemporary records. The Rajahmundry mosque inscription of Sālār 'Ulwi bears testimony to the subjugation of the Gōdāvarī delta.⁴ The Futūḥ-us-Salāṭīn refers to the conquest of Kālīṅga and the capture of the forts of Gooty (Anantapur District) and Kanti (Gandikōṭa in the Cuddapah District).⁵ A chāṭu verse in Telugu addressed to Saṅgama II (1356 A.D.), nephew of Harihara I and Bukka I of Vijayanagara, alludes to Muslim occupation of the Nellore District immediately after the rule of Muppiḍi-nāyaka (1323 A.D.).⁶ Although the Āndhra country was thus rapidly subjugated, it did not long remain under Muslim rule. This was mainly due to the oppressive character of their government which is vividly portrayed in the present inscription (vv. 22-27). Unlike other conquerors of India, the Mussalmans were not satisfied with the acquisition of mere political power. They descended on the Deccan not as mere conquerors in search of new countries but as crusading warriors to spread the true faith in the land of the infidels. To stamp out heathenism, and gather all the people within the fold of Islam, they prohibited, as stated in the inscription, the public exercise of Hindu religion, and subjected its followers to inhuman tyranny. The Hindus could not dress well, live well, and appear to be prosperous. Vexatious taxes were imposed on them; their seats of learning were destroyed; their temples were plundered and demolished; and the images of their gods were defaced and broken and used as building material for erecting prayer houses for the faithful. That this is not an exaggeration but genuine truth is proved by independent accounts of the condition of the Hindus in other parts of South India subjugated by the Mussalmans. Gaṅgādēvi, the queen of Kumāra Kāmpaṇa (1340-74 A.D.), presents in her Madhurāvijayam, a harrowing picture of devastation caused by the Muhammadans in the Tamil country. 'The temples in the land', says she 'have fallen into neglect as worship in them has been stopped. Within their walls the frightful howls of jackals have taken the place of the sweet reverberations of the myidāṅga. Like the Turnshkas who know no limits, the Kāvērī has forgotten her ancient boundaries and brings frequent destruction with her floods. The sweet odour of the sacrificial smoke and the chant of the Vēdas have deserted the villages (agrahāras), which are now filled with the foul smell of the roasted flesh and the fierce noises of the ruffianly Turushkas. The suburban gardens of Madura present a most painful sight; many of their beautiful cocoanut palms have been cut down; and on every side are seen rows of stakes from which swing strings of human skulls strung together. The Tāmraparṇī is flowing red with the blood of the slaughtered cows. The Vēda is forgotten and justice has gone into hiding; there is not left any trace of virtue or nobility in the land, and despair is writ large on the faces of the unfortunate Drāviḍas.'¹

Unable to bear the grinding tyranny of the Musalmans, which was set on foot to wipe out their race, religion and culture, the Āndhras as a people joined together and rose up in revolt. Nobles and common folk, if we can trust the evidence of the inscription under consideration, voluntarily flocked to the standard of Prōlaya-nāyaka to rid the country of the barbarous hordes of Islām, which by the decree of an evil fate descended on their native land. The Brāhmaṇas and the farmers of the soil paid, of their own free will, taxes to enable the leaders to carry on the struggle for freedom successfully. It was the first national movement in Indian history; and the Āndhras showed to the rest of India how a people could, by their united effort, expel the enemy and regain their lost freedom.

This was no easy task. Muḥammad bin Tughluq was a powerful monarch, who was cruel and merciless in crushing his enemies. No Hindu ruler of the South, however strong and warlike, was able to resist the irresistible advance of his armies. It is noteworthy that in that deplorable state of utter helplessness, the Āndhras were able to organise themselves into a confederacy, strike a blow to gain independence, and successfully accomplish their purpose.

The information furnished by the grant under review about the Musunūri family is very meagre. It simply states that king Prōla of the Musunūri family was born in the fourth caste; he headed the movement to free the country from the Muslim yoke, and having successfully driven them out, he made Rēkapalli on the Gōdāvari at the foot of the Mālyavanta mountain his capital and entrusted the administration of the country to his younger brothers, such as Kāpaya-nāyaka, devoting himself entirely to the performance of charitable and meritorious deeds. Nothing is known from this grant about Prōlaya-nāyaka's history and career, except that he had many younger brothers, of whom Kāpaya-nāyaka was one. This dearth of information about his family is made up by the Prōlavaram grant of Kāpaya-nāyaka,² dated in the Śaka year 1267, expressed by the chronogram giri-tarka-bhānu, in the cyclic year Pārthivā. As he is also stated in the grant to have belonged to the Musunūri family and as the date of the grant is very near to the date of the fall of Warangal, there need be no doubt that he is identical with Kāpaya-nāyaka, Prōla's brother mentioned in the grant under review. Fortunately for us, the Prōlavaram grant furnishes a short pedigree of three generations of the Musunūri chiefs born in the fourth caste. Pōta, the earliest known member of the family, had four sons, namely, Pōcha, Dēva, Kāma and Rāja. The first three brothers had two sons each, namely, Prōla and Erapōta, Kāpa and Mummaḍīsa, and Immaḍīsa and Dēva respectively; and Rāja, the last son of Pōta, had only one son by name Anavōta, otherwise known as Toyyēti Anavōta, or Anavōta of Toyyēru. From this it becomes clear that Prōla and Erapōta were the only sons of Pōcha, and that Kāpa and others were, strictly speaking, Prōlaya-nāyaka's cousins (that is, his paternal uncles' sons and not his own brothers). Even the Prōlavaram grant does not furnish any information about Kāpaya-nāyaka's grandfather Pōta and his father and uncles, except giving the pedigree. Probably these members of the Musunūri family were ordinary Nāyakas of no great importance and played no part in the momentous history of the period during and after the reign of the last Kākatīya emperor, Pratāparudra. Prōla and his brothers, especially Kāpaya-nāyaka, seem to have been the only members of the family that came to limelight during the period of the Muslim occupation of the Āndhra country immediately after the fall of Warangal by their deeds of valour, and untiring efforts to unite and inspire the people of the country and liberate it from the Muslim yoke. Except Kāpaya-nāyaka none of the other cousins of Prōlaya finds mention either in the grant under review or in the Prōlavaram grant of Kāpaya-nāyaka. Probably they were young and achieved nothing worthy of note during that troublous period, or it may be that some of them lost their lives during those days of anarchy, and the oppressive and autocratic rule of the Mussalmans. It is, however, certain that Kāpaya-nāyaka was the right hand man of Prōlaya-nāyaka, whom he actively supported and co-operated with in every way in waging war on the Mussalmans and expelling them from the Āndhra country.

There is another record, the Kaluvachēru grant of Anitalli,¹ dated in Śaka 1345, (1423 A.D.), that should be taken into account here for a better understanding of the political conditions of the country immediately after the fall of Warangal, even though it is separated in time by nearly a century from the grant under review. It is stated in the introductory portion of the Kaluvachēru grant that after Pratāparudra of the Kākatīya dynasty, the lord of Triliṅga (Telugu country), had gone to heaven by his own will, the whole land was occupied by the Muslims (Yavanamayī jātā); Prōlaya-nāyaka then raised the country that was enveloped in the womb of the Yavanas (Yavan-ōdara-stha) just like Varāha, the boar incarnation of Viṣṇu, who raised the land submerged under water. After Prōlaya-nāyaka went as a guest to heaven at the command of Viśvēśvara, the same grant further says, Kāpaya-nāyaka who was equal in splendour to the sun, ruled his kingdom, and that he whose feet were served by the seventy-five Nāyakas, protected the earth by the grace of Viśvēśvara. King Kāpa is said to have regranted to Brāhmaṇas, the agrahāras taken over by the Turushkas, besides granting them some afresh. After the death of Kāpa, all the Nāyakas subordinate to him are said to have gone to their towns and protected their respective countries.

Prōlaya-nāyaka and Kāpaya mentioned thus in the introductory portion of the Kaluvachēru grant are, no doubt, respectively identical with the donors of the grant under review and the Prōlavaram grant, although their family name Musunūri does not find mention in the latter. The Kaluvachēru grant further makes it clear that after rescuing the Āndhra country from the Muslim yoke, Prōla and after him Kāpa ruled it one after the other and that the seventy-five Nāyakas, the survivors as well as the sons of those that perished in the struggle, acknowledged their supremacy and leadership and served them faithfully.

Let us see if we can spot out any of the Nāyakas that served Prōla and Kāpa and co-operated with them in liberating the country. With the fall of Warangal, the leadership of the coastal region passed from the hands of the kings of the Lunar and Solar dynasties into those of the Nāyakas of the Musunūri family of the fourth caste. Of the other Nāyakas of this period, we already know that Vēma was one. Most of the chiefs, ministers and commanders of the Kākatiya emperor, Pratāparudra, lost their lives in the last fatal siege of Warangal. A few, who had survived the disaster, are known to us from both inscriptions and literature. One of them was Kolani Rudradēva alias Pratāparudra, the mahāpradhāni of Kākati Pratāparudra and son of Gannaya-mantri. He was a contemporary of Anna-mantri and a great Sanskrit scholar and the author of Rājarudriyam, a work on grammar.¹ He was the grandson of Kolani Sōma-mantri, the minister of Kākati Gaṇapatidēva and the subjugator of the māṇḍalikas of Kolanuṣiḍu or Saraṣipuri. It is known from the Śivayōgasāraṁ, a Telugu work on Śaiva theology, written by Gaṇapatidēva of the Kolani family, that Kolani Rudradēva had taken part in the expedition to Kāñchīpura (1315 A.D.) during the reign of Pratāparudra and defeated the five Pāṇḍya chiefs. The statement in the same work that he protected the stone fort of Warangal so as to win the commendation of Kākatiśa (i.e. Pratāparudra) and that he slew some Yavana chiefs, makes it clear that he had taken an active part in the wars with the Mussalmāns. Yet it appears strange that none of his records prior to 1323 A.D. has come to light. An epigraph at Santamāgalūru² in the Guntur District dated in the cyclic year Kṣaya, corresponding to Śaka 1248 (1326 A.D.) in the reign of Kākati Pratāparudra, registers a gift of land to the temple of Gōpinātha of that village by Kolani Rudradēva for the merit of that king on the occasion of a solar eclipse. Pratāparudra, as we know, was already dead by the date of this record. It has therefore to be presumed that Rudradēva, the donor of the record, shook off by that time the Muslim yoke and was free to make at his will a grant of land for the merit of his late master out of respect and devotion.

Another survivor was Anna-mantri of the Beṇḍapūḍi family, the Gajasāhīni of Kākati Pratāparudra, who is described in the Bhīmēśvara Purāṇam of Śrīnātha as the veritable fire in annihilating the Yavanas and the establisher of the throne of the adhyaksha of the Āndhra country.³ The term adhyaksha, which means supervisor or president (and not king), no doubt refers to Prōlaya-nāyaka, and probably to Kāpaya-nāyaka also after him. This title suggests that it was through the successful efforts of Anna-mantri that the selection of the supervisor or the president of the confederacy of nobles of the Āndhra country was made possible and that the president so elected was made acceptable to all the chiefs, who combined together to liberate the country. The title is meaningless, if this is not its import. Thus, the title indicates, in unmistakable terms, the successful and prominent part played by Anna-mantri of the Beṇḍapūḍi family. The same work, Bhīmēśvara Purāṇam, referred to above, informs us that Anna-mantri received the village of Ārēḍu, which was full of many crops grown by the supply of canal waters, as an agrahāra on the occasion of a solar eclipse. There must have been some significance for the special mention of Rudradēva's gift of this village to Anna-mantri. If this solar eclipse, on which the village was granted, was the same as that mentioned in Rudradēva's Santamāgalūru record, cited above, this grant must have been made to Anna-mantri soon after the successful culmination of the war of independence and the liberation of the coastal region, probably in appreciation of his services to the cause of freedom. It is certain that it could not have been possible for Rudradēva to make this grant of a village as an agrahāra while the coastal country was under the iron grip of the Musalmans. These two facts mentioned above, namely, the title borne by Anna-mantri and the grant of an agrahāra to him by Kolani Rudradēva, clearly suggest the important role played by these two aged Āndhra statesmen in the national movement started for the liberation of the Āndhra country.

Siṃgaya-nāyaka, son of Eṛa Dāchā-nāyaka of the Rācheṛla family, was another survivor of the disaster. His father Eṛa Dācha accompanied Muppiḍi-nāyaka in his expedition against the Pāṇḍyas to Kāñchīpura in 1315 A.D. He is said to have "constructed a maṇḍala with arrows and on the dias of the elephants made an offering of the pride of the Pāṇḍya king in the homa fire of his valour and accepted the hand of the bride of victory."¹ His son Siṃgaya also must have followed his father and taken part in the battle of Kāñchī. All his activities described in the Telugu work Velugōṭivāri Vamśāvalī refer to the early post-Kākatīya period.²

Kūnaya-nāyaka, the 'son of Gaṇapati-nāyaka and the grandson of Kēsami-nāyaka was another contemporary of Prōlaya-nāyaka and Kāpaya-nāyaka. Kēsami-nāyaka who is said to have won a victory against the Pāṇḍyas according to the Kōrukoṇḍa inscription of Mummaḍi-nāyaka,³ must have served Pratāparudra and taken part in the expedition against Kāñchī.

The Vīrasāmānta chiefs, Kāpaya-nāyaka and Prōlaya-nāyaka, also must have been the contemporaries of the Musunūri chiefs since the date of the Dōnepūḍi record of Nāmaya-nāyaka, grandson of Kāpa and son of Prōla, is dated in Śaka 1259.⁴

Similarly the Uḍḍirājas of the Solar race, Veṅga-bhūpati, king of Vēṅḡ, and his relations, the Telugu Chōḍa chiefs of Ēruva, Gaṅgādhara and his son Chōḍa Bhaktirāja, especially the latter, co-operated with the Musunūri chiefs in the war of independence.⁵

All the Nāyakas and chiefs mentioned above, besides many others whose names are not known to us, must have formed into a confederacy, acknowledged the leadership of Prōlaya-nāyaka and gathered under his banner to free the country from the foreign yoke. These confederates must have made the mountainous regions and forest areas on the banks of the Gōḍāvarī and the Kṛishṇā their rendezvous to put into action their plans to free the country, first the coastal plain below the Ghats and then the upland country of Tēlaṅgāna above the Ghats.

The various measures concerted by Prōlaya-nāyaka and his associates to liberate the country from the Muslim yoke and how they accomplished their object are totally unknown to us. We know, however, for certain that Madhya-Āndhradēśa, as the coastal Āndhra country was then called, very soon had regained its independence, almost within two or three years after its subjugation by the Muslims. Warangal fell in 1323 A.D.; but the whole of Tēlaṅgāna and Madhya-Āndhradēśa did not immediately come under the sway of the Muslims. There was strong opposition to the Muslim army. However, the coastal plain submitted to the arms of the conquering hordes within a year, that is, by the 10th September, 1324 A.D., the date of the construction of the big mosque at Rajahmundry by Sālār 'Uluf, a servant of Ulugh Khān'.¹ By this date the conquest of the whole of the coastal region of the Āndhra country was complete. Ghiyās-ud-dīn Tughluq's coins discovered in this part of the country, ranging in dates from A.H. 722 to 726² (i.e. from 1322 to 1326 A.D.) were current in that region. However, the year 1325 A.D., the date of the Mallavaram stone record of Vēmā Redḍi,³ marks the turning of the tide, and indicates the beginning, and 1326 A.D., the date of the Santamāgalūru record⁴ of Kolani Rudradēva, the completion of the re-conquest and the final liberation of the coastal region of the Āndhra country. A few inscriptions of the early post-Kākatīya period, of the Telugu-Chōḍas and the Redḍis, however, contain references to their victories over the Muslims in general, and of the particular Muslim chiefs and commanders, in the course of the war. The Penṭapāḍu grant of Chōḍa Bhaktirāja⁵ is a very interesting record in this respect, as it furnishes some valuable information about Prōlaya-nāyaka and a certain Vēṅga-bhūpati. From this we learn that subsequent to the death of the father of Chōḍa Bhaktirāja, who was then a boy, the Āndhra country (avanī-chakram=Āndhrām) was conquered (hṛitam) by the Yavanaḥ (Mussalmans), when the valourous and righteous Prōlaya-nāyaka, son of the heroic Pōchaya-nāyaka, together with his associate Vēṅgarāja left the Vēṅgi vishaya and repaired to a Vana-durga surrounded by hundreds of mountains. They both had reconquered the Āndhra country after putting an end to the entire Turushka horse in battle (Samarē śamit-āśēcha-Turushka-turag-ōkarau, punar-āharatām-ētān-Āndhrām maṇḍalam-arḍhataḥ). After killing all the Yavana commanders (vihāt-ākṣhila-Yavana-vāhini-nāthah), Vēṅga-bhūpati went to heaven (probably was killed in battle), as if to help Indra in battle. This Vēṅga-bhūpati, great-grandson of Brahmā, grandson of Dēva and son of Kāmarāja of the Lunar dynasty, was the maternal uncle of Kāma, alias Bhaktirāja, son of Gaṅgarāja of the Solar dynasty. Consequent on the death of Vēṅga-bhūpati, probably without leaving an heir to his kingdom, Prōlaya-nāyaka installed Bhaktirāja, while he was still a boy as the ruler of his maternal uncle's territory, which seems to have comprised Vēṅgi and its surrounding tracts. Thus Chōḍa Bhaktirāja who, according to the grant referred to above, owed his elevation to the support given to him by Prōlaya-nāyaka, though a boy, killed the infantry and cavalry of the Yavana king (Bhakti-kṣhitipālako= the bālō=pi samgrāma-raṅga-saṁhṛita-yavana-ādhipa-subhata-ghōṣak-āṣṭapāḥ), i.e. king of the Muslims.

³ Nellore District Inscriptions, Vol. III, O. 73. The Mallavaram record registers a grant of land to god Rāghava of Chāḍalavāḍa in the Ongole Taluk of the Guntur District in the Śaka year denoted by the chronogram Śaila (7), Vārdhī (4), and Dyumanī (12), that is, 1247, in the month of Āśvīja on the occasion of a solar eclipse on Thursday (Āśvinasy-āvasānē rāhu-grastē-himāṁśau Suraguru-dīvasē) by Vēmā-redḍi, one of Prōlaya-nāyaka's subordinate associates, who is described in the record as "the very Agastya to the ocean, namely, Mlēcchhas (Mlēcchh-āmbhōdhi-Kalāś-ōdbhavaḥ). The equivalent English date is 7th October, 1325 A.D. The date Śaka 1277 given by Butterworth and Venugopala Chetty in the Nellore inscriptions by assigning the value 7 to Vārdhī, and the occasion as lunar eclipse (himāṁśau) are both wrong as pointed out by Mr. H. K. Narasimhaswami in the course of his article on the Kōḍūru grant of Anavōtā Redḍi (above, Vol. XXV, p. 139 and n. 5). He takes himāṁśu as ahimāṁśu correctly but accepts the value seven given by the authors for the term vārdhī. Hence he finds the date irregular as there was no solar eclipse in the month of Āśvīja in Śaka 1277. So he writes, "The word vārdhī in the chronogram śaila-vārdhī-dyumanī as read by the authors (Butterworth and Venugopala Chetty) mentioned above has therefore to be altered suitably by some such word as tarka to give the numeral 6 in place of 7, and the chronogram equated with 1267." If corrected like this the date becomes regular as there was a solar eclipse in the month of Āśvīja on Thursday in Śaka 1267. But the numerical value generally given to vārdhī is 4 and not 7. Then the Śaka date becomes 1247 and not 1277. In 1247 there was a solar eclipse in the month of Āśvīja on Monday, Śaśidhara-dīvasa, and not on Thursday, Suraguru-dīvasa. The week day does not totally tally, if 1247 is taken. However this Śaka date which is given so clearly in the inscription may be accepted.

Prōlaya-nāyaka, son of Pōchi-nāyaka, is, no doubt, identical with his namesake of the Musunūri family, the donor of the grant under review. The Pentapāḍu grant referred to above, not only confirms the account of the liberation of the coastal Āndhra country furnished by the grant under review, but also reveals to us the names of two of his associates, Vēṅga and Bhaktirāja—the former his elder and the latter a younger contemporary—who played an important part in the war of independence, even though their achievements are unknown to us from that grant. It is probable that Pōchi-nāyaka, the father of Prōlaya-nāyaka, also lost his life during this memorable war. The unnamed vana-durga to which Prōla and Vēṅga repaired, may be safely identified with Rākapalli, the capital of Prōlaya-nāyaka, situated near the Mālyavanta mountain mentioned in the present grant. Nothing more is known about either Vēṅga-bhūpati or his ancestors.

Some more information about the achievements of Chōḍa Bhaktirāja such as the defeat of Boggara and other Muhammadan warriors in the battle near Gulapūṇḍi, his conquest of the demoniac forces of Dabaru-khānu and others near Pedakoṇḍāpurī may be gleaned from the undated Rajahmundry Museum plates¹ of his son, Annadēva-chōḍa.

As has already been stated, the Kaluvachēru grant of Anitalli² also attests to the fact of the liberation of the Trilinga country by Prōlaya-nāyaka and of Kāpaya-nāyaka's rule over it. This grant mentions Vēma of the Paṇṭa community, as one of the seventy-five Nāyakas that served Kāpaya-nāyaka. He was the son of Prōlaya-reḍḍi and the founder of the Redḍi kingdom of Koṇḍaviḍu. Vēma was thus a contemporary and loyal associate of the Musunūri chief, Kāpaya-nāyaka, and probably of his cousin and predecessor, Prōlaya-nāyaka. His Mallavaram stone record,³ dated in Śaka 1247 (October 7, 1325 A.D.), describes him as the very Agastya to the ocean, namely, Mlēcchhas (Mlēcchh-ābhi-Kumbhōdbhava), and indicates the region of his activities during the period of this war. As he is stated to have re-granted the agrahāras to Brāhmaṇas which were formerly taken away by the Muslims, after rescuing them from the enemy, on the banks of the three important rivers, the Gautamī, the Kṛishṇā, and the Brahmakuṇḍi or Kuṇḍiprabhā, i.e. the Guṇḍlakammā, he must have participated in the war against the Muhammadans in the region through which these rivers flow. Vēma's victory over the Yavanas, i.e. Muhammadans, the protection by him of Madhy-Āndhra-dēśa, i.e. the Middle Āndhra country, and the patronage of Brāhmaṇas, are also referred to by his court poet Yaṛṛā-Preggaḍa in his Harivamśam.⁴ He loyally co-operated with the Musunūri chiefs, Prōla and Kāpa, during the early post-Kākatīya period and contributed to the success of the war of independence. It seems strange that the Kaluvachēru grant mentions Vēma as the subordinate of Kāpaya-nāyaka and not of Prōlaya-nāyaka, though his contemporaneity with the latter is indubitable. This was probably due to the fact that the administration of the country was left in the hands of Kāpaya-nāyaka by his cousin Prōla, after the conquest of the country, as has been stated in the grant under review.

This record registers, on the occasion of a lunar eclipse, the grant of Vilasa, the best of the fertile villages of the Kōṇa-maṇḍala on the banks of the Gōḍāvarī, as an agrahāra to Vennaya, the elder brother of Gaṇapay-ārya and son of Annaya, grandson of Vennaya and great-grandson of Annaya of the Bhāradvāja gōtra and Yajur-vēda. The donee is described in high sounding terms as a learned scholar of note and a well-to-do person of charitable disposition. Several yājñukas of blemishless conduct, who had performed many sacrifices with the money given by him, are said to have shone like the flags of fame, etc. When Prōlaya-nāyaka, finding Vennaya to be a dānapātra (i.e., a person worthy of a gift), implored him to receive the gift of a village, he accepted it out of consideration for him, in spite of his aversion to do so. After having received Vilasa as an agrahāra, he, along with his brother, re-granted it to a number of Brāhmaṇas, having divided it into one hundred and eight shares. There were eighty donees in all including the two deties, Gautamēśvara and Kēśava of the village. The list of donees with their names of gōtras, śākhās and the number of shares given to each is appended hereto.

