

POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

BY HEMCHANDRA RAYCHAUDHURI,
M.A., PH.D., F.R.A.S.B.

UNIVERSITY OF CALCUTTA
1950

POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

FROM THE ACCESSION OF PARIKSHIT TO THE EXTINCTION OF THE GUPTA DYNASTY

BY

HEMCHANDRA RAYCHAUDHURI, M.A., Ph.D. F.R.A.S.B.

CARMICHAEL PROFESSOR AND HEAD OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ANCIENT INDIAN HISTORY AND CULTURE, CALCUTTA UNIVERSITY ; AUTHOR OF "THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE VAISHNAVA SECT," "STUDIES IN INDIAN ANTIQUITIES," JOINT-AUTHOR OF "THE GROUNDWORK OF INDIAN HISTORY,"
"AN ADVANCED HISTORY OF INDIA" ETC.

FIFTH EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED

PUBLISHED BY THE
UNIVERSITY OF CALCUTTA

1950

Rs. 15/-

PRINTED IN INDIA
PRINTED BY S. C. GHOSE
AT THE CALCUTTA PRESS LTD., 1, WELLINGTON SQUARE, CALCUTTA

Reg. No. O. P. 90—April, 1950—A

To

Sir Asutosh Mookerjee

in token of grateful regard and esteem

PREFACE TO THE FIFTH EDITION

A fifth edition of the Political History of Ancient India is now placed before scholars. The author, who has been in very poor health for a long time, has found the task of revision a difficult one. He is conscious of the fact that misprints and other faults justly open to censure have not been avoided. Fresh study of the subject and new discoveries have necessitated a thorough revision of several chapters, preparation of additional notes, omission of parts of the text and other amendments. No pains have been spared to bring the work up-to-date.

Help of various kinds, including revision of Indexes, has been rendered by Mr. Durgadas Mukherji, Dr. Sudhakar Chatterji, Mr. Rabis Chandra Kar and Dr. Golapchandra Raychaudhuri to whom the author's acknowledgments are due.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CALCUTTA :

March 1, 1950.

H. C. R. C.

PREFACE TO THE FOURTH EDITION

In placing the fourth edition of the Political History of Ancient India in the hands of students of Indian Antiquities the author takes the opportunity of expressing his grateful thanks to scholars and explorers who have made accessible the rich stores of ancient learning and the priceless memorials of vanished glory that hitherto lay hidden beyond the ken of students and investigators. Suggestions and criticisms that earlier editions of the present work received in recent times, though not always of an instructive and informed character, have enabled the author to restate his position in regard to many matters treated in the volume. While unwilling to dogmatise on controversial points the writer of the following pages thinks that he has adduced fresh evidence in support of some of the views that were put forward years ago, long before certain recent notes and dissertations on kindred subjects saw the light of the day. He has also sought to incorporate new material which, it is hoped, may be of some little use to the ever-widening circle of eager inquirers who are interested in the chequered annals of this ancient land.

The Cimmerian veil of darkness that enshrouds not a few obscure spaces in the spectrum of the early history of this country cannot be lifted by the wand of the magician or the trick of the conjurer. Even if such a feat were possible the author confesses that he does not possess the requisite implements.

Help in the laborious task of compiling the indexes has been given by Dr. D. C. Sircar and Professor G. C. Raychaudhuri to whom the author's acknowledgments are due.

PREFACE

ix

The volume that now goes forth before the public could not be made as free from mistakes as the present writer would have wished. Some of the errors and misprints have been noted and corrected but many blunders, justly open to censure, may have escaped attention. For these the author can only crave the indulgence of readers.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CALCUTTA:

March 31, 1938.

H. C. R. C.

PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION

The Political History of Ancient India now arrives at a third edition. An endeavour has been made to make it more accurate and up-to-date. Questions connected with certain dynasties, particularly of the Scythian period, have been treated afresh and several paragraphs have been revised in the light of the new information that may be gathered from literature as well as inscriptions discovered at Shahdaur, Mairā, Khalatse, Nāgārjunikōṇḍa, Guṇāighara and other places. Footnotes and appendices have been added to explain the author's viewpoint with regard to certain controversial matters. A new feature of the revised edition is the insertion in certain chapters, particularly of Part II, of introductory verses from literature to bring out some salient features of those chapters and, incidentally, to show that poets and sages of Ancient India were not altogether unmindful of the political vicissitudes through which their country passed. The author craves the indulgence of the reader for certain misprints that have crept into the text. The labour of revising the Indexes has been performed by Srijuts D. C. Raychaudhuri, G. C. Raychaudhuri and Anilkumar Raychaudhuri.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CALCUTTA

December 13, 1931.

H. C. R. C.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION

A new edition of the Political History of Ancient India from the Accession of Parikshit to the Extinction of the Gupta Dynasty is placed before the public. The work has been out of print for some time, and need has long been felt for a fresh edition. Therefore it goes forth once more having been revised and re-written in the light of the new information that is coming in so rapidly and in such vast bulk. No pains have been spared to bring the book up-to-date and make it more attractive to students. Material emendations have been made in almost every chapter. Some of the extracts in Sanskrit have been provided with English renderings.

A new feature of the present volume is the inclusion of a number of maps, and a few chronological and synchronistic tables, which, it is to be hoped, will increase the usefulness of the work. The incorporation of fresh material has necessitated a recasting of the indexes.

The present writer never intended his work to be a comprehensive survey of the political and dynastic history of every Indian province. He is chiefly concerned with those kingdoms and empires whose influence transcended provincial limits and had an important bearing upon the general course of political events in the heart and nerve-centres of the Indian sub-continent. Dynasties of mere local interest (e.g., the Tamil Prachintas of the far south, or the Himālayan Pratyantas in the far north) have received very brief notice, as these did not acquire an all-India importance till after the Gupta period when a Jayadeva Parachakra-kāma had intimate dynastic relations with several rulers of the Indian interior, a Lalitāditya pushed his conquests as far as Kanauj, and a Rājendra Chola carried his arms to the banks of the Ganges.

Further, the author does not claim for the period from Parikshit to Bimbisāra the same degree of authenticity as for the age of the Mauryas, the Śātavāhanas and the Guptas. The absence of trustworthy contemporary dynastic records makes it preposterous to put forward such a proposition. In regard to the early period it has been his principal endeavour to show that the huge fabric of sacerdotal and rhapsodic legends is not based solely on the mythical fancy of mendacious priests and story-telling Diaskeuasts, that bardic tales sometimes conceal kernels of sober facts not less trustworthy than the current accounts of the dynasties immediately preceding the raid of Alexander, and that chronological relation of the national transactions before 600 B. C. is not impossible. In trying to demonstrate this he has not confined himself to literature of a particular type, but has collated the whole mass of evidence, Vedic as well as Purāṇic, Brāhmanical as well as non-Brāhmanical, Buddhist as well as Jain, Indian as well as Hellenic.

The writer of these pages wishes to acknowledge with sincere thanks his indebtedness to scholars and critics who have helped him with valuable suggestions, and especially to Dr. Barnett, Professor Schrader, Dr. Jarl Charpentier, Mr. H. Subbaiya and Mr. Asananda Nag. He is also grateful for the kind assistance which he received in many difficulties from his friends and colleagues, among whom Mr. Sailendranath Mitra, Dr. Sunitikumar Chatterji, Mr. H. C. Ray and Mr. J. C. Chakravorti deserve especial mention. His acknowledgments are also due to Srijiut Golapchandra Raychaudhuri who gave him much valuable help in the preparation of maps and the revision of the Indexes. The author does not claim that the Indexes are exhaustive, but he has spared no pains to include all important references.

PREFACE

xiii

THE UNIVERSITY, CALCUTTA :

April 12, 1927.

H. C. R. C.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION

The object of the following pages is to sketch the political history of Ancient India from the accession of Parikshit to the extinction of the Gupta Dynasty. The idea of the work suggested itself many years ago from observing a tendency in some of the current books to dismiss the history of the period from the Bhārata war to the rise of Buddhism as incapable of arrangement in definite chronological order. The author's aim has been to present materials for an authentic chronological history of ancient India, including the neglected Post-Bhārata period, but excluding the Epoch of the Kanauj Empires which properly falls within the domain of the historian of Mediæval India.

The volume now offered to the public consists of two parts. In the first part an attempt has been made to furnish, from a comparison of the Vedic, Epic, Purāṇic, Jaina, Buddhist and secular Brāhmaṇical literature, such a narrative of the political vicissitudes of the post-Pārikshita-pre-Bimbisārian period as may not be less intelligible to the reader than Dr. Smith's account of the transactions of the post-Bimbisārian age. It has also been thought expedient to append, towards the end of this part, a short chapter on kingship in the Brāhmaṇa-Jātaka period. The purpose of the second part is to provide a history of the period from Bimbisāra to the Guptas which will be, to a certain extent, more-up-to-date, if less voluminous, than the classic work of Dr. Smith.

The greater part of the volume now published was written some years ago, and the author has not had the opportunity to discuss some of the novel theories advanced in recent works like The Cambridge History of India, and Mr. Pargiter's Ancient Indian Historical Tradition.

The writer of these pages offers his tribute of respect to the Hon'ble Sir Asutosh Mookerjee for providing opportunities for study which render it possible for a young learner to carry on investigation in the subject of his choice. To Professor D. R. Bhandarkar the author is grateful for the interest taken in the progress of the work. His acknowledgments are also due to Messrs. Girindramohan Sarkar and Rameshchandra Raychaudhuri for their assistance in preparing the Indexes. Lastly, this preface cannot be closed without a word of thanks to Mr. A. C. Ghatak, the Superintendent, for his help in piloting the work through the Press.

July 16, 1923.

H. C. R. [C.]

CONTENTS

PART I

FROM THE ACCESSION OF PARIKSHIT TO THE CORONATION OF BIMBISĀRA

	PAGE
CHAPTER I—INTRODUCTION
Section I. Foreword	1
„ II. Sources	2
CHAPTER II—KURUS AND VAIDEHAS
Section I. The Age of the Pārikshitas	12
„ II. The Age of the Great Janaka	48
„ III. The Later Vaidehas of Mithilā	80
„ IV. The Deccan in the Age of the Later Vaidehas	85
CHAPTER III—MAHĀJANAPADAS AND KINGSHIP
Section I. The Sixteen Mahājanapadas	95
„ II. An Epic Account of the Mahājanapadas	151
„ III. The Fall of Kāsi and the Ascendancy of Kosala	153
„ IV. Kingship	156

PART II

FROM THE CORONATION OF BIMBISĀRA TO THE EXTINCTION OF THE GUPTA DYNASTY

CHAPTER I—INTRODUCTION
Section I. Foreword	181
„ II. Local Autonomy and Imperial Unity	184

CHAPTER II—THE RISE OF MAGADHA

Section I. General Character of the Period ...	187
„ II. Republics in the Age of Bimbisāra	191
„ III. The Minor Principalities and Great Monarchies	197
„ IV. Magadha Crescent—Bimbisāra	205
„ V. Magadha Militant—Kūṇika-Ajātaśatru	210
„ VI. Ajātaśatru's Successors—The Transfer of Capital and the Fall of Avanti	216
„ VII. Chronology of the Haryāṇka-Śiśunāga Kings	225
„ VIII. The Nandas	229

CHAPTER III—THE PERSIAN AND MACEDONIAN INVASIONS

Section I. The Advance of Persia to the Indus	239
„ II. The Last of the Achæmenids and Alexander	244

CHAPTER IV—THE MAURYA EMPIRE : THE ERA OF DIGVIJAYA

Section I. The Reign of Chandragupta Maurya	264
„ II. The Reign of Bindusāra	296
„ III. The Early Years of Aśoka	302

CHAPTER V—THE MAURYA EMPIRE : THE ERA OF DHAMMAVIJAYA AND DECLINE

Section I. Aśoka after the Kaliṅga War	322
„ II. The Later Mauryas and the Decline of their Power	349

CONTENTS

xix

PAGE

CHAPTER VI—THE SUNGA (?) EMPIRE AND THE BACTRIAN GREEKS

Section I. The Reign of Pushyamitra ...	368
„ II. Agnimitra and his Successors ...	391
„ III. Importance of the Baimbika-Sunga Period of Indian History	397

CHAPTER VII—THE FALL OF THE MAGADHAN AND INDO- GREEK POWERS

Setion I. The Kānvas, the Later Śuṅgas and the Later Mitras ...	398
„ II. The Śātavāhanas and the Chetas	408
„ III. The End of Greek Rule in North-West India ...	422

CHAPTER VIII—SCYTHIAN RULE IN NORTHERN INDIA

Section I. The Śakas ...	431
„ II. The Pahlavas or Parthians ...	451
„ III. The Great Kushāns ...	458
„ IV. The Nāgas and the Later Kushāns ...	480

CHAPTER IX—SCYTHIAN RULE IN SOUTHERN AND WESTERN INDIA

Section I. The Kshaharātas ...	483
„ II. The Restoration of the Śātavāhana Empire ...	491
„ III. The Śakas of Ujjain and Kāthiāwār ...	505
„ IV. Administrative Machinery of the Scythian Period ...	514

CHAPTER X—THE GUPTA EMPIRE : THE RISE OF THE GUPTA POWER

Section I. The Foundation of the Gupta-Dynasty ...	527
„ II. Chandra Gupta I ...	530
„ III. Samudra Gupta Parākramāṅka ...	533

CHAPTER XI—THE GUPTA EMPIRE (continued) : THE AGE OF THE VIKRAMĀDITYAS

Section I. Chandra Gupta II Vikramāditya ...	553
„ II. Kumāra Gupta I Mahendrāditya ...	566
„ III. Skanda Gupta Vikramāditya ...	572

CHAPTER XII—THE GUPTA EMPIRE (continued) : THE LATER GUPTAS

Section I. Survival of the Gupta Power after Skanda Gupta ...	581
„ II. Puru Gupta and Narasiṃha Gupta Bālāditya ...	585
„ III. Kumāra Gupta II And Viṣṇugupta ...	590
„ IV. Budha Gupta ...	593
„ V. Successors of Budha Gupta ...	595
„ VI. The Line of Kṛishṇa Gupta ...	600

GENEALOGICAL AND SYNCHRONISTIC TABLES

The Pārikshita Family ...	47
Succession of some Vedic Teachers ...	51
Traditional Genealogy of the Pradyotas ...	221
Suggested chronological Table (of the Bimbisārid- Saiśunāga Period) ...	228
Maurya Dynasty ...	367

CONTENTS

xxi

	PAGE
Early Śātavāhanas	418
Satrapas of Mathurā	445n
Pallavas	501
Śakas of Ujjain	513
Vākātakas	565
The Early Imperial Guptas	599
The Latest Guptas	613
Synchronistic Table	To face page 640

APPENDICES, INDEXES ETC.

Abbreviations	xxii
Appendix A ; The Results of Aśoka's Propaganda in Western Asia	614
Appendix B : A Note on the Chronological Relation of Kaṇishka and Rudradāman I	618
Appendix C : A Note on the Later Guptas	623
Appendix D : The Decline of the Early Gupta Empire	626
Appendix E : Kingdoms of Trans-Vindhyan India	636
Bibliographical Index	641
General Index	651
Additions and Corrections	670

MAPS

1. India in the Age of Janaka	To face page 58
2. Ancient Dakṣiṇāpatha	93
3. The Mahājanapadas of Ancient India and East Irān	149
4. Bhāratavarsha	181
5. India in the Age of the Later Guptas	581

ABBREVIATIONS

A. B.	...	After the Buddha.
A. G. I.	...	Ancient Geography of India.
A. H. D.	...	Ancient History of the Deccan.
A. I. H. T.	...	Ancient Indian Historical Tradition.
Ait. Br.	...	Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.
Alex.	...	Plutarch's Life of Alexander.
Ang.	...	Anguttara Nikāya.
Ann. Bhand. Ins.	...	Annals of the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute.
Āpas. Śr. Sūtra	...	Āpastambīya Śrauta Sūtra.
App.	...	Appendix.
Arch. Rep.	...	Archæological Survey Report.
A. R.	...	Annual Report.
A. R. I.	...	Aryan Rule in India.
A. S. I.	...	Archæological Survey of India.
A. S. R. (Arch. Surv. Rep.).	...	Reports of the Archæological Survey of India.
A. S. W. I.	...	Archæological Survey of Western India.
A. V.	...	Atharva-Veda.
Baudh. Śr. Sūtra	...	Baudhāyana Śrauta Sūtra.
Bau. Sūtra.	...	Baudhāyana Dharma Sūtra.
Bhand. Com. Vol.	...	Bhandarkar Commemoration Volume.
B. K. S.	...	Book of Kindred Sayings.
Bomb. Gaz.	...	Bombay Gazetteer.
Br.	...	Brāhmaṇa.
Brīh. S.	...	Brīhat Saṁhitā.
Brīh. Up.	...	Brīhadāraṇyaka Upanishad.
Bud. Ind.	...	Buddhist India.
C.	...	Central

ABBREVIATIONS

xxiii

C. A. H.	Cambridge Ancient History.
Cal. Rev.	Calcutta Review.
Camb. Ed.	Cambridge Edition.
Camb. Hist. (Ind).	Cambridge History of India
(C. H. I.).		(Vol. I.).
Camb. Short. Hist.	(The) Cambridge Short History of India.
Carm. Lec.	Carmichael Lectures, 1918.
Ch. ...	}	...
Chap. ...
Chh. Up.	Chhāndogya Upanishad.
C. I. C. A. I.	Catalogue of Indian Coins, Ancient India.
C. I. I. ...	}	...
Corpus ...
Com. Vol.	Commemoration Volume.
Cunn.	Cunningham.
D.	Digha Nikāya.
Dialogues	Dialogues of the Buddha.
D P. P. N.	Dictionory of Pali Proper Names (Malalasekera).
D. K. A.	Dynasties of the Kali Age.
D. U.	Dacca University.
Ed.	Edition.
E. H. D.	Early History of the Dekkan.
E. H. I.	Early History of India.
E. H. V. S.	Early History of the Vaishnava Sect.
Ep. Ind.	Epigraphia Indica.
Gandhāra (Foucher)	Notes on the Ancient Geography of Gandhāra.
Gaz.	Gazetteer.
G. B. I.	The Greeks in Bactria and India.
G. E.	Gupta Era.

xxiv POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

G. E. I.	Great Epic of India.
Gop. Br.	Gopatha Brāhmaṇa.
G. O. S.	Gaekwar Oriental Series.
Greeks	The Greeks in Bactria and India.
Hariv.	Harivamśa.
H. and F.	Hamilton and Falconer's Translation of Strabo's Geography.
H. F. A. I. C.	...	History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon.
Hist. N. E. Ind.	...	History of North Eastern India.
Hist. Sans. Lit.	...	(A) History of Sanskrit Literature.
H. O. S.	Harvard Oriental Series.
Hyd. Hist. Cong.	...	Proceedings of the Indian History Congress, Hyderabad (1941)
I. H. Q.	Indian Historical Quarterly.
Int. Ant. (I. A.)	...	Indian Antiquary.
Ind. Lit.	History of Indian Literature.
Imp. Gaz.	Imperial Gazetteer.
Inv. Alex.	...	Invasion of Alexander.
Ins.	Inscriptions.
J.	Jātaka.
J. A. (Journ. As.)	...	Journal Asiatique.
J. A. H. R. S.	...	Journal of the Andhra Historical Society.
J. A. O. S.	...	Journal of the American Oriental Society.
J. A. S. B.	...	Journal and Proceedings of the Asiatic Society of Bengal.
J. B. Br. R. A. S.	...	Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society.
J. B. O. R. S.	...	Journal of the Bihar and Orissa Research Society.

ABBREVIATIONS

xxv

J. I. H.	...	Journal of Indian History.
J. N. S. I.		Journal of the Numismatic Society of India.
J. R. A. S.	...	Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society (Britain).
J. U. P. H. S.		Journal of the United Provinces Historical Society.
Kaush. Up.	...	Kaushitaki Upanishad.
Kaut.	...	Arthasāstra of Kauṭilya, Mysore, 1919.
Kishk.	...	Kishkindhyā Kāṇḍa
Life	...	(The) Life of Hiuen Tsang.
M.	...	Majjhima Nikāya.
M. A. S. I.	...	Memoirs of the Archæological Survey of India.
Mat.	...	Matsya Purāṇa.
Mbh.	...	Mahābhārata.
Med. Hind. Ind.	...	Mediæval Hindu India.
Mod. Rev.	...	Modern Review.
M. R.	...	Minor Rock Edicts.
N.	...	Nikāya.
NHIP.	...	The New History of Indian People (Vol. VI).
N. Ins.	...	(A) List of Inscriptions of North India.
Num. Chron.		Numismatic Chronicles.
O. S. (Penzer)	...	The Ocean of Story.
P.	...	Purāṇa.
P. A. O. S.	...	Proceedings of the American Oriental Society.
Pratijñā	...	Pratijñā Yaugandharāyana.
Pro. Or. Conf.	...	Proceedings of the All-India Oriental Conference.
Pt. (Pat.)	...	Patañjali.
R.		Rājuvula.

xxvi POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Rām.	Rāmāyaṇa.
R. D. B.			Rakhal Das Banerji
R. P. V. U.	Religion and Philosophy of the Veda and Upanishads.
R. V.	Rig-Veda.
Śāṅkh. Śr. Sūtra	Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra.
Sans. Lit.	Sanskrit Literature.
Śānti.			Śāntiparva of the Mahābhārata.
Sat. Br.	Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.
S. B. E.	Sacred Books of the East.
Ś. E.	Śaka Era.
Sec.	Section.
S. I. I.	South Indian Inscriptions.
S. Ins.	(A) List of Inscriptions of Southern India.
S. P. Patrikā	Vaṅḡiya Sāhitya-Parisht Patrikā.
Svapna.	Svapnavāsavadatta.
Tr.	Translation.
Up. Br.	Upanishad Brāhmaṇa.
V.	Veda.
Vāj. Sam.	Vājasaneyi-Saṁhitā.
Ved Ind.	Vedic Index.
Vish.	Vishṇu Purāṇa.
Vizag. Dist. Gaz	Vizagapatam District Gazetteer.
Z. D. M. G.	Zeitschrift der Deutschen Mor- genländischen Gesellschaft.

PART I

Political History of Ancient India

PART I

From the Accession of Parikshit to the Coronation of Bimbisāra

CHAPTER I. INTRODUCTION.

SECTION I. FOREWORD.

No Thucydides or Tacitus has left for posterity a genuine history of Ancient India. But the patient investigations of numerous scholars and archæologists have opened up rich stores of material for the reconstruction of the ancient history of our country. The first notable attempt to "sort and arrange the accumulated and ever-growing stores of knowledge" was made by Dr. Vincent Smith. But the excellent historian, failing to find sober history in bardic tales, ignored the period immediately succeeding "the famous war waged on the banks of the Jumna, between the sons of Kuru and the sons of Pāṇḍu," and took as his starting point the middle of the seventh century B.C. The aim of the present writer has been to sketch in outline the dynastic history of Ancient India including the neglected period. He takes as his starting point the accession of Parikshit which, according to Epic and Purāṇic tradition, took place shortly after the Bhārata War.

Valuable information regarding the Pārikshita and the post-Pārikshita periods has been given by eminent scholars like Weber, Lassen, Eggeling, Caland, Oldenberg, Jacobi, Hopkins, Macdonell, Keith, Rhys Davids, Fick, Pargiter, Bhandarkar and others. But the attempt to frame an outline of political history from Parikshit to Bimbisāra out of materials supplied by Brāhmaṇic as well as non-Brāhmaṇic literature is, I believe, made for the first time in the following pages.

2 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

SECTION II. SOURCES.

No inscription or coin has unfortunately been discovered which can be referred, with any amount of certainty, to the post-Pārikshita-pre-Bimbisārian period. The South Indian plates purporting to belong to the reign of Janamejaya¹ have been proved to be spurious. Our chief reliance must, therefore, be placed upon literary evidence. Unfortunately this evidence is, in the main, Indian, and is not supplemented to any considerable extent by those foreign notices which have "done more than any archæological discovery to render possible the remarkable resuscitation" of the history of the post-Bimbisārian epoch. The discoveries at Mohenjo-Daro and Harappa no doubt constitute a welcome addition to the purely literary evidence regarding the ancient history of India. But the civilisation disclosed is possibly that of Sauvīra or Sovīra (Sophr, Ophir)² in the pre-Pārikshita period. And the monuments exhumed "offer little direct contribution to the materials for political history," particularly of the Madhyadeśa or the Upper Ganges valley.