This agrahāra was pre-eminently granted to the Bhāradvāja-gōtrins, who received more than fifty four shares in the village. With the exception of a few, most of the donees were Yajur-vēdins who were proficient in the sacrificial lore, besides being poets, commentators, Vēd-ādhyāpakas and adhyētṛis and experts in śāstras and darśanas. The titles given to many of the recipients indicate the high level of their scholarship and skill in the various sciences and arts. It is unusual to find so many scholars of repute among the donees mentioned in the grants of the late medieval period. It is yet strange and unfortunate that not even one of the works of these reputed scholars, who were not only proficient in ganita, jyōtiṣa, grammar, logic, āgamas, darśanas and vēdānta but were also scholarists and poets, has come to light. It is for future research to unearth their works. It is interesting to find two donees of the Parāśara gōtra and Yajur śākhā who were experts in the guru-tantra. The mention of the guru-tantra in the grant under review shows that even pūrva-mīmāṃsā was studied in the coastal Āndhra country as late as the fourteenth century.

It is also worth noting that the donees, with the exception of a few, were experts in the ritual of sacrifices. This is significant as indicating the revival of Vēdism and Vēdic sacrifices in the early post-Kākatiya period in the coastal region, subsequently to the attainment of independence and the re-establishment of Hindu monarchy. The establishers of independence voluntarily undertook the task of purifying the places in Āndhra (Āndhrān=pradēśān) defiled by the sinful feet of the Muhammadans, by the continuous performance of Vedic sacrifices by Brāhmaṇas, which were stopped during the Mussalman rule (kṛtvā pravṛttān viruta-prasāngān yajñān havir-dhūma-param-parābhik). This revival of sacrifices and Vēdism gave a re-orientation to the then existing religion of the country by giving it a strong Vēdic tinge, and had a profound influence on the Vaishṇava cult of the South.

Of the places mentioned in the grant, viz., Tiliṅga-dēśa, Kōṇa-maṇḍala, Dhilli, Ēkaśilānagara, Rākapaḷli and the gift village Vilasa and its boundaries, Tiliṅga-dēśa is the Telugu country. Its extent conformed more or less to the present Āndhra State. The terms Telugu and Āndhra became synonymous even by the middle of the thirteenth century and both terms were applied indiscriminately to denote the whole country dominated by the Telugu speaking people. Kōṇa-maṇḍala, same as Kōṇa-dēśa, Kōṇa-rāṣṭra or Kōṇa-sthala, is the country ruled by the feudal chiefs of the Haihaya dynasty in the 12th and 13th centuries of the Christian era. It is no doubt the Reṇḍ-ēṇḍula-naḍimi-vishaya of the Nandampūṇḍi grant¹ and probably the Sindhu-yugm-āmtara-dēśa of the Piṭhāpuram pillar inscription of the Velanāṭi king, Prithivīśvara.² The identification of the Sindhu-yugm-āmtara-dēśa with the territory between the rivers Gōḍavārī and the Kṛṣṇā³ by Hultzsch, the editor of the inscription, is of course, erroneous. According to the late Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu who re-edited the Nandampūṇḍi grant in the journal of the Telugu Academy,⁴ the terms sindhu-yugm-āmtara is nothing but a Sanskritisation of reṇḍ-ēṇḍula-naḍimi-vishaya of the Nandampūṇḍi grant, and the rivers that enclose this territory, are the Gautaṇī, the main one of the seven-branches of the Gōḍavārī, and the Vainatēyaṇi, another of its branches. So this reṇḍ-ēṇḍula-naḍimi-vishaya in his opinion, corresponds to the present Amalapur Taluk. This Kōṇa-sthala or Kōṇa-dēśa finds mention in the Naḍupūru grant of Anavēmā-reḍḍi,¹ and in the Tottaramūḍi plates of Kāṭayavēma.² This territorial division retains its name even today and the whole territory between the Vasishṭha and the Gautami branches of the Gōdāvari is known as Kōṇṭ-sīmā at the present day. Dhilli is the well-known city of that name, the capital of the Indian Republic, which was the capital of the Slave kings, the Pathāns and the Tughluqs in the medieval period. Ēkaśīlā-nagara is the present Warangal, the headquarters of the district of the same name in the Andhra State. Rēkapalli is identical with the village of the same name in the Bhadrachalam Taluk of the East Godavari District. Of the villages mentioned in the grant only Vilasa, the village granted and its boundary village of Śirupalle and Māṅgāṁ are identifiable. They are in the Amalapur Taluk. Śirupalle is the present Śiripalle, and Māṅgāṁ, the present village of Māgāṁ. Vilasa, which is a few miles distant from Amalāpuram, retains its old name to the present day. The rest of the boundary villages are not to be found now.

It is stated that the grant was made on the occasion of a lunar eclipse; but neither the Śaka-year or the cyclic year nor the month in which the lunar eclipse occurred is specified. Hence the precise date of the grant cannot be definitely ascertained. However, the period in which it was given, can be approximately calculated. The grant was certainly subsequent to 1325 A.D. (Śaka 1247), the earliest date known for the establishment of Hindu independence in the coastal region. It is unfortunate that none of the records of Prōlaya-nāyaka with the exception of this grant has come to light. In this respect his brother, Kāpaya-nāyaka was really more fortunate. Besides his Prōlavaram grant³ already adverted to, dated in Śaka 1267, Pārthiva, there are two of his lithic records, the Gaṇapēśvaram inscription⁴ dated in Śaka 1268, Vyaya, and the Pillalamarri inscription⁵ dated in Śaka 1279, Hēmaḷambī. Of these, his Prōlavaram grant is the earliest as is evident from its date. But the country of Tiling, in fact, the whole of Southern Hyderabad to the south of Warangal, was already in the possession of the Hindus by 1339 A.D., the date of the Bādāmi record of Harihara I,⁶ the founder of the kingdom of Vijayanagara. Hence, Kāpaya-nāyaka was surely in possession of Warangal before 1339 A.D. He conquered it probably by about 1336-37 A.D. from the Mussalmans.⁷ As the Muslim historians mention Kāpa, Kabā-nand, or Kabā-Nāyand, who is no other than Prōlaya-nāyaka's brother Kāpa Nīḍu or Kāpaya-nāyaka, as the leader of the rebellion of the Hindus of Warangal in Telaṅgāna, it seems likely that his brother Prōlaya-nāyaka was already dead, by that time. If not so, he must himself have been mentioned as the leader of the rebellion. If this supposition is accepted, the record under review must have been granted between 1325 and 1336-37 A.D., possibly about 1330 A.D.

The editors of the present record take this opportunity of expressing their gratitude to Sri N. Lakshminarayana Rao, for lending for consultation the impressions of the following unpublished inscriptions: (1) the Śrīśailam epigraph of Kācheya-reḍḍi, (2) the Mallavaram inscriptions of Prōlaya Vēmā-reḍḍi, and (3) the Penṭāpāḍu grant of Chōḍa Bhaktirāja. They also offer thanks to Dr. V. Raghavan, Professor of Sanskrit, University of Madras for revising the Romanised text of the inscription.

TWO PANDYA INSCRIPTIONS FROM DINDIGUL—PLATE I

(from a Photograph)

No. 31—TWO PANDYA INSCRIPTIONS FROM DINDIGUL

H. K. NARASIMHASWAMI AND K. G. KRISHNAN, OOTACAMUND

The two epigraphs edited below come from the villages Rāmanāthapuram and Perumbullī in the Dindigul Taluk of the Madurai District, Madras. Rāmanāthapuram is about 6 miles due east of Dindigul, a railway station on the Tiruchirapalli-Madurai line of the Southern Railway and Perumbullī is about 9 miles due north east of Rāmanāthapuram. The Rāmanāthapuram record was copied as early as the year, 1905¹ and the Perumbullī inscription, recently during the collection tour in February 1956.² Both the epigraphs are engraved on boulders which show on their engraved faces clear signs of having been dressed for the purpose. The Rāmanāthapuram record with bold deep-cut characters is remarkably well preserved while the Perumbullī epigraph which is comparatively less deeply engraved and is on the flat top of a boulder is exposed to the effects of the weather, which has resulted in some damage to the writing in certain crucial passages of the text. Nevertheless, the main theme of the record can be substantially reconstructed. The two epigraphs together furnish certain interesting details which help us to understand some important chronological sequences in the early Pāṇḍyan history that were hitherto only conjectured. Both the epigraphs are written in simple chaste Tamil, a feature that is characteristic of the early lithic records of this dynasty. Palaeographically both the epigraphs may be assigned to about the middle of the 9th century. However, a close comparison of their alphabet would show that the Rāmanāthapuram inscription could be assigned to a period at least about three decades earlier than the Perumbullī record. This, it will be seen, conforms perfectly with the conclusions arrived at in the sequel.

The Rāmanāthapuram inscription consists of 11 lines which occupy a rectangular space 3'-4" × 2'-1" of the boulder. Crude sketches of a fish, a bow and a lamp-stand are engraved on the proper right side of the inscription while on the proper left only a lamp-stand is depicted opposite the one on the right side. The fish is no doubt the emblem of the Pāṇḍyas. The bow by its side, the emblem of the Chēras, apparently signifies the Pāṇḍya overlordship over the Chēras.

As for its contents, the epigraph records that Parāntaka-Ppaḷlivēḷāṇ alias Nakkam-Puḷḷaṇ who accompanied king Māraṇ-Jaḍaiyaṇ on an expedition to Iḍavai in the Chōḷa country, constructed a tank called Puḷḷaṇ-ēri after his own name, (providing it) with revetment and the main outlet. But some work having still remained over, Puḷḷa-Nakkaṇ completed it. That (i.e., the main) work was done by the stone-mason Vaḍugaṇ-Kūṟṟaṇ. His son having completed the remaining work, Puḷḷa-Nakkaṇ gave the latter as kāṇi two pieces of land irrigated by the village tank in the two divisions of Paḷḷi-nāḍu, each sowable with a paḍakku of paddy.³

The Perumbullī record (in 18 lines) commences with the mention of a place by name Kuḷumbūr and of the chief Paḷlivēḷāṇ who probably fell fighting, apparently in an encounter at this place.

³ The passage has been construed in another way also. It is said that "Nakkam-Puḷḷaṇ granted to him as kāṇi, land in the two divisions of the Panni (for Paḷḷi-nāḍu and paḍakku paddy per field watered through the channel from the headworks of this tank." South Indian Temple Inscriptions, Vol. II, No. 1000.

Paḷlivēḷān's son, Parāntaka-Ppaḷlivēḷān is stated to have served in the campaign at Iḍavai. The latter's son, Aṇḍavēḷān Kuṟumbar-Ādittan Pulla-Nakkaṇ served Mahārājar Kō-chChāḍaiya-Mārar. He was associated with the king in the campaigns at Viḷiṇam, Iḍavai and Tirukkuḍamūkkū. Pulla-Nakkaṇ's son was Paḷlivēḷān Nakkam-Pullaṇ whose activities are then described in greater detail. In this connection are mentioned Siṃhaḷarāja, Sāḷagrāma, a Varaguṇa-mahārāja who is described to have killed a huge elephant whose name appears to be Ayirāvaṇam and lastly Sennilam. Paḷlivēḷān Nakkam-Pullaṇ is stated to have led nineteen¹ elephants to the battle field at the last mentioned place. Unfortunately the portion of the inscription describing the events connected with these places and persons is so damaged that it is difficult to make out an accurate picture of the events. The record then recounts how the king honoured Nakkam-Pullaṇ highly by bestowing on him gifts for his services and conferring on him the title Kumaraṇ. Then Nakkam-Pullaṇ and his son are stated to have made a gift of land to a person whose name ends with Tirumalai. The wording of the concluding part which again is badly damaged, seems to be couched somewhat on the same lines as the Rāma-nāthapuram epigraph and probably contained the details of the extent of land granted to the donee.

To begin with the donor of the Perumbulli inscription and his son, it will be apparent that Paḷlivēḷān Nakkam-Pullaṇ served with distinction Varaguṇa-mahārāja. Leaving for a later discussion the services rendered by this chief to the king, we may attempt to establish the identity of this Varaguṇa-mahārāja. Nakkam-Pullaṇ's father, Aṇḍavēḷān Kuṟumbar-Ādittan Pulla-Nakkaṇ served under Kō-Chchāḍaiya-Mārar.² If the kings Kō-Chchāḍaiya-Mārar and Varaguṇa mahārāja were related as father and son, as they indeed appear to, then Śāḍaiya-Mārar may be identified with Śrīmāra Śrīvallabha who, according to the Sinnamanur Plates of Rājasimha³ was the father of Varaguṇa II. The fact that the Viḷiṇam and Kuḍamūkkū campaigns of Śrīmāra Śrīvallabha mentioned in this charter and those of Pulla-Nakkaṇ in which he is said to have served Śāḍaiya-Mārar in the Perumbulli record are identical establishes the identity suggested above. The Perumbulli inscription mentions, in addition, another campaign, namely that of Iḍavai. The Sinnamanur plates, it may be noted, do not mention this campaign.

The predecessor of Aṇḍavēḷān was Parāntaka-Ppaḷlivēḷān. The Perumbulli inscription mentions him merely by his title while the Rāmanāthapuram record gives, in addition, his name as Nakkam-Pullaṇ. The former epigraph refers to his expedition to Iḍavai while the latter specifies that he accompanied king Māraṇ-Jāḍaiyaṇ on an expedition to Iḍavai in the Chōḷa country, obviously the same as the Iḍavai of the Perumbulli inscription. The Iḍavai campaign of Nakkam-Pullaṇ alias Parāntaka-Ppaḷlivēḷān with Māraṇ-Jāḍaiyaṇ was in all probability different from that of his son Pulla-Nakkaṇ with Śāḍaiya-Māraṇ. Māraṇ-Jāḍaiyaṇ, the overlord of Parāntaka-Ppaḷlivēḷān Nakkam-Pullaṇ may easily be identified with Varaguṇa (I), the father and predecessor of Śrīmāra-Śrīvallabha, the grandfather of Varaguṇa II and Parāntaka Vīraṇārāyaṇa Śāḍaiyaṇ all of whom are mentioned in the Larger Sinnamanur plates.³

Parāntaka-Ppaḷlivēḷān's father is referred to merely as Paḷlivēḷān. This was perhaps only his title similar to that of his son or grandson. Probably his name was Pulla-Nakkaṇ, judging from that of his grandson. Paḷlivēḷān is associated with the name of Kuḷumbūr but the details writing on the rock here has peeled off.¹ However, the events of the period as could be gleaned from the Ceylonese Chronicle and the contemporary sources enable us to have a fair idea of the relationship that must have prevailed between the Pāṇḍya, Simhala and the Pallava kings of the period and therefore of the nature of Nakkam-Pullan's act in question. The Ceylonese chronicle *Cūlavamsa*² while re-counting the contemporary events says that as a reprisal to the Pāṇḍya king's invasion and plunder of Ceylon during the reign of Sēna I and in response to an appeal from 'a prince of the Pāṇḍu family'³ reported to have been ill-treated by the reigning king, Sēna II sent a commander with enormous forces, who not only recaptured all the treasures but also enthroned the prince after defeating the Pāṇḍya king who died of the wound received in the battle. The above account has been construed by scholars in different ways. One view holds that the Pāṇḍu prince referred to in the Chronicle was Ugra Pāṇḍya and that Varaguna II was the ruling king.⁴ Another view identifies the Pāṇḍu prince with Māyā-Pāṇḍya and the ruling king with Śrīmāra-Śrīvallabha.⁵ There is also a view, recently expressed, which identifies the Pāṇḍu prince with Varaguna II himself and the contemporary Pāṇḍya king with Varaguna's father Śrīmāra Śrīvallabha.⁶ Yet another view presupposes the existence of a prince otherwise unknown, who was installed on the Pāṇḍya throne by the Simhala king after the latter defeated Śrīmāra.⁷ The wording of the record, mutilated as it is, in respect of the relationship that prevailed between the Pāṇḍya and the Simhala kings,⁸ seems to lend support to the late Mr. Venkayya's view that it might have been Varaguna II who sought and obtained the Simhala king's help.⁹ However, the inscription does not give us any clue as to the circumstances that necessitated Varaguna to seek the help of the Simhala king, if ever he did so. He was no pretender to the Pāṇḍya throne but was its legitimate heir, being the elder of the two sons of his father and predecessor Śrīmāra; nor is there any indication in the copper-plate charters or lithic records of the family that there was ever a dissension either between the father and the sons or among the brothers themselves, to postulate that the aggrieved prince who sought the help of the Simhala to regain his throne might have been Varaguna. We are not in a position to visualise a situation when Varaguna, the legal heir to the Pāṇḍya throne was overlooked and ill-treated by the king and therefore sought the help of his father's erstwhile enemy to regain his throne.¹⁰ Who then was the Pāṇḍya prince who was supported by the Simhala king? What was Varaguna's position with reference to the

² The pedigree of the Pāṇḍya kings as made out by the two inscriptions proves the correctness of the scheme suggested by Prof. Sastri in his Pāṇḍyan Kingdom, p. 40 ff.

² Cūlavamsa, Chapters I and II, Gieger's translation, pp. 138 ff.

⁶ This view has failed to take into account the statement in the Cūlavamsa that the prince who was supported by the Ceylonese was ill-treated by the Pāṇḍya king. There is no evidence whatsoever that Varaguna was ever ill-treated by his father, the ruling king. All these views were expressed by Mr. Venkayya; A. R. Ep. 1908, p. 56; cf. Ey. Zeyl., Vol. V, pp. 103-5.

contemporary rulers? That Varaguṇa was a contemporary of Nripatuṅga is proved by the Tiruvadi inscription¹ dated in the 18th year of the reign of the Pallava king. The Bahur Plates² dated in the 8th year of Nripatuṅga refer to the aid rendered by the Pallava king to a Pāṇḍya. The passage yat-prasādāj-jitā sēnā Pāṇḍyēna samarē purā of the record suggests that the Pāṇḍya could have been no other than the one who figures in the Tiruvadi inscription, i.e. Varaguṇa II and that the Pallava by whose favour the other (i.e. Pāṇḍya) obtained an army formerly was his ally.³ What could have been the occasion for the Pallava to have gone to the aid of the Pāṇḍya? In all probability it was the occasion of the Ceylonese intrusion on behalf of the 'ill-treated' Pāṇḍu prince who sought their aid. Nakkam-Puḷḷaṇ claims to have led a contingent of elephants to Śeṇṇilam to the succour of his liege Varaguṇa-mahārāja. The record is silent about the source of this reinforcement. Could it have been the favour of the Pallava? Granting that the arguments advanced above are admissible, the event that appears to have culminated in Varaguṇa-mahārāja regaining his throne may be reconstructed thus: an unknown Pāṇḍya prince, obviously a pretender appealed to the Siṃhala king Sēna II for help; the Singhalēse army, under its commander met the Pāṇḍya king Śrīmāra in battle, wounded him and having set up the Pāṇḍu prince on the throne, was marching back to its country. At this juncture Varaguṇa-mahārāja, the legitimate heir, aided by Pallava Nripatuṅga with a contingent of elephants led by Nakkam-Puḷḷaṇ, routed the pretender as well as the Singhalēse⁴ and regained the throne. It appears thus that this might be the event recorded in the Perumbulli epigraph and therefore the act of Nakkam-Puḷḷaṇ towards the Siṃhalarāja in the context of the situation discussed could hardly have been friendly. Indeed it could not have been otherwise in view of the continued loyal relationship that existed between the members of this family and the Pāṇḍya kings for four generations.

Among the places mentioned in the records viz. Kuḷumbūr, Iḍavai, Viḷiñam, Tirukkuḍamūḷḷu, Śālagrāmam, Śeṇṇilam, and Paḷḷi-nāḍu, the identity of Kuḷumbūr or Śeṇṇilam is still unknown. Śeṇṇilam is one of the places where the Pāṇḍyas are known to have fought with their foes on more than one occasion. Māḡavarman, the father of Kō-chChāḍaiyaṇ Raṇadhīraṇ fought here against an unnamed enemy.⁵ Parāntakaṇ Vira Nārāyaṇaṇ Śāḍaiyaṇ, the successor of Varaguṇa II is also known to have shown his prowess in archery in the battle-field of Śeṇṇilam.⁶

As for Iḍavai two different identifications have been proposed so far. One of them identifies the place with Iḍavai in Maṇṇi-nāḍu on the basis of an inscription of a later date which gives also the other name of the village as Śōlāntaka-chaturvēdimaṅgalam.⁷ The other identifies it with Iḍaiyāṇṇumaṅgalam in the Lalgudi Taluk, Tiruchirapalli District on the basis of nearly contemporary inscriptions copied from the region.⁸ Both the identifications have got their own merits and drawbacks. There are numerous places called Idayātti, Idayāttimaṅgalaṁ, Idaiyāttūr, Idaiyār in Tanjore District and Idaiyār and Idaiyāttankuḍi in Tiruchirappalli District, all of which are situated along the border land lying between the traditional (sometimes shifting) frontiers of the Chōla and the Pāṇḍya countries. Until all these places are explored, it is very difficult to locate Idavai beyond doubt for, the names of each one of these villages can be shortened to the identical form of Idavai. Viliṇam has been identified with a fishing village of the same name in South Travancore.¹ Tirukkuḍamūkkū is the well-known name of Kumbakōṇam in Tanjore District. The epithet Aṇḍavēlaṇ applied to Pulla-Nakkaṇ is evidently a shortened form of Aṇḍanāṭṭu-vēlaṇ and means the vēlaṇ of Aṇḍa-nāḍu. An idea of the spread of this territorial division may be had from inscriptions² copied from the area around Virupākshi, Periyakōṭṭai, Tēvattūr and Porulūr in the Palani Taluk, Madurai District which refer to these places as situated in Aṇḍa-nāḍu. Other places that are known to be included in Aṇḍa-nāḍu from inscriptions copied outside this area are Perumaṇālūr, Chellūr, Tirumāḍavanūr, Kuvalaiyasinganallūr alias Mēyūr Tiruppattūr, Perumūr and Tirutturutti.³

Sālaigrāmam may be identified with Sālaigrāmam of the Paramagudi Taluk in Ramanathapuram District in view of the fact that this village lies on the route which an army from Ceylon would have to take on its march towards or retreat from the Pāṇḍya capital. It may be noted here that the god of the place is called Varaṅga-Iśvara in the inscriptions of Śaḍaiya Māraṇ and Vira-Pāṇḍya.⁴ The village is called Sālaigrāmam in those inscriptions.

The Rāmanāthapuram inscription records that the gift lands lay in the two divisions (kūṟṟu) of Paḷli-nāḍu. The village Perumbalḷi, referred to as Perumbalḷi in another inscription⁵ on a rock lying on the bund of a large lake at the outskirts of the village perhaps lent the name Paḷli-nāḍu to the tract around it.

No. 32—RAJGHAT INSCRIPTION OF BHIMADEVA

D. C. SIROAR, OOTACAMUND

Some years ago, old impressions of a large number of Indian inscriptions were received back from Germany for examination in the office of the Government Epigraphist for India. While examining these estampages, I found amongst them two unsatisfactory impressions of a badly preserved stone inscription with 'Rajghat, Benares' written on both of them. A letter bearing the date, 23rd January 1884, was found pinned with the impressions. It was written by a gentleman of Banaras apparently to the address of the then Secretary of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Calcutta. The two impressions were sent to the Society for study under cover of this letter. It is gathered from the letter that the inscribed stone had been in use as a Chabūtarā (i.e. a seat or platform) in a small house apparently in the Rājghāṭ area of Banaras and that, on the demolition of the house for the construction of the Rajghat Road, it was acquired by the writer who was ready to send the stone to Calcutta if the Secretary of the Society so desired. Unfortunately no information is available as to whether the Asiatic Society of Bengal acquired the stone and made any attempt to study the inscription either from the original or from the impressions received. I published a small note on the epigraph in the Journal of the Bihar Research Society, Vol. XI, Part 2, 1954, pp. 92 ff., in the hope that some information might be available as regards the whereabouts of the inscribed stone. But no light has as yet come from any quarter. In the letter referred to above, the name of the signatory looks like Hamschandra; but it has been suggested to me that he was probably none other than the well-known Bharatendu Harischandra of Banaras.

The internal evidence of the inscription suggests that the stone was originally embedded in the wall of a Śiva temple on the bank of the Ganges in the Rājghāṭ area of Banaras. The writing covers an area about 18½ inches in length and 8½ inches in height. There are only ten lines, the last of which covers a little less than half the length of the other lines. The letters are between ¼" and ½" in breadth and about ⅓" in height.

The characters belong to the Dēvanāgarī alphabet of about the twelfth or thirteenth century A.D. and generally resemble those of the epigraphs of the Gāhaḍavālas of Banaras and Kanauj. As will be seen from our discussions below, however, the inscription does not appear to be much earlier than the middle of the twelfth century. The language is Sanskrit and, excepting a small namaskāra passage at the beginning, the whole of the inscription is written in verse. Indeed it contains a small prastāvi in seven stanzas in different metres. The orthography of the record exhibits a tendency to use anusvāra instead of class nasals, although final m has often been used at the end of the first or second half of stanzas. There is no date in the inscription either in the Vikrama Saṁvat which was in popular use in the age and area in question or in the regnal reckoning of any ruler. The record does not mention any king by name, though the hero of the prastāvi is stated to have been a minister of the king of the country of Gauḍa or Gauḍa-Varēndra in the western and northern regions of Bengal.

The inscription begins with a Siddham symbol followed by the passage namah Śivāya. Then follow the seven stanzas of the prastāvi.

Verse 1 introduces a person who was a member of the council of the hereditary ministers (maul-āmātya-sabhā) of the king of Gauḍa, whose name is not mentioned. The name of the officer is doubtful, but seems to be Maṅgadēva. He is further stated to have been the Mahāsāndhivigrahika (i.e. minister for war and peace) of his master. Verse 2 speaks of the said officer's son whose name was Chaṅgadēva. He is stated to have received the title 'Rāṇaka of the Kingdom' which, as the epigraph says, was very difficult to obtain. There is little doubt that, like his father, Chaṅgadēva was also a servant of the Gauḍa king who honoured him with the said title; but the king is not even referred to in the stanza.

Verse 3 introduces Bhīmadēva who was the son of Chaṅgadēva and the hero of the prastuti. Like his grandfather, Bhīmadēva is described as the Mahāsāndhivigrahika of the lord of the Gauḍa country. Verse 4 praises the military exploits and liberality of Bhīmadēva in a vague way. In the first half of the stanza, the poet says that one of the battle-fields, where Bhīmadēva destroyed his enemies' elephant force and which was bristling with arrows, narrated, as it were, the story of his valour and that, because it disliked its repetition (i.e. another battle fought on itself), it failed to appreciate fully his great prowess which was exhibited in battles elsewhere. According to the second half of the verse, in bestowing gifts to the numerous supplicants, Bhīmadēva used the waters of the rivers so profusely that those rivers completely dried up while new streams began to flow on the dry earth. The next stanza (verse 5) refers to one of his significant achievements. It is stated that he saved the kingdom of Gauḍa-Varēndra after it had been immersed in the waters of the ocean that was the forces of the king of the Rāyāri lineage and the king of Kalinga. In this connection, the condition of the Gauḍa-Varēndra kingdom, apparently under the rule of Bhīmadēva's master, is compared with that of an old vessel in the state of sinking in waters. Verse 6 refers to the object of the eulogy which is to record the construction of a temple of the god Bhava (i.e. Śiva) by Bhīmadēva on the bank of the Avimukta-nadi. The purpose of Bhīmadēva in building the temple is stated to have been to cause wonder in the minds even of his enemies. The last stanza (verse 7) says that the top of the temple was adorned with a golden jar resembling āditya-kācha, probably meaning the jewel called sūryakānta.

The inscription raises certain interesting problems. The first of these relates to the date of the record and the second to the identity of Bhīmadēva's master, i.e. the king of Gauḍa or the Gauḍa-Varēndra kingdom, whom he served as the minister for war and peace. The third problem refers to the circumstances leading to the construction of the temple at Banaras by Bhīmadēva far away from the kingdom of Gauḍa or Gauḍa-Varēndra and the fourth to the invasion (probably a joint invasion) of the Gauḍa-Varēndra kingdom by the forces of a king of the Rāyāri dynasty and a king of Kalinga, from which Bhīmadēva claims to have saved it. The fifth problem is the identity of the two enemies of Gauḍa-Varēndra.

As to the date of the record, the palaeography does not appear to suggest a period earlier than the twelfth century. The form of the initial vowel i in our inscription has resemblance with the fourth stage in its final formation as illustrated by Ojha in his charts showing the development of the Dēvanāgarī and Bengali alphabets¹ as well as with its form in his illustrations from two inscriptions² of 1264 and 1273 A.D. respectively. R. D. Banerji traced the earliest occurrence of a somewhat similar form of i in the Bodhgaya inscriptions of Aśōkachalla, which belong to the thirteenth century.³ But we know that the Gauḍa-Varēndra country in the western and northern areas of Bengal was conquered by the Turkish Musalmans about the beginning of the thirteenth century while it appears that the Gauda-Varēndra ruler served by Bhīmadēva and his father and grandfather belonged to an indigenous royal family flourishing in the area in question before the Muslim conquest. It is extremely doubtful if the Muslim conquerors of the country thought it wise to appoint ministers from among the newly conquered people shortly after their conquest. Moreover the Muslim conquerors of India would have scarcely tolerated the construction of a Śiva temple by their servant, which is stated to have been built to inspire wonder and admiration in the minds of Bhīmadēva's enemies. It may of course be suggested that the names of the masters of Bhīmadēva and his ancestors have not been mentioned in the inscription because they were servants of foreign rulers. But the above considerations lead us to think that the record was engraved before the Muslim conquest of Eastern India though probably not much earlier than the middle of the twelfth century.

The second and third problems are very difficult to tackle. For the middle of the twelfth century, the description 'lord of Gauda (or Gauda-Varēndra)' seems to suit the ruler of the Pāla dynasty. The Pālas originally held sway over the major part of Bengal and Bihar and they are known to have enjoyed the title Gaudēśvara. With the establishment of the Varman dynasty at Vikramapura in the present Dacca District in the latter half of the eleventh century South-eastern Bengal (called Varga) was permanently lost to the Pāla empire and, shortly after the middle of the twelfth century, Vijayasēna, founder of the Sēna dynasty of Rāḍha in South-East Bengal, occupied practically the whole of Bengal including its western and northern parts. Henceforth Pāla rule was confined to the southern areas of Bihar. The Pāla king Madanapāla was ousted from Gauda-Varēndra (i.e. the western and northern regions of Bengal) shortly after the date of his Manahali plate issued from Rāmāvati (a city probably situated near modern Gaur in the Malda District) in the king's eighth regnal year corresponding to c. 1151 A.D.¹ But the Pāla kings were called Gaudēśvara even when Gauda no longer formed a part of their dominions.² Madanapāla ruled in the period c. 1144-62 A.D. and is known to have recovered the western part of Bihar which had been lost to the Gāhaḍavāla king Gōvindhachandra (1115-55 A.D.) who had his capital at the city of Banaras.³ The Patna-Monghyr region was under Gāhaḍavāla occupation from about 1124 to 1146 A.D. but appears to have been reoccupied by Madanapāla about 1146 A.D. It is not impossible that the Pāla king Madanapāla, who had some success against the Gāhaḍavālas of Banaras, was Bhīmadēva's master. Bhīmadēva's presence at Banaras may thus relate to a temporary occupation of Banaras by the Pāla king. Unfortunately there is no indication in the record of Pāla success against the king of the Banaras region. But the reference to the enemies may suggest that Bhīmadēva did not visit Banaras in a private capacity on pilgrimage or was not settled at the holy place after retirement.

In connection with the construction of the Śiva temple at Banaras by Bhīmadēva, minister of the king of Gauda or Gauda-Varēndra, we have also to think of the possibility of the work being done by him without visiting the place. We have instances of kings and queens making grants in favour of distant temples, far away from their dominions in some cases, without moving from their capital and of even ordinary people securing the merit of pilgrimage to holy places through proxies without personally visiting them.⁴ It was therefore not altogether impossible for Bhīmadēva to have built a temple at the great tirtha of Banaras without himself visiting the place. Since Bhīmadēva's presence at Banaras is not easily explainable in the present state of insufficient information, this is probably a better solution of the problem. The absence of any mention of the king of Gauḍa in the inscription may go in support of this alternative. The want of a date in the Vikrama Saṃvat may suggest that the record was drafted in the home province of Bhīmadēva and that of one in the regnal reckoning of Bhīmadēva's master may have been due to the fact that the document was meant for an area which was outside his dominions although the latter system of dating was popular in Eastern India in the early medieval period.

The fourth and fifth problems are also difficult to solve. In the first half of the twelfth century A.D. the mighty Gaṅga king Anantavarman Chōḍagaṅga (1078-1147 A.D.) extended his dominions up to the river Hooghly and he is also stated to have been a friend of the Sēna king Vijayasēna who sometime afterwards overthrew Pāla rule from the western and northern parts of Bengal.¹ Thus he may have come into hostile contact with the Pālas. But it has to be admitted that there is no reference to war between Chōḍagaṅga and his Pāla contemporary in the records of the Gaṅgas. The allusion to the invasion of the Gauḍa-Varēndra country by the king of Kaliṅga no doubt reminds us of the claim of Gaṅga Narasiṃha I (c. 1238-65 A.D.) to have defeated the Yavanas (Muslims) of Rāḍhā and Varēndrī and the account, in Minhāj-uddīn's Tabaqāt-i-Nāsiri, of the invasion of Lakhanavati (the capital of the Muslim kingdom in Bengal comprising Rāl, i.e. Rāḍha, and Barind, i.e. Varēndra or Varēndrī), situated near modern Gaur in the Malda District, by the forces of the Rāl of Jājunagar (i.e. Gaṅga Narasiṃha I) on the 13th of the month of Shawāl in the Hijrī year 642, corresponding to the 14th March 1245 A.D., under Sāmantarāya, the general and son-in-law of the Gaṅga monarch.² But it is difficult to think that Bhīmadēva was a servant of Malik Tughril Tughān Khān (1236-45 A.D.) of Bengal as in that case it will have to be believed that his grandfather was appointed as minister for war and peace by the Muslims almost immediately after the establishment of the Muslim kingdom in Bengal. The reference to the council of the hereditary ministers of the Gauḍa king of which Bhīmadēva's grandfather was a member seems to suggest a long-standing kingdom and possibly not a newly founded one.

The identification of the king of the Rāyāri dynasty is equally uncertain. The only person named Rāyāri known to the student of East Indian history is of course king Rāyāridēva Trailōkyasiṃha who was the grandfather of Vallabhadēva Śrīvallabha of an inscription of Śaka 1107 (1185 A.D.).³ Whether the expression Rāyāri-vaṃśa-naranātha indicates Rāyāridēva's son Udayakarma Nihāṅkasiṃha cannot be determined, although the inscription referred to above describes Rāyāridēva, son of Bhāskaradēva, as Bhāskara-vaṃśa-rāja-tilaka. The inscription, however, does not refer to any struggle of Udayakarma Nihāṅkasiṃha with the king of Gauḍa, though his father Rāyāridēva Trailōkyasiṃha is stated to have come into conflict with the forces of the Vaṅga country. This dynasty probably ruled over the Sylhet region between Bengal and Assam.

The geographical names mentioned in the inscription are Gauḍa or Gauḍa-Varēndra and Avimukta-nadī. Varēndra or Varēndrī (Barind of the Muslim writers) was the name of North Bengal. The earliest reference to Varēndra or Varēndrī-maṇḍala is found in Sandhyākaranandin's *Rāmacharita*⁴ composed about the end of the eleventh century. But Gauḍa is an ancient name used to indicate not only a city and the country around it but also East India in general.¹ In our inscription, it is used in the sense of a territory in the western areas of Bengal. Gauda was originally the name of the land between the Padmā and Burdwan. Generally speaking therefore Gauda and Rāḍha (Rāl of the Muslim writers) were identical although the latter was originally the name of the land on both the banks of the river Ajay in South-West Bengal. This land as well as its chief city was often also called Rādhā. Avimukta was a well-known holy place in the city of Banaras.² It was apparently the name of the Rājghaṭ region of Banaras and the Avimukta-nadī was no doubt the Ganges at Rājghaṭ.

No. 33—HOWRAGHAT PLATES OF BALAVARMAN III OF KAMARUPA, YEAR 5

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

About the middle of September 1956, I received a circular issued by the Director of Historical and Antiquarian Studies in Assam on the discovery of a new copper-plate grant of king Balavarman of the Mlechchha or Sālastambha dynasty of Kāmarūpa or Prāgyōtisha. The inscription was originally in the possession of Mr. Prakash Chandra Acharya of Uttar Barbil, Howraghat, Mikir Hills, from whom it was secured by Mr. Ganesh Chandra Phukan, Deputy Commissioner, United Mikir and North Cachar Hills, through a gentleman named M. M. Chakravarti. The Department of Historical and Antiquarian Studies of the Government of Assam obtained the plates through the courtesy of Mr. Rupnath Brahma, one of the Ministers of the Assam Cabinet. It was stated in the circular that Dr. Pratap Chandra Chaudhury, Deputy Director of Historical and Antiquarian Studies, was engaged in deciphering the inscription. Dr. Chaudhury has since published the inscription in the Asam Sāhitya Sabhā Patrikā, Vol. XV, No. 3, pp. 187-94.

On receipt of the circular, I contacted Dr. Chaudhury and tried to secure the plates on a few weeks' loan for study. Unfortunately the attempt was a failure. My endeavour to secure a set of inked impressions of the inscription also ended equally in a failure. But, thanks to Dr. Chaudhury, in March 1957, I received from him a set of photographs of the inscribed faces of the plates together with one showing the set of the plates hanging from the ring bearing the seal. The photographs were taken after having rubbed chalk over the letters of the writing on the plates. In December 1957, I visited Gauhati. Dr. Chaudhury then kindly allowed me to prepare inked impressions of the plates.

The set consists of three copper plates each measuring about 10 in length and 6½ in height. They are strung on a copper ring, the ends of which are soldered beneath a bronze seal, its counter-sunk surface being divided into two parts by a thick demarcating line. The upper one of these two parts bears the figure of an elephant to front, while the following legend in three lines occupies the space beneath the line of demarcation :

- 1 Svasti śrīmān-Prāgyōtish-ādhip-ā[nva]-
- 2 yō mahārājādhirāja-śrī-Va(Ba)-
- 3 [la]varmadēvaḥ [||*]

The seal closely resembles that attached to the Nowgong plates¹ of the same ruler who issued the charter under study. Similar seals are also found with the copper-plate grants of other rulers of the Kāmarūpa or Prāgyōtisha country. Of the three plates of the set, the second bears writing on both the obverse and the reverse, the other two plates being inscribed only on the inner side. Of the four inscribed faces, the first three contain fourteen lines of writing each, while the fourth contains only twelve lines. The engraving of the letters is neat and careful; but the preservation of the writing is not quite satisfactory. Some letters here and there are damaged while most letters in the last line on the inner side of Plate I are more or less completely rubbed off.

¹ JASB, Vol. LXVI, Part I, 1897, pp. 285 ff., Plates XXXV-XXXVII. The seal is illustrated in Plate XXXVII. See also P. N. Bhattacharya, Kāmarūpaśāsanāvalī, pp. 71 ff., containing illustration of the inscription on Plate I only.

The characters belong to the Gaudīya or East Indian alphabet of the ninth or tenth century A.D. As regards palaeography, orthography, language and style, the inscription closely resembles the Nowgong plates referred to above. With reference to palaeography, it may be pointed out that the difference between ḍ and ṛ is slight and that the two letters are sometimes indistinguishable. The inscription employs both the Dēvanāgarī and Bengali types of anusvāra, the former indicated by a dot or globular mark above the consonant and the latter by a globular mark above a curved or slanting stroke placed at the right side of the consonant; but it is interesting to note that the latter has been almost invariably used only when final m is required by the language. This fact seems to support the suggestion¹ that the Bengali type of anusvāra developed out of the older sign of final m. In our transcript of the inscription, the Bengali type of anusvāra has therefore been regarded as a final m. Final t occurs many times in the inscription and final n thrice in lines 28, 38 and 39. B is indicated by the sign for v. Of the initial vowels, the epigraph uses a in lines 4, 14, 22, 25, 26, 28, 31, 44 (twice) and 48; i in lines 5, 12 and 15; u in lines 11 and 54 (twice), and ri in line 45. The sign of avagraha is once used unnecessarily in line 11. The danda used to indicate the end of the first half of a stanza and the left member of the double danda employed at the end of a verse have in many cases a protrusion about the middle towards the left.

The language of the inscription is Sanskrit and it is written in a mixture of prose and verse. The introductory part in lines 1-36 contains 25 stanzas followed by a description of the donor of the grant in prose. Lines 36-43 contain the donor's order addressed to his subordinates and others in respect of the grant made. This section is also in prose. But the following section in lines 44-52 contains a versified description of the family of the Brāhmaṇa donee and refers to the grant that was made by the king in his favour. This is followed in the concluding section of the record in lines 52-54 by a description of the boundaries of the gift land in prose. The first two of the sections, referred to above, in lines 1-36 are identical with the corresponding parts of the Nowgong plates (lines 1-33) with slight orthographical differences. Another difference is the unnecessary repetition of verse 2 in the present record. There are some passages in the first section in verse, which are undecipherable in either of the two records but can be restored in one with the help of the other. Considerable influence of Kālidāsa's Raghuvamśa is noticed in many of the stanzas. Some of the parallel passages have been quoted in the notes on the text of the epigraph.

The orthography of the inscription is characterised by the occasional use of the class nasal in the place of anusvāra (cf., however, words like rañjana in line 10) and reduplication of consonants like g, n, t, m and v in conjunction with r. Final m has often been wrongly conjoined with the following v and ś has been used for śh in several cases. Among other words wrongly spelt, we may notice tasmim for tasmin in line 9, chchhattraṁ for chhattraṁ in line 21, punsān for pumsām in line 28, siṁghāsana for siṁhāsana in line 29, yajūnshi for yajūmshi in line 45, etc. As regards orthographical differences between the Nowgong plates and the present epigraph, attention may be drawn to such expressions as niṣsāraṁ (line 27) and *jīvitam pu*² (line 28) spelt in the other epigraph as nissāraṁ and *jīvitam=pu*² respectively although we have cases like astan=gatishu (line 13-14) and *bhūs=sur-ā*² (line 45) in the present record also.

The date of the charter is quoted in line 51 (verse 30) as the fifth regnal year of king Balavarman without any other details; but the occasion of the grant is stated to have been the Śakr-ṭhāna festival which takes place on Bhādrapada-sudī 12. The period of Balavarman's reign cannot be definitely determined, although the Tezpur inscription³ of his great-grandfather is dated in the Gupta year 510 corresponding to 829 A.D., and, allotting a quarter of a century per generation approximately, we may suggest that the year 904 A.D. fell in Balavarman's reign. Thus Balavarman's rule may be roughly assigned to the period 885-910 A.D. and the present inscription to a date about the end of the ninth century.

The inscription begins with a Siddham symbol which is followed by two maṅgala stanzas. Verse 1 prays that the lustre of Rudra (Śiva) may be for the peace of the earth, while verse 2 seeks that the waters of the Laubhitya, called a vāridhi or sea,¹ may destroy the sin of men. Verse 3 introduces Naraka who was the son (born of the goddess Earth) of Upēndra (Viṣṇu) in his Boar incarnation and was a friend of the demons. Verses 4-6 describe the career of Naraka. It is stated that he carried away Aditi's ear-rings and discredited Mahēndra (i.e. her son, the king of the gods) thereby, that he made his abode at the city of Prāgyōtisha in Kāmarūpa, and that he was killed by Murāri (Viṣṇu) with the discus in a battle that was fought at his capital, i.e. Prāgyōtishapura (Śūṭitapura according to the Purāṇas). Verses 7-8 state how Naraka was succeeded on the throne by his son Bhagadatta whose successor was his younger brother Vajradatta.

Verse 9 introduces Sālastambha who is stated to have belonged to the dynasty of Naraka, Bhagadatta and Vajradatta, and to have become king after a number of rulers of the said family had passed away. In this connection, it is interesting to note that verses 9-10 of the copper-plate grants² of Ratnapāla of the third dynasty (i.e. the Brahmapāla family) of the rulers of Kāmarūpa or Prāgyōtisha offer a different and apparently more reliable account of the pedigree of Sālastambha. According to these, Sālastambha, who was a Mlēcchha king or a ruler of the Mlēcchhas (Mlēcchhādhipati), obtained the kingdom of the kings of the Nāraka dynasty as a matter of chance (vidhi-chalana-vaśāt) and that, Tyāgasimha the twentyfirst king of Sālastambha's line having died without leaving an heir, the subjects (prakṛitayak) thought that a member of the Bhauma (i.e. Nāraka) dynasty alone was suitable to them and therefore made Brahmapāla their king. This seems to suggest that Sālastambha was really a ruling chief, probably of Tibeto-Burman origin, under the latest ruler of the Bhauma-Nāraka dynasty of Kāmarūpa and that he succeeded in occupying his master's throne under circumstances which are difficult to determine without further light on the subject. It is clear, however, that Sālastambha's descendants claimed descent from Naraka; but the claim may have been based either on mere fiction or on a matrimonial relation Sālastambha might have contracted with the rulers of the Bhauma-Nāraka family.

Verse 10 of our inscription says that, amongst the descendants of Sālastambha, Harjara became king after others like Pālaka and Vijaya had passed away. The names of all the rulers of the Sālastambha family, especially those who flourished between Sālastambha and Harjara or Harjaravarman, cannot be determined. We have seen how the charters of Ratnapāla, who belonged to the third or Brahmapāla dynasty of Prāgyōtisha rulers, ascribe 21 kings to the dynasty of Sālastambha. Of these, they mention by name only Sālastambha (the founder of the line), Tyāgasimha (the last king of the family) and Vīrabastambha who was one of the rulers flourishing between Sālastambha and Tyāgasimha. The damaged and fragmentary copper-plate grant³ of Harjaravarman (second quarter of the ninth century) from Haiyungthal, appears to have quoted the names of most of his predecessors beginning from Sālastambha, although the section cannot be fully and satisfactorily deciphered. According to the reading and interpretation of the said section offered by Pandit P. N. Bhattacharya,⁴ Sālastambha was succeeded by his son Vijaya who was followed successively by Pālaka, Kumāra, Vajradēva, Harshavarman, Balavarman (son of Harshavarman) and the son of the younger of the two brothers named Chakra and Arathi. Bhattacharya also suggested that Āratha (son of Arathi) was succeeded by Prālabha (father of Harjaravarman), the name of both of whom were read in the Tezpur plates¹ of Vanamālarman (son of Harjaravarman), Prālabha being represented there as the successor of Śrīharsha (i.e. Harshavarman) of the Śālastambha dynasty. But as we have suggested elsewhere,² Vanamālarman's charters really speak of Śālabha as the successor of Śrīharsha and of his younger brother Arathi as the father and predecessor of Harjaravarman. We have also suggested that Chakra was possibly another name of Śālabha and that the name of Harshavarman's son Balavarman is omitted in Vanamālarman's record probably because he was succeeded by Śālabha after a short rule. It seems that Balavarman, son of Harshavarman, was overthrown by Śālabha and that the usurper and his descendants did not recognise his claim to the throne. Thus we have the following names of the rulers of the Śālastambha dynasty from Śālastambha to Harjaravarman: (1) Śālastambha, (2) Vijaya, son of Śālastambha, (3) Pālaka, (4) Kumāra, (5) Vajradēva, (6) Śrīharsha or Harshavarman, (7) Balavarman, son of Harshavarman, (8) Chakra alias Śālabha, (9) Arathi and (10) Harjaravarman, son of Arathi. It is difficult to determine whether some other kings of the family also ruled between Śālastambha and Harjaravarman and whether their names are either omitted from or undecipherable in the Haiyungthal plate.