Indian literature useful for the purpose of the historian of the post-Pārikshita-pre-Bimbisārian age may be divided into five classes, viz. :—

I. Brāhmaṇical literature of the post-Pārikshita-pre-Bimbisārian period. This class of literature naturally contributes the most valuable information regarding the history of the earliest dynasties and comprises :

1 Ep. Ind., VII, App., pp. 162-63 ; IA, III, 268 ; IV. 333 ;

2 Cf. IA, XIII. 228 ; I. Kings. 9, 28 ; 10, 11.

(a) The last book of the Atharva Veda.

(b) The Aitareya, Śatapatha, Pañchaviṃśa and other ancient Brāhmaṇas.¹

(c) The major part of the Bṛihadāraṇyaka, the Chhāndogya and other classical Upanishads.

That these works belong to the post-Pārikshita period is proved by repeated references to Parikshit, to his son Janamejaya, to Janamejaya's successor Abhipratārin, and to Janaka of Videha at whose court the fate of the Pārikshitas was discussed by the assembled sages. That these works are in the main pre-Buddhistic and, therefore, pre-Bimbisārian, has been proved by competent critics like Dr. Rājendralāl Mitra,² Professor Macdonell³ and others.

II. The second class comprises Brāhmaṇical works to which no definite date can be assigned, but large portions of which, in the opinion of scholars, belong to the post-Bimbisārian period. To this class belong the Rāmāyaṇa, the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas. The present Rāmāyaṇa consists of 24,000 ślokas or verses.⁴ But even in the first or second century A.D. the epic seems to have contained only 12,000 *ślokas*⁵ as the evidence of the Buddhist Mahā-vibhāṣhā, a commentary on the Jñānaprasthāna of Kātyāyanīpūtra, suggests. It not only mentions Buddha Tathāgata,⁶ but distinctly refers to the struggles of the Hindus with mixed hordes of Yavanas (Greeks) and Śakas (Scythians), Śakān

1 Of special importance are the gāthās or songs in the thirteenth kāṇḍa of the Śat. Br. and the eighth pañchikā of the Aitareya.

2 Translation of the Chhāndogya Upanishad, pp. 23-24.

3 History of Sanskrit Literature, pp. 189, 202-03, 226.

4 1.4.2—Chaturviṃśa-sahasrāṇi ślokānām uktavān ṛishiḥ.

5 J. R. A. S., 1907, pp. 99 ff. Cf. Bunyiu Nanjio's Catalogue. No. 1263.

6 II. 109. 34.

4 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Yavana-misritān.¹ In the Kishkindhyā Kāṇḍa,² Sugrīva places the country of the Yavanas and the cities of the Śakas between the country of the Kurus and the Madras, and the Himālayas. This shows that the Græco-Scythians at that time occupied parts of the Pañjāb. The *Laṅkā Kāṇḍa*³ apparently refers to the Purāṇic episode of the uplifting of Mount Mandara, or of Govardhana, Parigrihya girim dorbhyām vapur Vishnor viṣṭambayan.⁴

As regards the present Mahābhārata, Hopkins says :⁵ "Buddhist supremacy already decadent is implied by passages which allude contemptuously to the eḍukas or Buddhistic monuments as having ousted the temples of the gods. Thus in III. 190. 65 'They will revere eḍukas, they will neglect the gods ;' ib. 67 'the earth shall be piled with eḍukas, not adorned with godhouses.' With such expressions may be compared the thoroughly Buddhistic epithet, Cāturmahārājika in XII, 339. 40 and Buddhistic philosophy as expounded in the same book."

"The Greeks are described as a western people and their overthrow is alluded to.....The Romans, Romakas, are mentioned but once, in a formal list of all possible peoples, II. 51.17, and stand thus in marked contrast to Greeks and Persians, Pahlavas, who are mentioned very often.....The distinct prophecy that 'Scythians, Greeks and Bactrians will rule unrighteously in the evil age to

1 I. 54. 21.

2 IV. 43. 11-12. Note also the references to Vaijayantapura in the Deccan (II. 9. 12), the Drāviḍas (ibid 10. 37), Malaya and Darddūra (ibid 91. 24), Murachī-pattāna (Muziris, Cranganore, IV. 42. 3), practices of the people of the Deccan (II. 93.13), "the seven flourishing realms" of Yavadvīpa (Java), Suvarṇadvīpa (Sumatra) in IV. 40. 30, and Karkaṭaka lagna (II. 15.3).

3 69. 32 ; cf. Matsya, 249, 53 ; Bhāgavata, X. 25 ; Mbh. III. 101. 15.

4 For some other Purāṇic allusions see Calcutta Review, March, 1922, pp. 500-02.

5 The Great Epic of India, pp. 391-93.

come' which occurs in III. 188. 35 is too clear a statement to be ignored or explained away."

The *Ādiparva*¹ refers to king Aśoka who is represented as an incarnation of a Mahāsura or great demon,² and is described as mahāvīryo'parājitaḥ, of great prowess and invincible. We have also a reference³ to a Greek overlord, Yavanādhipaḥ, of Sauvīra and his compatriot Dattāmitra (Demetrios?). The Śāntiparva presupposes the inclusion of the city of Mālinī, in the land of the Aṅgas, within the realm of Magadha.⁴ It mentions Yāska, the author of the Nirukta,⁵ Vārshaganya,⁶ the Sāṃkhya philosopher who probably flourished in the fourth or fifth century after Christ⁷ and Kāmandaka,⁸ the authority on Dharma (sacred law) and Artha (polity) who is probably to be identified with the famous disciple of Kauṭilya.

The eighteen Purāṇas were certainly known to Alberuni⁹ (A.D. 1000), Rājasekhara (A.D. 900), and the 1 I. 67.13-14. Cf. also XII. 5.7 where Aśoka is mentioned with Satadhanvan.

2 It is interesting to note in this connection that in the Devīmāhātmya of the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa (88.5) Maurya is the name of a class of Asuras or demons :—

Kālakā Daurhṛitā Mauryāḥ Kālakeyāstathāsuraḥ yuddhāya sajjā niryāntu ājñayā tvaritā mama

"Let the Kālaka, the Daurhṛita, the Maurya and the Kālakeya Asuras, hastening at my command, march forth ready for battle."

Note also the expression suradvishām (of the enemies of the gods i.e., Asuras), used by the Bhāgavata Purāṇa (1.3.24) in reference to people "deluded" by the Buddha.

3 Mbh., I. 139. 21-23.

4 5. 1-6.

5 342. 73.

6 318. 59.

7 J. R. A. S., 1905, pp. 47-51 ; Keith, Sāṃkhya system, pp 62, 63, 69.

8 Sānti, 123. 11.

9 Cf. Alberuni, Ch. XII ; Prachīṇa-Pāṇḍava ed. by Carl Cappeller, p. 5 (ashtādaśa-purāṇa-sāra-saṃgraha-kārin) ; Mbh. XVIII. 6. 97 ; Harshacharita, III (p. 86 of Parab's ed., 1918), Pavamāna-prokta Purāṇa, i. e., Vāyu Purāṇa ; Cf. Sakala-purāṇa-rājarshi-charitābhijñāḥ (III. 87) and Hareriva Vṛishavirodhini Bālacharitāni (II. 77) ; EHVS, second ed., pp. 17, 70, 150. The fact that the collection of the essence (sāra-saṃgraha) of all the eighteen Purāṇas is attributed to a very ancient sage by Rājasekhara proves that the Purāṇas themselves were latest compiler of the Mahābhārata who flourished before A.D. 500. Some of the Purāṇic chronicles are mentioned by Bīṇa (A.D. 600) and earlier writers. But the extant texts which contain lists of kings of the Kali Age cannot be placed earlier than the third or fourth century A.D., because they refer to the so-called Andhra kings and even to the post-Andhras.

6 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

It is clear from what has been stated above that the Epics and the Purāṇas, in their present shape, are late works which are no better suited to serve as the foundation of the history of the pre-Bimbisārian age than are the tales of the Mahāvamsa and the Aśokavadāna adapted to form the bases of chronicles of the doings of the great Maurya. At the same time we shall not be justified in rejecting their evidence wholesale because much of it is undoubtedly old and valuable. The warning to handle critically, which Dr. Smith considered necessary with regard to the Pali chronicles of Ceylon, is also applicable to the Sanskrit Epics and Purāṇas.

In a recent work Dr. Keith shows scepticism about the historical value of these texts, and wonders at the "naïve credulity" of those who believe in the historicity of any event not explicitly mentioned in the Vedas, e.g., "a great Bhāratan war." It cannot be denied that the Epics and the Purāṇas, in their present shape, contain a good deal of what is untrustworthy; but it has been rightly said that "it is absurd to suppose that fiction completely ousted the truth." The epigraphic or numismatic records of the Śātavāhanas, Ābhīras, Vākāṭakas, Nāgas, Guptas and many other dynasties fully bear out the believed by him to have been composed long before the ninth century A. D. The existence of some of the texts in the sixth century A.D. is hinted at by the Nerūr Inscription of Maṅgaleśa (IA, VII. 161—Mānava-Purāṇa-Rāmāyaṇa-Bhārat-etihāsa-kuśalah...Vallabhaḥ i.e. Pulikeśi I). The reference in the Matsya Purāṇa, which is regarded as one of the earliest among the Purāṇic works, to week days (70. 46 ; 56 ; 72, 27 etc.) is of value in determining the upper limit.

observation of Dr. Smith that "modern European writers have been inclined to disparage unduly the authority of the Purāṇic lists, but closer study finds in them much genuine and valuable historical tradition." As to the "great Bhārata war" we have indeed no epigraphic corroboration, because contemporary inscriptions are lacking. But, as will be pointed out in a subsequent chapter, Vedic literature contains many hints that the story of the great conflict is not wholly fictitious. Many of the figures in the Kurukshetra story, e.g., Bāhika Prātipēya¹ (Balhika Prātipīya), Dhṛitarāṣṭra Vaichitravīrya, Kṛishṇa Devakīputra and perhaps Śikhaṇḍin Yājñasena, are mentioned in some of the early Vedic texts,² and we have a distinct allusion in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa to the unfriendly feeling between the first of these, a prince of the Kurus, and the Śrīñjayas³. It will be remembered that the great war described in the epic often takes the shape of a trial of strength between these two peoples (Kurūnām Śrīñjayānām cha jigīṣhūnām parasparam)⁴. In the *Jaiminīya Upanishad Brāhmaṇa*⁵ Kurus reproach the Dālbyhas, a clan closely connected with the Pañchālas who appear to have been among the principal antagonists of the Kuru leaders in the Bhārata War. The Chhāndogya Upanishad, as is well-known, contains a gāthā which eulogises the mare that comes to the rescue of the Kurus. Battle-songs describing the struggle of the Kurus against the Śrīñjayas and associate tribes or clans must have been current at least as early as the fifth century B. C., because Vaiśampāyana and his version of the Mahābhārata are well-known to Āśvalāyana and Pāṇini. If, as

1 Mbh. V. 23.9.

2 Cf. also Arjuna identified with Indra in the Śat. Br. V. 4. 3. 7. and Pārtha in the Āśvalāyana Śrāuta Sūtra, XII. 10 (Vedic Index, I. 522).

3 Vedic Index, II, p. 63, Śat. Br. XII. 9.3.

4 Mbh. VI. 45.2.

5 I. 38. 1 (xii. 4).

8 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

suggested by Vedic evidence discussed in the following pages, the "great Bhāratan war" really took place in or about the ninth century B. C., the broad outlines of the story about the conflict dating from a period not later than the fifth century B. C., cannot be dismissed as wholly unworthy of credence.

Pargiter, unlike Keith, is inclined to give more weight to Purāṇic tradition than to Vedic evidence, and his conclusions have apparently been accepted by Dr. Barnett.¹ It has recently been urged by the former² that Vedic literature "lacks the historical sense" and "is not always to be trusted." But do the Purāṇas which represent Śākya as one individual, include Abhimanyu and Siddhārtha in lists of kings, make Prasenajit the immediate lineal successor of Rāhula, place Pradyota several generations before Bimbisāra, dismiss Aśoka with one sentence, make no mention of the dynastic name Śātavāhana, and omit from the list of the so called "Andhras", princes like Siri-Kubha (Śrī-Kumbha) Śātakaṇi whose existence is proved by the incontestable evidence of coins³, possess the historical sense in a remarkable degree, and are "always to be trusted"? Pargiter himself, not un-often, rejects Epic and Purāṇic evidence⁴ when it is opposed to certain theories. In this connection it will not be quite out of place to quote the following observations of Mr. V. Gordon Childe.⁵ "The Kṣatriya tradition (i.e., Epic and Purāṇic tradition).....is hardly an unpolluted source of history. The orthodox view is not really based on the priestly tradition, as embodied in 1 Calcutta Review, Feb., 1924, p. 249.

2 Ancient Indian Historical Tradition, pp. 9 ff.

3 Mirashi in the Journal of the Numismatic Society of India, Vol. II.

4 Cf. A. I. H. T., pp. 173, n. 1 ; 299, n. 7.

5 The Aryans, p. 32.

epexegetical works, but rather on the internal evidence of the Veda itself. The latter carries conviction precisely because the historical and geographical references in the hymns are introduced only incidentally and in a thoroughly ingenuous manner...The same cannot be said of Kṣatriya tradition, which in its recorded form dates from an age (perhaps as late as 200 A.D.) when myth-making had had many centuries to work in, and which might serve dynastic ends." Priority of date and comparative freedom from textual corruption are two strong points in favour of Vedic literature.

III. The third class of literature comprises Brāhmaṇical works of the post-Bimbisārian period to which a date in a definite epoch may be assigned, e.g., the Kautilīya Arthaśāstra assignable to the period 249 B. C. to c. 100 A.D.¹, the Mahābhāṣya of Patañjali between

1 The work was known not only to Bāṇa, the author of the Kādambarī, who flourished in the seventh century A.D., but to the Nandisūtra of the Jains which must have existed in the fifth century A. D. and probably also to the Nyāya-Bhāṣya of Vātsyāyana, which is criticised by Dignāga and perhaps by Vasubandhu too (I.A., 1915, p. 82; 1918, p. 103). According to some scholars the Arthaśāstra literature is later than the Dharmaśāstras, and dates only from about the third century A. D. But the prevalence of the study of Arthavidyā in a much earlier epoch is proved by the Junāgaḍh Rock Inscription of Rudradāman I, and the existence of treatises on Arthaśāstra is rendered probable by the mention of technical terms like "Praṇaya," "Viśṭi," etc. It is interesting to note that the Kautilīya, which purports to be a compendium of pre-existing Arthaśāstras, does not quote the views of previous Achāryas or teachers in the chapter on "Praṇaya" (Bk. V, Ch. 2). It is, therefore, not unlikely that Rudradāman I, who claims to have studied the Arthavidyā, learnt the use of the term from the Kautilīya itself and not from a pre-Kautilīyan treatise. In this connection it is interesting to note that the Junāgaḍh epigraphs show a special acquaintance with the Arthaśāstra literature. The Junāgaḍh Inscription of Skanda Gupta, for instance, refers to the testing of officials by upadhās—sarv-opadhābhīṣṭa viśuddhabuddhiḥ, "possessed of a mind that (has been tried and) is (found to be) pure by all the tests of honesty." The verse

Nyāy-ārjane-rithasyacha kaḥ samarthah syād-arjitasy-āpy-atha rakshaṇe cha gopāyitasy-āpi cha vṛiddhi-hetau vṛiddhasya pūtra-pratipādanāya

10 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

c. 150 B.C. and 100 A.D.),¹ etc. The value of these important works can hardly be overestimated. They form "sheet anchors in the troubled sea of Indian chronology." Their evidence with regard to the pre-Bimbisārian age is certainly inferior to that of the Brāhmaṇas and the Upanishads, but the very fact that such information as they contain, comes from persons assignable to a known epoch, makes it more valuable than the Epic and Purāṇic tradition, the antiquity and authenticity of which can always be called in question.

"Who is capable both in the lawful acquisition of wealth, and also in the preservation of it, when acquired, and further in causing the increase of it, when protected, (and able) to dispense it on worthy objects, when it has been increased" (Fleet), reminds us of Kauṭ., I. 1.—

Daṇḍanītiḥ ; alabdha-lābhārthā labdha-parirakṣaṇi, rakṣita-vivardhani, vṛiddhasya tīrthesu pratipādani cha.

"The science of government ; it is a means to make acquisitions, to preserve what is acquired, to increase what is protected and to distribute among the worthy what has been increased."

Johnston (J. R. A. S., 1929, 1, January, p. 77. ff.) points out that the Kauṭīliya Arthaśāstra is not separated by a great interval from Aśvaghoṣa, and is distinctly earlier than the Jātakamālā of Āryasūra (who flourished before 434 A. D., Winternitz, Ind. Lit., Vol. II. 276). An early date is also suggested by the absence of any reference to the Denarius in Book II. Chs. 12 and 19. But the mention of Chinabhūmi and Chinapatta in Bk. II, Ch. 11, precludes the possibility of a date earlier than the middle of the third century B. C. The reference must be to the great country of the Far East (Cf. "China which produces silk," Kosmas Indikopleustes, McCrindle's Ancient India, p. 162), and not to any obscure tribe on the outskirts of India. China silk looms large in the pages of classical Sanskrit writers. The great silk-producing country (as well as Kambu, Kaut. II. 13) clearly lay outside the horizon of the early Mauryas. The name 'China' applied to the famous land can hardly be anterior to the first emperor of the Ch'in Dynasty (249-210 B. C., Mogi and Redman, The Problem of the Far East, p. 15). A post-Chandraguptan date for the Arthaśāstra is also suggested by (a) the reference to parapets of brick instead of wooden ramparts (II. 3), in connection with the royal seat, and the (b) use of Sanskrit at the Secretariat (II. 10). The imperial title Chakravarti (IX. 1) is not met with in inscriptions before Khāravela. The official designations Samāhartri and Sannidhātṛi find mention in epigraphs of a still later age.

¹ For recent discussions about the date of Patañjali see Indian Culture, III, 11f ; Proceedings of the Indian History Congress, Third Session, pp. 510-11.

IV. To the fourth class belong the Buddhist Suttas, Vinaya texts and the Jātakas. Several works of the Buddhist canon are noticed in votive inscriptions at Bharhut and Sāñchī assigned to the second and first centuries B. C. Many of the reliefs found on the railings and gateways of Stūpas of the age depict stories taken from the Jātakas. The texts of the Pali canon are said to have been committed to writing in the first century B.C. They furnish a good deal of useful information regarding the period which immediately preceded the accession of Bimbisāra. They have also the merit of preserving Buddhist versions of ancient stories, and vouchsafe light when the light from Brāhmanical sources begins to fail.

V. To the fifth class belong the sacred texts of the Jainas. Some of the works may go back to a period earlier than the second century A.D. But the canon as a whole was probably reduced to writing in the fifth or sixth century A.D.¹ It gives interesting information regarding many kings who lived during the pre-Bimbisārian Age. But its comparatively late date makes its evidence not always reliable.

¹ Jacobi, Parīśiṣṭa parvan, p. vii ; S. B. E., Vol. XXII, p. xxxvii ; XLV, p. xl. Cf. Winternitz, A History of Indian Literature, Eng. trans., Vol. II, p. 432.

CHAPTER II. KURUS AND VIDĒHAS.

SECTION I. THE AGE OF THE PĀRIKSHITAS.

Janah sa bhadramedhati rāshṭre rājñah Parikshitah

—Atharva Veda.

We have taken as our starting point the reign of Parikshit whose accession, according to tradition, took place shortly after the Bhārata War.

Was there really a king named Parikshit? True, he is mentioned in the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas. But the mere mention of a king in this kind of literature is no sure proof of his historical existence unless we have corroborative evidence from external sources.

Parikshit appears in a famous laud of the Twentieth Book of the *Atharva Veda Samhitā*¹ as a king of the Kurus (Kauravya) whose kingdom (rāshṭra) flowed with milk and honey. The passage runs as follows :—

“Rājño viśvajanīnasya yo devomartyām ati vaiśvānarasya susṭutimā sunotā Parikshitah parichchhinnah kshemamakarot tama āsanamācharan kulāyan kṛiṇvan Kauravyah patirvadati jāyayā katarat ta ā harūṇi dadhi manthām pari śrutam jāyāh patim vi prichchhati rāshṭre rājñah Parikshitah abhīva svaḥ pra jikīte yavaḥ pakvaḥ patho bilam janah sa bhadramedhati rāshṭre rājñah Parikshitah.”

“Listen ye to the high praise of the king who rules over all peoples, the god who is above mortals, who is thought of by all men², of Parikshit ! Parikshit has produced for us a secure dwelling when he, the most excellent one, went to his seat. (Thus) the husband in Kuru land, when he founds his household, converses with his wife.

1. A. V., XX. 127, 7-10.

2. For the meaning of Vaiśvānara, see Bṛihaddevatā, II. 66.

“What may I bring to thee, curds, stirred drink or liquor? (Thus) the wife asks her husband in the kingdom of king Parikshit.

“Like light the ripe barley runs over beyond the mouth (of the vessels). The people thrive merrily in the kingdom of king Parikshit.¹”

Roth and Bloomfield regard Parikshit in the Atharva Veda as a divine being. But Zimmer and Oldenberg recognize him as a human king, a view supported by the fact that in the Aitareya and Śatapatha Brāhmaṇas the famous king Janamejaya bears the patronymic Pārikshita (son of Parikshit). The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,² for example, informs us that the priest Tura Kāvasheya “anointed Janamejaya Pārikshita with the great anointing of Indra”:

“Etena ha vā Aindreṇa mahābhishhekeṇa Turah Kāvasheyo Janamejayan Pārikshitam abhishhishecha.”

Referring to king Parikshit, Macdonell and Keith observe³: “The epic makes him grandfather of Pratiśravas and great-grandfather of Pratīpa.” Now, the epic and the Purāṇas have really two Parikshits. Regarding the parentage of one there is no unanimity. He is variously represented as the son of Avikshit, Anaśvā, or Kuru, and is further mentioned as an ancestor of Pratiśravas and Pratīpa. The other Parikshit was a descendant of Pratīpa and, according to a unanimous tradition, a son

1 Bloomfield, Atharva Veda, pp. 197-98, with slight emendations.

2 VIII. 21.

3 Vedic Index, Vol. I, p. 494.

14 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

of Abhimanyu.¹ We shall call the former Parikshit I, and the latter Parikshit II. Was Parikshit I of the Epic and the Purāṇas identical with the Vedic Parikshit as suggested by the authors of the Vedic Index? In support of this view it may be urged that Indrota Daivāpa Śaunaka, priest of Janamejaya, son of the Vedic Parikshit, according to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,² is represented in several *Purāṇas*³ as chaplain of the son of Parikshit I who came before the Bhārata heroes. Indrota's son Dṛiti was a contemporary of Abhīpratārin Kākshaseni,⁴ "son of Kakshasena," and the name of Kakshasena actually appears among the sons of Parikshit I in a genealogical list of the Mahābhārata.⁵ Further, like the Vedic Parikshit, Parikshit I had according to a Purāṇic passage, four sons, viz. Janamejaya, Śrutasena, Ugrasena, and Bhīmasena,⁶ and the eldest son had a quarrel with the Brāhmaṇas.

There are, however, other facts which point to an opposite conclusion. The Vedic Parikshit receives in the Atharvan laud the epithet rājā viśvajanīna (universal king) and is called "a deva (god) who is above mortals." In his days the designation Kauravya had ceased to be a mere royal patronymic and was applied to ordinary citizens in Kuru land. Kuru had become the eponymous ancestor of the entire race. And lastly, the people thrived merrily (janah sa bhadramedhati) in his realm. These particulars hardly apply to the shadowy Parikshit I of Epic and Purāṇic lists who is said to have been very near in time

1 Mahābhārata, Ādi-parva, 94, 52 and 95, 41. Regarding Parikshit I, the Matsya Purāṇa says, 50, 23 :

Kurostu dayitāḥ putrāḥ Sudhanvā Jahnureva cha Parikshichcha mahātejāḥ pravaraś chārīmardanaḥ.

2 Vedic Index, i, 78.

3 Fargiter, AIHT, 114.

4 Vedic Index, i, 373.

5 Mbh I, 94, 54.

6 Vishṇu Purāṇa, iv. 20. 1.

to Kuru himself.¹ On the other hand the Vedic laud corresponds wonderfully, both in content and phraseology with the famous ākhyāna (story) of Parikshit II, son of Abhimanyu, narrated in Chapters 16 to 18 of the Bhāgavata Purāṇa. We are told that this Parikshit undertook a digvijaya, conquest of all the quarters, in the course of which he subjugated all the sub-continent (varshāṇi). He is called the supreme deva who is not to be regarded as the equal of ordinary men (na vai nṛibhir-naradevaṁ parākhyāṁ saṁmātum arhasi). He is further styled samrāt (emperor) and under his protection people thrive and have nothing to fear (vindanti bhadraṇyakuto-bhayāḥ prajāḥ).

Proof of the identity of this Parikshit (son of Abhimanyu) with his Vedic namesake is also furnished by a later passage of the same *Purāṇa*² which mentions Tura Kāvasheya as the priest of his son Janamejaya :

Kāvasheyaṁ purodhāya Turam turaṇamedharāt samantāt pṛithivīm sarvām jītvā yakshyati chādhvaram.

It will be remembered that the same sage appears as the priest of Janamejaya Parikshita in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.

The Bhāgavata Purāṇa is no doubt a late work. But its evidence does not stand alone. This will be made clear by an examination of the names of the sons of Parikshit given in the Vedic texts and the Epic respectively. The Vedic Parikshit, we are told, had four sons, namely, Janamejaya, Ugrasena, Bhīmasena and Śrutasena.³ The Epic Parikshit I, on the other hand, had only one son (Bhīmasena) according to Chapter 95,

1 In the Vāyu Purāṇa, 93, 21 and the Harivaṁśa, XXX, 9, Parikshit I seems to be identified with Kuru himself as his son (Pārikshita) is called Kuroḥ putraḥ, son of Kuru.

2 Book IX. Ch. 22, Verses 25-37.

3 Vedic Index, Vol. I, p. 520.

16 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

verse 42 of the Adiparva of the Mahābhārata, and seven sons (Janamejaya, Kakshasena, Ugrasena, Chitrasena, Indrasena, Sushena and Bhīmasena) according to Chapter 94, verses 54-55, and among these the name of Śrutasena does not occur. Even Janamejaya is omitted in Chapter 95 and in the Java text.¹ There is no king of that name immediately after Parikshit I, also in the Kuru-Pāṇḍu genealogy given in the Chellur or Cocanada grant of Virachōḍa.² The Epic poet and the writer of the Chōḍa inscription, which is much older than many extant manuscripts of the Mahābhārata, therefore, were not quite sure as to whether this Parikshit (I) was the father of Janamejaya and Śrutasena. On the other hand, according to the unanimous testimony of the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas, Parikshit II had undoubtedly a son named Janamejaya who succeeded him on the throne. Thus the Mahābhārata, referring to Parikshit II, the son of Abhimanyu, says.³

*Parikshit khalu Mādravatīm nāmopayame, tvanmātaram.
Tasyān bhavān Janamejayaḥ.* "Parikshit married Mādravati, your mother, and she gave birth to you, Janamejaya."

The *Matsya Purāṇa*⁴ informs us that

"Abhimanyoḥ Parikshittu putraḥ parapurañjayah Janamejayah Parikshitah putraḥ paramadhārmikah."

"Abhimanyu's son was Parikshit, the conqueror of his enemy's city. Parikshit's son was Janamejaya who was very righteous."

This Janamejaya had three brothers, namely, Śrutasena, Ugrasena and Bhīmasena :—"Janamejayah Pārikshitah

1 J.R.A.S., 1913, p. 6.

2 Hultzsch, S.I.I., Vol. I, p. 57.

3 I. 95, 85.

4 50, 57.

saha bhrātrībhiḥ Kurukshetre dīrgha-satram upāste ; tasya bhrātarastrayaḥ Śrutasena Ugrasena Bhīmasena iti."¹

"Janamejaya, son of Parikshit, with his brothers, was attending a long sacrifice at Kurukshetra. His brothers were three, namely,—Śrutasena, Ugrasena and Bhīmasena."

Particulars regarding the son and successor of the Vedic Parikshit agree well with what we know of the son and successor of the Epic and the Purāṇic Parikshit II. Janamejaya, the son of the Vedic Parikshit, is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa as a performer of the Aśvamedha or horse-sacrifice. The priest who performed the famous rite for him was Indrota Daivāpa Śaunaka. On the other hand, the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, which also mentions his Aśvamedha, names Tura Kāvasheya as his priest. The statements of the Śatapatha and Aitareya Brāhmaṇas are apparently conflicting, and can be reconciled if we surmise that either we are dealing with two different kings of the same name and parentage or the same Janamejaya performed two horse-sacrifices. Which Janamejaya actually did so? Curiously enough the Purāṇas give the information which is needed. The Matsya Purāṇa speaking of Janamejaya, the grandson of Abhimanyu, and the son of Parikshit II, says :

*Dvīr aśvamedham āhṛitya mahāvājasaneyakam pravartayitvā taṁ sarvaṁ ṛiṣiṁ Vājasaneyakam vivāde Brāhmaṇaiḥ sārddham abhisapto vanaṁ yayau.*²

The quarrel with the Brāhmaṇas, alluded to in the

1 Mbh. I. 3. 1. In translating Epic passages use has been made of the renderings of Ray and Dutt. See also Purāṇic texts cited by Pargiter, Dynasties of the Kali Age, p. 4n⁴. The view that Śrutasena, Ugrasena and Bhīmasena were sons of Janamejaya (Pargiter, Ancient Indian Historical Tradition, p. 113 f.) is clearly opposed to the evidence of the Epic and several Purāṇas, as well as that of Harisvāmin.—Speaking about Parikshit, son of Abhimanyu, the Vishṇu Purāṇa, for example, says (iv. 21. 1) : "Yo'yaṁ Sāmpratam avanīpatīḥ tasyāpi Janamejaya-Śrutasena-Ugrasena-Bhīmasenāḥ putrās chatvāro bhaviṣhyanti."

2 50, 63-64. Cf. N. K. Siddhanta, The Heroic Age of India, p. 42.

18 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

last line, is also mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.¹ According to that text Janamejaya's priestly opponents were the Kaśyapas. That designation hardly applies to the Gārgyas who quarrelled with the son of *Parikshit I*² because the *Baudhāyana Śrauta Sūtra*³ includes them in the Āṅgiras group. On the other hand Vaiśampāyana, who led the opponents of the son of Parikshit II, was undoubtedly a Kaśyapa.⁴

Parikshit II has thus a better claim than Parikshit I to be regarded as identical with the Vedic Parikshit. It is, however, possible that Parikshit I and Parikshit II represent a bardic duplication of the same original individual regarding whose exact place in the Kuru genealogy no unanimous tradition had survived. The fact that not only the name Parikshit, but the names of most of the sons (in the Vishnu and *Brahma Purāṇas*⁵ the names of all the sons) are common to both, points to the same conclusion. In the case of the son and successor of each of the two Parikshits we have a strikingly similar story of a quarrel with the Brāhmaṇas.⁶ It will further be remembered that while Tura Kāvasheya is mentioned in the Purāṇic literature as a Purohita of the son of Parikshit II, Indrota Daivāpa Saunaka is represented as the priest of the son of Parikshit I. But it is clear from the Vedic texts that both the royal chaplains served the same king who was separated by five or six generations from Janaka, the contemporary of Uddālaka Āruṇi, Yajñavalkya and Somaśushma. Doubts may thus be legitimately entertained about the existence of two Parikshits each of whom had sons and successors

1 VII. 27.

2 Pargiter, Ancient Indian Historical Tradition, 114, Vāyu, 93, 22-25.

3 Vol. III, pp. 431 ff.

4 Op. cit., p. 449.

5 Vishnu, IV, 20. 1; 21. 1; Brahma, XIII, 109.

6 Vāyu, 93, 22-25; Matsya, 50, 63-64 etc.

with identical names, the heroes of tales of a similar character. The probability is that there was really only one Parikshit in the Kuru royal family, father of the patron of both Tura and Indrota.

Did he flourish before or after the Bhārata War? The necessity felt for offering an explanation of the name Parikshit given to Abhimanyu's son, at the end of the Bhārata War, and the explanation itself, probably suggest that the tradition of an earlier Kuru king with the name of Parikshit had not yet come into existence when the tenth book of the Mahābhārata was written.¹ Parikshit I was possibly invented by genealogists to account for such anachronisms as the mention of Indrota-Pārikshita-saṁvāda as an old story by Bhīṣma in the twelfth book (chapter 151). The wide divergence of opinion in regard to the name of the father of the so-called Parikshit I, and his position in the list, is also to be noted in this connection. It shows the absence of a clear tradition. On the other hand there is absolute unanimity in regard to the parentage and dynastic position of the so-called Parikshit II.²

1 Mbh. X. 16, 3.

"While the Kuru line will become extinct (parikshīneshu Kurushu): a son will be born to you (= Uttarā, wife of Abhimanyu). The child will, for that reason, be named Parikshit."

2 The identification of the Vedic Parikshit with the son of Abhimanyu who flourished after the Bhārata War does not seem probable to Dr. N. Dutt, the author of The Aryanisation of India, pp. 50 ff., because, in the first place, it goes against the findings of Macdonell, Keith and Pargiter who prefer to identify the Vedic Parikshit with an ancestor of the Pāṇḍus. As to this it may be pointed out that the existence of a Parikshit (father of Janamejaya) before the Pāṇḍus, rests mainly on the testimony of those very genealogies which are regarded by Keith as worthless and unreliable (cf. RPVU 21, 618). That the name of Janamejaya in this connection is an intrusion into the genealogical texts is evident from its omission from Chapter 95 of the Mahābhārata, the Java text, the Chellur grant, etc.

Dr. Dutt next argues that the Vishṇu Purāṇa makes the four brothers Janamejaya, Śrutasena, etc., sons of Parikshit I. If he had only perused a subsequent passage (IV. 21. 1.) he would have seen that the Purāṇa makes the

20 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

The Vedic hymns throw little light on the domestic life or reign-period of Parikshit. From the epic we learn that he married a Madra princess (Mādravatī) and ruled four brothers sons of "Parikshit II" as well, and while this later statement finds corroboration in the Mahābhārata, (I. 3. 1.) the earlier does not.

Dr. Dutt next says that it is always risky to attempt identification of kings or the fixing of their dates from an examination of their teacher-priests' names. But why should it be risky if the names and order of succession be genuine? The real risk lies in the rejection of such evidence without sufficient examination. It should be remembered in this connection that the identification of the Vedic Pārikshita Janamejaya with his Epic namesake (descendant of Abhimanyu) does not depend mainly on the teacher-priests' names, but on the following facts, viz., (1) absence of any cogent proof of the existence of an earlier Janamejaya Pārikshita in view of the omission of his name in the Java text, Choḍa inscriptions etc., and (2) agreement of particulars about the Vedic Parikshit and Janamejaya (e.g., words describing the prosperity of the Kuru realm, the performance of two Aśvamedhas, quarrel with the Kaśyapas), with what we know of Parikshit and Janamejaya who were descendants of Abhimanyu. The question of the chronological relation between the Vedic Parikshit and the Vedic Janaka is entirely independent of this identification. This relation has been determined on the strength of two different lines of evidence. Materials for one have indeed been taken from the Vanīśa lists of the Brāhmaṇas. But the succession from Indrota to Somaśushma has been reconstructed from incidental notices in the Brāhmaṇa texts themselves which no critic has represented as late.

Dr. Dutt adds that identity of names does not necessarily imply identity of persons. This is a truism which is not remembered only by those who identify Dhṛitarāshṭra Vaichitravīrya with Dhṛitarāshṭra of Kāśī. It has never been suggested in the Political History that the Vedic and Epic Parikshits and Janamejayas are identical merely because their names are identical.

As to Dr. Dutt's contention that there could not be want of motives in later times on the part of the authors belonging to rival families and schools to associate a certain teacher-priest with a famous king of old, etc., it is not clear which particular case he has in mind in making the statement. The association of Indrota and Tura with Janamejaya, and that of Uddālaka and Yājñavalkya with Janaka is found in the Śatapatha and Aitareya Brāhmaṇas and in the Upanishads. Is it suggested that such association is a deliberate concoction or fabrication? But no shred of evidence has been brought forward to prove such a charge. No doubt misrepresentations are met with in the Epics and the Purāṇas (as pointed out by Pargiter and others). But it would not be reasonable to argue that the Brāhmaṇas and the Upanishads are guilty of deliberate falsification because forsooth there is confusion in the Purāṇas which are undoubtedly of a later date.

Lastly the credibility of the Vanīśa lists in the Vedic texts has been assailed on the following grounds viz.— for 24 years dying at the age of sixty.¹ Little credit, however, can be given to the bardic tales that cluster round his name. The only facts that can be accepted as historical are that he was a king of the Kurus, that the people lived prosperously under his rule, that he had many sons, and that the eldest, Janamejaya, succeeded him.

(I) Silence of Commentators.

It will not be quite out of place here to say a few words about the realm of the Kurus over which Parikshit ruled. The kingdom, according to epic tradition, stretched from the Sarasvatī to the Ganges. In the Digvijaya-parva it is taken to extend from the border of the land of the Kulindas (near the sources of the Sutlej, the Jumna and the Ganges) to that of the Sūrasenas and the Matsyas (in the Mathurā and Bairāt regions respectively), and from the frontier of Rohitaka (Rohtak in the Eastern Punjab) to that of the Pañchālas (of Rohilkhand). It was divided into three parts, Kuru-

(2) Discrepancy between the lists appended to the 10th and 14th books respectively of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa in regard to the authorship of the work and ascription of the work to different teachers.

(3) Scant courtesy shown to an alleged teacher by his pupil.

As to (1), the Āchārya paramparā, succession of teachers, is distinctly alluded to by the commentators. If they did not enter into a detailed explanation, it is because they considered it to be sugamam, spashtam, easily intelligible, plain.

(2) There is no Vamśa list at the close of the 14th book of the Brāhmaṇa proper excluding the Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad. There are no doubt lists of teachers at the end of the Upanishad. It is too much to expect that, in the various lists, the entire Brāhmaṇa as well as the Upanishad should be ascribed to the same traditional authority. The Brāhmaṇa and Upanishad texts are not works of single individuals. The question of discrepancy, therefore, does not arise. Reference to different traditions regarding the authorship of a particular work, or of particular portions of a work, does not necessarily vitiate any Āchārya-paramparā regarding which we have substantial agreement in the texts.

(3) It is too much to expect that in ancient, as in modern times, all pupils should be equally respectful to teachers. Was not Dhṛiṣṭadyumna a pupil of Droṇāchārya whom he killed?

1 Mbh. I. 49. 17-26 with commentary. We learn from the Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad (III. 3. 1.) that the Pārikshita family was intimately known in the Madra country.

22 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

jāṅgala, the Kurus proper and Kurukshetra.¹ Kurujāṅgala, as its name implies, was probably the wild region of the Kuru realm that stretched from the Kāmyaka forest on the banks of the Sarasvatī to Khāṇḍava near (samīpataḥ) the Jumna.² But in certain passages it is used in a wider sense to designate the whole country (deśa, *rāshṭra*³). The Kurus proper were probably located in the district around Hāstinapura (on the Ganges), identified with a place near Meerut.⁴ The boundaries of Kurukshetra are given in a passage of the *Taittirīya Aranyaka*⁵ as being Khāṇḍava on the south, the Tūrghna on the north, and the Parīṇah⁶ on the west (lit. hinder section, jaghanārdha). The *Mahābhārata*⁷ gives the following description of Kurukshetra: "South of the Sarasvatī and north of the Drishadvatī, he who lives in Kurukshetra really dwells in heaven. The region that lies between Taruntuka and Marantuka or Arantuka, the lakes of Rāma and Machakruka⁸—this is Kurukshetra which is also called Sāmantapañchaka and the northern sacrificial altar (uttara vedi) of the grandsire (i.e., Brahmā)." Roughly speaking, the Kuru kingdom corresponded to modern Thanesar, Delhi and the greater part of the Upper Gangetic Doāb. Within the kingdom flowed the rivers Aruṇā (which joins the Sarasvatī near Pehoa), Amśumatī, Hiraṇvatī, Āpayā (Āpagā

1 Mbh., I. 109. 1 ; 149. 5-15 ; II. 26-32 ; III. 83. 204 ; Ptolemy, VII. i. 42.

2 Tataḥ Sarasvatikūle sameshu marudhanvasu Kāmyakam nāma dadriśur vanam munijanapriyam.

"Then they saw before them the forest of Kāmyaka on the banks of the Sarasvatī on a level and wild plain, a favoured resort to anchorites." Mbh., III.

5. 3. For the location of the Khāṇḍava forest see I. 222. 14 ; 223. 1.

3 Cf. Mbh I. 109. 24 ; viii. 1. 17. xii. 37. 23.

4 Smith, Oxford History (1919), p. 31. cf. Rām. II. 68. 13 ; Mbh. I. 128. 29ff ; 133. 11 ; Pargiter DKA, 5 ; Patañjali, II. 1. 2. anugaṅgam Hāstinapuram.

5 Vedic Index I, pp. 169-70.

6 Cf. the Parenoi of Arrian (Indika, iv), a tributary of the Indus.

7 III, 83. 4 ; 9 : 15 ; 25 40 ; 52 ; 200 ; 204-08.

8 Machakruka, Taruntuka and Marantuka are Yaksha dvārapālas guarding the boundaries of Kurukshetra.

or Oghavatī, a branch of the Chitang), Kauśikī (a branch of the Rakshī), as well as the Sarasvatī and the Drishadvatī or the Rakshī.¹ Here, too, was situated Saryāṇavat, which the authors of the Vedic Index consider to have been a lake, like that known to the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa by the name of Anyataḥplakshā.

The royal residence according to the Vedic texts was apparently Āsandīvat.² This city may have been identical with Nāgasāhvaya or Hāstinapura, the capital mentioned in the Epics and the Purāṇas. But it is more probably represented by the modern Asandh near the Chitang.³

According to epic tradition the kings of Kurukshetra belonged to the Puru-Bharata family. The Paurava connection of the Kurus is suggested by the Ṛigvedic hymn,⁴ which refers to "Kuru-śravaṇa" (lit. glory of the Kurus) as a descendant of Trasadasyu, a famous king of the Pūrus.⁵ The connection of the Bharatas with the Kurulaud is also attested by Vedic evidence. A Rigvedic ode⁶ speaks of the two Bhāratas, Devaśravas and Devavāta, as sacrificing in the land on the Drishadvatī, the Āpayā and the Sarasvatī. Some famous gāthās of the *Brāhmaṇas*⁷ and the epic tell us that Bharata Dauḥshanti made offerings on the Jumna, the Ganges (Yamunām anu Gaṅgūyām) and the Sarasvatī. The territory indicated in

1 For the identification and location of some of the streams see Mbh III. 83. 95, 151; V. 151. 78; Cunningham's Arch-Rep. for 1878-79 quoted in JRAS, 1883, 363n; Smith, Oxford History, 29.

2 Vedic Index, Vol. I, p. 72.

3 See the map, Smith, Oxford History, p. 29. An Āsandi district is mentioned by Fleet in his Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts (Bombay Gazetteer, 1. 2, p. 492). But there is no reason for connecting it with the Kuru country.

4 X. 33, 4.

5 Rigveda, IV. 38. 1; VII. 19, 3.

6 Rig. iii. 23; Oldenberg, Buddha, pp. 409-10.

7 Śat. Br. xiii. 5. 4. 11; Ait. Br. viii. 23; Mbh. vii. 66. 8.

24 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

these landatory verses is exactly the region which is later on so highly celebrated as Kurukshetra.

In the opinion of Oldenberg "the countless small stocks of the Saṁhitā age were fused together to form the greater peoples of the Brāhmaṇa period. The Bharatas found their place, probably together with their old enemies, the Pūrus, within the great complex of peoples now in process of formation, the Kurus; their sacred land now became Kurukshetra."¹

Among those kings who are mentioned in the genealogical lists of the *Mahābhārata*² as ancestors and predecessors of Parikshit, the names of the following occur in the Vedic literature :—

1 The absorption of the Bharatas by the Kurus is suggested by such passages as Kuravo nāma Bhāratāḥ (Mbh. XII. 349. 44). In the Rām. IV. 33. 11 Bharatas are still distinguished from the Kurus. It has been suggested by some scholars, e.g., C. V. Vaidya (History of Mediaeval Hindu India, Vol. II, pp. 268 ff.) that the Bharata of Rigvedic tradition is not to be identified with Dauḥshanti Bharata, the traditional progenitor of the Kuru royal family, but rather with Bharata, the son of Rishabha, a descendant of the first Manu called Svāyambhuva. It should, however, be remembered that the story of Bharata, son of Rishabha, is distinctly late. The Bharata princes and people of Rigvedic tradition are clearly associated with the Kuru country watered by the Sarasvatī and the Dṛishadvatī and the names of their rulers, e.g., Divodāsa and Sudās occur in Purāṇic lists of kings descended from the son or daughter of Manu Vaivasvata and not of Manu Svāyambhuva. The Bharata priests Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra Kauśika are connected in early literature with the royal progeny of Manu Vaivasvata and his daughter, and not of Manu Svāyambhuva. For the association of Vasiṣṭha with the descendants of Bharata Dauḥshanti see the story of Saṁvaraṇa and Tapatī in the Mahābhārata, I. 94 and 171 f. Viśvāmitra Kauśika's association with the Pūru-Bharata family is, of course, well-known (Mbh. I. 94. 33). It may be argued that Bharata, ancestor of Viśvāmitra, who is called Bharata-rishabha in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, must be distinguished from the later Bharata, the son of Śakuntalā, daughter of Viśvāmitra. But there is no real ground for believing that the story of Viśvāmitra's connection with the nymphs is based on sober history. The Rigvedic Viśvāmitra belonged to the family of Kuśika. In the Mahābhārata (I. 94. 33) the Kuśikas are expressly mentioned as descendants of Bharata Dauḥshanti.

2 Ādiparva, Chapters 94 and 95.

Purū-ravas Aila,¹ Āyu,² Yayāti Nahushya,³ Pūru,⁴ Bharata Dauḥshanti Sandyumni,⁵ Ajamiḍha,⁶ Riksha,⁷ Samvarana,⁸ Kuru,⁹ Uchchaiḥśravas,¹⁰ Pratīpa Prātisatvana or Prātisutvana,¹¹ Balhika Prātipīya,¹² Śāntanu,¹³ and Dhṛitarāshṭra Vaichitravīrya.¹⁴

The occurrence of these names in the Vedic texts probably proves their historicity,¹⁵ but it is difficult to say how far the epic account of their relationship with one another or with Parikshit, and the traditional order of succession, are reliable. Some of the kings may not have been connected with the Kurus at all. Others, e.g., Uchchaiḥśravas Kaupayeya, Balhika Prātipīya and Śāntanu, were undoubtedly of the same race (Kauravya) as Parikshit.¹⁶

Purū-ravas Aila, the first king in the above list, is represented in epic tales as the son of a ruler who migrated from Bāhli in Central Asia to Mid-India.¹⁷ It may be

1 Rig-Veda, X. 95; Śat. Br., XI. 5. 1. 1.

5 Śat. Br. XIII. 5. 4. 11-12; Ait. Br. viii, 23.

2 Rig-Veda I. 53. 10; II. 14. 7, etc.

6 R. V., IV. 44. 6.

3 R. V., I. 31. 17; X. 63. 1.

7 R. V. VIII. 68. 15.

4 R. V., VII. 8. 4; 18. 13.

8 R. V., VIII. 51. 1. (Vedic Index, II. 442).

9 Frequently mentioned in the Brāhmaṇa literature, cf. Kuru-śravaṇa, Rig-Veda, X. 33.4. See, however, foot note 15 below.

10 Jaiminiya Upanishad Brāhmaṇa, III. 29. 1-3.

11 Atharva-Veda, XX. 129. 2.

12 Śat. Br., XII. 9. 3. 3.