Verses 12-25 of the inscription under study describe the three kings Vanamāla (verses 12-14), Jayamāla alias Virabāhu (verses 15-18) and Balavarman (verses 19-25), the donor of the charter, as respectively the son, grandson and great-grandson of Harjara. It is stated in verses 16-17 that Vanamāla, who was a devotee of the god Mahēśvara or Śiva and built numerous palatial structures beautified with paintings, starved himself to death after having bestowed the white umbrella adorned with two fly-whisks (i.e. the insignia of royalty) on his son Jayamāla (called Virabāhu in verse 18), while verse 18 states that Virabāhu (i.e. Jayamāla) married Ambā (who gave birth to the donor of the grant under study) some time after his accession to the throne. Verse 21 shows that Jayamāla Virabāhu installed his son Balavarman on the throne when in course of time he was incapable of carrying on the administration owing to the attack of an incurable disease. Verse 25 says that Balavarman's ancestral kaṭaka or capital stood on the Lauhitya.

King Balavarman of Kāmarūpa, who issued the charter under study, was the second king of that name in the Śālastambha family. Since, however, there was another Balavarman (about the beginning of the fifth century) in the Bhauma-Nāraka dynasty of Kāmarūpa³ and Śālastambha is represented in the records of his successors, even if wrongly, as a descendant of Nāraka, Balavarman, donor of the present grant, may be designated as Balavarman III. The king of the same name, who was the son of Śrīharsha or Harshavarman, may be called Balavarman II, while Balavarman of the Bhauma-Nāraka dynasty may be regarded as Balavarman I.

The names of the three monarchs mentioned in verses 12 ff., when added to the list of the ten rulers from Śālastambha to Harjaravarman, would give us only thirteen kings of the Śālastambha dynasty. Only two other rulers of this family, viz. Vīrahastambha and Tyāgasimha, are known from Ratnapāla's charters referred to above. Thus we know the names of fifteen out of the twentyone rulers of the dynasty. Since Tyāgasimha's successor Brahmapāla seems to have ruled about the beginning of the eleventh century, most of the six rulers, whose names are missing, appear to have ruled in the period of about a century intervening between Balavarman III (about the close of the ninth and the beginning of the tenth century) and Tyāgasimha (beginning of the eleventh century). But a few of them may have also ruled between Śālastambha and Harjavarman. The name of Vighrahastambha resembles that of Śālastambha and no other ruler of the family is known to have borne a name ending in the word stambha. He may therefore have been a son or grandson of Śālastambha and should probably be placed earlier in the genealogy.

The object of the charter is to record the grant of a piece of land, yielding two thousand measures (probably called Drūpa) of paddy, made by Paramēśvara Paramabhaṭṭāraka Mahārājādhirāja Balavarmadēva when he was staying at Haḍappēśvara. As we have shown elsewhere,¹ the real name of the capital of the Śālastambha kings was Haḍappēśvara and not Hārūppēśvara as is generally believed. The piece of land was singled out from the locality called Bappadēva-pāṭaka which was situated in the viśaya or district of Vārāsē-pattana. The royal order in respect of the grant was addressed to the people of the countryside together with the Brāhmaṇas and the employees of the offices of the district as well as to the king's subordinates and officers. The list includes the rājans (ruling chiefs), rājñīs (queens of the ruling chiefs), rānakas (smaller chiefs) and officers as well as to the rājanakas (minor chiefs or landlords), rājaputras (sons of the chiefs) and rāja-vallabhas (courtiers), who might be associated with the administration of the area in question at any time. It is interesting to note that the words rājanaka and rānaka are both used in this section of the record, even though actually rānaka appears to be a modification of rājanaka (also spelt rājānaka and rājanayuka). There was probably some difference in the meaning of the two words as used in early medieval Assam. The land was granted together with the vāstu (homestead land), kḍāra (low land), sthala (high land), jala (waters), gō-prachāra (pasture land) and avakara (probably, mounds) as well as with the income from hastibandha (entrapping elephants), naukābandha (anchoring boats) and chaurōddharana (catching thieves). It was given as it stood within its demarcated boundaries together with the space above it and was exempted from all troubles associated with the daṇḍapāśa (police tax), uparikara (extra cess or tax on temporary tenants) and utkhātana (fears or troubles) arising from other causes, and also from the grazing of elephants, horses, camels, cows, buffaloes, goats and sheep.

The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Śyāmadēva-bhaṭṭa. It is stated (cf. verses 26 ff.) that there was a learned Brāhmaṇa named Garga who belonged to the Aupamanyava gōtra and the Kāṇva śākhā of the Yajurveda. His son was Gaḥhiṣṭhira who was the father of Śyāmadēva, the donee of the charter. The name of the donee's mother was Garbhāsvarikā. Verse 29 states that the king made the grant for the merit of his parents in the fifth year of his reign. The occasion of the grant was the abda-pūjā performed in connection with the Śakra-ōṭthāna festival. The passage tath-ātmanah (i.e. 'also of his own') in this stanza may be taken with puṇyāya or with abda-pūjā. Śakra-ōṭthāna means the raising of the banner (dhvaja) of Śakra or Indra, which is a festival observed on the 12th day of the bright half of the month of *Bhādra*² although in early times it may have been held on the 8th of the bright half of the months of Praushthapada (Bhādra) and Āśvina.³ The real significance of the expression abda-pūjā, literally 'worship of the year or cloud', in this connection is not clear. It may, however, refer either to the anniversary of king Balavarman's birth or accession to the throne, or merely to the 'annual worship' of the Śakra-dhvaja.

The boundaries of the gift land as enumerated in lines 52-54 are: the stūpa or mound belonging to Vaikaṅka in the east; a Śālmali tree in the south-east; a Tripatraka tree in the south; a Kadamba tree in the south-west ; a Vētasa tree standing on the border of a piece of cultivated land in the west ; an Aśvattha tree standing on a stūpa belonging to Nīśi in the north-west ; a Jambū tree in the north ; and a Suvarṇadāru tree in the north-east.

Among the geographical names mentioned in the inscription, we have Lauhitya-vāridhi, Kāmarūpa, Prāgyōtishapura, Haḍappēśvara-kaṭaka on the Lauhitya, Vārāsē-pattana-vishaya and Bappadēva-pāṭaka. Lauhitya is another name of the river Brahmaputra. Prāgyōtishapura, capital of the Kāmarūpa country, is supposed by scholars to have been situated near the site of the present town of Gauhati on the Brahmaputra. Kāmarūpa, also called Prāgyōtisha, was the country around Gauhati. In the seventh century A.D., it extended up to the Karatōyā in the west,¹ although neither the course of the Karatōyā nor the other boundaries of the country in the early medieval period can be determined. The traditions recorded in late medieval works like the Yōginītantra can scarcely be regarded as throwing sufficient light on the point.² Verse 25 of our record speaks of king Balavarman's ancestral kaṭaka (i.e. capital) which is stated to have been situated on the Lauhitya or Brahmaputra. The name of the city is given as Haḍappēśvara-kaṭaka in the prose passage immediately following. This city has been identified with Dah Parbatiya near Tezpur, headquarters of the Darrang District of Assam. The gift land was situated in the locality called Bappadēva-pāṭaka which belonged to the district called Vārāsē-pattana. The location of these places cannot be determined with any amount of certainty, although the name of Vārāsē-pattana reminds us of that of the Barasai range of hills about 50 miles to the south-west of Silchar.

No. 34—MUDHOL PLATES OF PUGAVARMAN

P. B. DESAI, DHARWAR

In May 1949, this set of copper-plates was received for examination in the office of the Government Epigraphist for India from Shri R. S. Panchamukhi, the then Director of Kannada Research, Dharwar. The plates were originally in the possession of a shepherd belonging to a village in the present Mudhol Taluk of the Bijapur District. They were handed over to Shri V. C. Garwad, District Judge at Mudhol, who passed them on to Shri Panchamukhi in 1943. Shri Panchamukhi has edited the inscription on the plates in his Progress of Kannada Research in Bombay Province, 1941-46, pp. 12 and 69 ff. and plate IV. The epigraph is briefly noticed in the Annual Report on Indian Epigraphy for 1949-50, p. 2 and registered as No. 7 of Appendix A.¹ I edit the record here with the kind permission of the Government Epigraphist for India.

The set comprises two copper-plates held together by a circular ring with seal. The rims of the plates are not raised. The first plate is engraved on the inner side only, while the second on both the sides. The plates measure each $5\frac{3}{4}$ " in length, $2\frac{1}{8}$ " in breadth and $\frac{1}{16}$ " in thickness. The ring which is $2\frac{1}{4}$ " in diameter passes through a circular hole, $\frac{3}{8}$ " in diameter. The ends of the ring are soldered into the bottom of a thick oval seal having a rim. The seal which measures $\frac{7}{8}$ " by $\frac{3}{4}$ " contains in the sunken surface a standing human figure with its right hand raised.² The ring and the seal together weigh 9 tolas and the whole set weighs 25 tolas.

The epigraph is on the whole in a fair state of preservation, although a few letters in lines 1, 7 and 8 are damaged. It contains 12 lines of writing, which are distributed evenly on the three inscribed faces of the plates. Line 8 continues about half the distance, the remaining space being left blank probably due to its narrowness. No punctuation marks are used anywhere in the writing. Some letters are omitted through oversight while engraving, as in lines 1, 6 and 11. The writing contains a few other scribal errors.

The characters belong to the southern class of alphabet with archaic traits, having in a majority of instances small hollow boxheads. They may be compared for general resemblance with some records of the early Kadamba family.³ The initial vowels u and ai are met with in lines 10 and 7 respectively. Medial i and ī are not distinguished, both represented by a circle at the top of the letter. Jihvāmūliya occurs once in brahmanah=krama in line 2.

¹ The inscription has also been noticed by Dr. D. C. Sircar in Prof. P. Sundaram Pillai Com. Vol., 1957, pp. 96-97.

³ For example, the Bannahaḷi plates of Kṛṣṇavarman II (above, Vol. VI, Plate facing p. 18) and the Halsi plates of Harivarman (Ind. Ant., Vol. VI, Plate facing p. 32).

In regard to orthography the consonant following r is doubled as in Pūgavarmmaṇā (line 6) and bahubhir=va° (line 10). An exception may be noted in °garbha (lines 3-4). Anusvāra is changed to class nasal in sandhi in the expression uktañ=cha (line 10).

The language is Sanskrit and the composition excepting one verse each at the beginning and at the end is in prose.

The inscription commences with the expression svasti. This is followed by a verse in praise of the lotus-feet of Brahmā, i.e., the Creator, which are described as worthy of being worshipped by the pious persons, brilliant like the shining gold and capable of causing the good as well as bad things of the three worlds. This verse is new and not found in other records.

Next is introduced the victorious prince Pūgavarman, the first son of Śrī-Prithivivallabha-mahārāja who performed the Hiranyagarbha-mahādāna and the Agnishītoma, Agnichayana, Vājapēya and Āśvamēdha sacrifices. Pūgavarman is said also to have borne the appellation Raṇa-shītātura. This expression is defective and its correct form may be suggested as *Raṇasthātṛi*¹ which means 'firm in battle'. It is comparable with the name Yudhishṭhira.

The object of the epigraph is to register a second² gift, apparently of land, in the village of [Ma]kēṭaka to the deity Vārāhidēva by Pūgavarman for securing good results in this world as well as in the next. The gift land was divided into thirty-three shares, to be enjoyed, apparently by different beneficiaries whose names, however, are not specified. The charter concludes with the usual verse extolling the merit of a pious gift.

Not many inscriptions are available for reconstructing the early history of the Chālukya house of Bādāmi. For the reign of Pulakēśin I, we have the Bādāmi inscription,³ dated 543 A.D., which has placed the history of this family on a firm chronological footing. His successor Kirtivarman is represented through only two charters of his reign bearing identical dates.⁴ The present inscription which may be assigned to this dim period of Chālukya history makes a welcome addition to our knowledge.

It must be admitted at the outset that there are some difficulties in ascertaining the family to which the issuer of the present charter belonged. But a critical examination of it shows that the difficulties are only superficial. A prominent feature that impresses upon our mind on a perusal of the document is its unconventional nature. The invocation is unusual. The following praśasti does not contain the name of the family to which Pūgavarman belonged, as one naturally expects. The other familiar expressions in the Chālukya praśasti referring to the Mānavya gōtra, the Seven Mothers, etc., are also conspicuous by their absence. All these objections, however, are set at rest if we critically examine the description of the king whose son issued the present grant.

⁴ The two records are the Vaiṣṇava cave inscription at Bādāmi and the Goḍachi plates. See Bomb. Gaz., Vol. I, Part II, p. 346, and above, Vol. XXVIII, pp. 59 ff.

This was Śrīprithivīvallabha-mahārāja. As Vallabha, Śrīvallabha, Prithivīvallabha and Śrīprithivīvallabha are all identical, being recognized specially as Western Chālukya appellations and the title Mahārāja conveying the status of a paramount sovereign is almost invariably and for the first time applied to Pulakēśin I in all the formal charters of the family,¹ we are fully justified in identifying Śrīprithivīvallabha of our charter with Pulakēśin I. This identification is further strengthened by his description as the performer of Āśvamēdha, Agnishōma, Agnichayana and other sacrifices; for, Pulakēśin I, as known from many records of the family, performed all these sacrifices and a few more.² The mention of Āśvamēdha in this connection is an overwhelming evidence in favour of this identification, since, except for a few Kadamba rulers whose consideration is out of question in the present context, no other monarch in this part of the country is ever credited with such a supreme achievement.

This much about the positive side of the question.

In regard to its negative side, it has to be noted that the non-mention of certain ideas and expressions in the prāśasti can in no way be cited as contrary evidence. As I have shown elsewhere,³ the Chālukya prāśasti was still in the formative stage at this time and not yet standardized. The conventional prāśasti of the Chālukya house is met with for the first time in the charters of Pulakēśin II, commencing with the Hyderabad grant.

Now who is this Pūgavarman? He was not known previously and is introduced for the first time by the present charter. His description as agra-sūnu shows that he was the first and the eldest son of Pulakēśin I. As he is not endowed with royal titles we have to surmise that he was governing the province as his father's deputy and issued the charter in this capacity. This leads to another surmise that Pulakēśin I was ruling at this time. If the identification of [Ma]kōṭaka suggested in the sequel is correct, Pūgavarman's authority might have extended over the present Gulbarga District.

It is well-known that Pulakēśin I had two more sons, the elder of whom, viz. Kīrtivarman, succeeded his father on the Chālukya throne. In his Goḍachi plates, Kīrtivarman is referred to as his father's favourite son. In the Mahākūṭa inscription of Maṅgaḷīśa who succeeded Kīrtivarman, it is said that Pulakēśin I had two sons and that Kīrtivarman was the senior. These statements do not preclude the possibility of the existence of yet another son being the seniormost. This possibility is borne out by the present record. The fact that Pulakēśin I was succeeded by Kīrtivarman can be explained on the assumption of Pūgavarman's demise before his father.⁴

Assuming that Pulakēśin I started his independent rule a few years prior to the date of the Bādāmi inscription, we may place the commencement of his reign roughly about 535 A.D.⁵ His ² Bomb. Gaz., op. cit., p. 344; above, Vol. XXVII, pp. 8-9, and n. 1. As in the Bādāmi inscription of Ś. 465, the present record also describes the king as Hiranyagarbhasambhūta, i.e. one who performed the Hiranyagarbha-mahādāna.

reign ended about 567 A.D. With an approximate margin of a few years before the last date, it may be suggested that the present charter was issued by Pūgavarman about 560 A.D. From his description as Raṇasthāṭṭi, i.e. 'firm in battle', it may be gathered that Pūgavarman assisted his father in the wars which the latter had to wage for the establishment of the Chālukya kingdom.

The name of the deity Vārāhidēva which means 'lord of Vārāhi,' i.e. god Varāha, is interesting.¹ The roundabout way of naming the god may possibly be explained on the ground that the goddess Vārāhi, who was one of the Seven Mothers, was held in high reverence and enjoyed an independent status, not being considered merely a female counterpart of Varāha. It is well known that the Chālukyas considered themselves specially favoured by the Seven Mothers and their partiality to Varāha or the Boar-incarnation of Viṣṇu is evidenced by their acceptance of the figure of this god for their family emblem. This affords the earliest instance of the devotion to the god Varāha in the Chālukya family.

There is only one place-name mentioned in the record and it is Maḷakūtaka. This village seems to be identical with the present Maḷkhēḍ in the Gulbarga District, Mysore State. Maḷkhēḍ became the renowned capital of the Rāshtrakūṭas of the Dekkan during later centuries and it is mentioned in their records in the Sanskritised form Mānyakhēṭa. It is referred to as Mānyakhēḍa in a record² of 993 A.D. In the inscriptions of the locality as well as of the villages near about Maḷkhēḍ, ranging from the 11th to the 16th centuries, the place is spoken of as Maḷikēḍa and Maḷeyakhēḍa.³ If the above identification is correct, this would be the earliest allusion to the place, indicating its existence at least from the sixth century.

It would be interesting to review here the contents of an early stone inscription which may similarly be attributed to the Chālukya house of Bādāmi. The epigraph⁴ is incised on a boulder to the left of the images of Durgā and Gaṇēśa near the fourth gate of the fort at Gooty in the Anantapur District, Andhra State. The characters are archaic Kannaḍa of about the sixth or seventh century, the language being an admixture of faulty Sanskrit and old Kannaḍa. It reads as follows :

2 Śrī-Vallabha-yuvarājē-

3 na Kāsyapa-vamśēna kārā-

4 pithā Bhaṭṭaraki

5 [pra]mā-rūpēna keydadu

6 [śrī]-paḍime⁵ [||*]

² B. K. Coll., No. 170 of 1933-34.

"This sacred image of the Supreme Goddess was caused to be made according to the standard form through (the artist who was) a descendant of Kāśyapa by the illustrious Yuvarāja (i.e. crown-prince) Śrīvallabha, a piercing javelin to all the evil spirits."

As we have noted earlier, Śrīvallabha was specially a Western Chālukya appellation. Hence, although the name of the crown-prince who was responsible for the setting up of the image¹ in question, is not specified, it goes without saying that he belonged to the Chālukya house of Bādāmi. It is difficult to surmise who this Chālukya prince could be, as he might be any one from Pulakēśin I to Vikramāditya I. But it is possible to think that this prince might have set up the image of the goddess while he was governing the area of Gooty as the viceroy of the ruling king.

The name of the artist or sculptor who actually shaped the image according to the standards prescribed in the texts on the subject (pramā-rūpēṇa) is not mentioned. Instead, it is merely said that he belonged to the lineage of Kāśyapa. This is interesting, for Kāśyapa was a renowned artist (śilpakāra)² and the present sculptor seemed to take more pride in mentioning the former as his ancestor than disclosing his own name.

No. 35—BARLA INSCRIPTION OF THE TIME OF PRITHVIRAJA III, V.S. 1234

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

The black stone slab bearing the inscription under study was discovered some years ago by Mr. U. C. Bhattacharya, Curator of the Rajputana Museum, Ajmer, at the village of Barla about 7 miles to the east of the city of Ajmer. Mr. Bhattacharya read a short note on the importance of the date of the epigraph at the Jaipur Session of the Indian History Congress in December 1951 and this note was later published with an illustration of the record in the Proceedings of the Session, pp. 326-28.

The inscription is fragmentary as some letters at the end of all the lines are lost. Fortunately however, the number of the lost syllables in most of the lines can be easily determined as the major part of the record is in verse. The right hand side of the inscribed slab of stone is broken away. The extant part measures about $16\frac{1}{2}$ inches in length, 9 inches in height and 1 inch in thickness. The length indicated is that of the central section of the slab since the pieces broken away from the upper and lower right corners have made a sort of angle about the middle of its right side and the length of the top and bottom of the slab is respectively $11\frac{1}{2}$ inches and $14\frac{1}{2}$ inches. There are 13 lines of writing on the stone, of which line 8 is the longest (about $15\frac{1}{2}$ inches leaving a margin of slightly less than an inch in the left); but a portion of the slab containing four aksharas has broken away from the end even of this line. The number of lost syllables is higher in all the other lines of the epigraph, the loss being generally more considerable in the line that stands at a greater distance from line 8 either above or below it. Thus, amongst lines 1-7, the number of lost syllables is 16 in line 1, and 7 in line 7. Considering the size of the letters (about $\frac{1}{2}'' \times \frac{1}{3}''$), the four lost letters at the end of line 8 appear to have covered a space about $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches in length and there was probably a margin of a little less than an inch (as in the left hand side of the slab) beyond the last akshara of the line. Thus the length of the inscribed slab was originally a little above 19 inches.

The characters, which are neatly and carefully engraved, belong to the Dēvanāgarī alphabet of about the twelfth century A. D. and closely resemble those of other contemporary epigraphs discovered in the area in question, such as the Ajmer inscription recently edited in the pages of this journal.¹ The same is also the case with its orthography which shows the tendency to use class nasals instead of anusvāra and anusvāra instead of the final m at the end of the halves of verses. The avagraha has been used twice in line 5, and ḍ has been written by the sign for v. The number of errors is small. The language of the record is Sanskrit and its composition exhibits a mixture of prose and verse. There is a short maṅgala passage in prose at the beginning of the epigraph in line 1, which is followed by a prastāvi in 13 stanzas in different metres engraved in lines 1-12. The verses are consecutively numbered, the numerical figures at their end being placed between a double and a single danḍa. A few sentences at the end of the record in lines 12-13 refer to the author and the engraver of the eulogy, the date of the construction of a step-well which was its main subject as well as a prayer that the said well may last for ever. The date is quoted as V. S. 1234, Chaitra-sudi 4, which, as will be seen below, is not easily reconcilable with certain known facts of history.

Out of the 13 stanzas of the eulogy, verse 1 contains the adoration to a deity. Verses 2-4 describe the ruling king and his family, verses 5-6 an officer or a subordinate of the king and his family, and verses 7-9 the hero of the eulogy and his family. The remaining stanzas deal with the object of the prastāvi, which, as already indicated above, is to record the construction of a step-well.

The inscription begins with the Siddham symbol followed by a symbol for the pranava. Next comes the passage namaḥ Śivāya which is followed by verse 1 in which the protection of the god Varuṇa is invoked. The invocation to Varuṇa, god of the waters, suits the occasion as the subject of the composition is essentially the excavation of a step-well and we have other instances of the kind in inscriptions recording the construction of wells.¹ Verse 2 introduces the hero named Chāhamāna, the mythical progenitor of the Chāhamāna family of Rajputs, as born of Virōchana, i.e. the sun-god. This interpretation of the word virōchana, which means both 'the sun' and 'fire', is suggested by the fact that the Prithvirājaviṇaya composed by Jayānaka in the last decade of the twelfth century as well as Nayachandra-sūri's Hammīramahākāvya, composed a century later, represents the eponymous Chāhamāna as sprung from the Sūrya-maṇḍala, while the tradition of the progenitors of the Paramāra, Pratihāra, Chaulukya and Chāhamāna families being born from the sacrificial fire-pit of the sage Vasishṭha on Mount Abu was unknown even as late as the fourteenth century.² It seems that the damaged second half of verse 2 referred to the Chāhamāna family as originated from the eponymous hero Chāhamāna mentioned in its first half. This is suggested by the first half of verse 3 which introduces the birth of king Vighraharājadēva (i.e. Vighraharāja IV or Visala) with the word iha no doubt meaning 'in this family', and another word which seems to be kramāt (i.e. in the regular course of succession), the name of the family being apparently indicated previously.

The extant part of verse 3 suggests that Vighraharāja IV left his throne for his brother's son Prithvibhaṭa (i.e. Prithvirāja II) after having ruled the earth (i.e. the Chāhamāna kingdom with its capital at Śākambharī) for a long time. It is interesting to note that the inscription passes over Aparā° or Amaragāṅgēya, son and successor of Vighraharāja IV.³ This was probably because Aparā° or Amaragāṅgēya was overthrown after a short rule by Prithvirāja II whose successors were reluctant to recognise the former's rule and were eager to represent Prithvirāja II as the direct successor of Vighraharāja IV. An inscription from Dhod is reported to contain a reference to the success of Prithvirāja II against the king of Śākambharī, who seems to have been none other than Aparā° or Amaragāṅgēya.⁴ Verse 4 states that a later king of the family, named Prithvirāja (i.e. Prithvirāja III), succeeded another king whose name was . . . ra. This damaged name was no doubt Sōmēśvara who was the father and predecessor of Prithvirāja III and the uncle and successor of Prithvirāja II.