13 R. V., X. 98.

14 Kāthaka Samhitā, X. 6.

15 It should, however, be noted that no individual king named Kuru is mentioned in Vedic literature. Kuru is the name of a people in the Vedic texts.

16 Jaiminiya Up. Br. III. 29. 1; Śat. Br., XII. 9. 3; Nirukta, ed. by Kshema-āja Śrīkṛishṇa Dāsa Śreṣṭhī, p. 130; Bṛihaddevatā, VII, 155-156; Studies in Indian Antiquities, pp. 7-8.

17 Rām., VII. 103, 21-22. This Bāhli lay outside the Madhyadeśa and is associated with Kārdama kings. The reference is doubtless to Balkh or Bactria in the Oxus Valley. For a discussion about its identity see IHQ, 1933, 37-39. The Matsya Purāṇa, 12. 14 ff. distinctly mentions Hāvṛita-Varsha (in Central Asia) as the realm of the parent of Purū-ravas. Mbh. (III. 90. 22-25) however seems to locate the birth place of Purū-ravas on a hill near the source of the Ganges.

noted in this connection that the Papañcha-sūdani refers to the Kurus—the most important branch of the Ailas according to the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas—as colonists from the trans-Himālayan region known as Uttara Kuru.¹ Bharata, another king mentioned in the epic list is described as a lineal descendant of Purū-ravas and of Pūru. But this is doubtful. He is, as we have seen, definitely associated in Brāhmanic and epic gāthās with the land on the Sarasvatī, the Ganges and the Jumna, and is credited with a victory over the Satvats. The epic tradition that he was the progenitor of the Kuru royal family is in agreement with Vedic evidence which connects him and his clansmen, Devaśravas and Deva-vāta, with the same territory which afterwards became famous as the land of the Kurus. Uchchaiśravas Kaupayeya had matrimonial relations with the royal family of the Pañchālas. But Balhika Prātipīya could ill conceal his jealousy of the ruler of the Srinjayas, a people closely associated with the Pañchālas in epic tales. The word Balhika in the name Balhika Prātipīya seems to be a personal designation and there is no clear evidence that it is in any way connected with the Balhika tribe mentioned in the Atharva Veda and later texts. It may, however, point to the northern origin of the Kurus² of the “Middle country,” a theory rendered probable by the association of the Kurus with the Mahāvṛishas³ and the fact that a 1 Law, Ancient Mid-Indian Kṣatriya Tribes, p. 16. Note the association of the Kurus with the Mahāvṛishas, Vedic Index, II. 279n, and with the Bālīkas, Mbh. II. 63. 2-7. In Mbh. III. 145. 18-19 the Uttara Kurus are apparently placed near Mount Kailāsa and Bādārī. In other texts they are located much farther to the north. The Kurus of the Madhya-dēśa are called Dakṣhiṇa-Kurus in Mbh. I. 109. 10.

2 Note the association of the Prātipēyas of the Kuru Assembly with the Bālīkas in Mbh. II. 63. 2-7: Pratīpēyāḥ Śāntanavā Bhīmasenūḥ saBālīkūḥ..... śrinudhvam kāvyām vāchaṁ samsadi Kauravāṇām.

3 Vedic Index II. 279n 5; Śat Br. (Kaṇva text); for Balhikas and Mahāvṛishas see also Atharva Veda, V. 22, 4-8.

section of the Kuru people dwelt beyond the Himālayas in the days of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa and the Mahābhārata. The history of the Kuru royal line becomes more definite from the time of Śāntanu who was fifth in the ascending line from Parikshit. Regarding the events of Parikshit's reign we have little reliable information. We only know that the drought that threatened the Kuru realm in the time of Śāntanu had passed away and the people "throve merrily in the kingdom of Parikshit."

The date of Parikshit is a matter regarding which the Vedic texts give no direct information. In the Aihole Inscription of Ravikirti, panegyrist of Pulakeśin II, dated Śaka 556 (expired) = A.D. 634-35, it is stated that at that time 3735 years had passed since the Bhārata war :

*Trinśatsu tri-sahasreshu Bhāratād āhavūd itaḥ saptābda-sata-yukteshu gateshvabdeshu pañchasa.*¹

The date of the Bhārata war which almost synchronised with the birth of Parikshit, is, according to this calculation, and the testimony of Āryabhaṭa (A.D. 499), 3102 B.C. This is the starting point of the so-called Kali-yuga era. But, as pointed out by Fleet², the reckoning was not founded in Vedic times. It is an invented one, devised by Hindu astronomers and chronologists for the purposes of their calculations some thirty-five centuries after the initial point which they assigned to it. As a matter of fact another school of Hindu astronomers and historians, represented by Vṛiddha-Garga, Varāhamihira and Kalhaṇa, placed the heroes of the Bhārata war 653 years after the beginning of the Kali-yuga and 2526 years before the Śaka era, i.e., in B.C. 2449.³ This last date

1 Ep. Ind., VI, pp. 11, 12.

2 JRAS, 1911, pp. 479 ff., 675 ff.

3 Āsan Maghāsu munayah śāsati prithvīm Yudhishṭhira nyipatan shaḍ-dvika-pañcha-dvīyutaḥ Śakakūlastasya rājñāścha Bṛih. S., XIII. 3. Cf. Rājatarāṅgiṇī, I. 48-56.

is as much open to doubt as the one adopted by Āryabhata and Ravikīrti. The literature that embodies the Vṛiddha-Garga tradition cannot claim any higher antiquity or reliability than the composition of the great astronomer of Kusumapura. The chronology to which it gives preference is not accepted by the Aihole inscription of Ravikīrti. A recent writer,¹ who accepts the dating of Vṛiddha-Garga and Varāha, cites only two late cases (op. cit. p. 491) to prove its currency in India, viz., the commentary on the Bhāgavatāmṛta and certain modern Almanacs. His attempts to support this tradition by astronomical calculation based on certain Mahābhārata passages are beset with difficulties. For one thing there is a good deal of uncertainty regarding the starting point of what he calls the "Purāṇic" or "epic" Kaliyuga. He says (p. 399) "most likely the Mahābhārata Kaliyuga truly began from the year 2454 B.C. The year of the Bhārata battle according to his finding is however 2449 B.C. In other words the battle was fought five years after the epic Kaliyuga had already begun. But he himself points out (p. 393) that the battle was fought, according to the Mahābhārata, when it was the junction of (antara, really interval between) Kali and Dvāpara, and 36 years before the year of Krishna's expiry (p. 399) which was the true beginning of the Kaliyuga. Thus the dates assigned to the beginning of Kali do not agree. These discrepancies demonstrate the unstable character of the ground on which the chronological edifice is sought to be built. It may be remembered in this connection that Kalhaya, who places Gonarda I of Kashmir and the Bhārata War in 2449-8 B.C. fixes a date for Aśoka much earlier than Gonarda III (1182 B.C.). This result is opposed to all genuine historical evidence and proves the unreliable

1 Mr. P. C. Sen Gupta, Bhārata Battle Traditions, JRASB, IV, 1938, no. 3 (Sept. 1939, pp. 393-413).

character of the scheme of chronology which has for its basis a belief in 2449 B.C. as the date of the Bhārata War. Some writers¹ try to reconcile the conflicting views presented by the schools of Aryabhaṭa and Vṛiddha-Garga by suggesting that the Śaka-kāla of Varāhamihira is really Śākya-kāla, i.e., the era of the Buddha's Nirvāṇa. This conjecture is not only opposed to the evidence of Kalhaṇa, but is flatly contradicted by Bhaṭṭotpala who explains Śaka-kāla of the Bṛihat Saṃhitā passage as Śaka-nṛpa-kāla, era of the Śaka king.² Varāhamihira himself knew of no Śaka-kāla apart from the Śakendrakāla or Śaka-bhūpa-kāla, i.e., the era of the Śaka king.³

A third tradition is recorded by the compilers of the Purāṇas. There is a remarkable verse, found with variants in the historical Purāṇas, which places the birth of Parikshit 1050 (or 1015, 1115, 1500 etc. according to some manuscripts), years before Mahāpadma, the first Nanda king of Magadha :

*Mahāpadm-ābhishhekāt tu yāvajjanna Parīkshitah evam varshasahasram tu jñeyam pañchāśaduttaram.*⁴

1 IHQ, 1932, 85 ; Mod. Rev., June, 1932, 650 ff.

2 The Bṛihat-Saṃhitā by Varāhamihira with the commentary of Bhaṭṭotpala, edited by Sudhākara Dvivedī, p. 281.

3 Bṛihat Saṃhitā, VIII, 20-21.

4 Pargiter, Dynasties of the Kali Age, p. 58. From the account of Pargiter it appears that the reading Pañcha-śatottaram, finds no support in the Vāyu and Brahmāṇḍa texts. The variant Śatam pañchadaśottaram occurs only in some Bhāgavata Mss. 'Pañchadaś-ottaram' is however unknown to the Matsya. One Matsya Ms. has 'Śato trayām'. The reading generally accepted by the scribes seems to have been Pañchāśad-uttaram. The biggest figure (1500) is probably obtained by the wrong inclusion within the Magadhan list of the Pradyotas of Avanti, and taking the period of Bārhadratha rule to cover 1000 instead of 723 years. 1000 (for the Bārhadrathas) + 152 (for the Pradyotas) + 360 (for the Śaśunāgas) = 1512 years.

30 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

If the reading Pañchāsāduṭṭaram be correct, the verse would seem to point to a date in the fourteenth or fifteenth century B. C. for the birth of Parikshit. It is, however, doubtful if even this tradition can be regarded as of great value. In the first place the divergent readings in the different Mss. take away from the value of the chronological datum. Secondly, the Purāṇas themselves in giving details about the dynasties that are supposed to have intervened between the Bhārata war and the coronation of Mahāpadma mention totals of reigns which when added together neither present a unanimous tradition nor correspond to the figure 1050, which alone finds general acceptance in the Matsya, the Vāyu and the Brahmāṇḍa manuscripts. The discrepancies may no doubt be partially explained by the well-known fact that the Purāṇic chroniclers often represent contemporaneous lines e.g. the Pradyotas and the Bimbisārids, as following one another in regular succession. But there is another point which deserves notice in this connection. The same passage which says that "from Mahāpadma's inauguration to the birth of Parikshit, this interval is indeed 1050 years," adds that "the interval which elapsed from the last Andhra king Pulomāvi to Mahāpadma was 836 years." As most of the Purāṇas agree in assigning a period of 100 years to Mahāpadma and his sons who were followed immediately by Chandragupta Maurya, the interval between Chandragupta and Pulomāvi, according to the Purāṇic chronology, will be $836 - 100 = 736$ years. Now as Chandragupta could not have ascended the throne before 326 B.C., Pulomāvi, according to the calculation of the Purāṇas, cannot be placed earlier than 410 A.D. But this date can hardly be reconciled with what we know about the history of the Deccan in the first half of the fifth century A.D. Contemporary records show that the territory that had acknowledged the sway of Pulomāvi and his ancestors was at that time under the Vakātakas and other dynasties that rose on the ruins of the so-called "Andhra," or Śātavāhana empire. This emphasizes the need of caution in utilizing the chronological data of the Purāṇas.¹

An attempt has been made in recent times to support the Purāṇic date for Parikshit and the Bhārata War, which is taken to correspond to c. 1400 B.C.,² by calculations based on the Vamśa lists of teachers and pupils preserved in the Vedic literature. The importance of these lists was emphasized in these very pages as early as 1923. But the data they yield have been made to square with the chronological scheme adumbrated in some of the Purāṇic Mss with the help of a number of assumptions for which no cogent proofs have been adduced. It has, for instance, been taken for granted that the Vamśa list given at the end of the Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad is virtually contemporaneous with those found in the Vamśa Brāhmaṇa and the Jaiminiya Upanishad Brāhmaṇa, and that all the lists "must be" dated "not later than c. 550 B.C." (op. cit. p. 70). A few pages further on (p. 77) the date of the Vamśa Brāhmaṇa is stated to be "c. 550 B.C." (the words "not later than" being omitted). The mere fact that the Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad and other works of the Śruti literature are generally regarded as Pre-Buddhist cannot be taken to prove that the entire lists of teachers and pupils appended to or inserted in all of them can claim equal antiquity. Scholars in assigning the period before 500 B.C. to the Vedic literature expressly exclude "its latest excrescences."³ Pāṇini⁴ draws

1 See also Raychaudhuri, The Early History of the Vaishṇava Sect, second edition, pp. 62ff.

2 Dr. Altekar, Presidential Address to the Archaic Section of the Indian History Congress, Proceedings of the Third Session, 1939, pp. 68-77.

3 Winternitz, A History of Indian Literature, p. 27.

4 IV. 3. 105.

a distinction between Vedic works which, to him, are Purāṇaprokta and those that he does not obviously regard as equally old. The date "c. 550 B.C." has even less justification than the vague words "not later than c. 550 B.C."

It has been stated further that the period separating the priests of Janamejaya from c. 550 B.C. is 800 years. This figure is obtained by accepting the round number 40 for the intervening generations and assigning to each generation in the guruśishya paramparā a period of 20 years. The probative value of this mode of calculation is impaired by the fact that the actual number of teachers of the period given in the Bṛihadāraṇyaka Upanishad is 45 and not 40 (p. 70), and the true average length of a spiritual generation is, according to Jaina and Buddhist evidence, about 30 and not 20 years.¹ Moreover, it should not be forgotten that if the lists which form the basis of calculation are really to be dated 'not later than c. 550 B.C.,' c. 1350 B.C. (550 + 800) can only be regarded as a terminus ad quem. The terminus a quo still remains to be determined. The uncertainty regarding the date of the particular Vanīśa lists, on which the whole chronological theory rests, lays even the lower limit open to objection.

Tradition recorded in the Kathā-sarīt-sāgara points to a date for the Pārikshitas which is much later than that assigned to them by Purāṇic chroniclers and astronomers of the Gupta Age². It refers to Udayana, king of Kauśāmbī (c. 500 B.C.), as fifth in lineal succession from Parikshit. The evidence is late but the text professes to embody tradition that goes back to Guṇāḍhya who is known to Bāṇa (c. 600 A.D.) and is assigned to the Śātavāhana period.

1 Jacobi, Parīśiṣṭaparvan, 2nd ed. xviii; Rhys Davids, Buddhist Suttas, Introduction, xlvii.

2 Kathā-sarīt-sāgara, IX. 6-7 ff. Penzer, I. 95.

A comparatively late date, albeit not the date suggested by the Kathā-sarit-sāgara, can also be inferred from certain passages in the later Vedic texts. We shall show in the next section that Parikshit's son and successor Janamejaya was separated by five or six generations of teachers from the time of Janaka of the Upanishads and his contemporary Uddālaka Āruṇi. At the end of the Kaushītaki or *Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka*¹ we find a vaṁśa or list of the teachers by whom the knowledge contained in that Āraṇyaka is supposed to have been handed down. The opening words of this list run thus :—

“Om ! Now follows the vaṁśa. Adoration to the Brahman ! Adoration to the teachers ! We have learnt this text from Guṇākhyā Śāṅkhāyana, Guṇākhyā Śāṅkhāyana from Kahola Kaushītaki, Kahola Kaushītaki from Uddālaka Āruṇi.”²

The passage quoted above makes it clear that Guṇākhyā Śāṅkhāyana was separated by two generations from the time of Uddālaka who was separated by five or six generations from the time of Janamejaya. Guṇākhyā, therefore, lived seven or eight generations after Parikshit. He could not have flourished much later than Āsvalāyana because the latter, or preferably his pupil, honours his guru Kahola.³ It is to be noted that we have no personal name prefixed to Āsvalāyana as we have in the case of Śāṅkhāyana. This probably suggests that Vedic tradition knew only of one great teacher named Āsvalāyana. It is significant that both in Vedic and Buddhist literature this famous scholar is associated with one and the same locality, viz., Kosala, modern Oudh. The Praśna Upanishad tells us that Āsvalāyana was a Kausalya, i.e., an 1 Ādhāya 15.

2 S. B. E., Vol. XXIX, p. 4

3 Āsvalāyana Gṛhya Sūtra, III. 4. 4.

34 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

inhabitant of Kosala, and a contemporary of Kābandhī Kātyāyana. These facts enable us to identify him with Assalāyana of Sāvattī (a city in Kosala) mentioned in the *Majjhima Nikāya*¹ as a famous Vedic scholar,² and a contemporary of Gotama Buddha and, hence, of Kakudā³ or Pakudha Kaccāyana. The reference to Gotama's contemporary as a master of ketubha, i.e., kalpa or ritual, makes it exceedingly probable that he is to be identified with the famous Āśvalāyana of the Grihya Sūtras. Consequently the latter must have lived in the sixth century B. C. Guṇākhyā Śāṅkhāyana, whose teacher Kaḥola is honoured by the famous Grihyasūtra-kāra, cannot be placed later than that century. That the upper limit of Guṇākhyā's date is not far removed from the lower one is suggested in the first place by the reference in his Āraṇyaka to Paushkarasādi, Lauhitya and a teacher who is styled Magadhavāsī. The first two figure in the Ambatṭha and Lohichcha suttas, among the contemporaries of the Buddha. The attitude of respect towards a Magadhan teacher in the Āraṇyaka points to an age later than that reflected in the Śrauta sūtras which mention Brāhmaṇas hailing from the locality in question in a depreciatory tone as Brahmabandhu Māgadha-deśīya.⁴

Goldstücker points out⁵ that Pāṇini used the word Āraṇyaka only in the sense of 'a man living in the forest'. It is Kātyāyana (fourth century B.C.) who vouchsafes in a Vārttika the information that the same

1 II. 147, et seq.

2 "Tijñānā Vedānāṁ pāragū sanighaṇḍu ketubhānaṁ."

3 As to the equation kabandhī = kakudā, see IHQ., 1932, 603 ff. Kabandha in the Atharva Veda, X. 2.3 means śroṇi and ūru (hips and thighs). According to Amara kakudmatī has substantially the same meaning.

4 Vedic Index, II. 116. Isolated references to Paushkarasādi and others may not be of much value. What we have to consider is the cumulative effect of the references in the Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka combined with the testimony of Pāṇini and Āpastamba.

5 Pāṇini, His place in Sanskrit Literature, 1914, 99.

expression is also used in the sense of treatises "read in the forest." The silence of Pāṇini in regard to this additional meaning of the term, when contrasted with the clear statement of the later grammarian, leaves little room for doubt that Āraṇyaka in the sense of a forest-treatise was well known to writers traditionally assigned to the fourth century B.C., but not to Pāṇini. It may be recalled in this connection that, unlike Kātyāyana again, Pāṇini does not include the works of Yājñavalkya, a contemporary of Kahola, the teacher of Guṇākhyā, among the older (Purāṇa-prokta) Brāhmaṇas.¹ Śvetaketu, another contemporary of Kahola, teacher of Guṇākhyā, is mentioned in the Dharmasūtra of Āpastamba² as an avara or modern authority. The reference to Yavanāni in the *sūtras*³ of Pāṇini and the tradition recorded in the *Kāvya-Mīmāṃsā*⁴ that he made his mark in the city of Pāṭaliputra (founded, as we know, after the death of the Buddha c. 486 B. C., in the reign of Udāyin), clearly suggest that he could not have flourished before the sage of the Śākya. Profound as his knowledge is in regard to Vedic literature, Pāṇini is unaware of the existence of Āraṇyakas as a class of forest-treatises. It is, therefore, not unreasonable to conclude that he could not have been considerably posterior to the great masters of the Āraṇyakas among whom Guṇākhyā Śāṅkhāyana holds an honoured place. In other words, the upper limit of the date of this teacher almost coincides with the lower. With a date for him in the sixth century B. C. all the evidence accommodates itself.

We are now left with the task of attempting to measure the distance between Guṇākhyā and Parikshit. Professor

1 IV. 3. 105 with commentary quoted on page 106n of Goldstücker's Pāṇini, Yājñavalkyādayo hi na chira kālā ityākhyāneshu vartā.

2 Dharma Sūtra, 1, 2, 5, 4-6.

3 IV. 1. 49.

4 P. 55.

Rhys Davids in his Buddhist Suttas assigns 150 years to the five Theras from Upāli to Mahinda. Jacobi, too, informs us that the average length of a patriarchate may be estimated at about 30 years. We may, therefore, assign 240 or 270 years to the eight or nine generations from Parikshit to Guṇākhyā Śāṅkhāyana, and place the former in the ninth century B.C.

Parikshit was succeeded on the Kuru throne by his eldest son Janamejaya. The Mahābhārata refers to a great snake-sacrifice performed by this king. In this connection it is stated that the king conquered Taxila.¹ It is clear from the *Pañchaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa*² and the *Baudhāyana Śrauta Sūtra*³ that the epic account of the Kuru king's Sarpa-satra cannot be regarded as having any historical basis. There is hardly any doubt that the Satra mentioned in the Vedic texts is the prototype of the famous sacrifice described in the epic. The story seems to have undergone three stages of development. The original tale is concerned with a mythical rite performed by the serpents one of whom was named Janamejaya, who served as an Adhvaryu (priest). "Through this rite the serpents vanquished death." The next stage is reached in the Baudhāyana Śrauta Sūtra. Janamejaya appears among the kings and princes of the serpents assembled for sacrifice in human shape at Khāṇḍavaprastha (in the Kuru country) with the object of obtaining poison. In the epic the performer of the sacrifice is identified with the Kuru king; and the object of the sacrifice is not the acquisition of immortality for the serpents, or of poison, but the extinction of these reptiles. It is impossible to find in the doings of these venomous creatures a reference to an historic strife.¹

1 Mbh. 1. 3. 20. For early references to Taxila, see also Pāṇini, IV. 3. 93; Vinaya Texts, pt. II. p. 174; Malalasekera, Dictionary, I. p. 982.

2 XXV. 15; Vedic Index, I. p. 274.

3 Vol. II, p. 298; XVII. 18.

The conquest of Taxila by the Kuru king may, however, be an historical fact, because King Janamejaya is represented as a great conqueror in the Brāhmaṇas. Thus the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa says :² "Janamejayah Pārikshitah samantam sarvataḥ prithivīm jayan pariyāyāśvena cha medhyeneje, tadeshā'bhi yajña-gathā gīyate :

Āsandivati dhānyādām rukmiṇām haritasrajam aśvam bahandha sārāṅgam³ devebhyo Janamejaya iti"

"Janamejaya Pārikshita went round the earth completely, conquering on every side, and offered the horse in sacrifice." Regarding this a sacrificial verse is sung :

"In Āsandivat Janamejaya bound for the gods a black-spotted grain-eating horse, adorned with a golden ornament and with yellow garlands."⁴

In another passage of the *Aitareya Brāhmaṇa*⁵ it is stated that Janamejaya aspired to be a "Sarvabhūmi," i.e., a universal sovereign :

"Evaṁvidām hi vai māmevaṁvido yūjayanti tasmād aham jayāmyabhitvarīm senām jayāmyabhitvaryā senayū na mū divyā na mānushya īshava ricchikṣantyeshyāmi sarva-māyulḥ sarvabhūmīr bhaviṣhyāmti."

(Janamejaya Pārikshita used to say) "Those who know thus sacrifice for me who know thus ; therefore I conquer the assailing host, I conquer with an assailing host. Me

1 Pañchaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, translated by Dr. W. Caland, p. 641 ; cf. Winternitz, JBBRAS., 1926, 74. ff ; Pargiter, AIHT, p. 285, observes that "the Nāgas killed Parikshit II, but his son Janamejaya III defeated them and peace was made !"

2 VIII. 21.

3 Variant—abadhnādaśvam sārāṅgam—Śat. Br. xiii. 5. 4. 1-2.

4 Keith, Rig-Veda Brāhmaṇas, 336 ; Eggeling, Śat. Br. V, p. 396.

5 VIII. 11.

neither the arrows of heaven nor of men reach. I shall live all my life, I shall become lord of all the earth."

The possession of Taxila in the extreme north-west implies control over Madra or the central Pañjab, the homeland of Janamejaya's mother Mādravati.¹ In this connection it may be remembered that the western frontier of the Kuru country once extended as far as the Pariṇah or Parenos, a tributary of the Indus. Princes of the Paurava race ruled in the territory lying between the Jhelam and the Rāvi down to the time of Alexander, while Ptolémý, the geographer, expressly mentions the Pāṇḍus as the rulers of Śākala (Siālkot) in the heart of this extensive region.

It was presumably after his victorious campaigns that Janamejaya was consecrated with the Punar-abhishheka and the Aindra mahābhishheka, performed two horse-sacrifices and had a dispute with Vaiśampāyana and the Brāhmaṇas. The Matsya version, which is considered by Pargiter to be the oldest, says the king made a successful stand against them for some time, but afterwards gave in and, making his son king, departed to the forest; but the Vāyu version says he perished and the Brāhmaṇas made his son king. The broad facts of the Purāṇic narrative are confirmed by the evidence of the Brāhmaṇas. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa refers to one of the horse-sacrifices, and says that the priest who performed the rite for him was Indrota Daivāpi Śaunaka. The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa mentions the other sacrifice and names Tura Kāvasheya as his priest. It also contains a tale stating that at one sacrifice of his he did not employ the Kaśyapas, but the Bhūtavīras. Thereupon a family of the Kaśyapas called Asita-mṛiga forcibly took away the conduct of the offering from the Bhūtavīras. We have here probably the germ of the Purāṇic stories about Janamejaya's dispute with the Brāhmaṇas. Vaiśampāyana, who headed the opponents of Janamejaya, undoubtedly belonged to the Kaśyapa clan. An allusion to the famous quarrel occurs also in the Kauṭīliya Arthaśūtra (kopāj-Janamejayo Brāhmaṇeṣu vikrāntaḥ).

1 The Bhāgavata Purāṇa (I. xvi. 2) mentions Irāvati, daughter of Uttara as the mother of Janamejaya and his brothers.

The Gopatha Brāhmaṇa narrates an anecdote of Janamejaya and two ganders, pointing out the importance of Brahmacharya, and the time which should be devoted to it. The story is obviously mythical but it shows that Janamejaya was already looked upon as a legendary hero in the time of the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa.¹

Janamejaya's capital, according to a sacrificial song (yajña-gāthā) quoted above, was Âsandivat to which reference has already been made. The Śatopatha Brāhmaṇa affords an interesting glimpse of life in the royal palace or sacrificial hall :

Samānāntsadam ukshanti hayān kūṣṭhabhṛito yathā pūrṇān parisrutāḥ kumbhān Janamejayaśādana' iti

"Even as they constantly sprinkle the equal prize-winning steeds so (they pour out) the cups full of fiery liquor in the palace (or sacrificial hall) of Janamejaya."² "Curds, stirred drink or liquor" were favourite beverages of the Kurus already in the days of Parikshit.

If the Mahābhārata is to be believed, Janamejaya sometimes held his court at Taxila, and it was at Taxila that Vaiśampāyana is said to have related to him the story of the great conflict between the Kurus and the Pāṇḍus¹ who had for their allies several peoples including the Śrīñjayas. No direct independent proof of this war is forthcoming, but allusions to the hostility of Kurus and Śrīñjayas, which forms an important feature of the epic ballads, are met with in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.² Moreover Hopkins invites attention to a gāthā in the *Ukhāṇḍogya Upanishad*³ which alludes to the mare which saves the Kurus :—

1 Gopatha Brāhmaṇa, ed. by R. L. Mitra and Harachandra Vidyābhūṣaṇa, pp. 25 ff. (I. 2, 5). In connection with the legend referred to above we hear of a sage named Dantābala Dhaumra who is identified by some recent writers with Dantāla Dhaumya of the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa. The conjecture lacks proof. In the Bauddhāyana Śrauta Sūtra, Vol. III, p. 449, "Dhumras, Dhumrāyanas and Dhaumyas" find separate mention as distinct members of the Kaśyapa group.

2 Śat. Br. XI. 5. 5, 13. Eggeling, V. 95.

40 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

*Yato yata ūvartate tat tad gachchhāti mūnavah
.....Kurūn aśvābhīrakshati.*

The verse cannot fail to recall the disaster (Kurūnām vaiśaṣam) referred to in the Mahābhārata.⁴

It may be asserted that the Pāṇḍus are a body of strangers unknown to the Vedic texts, and that, therefore, the story of their feuds with the Kurus must be post-Vedic. But such a conclusion would be wrong because, firstly, an argumentum ex silentio is seldom conclusive, and, secondly, the Pāṇḍus are, according to Indian tradition, not a body of strangers but in fact scions of the Kurus. Hopkins indeed says that they were an unknown folk connected with the wild tribes located north of the Ganges.⁵ But Patañjali⁶ calls Bhīma, Nakula and Sahadeva Kurus.⁷ Hindu tradition is unanimous in representing the Pāṇḍavas as an offshoot of the Kuru race just as the Kurus themselves were an offshoot of the Bharatas.

1 Mbh., XVIII. 5. 34.

2 The battle of Kuru-kshetra is very often described as a fight between the Kurus and the Śrīñjayas (Mbh., VI. 45. 2 ; 60. 29 ; 72. 15 ; 73. 41 ; VII. 20. 41 ; 149. 40 ; VIII. 47. 23 ; 57. 12 ; 59. 1 ; 93. 1). The unfriendly feeling between these two peoples is distinctly alluded to in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa XII. 9. 3. 1 ff. ; Vedic Index, II, p. 63.)

3 IV. 17. 9-10 ; The Great Epic of India, p. 385.

4 Mbh. IX. 35. 20.

5 The Religions of India, p. 388.

6 IV. 1. 4.

7 Ind. Ant., I, p. 350.

*Pārikshitā yajamānū aśvamedhaiḥ paro'varam ajahuh karmapāpakam puṇyāḥ puṇyena karmaṇā.*¹

"The righteous Pārikshitas, performing horse-sacrifices, by their righteous work did away with sinful work one after another."

It may be presumed that the breach with the 'lords spiritual' of those days was healed in this way and for the time being priests and princes in the Kuru country lived in harmony. The Purāṇas state that Janamejaya was succeeded by Śatānika. Śatānika's son and successor was Aśvamedha-datta. From Aśvamedha-datta was born Adhisīma-kṛishṇa famed in the Vāyu and Matsya Purāṇas. Adhisīma-kṛishṇa's son was Nichakshu. During Nichakshu's reign the city of Hāstinapura is said to have been carried away by the Ganges, and the king is said to have transferred his residence to Kauśāmbī, or Kosam near Allahabad.²

The Vedic texts do not refer in clear terms to any of these successors of Janamejaya or to the city of Hāstinapura which figures as the principal metropolis of the Kurus in the epic and the Purāṇas. The antiquity of the city is, however, clearly proved by the evidence of Pāṇini.³ As to the princes the Ṛig-Veda no doubt mentions a (Bhārata) king named Aśvamedha,⁴ but there

1 Śat. Br. XIII. 5. 4. 3. Cf. Mbh. XII. 152, 38. The sinful deeds of which the eldest of the Pārikshitas was guilty, according to the epic, were Brahmahatyā and bhrūṇahatyā (ibid., 150 Verses 3 and 9). Cf. also Śat. Br. XIII. 5. 4. 1.

2 Gaṅgayāpahṛite tasmin nagare Nāgasāhvaye tyaktvā Nichakshu nagaram Kauśāmbyaṁ sa nivatsyati.

When the city of Nāgasāhvayā (Hāstinapura) is carried away by the Ganges, Nichakshu will abandon it and will dwell in-Kauśāmbī.

Pargiter, Dynasties of the Kali Age, P. 5.

That Hāstināpura stood on the Ganges is clear from the Rāmāyaṇa (II. 68. 13), the Mahābhārata (I, 128), and the Mahābhāshya (anugaṅgam Hāstinapuram).

3 VI. 2, 101.

4 V. 27. 4—6.

is nothing to show that he is identical with Ásvamedhaddatta. A Śatānika Sātrājita is mentioned in the Āitareya Brāhmaṇa and the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa as a powerful king who defeated Dhṛitarāshṭra, a prince of Kāsi, and took away his sacrificial horse. He, too, was probably a Bharata,¹ but the patronymic Sātrājita probably indicates that he was different from Śatānika, the son of Janamejaya. The Pañchāviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, the Jaiminīya Upaniṣhad Brāhmaṇa and the Chhāndogya Upaniṣhad mention a Kuru king named Abhipratārin Kākshaseni, who was a contemporary of Girikshit Auchchamanyava, Śaunaka Kāpeya and Dṛiti Aindrota. As Dṛiti was the son and pupil of Indrota Daivāpa (Daivāpi) Śaunaka, the priest of Janamejaya,² Abhipratārin, son of Kakshasena, appears to have been one of the immediate successors of the great king. We have already seen that Kakshasena appears in the *Mahābhārata*³ as the name of a brother of Janamejaya. Abhipratārin was thus Janamejaya's nephew. The Āitareya Brāhmaṇa and the *Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra*⁴ refer to a prince named Vṛiddhadyumna Ābhipratāriṇa, apparently the son of Abhipratārin. The *Āitareya Brāhmaṇa*⁵ possibly mentions his son Rathagṛitsa and priest Śuchivṛiksha Gaupālāyana.⁶ The *Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra*⁷ informs us that Vṛiddhadyumna erred in a sacrifice, when a Brāhmaṇa uttered a curse that the result would be the expulsion of the Kurus from Kuru-kshetra, an event which actually came to pass.

1 Śat, Br. XIII. 5. 4. 19-23.

2 Viṃśa Brāhmaṇa : Vedic Index, Vol. I, pp. 27, 373.

3 I. 94, 54.

4 XV. 16. 10-13.

5 Trivedi's translation, pp. 322-23.

6 A Gaupālāyana also held the important post of the Sthapati of the Kurus (Baudh. Śr. Sūtra, XX. 25 ; Vedic Index, I. 128). His relationship with Śuchivṛiksha is, however, not known.

7 XV. 16. 10-13.

The very name of the Great Epic betrays the Bhārata (Kuru) connection of the principal heroes and combatants. The testimony of Buddhist literature points to the same conclusion. In the *Dasa-Brāhmaṇa Jātaka*¹ a king "of the stock of Yuddhitthila" reigning "in the kingdom of Kuru and the city called Indapatta" is distinctly called "Koravya," i.e., Kauravya—belonging to the Kuru race. The polyandrous marriage of the Pāṇḍavas does not necessarily indicate that they are of non-Kuru origin. The system of Niyoga prevalent among the Kurus of the Madhya-deśa was not far removed from fraternal polyandry,² while the law (Dharma) of marriage honoured by the Northern Kurus was admittedly lax.³

Already in the time of Āśvalāyana's *Gṛihya Sūtra*⁴ Vaiśampāyana was known as Mahābhārātāchārya. He is also mentioned in the *Taittirīya Āraṇyaka*⁵ and the Ashṭādhyāyī of Pāṇini.⁶ Whether the traditional reciter of the original Mahābhārata was actually a contemporary of Janamejaya or not, cannot be ascertained at the present moment. But I have found nothing in the Vedic literature itself which goes against the epic tradition. The early Vedic texts no doubt make no reference to the

1 Jātaka No. 495.

2 See also my "Political History," pp. 95, 96; Journal of the Department of Letters (Calcutta University), Vol. IX; and the Early History of the Vaiṣṇava Sect, second edition, pp. 43-45. Also Mbh., I, 103, 9-10; 105, 37-38; Winternitz in JRAS, 1897, 755 ff; Āpastamba, ii. 27. 3; Bṛihaspati, xxvii. It is to be noted that in spite of the alleged family custom in the Pāṇḍu line no other wife except Draupadi was shared by the Pāṇḍava brothers, and their children had no common wife. In the epic 'Kuru' and 'Pāṇḍu' no doubt often find separate mention. In a similar way historians distinguish between the related houses of 'Plantagenet,' 'York' and 'Lancaster'; 'Capet,' 'Valois,' 'Bourbon' and 'Orleans'; 'Chaulukya' and 'Vāghela.'

3 Mbh., I, 122, 7.

4 III. 4.

5 I. 7. 5.

6 IV, 3. 104.

Mahābhārata, but they mention Itihāsas.¹ It is well-known that the story supposed to have been recited by Vaiṣampāyana to Janamejaya was at first called an Itihāsa and was named *Jaya*² or song of victory, i.e., victory of the Pāṇḍus, the ancestors of the king :

*Muchyate sarvapāpabhya Rāhuṃ Chandramā yathā
Jaya nāmetihāso' yaṃ śrotavyo vijigīṣhuṃ.*³

"By listening to this story one escapes from all kinds of sin, like the Moon from Rāhu. This Itihāsa (story, legend) is named Jaya (Victory); it should be listened to by those that desire victory."

Janamejaya's brothers, Bhīmasena, Ugrasena and Śrutasena, appear in the *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*⁴ and the *Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra*⁵ as performers of the horse-sacrifice.⁶ At the time of the Bṛihad-āraṇyaka Upaniṣad their life and end excited popular curiosity and were discussed with avidity in learned circles. It is clear that the sun of the Pārikshitas had set before the time of the Upaniṣad,⁷ and it is also clear that they had been guilty of some sinful deeds which they had atoned for by their horse-sacrifice. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa quotes a gāthā which says :—

1 A. V., XV. 6. 11-12.

2 Cf. C. V. Vaidya, Mahābhārata : A Criticism, p. 2; and S. Lévi in Bhand. Com. Vol., pp. 99 sqq.

3 Mbh., Ādi, 62, 20; cf. Udyoga, 136, 18.

4 XIII. 5. 4. 3.

5 XVI. 9. 7.

6 Did these three brothers take part in the sacrifices of Janamejaya? Such a participation is clearly suggested by Mbh. I. 3. 1.

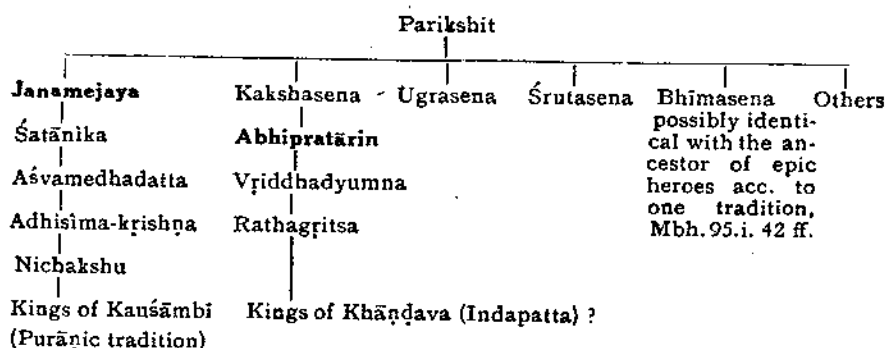

7 The question "Whither have the Pārikshitas gone?" does not imply their extinction; Pargiter himself points out that the answer "Thither where Aśvamedha sacrificers go" suggests the opposite because such sacrifices procured great blessings. AIHT., 114. The Rāmāyaṇa, too, includes Janamejaya (II. 64. 42) in a list of kings who attained to a glorious destiny.

branch of the Kuru or Bharata dynasty to Kauśāmbī is confirmed by the evidence of some of the plays attributed to Bhāsa. Udayana, king of Kauśāmbī, is described in the Svapnavāsava-datta as a scion of the Bharata or Bhārata family¹ :—

Bhāratānām kule jāto vinito jñānavāñchhuchih tannārhasi balāddhartum rājadharmasya deśikah

"Thou art born in the family of the Bharatas. Thou art self-controlled, enlightened and pure. To stop her by force is unworthy of thee, who shouldst be the model of kingly duty."

GENEALOGY OF THE PĀRIKSHITA FAMILY

1 Ed. Gaṇapati Śāstrī, p. 140. Trans. V. S. Sukthankar, p. 79. Cf. Pratijñā-Yaugandharāyaṇa, "Vedākshara samdvāya-pravishṭo Bhārato Vamśah" "Bharatakulopabhuktaṁ viṇāratnām," Act II

Bhāratānām kule jāto

Vatsānāmūrjitaḥ patih, Act IV.

SECTION II. THE AGE OF THE GREAT JANAKA.

Sarve rājāṇo Maithilasya Mainākasyeva parvatāḥ nikṛishṭabhūtā rājāṇo.....

—Mahābhārata.¹

We have seen that a series of calamities sadly crippled the Kurus. The kingdom fell to pieces and one of the princes had to leave the country. During the age which followed the Kuru people played a minor part in politics.

The most notable figure of the succeeding age was Janaka, the great philosopher king of Videha, mentioned in the Vedic texts as the contemporary of Uddālaka Āruṇi and Yājñavalkya. The waning power of the Kurus and the waxing strength of the Vaidehas are shown by the fact that while Kuru princes are styled rājan (king) in certain Brāhmaṇas,² Janaka of Videha is called samrāj (supreme king). In the *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*³ the samrāj is asserted to be of higher dignity than a rājan.

That the great Janaka was later than the Pārikshitas admits of no doubt. We shall show later on that he was a contemporary probably of Nichakshu (if Purāṇic tradition is to be accepted), and certainly of Ushasta or Ushasti Chākrāyana during whose time disaster befell the Kurus. In Janaka's time we find the notable achievements, as well as the mysterious fate, of the Pārikshitas, still fresh in the memory of the people and discussed as a subject of general curiosity in the royal court of Mithilā. In the Bṛihad-āranyaka Upanishad

1 III. 134. 5. As all other mountains are inferior to Maināka so are kings inferior to the lord of Mithilā.

2 Ait., VIII. 14. Pañchaviṃśa, XIV. 1. 12, etc.

3 V. I, 1, 12-13.

Sacrifices threatened to have serious repercussions on the fortunes of the royal family even in the days of Janamejaya. The performance of ritual in the approved form by proper persons seems to have excited as much interest in the Kuru country as philosophical discussions did at the court of Videha. Even in the fourth century B.C. the great Chandragupta Maurya had to attend to sacrifices in the midst of his pressing duties relating to war and judicial administration. A sacrificial error was not a trivial matter, especially in the ancient realm of the Kurus, which was the citadel of Brāhmaṇic ritualism. To religious indiscretions were soon added natural calamities and the effect on the people was disastrous. Mention has already been made of the Purāṇic tradition about the destruction of Hāstinapura by the erosive action of the Ganges. The Chhāndogya Upanishad refers to the devastation of the crops in the Kuru country by Maṭachi (hailstones or locusts) and the enforced migration of the family of Ushasti Chākrāyana, who repaired to the village of an unnamed noble or wealthy man, next to a neighbourly prince and ultimately to the court of Janaka of Videha.¹

1 Chhāndogya, I. 10. 1 ; Bṛihad. Upanishad, III, 4. For earlier vicissitudes, see Rigveda, X. 98 (drought in the time of Śāntanu) ; Mbh. I. 94 (story of Saṁvaraṇa). The Chhāndogya Upanishad says : maṭachīhateshu Kurushu āṭikyā sahaṭāyayā Ushastir ha Chākrāyana ibhya-grame pradrūṇaka uvāsa. "When Kuruland was devastated by hailstones or locusts, Ushasti Chākrāyana repaired with his virgin wife to a magnate's village and there lived in great distress. The plight of the Brāhmaṇa and his wife offers a sad contrast to the condition of the Kauravya and his lady who "throve merrily in the realm of Parikshit." Commentators took maṭachi to mean 'thunderbolt', 'hailstone' or 'a kind of small red bird' or 'locust.' The last meaning accords with the evidence of the Devibhāgavatam, X. 13. 110 : Maṭachi yuthavatteshām samudāyāstu nirgatāḥ. The Kanarese word midiche has the same sense (Kittel's Dictionary ; Jacob, Scraps from Shaḍ-darśana, JRAS, 1911, 510 ; Vedic Index, II, 119 ; Bhand., Carm. Lec., 1918, 26-27 ; Bagchi, IHQ, 1933, 253).

The *Pañchaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa*¹ affords a clue to the royal seat of the 'Ābhipratāriṇa' branch of the Kuru family whose reign witnessed the beginning of those incidents that spelled disaster to the Kurus. We are told that Dṛiti, apparently the priest of king Abhipratārin, son of Kakshasena, completed a sacrifice in Khāṇḍava.² The same *Brāhmaṇa*³ refers to the Ābhipratāriṇas as the "mightiest of all their relations." The passage is significant. It suggests that the great Janamejaya was no more in the land of the living in the days of Abhipratārin and his descendants, and that the line represented by the latter far outshone the other branches of the Kuru royal family. The existence of distinct offshoots of the line is clearly implied by tradition. One of them held sway in Hāstinapura and later on moved to Kauśāmbī. This is the branch mentioned in the Purāṇas. Another line reigned in Ishukāra.⁴ The third and the 'mightiest' branch is, as we have seen, connected with Khāṇḍava, the far-famed region where the great epic locates the stately city of Indraprastha. The famous capital which stood close to the site of modern Delhi finds prominent mention in the Jātakas as the seat of a line of kings claiming to belong to the "Yuddhiṭṭhila gotta" (Yudhisṭhira's gotra or clan).

The prosperity of the Ābhipratāriṇas was short-lived. Great calamities befell the Kurus and the disintegration of the kingdom went on apace.⁵ Large sections of the people, including Brāhmaṇas and princes, were apparently forced to leave the country, and to migrate to the eastern part of India. The transference of the royal seat of one

1 XXV. 3. 6.

2 XIV. 1. 12.

3 II. 9. 4, Caland's. ed., p. 27.

4 SBE, xlv. 62.

5 Cf. Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa, III. 156; JAOS, 26. 61. "When Abhipratāraṇa was lying used up with old age his sons divided the inheritance and made a great noise about it."

Bhujyu Lāhyāyani tests Yājñavalkya, the ornament of the court of Janaka, with a question, the solution of which the former is said to have previously obtained from a being of superhuman power through the medium of a Madra girl :

“*Kva Pārikshitā abhavan*¹—whither have the Pārikshitas gone ?”

Yājñavalkya answers : “Thither where the performers of the horse sacrifice abide.” From this it is clear that the Pārikshitas (sons of Parikshit) must at that time have passed away. Yet their life and end must have been still fresh in the memory of the people, and a subject of absorbing interest to men and women in different parts of the country.²

It is not possible to determine with precision the exact chronological relation between Janamejaya and Janaka. Epic and Purāṇic tradition seems to regard them as contemporaries. Thus the Mahābhārata says that Uddālaka, a prominent figure of Janaka’s court, and his son Śvetaketu, attended the sarpa-satra (snake sacrifice) of Janamejaya :—

*Sadasya śchābhavad Vyāsah putra-śishya-sahāyavān
Uddālakah Pramatakah Śvetaketuścha Piṅgalah*³

“Vyāsa, assisted by his son and disciple, Uddālaka, Pramataka, Śvetaketu, Piṅgala.....officiated as sadasya (priest).”

1 Bṛihad. Upanishad, III. 3.1, E. Roer, Bṛihad. Up. P. 20 ;

2 Weber, Ind. Lit. 126 ff. In the Journal of Indian History, April, 1936, p. 20, edited by Dr. S. Krishnasvami Aiyangar and others, appears the amazing insinuation that “Mr. Roy Choudhury has.....attempted to give Weber’s thought and language (as rendered) out as his own, without any reference to Weber.” A perusal of the Bibliographical Index (pp. 319, 328) appended to the first ed. of the Political History, and p. 27 of the text ; the foreword to the subsequent editions, etc., will throw interesting light on the veracity of the writer of the article in question in the Journal of Indian History.

3 Mbh., Ādi., 53. 7.

50 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

The Vishnu Purāṇa says that Śatānika, the son and successor of Janamejaya, learned the Vedas from Yājñavalkya.¹

The unreliability of the Epic and the Purāṇic tradition in this respect is proved by the evidence of the Vedic texts. We learn from the *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*² that Indrota Daivāpa or Daivāpi Śaunaka was a contemporary of Janamejaya. His pupil was Dṛiti Aindrota or Aindroti according to the Jaiminīya Upanishad and Vaṁśa Brāhmaṇas. Dṛiti's pupil was Pulusha Prāchīnayogya.³ The latter taught Pāulushi Satyayajña. We learn from the *Chhāndogya Upanishad*⁴ that Paulushi Satyayajña was a contemporary of Budila Āśvatarāśvi and of Uddālaka Āruṇi, two prominent figures of Janaka's court.⁵ Satyayajña was, therefore, certainly a contemporary of Janaka of Videha. He was an elder contemporary because his pupil Somaśushma Sātyayajñi Prāchīnayogya is mentioned in the *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*⁶ as having met Janaka. As Sātyayajñi certainly flourished long after Indrota Daivāpi Śaunaka, his contemporary Janaka must be considerably later than Janamejaya, the contemporary of Indrota.