The next two stanzas (verses 5-6) speak of a Brāhmaṇa family belonging to the Kauśika gōtra and hailing from a flourishing agrahāra called Atiśākha. Verse 6 mentions Yaśōrāja who seems to have been the son of Khamadēva or . . . khamadēva of this family. The real significance of the introduction of this family is not clear; but it seems that Yaśōrāja was a subordinate or an officer of the Chāhmāna king and that the locality where the step-well was excavated (i.e. probably the village of Bārlā near Ajmer where the inscription was found) lay within the territory or fief under him.

Verses 7 ff. describe another family belonging to the Kāśyapa gōtra, to which the hero of the eulogy belonged. Verse 7 mentions Saḍhadēva of this family and his son Udaya. The damaged last foot of the stanza no doubt mentioned Udaya's son and apparently also the son's wife. Verse 8 states that, from the husband and wife whose names are lost with the concluding part of the previous stanza, was born Thakkura Pālhūka. The next stanza (verse 9) describes Pālhūka's good character and qualities while verse 10, most of the syllables in the second foot of which are lost, states that he constructed a step-well by what he had earned by means of trade. This shows that Thakkura Pālhūka was a trader by profession, although it is uncertain whether he actually belonged to the mercantile caste as well. Verse 12 states that some money belonging to Rāhaḍa, a brother of Pālhūka's father, was also spent in the construction of the well and that the Thakkura (i.e. Pālhūka) became free from his debt to his uncle thereby. The concluding syllables of the stanza are lost; but it seems that Pālhūka had previously borrowed some money from his uncle Rāhaḍa and that Rāhaḍa or his heirs agreed to forego the realisation of the amount if it was spent in a good cause like the construction of a step-well. Verse 13 mentions the four wives of Rāhaḍa, viz. Dēvamā, Salakhū, Lakshmī and Uttamā. The introduction of these ladies in the narration is difficult to explain; but it seems that it was they who permitted Pālhūka to spend the amount borrowed from their husband in the construction of the well. Possibly this was done for the merit of Rāhaḍa who might have been dead at the time.

The eulogy is stated to have been composed by Padmanābha, son of Achārya Nē.... The name of the poet's father consisted of about two aksharas only and seems to have been something like Nēma. A partially preserved epithet of Padmanābha appears to suggest that he claimed to be a kavi or poet. The inscription was engraved by Jayatasimha, son of Paṇḍita Yaśōdhara. Since this person does not look like an ordinary engraver, it is not unlikely that he only painted the letters on the stone to facilitate the work of the real engraver of the record. If such was the case, the name of the person who actually engraved the prasasti on the stone is not mentioned in the record.

The most puzzling information supplied by the inscription under study is its date : V. S. 1234, Chaitra-sudi 4. This is the earliest date of Chāhamāna Prithvirāja III so far known. Unfortunately, the date is not satisfactorily verifiable since the name of the week-day has not been mentioned in the epigraph. If, however, the beginning of the Vikrama year in the age and area in question can be determined, the date of our inscription may be calculated, although, unfortunately, the result of such an attempt scarcely solves the mystery of the date of our record. As will be seen below, the latest known date of the father and predecessor of Prithvirāja III is V.S. 1234, Bhādra-sudi 4. This would suggest that the year commenced some time between the months of Chaitra and Bhādra, so that the month of Bhādra was earlier than that of Chaitra. But, even though the Āshādhādi and Śrāvaṇādi Vikrama years are not unknown in Rajasthan, the dates in the inscriptions of the Chāhamānas do not support such an explanation.

Let us clear the position by an examination of the following regular and verifiable dates in the records of Prithvirāja III and his immediate predecessors.

1. Ajmer inscription¹ of Vigraharāja or Visala IV, dated V.S. 1210(1153-54 A.D.), Mārgaśīrsha-sudi 5, Sunday=November 22, 1153 A.D. The year began before the month of Mārgaśīrsha.
2. Hansi inscription² of Prithvibhata or Prithvirāja II, dated V.S. 1224(1167-68 A.D.), Māgha-sudi 7, Thursday=January 18, 1168 A.D. The year began before the month of Māgha.

² Ibid., No. 329.

3. Bijolia inscription¹ of Sōmēśvara, dated V.S. 1226(1169-70 A.D.), Phālguna-vadi 3, Thursday=February 5, 1170 A.D. The year began before the month of Phālguna.
4. Revasa inscription² of Sōmēśvara, dated V.S. 1230(1173-74 A.D.), Āshāḍha-sudi 9, Monday=June 10, 1174 A.D. The year began after the month of Āshāḍha.
5. Anvalda inscription³ of Sōmēśvara, dated V.S. 1234 (1177-78 A.D.), Bhādra-sudi 4, Friday=August 18, 1178 A.D. The year began after the month of Bhādrapada.
6. Phalodi inscription⁴ of Prithvirāja III, dated V.S. 1236 (1179-80 A.D.), Prathama-Āshāḍha-sudi 10, Wednesday=June 4, 1180 A.D. The year began after the month of Āshāḍha.
7. Udaipur Victoria Hall Museum inscription⁵ of Prithvirāja III, dated V.S. 1244 (1187-88 A.D.), Phālguna-sudi 31, Friday=February 12, 1188 A.D. The year began before the month of Phālguna.

The above dates would show that the Vikrama year commenced between the months of Bhādrapada and Mārgaśīrṣa. The year thus appears to have been Kārttikādi and not Chaitrādi, Āshāḍhādi or Śrāvaṇādi. Of the Āshāḍhādi and Śrāvaṇādi Vikrama years prevalent in some parts of Rājasthan,⁶ the first does not suit the dates of Nos. 4-6 and the second is equally unsuitable in the case of No. 5. The date of our inscription, viz. V. S. 1234, Chaitra-sudi 4, would thus appear to correspond to the 25th March 1178 A.D.

But this date of the reign of Prithvirāja III is earlier by a few months than the latest known date of his father and predecessor Sōmēśvara, viz. V. S. 1234, Bhādra-sudi 4=August 18, 1178 A.D. as found in the Anvalda inscription. Since, however, the inscription under study clearly refers to the death of Sōmēśvara (cf. tridaśa-pattanam prāptē in verse 4), its date can scarcely be earlier than the latest date in the records of that king, viz. August 18, 1178 A.D. It is therefore not improbable that V.S. 1234 in the date of our record is a mistake for V.S. 1235. In that case the date of the epigraph would correspond to March 14, 1179 A.D. Thus Prithvirāja III would appear to have ascended the Chāhamāna throne after the death of his father Sōmēśvara between the 18th August 1178 A.D. and the 14th March of the following year, that is to say, sometime about the end of 1178 A.D. or the beginning of 1179 A.D.

It seems that there is some confusion in the minds of the writers on Chāhamāna history about the English equivalent of the date of the Anvalda inscription of Sōmēśvara, viz. V.S. 1234, Bhādra-sudi 4, which is the latest known record of that king. H. C. Ray regards the year as c. 1177 A.D.,⁷ while D. C. Ganguly gives the year of the accession of Sōmēśvara's successor Prithvirāja III as 1177 A.D.⁸ Although Ganguly does not refer to Bhattacharya's note on the inscription under study,⁹ his view seems to have been influenced by the wrong equation of V. S. 1234, the year of Prithvirāja's accession according to the present record, with 1177 A.D.

The only geographical name mentioned in the inscription is the agrahāra of Atiśākha whence the family of Yaśōrāja hailed. I am not sure about the identification of the locality.

No. 36—LAHADAPURA INSCRIPTION OF THE TIME OF JAYACHCHANDRA,
V. S. 1230

(1 Plate)

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

The inscription forming the subject of this paper is engraved on a stone slab now preserved in the Bhārat Kalā Bhavan attached to the Hindu University at Banaras, U. P. It was copied by me when I visited Banaras in June 1955 with the purpose of examining the epigraphic records in the collection of the Kalā Bhavan. The internal evidence shows that it was raised at a place called Lāhaḍapura. I was at first inclined to identify it with the modern town of Laharpur (lat. 27° 42' 45", long. 80° 56' 25"), headquarters of a Pargana of the same name in the Sitapur District of U. P. But I am informed that the inscribed stone was found at Barabpur near Nandgañj in the Gazipur District by Mr. Kuber Nath Shukla, now Deputy Director of Education, U. P., who presented it to the Kalā Bhavan.

The inscription is written in ten lines which cover an area a little above 18 inches in length and slightly less than 17 inches in height. The letters, which are boldly engraved, are each about 1 inch in height and a little more than $\frac{1}{2}$ inch in breadth. But some of them, with the signs of vowel-marks, etc., have greater height and breadth. The preservation of the writing is on the whole satisfactory, although some of the letters are damaged here and there.

The characters belong to the Dēvanāgarī alphabet of about the twelfth century and resemble those not only in the records of the Gāhaḍavāla dynasty of Banaras and Kanauj but also in the contemporary inscriptions discovered in the central area of Northern India and some of the neighbouring regions. The letter b has been represented by the sign for v. The language of the inscription is Sanskrit which is, however, somewhat influenced by the local dialect. Besides the word svastī preceded by the Siddham symbol standing at the beginning of line 1 and the numerical figures illustrating two sums given in words in lines 2 and 3, the whole record is written in verse. There are only five stanzas in the Anuṣṭubh metre. The orthography of the record is characterised by the use of anusvāra in place of class nasals as well as in that of final m at the end of the halves of verses. Double nasal has been used in vimānā in line 8 and s for śh in śsā in line 3.

The date of the record is quoted in verses 1-2 in lines 1 ff. It is the year (i.e. Vikrama Samvat) counted by the words kha (i.e. 0) agni (i.e. 3) and arka (i.e. 12) indicating 1230 which is also given in figures (line 2). The week-day was Budha and the tithi the 12th of the dark half of the month of Āśvina. The figures for 12 are written immediately after the indication of the twelfth tithi in words. The date V.S. 1230, Āśvina-vadi 12, Wednesday, corresponds regularly to the 5th September 1173 A.D. The said date is stated in verse 1 to have fallen in the reign of the illustrious Jayachchandra who was undoubtedly the Gāhaḍavāla king of that name. Gāhaḍavāla Jayachchandra ascended the throne on the 21st June 1170 A.D.¹ The inscription was therefore incised a little above three years after his accession.

The inscription under review is a private document. Its object is to record an ordinance issued by the Brāhmaṇas of a village in the Gāhaḍavāla kingdom without any reference to royal authority, though the heavy punishment stipulated is stated to have included not only certain kinds of harassment of the persons guilty of certain crimes but even the death of some of the criminals. This throws some light on the responsibility of the public for the preservation of law and order and attaches a special interest to the inscription. Documents relating to this aspect of early Indian life have been discovered in large numbers in South India ; but epigraphic evidence on the subject is meagre with reference to North India. The inscription under study shows that conditions in the north were practically similar to those prevailing in the South during the early medieval period. In this connection, it is also interesting to note the ancient Indian attitude towards thefts and murders committed in a village, for which often the landlord or the villagers themselves were held responsible for tracing the thief or murderer or otherwise for compensating the aggrieved party.¹

Verse 2 says that, on the date discussed above, the Dvijas or Brāhmaṇas assembled at Lāhaḍapura and drafted the sthiti recorded in the inscription and that they made the samvid in question because they were what is called vaṭu-tuṇṭ-ābhībhūta. Lāhaḍapura has been referred to as a grāma in verse 3 below. But whether the word grāma here indicates merely a village or a bigger area with its centre at Lāhaḍapura is difficult to determine. The word sthiti has been used in the verse apparently to indicate 'a fixed decision, ordinance or decree' and samvid in the sense of 'a mutual agreement or contract'. The nature of our document is thus that of what is called a sthiti-patraka in Smṛiti literature, which is a document recording the fixed decision of a corporate body.² But the calamity called vaṭu-tuṇṭa (or tuṇṭā), by which the Dvijas are stated to have been overwhelmed (ābhībhūta), is difficult to explain. The word vaṭu or baṭu means a youngster especially of the Brāhmaṇa class but is also contemptuously applied to adult persons ; but the word tuṇṭa (or tuṇṭā) is not found in Sanskrit. The Hindi lexicons, however, recognise the word ḍhūṇḍh in the sense of 'a thief, robber or swindler', and it is not impossible that tuṇṭa in our inscription is a Sanskritised form of it. It may also be suggested that tuṇṭā is a mistake for luṇṭā used in the sense of a robber or robbery in the present context, although it is recognised in the lexicons in the adjectival sense of 'robbing'. Thus a gang of robbers seems to have been operating in the area around Lāhaḍapura and the local people were suffering from their depredations. The learned Brāhmaṇas of the area, probably being the leaders of the local society, therefore assembled to find out a remedy for the menace and they came to a decision which is quoted in the following stanzas of the inscription.

Verse 3 suggests that the unsocial activities were meant for the parivāda of the Dvijas. The word parivāda here appears to be used in the sense of 'ill-repute'. The idea seems to be that the depredations of the unsocial elements were considered by the leaders of the society as conceived in order to put them to shame. It is only another way of saying that the elders responsible for law and order in the village were discredited by the successful operations of the marauders.

Verses 3 ff. contain the text of the sthiti or samvid referred to earlier in verse 2. Verses 3-4 state that the person who would plunder the grāma or village (apparently meaning Lāhaḍapura) or would be guilty of a drōha (mischief) of any other kind [to its inhabitants], such as the seizure of the cattle (gō-maṣiṣy-ādi-vēṣṭana) [of the villagers], should be killed at once and his whole property should be confiscated, while his abettor (upashṭamōha-dāyaka) should be expelled [from the village] and his house [in the village] should be demolished. This shows that the robbers referred to were among the inhabitants of Lāhaḍapura and its immediate neighbourhood. In verse 4, the instantaneous slaughter, as recommended for the culprit, has been indicated by the interesting expression chakshur-vadha (i.e. 'slaughter at sight') in which the word chakshus has been used in the sense of 'sight'. The confiscated property of the chief culprit was probably treated as pertaining to the whole village or was more probably assigned to the temple or temples of the locality. This is what was done in South India as we know from a number of inscriptions.¹

While verses 3-4 speak of the punishment of the principal offender and his abettor, the first half of the next stanza (verse 5) prescribes the punishment for the instigator of the crime. It is stated that the vimantri, i.e. the adviser of the chief culprit, should be vārta (cf. vāraṇ) and should be treated as an equal of a dog or an ass or a Chandāla. The causative form of the root vr̥i may be taken to mean 'to hold captive' or 'to restrain'. But the injunction that the instigator of the crime should be treated as a dog or an ass or a Chandāla seems to suggest that he was ostracised and that his movements were restricted. It has to be remembered in this connection that punishment by imprisonment was rather rare in ancient and early medieval India even in cases conducted in the king's courts.² Thus, while the chief offender was killed and his whole property confiscated and his abettor was expelled from the locality, his counsellor was permitted to stay in the village although nobody was allowed to have any intercourse with him.

The second half of verse 5, with which the document ends, states that the god Dvādaśārka was the witness [of the sthiti] and prays for the success of the same. The name Dvādaś-ārka refers to the conception of the twelve Ādityas in a single Sun-god called Dvādaś-ātman in the lexicons. Whether it was the name of the Sun-god worshipped at Lāhadapura cannot be determined. But the conception of the Sun as a witness of human deeds seems to be quite appropriate as he is called Lōka-lōchana (literally, 'the eye of the world') and Karma-sākshin (literally, 'the witness of [all] acts') in the Sanskrit lexicons.

The question is now as to the capacity in which the Brāhmanas of Lāhadapura issued the decree contained in the document under review. Of course the Śmṛiti literature makes it abundantly clear that the particular jurisdiction of corporations of every kind was recognised by the ancient and medieval Hindu kings in the fullest measure and that the right of making laws for their corporations and composing disputes was often enjoyed by corporate bodies of farmers, craftsmen, cowherds, money-lenders, members of particular sects, robbers, actors, artisans, etc.³ No doubt the king of the country was advised to recognise and support the arrangements of and punishments inflicted by the chief of a family or a guild or of a corporation, and to interfere only when a dispute arose between a chief and his subordinates. But cases of grave crimes are stated to have been exclusively reserved for the king. This was, however, theoretical. In actual practice, inferior courts, such as those held by village assemblies, guilds, temple trustees and caste elders, appear to have been conducting criminal cases arising within their jurisdiction side by side with the courts headed by the king and his governors and subordinates without interruption from the government. A large number of South Indian inscriptions are known to prove that criminal cases including those involving homicide were decided by the village assembly or the community to which the accused belonged or the local people in general.⁴

In the present case, the Brāhmanas of Lāhadapura do not appear to have been members of a corporation of their own community nor do the unsocial elements seem to have belonged to the same community or corporation. The language of the inscription seems to suggest that the Brāhmaṇas were the members of the village corporation and the unsocial elements belonged to different classes of the local population. The former appear to have been the same sort of corporate body as is called the village Mahājanas in the Kannaḍa inscriptions and the village Mahāsabhā in the Tamil epigraphs. These were generally composed of Brāhmaṇas. The organisation appears to be similar to the village court referred to by Pitāmaha, according to whom such courts could appeal to the city courts which could in their turn appeal to the king.¹

¹ Cf. T. V. Mahalingam, South Indian Polity, p. 234. Considering the punishment prescribed for robbery by the law-givers (Jolly, HLC, p. 273; Kane, Hist. Dharm., Vol. III, pp. 519 ff.), chakshur-vadha does not appear to mean 'blinding the eyes.'

It may be supposed that the Brāhmaṇas of Lāhaḍapura could not have undertaken the responsibility of preserving law and order in their locality without the king's permission and that, since there is no reference to any royal approval in the record, either the Gāhaḍavāla king specially empowered them to act in the manner described in the inscription or there prevailed a sort of anarchy resulting from maladministration in the region in question and the leaders of the local population had to make their own arrangement for the suppression of unsocial elements. The second of the two alternative suggestions seems to be improbable in view of the fact that in such a case the name of the reigning monarch may not have been prominently mentioned in the document. As regards the first alternative, it may be pointed out that, although in the early medieval period the royal court was regarded as the highest institution for the dispensation of justice, the position of a court like the village assembly was recognised by convention. They automatically enjoyed a sort of relegated authority and did not require special authorisation. It seems that the Brāhmaṇas of Lāhaḍapura who issued the ordinance were also responsible for judging the criminals when caught by the people or the village officers and of inflicting the punishments stipulated in the document.

It may be asked why the Brāhmaṇas felt the necessity for prescribing the said drastic punishments for the crimes in question. The answer seems to be this. There was absence of uniformity and precision in the works of the ancient Indian law-givers in regard to the punishment for most crimes. Crimes were sometimes grouped in categories and a punishment was prescribed for a particular category. Even when various crimes and their punishments were specified, the specification was not exhaustive. Moreover fines and prāyaścitta were often prescribed even for the most heinous crimes.² The Brāhmaṇas of Lāhaḍapura apparently felt the necessity to do away with this vagueness and prescribed exemplary punishments for the crimes concerned. This was probably done because the punishments then in vogue in the area were not sufficiently deterrent. Most of the ancient law-givers absolved a Brāhmaṇa from corporal punishment and some of them prescribe for the instigator of a crime double the penalty of the criminal himself.³ The ordinance of the Brāhmaṇas of Lāhaḍapura shows that they did not find these prescriptions suitable for the preservation of law and order in their area under the prevailing conditions. Above all, the ordinance empowered any of the inhabitants of the village to kill a plunderer and cattle-lifter. This they could not ordinarily do without bringing trouble to themselves. The inscription under study draws our attention to one of the most interesting sources of criminal law in ancient and medieval India even in respect of some of the major crimes which are generally believed to have been dealt with by the kings and their feudatories and governors.

There is only one geographical name in the inscription. This is Lāhaḍapura mentioned in line 3 (verse 2) and apparently referred to as a grāma or village in line 5 (verse 3). If the inscribed stone really comes from the Gazipur District of U. P., we are not sure about its identification.

As indicated above, the stone is stated to have been found at the village of Barahpur near Nandganj in the said District. Lāhaḍapura thus may have been the old name of modern Barahpur or the area around that village.

G. S. GAI, OOTACAMUND

At the end of August 1957, the office of the Government Epigraphist for India, Ootacamund, acquired these plates from Shri Manda Narasimham of Śrīkākuḷam. Dr. B. Ch. Chhabra, Government Epigraphist for India, kindly entrusted the plates to me for studying and editing in the pages of this journal. The plates were discovered by a farmer while digging in a field in front of his house at Arasavalli in the Srikakulam Taluk, Visakhapatnam District. They were purchased by Shri Bhanumurti Pantulu, a teacher at Śrīkākuḷam. Shri Manda Narasimham, who obtained them from the latter, has published them in the Telugu journal Bhārati, May 1954, pp. 449 ff.¹

This is a set of five copper-plates, each measuring about 8.5 inches by 3 inches. On the left side of each plate is a hole, about one inch in diameter, through which passes a circular ring about 3.75 inches in diameter. To this ring is attached a seal which is circular in shape and which measures about 2 inches in diameter. In the centre of the seal is the seated figure of a bull together with the other usual emblems found in the seals of the grants of Vajrahasta III. The first plate is inscribed on one side while the remaining four plates bear writing on both sides. The state of preservation of the writing is not satisfactory, specially on the fourth and fifth plates which cover the grant portion. The plates weigh 160 tolas while the ring with the seal weighs 58 tolas.

The characters belong to the variety called eastern Nāgarī and resemble those found in the other charters of Vajrahasta (III).² In respect of orthography, it may be observed that ṣ is written with the upper part of the symbol separated, cf. lines 6, 11 and 15. N is represented by two forms; cf. lines 1, 4 and 7 for one type and lines 69, 70 and 71 for the other. It is difficult to distinguish between p and y. The symbol for v denotes b as well. In most cases, the consonant following r is reduplicated.

The language of the record is Sanskrit and the text is written in prose and verse.

The inscription belongs to the reign of the Eastern Gaṅga king Vajrahasta (III, 1038-70 A.D.), the son of Kāmārṇava and Vinayamahādēvī. It contains the prāśasti beginning with śrīmatām=akhīla-bhuvana, etc., introduced by this king. The text of the inscription upto line 39, comprising the introductory portion, is identical with that found in the other records of the king.³ It may be pointed out that while the Nadagam, Narasapatam, Peddabammidi, Chicacole and the present plates introduce the ruling king as śrīmad-Vajrahastadēvaḥ, the Madras Museum, Ganjam, Chikkalavalasa and the Boddapāḍu plates refer to him as śrīmad-Anantavarmma Vajrahastadēvaḥ. The present inscription does not supply any new historical information.

² See above, Vol. IX, pp. 96 ff. and Plates; ibid., Vol. XXIII, pp. 67 ff. and Plates; ibid., Vol. XXXI, pp. 305 ff. and Plates.

³ Besides the present grant, I have listed eight more records of this king. They are, (1) Nadagam plates, Śaka 979 (above, Vol. IV, pp. 183 ff.); (2) Madras Museum plates, Śaka 984 (ibid., Vol. IX, pp. 94 ff.); (3) Narasapatam plates, Śaka 987 (ibid., Vol. XI, pp. 147 ff.); (4) Ganjam plates, Śaka 991 (ibid., Vol. XXIII, pp. 67 ff.); (5) Peddabammidi plates, Śaka 982 (ibid., Vol. XXXI, pp. 305 ff.); (6) Chikkalavalasa plates, Śaka 982 (below, Vol. XXXIII, pp. 141 ff.); (7) Chicacole plates, Śaka 971 (JAHS, Vol. VIII, pp. 163 ff.); and (8) Boddapāḍu plates, Śaka 982 (Kaṭīṅgādēśacharitra, Appendix, pp. 55 ff.).

The grant was issued from Kalīṅganagara, usually identified with Mukhalingam. The record registers the grant of the village Harisavēlli (line 40) situated in Varāhuvarttanī (viśaya). The gift village is mentioned again as Arisavalli in line 67, along with its adjoining village Māvēṇḍi. Varāha-varttanī occurs in other records of this king as well as of other members of this dynasty and is usually taken to correspond to the area near modern Śrīkākuḷam.