We should also note that in the lists of teachers given at the end of the tenth book of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, and the sixth chapter of the Bṛihad-āraṇyaka Upanishad, Tura Kāvasheya, the priest of Janamejaya, appears as a very ancient sage who was tenth in the ascending line from Sāujivīputra, whereas Yājñavalkya and Uddālaka Āruṇi, the contemporaries of Janaka, were only fourth and fifth in 1 Vishnu P., IV. 21.2.

2 XIII. 5. 4. 1.

3 Vedic Index, II, p. 9.

4 V. 11. 1. 2.

5 Vide Bṛihad-āraṇyaka Upanishad, V. 14. 18 : "Janako Vaideho Budilam Āśvatarāśvīm, uvācha ;" and III. 7. 1.

6 XI. 6. 2. 1-3.

the ascending line from the same teacher. The lists are given below :—

Janamejaya Tura Kāvasheya

Yajñavachas Rājastambāyana
Kuśri	Kuśri Vājasravasa ¹
Sāṇḍilya	Upaveśi
Vātsyā	Aruṇa
Vāmakashāyana	Uddālaka Āruṇi
Māhitthi	Yājñavalkya
Kautsa	Āsuri
Māṇḍavya	Āsurāyana
Māṇḍūkāyani	Prāśnīputra Āsurivāsin
Sāñjīvīputra	Sāñjīvīputra

} Janaka
the Great

It is clear from what has been stated above that Janaka was separated by five or six generations from Janamejaya's time.² Jacobi and Rhys Davids³ agree in estimating the average length of a patriarchate or generation (in lists relating to spiritual succession) at 30 years. To the five or six teachers from Indrota to Somaśushma, and from Tura to Uddālaka Āruni and Janaka, we may, therefore, assign a period of 150 or 180 years.¹ It is, therefore, reasonable to think that Janaka flourished about 150 or 180 years after Janamejaya, and two centuries after Parikshit. If, following a Purāṇic tradition, we place Parikshit in the fourteenth century B. C., we must place Janaka in the twelfth century B.C. If, on the other hand, we accept a date for Guṇākhyā Śāṅkhāyana, the pupil's pupil of Uddālaka according to the Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka, in the sixth century B.C., we must place Parikshit in the ninth century B.C., and Janaka in the seventh century B.C.

¹ IC, III. 747.

² It has been stated by certain recent writers that Janamejaya should be placed "only a step above Janaka." They point to the use of lañ in the verb bhū in the interrogation Kva Pārikshitā abhavan quoted above. They further identify Dantābala Dhaumra, a contemporary of Janamejaya according to a legend narrated in the Gopātha Brāhmaṇa, with Dantāla Dhaumya of the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa, who may be assigned to the period of Janaka. It is also suggested that Bhāllaveya of a certain Brāhmaṇa passage is no other than Indradymna, JIH., April 1936, 15 ff, etc. Apart from the fact that in the Vedic texts lañ and lit are at times used alternatively to convey the same meaning (Cf. 37 ante.) it should be noted that the question 'Kva Pārikshitā abhavan' with its answer was not framed for the first time at the court of Janaka. It is a mūrdhābhishikta (traditional)—udāharana attributed to superhuman agency—and, therefore, it cannot be regarded as establishing the synchronism of Janamejaya Pārikshita and Janaka Vaideha. As to Dantābala it has already been pointed out, (p. 39 above), that the Baudhāyana śrauta sūtra mentions Dhumras and Dhaumyas as distinct members of the Kaśyapa group. Janamejaya must have passed away in the days of Dṛiti and the Ābhīpratāriṇas. See ante p. 46. See also IHQ, Vol. VIII, 1932, 600 ff. As to Bhāllaveya, serious students should remember that it is a patronymic like Ātreya, Bhāradvāja etc. In the absence of the personal name, it is uncritical to identify every Bhāllaveya with Indradymna himself as it is unreasonable to equate every Ātreya with Udamaya or every Bhāradvāja with Droṇa or Piṇḍola.

³ Parīśiṣṭa parvam, 2nd ed. xviii and Buddhist Suttas. Introduction, p. xlvii.

The kingdom of Videha, over which Janaka ruled seems to be mentioned for the first time in the Samhitās of the Yajur Veda.² It corresponds roughly to the modern Tirhut in North Bihār.³ It was separated from Kosala by the river Sadānirā, usually identified with the modern Gaṇḍak which, rising in Nepāl, flows into the Ganges opposite Patna.⁴ Oldenberg, however, points out⁵

1 It has recently been urged by critics that pupils are not necessarily younger in age than their preceptors. It may freely be admitted that in particular cases pupils may be of the same age with, or even older than, the guru. But it is idle to suggest that in a long list of successive āchāryas and śiṣhyas the presence of elderly pupils must be assumed except where the guru is known to be the father of the pupil. Individual cases of succession of elderly śiṣhyas do not invalidate the conclusion that the average duration of a generation is as suggested by Jacobi and Rhys Davids.

2 Vedic Index, II, 298.

3 According to Pargiter JASB, 1897, 89—"Videha comprised the country from Gorakhpur on the Rāpti to Darbhanga, with Kosala on the west and Aṅga on the east. On the north it approached the hills, and on the south it was bounded by the small kingdom of Vaiśālī."

4 Vedic Index II, 299.

5 Buddha, p. 398 n. Cf. Pargiter, JASB, 1897, 87. Mbh. II. 20. 27.

that the Mahābhārata distinguishes the Gaṇḍakī from the Sadānirā: "Gaṇḍakīṇcha Mahāsonam Sadāntrām tathaiva cha." Pargiter, therefore, identifies the Sadānirā with the Rāptī.¹ We learn from the *Suruchi Jātaka*² that the measure of the whole kingdom of Videha was three hundred leagues. It consisted of 16,000 villages.³

Mithilā, the capital of Videha, is not referred to in the Vedic texts, but is constantly mentioned in the Jātakas and the Epics. It has been identified with the small town of Janakpur just within the Nepāl border north of the place where the Muzaffarpur and Darbhanga districts meet. It is stated in the Suruchi and Gandhāra Jātakas that the city covered seven leagues. At its four gates were four market towns.⁴ We have the following description of the city in the Mahājanaka Jātaka:⁵—

By architects with rule and line laid out in order fair to see,
With walls and gates and battlements, traversed by streets on every side,
With horses, cows and chariots thronged with tanks and gardens beautified, Videha's far-famed capital, gay with its knights and warrior swarms,
Clad in their robes of tiger-skins, with banners spread and flashing arms,
Its Brahmins dressed in Kāśī cloth, perfumed with sandal, decked with gems,
Its palaces and all their queens with robes of state and diadems.⁷

1 If the epic enumeration of the rivers quoted above follows a geographical order as is suggested by the use of the expression krameṇa in the Mbh. II. 20. 27, Sadānirā may be the Burhī Gaṇḍak which is distinguished from the Gaṇḍak proper. Cf. map in JASB, 1895

2 J. 489.

3 J. 406. These are apparently conventional figures.

4 J. 489 and 406.

5 J. 546.

6 No. 539; Cowell's Jātaka, Vol. VI, p. 30.

7 For another description of Mithilā, see Mbh. iii. 206.6-9.

According to the *Rāmāyaṇa*¹ the royal family of Mithilā was founded by a king named Nimi. His son was Mithi, and Mithi's son was Janaka I. The epic then continues the genealogy to Janaka II (father of Sitā) and his brother Kuśadhvaṇa, king of Sāṅkāśya. The *Vāyu*² and the *Vishṇu*³ Purāṇas represent Nimi or Nemi as a son of Ikshvāku, and give him the epithet Videha.⁴ His son was Mithi whom both the Purāṇas identify with Janaka I. The genealogy is then continued to Śiradhvaṇa who is called the father of Sitā, and is, therefore, identical with Janaka II of the Rāmāyaṇa. Then starting from Śiradhvaṇa the Purāṇas carry on the dynasty to its close. The last king is named Kṛiti, and the family is called Janaka-vaṃśa.

*Dhṛiteṣṭu Bahulāśvo' bhud Bahulāśva-sutaḥ Kṛitih tasmin santishṭhate vaṃśo Janakānām mahātmanām*⁵

The Vedic texts know a king of Videha named Namī Sāpya.⁶ But he is nowhere represented as the founder of the dynasty of Mithilā. On the contrary, a story of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa seems to indicate that the Videhan kingdom owes its origin to Videgha Māthava who came from the banks of the Sarasvatī.⁷ We are told that the fire-god went burning along this earth from the Sarasvatī towards the east, followed by Māthava and his priest, Gotama Rāhūgaṇa till he came to the river

1 I. 71.3.

2 88. 7-8 ; 89. 3-4.

3 IV. 5, 1.

4 Sa śāpeṇa Vasishṭhasya Videhaḥ samapadyata—Vāyu P. The story of Vasistha's curse on a Videhan king is known to the Bṛihaddevatā (vii. 59).

5 Vāyu Purāṇa, 89, 23. For Janaka as a dynastic designation see also Mbh. III. 133, 17 ; Rām. I. 67. 8. The use of the expressions Janakānām, Janakair etc., does not necessarily indicate that every member of the line bore the personal name Janaka. Cf. Ikshvākūnām (Rām. I.5.3), which refers to those who were Ikshvākū-vaṃśa-prabhavāḥ (I. 1. 8), Raghūnām anvayam etc.

6 Vedic Index, I, 436.

7 Macdonell Sans. Lit., pp. 214-15 ; Ved. Ind., II. 298 ; Śat. Br., I, 4, 1, etc. ; Oldenberg's Buddha, pp. 398-99 ; Pargiter, J.A.S.B., 1897, p. 86 et seq.

Sadānirā which flows from the northern (Himālaya) mountain, and which he did not burn over. No Brāhmaṇas went across the stream in former times, thinking "it has not been burnt over by Agni Vaiśvānara (the fire that burns for all men)". At that time the land to the eastward was very uncultivated, and marshy,¹ but after Māthava's arrival many Brāhmaṇas went there, and it was cultivated, for the Brāhmaṇas had caused Agni, the Fire-god, to taste it through sacrifices. Māthava the Videgha then said to Agni, "where am I to abide?" "To the east of this river be thy abode," he replied. Even now, the writer of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa adds, this stream forms the boundary between the Kosalas and the Videhas. The name of Mithi Vaideha, the second king in the Epic and the Purāṇic lists, is reminiscent of Māthava Videgha.

If Māthava Videgha was the founder of the royal line of Mithilā, Nami Sāpya cannot claim that distinction. The *Majjhima Nikāya*² and the Nimi Jātaka mention Makhādeva as the progenitor of the kings of Mithilā, and a Nimi is said to have been born to "round off the royal house, "the family of hermits." The evidence of Buddhist texts thus shows that the name Nimi was borne not by the first, but probably by some later king or kings.³

As the entire dynasty of Maithila monarchs was called Janaka-varṇśa, Varṇśo Janakānām mahātmanām, the family of the high-souled Jaṇakas, in post-Vedic literature, and there were several kings bearing the name of Janaka, it is very difficult to identify any of these with the great Janaka of the Vedic texts, the contemporary of 1 This is the territory which the Mahābhārata refers to as "Jalodbhava," i.e., reclaimed from swamp (Mbh., II. 30. 4. Pārgiter, ibid., 88n).

2 II. 74-83.

3 The evidence of the Bṛihad-devatā (vii. 59) suggests that connection was maintained by Videhan monarchs with their old home on the banks of the Sarasvatī, cf. Pañchaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa, XXV. 10. 16-18 (story of Nami Sāpya).

Āruṇi and Yājñavalkya. But there is one fact which seems to favour his identification with Śiradhvaja of the Purāṇic list, i. e., the father of Sītā. The father of the heroine of the Rāmāyaṇa is a younger contemporary of Aśvapati, king of the Kekayas (maternal grandfather of Bharata¹), Janaka of the Vedic texts is also a contemporary of Aśvapati, prince of the Kekayas, as Uddālaka Āruṇi and Buḍila Āśvatarāśvi frequented the courts of both these princes.² But as the name Aśvapati is also apparently given to Bharata's maternal uncle,³ it seems that it was possibly not a personal name but a secondary epithet or a family designation like 'Janaka.'⁴ In that case it is impossible to say how far the identification of the Vedic Janaka with the father of Sītā is correct. The identification seems, however, to have been accepted by Bhavabhūti. Referring to the father of the heroine, the poet says in the *Mahāvīra-charita*⁵ :—

*Teshāmidānām dāyādo vṛiddah Śiradhvajo nṛipah
Yājñavalkyo muniryasmai
Brahmapārāyaṇam jagau.*⁶

It is equally difficult to identify our Janaka with any of the kings of that name mentioned in the Buddhist

1 Rāmāyaṇa, II. 9. 22.

2 Ved Ind., II, 69; Chh. Up. V. 11. 1-4; Bṛh. Up., III. 7.

3 Rāmāyaṇa, VII. 113. 4.

4 Against the view that Aśvapati was a family designation common to all members of the line it may, however, be urged that in the Mbh. vii 104. 7; 123. 5 Bṛihatkshatra, chief of the Kekayas, does not bear that epithet.

5 Act I, verse 14.

6 Cf. Act II, verse 43; Uttara-Charita, Act IV, verse 9. In the Mbh. III. 133. 4 the contemporary of Uddālaka and Kaboḍa seems to be called Aindradyumni. (Cf. AIHT. 96). In Mbh. xii. 310. 4; 318. 95 the contemporary of Yājñavalkya is styled Daivarāti. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa is attributed to this Yājñavalkya (ibid. xii. 318. 11f.). Both Aindradyumni and Daivarāti are patronymics and hardly afford a clue to the personal name of the king in question.

Jātakas. Professor Rhys Davids¹ seems to identify him with Mahā-Janaka of the Jātaka No. 539. The utterance of Mahā-Janaka II of that Jātaka :

‘Mithilā’s palaces may burn
But naught of mine is burned thereby.’

indeed reminds us of the great philosopher-king.

In the *Mahābhārata*² we find the saying attributed to Janaka ‘Janadeva’ of Mithilā. In the Jaina Uttar-ādhyāyana, however, the saying is attributed to Namī.³ This fact coupled with the mention of Nemi in juxtaposition with Arishta in the *Vishṇu-Purāṇa*⁴ may point to the identification of Namī or Nemi with Mahā-Janaka II whom the Jātaka represents as the son of Arishta. If Mahā-Janaka II be identical with Namī, he cannot be identified with Janaka who is clearly distinguished from Namī in the Vedic texts. One may be tempted to identify the Vedic Janaka with Mahā-Janaka I of the Jātaka. But proof is lacking.

In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, the Bṛihad-āranyaka Upanishad and the *Mahābhārata*⁵ Janaka is called Samrāt. This shows that he was a greater personage than a mere Rājan. Although there is no clear evidence in the Vedic literature of the use of the word Samrāj as emperor in the sense of a king of kings, 1 Bud. Ind., p. 26.

2 XII. 17. 18-19 ; 219. 50.

“Mithilāyām pradīptāyām na me dahyati kīñchana.”

“Api cha bhavati Maithilena gītaṁ nagaram upāhitam agnir-ābhivikshya na khalu mama hi dahyate’tra kīñchit svayam idam āha kila sma bhūmipālah”

“Seeing his city burning in a fire, the king of Mithilā himself sang of old,
‘in this (conflagration) nothing of mine is burning’.”

3 S. B. E., XLV. 37.

4 IV. 5. 13.

5 III. 133. 17.

still the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa distinctly says that the Samrāj was a higher authority than a Rājan; "by offering the Rājasūya he becomes king, and by the Vājapeya he becomes Samrāj; and the office of king is the lower, and that of Samrāj the higher."¹ In the *Āśvalāyana Śrauta-Sūtra*² Janaka is mentioned as a great sacrificer.

But Janaka's fame rests not so much on his achievements as a king and a sacrificer, as on his patronage of culture and philosophy. The court of this monarch was thronged with Brāhmaṇas from Kosala, the Kuru-Pañchāla countries and perhaps Madra, e.g., Aśvala, Jāratkārava, Ārtabhāga, Bhujyu Lāhyāyani, Ushasta(-i) Chākrāyana, Kaboḍa Kaushitakeya, Gārgī Vāchaknavī, Uddālaka Āruṇi and Vidagdha Śākalya. The tournaments of argument which were here held form a prominent feature in the third book of the Bṛihad-āraṇyaka Upanishad. The hero of these was Yājñavalkya Vājasaneyā, who was a pupil of Uddālaka Āruṇi.³ Referring to Janaka's relations with the Kuru-Pañchāla Brāhmaṇas, Oldenberg observes :⁴ "The king of the east, who has a leaning to the culture of the west, collects the celebrities of the west at his court—much as the intellects of Athens gathered at the court of Macedonian princes."

The Brāhmaṇas and the Upanishads throw some light on the political condition of Northern India during the age of the great Janaka. From those works we learn that, besides Videha, there were nine states of considerable importance, viz. :

- | | | |
|-------------|------------|-------------|
| 1. Gandhāra | 4. Uśīnara | 7. Pañchāla |
| 2. Kekaya | 5. Matsya | 8. Kāśī |
| 3. Madra | 6. Kuru | 9. Kosala |

1 Śat. Br., V. 1. 1 12-13; XII, 8. 3. 4; XIV. 1. 3. 8.

2 X. 3. 14.

3 Bṛih. Up. VI. 5, 3.

4 Buddha, p. 398.

The Vedic texts seldom furnish any definite clue as to the exact geographical position of these states. For the location of most of these territories we must, therefore, turn to the evidence of later literature.

The inhabitants of Gandhāra are included by epic poets among the peoples of Uttarāpatha or the northernmost region of India :—

*Uttarāpatha-janmānaḥ kīrtayishyāmi tān api
Yauna-Kāmbhoja-Gāndhārāḥ Kirātā Barbaraiḥ saha.*¹

The country lay on both sides of the Indus,² and contained two great cities, viz., Takshaśilā and Pushkarāvati, alleged to have been founded by two heroes of epic fame :

*Gandhāra-vishaye siddhe, tayoh puryaṇa mahātmanoh
Takshasya dikshu vikhyātā ramyā Takshaśilā purī
Pushkarasyāpi vīrasya vikhyātā Pushkarāvati.*³

The vishaya (territory) described in these lines must have embraced the Rāwalpindī district of the Western Pañjāb and the Peshāwar district of the North-West Frontier Province. A few miles to the north-west of Rāwalpindī and 2,000 leagues away from Benares,⁴ stood the famous city of Takshaśilā or Taxila. The remains of the great city

1 Mbh., XII. 207. 43.

2 Rāmāyaṇa, VII. 113. 11 ; 114. 11 ; Sindhōr-ubhayataḥ pārśve. According to Jātaka no. 406 the kingdom of Gandhāra included Kaśmīra. Hekataios of Miletus (B. C. 549-486) refers to a Gandaric city called Kaspapyros. Stein (JASB, 1899, extra no. 2, p 11) equates Kaspapyros with Kaspatyros of Herodotus and says that it must have been situated in that territory where the Indus first becomes navigable, i.e. in the ancient Gandhāra. Kaspatyros was the place at which the expedition under Skylax, sent by Darius to explore the course of the Indus, embarked. Stein (pp. 12-13) rejects the view according to which Kaspapyros represents the Sanskrit Kaśyapapura from which the name Kaśmīr is said to have been derived. Kaśyapapura as a place-name is known to Alberuni (1.298), but he mentions it as an original designation of Multan. Kaśyapa's traditional connection with Kaśmīr is, however, clear from Rājataranginī, 1.27.

3 Vāyu Purāṇa, 88. 189-90 ; cf. Rāmāyaṇa, VII. 114. 11.

4 Talapatta and Susima Jātakas, Nos. 96, 163.

"are situated immediately to the east and north-east of Sarai-kala, a junction on the railway, twenty miles north-west of Rāwalpindi. The valley in which they lie is watered by the Haro river. Within this valley and within three and a half miles of each other are the remains of three distinct cities. The southernmost (and oldest) of these occupies an elevated plateau, known locally as Bhir-mound."¹

Pushkarāvati or Pushkalāvati, the Lotus City, (Prākṛit Pukkalāoti, whence the 'Peukelaotis' of Arrian) is represented by the modern Prang and Chārsadda, 17 miles north-east of Peshāwar, on the Swāt river.²

Gandhāra is a later form of the name of the people called Gandhāri in the Rig-Veda and the Atharva-Veda. In the *Rig-Veda*³ the good wool of the sheep of these tribesmen is referred to. In the *Atharva-Veda*⁴ the Gandhāris are mentioned with the Mūjavats, apparently as a despised people. The Brāhmaṇa texts refer to Nagnajit, king of Gandhāra, and his son Svarjit. The former receives Brāhmaṇic consecration, but observations of the family on ritual are treated with contempt.⁵ In later times the 'angle of vision' of the men of the Madhya-deśa (Mid-India) changed, and Gandhāra became the resort of scholars of all classes who flocked to its capital for instruction in the three Vedas and the eighteen⁶ branches of knowledge.

1 Marshall, A Guide to Taxila, pp. 1-4; AGI, 1924, 120, 128 f.

2 Schoff, The Periplus of the Erythraean Sea, pp. 183-84; Foucher, Notes on the Ancient Geography of Gandhāra, p. 11; cf. V. A. Smith, JASB, 1889.111; Cunningham AGI, 1924. 57 f.

3 I. 126. 7.

4 V. 22. 14. cf. Mbh. VIII, 44, 46; 45, 8 etc.

5 Aitareya, vii. 34. Śatapatha, viii, 1, 4, 10. Vedic Index, i. 432

6 Cf. Rhys Davids and Stede, Pali-English Dictionary, 76 (Vijja-tthānāni); Vāyu, 61, 79. Brahmaṇḍa 67, 82; Milinda I, 9, mentions 19 Sippas; cf. IV, 3, 26.

In a significant passage of the *Chhândogya Upanishad*¹ Uddālaka Āruṇi, the contemporary of the Vedic Janaka, mentions Gandhāra to illustrate the desirability of having a duly qualified teacher from whom a pupil "learns (his way) and thus remains liberated (from all worldly ties) till he attains (the Truth or Beatitude, Moksha)."² A man who attains Moksha is compared to a blindfold person who reaches at last the country of Gandhāra. The passage runs as follows :

"Yathā somya puruṣaṁ Gandhārebhya' bhinaddhākṣaṁ ānīya taṁ tato' tījane visṛijet, sa yathā tatra prāṇi vā udayi vādharāṇi vā pratyāṇi vā pradhmāyita—abhinaddhākṣa ānīto' bhinaddhākṣo visṛiṣṭaḥ. Tasya yathā-bhinahanāṁ pramuchya prabrūyād etāṁ diśāṁ Gandhārā etāṁ diśāṁ vrajati. Sa grāmād grāmaṁ prichchhan paṇḍito medhāvī Gandhārāṁ evopasampadyeta, evam eveh-āchāryavān puruṣo veda."

"O my child, in the world when a man with blindfold eyes is carried away from Gandhāra and left in a lonely place, he makes the east and the north and the south and the west resound by crying 'I have been brought here blindfold, I am here left blindfold.' Thereupon (some kind-hearted man) unties the fold on his eyes and says 'This is the way to Gandhāra ; proceed thou by this way.' The sensible man proceeds from village to village, enquiring the way and reaches at last the (province) of Gandhāra. Even thus a man who has a duly qualified teacher learns (his way)."²

The full import of the illustration becomes apparent when we remember that the *Uddālaka Jātaka*³ represents Uddālaka as having journeyed to Takṣaśilā (Takkaśilā) and learnt there of a world-renowned teacher. The

1 VI, 14.

2 Dr. R. L. Mitra's translation of the Chhândogya Upanishad, p. 114.

3 No. 487.

Setaketu Jātaka¹ says that Śvetaketu, son of Uddālaka, went to Takshaśilā and learned all the arts. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa mentions the fact that Uddālaka Āruṇi used to drive about amongst the people of the northern country.² It is stated in the *Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa*³ that Brāhmaṇas used to go to the north for purposes of study. The Jātaka tales are full of references to the fame of Takshaśilā as a university town. Pāṇini, himself a native of Gandhāra, refers to the city in one of his Sūtras.⁴ An early celebrity of Takshaśilā was perhaps Kauṭilya.⁵

The Kekayas were settled in the Western Pañjab between Gandhāra and the Beas. From the *Rāmāyaṇa*⁶ we learn that the Kekaya territory lay beyond the Vipāśā or Beas and abutted on the Gandharva or Gandhāra Vishaya. The *Mahābhārata*⁷ associates them with the Madras (Madraścha saha Kekayaiḥ). Arrian⁸ places the "Kekians" on the river Saranges, apparently a tributary of the Hydraotes or the Rāvi.

The Vedic texts do not mention the name of its capital city, but the Rāmāyaṇa informs us that the metropolis was Rājagṛīha or Girivraja :

*"Ubhan Bharata-Śatrughnan Kekayeshu parantapan pure Rājagṛīhe ramye mātāmaha-nivāsane."*⁹

"Both Bharata and Satrugna, repressers of enemies, are staying in Kekaya in the charming city of Rājagṛīha, the abode of (the) maternal grandfather (of the former)."

1 No. 377.

2 Śat. Br. XI. 4. 1. 1, et seq. Udīchyānvṛito dhāvayām chakāra.

3 VII. 6. Vedic Index II. 279.

4 Sūtra iv. 3, 93 ; AGI (1924), 67.

5 Turnour, Mahawanso, vol. I (1837), p. xxxix.

6 II. 68. 19-22 ; VII. 113-14.

7 VI. 61. 12 ; VII. 19. 7. Madra-Kekayāḥ.

8 Indika, iv ; Ind. Ant. V. 332 ; Mc Crindle, Megasthenes and Arrian. 1926, pp. 163, 196.

9 Rām., II. 67. 7.

"Girivrajam puravaram śīghram āsedur añjasū"¹

"(The messengers bound for Kekaya) quickly arrived at Girivraja, the best of cities."

The journey from Ayodhyā to the Kekaya capital, a distance of about 650 miles, took seven days. Videha could be reached from Ayodhyā on the fourth day. The distance is about 200 miles. The slower rate is explained by Pargiter by the absence of good roads. Cunningham identifies the capital of the Kekayas with Girjak or Jalalpur on the river Jhelam.²

There was another Rājagṛiha-Girivraja in Magadha, while Hiuen Tsang mentions a third Rājagṛiha in Po-ho or Balkh.³ In order to distinguish between the Kekaya city and the Magadhan capital, the latter city was called "Girivraja of the Magadhas."⁴

The *Purāṇas*⁵ tell us that the Kekayas along with the Madrakas and the Uśīnaras, were branches of the family of Anu, son of Yayāti. The Anu tribe is frequently mentioned in the Rig-Veda.⁶ It appears from a hymn of the eighth *Maṇḍala*⁷ that they dwelt in the Central Pañjab, not far from the Parushnī, the same territory which we find afterwards in possession of the Kekayas and the Madrakas.

The king of Kekaya in the time of the Vedic Janaka was Ásvapati, a name borne also by the maternal grandfather and maternal uncle of Bharata.⁸ The *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*⁹ and the *Chhāndogya Upanishad*¹⁰ suggest that the Kekaya monarch was a man of learning and that he instructed a number of Brāhmaṇas, viz. Aruṇa Aupaveśi

1 Rām., II. 68. 22.

2 Rām., I. 69, 7; II. 71. 18. AGI, 1924, 188; JASB, 1895, 250 ff.

3 Bcal, Śi-yu-kt, Vol. I, p. 44.

4 S. B. E., XIII, p. 150.

5 Matsya, 48. 10-20; Vāyu, 99. 12-23.

6 I. 108. 8, VII. 18. 14; VIII. 10. 5.

7 74.

8 Rām., II. 9, 22; VII. 113. 4.

9 X. 6. 1. 2.

10 V. 11. 4 et seq.

Gautama, Satyayajña Paulushi, Mahāsāla Jābāla, Buḍila, Āsvatarāśvi, Indradyumna Bhāllaveya, Jana Śārkarākshya, Prāchīnāsāla Aupamanyava, and Uddālaka Āruṇi. The reference to Aruṇa Aupaveśi who belongs to an older generation than Uddālaka, shows that Āsvapati was an elder contemporary of the great philosopher-king of Videha.

The Jaina writers tell us that one-half of the kingdom of Kekaya was Aryan, and refer to the Kekaya city called "Seyaviyā".¹ A branch of the Kekayas seems to have migrated to Southern India in later times and established its authority in the Mysore country.²

The Madra people were divided into several sections viz., the northern Madras, the eastern Madras, the southern Madras or Madras proper etc. The northern Madras known as Uttara-Madras, are referred to in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, as living beyond the Himavat range in the neighbourhood of the Uttara-Kurus, possibly, as Zimmer and Macdonell conjecture, in the land of Kāśmīr. The eastern Madras probably occupied some district to the east of Sialkot, not far from Trigartta or Kangra.³

The southern Madras were settled in the Central Pañjab in the territory lying to the west of the river Irāvati or Rāvi.⁴ In later times the eastern limits extended to the Amritsar district which was included within the Madra-deśa in the days of Guru Govind Singh.⁵ The ancient capital (properly puṭa-bhedana) was Śākala or Sāgala-nagara (modern Sialkot). This city is mentioned in the *Mahābhārata*⁶

1 Ind. Ant., 1891, p. 375.

2 A.H.D., 88, 101.

3 Pāṇini, IV. 2. 107-8 ; Cf. Association of Mādras and Trigarttas, Mbh. VI. 61.12, In 1. 121. 36 the number of 'Madras' is given as four.

4 Cf. Mbh., VIII. 44.17.

5 Malcolm, Sketch of the Sikhs, p. 55.

6 II. 32. 14. Tataḥ Śākalamabhyetya Madrānām puṭabhedanam.

and several *Jātakas*¹ and is probably hinted at in the name 'Śākalya,' given to a Vedic teacher who graced the court of Janaka. It stood on the banks of the Āpagā² in a tongue of land between two rivers styled the Śākala-dvīpa,³ apparently corresponding to a part of the Rechna Doāb.

The Madras proper are represented in early post-Vedic works as living under a monarchical constitution. The name of the ruler of the territory in the time of Janaka is not known. It was politically not of much importance. But, like the northern realms described above, it was the home of many famous scholars and teachers of the Brāhmaṇa period such as Madragāra Śaunigāyani and Kāpya Patañchala,⁴ one of the teachers of the celebrated Uddālaka Āruṇi.⁵ The early epic knows the Madra royal house⁶ as a virtuous family. But in later times Madra earned notoriety as the seat of outlandish peoples with wicked customs.⁷

The country of the Uśīnaras was situated in the Madhya-deśa or Mid-India. The *Aitareya Brāhmaṇa*⁸ says "asyām dhruvāyām madhyamāyām pratishṭhāyām diśi," "in this firmly established middle region," lie the realms of the Kuru-Pañchālas together with Vāsas and Uśīnaras. In the Kaushītaki Upanishad also the Uśīnaras are associated with the Matsyas, the Kuru-Pañchālas and the

1 E. g. Kālingabodhi Jātaka, No. 479; and Kuśa Jātaka, No. 531.

2 Mbh. VIII. 44. 10; Cunn. AGL, 1924, 211f. Cunningham identifies this Āpagā with the Ayak rivulet which rises in the Jammu hills and joins the Chenāb.

3 Mbh. II. 26. 5.

4 Weber, Ind. Lit., 126.

5 Bṛihad. Up., III. 7. 1.

6 Cf. Āsvapati and his daughter Sāvitrī.

7 For detailed accounts of the Madras see now H. C. Ray in JASB, 1922, 257; and Law, Some Kṣatriya Tribes of Ancient India, p. 214. Mr. S. N. Mitra points out that the Paramattha-dīpani on the Therīgāthā (p. 127) (wrongly) places Śāgala-nagara in Magadha-rāṭṭha. But the Āpadāna quotations on p. 131 leave no room for doubt that Madra is the correct name of the kingdom of which Śāgala (Śākala) was the capital.

8 VIII. 14.

Vaśas. They probably lived in the northernmost part of the Madhya-deśa, for in the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa the Uśīnaras and - Vaśas are mentioned just before the Udichyas or northerners :¹ Kuru-Pāñchāleshu Aṅga-Magadheshu Kāśi-Kausalyeshu Śālva-Matsyeshu sa Vaśa-Uśīnareṣh-Ūdichyeshu.

The Mahābhārata speaks of 'Uśīnara' as sacrificing on two small streams near the Jumna.² In the Kathā-saritsāgara Uśīnara-giri is placed near Kanakhala, the "sanctifying place of pilgrimage at the point where the Ganges issues from the hills."³ It is, doubtless, identical with Usira-giri of the *Divyāvadāna*⁴ and Usira-dhvaṇya of the Vinaya Texts.⁵ Pāṇini refers to the Uśīnara country in several sūtras.⁶ Its capital was Bhoja-nagara.⁷

The *Ṛig-Veda*⁸ mentions a queen named Uśīnarāṇī. The Mahābhārata, the Anukramanī and several Jātakas mention a king named Uśīnara and his son Śibi.⁹ We do not know the name of Janaka's Uśīnara contemporary. The Kaushītaki Upanishad tells us that Gārgya Bālāki, a contemporary of Ajātasatru of Kāśi, and of Janaka of Videha, lived for some time in the Uśīnara country.

Matsya is usually taken to "include parts of Alwar, Jaipur and Bharatpur," being "the kingdom of the king Virāṭa of the Mahābhārata, in whose court the five Pāṇḍava

1 Gop. Br. II. 9.

2 Mbh. III. 130. 21.

3 Edited by Pandit Durgāprasād and Kāśināth Pāndurang Parab, third edition, p. 5. Kanakhala stands near Hardwar in the Saharanpur district of the United Provinces. Cf. also Mbh. V. 111. 16-23.

4 P. 22.

5 Part II, p. 39. See Hultzsch, Ind. Ant., 1905, p. 179.

6 II. 4. 20 ; IV. 2. 118.

7 Mbh., V. 118. 2. For Ahvara, a fortress of the Uśīnaras, see Ind. Ant., 1885, 322.

8 X. 59. 10.

9 Mbh., XII 29, 39 ; Vedic Index, Vol. I, p. 103 ; Mahā-Kaṇṇha Jātaka, No. 469 ; Nimi Jātaka, No 541 ; Mahā Nārada Kassapa Jātaka, No. 544, etc.

brothers resided incognito during the last year of their banishment."¹ But Alwar seems to have been the territory of a neighbouring people—the Śālvas.² The Matsya country lay to the south of the Kurus of the Delhi region and to the west of the Śūrasenas of Mathurā. Southward it may have approached the river Chambal, westward it reached the Sarasvatī. The Mahābhārata mentions a people called the Aparā-Matsyas whom Pargiter places on the hill tracts on the north bank of the Chambal. The Rāmāyaṇa has a reference to the Vira-Matsyas in connection with the Sarasvatī and the Ganges.³ The Matsya capital has been identified by Cunningham⁴ with Bairat in the Jaipur State. Pargiter thinks⁵ that the capital was Upaplavya. But according to Nilakaṇṭha, the commentator, Upaplavya was "Virāṭa-nagara-samīpastha-nagarāntaram," a city close to the metropolis, but not identical with it.⁶

The Matsyas first appear in a passage of the *Ṛig-Veda*⁷ where they are ranged with the other antagonists of Sudās, the great Ṛigvedic conqueror. The *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*⁸ mentions a Matsya king named Dhvasan Dvaitavana who celebrated the horse-sacrifice near the 1 Bhandarkar, Carmichael Lectures, 1918, p. 53.

2 Cf. Ind. Ant., 1919. N. L. Dey's Geographical Dictionary, p. ii.

3 Mbh. II. 31.2-7; III. 24-25; IV. 5.4; Rām II. 71.5. Pargiter points out (JASB, 1895, 250ff) that the Matsya Country lay southward from Khāṇḍava-prastha (Delhi region). Its position to the west of Śūrasena (Mathura district) is brought out clearly by the description of the journey of the Pāṇḍu princes to the court of Virāṭa. Crossing the Jumna the heroes passed through the territory, north of the Daśārṇas and south of the Pañchālas and then proceeded through the countries of the Yakṣiḥomas and the Śūrasenas to the Matsya realm. From Upaplavya, a suburb of the Matsya capital, to Hāstinapura, the metropolis of the Kurus in the epic age, was less than two days' journey by chariot. Vṛikasthala on the way could be reached by a traveller in the evening on the first day.

4 AGI. 1924, 387; I. A. V. 179. For a Virāṭa-nagara in South India, see Bomb. Gaz. I. ii. 558.

5 JASB, 1895, 252.

6 Mbh. IV. 72. 14. Cf. Ind. Ant., 1882, 327.

7 VII. 18. 6.

8 XIII. 5. 4. 9.

Sarasvatī. The Brāhmaṇa quotes the following gāthā (song) :—

Chaturdaśa Dvaitavano rājā saṁgrāmajidd-hayān Indrāya Vṛitraghne' badhnāttasmād Dvaitavanaṁ sara (tī).

"Fourteen steeds did king Dvaitavana, victorious in battle, bind for Indra Vṛitraghan, whence the lake Dvaitavana (took its name)". The Mahābhārata mentions the lake as well as a forest called Dvaitavana which spread over the banks of the river Sarasvatī.¹

In the *Gopatha Brāhmaṇa*² the Matsyas appear in connexion with the Śālvas, in the *Kaushītaki Upanishad*³ in connexion with the Kuru-Pañchālas, and in the Mahābhārata in connexion with the Trigarttas⁴ of the Jālandar Doāb, and the Chedis of Central India.⁵ In the *Manu-Saṁhitā*⁶ the Matsyas together with Kuru-kshetra, the Pañchālas, and the Śūrasenakas comprise the holy enclave of the Brāhmaṇa sages (Brahmarshi-deśa).

The name of Janaka's contemporary ruler is not known. That the country was important in the time of the great philosopher-king of Videha, is known from the Kaushītaki Upanishad.

The Kuru country tried to maintain its reputation as a home of Brāhmaṇical culture in the age of Janaka. But scholars hailing from that region appear now in the rôle of students thirsting for philosophical knowledge rather than authorities on sacrificial ritual. This probably points to a new development in the social life of the people, a development that synchronises with the end of the period of prosperity under Parikshit and his immediate successors and the beginning of economic distress hinted at in the Chhândogya Upanishad.⁷ The

1 Mbh. III. 24-25.

2 1. 2. 9.

3 IV. 1

4 Mbh., Bk. IV.

5 V. 74. 16.

6 II. 19.

7 I. 10. 1-7.

time was soon to come when they would listen even to the heterodox teaching of new faiths that grew up in Eastern India. For the present Kuru Brāhmaṇas (e.g., Ushasti Chākrāyaṇa) took an active part in discussions about Brahman and ātman at the court of Videha. The intellectual life of the eastern kingdom must have been greatly stirred by the exodus of Kurus and perhaps also of the Pāñchālas that took place about this time. An exodus from Constantinople in a like manner enriched the life of the people of western Europe in the fifteenth century A.D.

If the Purāṇic list of Janamejaya's successors be accepted as historical, then it would appear that Nichakshu was probably the Kuru king of Hāstinapura in the time of Janaka.

- | | | | | |
|---------------------|-----|---------------|------------|--|
| 1. Janamejaya | ... | 1. Indrota | Daivāpa | Saunaka |
| 2. Śatānika | ... | 2. Dṛiti | Aindrota | (son and pupil) |
| 3. Aśva-medha-datta | | 3. Pulusha | | Prāchinayogya
(pupil) |
| 4. Adhisīma-kṛishṇa | | 4. Pulushi | Satyayajña | (pupil) |
| 5. Nichakshu | ... | 5. Somaśushma | | Sātyayajñi (pupil); Janaka's contemporary. |

Curiously enough, it is Nichakshu who is represented in the Purāṇas as the remover of the seat of government from Hāstinapura to Kauśāmbī. We have some indication that the city of Kauśāmbī really existed about this time.¹ The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa makes Proti Kauśāmbeya a contemporary of Uddālaka Āruṇi who figured in the court of Janaka. It is thus clear that Kauśāmbeya was a contemporary of Janaka. Now, Harisvāmin in his commentary on the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa understood

¹ Cf. Weber. Ind. Lit., p. 123 ; Vedic Index, I, 193.

Kauśāmbeya to mean a 'native of the town of Kauśāmbi.'¹ It is, therefore, permissible to think that Kauśāmbi existed in the time of Janaka, and hence of Niebaksu. There is thus no difficulty in the way of accepting the Purāṇic statement. According to the Purāṇas the change of capital was due to the inroad of the river Ganges. Another, and a more potent, cause was perhaps the devastation of the Kuru country by Matachi. It is also possible that the attitude of the Ābhīpratāriṇa branch of the royal family towards sacrificial ritual had something to do with the exodus. From this time the Kurus in the homeland appear to have gradually lost their political importance. They sank to the level of a second-rate power. But the memory of the majesty and power of the Bharata dynasty survived till the time of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.²

Pañchāla comprised the Bareilly, Budann, Furrukhabad and the adjoining districts of Rohilkhand and the Central Doab in the United Provinces. It appears to have been bounded on the east by the Gumti and on the south by the Chambal. On the west lay the Yakṣillomas and the Śūrasenas of Mathura. Belts of dense forests separated it from the Ganges and the realm of the Kurus on the north-west. Northward it approached the jungles that cover the region near the source of the Ganges.³ There is no clear trace in the Vedic literature of the Epic and Jātaka division of the Pañchālas into northern (Uttara) and southern (Dakṣiṇa). But it knew an eastern 1 Kauśāmbeya may no doubt also mean "a descendant of Kuśāmba." Even then the city can hardly be dissociated from the eponymous hero of the family. cf. Kramadīśvara, p. 794—Kuśāmbena nirvṛittā Kauśāmbī-nagarī.

2 XIII. 5. 4. 11—14; 21—23.

Mahadadya Bharatānām na pūrve nāpare janāḥ divyam martya iva pakṣābhyām nodūpuḥ sapta mānavā (iti)

3 Rig-Veda V. 61. 17—19; Mbh. I. 138. 74; 150f.; 166; IV. 5. 4; IX. 41.

division because the Samhit-opanishad Brāhmaṇa makes mention of the Prāchyā (eastern) Pañchālas.¹ The existence of the other two may, however, be hinted at in the expression tryanīka, "threefold", occurring in the Vedic texts.² One of the ancient capitals of Pañchāla was Kāmpilya which has been identified with Kampil on the old Ganges between Budaun and Furrukhabad.³ Another Pañchāla town Parivakrā or Parichakrā is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.⁴ It is identified by Weber with Ekachakrā of the Mahābhārata.⁵

The Pañchālas, as their name indicates, probably consisted of five clans—the Krivis, the Turvaśas, the Keśins, the Śrīñjayas and the Somakas.⁶ Each of these clans is known to be associated with one or more princes mentioned in the Vedic texts—the Krivis with Kravya Pañchāla, the Turvaśas or Taurvaśas with Śona Sātrāsaha, the Keśins with Keśin Dālbhya, the Śrīñjayas with Daivavāta, Prastoka, Vītabavya, Suplan or Sahadeva Sārñjaya and Dush-tarītu, and the Somakas with Somaka Sāhadevyā. Of the kings only the first three are definitely associated with Pañchāla.

The Krivis appear in a Rigvedic hymn which also mentions the Sindhu (Indus) and the Asiknī (Chenāb). But their actual habitation is nowhere clearly indicated.

1 Ved. Ind., I. 469. Cf. also Patañjali (Kielhorn's ed. Vol. I, p. 12) and Ptolemy's Prasiake (vii. 1. 53) which included the towns of Adisdara (? Abichhatra) and Kanagora (? Kanauj).

2 Vedic Index, I. 187.

3 Vedic Index I. 149; Cunn. in JASB, 1865, 178; AGI, 1924, 413.

4 XIII. 5. 4. 7.

5 Ved. Ind., I. 494.

6 According to the Purāṇas (Brahma P. XIII. 94 f. Cf. Matsya, 50. 3) 'Mudgala,' 'Śrīñjaya,' Bṛihadishu, 'Yavīnara' and 'Kṛimilāśva' were the constituent elements of the Pañchāla Janaṇada.

They are identified with the Pañchālas in the *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*¹ and connected with Parivakrā.

A gāthā of the same work² says, "When Sātrāsāha (king of the Pañchālas) makes the Aśvamedha offering, the Taurvaśas arise, six thousand and six (sic) and thirty clad in mail."

Sātrāsāhe yajamāne'svamedhena Taurvaśāḥ udirate trayastrimśāḥ shatsahasrāṇi varminām.

This points to a very close connexion between the Pañchālas and the Taurvaśas. The fusion of the two folks does not seem to be improbable in view of the Purāṇic statement that, after Marutta, the line of Turvaśu (Turvaśa, Taurvaśa) was merged into the Paurava line³ of which the Pañchālas are represented as an offshoot. The line of rulers to which Śona belonged seems to be connected in later times with Abichchhatra (in the Bareilly District).⁴

The Keśins⁵ who are connected with the Pañchālas in Vedic literature probably dwelt on the Gumti. The Śrinjayas⁶ are associated with the Pañchālas in post-

1 xiii, 5, 4, 7; Krivaya iti ha vai purā Pañchālān āchakshate. Vedic Index, I. 198. According to Kasten Rönnow, Acta Orientalia, XVI, iii, 1937, p. 165. Krivis were named after a dragon-demon who was their tribal divinity.

2 Oldenberg, Buddha, p. 404; Śat. Br. XIII. 5. 4. 16. H. K. Deb (Vedic India and Mediterranean men, Verlag Otto Harrassowitz, Leipzig) suggests the identification of the Turvaśas with the Teresh, or Tursha, one of the allied peoples who fought against Merneptah, or Meneptah, Pharaoh of Egypt (c. 1234-25 B.C.). Breasted, however, identifies the Teresh with the Tyrsenians or Etruscans (A History of Egypt, p. 467).

3 A. I. H. T., p. 108. Turvaśoḥ Pauravaṃ vaimśam praviveśa purā kila (Vāyu. 99, 4).

4 Camb. Hist. Ind. I. p. 525.

5 Ved. Ind., I. 186-187. The name Keśin Dālhbhya suggests a close connexion between the Keśins and the Dālhbhyas whom the Rig-Veda (V, 61. 17-19) places on the Gomati. From Mbh. IX. 41. 1-3 it is clear that this Gomati connected with the Dālhbhya family or clan, could not have been far away from Naimisha and the country of the Pañchālas. It must, therefore, be identified with the Gumti which flows past Nimsār near Sitāpur.

6 Pargiter, Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, p. 353; Mbh., I. 138. 37; V. 48. 41. Brahmapurāṇa, XIII, 941.

Vedic tradition. In the Mahābhārata,¹ Uttamaujas is called a Pañchālya as well as a Sṛiñjaya. The clan probably lived on the Jumna in epic times.² As to the Somakas, their connection with the Pañchālas is known throughout the great epic.³ They occupied Kāmpilya and its neighbourhood.

The royal family of the Pañchālas is represented in bardic tradition as an offshoot of the Bharata dynasty.⁴ Divodāsa, Sudās(a) and Drupada are included among the kings of this line. Divodāsa and Sudās also figure in the Rig-Veda where they are closely connected with the Bharatas.⁵ But they are not mentioned as Pañchāla kings. In the Mahābhārata Drupada is also called Yājñasena and one of his sons is named Śikhaṇḍin.⁶ A Śikhaṇḍin Yājñasena is mentioned in the Kaushītaki Brāhmaṇa,⁷ but it is not clear whether we are to regard him as a prince, or as a priest of Keśin Dālbya, king of the Pañchālas.