The date of our grant, which occurs in lines 42-43, is expressed in the chronogram, kara-vasu-nidhi-Śāk-ābdō, i.e. Śaka 982, Kārttika, the twelfth day of the first fortnight, Monday. It regularly corresponds to Monday, October 9, A.D. 1060. It is earlier than the date of the Peddabammidi plates by two months and nineteen days only. Kārttika sū. 12 is known in the Kannaḍa-Telugu speaking area as Uthāna-dvādaśī, i.e., the day on which god Viṣṇu is woken up from his long sleep. It is also called Prabōdhotsava. This tithi is also known for the end of Chāturmāsya-vrata (which begins on the same tithi in the month of Āshāḍha) and Tulasī-vivāha (the marriage of Viṣṇu with the Tulasī plant). The previous day, i.e. ēkādaśī, is called Prabōdhini ēkādaśī.

The details of the grant are given in lines 43 ff. This portion is defective in many places and so it is difficult to make out the purport satisfactorily. As stated above, the inscription registers the gift of the village Harisavēlli which is also called Arisavalli. It appears that the village was originally given by the king to the son and three daughters of Dālamapeggaḍa and his wife Mavanaka. Dālamapeggaḍa is stated to have been the chief minister (mahāpradhāna). The names of his son and daughters are given respectively as Mēdapa-nāyaka, Viddāma, Mēdama and Pōtama. The subsequent assignment¹ of the gift village was as follows: The village was divided into four parts and one part was given to Śīriyapa-nāyaka, Vajjināyaka, Guṇḍamanāyaka and Nūmkama-nāyaka who were the sons of Naḍupana-nāyaka, a Kāyastha of Kāśyapa-gōtra, and his wife Paitapā. This part constituted the units called Puṇḍi-niyōga and Pāmcālī-niyōga.² This portion was further divided into nineteen shares out of which eighteen shares were taken by Vajji-nāyaka, Guṇḍama-nāyaka and Nūmkama-nāyaka (mentioned above) while the remaining share was given to Naḍupanāyaka, son of Śīriyapanāyaka.³ Again the second part of the village was divided into five shares as follows: one share to Guṇḍana and Apētana, sons of Māviraṭṭaḍi of Śūdra-varṇa and his wife Viṭṭapā; one share to Chandēna, son of the younger Dāmaratṭaḍi and his wife Sāyapā; one share to Chāmēna, son of Viṭṭanaratṭaḍi and his wife Sarvapā; one share to Māmkaṇa and Duggana, sons of Mādiratṭaḍi and his wife Chinnapā; and one share to Kattana and Viṭṭana, sons of Dugganaratṭaḍi and his wife Gavakā. The part, consisting of these five shares, constituted the units known as Gavaḍa-niyōga and Chandrāditya-niyōga.

The record then proceeds to state that the village was divided into Santūraha-bhāga, the meaning of which is doubtful. We know that the village was originally divided into four parts. Out of these, two parts have been disposed of as indicated above and the fourth part is accounted for later in the record. Therefore, this corresponded to the third part of the village, which was probably divided into seventeen shares and given to Dāmara-nāyaka and Viṇarāyi-nāyaka, sons of Kāyastha Chaṇḍu-nāyaka of Kāśyapa-gōtra. It appears that the grant was made at the instance of Iddachāhapa and that the recipients in their turn granted some portion to Nūmkamōja, son of Chīḍumōja. The record next states that king Vajrahaṣṭa granted the village Māvēṇḍi, apparently adjoining the village Arisavalli in whose revenues it was included.¹ The inscription then proceeds to account for the fourth part out of the four parts into which the gift village Harisavēlli was divided. This fourth and last part was divided into eight shares and distributed as follows : two shares to Kāyastha Nūmkapa : one share each to Kāyastha Sōma-nātha and Kāyastha Dāmara ; and one share to Chīḍana of Chaturtha-varṣa i. e. Śūdra community.² These shares constituted the units Rattaḍa-niyōga and Vumcha-niyōga. It is not known whether the remaining three shares (out of the eight) were also included in these two niyōgas.

² The word niyōga is suffixed to the proper names here and in similar expressions in the sequel. It is difficult to make out their exact significance. Possibly the portions granted were known by these names at the time of the grant.

In the concluding part the record states that Chirīyapa-nāyaka and Chīḍapōta-nāyaka granted half of the share of Bhadima-nāyaka³ owned by the latter in the units Puṇḍi-niyōga and Pāṁchālī-niyōga. The grant was made to Pinnamanāyaka and Māvuranāyaka, sons of Apitamanāyaka. It is possible that the donors Chirīyapanāyaka and Chīḍapōta-nāyaka were the sons of Bhadima-nāyaka. But how the latter got shares in Puṇḍi-niyōga and Pāṁchālī-niyōga is not made clear.

The gift-village Harisavēlli, also called Arisavalli, is to be identified with modern Arasavalli in the Srikakulam Taluk, where the plates were discovered. The adjoining village mentioned in the record as Māvēṇḍi is not shown on the maps.

The inscription does not give the usual imprecatory verses at the end. As the recipients of the grant were Kāyasthas and Śūdras and as the record does not state that the gift was free from taxes, it appears to be a kara-śūsana.

No. 38—SHIGGAON PLATES OF CHALUKYA VIJAYADITYA, SAKA 630

G. S. GAI, OOTACAMUND

These plates were discovered by me in December 1945 in the course of my official tour in search of inscriptions in the Shiggaon Taluk of the Dharwar District in the present Mysore State. They were found in the house of one Dr. Faruqui at Shiggaon, the headquarters of the taluk. It was through the kind efforts of my friend Dr. K. G. Kulkarni, who was then Medical Officer at Shiggaon, that I was able to secure the plates. They are registered as No. A 49 in the Annual Report on Indian Epigraphy, 1945-46. The inscription on the plates is edited here for the first time.

The set consists of five copper-plates, each measuring 10.5 inches by 5.25 inches. To the left margin of each plate is a hole .75 inch in diameter, through which passes the ring about 3.5 inches in diameter. The ends of the ring are secured by a seal, the countersunk surface of which bears the figure of a standing boar facing proper right. The seal is rather oval in shape and measures about 1.65 inches by 1.5 inches. The rims of the plates are slightly raised in order to preserve the writing.¹ The first, fourth and fifth plates are incised on one side only while the second and third plates have writing on both sides. This is a rare case of two consecutive plates being engraved on one side only. Apparently this was done in order to prevent the writing being exposed, if the second side of the fourth plate had been used. In such cases, a blank plate is often used at the end. The plates, together with the ring and seal, weigh 329 tolas.

The characters belong to what is known as the southern class of alphabets and are regular for the period and the region to which the grant belongs. They resemble the characters of the other known grants of the king.² In respect of orthography, the following may be observed; the sign for jihvāmūliya is used in line 48 and that for upadhmanīya in lines 16, 23, 25 and 27; nha is written for hna in chinha, lines 19 and 24; lhā for hlā in pralhā, line 36. Dravidian l is found in lines 43 and 45 and j in line 31. Final m occurs in line 40. The language is Sanskrit and except the invocatory verse at the beginning and the benedictive and imprecatory verses at the end, the text of the record is in prose. Sandhi rules have not been observed in some cases. The construction known as satī saptamī is used in passages like Vanavāsīm-āyātavati Vijayāditya-vallabhēndrē (line 32).

The inscription belongs to the reign of Mahārājādhirāja Paramēśvara Bhaṭṭāraka Vijayāditya-Satyāśraya of the Western Chālukyas of Bādāmi. The text giving the genealogy of the family, from Pulakēśin I to Vijayāditya, is identical with that found in other records of the king as well as those of his successors.³ The plates are issued when the victorious camp was at Kisuvolal. The object of the record is to register some grant made by the king when he had gone to Banavāsi in order to see the Ālupa ruler Chitravāhana. The grant was made, at the request of Chitravāhana, to the Jaina monastery, which was caused to be constructed by Kumkumadēvi at Purigere.

³ Cf. Above, Vol. X, pp. 14 ff.; ibid. Vol. XXV, pp. 21 ff. and ibid., Vol. IX, pp. 200 ff.

The details of the date on which the grant was made are :—Śaka-varsha 630 (specifically mentioned as expired), eleventh regnal year, Āshāḍha, paurṇamāsī. The date is not verifiable, since the week-day is not given. Fleet has shown, on the strength of the Aihole inscription,¹ that the month Śrāvaṇa of Śaka year 619 current (A.D. 696) was the first month of the first year of this king.² Accordingly Āshāḍha of Śaka 630 current would fall in the eleventh regnal year and not of the expired Śaka year as mentioned in the record. The date mentioned in the record would fall on Monday 20th June, A.D. 707.³

The inscription under study is interesting in more than one respect. The grant was issued when the royal camp was at the place called Kisuvola. This place has been identified with modern Paṭṭadkal in Hungund Taluk, Bijapur District. It occurs as Kesuvola in the Mahākūṭa inscription of Maṅgalēśa⁴ and as Paṭṭadakisuvoḷa in later records.⁵ Paṭṭadkal, together with Bādāmi and Aihole, formed the metropolis of the early Chālukyas of Bādāmi and it was specially at Paṭṭadkal that the festival of paṭṭa-bandha (fillet-binding, i.e. coronation) was being celebrated. It may be pointed out that Kisuvola is called a sthāna in our inscription whereas Vātāpi, i.e. Bādāmi is styled as adhishṭhāna in some of the early records.⁶ Some of the other grants of Vijayāditya have been issued from Rāsēnagara,⁷ Karahāṭanagara,⁸ Ēlāpura,⁹ Kuṇḍinagara,¹⁰ and Raktapura.¹¹ The last name Raktapura also occurs as the place of royal camp in the Kendur plates of Kirtivarman II, the grandson of Vijayāditya.¹² While editing the Kendur plates, Prof. K. B. Pathak suggested the identification of Raktapura with modern Lakshmēśvar in the Shirahatti Taluk of the Dharwar District. Fleet also was inclined to hold the same view.¹³ This view is, however, not correct. We know that the ancient name of Lakshmēśvar was Puligeṛe, Purigeṛe, Pulikara, or Purikara. In the inscription under study itself the forms Purigeṛe, Pulikara and Purikara occur. We have to identify Raktapura with Kisuvola from where the grant under consideration was issued. In fact Kisuvola or Kesuvola in Kannada means 'red city' (kisu 'red', voḷa < poḷa 'city') and it is quite clear that Raktapura is only a Sanskrit rendering of the Kannada name.

In line 32 of the inscription under study it is stated that Vijayāditya had gone to Vanavāsi in order to see the Ālupa king and lines 32-36 inform us that the name of this Ālupa ruler was Chitravāhana and that he belonged to the Pāṇḍya lineage. The early history of the Ālupa rulers is still shrouded in obscurity.¹⁴ We know from the Sorab plates¹⁵ of the Chālukya king ¹⁴ The Halmidi inscription of Kadamba Kākustha dated circa 450 A.D. mentions one Ālupa (Mys. Arch. Rep., 1936, p. 73) and the Mahākūṭa inscription of Maṅgalēśa (Ind. Ant. XIX, p. 17) refers to an Āluka. We do not know whether they belonged to the early Ālupa or Ālupa dynasty.

Vinayāditya, dated in A.D. 692, that he made a grant at the request of Guṇasāgara-Ālupendra's son Chitravāhana who was in the possession of Edevolal district in Banavāsi province. Further a stone inscription from Kigga in the Koppa Taluk of the Kadur District in Mysore State¹ states that when Ālvarasa Guṇasāgara was ruling Kadamba-maṇḍala i.e., Banavasi province, he, (his) queen and (his son) Chitravāhana made some grant. On the assumption that the Chitravāhana mentioned in the Sorab plates and the Kigga inscription was one and the same person, Hultsch suggested that Guṇasāgara was the governor of the Banavāsi province in or immediately before the time of Vinayāditya and that his son Chitravāhana succeeded to the governorship of Banavāsi.² This view is supported by our inscription in which it is stated that Vijayāditya had gone to Banavāsi to meet Chitravāhana which shows that Chitravāhana was in possession of the Banavāsi province. There is no doubt that this Chitravāhana was the same as his namesake mentioned in the Sorab plates referred to above.³ The grant under consideration discloses, for the first time, that this Ālupa ruler Chitravāhana continued in his office during the time of Vijayāditya also till A.D. 707 at least, the date of the present grant. We also learn, for the first time, that this Chitravāhana belonged to the Pāṇḍya lineage.⁴

It is stated that Vijayāditya made the grant, at the request of Chitravāhana, to the Jaina monastery which was caused to be constructed by Kumkumadēvi at Purigere. The relation that existed between Kumkumadēvi on the one hand and Vijayāditya or Chitravāhana on the other is not specified in the record. This Kumkumadēvi is mentioned in another contemporary record of Vijayāditya⁵ dated A.D. 705, which likewise does not specify the relationship between them. But we know from a late record⁶ found at Guḍḡeri in the Dharwar District and dated in A.D. 1076 that Vijayāditya had a sister named Kumkumamahādēvi and that she caused to be constructed a Jaina monastery called Ānesejjeyabasadi at Purigere. Since Vijayāditya was her brother and since the grant to the Jaina monastery caused to be erected by her was made at the request of Chitravāhana, it is tempting to suggest that she might have been the wife of the Ālupa ruler Chitravāhana. The expression sva-hṛidaya-prahādana-kāriṇyā applied to Kumkumadēvi in lines 36-37 might refer to Chitravāhana. Thus he might have been related to the king as brother-in-law. And the way in which Vijayāditya's visit to Banavāsi is described might lend further support to this view; cf. Ālupendram drakṣtūm Vanavāsim-āyātavati Vijayāditya-vallabhēndrē in line 32. This suggests that the king had gone to Banavāsi as if to pay a courtesy visit to his brother-in-law and not in the capacity of an over-lord. It is interesting to note that the actual camp of the king at the time was at Kisuvolal and that the king appears to have gone to Banavāsi to pay a personal visit to Chitravāhana. It is also likely that the Ālupa ruler Chitravāhana was an elder relative of the king since he figures in the grant of Vinayāditya dated A.D. 692 referred to above.

The Jaina monastery which was caused to be constructed by Kumkumadēvi at Purigere and in respect of which the king made the grant might have been the same monastery as the one called Ānesejjeyabasadi in the Guḍḡeri inscription referred to above.

The gift-village was Guḍḡigere, stated to be the centre of Jaina religion specially for the teaching of Sūrasta branch of Mūla-saṃgha. Guḍḡigere is modern Guḍḡeri which is about 6 miles west of Lakshmēśvar (ancient Purigere). Its Sanskritised name is given as Dhruja-taṭāka in the Guḍḡeri inscription mentioned above.

⁴ Some Ālupa kings of a later date trace their descent from the lunar race. See ibid., pp. 21-23.

⁵ An. Rep. on S. I. E., 1934-35, App. A., No. 22.

⁶ Ind. Ant., Vol. XVIII, pp. 35 ff.

Lines 41-46 of the record mention the boundaries of the gift-village Guddigere. They were as follows : in the south, the lake called Vēṇṇē ; in the south-west, Mākulika hill ; in the west, the lake Kupēra ; in the north-west, the Kōḍi lake and the road leading to the Tapavi lake ; in the north the Pulivūra lake and the junction of Virayā¹ and the highway of the Purikara town ; in the east, the field including the village of Itṭakā ; in the north-east the lakes Matkupa and Arasi, including the boundary field ; and in the south-east, the row of stones starting from Lakaviraya.

Lines 46-59 give details of further gifts of land and villages, apparently made to the same Jaina monastery mentioned in line 38 of the inscription. The details of the boundaries of the gift villages Uḥpaṭṭi and Pāṭaḷi are as follows (lines 46-50) : with the highway of Alaguṇḍi as boundary, as far as the northern road of the main monastery ; then from the south of that high road up to the Kuruhikella lake-bound, excluding the Sammagāra and chāṇḍāla street and including the vegetable and marshy ground, and from the road of the Sūralivirāṇa garden up to the boundary of Siggalli.

The next gift to be made was the group of fields of Nērilika to the north of the village and up to the northern road of Guddigere village. Then the village Maraguṇḍi, situated to the north of Vanavāsi town, was granted with all privileges. Likewise was granted the Kaḥpūr village in Kundavūr District. The boundaries of this village were (lines 53-56) ; in the west, the Suvarṇa tree on the eastern bank of Pagaravirayā ; in the north-west the limit of Sumkuviraya ; in the north, the lake called Mahishivāsa ; in the north-east, up to the fine² tamarind trees ; in the south-east, the Pūli lake ; and in the south, up to Pagaravirayā.

Lines 60-62 state that the grant should be protected by the future kings. This is followed, in lines 62-67, by the usual imprecatory verses.

No. 39—SONEPUR INSCRIPTION OF BHANUDEVA

(1 Plate)

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

The inscription under publication is written in eight lines engraved on a slab of stone lying in front of the temple of the goddess Khamēśvarī (Khambēśvarī or Stambhēśvarī) at Sonapur which was formerly the headquarters of the State of that name but now belongs to the Bolangir District of Orissa. It was briefly noticed by B. C. Majumdar¹ and B. Misra² but has been recently edited by K. B. Tripathi³ with a translation but without any facsimile. Majumdar and Misra assign the inscription to the twelfth century A.D. The epigraph is edited in the following pages since, in our opinion, it has not been correctly deciphered and interpreted.

The inscribed area on the stone slab measures about two feet in length and one foot in height while individual aksharas in the record are about one inch and a quarter high. The characters are Gaudīya with certain characteristics of the Oriya alphabet. The sign for medial i is of the Oriya type; but m and s are written in the Bengali fashion. In Sūnapūra in line 2, the letter s shows a cursive and peculiar form (cf. also the shape of the same letter in satīri in the same line). Chh is of the chchh type as in modern Oriya and not of the ksh type as found in records like the Oriya supplement of the Veligalani grant of 1458 A.D.⁴ The form of initial i is later than that in the Alagum inscription (line 10) of 1141 A.D.⁵, the Bhubaneswar inscription (line 1) of 1218 A.D.⁶ and the Nagari plates (lines 132-33) of 1230-31 A.D.⁷ But it is found in some records of the time of Anangabhīma III (c. 1211-38 A.D.) such as the Puri inscription (No. 4, line 5) of 1237 A.D.,⁸ while the earlier form is also noticed in later records like the Puri plates of 1395-97 A.D.⁹ Y and p are written alike as in other medieval Orissan epigraphs. The numerical figures 1 and 2 in line 6 as well as 7 in line 2 are of the Telugu-Kannada type while 3 is also of the same type sometimes found in the medieval records of Orissa.¹⁰ On palaeographical grounds, the epigraph may be assigned to a date in the thirteenth or fourteenth century A. D. This suggestion is supported by the fact that it refers itself to the reign of Vira-Bhānudeva who is undoubtedly one of the four kings of that name belonging to the imperial branch of the Eastern Gaṅga dynasty. Of these four rulers, Bhānu I began to rule about 1264 A.D., Bhānu II about 1305 A.D. and Bhānu III about 1353 A.D., while Bhānu IV ascended the throne sometime before 1414 A.D. It is difficult to assign the record to any one of these four kings with precision; but palaeography seems to point rather to Bhānu I or II or III than to Bhānu IV since Oriya inscriptions of the fifteenth century generally exhibit more developed Oriya forms of the letters.

The language of the inscription is old Oriya. Interesting from the orthographical point of view are words like āiuseva (Sanskrit āyushya) in lines 4-5 and vaidya (Sanskrit vaidya) in line 5. Contractions as in paḍirāṇhira in line 3 is often found in medieval Orissan records, though our inscription also has rājāṅkara in line 4. Similarly it employs both the forms kaṣālē (line 7) and kapālāi (line 8) as the locative of kapāla. Interesting is also the words vijāē (Sanskrit vijaya) in line 2 and nṛivansa (Sanskrit nirvāṇa) in line 8. The old dative form in °dēvaṅkaī in line 5 is of grammatical interest. It is found in the form of ṅkaī in such medieval records as the Puri inscriptions of the time of Anāgabhīma III (c. 1211-38 A.D.).¹

Tripathi reads the year of the date at the beginning of line 2 as 16 or a 6 supposed to stand for the aṅka year 6. The year no doubt refers to the aṅka reckoning since the ordinary regnal reckoning was not popular with the Gaṅga kings during the period in question. It is, however, well known that 6 and numbers ending with 6 were omitted in the aṅka reckoning and therefore either of the readings 16 and 6 is impossible. At the beginning of line 2, we propose to read [sr]ā 7² srāhi. It seems that srā of srāhi was redundantly engraved before the numerical figure through oversight. After srāhi, Tripathi reads Mīna-kṛishṇa 2. But the figure read as 2 here is different from 2 in line 6. We are inclined to read the passage as Mīna-kṛishṇa 3 since, as indicated above, 3 of this type is sometimes found in the medieval records of Orissa.

The date quoted in lines 1-2 of our record thus appears to be Saturday (Sauri-vāra), the 3rd of the dark half of the solar month of Mīna in the 7th aṅka or 5th regnal year of Bhānudeva. The 5th regnal year of Bhānu I, II and III appears to have corresponded to 1268-69, 1309-10 and 1356-57 A.D. respectively. Among these years, the details suit only March 3, 1268 A.D., and therefore the king referred to may be Bhānu I although it is difficult to be definite on the point.

The inscription begins with the auspicious word svasti and the passage śrī-vīra-Bhānudevasya pravardhamāna-vijāē-rājē samvata [sr]ā 7 Mīna-kṛishṇa 3 Sauri-vārē (Sanskrit śrī-Vīra-Bhānudevasya pravardhamāna-vijaya-rājyē samvatsarē 7 śaradī Mīna-kṛishṇa 3 Sauri-vārē) in lines 1-2. The above is followed in lines 2-4 by Sūnapūra-kāṭaka-Pachhima-dēsa-adhikāri sāmanta-paḍirā-Visa-paḍirāṅkra adhikārē (Sanskrit Suvarṇapura-kāṭaka-Paśchima-dēś-ādihikāri-sāmanta-pratirāja-Viśva-pratirājasya adhikārē). In the name Visa-paḍirā, Paḍirā is the family name; but Visa's official designation was also Sāmanta-paḍirā. Tripathi reads sāmanta-paḍirāy-Isra-paḍisaṅkara and takes the name of the officer as Isra (Sanskrit Īśvara) and his family name as Paḍisa. The last akshara of what we have read as Visa-paḍirā may possibly be also read as sa considering the form of the same akshara in Sauri-vārē in line 2 while the second akshara may also be sra or su. But the first akshara of the name is clearly vi. In any case, the passage quoted above from lines 2-4 refers to the tract under the government of a viceroy of the Gaṅga king, who enjoyed the designation Sāmanta-paḍirā and ruled over the western province of the Gaṅga empire with his headquarters at Sūnapūra, i.e. modern Sonapur where the inscription has been found.

The following passage in lines 4-6 records the purpose of the document and reads: śrī-vīra-Bhānudevarājāṅkara āiusva-kām-ārthē śrī-Vaidyanāthadēvaṅkaī Naēḍa-visaya-grāma vāraha data 12 (Sanskrit śrī-Vīra-Bhānudeva-rājasya āyushya-kām-ārthē śrī-Vaidyanāthadēvāya Naēḍa-vishaya-grāmāḥ dvādaśa dattāḥ 12). It is stated that twelve villages situated in the vishaya or district of Naēḍa were granted to the god Vaidyanātha for the longevity and the fulfilment of the desire of king Vīra-Bhānudeva. The names of the villages are not enumerated nor is the name of the donor specified. It seems that the king or his viceroy was the donor. The god Vaidyanātha is still worshipped in a temple on the river Tel near Sonepur. What we have read as 'Naṣṭa-visaya-grāma vāraha has been read by Tripathi as ina Eḍaviya-panamu vāra, in which ina has been taken to be a local word meaning 'here' and the purpose of the document has been supposed to be to record the grant of twelve coins called Eḍaviya-Paṇa in favour of the god. But, in such a case, ina would be meaningless in the context. A coin called Eḍaviya (the last akshara is certainly sa)-Paṇa is also as yet unknown from any other source.

² The figure has some resemblance with certain forms of 7 illustrated by G.H. Ojha in his Prācīna Lipimālā, Plate LXXI (Section II, last column), Plate LXXV (Section II) and Plate LXXVI (Section II). But the upper ends of the two vertical strokes here do not appear to be joined by a curve as in other cases.

The next sentence in lines 6-8 reads ēhā jē harai harāu tāhāra kapālē Śiva-tāla Vrakma-tāla Vishṇu-tāla tini tāla paḍai (Sanskrit etat yaḥ harati hārayati [vā] tasya kapālē Śiva-tālaḥ [cha] Brahma-tālaḥ [cha] Vishṇu-tālaḥ [cha] trayāḥ iṭlāḥ patanti). The word kapāla has been used here in the literal sense of 'forehead' and the figurative sense of 'lot' and tāla (literally, 'the palm of the hand') apparently to indicate 'a slap'. A 'blow on the forehead' figuratively means in the East Indian languages 'the destruction of one's good luck' or 'one's ruin'. The idea here is that, if any person confiscates the gift land or causes its confiscation, his forehead would be struck by a blow each from the hands of the gods Śiva, Brahman and Vishṇu. Tripathi and others read Rudra-tāla in the place of Vishṇu-tāla without noticing that Śiva-tāla is mentioned side by side. The word tāla is translated by Tripathi as 'a bolt', although it means 'a bolt' only in the sense of 'the bolt or lock of a door'.

The last sentence of the inscription in line 8 reads: tāhāra kapālāi nṛivansa hōi (Sanskrit tasya kapālē nirvaṃśaḥ bhavati). To become nirvaṃśa means 'not to have any progeny', or 'to lose all of one's own children and their progeny', i.e. 'to have none in one's line to offer one a pinḍa after death'. The sentence means to say that the loss of progeny would fall to the lot of one responsible for the resumption of the gift land. Tripathi reads tāhāra kapāla ina hō vasa hōi and translates the sentence as 'His forehead becomes subdued or ruined'. The akshara hō has been inadvertently introduced in the text while vasa (the reading is clearly vansa) has been taken to stand for Sanskrit vaśa. The word ina (meaning 'here' according to Tripathi) has been left out in the translation. As a matter of fact this word does not occur in the inscription under study or in any other Oriya inscription known to me.

The importance of the inscription lies in the fact that it testifies to the inclusion of the district around Sonepur in the dominions of the Imperial Gaṅgas in the thirteenth or fourteenth century A.D. We know that the Telugu-Chōḍa king Sōmēśvaradēvavarman III was ruling at Sonepur about the second half of the twelfth century.¹ He was also a devotee of the god Vaidyanātha (Śiva) whose temple may have been built by the Telugu-Chōḍas. It now appears that the Gaṅgas ousted Telugu-Chōḍa rule from that region. But it is difficult to determine as to which of the Gaṅga kings was responsible for the achievement.

The geographical names mentioned in the inscription are Sūnapūra, the location of which has already been indicated above, and the district of Naṣṭa the name of which reminds us of the locality called Laida about 33 miles from Sambalpur.

No. 40—SILVER COIN OF BHAIKAVASIMHA

D. C. SIRCAB, OOTACAMUND

About the end of November 1957 I was passing through Patna where I met Prof. R. K. Choudhary of the G. D. College, Begusarai, Monghyr District, Bihar. Prof. Choudhary kindly showed me a silver coin with legend on both obverse and reverse. As I had little time to devote on the coin just then, I prepared plasticine moulds of both sides of it and returned it to the Professor. Some plaster casts of the coin were later prepared out of those moulds for my study.¹

The coin is round in shape and has a diameter of one inch. Its weight is stated to be 10.52 grams or 162.37 grains. On both obverse and reverse of the coin there is a square made of raised lines, within a circular line of the same type. In the four semi-circular spaces between the arms of the square and the outer line, there is in each case a letter or one or more numerical figures between two angular ornamental designs. Inside the square the legend is written in raised letters in five lines diagonally arranged between the upper and lower angles on both the obverse and the reverse. The reverse legend is a continuation of the writing on the obverse. There are thirteen letters on the obverse and an equal number of them on the reverse. Of these thirteen letters arranged in five lines, line 3 in the centre has five aksharas, lines 2 and 4 have three each and lines 1 and 5 only one each. The same arrangement has been followed on both the sides.

The characters belong to the Gaudīya alphabet as prevalent in Bihar in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries A.D. The letters r and ś have been written both in the Dēvanāgarī and Gaudīya fashions. The two types of r are very similar respectively to n and v as found in the legend, while y resembles p. Some letters of the legend have suffered from the effects of later punching by the shroffs.

The writing on the obverse and reverse reads as follows :—

Obverse

Reverse

- 1 Ma-
- 2 hārāja-
- 3 śrī-Da[rppa]nārā-
- 4 yaṇ-ātma-
- 5 ja-

- 1 Ti-
- 2 rabhukti-
- 3 rāja-śrī-Bhaira-
- 4 vasirha-
- 5 sya [||*]

The legend may be translated as : “ (The coin is) of the illustrious Bhairavasirha, the lord of Tirabhukti (and) the son of the illustrious Mahārāja Darpanārāyaṇa ”.

In the spaces outside the square on the obverse, we have respectively in the upper left, upper right, lower left and lower right :

sa

1411

In the corresponding spaces on the reverse, there are similarly :

Of the writing on the reverse, the central slanting line of jya is not clearly made, while the left part of the figure for 1 is cut off. These writings no doubt quote the date of the issue of the coin under study, the obverse giving Śaka-sa (i.e. Śaka-samvatsarē) 1411 and the reverse rājya (i.e. rājya-samvatsarē) 15, i.e. the regnal year 15. Thus the coin was issued by king Bhairavasimha of Tirabhukti (i.e. Tirhut or Mithilā, i.e. North Bihar), who was the son of king Darpanārāyaṇa, in the 15th year of his reign, which corresponded to Śaka 1411 or 1489-90 A.D. Bhairavasimha thus ascended the throne of Tirhut about Śaka 1397 or 1475-76 A.D.

There is no doubt that the king who issued the coin under study is identical with Bhairavasimha alias Rūpanārāyaṇa alias Harinārāyaṇa who was the son of Nārasimha Darpanārāyaṇa of the Ōinvār dynasty of Tirhut, which flourished in the period between the middle of the 14th to the first half of the 16th century A.D. The coin is the only one of Bhairavasimha so far discovered and one of the very few of the Ōinvārs as yet published. As a matter of fact, very few of the Ōinvār rulers issued coins. Our coin throws some light on the rather obscure history of the king as well as of the local ruling family of medieval India, to which he belonged.

The history of the rulers of the Ōinvār dynasty of Tirhut is little known and their chronology full of confusion. The confusion is due to many factors such as the uncertainty about the initial year of the Lakshmanasēna Samvat or La. Sam. used in the dating of many of the literary records of the period and tract in question, the possibility of contemporaneous or conjoint rule for some years of the predecessor and successor in several cases, and the unreliability of some of the local traditions. Since the late medieval period, the La. Sam. is calculated as starting from 1119 A.D.; but as regards the earlier dates the initial year varies between 1108 and 1119 A.D.¹ For the sake of convenience, we have tentatively taken 1119 A.D. as the starting point of the era in our calculations in the following pages. Another great difficulty is that even when the La. Sam. year is mentioned together with the corresponding Śaka year and verifiable astronomical details are provided for a date, they are generally irregular according to Swamikannu Pillai's Indian Ephemeris. This is evidently due to the fact that the local almanacs from which the dates were quoted, were based on a defective calculation.

In the following lines, we are offering a sketch of Ōinvār history and chronology on the basis of the following works: (1) M. M. Chakravarti, History of Mithilā during the Pre-Mughal Period (JASB, N.S., Vol. XI, 1915, pp. 406-433; especially pp. 415-33); (2) R. K. Choudhary, The Ōinwāras of Mithilā (JBS, Vol. XL, pp. 99-121); (3) J. Eggeling, Catalogue of Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Library of the India Office, Part IV, pp. 874-76, No. 2564; (4) G. A. Grierson, (a) Vidyāpati and his Contemporaries (Ind. Ant., Vol. XIV, 1885, pp. 182 ff.); (b) On some Medieval Kings of Mithilā (ibid., Vol. XVIII, 1899, pp. 57-58); (c) An Introduction to Maithilī Language; (5) S. N. Singh, History of Tirhut, 1915; and (6) U. Thakur, History of Mithilā, 1956, Chapter VI: The Ōinavāras (pp. 290-339).

Harisimha, the last ruler of the Karnāṭa dynasty of Mithilā, was overthrown by Sultān Ghiyāsuddīn Tughluk Shāh (1320-25 A.D.) of Delhi about 1324 A.D.² Sometime later, about the middle of the fourteenth century, a Brāhmaṇa named Kāmśēvara Thākur, who may have originally been the Rājapaṇḍita at Harisimha's court, obtained the Zamindari of a considerable part of the country from Sultān Firūz Shāh (1351-87 A.D.). The dynasty founded by the Brāhmaṇa is called Ōinavāra (Ōinivāra) or Ōinvār after the village of Ōinī in the Muzaffarpur District, which one of his ancestors received from a Karnāṭa king. The family is sometimes also named after Sugaunā, Kāmēśvara's residence near modern Madhubani in the Darbhanga District. After a short time, Firūz Shāh gave Kāmēśvara's throne to the latter's son Bhōgīśvara.¹ According to some doubtful traditions, Bhōgīśvara ruled for 33 years and died in 1360 A.D.² Bhōgīśvara's son and successor was Gaṇēśvara who, according to Vidyāpati's Kīrtīlatā, was defeated and killed by an enemy named Aslān, apparently a Musalmān, aided probably by certain members of the Ōinvar family. The date of this event is given in the work in a corrupt passage which may mean the 5th of the first (i.e. dark) half of Agrabāyana in La. Sam. 252 (1371 A.D.).³ His eldest son Virasimha seems to have been ruling over a part of the country in La. Sam. 228 (1347 A.D.) when a manuscript of the Liṅgavārttika was copied in his territory.⁴ That he was a ruler is also suggested by the title Mahārājādhirāja applied to him in the Kīrtīlatā.⁵ Sometime after Gaṇēśvara's death, his son Kīrtisimha became king with the help of Ibrāhīm Shāh Sharqī (1401-40 A.D.) of Jaunpur. The next king was Bhavasimha, a younger son of Kāmēśvara, and he was succeeded by his eldest son Dēvasimha Garuḍanārāyaṇa. Since a manuscript of Śrīdatta's Ēkāgnidānapaddhati, composed at Dēvasimha's request, was copied on Monday, Pausa-sudi 9, La. Sam. 299 (1418 A.D.), he seems to have ascended the throne before that date.⁶ According to a poem ascribed to Vidyāpati, Dēvasimha died on Thursday, Chaitra-vadi 6, La. Sam. 293 corresponding to Śaka 1324 (1403 A.D.) which is supposed to be a mistake for Śaka 1334 (1413 A.D.).⁷ As Śrīdhara's Kāvyaṇṇakāśavivēka was composed on Kārttika-vadi 10, La. Sam. 291 (1411 A.D.) when Dēvasimha's son Śivasimha Rūpanārāyaṇa is stated to have been ruling over Tirabhukti, the son seems to have been reigning jointly with the father as Yuvarāja (or at least over parts of the kingdom) and to have been a patron of Śrīdhara. Dēvasimha ruled from Dēvakulī about 2 miles to the north of Darbhanga while Śivasimha had his headquarters at Gajarathapura or Śivasimhapura about 5 miles to the south-east of Darbhanga. Three spurious copper-plate charters of king Śivasimha, recording the grant of the village of Bisapī in favour of the poet Vidyāpati, bear respectively the dates V.S. 1455, Śaka 1321, and La. Sam. 293 equated with V. S. 1455, Śaka 1321 and San 807, i.e. probably 1399 A.D.⁸ Śivasimha is described by Vidyāpati as the 'lord of the Five Gaṇḍas' and as one who subdued the king or kings of Gaṇḍa. This vague and conventional claim may suggest that, unlike his predecessors who owed allegiance to the Muhammadans, Śivasimha ruled for sometime as an independent monarch. The result, however, was fatal and, according to tradition, Śivasimha was defeated by the Musalmāns and carried away to Delhi.⁹ The same source suggests that, after the tragic end of Śivasimha's reign, his queen Lakhimādēvī ruled for 12 years and was succeeded by Padmasimha who was the younger brother of Śivasimha (and ruled for 6 years according to one tradition)¹⁰ and that Padmasimha's queen Vīśvāsadēvī ruled for 12 years after her husband's reign of one year. It is also believed that Lakhimā, accompanied by the poet Vidyāpati, took shelter at Purāditya's court at Rājabanauli where Vidyāpati wrote his Likhanāvalī in 1418 A.D. and copied the Bhāgavata in La. Sam. 309 (1428 A.D.).¹ The next king was Harasimha, younger son of Dēvasimha, and his son and successor was Narasimha Darpanārāyaṇa whose Kāṇḍa inscription is dated Śaka 1375 (1453 A.D.).² Narasimha was succeeded by his son Dhīrasimha Hridayanārāyaṇa during whose rule a manuscript of Śrīnivāsa's Śetudarpaṇī (a commentary on the Śetubandha) and another of the Kāṇḍaparvan of the Mahābhārata were copied respectively on Saturday, Kārttika-vadi 15, La. Sam. 321 (1440 A.D.), and in La. Sam. 327 (1446 A.D.).³ For some years Dhīrasimha appears to have been ruling jointly with his father or at least over an area of the country. He was succeeded by his younger brother Bhairavasimha Rūpanārāyaṇa-Harinārāyaṇa who ruled from Baruāra in the Bachchaurā Pargana of the Darbhanga District. According to some, he ascended the throne in 1496 A.D. when Vardhamāna composed his Gaṅgā-kṛtyavivēka and Vāchaspati-miśra wrote his Mahādānanirṇaya (earliest copy dated in La. Sam. 392 or 1511 A.D.) during his rule, while it is also suggested that he died about 1515 A.D.⁴ Bhairavasimha's successor was his son Rāmabhadra Rūpanārāyaṇa whose rule is placed by some before 1490 A.D. but by others in 1520-27 A.D.⁵, although both the theories appear to be wrong. The Tantrapradīpa was composed by Gadādhara (a grandson of Dhīrasimha) during his reign, while certain manuscripts are known to have been copied at Gadādhara's instance on Friday, Śrāvaṇa-vadi 1, La. Sam. 372 (1491 A.D.) and on Wednesday, Kārttika-sudi 5, La. Sam. 374 and Śaka 1426 (1504 A.D.).⁶ The known dates of Rāmabhadra's son and successor Lakṣmīnātha Kamsanārāyaṇa offer some difficulty unless it is believed that he was ruling jointly with his father or at least over a part of the country. A manuscript of the Dēvīmāhātmya was copied during Lakṣmīnātha's rule on Wednesday, Pausa-vadi 3, La. Sam. 393 (1512 A.D.).⁷ Lakṣmīnātha's Bhagirathpur inscription is dated in La. Sam. 394 (1513 A.D.).⁸ About this time, Tirhut became a bone of contention between Sultān Sikandar Lodi (1489-1517 A.D.) of Delhi and Hussain Shāh (1493-1519 A.D.) of Bengal; ultimately the latter's son Nugrat Shāh (1519-32 A.D.) invaded Tirhut, put the king (probably Lakṣmīnātha) to death and appointed his brothers-in-law, 'Alā-uddin and Makhdum-i-'Alam, governors of the country.⁹ This account of the Muslim historians is corroborated by a stanza giving the date of Lakṣmīnātha's death as Tuesday, Bhādra-sudi 1,

² JBORS, Vol. XX, pp. 15-19. Jayaswal wrongly interpreted the chronogram śar-āśva-madana as 1357. Traditions referred to by Eggeling (loc. cit.) omit Harasimha and assign Narasimha's accession to 1470 A.D.

The Ōinvār or Sugaunā Dynasty²

(middle of the 14th century to 1527 A.D.)

² The genealogy quoted by Grierson (Ind. Ant., Vol. XIV., p. 196) represents Kāmēśvara as the son of Lakṣmaṇa, grandson of Gōvinda, great-grandson of Viśvarūpa and great-great-grandson of Atirūpa. Udayasimha is mentioned as another son of Bhavasimha and Sarvasimha is represented as the only son of Tripurasimha. Ratnēśvarasimha (Ratāya), Rāghusimha Vijayanārāyaṇa and Brahmasimha Harinārāyaṇa are mentioned as brothers of Narasimha Darpanārāyaṇa. A brother of Chandrasimha was Durlabhasimha or Rāpasimha whose son was Viśvanātha Naranārāyaṇa. Rāmachandra and Pratāparudra are represented as the sons of Viśvanātha, and Ratnasimha as the son of Rāmachandra. Purushōttama seems to be mentioned as Garudanārāyaṇa. A brother of Lakṣmīnātha Kāṁsanārāyaṇa was Balabhadra and his two step-brothers were Ratīnātha and Bhavanātha Hridayanārāyaṇa. Mention is also made of Dhīrasimha's son Jagannārāyaṇa whose sons were Madhusūdana, Śrinātha, Kirtisimha, Rudranārāyaṇa and Viravara.

Besides the few facts about Bhairavasimha mentioned in the above sketch, some more are also known. It seems that he was originally ruling the kingdom (or part of it) jointly with his elder brother Dhīrasimha with the secondary name Rūpanārāyaṇa and that on his brother's death he succeeded to the throne with the name Harinārāyaṇa, his son Rāma-bhadra then assuming the name Rūpanārāyaṇa. The reason why Rāghavasimha, son of Dhīrasimha, was deprived of his father's throne is unknown.

Many of the Ōinvār kings patronised men of letters. Bhairavasimha was also a great patron of learning and under his patronage Ruchipati wrote his Anargharāghavaṭikā, Vāchaspati-miśra his Vyavahārachintāmaṇi, Kṛtyamālāraṇya and Mahādānanirṇaya, and Vardhamān-ōpādhyāya his Daṇḍavivēka. Vāchaspati was his parishad or pārishada (i.e. councillor) and Vardhamāna his dharmādhikaraṇika or judge. Vāchaspati's Dvāitanirṇaya was written at the request of Bhairavasimha's queen Jayā or Jayātmā, mother of Rājādhirāja Purushōttama who seems to have ruled a part of the kingdom under his father. Miśra-miśra wrote his Vivādachandra and Padārthachandra at the instance of the wife of Chandrasimha who was a brother (probably step-brother) of Bhairavasimha. According to the Mahādānanirṇaya, Bhairavasimha excavated many tanks, gave away some towns and townships and performed a Tulāpurushadāna.¹

Vidyāpati's Durgābhaktitaranginī mentions Bhairavasimha as śaury-āvarjita-pañcha-Gauḍa-dharaṇinātha and Vardhamāna's Daṇḍavivēka describes him as Gauḍ-ēśvara-pratiśarīram-atipratāpaḥ Kēdārārāyam-avagachchhati dāra-tulyam.² The vague claim of victory over the rulers of the Five Gauḍas, which is conventional and seems to point to the independent status claimed by Bhairavasimha, reminds us of the fact that the only other Ōinvār ruler with similar claims is Śivasimha who is called Pañcha-Gauḍ-ēśvara, i.e. lord of the Five Gauḍas, in Vidyāpati's songs and is described in the same poet's Śaivasarvasvasāra as śaury-āvarjita-Gauḍa-mahīpāla (i.e. one who conquered the king or kings of Gauḍa by his prowess) and in his Purushaparīkshā as one having earned fame in battles with the kings of Gauḍa and Gajjana.³ These facts appear to show that amongst the Ōinvārs at least Śivasimha and Bhairavasimha aspired for independent status. Besides the Muslim rulers of Delhi, those of Jaunpur and Bengal were also each eager to spread his influence in Tirhut and the Ōinvārs, who owed allegiance to Delhi, had sometimes to submit to these powers as well.⁴ But on occasions a few of them got an opportunity to assume independence temporarily as a result of quarrels amongst the said Muslim powers or of their weakness or preoccupations. It is interesting in this connection to note that, as feudatories of the Muslims, the Ōinvārs were not expected to issue coins in their own names. That Bhairavasimha ruled for sometime as an independent

⁴ We have seen how Kāmēśvara and Bhōglēśvara obtained rulership from Firūz Shāh Tughluq of Delhi and Kirtisimha from Ibrāhīm Shāh (1402-36 A. D.) of Jaunpur. Khwāja Jahān (1394-99 A. D.) of Jaunpur succeeded in extending his influence in Tirhut (Camb. Hist. Ind., Vol. III, p. 251) and Husain Shāh (1458-79 A. D.) crushed the semi-independent landholders of that country before 1466 A. D. (ibid., p. 255). For a short time Iliyās Shāh (1343-57 A. D.) of Bengal occupied Tirhut (ibid., p. 176). Some of the songs attributed to Vidyāpati speak of Muslim rulers like Gyaśadīna Surātāna, Nāsira Sāha, Pañcha-Gauḍēśvara Rāya Nasarata Sāha and Ālama Sāha (JBRS, Vol. XL, p. 107-10). There is considerable difference of opinion about the identification of these rulers.

ruler of Tirhut is indicated by his issue of silver coins, one of which is now under study. It is also interesting to note that Śivasimha is the only other Ōinvār king whose coins have been discovered.

In 1913 three small gold coins, out of a lot discovered at the village of Pipra in the Champaran District, were received in the Indian Museum, Calcutta. They were noticed by R. D. Banerji in the Annual Report of the Archaeological Survey of India, 1913-14, 248-49, Plate LXVIII, Nos. 1-3. The coins are round in shape with diameters varying between .3 and .325 inch and weights between 13.6 and 14 grains. As on the coin of Bhairavasimha under study, the legend on the Pipra gold coins runs on from the obverse to the reverse. The legend on the obverse reads śrī- and that on the reverse in two lines runs (1) Śiva- (2) śya. King Śiva, who issued these coins, has been rightly identified by Banerji with king Śivasimha of the Ōinvār dynasty of Tirhut. A similar coin was previously published by Cunningham in his Coins of Medieval India, p. 54, Plate VI, No. 18. Banerji seems to assign the copper coins¹ bearing the name of Champakāranya to the dynasty of Śivasimha; but they were issued by the rulers of the Karpāṭa dynasty of Simraon (Samaragrāma) and not by the Ōinvārs of Tirhut.

The importance of the coin published here is two-fold. In the first place, it shows, as already indicated above, that Ōinvār Bhairavasimha ruled for sometime as an independent monarch and signalised the achievement with the issue of some silver coins. Secondly, we learn for the first time from it that Bhairavasimha ascended the throne about 1475-76 A. D. and ruled at least for about 15 years down to 1489-90 A. D. The view assigning his accession to 1496 A. D. is thus certainly wrong.

POSTSCRIPT

Another Silver Coin of Bhairavasimha

Shortly after my paper on the silver coin of Bhairavasimha had been sent to the press, Mr. A. N. Lahiri, one of my Epigraphical Assistants, had occasion to visit Calcutta where he studied some coins in the cabinet of the Archaeological Section of the Indian Museum. In the course of his study, Mr. Lahiri luckily came across another silver coin of Bhairavasimha, closely resembling the one discussed above. On his return to Ootacamund, he kindly placed at my disposal the plaster casts of the coin, which he had prepared with the permission of Mr. R. C. Kar, Superintendent of the Archaeological Section.

This coin was examined by V. A. Smith and was noticed as No. 3 under the head 'Sundry Coins' at the last page (p. 333) of his Catalogue of the Coins in the Indian Museum, Vol. I, 1906. He correctly gives the metal, weight and size of the coin respectively as silver, 164 grains and .9 inch. Unfortunately, Smith, who thought that the provenance of the coin might be Nepal, failed to read any part of the five-line (not four-line as supposed by him) legend on the obverse and the reverse. In the Annual Report of the Archaeological Survey of India, 1913-14, p. 259 (Plate LXIX, No. 31), R. D. Banerji made an unsuccessful attempt to read the legend.

The present coin (No. 2) was struck on a flan slightly smaller than that of Bhairavasimha's other coin (No. 1) dealt with above. As a result of this, some of the letters and numerical figures that can be seen on Coin No. 1 are cut off on Coin No. 2. The two coins, although they apparently bear the same date, were struck from two different dies. In some cases, the forms of the letters are different on the two specimens; cf. h in mahārāja, s in simha, etc. As on Coin No. 1, some letters on Coin No. 2 are damaged owing to later punching by the shroffs; cf. ya in nārāyaṇa and ra in Tirakbhukti. Similarly, two forms of the letters j, r and h have been used in the legend on No. 2 as in that of No. 1. The akshara śrī before Bhairava, which exhibits the sign of later punching on coin No. 1, seems to be badly shaped on coin No. 2. In spite, however, of these differences, the arrangement of the letters and numerical figures in the legends on both the coins is the same. But, as indicated above, some of these letters and figures in the spaces outside the central square are cut off on Coin No. 2. The legend in the central squares on both sides of Coin No. 2 reads as follows :

Obverse	Reverse
1 Ma-	1 Ti-
2 hārāja-	2 rabh[u]kti-
3 [śrī]-Darppanārā-	3 rāja-[śrī]-Bhaira-
4 yaṇ-ātma-	4 vas[iṃ]ha-
5 ja-	5 sya [*]

No. 41--AIVARMALAI INSCRIPTION OF VARAGUNA II, SAKA 792

S. SANKARANARAYANAN, OOTACAMUND

The subjoined inscription¹ is engraved on the neatly dressed portion of the rock above a natural cave on the hill called Aivarmalai in the village of Aiyampālaiyam in the Palni Taluk of the Madurai District. I edit it with the kind permission of the Government Epigraphist for India.

This epigraph in seven lines is in the Tamil language and Vatteluttu characters. Unlike in the Ambāsamudram inscription² of Varaguna II, the letter k assumes the slanting form and the double kk is never written as a group. As in the Śūchindram inscription³ of Mārañjaḍaiyan, two forms of t are used, the one with ends of the two arms joined (cf. Kāḷattu in line 3) and the other with separated arms (cf. *ṇūṇu=ṭto*⁴ in line 1; amaitta in line 6). Though the syllable po in pon (lines 6-7) resembles that in the Ambāsamudram record, the syllable pō in ponḍaṇa (line 2; cf. mō in line 6) is distinguished by the signs for ē and ā added to p.⁵ A loop at the end added to the sign of medial i makes medial ī. The syllable śva in Pāriśva (line 4) is written in Grantha characters.

This inscription is of great importance as it is dated in the eighth regnal year of Varaguna equated with Śaka year 792 expired, and thus provides one of the two⁶ most important dates in early Pāṇḍya chronology. It records a gift of 502 kāṇam of gold to the Jaina monk Śāntivira-kkuravar of Kāḷam, who was a disciple of another Jaina monk named Guṇavira-kkuravaiḍiḡaḷ. The former is said to have renovated the figures of Pārśvanātha and the Yakshis (Iyakkī-avaigai), probably attending on Pārśvanātha, at Tiruvayirai, i.e., Aivarmalai.⁷ The gift is said to have been made for food offerings (avi) to the deities and for feeding (śōṇu) one Jaina ascetic (probably daily).

Though there is much disagreement on the identification of Varaguna mentioned in records like the inscriptions from Tiruvellai and Lāḡuḡi,⁸ there can be no difference of opinion in ascribing the present inscription to Varaguna II. For the Śaka date of this record is too

³ TAS, Vol. IV, pp. 118 ff.

⁵ The other is the Ānaimalai inscription of Mārañjaḍaiyan alias Parāntaka Varaguna I (cf. above, Vol. VIII, pp. 317 ff.).

⁶ Cf. the popular village deity called Iakki in South India.

⁸ For conflicting views, see above, Vol. XI, p. 253; Vol. XXVIII, p. 39 on the one hand, and Vol. XX, pp. 48 ff., p. 50, note 5, on the other.

late for his grandfather¹ who has been identified² with Varaguna (I) of the Larger Sinnamanūr grant³ and Jaṭila-Parāntaka Neḍuñjaḍaiyan of the Vēlvikkudi plates⁴ and for whom the Ānaimalai records offer the date Kali 3871 (expired)=A. D. 770.

With regard to the date of our record, the first thing to be borne in mind is that the Śaka year quoted, viz. 792, was expired (pōndaṇa). Thus Varaguna's eighth regnal year is coupled with Śaka 793 current (between March 870 A. D. and March 871 A. D.). He therefore ascended the throne sometime between March 862 and March 864 A.D. and not exactly between March 862 A.D. and March 863 A.D. as has generally been believed.⁵ The view assigning the king's accession to 861-62 A. D. overlooks the expression pōndaṇa.⁶ Secondly, the eighth regnal year of the record should better be taken as current rather than expired. For the first regnal year of a king is likely to be counted from the first day of his accession and not from the date of the expiry of the first year.⁷ But those who regard the Śaka year 792 of our record as current and at the same time the regnal year 8 as expired predate the king's accession by two years.⁸ Our record seems to necessitate a reconsideration of the dates suggested for the records from Tiruvellārai,⁹ Lālguḍi¹⁰ and Javantināthapuram,¹¹ all of which are dated in the 4+9th regnal year of Varaguna who has been identified with Varaguna I by some but with Varaguna II by others.

⁶ Above Vol. XXVIII, p. 39. Our record does not presuppose 'that the quoted Śaka year 792 was the current year' (above, Vol. XI, p. 253) nor does it give room for the doubt that it 'may be either current or expired' (QJMS, Vol. XLIII, p. 132).

The other date viz. 7th November, 824 A. D., has been suggested by ascribing the record to Varaguna I (above, Vol. XX, p. 51). This also seems to require a reconsideration if we assign the Ānaimalai inscription to that king.

¹⁰ The proposed date is the 6th December, 875 A. D. (loc. cit.; above, Vol. XXVIII, p. 42) by taking the regnal year as expired.

No. 42—TWO INSCRIPTIONS OF THE TIME OF GANAPATI

(1 Plate)

D. C. SIRCAR, OOTACAMUND

About the end of the year 1952, I visited Gwalior with the purpose of attending the Fifteenth Session of the Indian History Congress and examining the inscriptions preserved in the Gwalior Museum. Among the epigraphs copied by me in the said Museum two were stone inscriptions¹ belonging to the reign of the Yajvapāla king Ganapati (known dates between 1292 and 1300 A.D.) of Nalapura (modern Narwar in the Shivapuri District of the former Gwalior State). These two epigraphs are edited in the following pages. They have both been noticed by several scholars. The first of them, stated to have been originally found at Surwāyā in the Shivapuri District of the former Gwalior State, was noticed by Hirananda Sastri in the Annual Report of the Archaeological Survey of India, 1903-04, Part II, pp. 286 f., and this notice was followed in D. R. Bhandarkar's List of Inscriptions in Northern India, No. 636, and H. N. Dvivedi's Gwalior Rājyake Abhilekh, No. 163. But unfortunately Sastri's notice of the inscription contains some errors, the most important of which is that the epigraph does not record the benefactions of Rāṇā Adhigadēva of the Muchchhaka family but of Rāṇaka Chāchigadēva of the Lubdhaka dynasty. The other epigraph, found at Narwar in the same District, was noticed by A. Cunningham, ASIR, Vol. II, p. 315; F. Kielhorn, Ind. Ant., Vol. XXII, p. 81; M. B. Garde, ibid., Vol. XLVII, p. 241, and Annual Report of the Archaeological Department of the Gwalior State, V.S. 1971, No. 8; D. R. Bhandarkar, op. cit., No. 642; and H. N. Dvivedi, op. cit., No. 174. It has been said that the eulogy in question was composed by Śiva, son of Lōhaḍa. Actually, however, the poet's name was Śivanābhaka who was the son of Lōhaḍa. The name of the person responsible for writing the letters on the stone is given as Anarasiniha, though it is really Arasiniha. There seems also to be some confusion about the week-day in the date of the record, which has sometimes been taken to be Friday, although it is actually Thursday. In any case, the published notices of both the inscriptions appear to be based on their inaccurate and incomplete transcripts since some of the interesting informations supplied by them have been altogether ignored.

The inscriptions contain each a eulogy recording the construction of a 'step-well' during the reign of the Yajvapāla monarch Ganapati. An interesting feature of these epigraphs as well as some others² of the type belonging to the time of the Yajvapāla kings of Nalapura (modern Narwar) is that they speak of a number of people who settled in the Yajvapāla dominions from Gōpādri or Gōpāchala (modern Gwalior). This was no doubt the result of the extinction of Hindu rule and establishment of the hold of the Turkish Muhammadans at Gwalior.³ A number of these displaced people appear to have been of Māthura Kāyastha origin. Some of them (or at least their ancestors) were probably servants of the Hindu kings of Gwalior and a good many of them appear to have been absorbed in the services under the Yajvapāla kings of Nalapura. The inscriptions also show that some of the Kāyasthas of the Māthura community were assiduous students of Sanskrit literature and composed poems of no mean order.

1. Surwāyā Inscription of V. S. 1350

The inscribed stone is a squarish slab, the lines of writing being engraved on an excavated bed leaving a raised margin on all the four sides. There are 23 lines in the inscription; the last of which is incised on the lower border. The writing in the excavated bed occupies an area about 16½ inches in length and 17 inches in height. The letters are neatly and carefully engraved and the preservation of the writing is fairly satisfactory although a few letters are damaged here and there.

The characters belong to the Dēvanāgarī alphabet of about the thirteenth century and resemble those in other records of the age and region in question.¹ The letter b has been indicated by the sign for v. The language of the record is Sanskrit and, with the exception of a few passages at the beginning and end, the whole of it is written in verse. It is a praśasti written in 23 stanzas in different metres. The verses are consecutively numbered. As regards orthography, it may be observed that consonants are only in some cases reduplicated after r and anusvāra is used in most cases in the place of class nasals and generally also of final m at the end of the halves of stanzas. The date quoted in line 22 is V. S. 1350, Kārttika-vadi 7, Wednesday. It corresponds to the 23rd September 1293 A.D. The saptamī tithi began on that date at 19 of the day.

The inscription begins with the Siddham symbol followed by the passage Om namaḥ Śivāya. Next follow the 23 stanzas of the praśasti in lines 1-22. Verses 1-3 contain adoration to the god Śambhu (Śiva), the goddess Mahārūṇḍā and the composition of good poets. Mahārūṇḍā was apparently a form of the Mother-goddess. Another epigraphic record² suggests that she was the family deity of the Yajvapāla kings. The goddess was possibly also worshipped at the city of Surwāyā (old Sarasvatipattana)³ which lay within the dominions of the Yajvapālas and where the record under study was found. Since the word ruṇḍa means 'a headless trunk', it is possible to connect Mahārūṇḍā with the well-known Chhinnamastā aspect of the Mother-goddess.

Verses 4 ff. describe the family of the hero of the praśasti. The first stanza of this section (verse 4) introduces the Lubdhaka family, the members of which are stated to have been always engaged in pūrta-karman (i.e. meritorious works such as feeding Brāhmanas, digging wells, planting groves, building temples, etc.). According to Sanskrit lexicons, the word lubdhaka means 'a hunter'; but the name Lubdhaka in our record is no doubt the same as Lōdhā as found in contemporary inscriptions found in the same area.⁴ Since the stanza further states that the Lubdhaka family belonged to the Kāśyapa gōtra, it could scarcely have anything to do with the hunters who represent one of the lowest strata of the society. The Lōdhās of the neighbouring Agra region are stated to be an agriculturist community.⁵

Verses 5-6 introduce Gōddhala of the Lubdhaka family, who was famous for his liberality, while verses 7-9 describe Padma who was the son of Gōddhala. While the father may be taken to have served many kings (iśvaras) who cannot be identified, the son is stated to have possessed immense wealth and to have been a great devotee of the god Śambhu (Śiva). Padma is also described as a protector of the people. Verse 10 introduces the lady Siyā who was the wife of Padma. The following three stanzas (verses 11-13) describe the two sons of Padma and Siyā. The elder of the two brothers was Kākali and the younger Chāchiga who enjoyed the title Rāṇaka. Chāchiga is described as a dharma-putra (i.e. one theoretically accepted as a son) of king Gōpāla who is no doubt the Yajvapāla king of that name. Yajvapāla Gōpāla, whose known dates range between 1279 and 1289 A.D., was the father of king Gaṇapati mentioned below. Verses 14 ff. describe the activities of Chāchiga who is stated to have visited the holy places of the gods Kēdāra and Sōmēśa (i.e. Sōmēśvara or Sōmanātha) as well as Prayāga and Gayasīrsha (i.e. Gayā) and to have offered piṇḍa to his dead ancestors at the last-named place. Verse 16 states that Chāchiga's activities in the various tīrthas and [fields of] battle absolved him from his debt to his master Gōpāladēva. The next stanza (verse 17) mentions the lady Sahajā who was the wife of Chāchiga.

Verse 18 records the excavation of a vāpi by Chāchiga. Since the following stanza (verse 19) refers to the sound of its waves, the word vāpi would appear to indicate here a tank rather than a step-well. But the inscriptions of the area in question use the word generally in the sense of a step-well. The reference to the waves, etc., in the description of the vāpi thus appears to be merely poetical exaggeration. Verse 20 states that Chāchiga also made a vāṭikā or garden apparently around the vāpi or in its neighbourhood. The garden is described as containing plants for both flowers and fruits. Verse 21 mentions Rāpaka Chachau (apparently a colloquial form of the name Chāchiga) as a servant of Ganapati, no doubt the Yajvapāla king of the same name, who was the son and successor of Gōpāla. As already indicated above, the known dates of Ganapati range between 1292 and 1300 A.D. The stanza prays for the prosperity (śubha) of the punya-sthāna (i.e. sacred place) meaning the area containing the vāpi and the vāṭikā.

Verse 22 states that the poet Jayasīrṇha, who belonged to the Māthura Kāyastha community and was the son of Lōhaṭa, composed the eulogy. Lōhaṭa is also mentioned in several other contemporary epigraphs (including the one of V. S. 1355 from Narwar edited below) which were composed by another of his sons, named Śivanābhaka. The next stanza (verse 23), with which the prāśasti ends, says that the eulogy was written by Maharāja who was the son of Sōmarāja of the same community of the Māthura Kāyasthas. The name of the writer is spelt as Maharāja in the same stanza occurring elsewhere also.¹ It should not therefore be regarded as a mistake for Mahārāja unless it is believed that mahā was changed to maha for the requirement of the metre. The word likhita in this stanza shows that Maharāja wrote the letters of the record on the stone in ink or a paint since, as stated in line 23 incised on the lower border of the inscribed slab, the engraver of the document was one Dēvasīrṇha.

Of the geographical names mentioned in the inscription, the holy places of Kēdāra in the Himalayas and Sōmēśa or Sōmanātha, i.e. modern Pāṭan Sōmnāth in Kathiāwar, as well as Prayāga near modern Allahabad in U.P. and Gayasīrsha, i.e. Gayā in Bihār, are well known. The community of the Māthura Kāyasthas received their name from the city of Mathurā headquarters of the District of that name in U.P.

2. Narwar Inscription of V. S. 1355

This inscription is engraved on a rectangular slab. There are 21 lines of writing in the record, which cover an area about 23 inches in length and 16 inches in height. The letters are as neatly and carefully incised as in the Surwāyā inscription edited above; but the preservation of the writing is more satisfactory in the present case, the number of damaged letters being fewer.

The characters are similar to those of the Surwāyā inscription. There is little distinction between the sign indicating a final consonant and that of the medial ā mark. In some cases, the daṇḍa has been placed so close to the preceding letter as to look like an ā-mātrā. The language is Sanskrit and, like the Surwāyā inscription, it is written in verse with the exception of a few passages at the beginning and end. There are altogether 28 stanzas in various metres in the eulogy under study. The verses are numbered consecutively. The inscription resembles the other record in point of orthography; but it exhibits several cases of the use of final m at the end of the first and second halves of verses. Consonants are occasionally redoubled after r. The date of the record is quoted at the end. It is V.S. 1355, Kārttika-vadi 5, Thursday, which corresponds to the 25th September 1298 A.D. The pañchami tithi commenced on that date at 38 of the day.

Like the Surwāyā inscription, the present record also begins with the Siddham symbol followed by the passage Om namah Sivāya. Then come the 28 stanzas of the prāśasti. Verses 1-2 contain adoration to Manmathasūdana (Śiva) and the Sun-god who is described as the husband of Rannā. In epic and Puranic mythology, the names of the Sun-god's wives are given as Samjñā, Chhāyā, Rājñī, Nikshubhā or Nishkumbhā, Suvarchalā, etc. The Prakritic name Rannā (probably derived from the name Rājñī) is not found in Sanskrit works. But there is evidence to show that Rannā was a popular deity regarded as the Sun's wife in the western parts of Northern India. An inscription of V.S. 1420, Chaitra-sudi 6, Sunday (March 10, 1364 A.D.), on the metal image of a goddess discovered in Gujarat, refers to the deity as Rannādēvī and describes her as the wife of the Sun styled Sāmbāditya,¹ a well-known aspect of the god. Our inscription actually speaks of the god as 'one whose abode is at Śamisthala'. This seems to refer to a temple of the god at a place called Śamisthala which is, however, difficult to identify. The place may have formed a part of Narwar or lay in its vicinity.

Verse 3 introduces the city of Nalapura (i.e. Narwar) which was the capital of the Yajvapāla kings mentioned in the following stanzas (verses 4-7). The kings mentioned are Chāhaḍa; his son Nrivarman; his son Āsalladēva; and his son Gōpāla. Among the epithets of Āsalladēva tri-vidha-kṣitīśa-chūdāmaṇi in verse 6 is interesting. The idea may be compared with that contained in the epithet aśvapati-gajapati-narapati-rāja-tray-ādhipati found in the string of royal epithets in many medieval records.² This epithet seems to represent a king as the lord of three-fold sovereignty, i.e. the three wings of sovereignty, viz., the cavalry, elephant force and infantry, while the passage quoted above from the record under study appears to refer to the supreme position of Āsalla among kings who were regarded as Aśvapati or Gajapati or Narapati according as they were strong in cavalry or elephant force or infantry. It seems that some kings considered themselves as sufficiently strong in all the three wings although their neighbours were inclined to apply to them any one of the three epithets with reference to the wing in which they were regarded as especially strong.

Verse 8 mentions Gōpāla's son and successor Ganapati who was the reigning monarch. Ganapati is here stated to have captured Kirtidurga, while the next stanza (verse 9) continues the description of the same king. The Deogarh fort was built by Mahidhara, Chief Minister of Chandēlla Kirtivarman (c. 1070-98 A.D.), and was named as Kirtigiri after the Chandēlla king.¹ The fort called Kirtidurga may thus be the same as the fortress of Deogarh in the Lalitpur Subdivision of the Jhansi District, U.P. The Chandēlla contemporary of Yajvapāla Gaṇapati is difficult to identify as his reign period falls between those of Bhōjavarman whose known date is 1288 A.D. and Hammīravarman who is known to have ruled in 1308 A.D.² When exactly Gaṇapati led an expedition against the Chandēlla kingdom cannot also be determined. There is no reference to his struggle with the Chandēllas in any other record, although Chandēlla Viravarman's invasion of the Yajvapāla (Jajapēlla) kingdom in 1281 A.D. and his war with Gaṇapati's father Gōpala is referred to in several inscriptions.³ It may be that Gaṇapati was a subordinate ally of the Muslim Sultāns of Delhi and helped the latter in their struggle with the Chandēllas.

Verse 10 introduces the fort of Gōpāchala (i.e., Gwalior) and verse 11 a Māthura Kāyastha family of the Kāśyapa gōtra originally residing there. The next stanza (verse 12) mentions Alhaṇa of the said family while verse 13 speaks of Alhaṇa's son Kānhaḍa who was a devotee of the god Kṛishṇa (Viṣṇu). Verse 14 describes Kānhaḍa's son Vijahaḍa as a mantrin (minister) engaged in the service of a king. But the name of Vijahaḍa's master or the family to which he belonged is not mentioned. It is thus uncertain whether the king referred to had his headquarters at Gwalior or Narwar. Verse 15 mentions Vijahaḍa's wife Mēnagā while the next stanza (verse 16) states that, having worshipped the river-goddesses Gāṅgā and Yamunā at Prayāga (near Allahabad, U.P.), Vijahaḍa got two sons who were named after the said deities as Gāṅgadēva and Yāmunaḍēva.

Verses 17-18 describe Gāṅgadēva and his wife Lōṇā and verse 19 refers to their four sons. The next stanza (verse 20) gives the names of the four sons of Gāṅgadēva as Palhaū, Harirāja, Śivarāja and Hamsarāja. Verse 21 describes Palhadēva, no doubt the same as Palhaū, as his master's favourite, and verse 22 states that he constructed a dharma-sthāna (i.e., a sacred place) for the merit of his brother Harirāja who was dead. Verses 23 ff. disclose the nature of this dharma-sthāna. The first stanza of the section (verse 23) records the excavation of a vāpī. As already indicated above, the word vāpī is generally used in the inscriptions of the Malwa-Rajasthan region in the sense of a step-well, although the description in the present case, as in the Surwāyā inscription, seems to suggest a tank rather than a step-well. This may be due to an amount of exaggeration in the description as in the Surwāyā inscription edited above. Verse 24 adds that a chaitya (i.e., shrine) for the god Śambhu (Śiva) and his consort, the goddess Umā, was also constructed apparently in the vicinity of the vāpī. Verse 25 speaks of the plantation of a kēlī-vana or pleasure garden full of fruit trees and flowering plants probably around the vāpī. Verse 26 prays for the permanence of the dharma-sthāna (i.e., the sacred place consisting of the vāpī, chaitya and kēlī-vana) created by Palhaū or Palhadēva for the merit of his deceased brother Harirāja.

Verse 27 introduces a family of Kāyasthas (Lipikṛit-kula) hailing from Gōpādri (Gwalior) in which Māthura Dāmōdara is stated to have been born. The family thus belonged to the Māthura Kāyastha community. The son of Dāmōdara was Kōśādhipa (i.e., treasurer) Lōhaṭa. The name of the king whom Lōhaṭa served as a treasurer is not mentioned. Whether he was a king of Gwalior or Narwar is also not clear.¹ There is, however, no doubt that Lōhata mentioned here is the same as the Māthura Kāyastha of the same name mentioned in the Surwāyā inscription edited above. Lōhata's son Śivanābhaka, described as a master of pada (vocabulary, etymology or grammar), pramāna (logic), kavitā (poetry) and sāhitya (literary composition or the science of rhetoric), is stated to have composed the prastāvi or eulogy under study. It will be seen that the Surwāyā inscription was composed by Śivanābhaka's brother Jayasimha. This Māthura Kāyastha family hailing from Gwalior and settled at different places (such as Surwāyā and Narwar) in the Yajvapāla dominions thus produced a number of scholars. The same stanza is also found in several other *prastāvis*² composed by Śivanābhaka with the third foot differently worded.

The Budherā (Shivapuri District) pillar inscription of V.S. 1351 and Śaka 1216 (1294 A.D.) is stated to mention Paramabhāṭāraka Padmarāja of Kirtidurga. See Dvivedi's List, No. 170; Annual Report of the Archaeological Department of the Gwalior State, V.S. 1938, No. 23. Really, however, there is no mention of a king named Padmarāja in the inscription which is a record of the time of Yajvapāla Gaṇapati. See below, Vol. XXXIII, pp. 166 ff.

Verse 28 states that the eulogy was written (i.e., written on the stone to facilitate the work of the engraver) by Arasimha who also belonged to the Māthura Kāyastha community and was the son of Abhinanda. A prose passage following the above stanza states that the record was engraved by the Sūtradhāra (architect) named Dhanauka.

Of the geographical names mentioned in the inscription, Nalapura, Gōpādri or Gōpāchala and Prayāga are well-known. We have suggested the identification of Kirtidurga with the fort of Deogarh in the Jhansi District, U.P., although it is not quite certain. Śamīsthala, as indicated above, cannot be satisfactorily identified.