The external history of the Pañchālas is mainly that of wars and alliances with the Kurus. The Mahābhārata preserves traditions of conflict between these two great peoples. We are told by the epic that Uttara-Pañchāla was wrested from the Pañchālas by the Kurus and given away to their preceptor.⁸ Curiously enough, the *Somanassa Jātaka*⁹ places Uttara-Pañchāla-nagara in Kuru-rajya. The relations between the two peoples (Kurus and

1 Mbh. VIII. 11. 31 ; 75. 9.

2 Mbh. iii. 90. 7. with commentary.

3 Cf. Mbh., I. 185. 31 ; 193. 1 ; II. 77. 10 : Dhṛiṣṭa-dyumnaḥ Somakānām pravaraḥ ; Saumakir Yājñasena iti.

4 Mbh., Ādi., 94. 33 ; Matsya, 50. 1-16 ; Vāyu, 99. 194-210.

5 Ved. Ind., I, p. 363 ; II., pp. 59, 454.

6 Mbh., Ādi., 166. 24 ; Bhīshma, 190, et seq.

7 VII. 4.

8 Mbh. i. 166.

9 No. 505. The union of Kuru-Pañchālas is hinted at in Jaim. Up. Br. III. 7. 6.

O. P. 90-10

74 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Pañchālas) were sometimes friendly and they were connected by matrimonial alliances. Keśin Dāl̥bhya or Dār̥bhya, king of the Pañchālas, was sister's son to Uchchahīśravas, king of the Kurus.¹ In the epic a Pañchāla princess is married to the Pāṇḍavas who are represented as scions of the Kurū royal family.

Of the famous kings of the Pañchālas mentioned in the Vedic literature Pravahana Jaivali is known definitely to have been Janaka's contemporary. This prince appears in the Upanishads as engaged in philosophical discussions with Āruṇi, Śvetaketu, Śilaka Śālāvatya, and Chaikitāyana Dāl̥bhya.² The first two teachers are known to have met the Vedic Janaka.

The kingdom of Kāsi was 300 leagues in extent.³ It had its capital at Vārāṇasī (Benares) also called Ketumatī, Surundhana, Sudassana, Brahma-vaddhana, Pupphavati, Ramma, and Molinī.⁴ The walls of the city were twelve leagues round by themselves.⁵

The Kāsis, i.e., the people of Kāśi or Kāsi, first appear in the Paippalāda recension of the Atharva-Veda.⁶ They were closely connected with the Kosalas and the Videhas. Jala Jātūkarnya is mentioned in the *Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra*⁷ as having obtained the position of Purohita or priest of the three peoples of Kāsi, Videha and Kosala in the lifetime of Śvetaketu, a contemporary of Janaka. Curiously enough, a king named Janaka is mentioned in the 1 Ved. Ind., I, 84, 187, 468. Uchchahīśravas occurs as the name of a Kuru prince in the dynastic list of the Mahābhārata, I, 94, 53.

2 Bṛihad. Up., VI, 2; Chh. Up., 1.8.1; V, 3, 1.

3 A stock phrase, Dhajaviheṭha Jātaka, No. 391.

4 Dialogues Part III, p. 73. Carmichael Lectures, 1918, pp. 50-51. The name Vārāṇasī is derived from two little rivers between which the city was situated—Varaṇāyāstathā ch Āsyā madhye Vārāṇasī purī. (Pādma, Svarga khanda, xvii, 50).

5 Taṇḍulanālī Jātaka, No. 5.

6 Ved. Ind., II, 116 n.

7 XVI, 29, 5.

*Sattubhastā Jātaka*¹ as reigning in Benares. This prince cannot be the Janaka of the Upanishads, for we learn from those works that, in the time of the famous Janaka, Ajātasatru was on the throne of Kāsi.

Very little is known regarding the ancestors of Ajātasatru. His name does not occur in the Purāṇic lists of Kāsi sovereigns,² nor does the name of Dhṛitarāshṭra, king of Kāsi, who was defeated by Śatānika Sātrājita with the result that the Kāsis down to the time of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa gave up the kindling of the sacred fire. A clue to the lineage of Dhṛitarāshṭra is afforded by the *Mahāvogvinda-Suttanta*³ which represents "Dhataratṭha," King of Kāsi, as a Bharata prince. The Purāṇas represent the Kāsi family as a branch of the house of Purūravas, the traditional ancestor of the Bharatas. Of the kings mentioned in the chronicles the names of two only (Diovdāsa and his son or descendant Daivadāsi Pratardana) can be traced in the Vedic literature. But the later Vedic texts connect them with the Naimishiyas and not with Kāsi.⁴

The Jātakas often refer to the failure of heirs at Benares (aputtakanī rājakulam), or the deposition of princes in favour of more competent rulers taken from other families. It is clear that tradition does not regard the Kāsi monarchs as belonging to one and the same dynasty. Some of the kings hailed from Magadhā.⁵ Several others were probably of Videhan origin. Many of the princes belonging to these groups had the cognomen, 'Brahmadatta'. That Brahmadatta was not the name of one individual

1 No. 402.

2 Vāyu, 92. 21-74, ; Vishnu, IV. 8. 2-9.

3 Rhys Davids, Dialogues of the Buddha, Part II, p. 270.

4 Kaush. Br. xxvi. 5.

5 Cf. Jātakas 378, 401, 529.

ruler, has been suggested by Mr. Hāritkrishṇa Dev.¹ The Matsya and Vāyu Purāṇas refer to a group of one hundred (i. e. many) Brahmadattas :

*Śataṁ vai Brahmadattānāṁ
vīrāṇāṁ Kuravaḥ śatam.*²

The "hundred" Brahmadattas are also mentioned in the Mahābhārata.³ In the *Dummedha Jātaka*⁴ the name is borne both by the reigning king and his son (Kumāra).⁵ In the *Gaṅgamāla Jātaka*⁶ king Udaya of Benares is addressed by a Pachcheka Buddha as "Brahmadatta" which is distinctly stated to be a kulanāma or family designation.

The Brahmadattas were not, however, all of the same extraction. The king-elect of the Darimukha Jātaka was originally a Magadhan prince. Some of the other Brahmadattas were of Videhan lineage. The Mātiposaka Jātaka,⁷ for instance, referring to a Brahmadatta of Kāsi, has the following line :

mutto'mhi Kāsirājena Vedhena yasassinū ti.

In the *Sambula Jātaka*⁸ prince Soththisena, son of Brahmadatta, king of Kāsi, is called Vedhaputta :

Yo putta Kāsirājassa Soththiseno ti tam vūlū tassāham Sambulū bhariyā, evaṁ jānāhi dānuva, Vedhaputto bhaddan te vane vasati āturō.

Ajātasatru, Janaka's contemporary on the throne of Kāsi, may have been a Brahmadatta though his exact

1 The suggestion has been accepted by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar, Carmichael Lectures, 1918, p. 56.

2 Matsya, Ch. 273, 71 ; Vāyu, Ch. 99, 454.

3 II. 8. 23.

4 No. 50 ; Vol. I, p. 126.

5 Cf. also the Susīma Jātaka (411), the Kumma Sapinḍa Jātaka (415), the Aṭṭhāna Jātaka (425), the Lomasa Kassapa Jātaka (433), etc.

6 421.

7 No. 455.

8 No. 519.

lineage is not known. The Upanishadic evidence shows that he was a contemporary of Uddālaka. The Uddālaka Jātaka tells us that the reigning king of Benares in the time of Uddālaka was Brahmadatta.

Ajātaśatru appears in the Upanishads as engaged in philosophical discussions with Gārgya Bālāki. In the Kaushītaki Upanishad he is represented as being jealous of Janaka's fame as a patron of learning. The *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*¹ mentions a person named Bhadrasena Ajātaśatrava who is said to have been bewitched by Uddālaka Āruṇi. Macdonell and Keith call him a king of Kāsi. He may have been the son and successor of Ajātaśatru.²

The kingdom of Kosala³ corresponds roughly to the modern Oudh. It seems to have extended northward to the foot of the Nepāl hills. In the east it was separated from Videha by the river Sadānīrā, which was for a time the limit of the Aryan world in that direction. Beyond it was an extensive marshy region, not frequented by Brāhmaṇas which, after Māthava Videgha's occupation, developed into the flourishing kingdom of Videha. The story of Māthava makes it clear that the Kosalas fell later than the peoples dwelling on the banks of the Sarasvatī but earlier than the Videhas under the influence of Brāhmanical civilization. In the south Kosala was bounded by the river Sarpikā or Syandikā⁴ and on the west probably by the Gumti which flowed past the famous Naimisha forest and apparently formed the boundary between the Kosalas and sundry peoples including the

1 V. 5. 5. 14.

2 S. B. E., XLI, p. 141.

3 The form Kośala is met with in the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa (Vedic Index), I, 195) and later literature.

4 Rām. II. 49. 11-12 ; 50. 1 ; Cf. Sundarikā, Kindred Sayings I. 209.

78 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Pañchālas.¹ In the epic Kosalas proper are distinguished from the Uttara-Kosalas, the Kosalas near the Venvā (Waingāṅgā) and the Prāk-Kosalas. The last two peoples were clearly in South India.² The Pūrva-Kosalas, apparently not identical with the Prāk-Kosalas of the Deccan, dwelt between the river Sarayū and Mithilā.³

The Vedic texts do not mention any city in Kosala. But if the Rāmāyaṇa is to be believed the capital of Kosala (Kosalapura) in the time of the Janakas was Ayodhyā. It stood on the banks of the Sarayū and covered twelve yojanas.⁴ The Rig-Veda mentions the river Sarayū and refers to an Aryan settlement on its banks.⁵ One of the Ārya settlers bears the name of Chitraratha which occurs also in the *Rāmāyaṇa*⁶ as the appellation of a contemporary of Daśaratha. A prince styled Daśaratha is eulogised in a R̥gvedic hymn,⁷ but there is nothing to identify him with the Ikshvāku king of that name who appears in the Rāmāyaṇa as the Kosalan contemporary of Śiradhvaja Janaka. Daśaratha's eldest son, according to the epic, was Rāma who married Sītā, daughter of Janaka. The *R̥g-Veda*⁸ mentions an Asura (powerful being) named Rāma but does not connect him with Kosala. The Daśaratha Jātaka makes Daśaratha and Rāma kings of Vārāṇasī and disavows Sītā's connection with Janaka.

1 Rām II. 68. 13 ; 71. 16-18 ; VII. 104. 15. (Kosalan king sacrificing in the Naimisha forest on the Gumti) ; cf. Mbh. XII, 355. 2 ; IX. 41. 3 (Pañchālas apparently not far from Naimisha). In R̥g V. 61. 17-19, the Dālbyhas, a Pañchāla people, are placed on the Gumti.

2 Mbh. II. 30. 2-3 ; 31. 12-13.

3 Mbh. II. 20. 28.

4 Rām., I. 55. 7. It is in the Fyzabad District of Oudh. For the name Kosalapura see Rām. II. 18. 38.

5 IV. 30. 18

6 II. 32. 17.

7 I. 126. 4.

8 X. 93. 14.

Kosala was probably the fatherland of Janaka's hotṛi priest, Aśvala, who was very probably an ancestor of Āśvalāyana Kausalya¹ mentioned in the Praśna Upanishad as a disciple of Pippalāda and a contemporary of Sukeśā Bhāradvāja and of Hiraṇya-nābha, a Kosalan prince. The details of Kosalan history will be discussed in a subsequent chapter.

¹ Aśvalasyāpatyam Āśvalāyanah (Śaṁkara's commentary on Praśna Upanishad, 1. 1).

SECTION III. THE LATER VAIDEHAS OF MITHILA :

NIMI AND KARĀLA.

The Purāṇas give long lists of the successors of Śiradhvaja Janaka¹ whom Bhavabhūti seems to identify with the contemporary of Yājñavalkya.² With one or two exceptions none of the kings in these lists can be satisfactorily identified with the Videhan monarchs mentioned in the Vedic, Buddhist and Jaina literature. It is, therefore, difficult to say how far the lists are reliable. The identification of any of the kings named in the bardic chronicles with the Vedic Janaka is the most knotty of all problems. We have already noted the arguments that can be urged in support of the view of Bhavabhūti. The mere fact that Śiradhvaja is placed high in the Purāṇic lists does not necessarily prove that he actually flourished long before the extinction of the dynasty. It should be remembered in this connection that Pradyota who was in reality a contemporary of Bimbisāra, king of Magadha, is placed by the Purāṇic chroniclers or scribes some nine generations before that ruler, and Siddhārtha of the Ikshvāku list, a contemporary of Prasenajit of Kosala, is represented as the grandfather of the latter. The evidence of the *Vishṇu Purāṇa*³ suggests that there were at times several collateral lines of Janakas who ruled contemporaneously. The problem of Śiradhvaja must, therefore, be regarded as sub judice. In view of the uncertainty about the identification of this king and his proper place in the 1 Vāyu, 89. 18-23 ; Vishṇu IV, 5. 12-13 ; 4th edition of this work pp. 67 ff.

2 Mahāvīra-charita, I, verse 14 ; II, verse 43 ; Uttara-Rāma-Charita, IV, verse 9.

3 VI. 6. 7 ff. Cf. Rāmāyaṇa, I. 72. 18.

dynastic list, it is not easy to determine which of the Videhan kings mentioned in the Purāṇic chronicles actually came after the contemporary of Āruṇi and Yājñavalkya. The evidence of the Jātakas, however, suggests that a king named Nimi, at any rate, ruled after the great Janaka, as he is called the penultimate sovereign of the dynasty. Pargiter¹ places all the kings of the Purāṇic lists down to Bahulāśva before the Bhārata war, and apparently identifies his son Kṛiti with Kṛitakshaṇa of the *Mahābhārata*², a contemporary of Yudhisṭhira. But, as there were "Janakas" even after Yudhisṭhira, and as "two Purāṇas conclude with the remark that with Kṛiti ends the race of the Janakas,"³ the identification of Kṛiti, the last of the race, with Kṛitakshaṇa does not seem to be plausible. It is more reasonable to identify Kṛiti of the Purāṇas with Karāla Janaka who, as we shall see below, brought the line of Vaideha kings to an end. The only objection to this view is that Karāla is represented as the son of Nimi, whereas Kṛiti was the son of Bahulāśva. But the cognomen Nimi may have been borne by several kings and Bahulāśva may have been one of them. An alternative theory would be to represent Kṛiti and Karāla as the last members of two collateral lines of Janakas.

The Vedic texts mention besides Māthava and Janaka two other Vaideha kings, namely, Namī Sāpya and Para Āhlāra. Macdonell and Keith identify the latter with Para Āṭṇāra, king of Kosala, about whom we shall speak in a subsequent chapter. Namī Sāpya is mentioned in the Pañchaviṃśa or *Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇa*⁴ as a famous sacrificer. His identification with king Namī of the Uttar-ādhyayana

1 AIHT, p. 149.

2 II. 4. 27.

3 AIHT, pp. 96, 330.

4 XXV. 10. 17-18.

Sūtra,¹ Nemi of the Vishnu Purāṇa, and Nimi of the Makhādeva Sutta of the Majjhima Nikāya, and the *Kumbhakāra*² and *Nimi Jātaka*³ is more or less problematical. In the last-mentioned work it is stated that a Nimi was the penultimate sovereign of the Maithila family. According to the Kumbhakāra Jātaka and the Uttar-ādhyayana Sūtra he was a contemporary of Dummukha (Dvimukha), king of Pañchāla, Naggaji (Naggati) of Gandhāra and of Karaṇḍu (Karakāṇḍu) of Kalinga. This synchronism accords with Vedic evidence. Durmukha, the Pañchāla king, had a priest named Brihaduktha⁴ who was the son of Vāmadeva.⁵ Vāmadeva was a contemporary of Somaka, the son of Sahadeva.⁶ Somaka had close spiritual relationship with Bhīma, king of Vidarbha, and Nagnajit, king of Gandhāra.⁷ From this it seems very probable that Durmukha was a contemporary of Nagnajit. This is exactly what we find in the Kumbhakāra Jātaka and the Uttar-ādhyayana Sūtra.

The Nimi Jātaka says that Nimi was "born to round off" the royal family "like the hoop of a chariot wheel." Addressing his predecessor the soothsayers said, "Great king, this prince is born to round off your family. This your family of hermits will go no further."

Nimi's son Kalāra Janaka⁸ is said to have actually brought his line to an end. This king is apparently identical with Karāla Janaka of the Mahābhārata.⁹ In the Arthaśāstra attributed to Kauṭilya it is stated that "Bhoja,

1 S.B.E., XLV. 87.

2 No. 408.

3 No. 541.

4 Vedic Index, I. 370.

5 Ibid, II. 71.

6 Ṛg-Veda, IV. 15, 7-10 with Anukramanī.

7 Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, VII. 34.

8 Makhādeva Sutta of the Majjhima nikāya, II. 82; Nimi Jātaka.

9 XII. 302. 7.

known by the name of Dāṇḍakya, making a lascivious attempt on a Brāhmaṇa maiden, perished along with his kingdom and relations; so also Karāla, the Vaideha."¹ Karāla, the Vaideha, who perished along with his kingdom and relations, must be identified with Kalāra (Karāla) who, according to the Nimi Jātaka, brought the line of Videhan kings to an end. The downfall of the Vaidehas reminds us of the fate of the Tarquins who were expelled from Rome for a similar crime. As in Rome, so in Videha, the overthrow of the monarchy was followed by the rise of a republic—the Vajjian Confederacy.

There is reason to believe that the Kāsi people had a share in the overthrow of the Videhan monarchy. Already in the time of the great Janaka, Ajātasatru, king of Kāsi, could hardly conceal his jealousy of the Videhan king's fame. The passage "yathā Kāśyo vā Vaideho vā Ugraputra vjyam dhanur adhiṇyaṁ kṛtvā dvau vāṇavantau sapatnātivyādhinau haste kṛtv-opatishṭhed"² probably refers to frequent struggles between the heroes of Kāsi and Videha. The *Mahābhārata*³ refers to the old story (itihāsaṁ purātanam) of a great battle between Pratardana, king of Kāsi according to the Rāmāyana,⁴ and Janaka, King of Mithilā. It is stated in the Pāli commentary *Param-attha-jotikā*⁵ that the Lichchhavis who succeeded Janaka's dynasty as the strongest political power in North

1 The evidence of the Arthaśāstra is confirmed by that of the Buddha-charita of Aśva-ghosha (IV. 80). "And so Karāla Janaka, when he carried off the Brāhmaṇa's daughter, incurred loss of caste thereby, but he would not give up his love."

2 Bṛihad, Upanishad, III. 8. 2. "As the Ugra's son from Kāsi or from Videha strings the slackened bow and arises with two foe-piercing arrows in his hand" (Winternitz, Ind. Lit. I. 229 with slight emendations).

3 XII. 99. 1-2.

4 VII. 48. 15.

5 Vol. 1, pp. 158-65.

84 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Bihar, and formed the most important element of the Vajjian Confederacy, were the offsprings of a queen of Kāsi. This indicates a belief in later ages that cadets from the royal family of Kāsi established themselves in Videha.

SECTION IV. THE DECCAN IN THE AGE OF THE LATER VAIDEHAS.

The expression "Dakṣiṇāpadā" occurs in the *Rig-Veda*¹ and refers to the region where the exile goes on being turned out. In the opinion of several scholars this simply means "the south" beyond the limits of the recognised Aryan world. Dākṣiṇātya is found in Pāṇini,² Dakṣiṇāpatha is mentioned by Baudhāyana coupled with Surāshṭra.³ It is difficult to say what Pāṇini or Baudhāyana exactly meant by Dākṣiṇātya or Dakṣiṇāpatha. In early Pāli literature the name Dakṣiṇāpatha is sometimes coupled with Avanti (Malwa), and in one text it is placed on the banks of the upper Godāvari. In the Nalopākhyāna of the Mahābhārata, Dakṣiṇāpatha is placed beyond Avanti and the Vindhya, and to the south of the Vidarbhas and the (Southern) Kosalas. The last-mentioned peoples lived on the banks of the Wardhā and the Mahānadī. In the Digvijaya-parva, Dakṣiṇāpatha is distinguished from the Pāṇḍyan realm in the southernmost part of the Madras Presidency. In the Gupta Age it certainly stretched from the land of the Kosalas to the kingdom of Kāñchī. In later times it embraced the whole of Trans-Vindhyan India from the Setu (Adam's Bridge) to the Narmadā.⁴

Whatever may have been the exact denotation of the terms discussed above in the earliest times it is certain that already in the age of the later Vaidehas, Nimi and Karāla,

1 X. 61. 8. Vedic Index, I. 337.

2 IV. 2. 98.

3 Baudh. Sūtra, I. 1. 29.

4 DPPN, I. 1050; Mbh. II. 31. 16-17; III. 61. 21-23. Allahabad Pillar Inscription of Samudra Gupta; Fleet, Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, 341 n. The Periplus distinguishes Dachinabades (Dakṣiṇāpatha) from Damirica (Tamil land).

the Aryans had crossed the Vindhya and established several kingdoms in the territory that stretched from the Revā or the Narmadā to the Godāvarī. One of these realms was Vidarbha. It comprised modern Berar, the Varādātata of the Āin-i-Ākbarī, and a considerable portion of the Central Provinces lying between the Wardhā (Varadā) and the Waingāṅgā. In the north it reached the Payoshnī, a tributary of the Tāptī.¹ Vidarbha was certainly a famous kingdom in the time of Nimi. We have already seen that the Kumbhakāra Jātaka and the Uttar-ādhyayana make him a contemporary of Nagnajit, king of Gandhāra, who is known from the *Āitareya Brāhmaṇa*² to have flourished about the same time as Bhīma, king of Vidarbha :

"Etamu haiva prochatuḥ Parvata-Nāradau Somakāya Sāhadevyāya Sahadevāya Sārṅjayāya Babhrave Daivāvṛdhāya Bhīmāya Vaidarbhāya Nagnajite Gāndhārāya."

"This Parvata and Nārada proclaimed to Somaka Sāhadevya, Sahadeva Sārṅjaya, Babhru Daivāvṛdha, Bhīma Vaidarbha (i.e. of Vidarbha) and Nagnajit of Gandhāra."

Vidarbha, therefore, existed as an independent kingdom in the time of Nimi. From the Purāṇic account of the Yadu family it appears that the eponymous hero of the Vidarbhas, was of Yadu lineage.³ The country is mentioned in the Jaiminīya Brāhmaṇa.⁴ It was famous for its Māchalas, perhaps a species of dog, which killed tigers⁵—"Vidarbheṣu mācalās sārameyā apīha śārdulān mārāyanti." The *Praśna Upanishad*⁶ mentions a sage of

1 Mbh. III. 61. 22-23 ; 120. 31.

2 VI. 34.

3 Matsya Purāṇa, 44. 36 ; Vāyu Purāṇa, 95, 35-36.

4 II. 440 ; Ved. Ind., II. 297.

5 JAOS, 19, 100.

6 I. 1 ; II. 1.

Vidarbha named Bhārgava as a contemporary of Āśvalāyana. Another sage called Vidarbhī Kaunḍinya is mentioned in the Bṛihadāraṇyaka Upanishad.¹ The name Kaunḍinya is apparently derived from the city of Kuṇḍina, the capital of Vidarbha,² represented by the modern Kaunḍinya-pura on the banks of Wardhā in the Chāṇḍur tāluk of Amraoti.³ The association of Vidarbha with Kuṇḍina clearly suggests that Vidarbha of the Vedic texts lay in the Deccan, and not in some hitherto unknown region outside its boundaries as contended by a recent writer.⁴

If the evidence of the Kumbhakāra Jātaka has any value, then Nimi, king of Videha, mentioned in the work, Nagnajit, king of Gandhāra, and Bhīma, king of Vidarbha, must be considered to have been contemporaries of Karaṇḍu of Kaliṅga. It follows from this that the kingdom of Kaliṅga, too, was in existence in the time of Nimi and his contemporaries of the Brāhmaṇa period. The evidence of the Jātaka is confirmed by that of the Uttar-ādhyayana Sūtra. The Mahāgovinda Suttanta,⁵ makes Sattabhu, king of Kaliṅga, a contemporary of Reṇu, king of Mithilā and of Dhataratṭha or Dhṛitarāshṭra, king of Kāsi, mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.⁶ There can thus be no doubt that Kaliṅga existed as an independent

1 Vedic Index, II. 297.

2 Mbh., III. 73. 1-2; V. 157. 14; Harivaṃśa, Vishṇuparva, 59-60.

3 Gaz. Amraoti, Vol. A, p. 406.

4 Indian Culture, July, 1936, p. 12. Curiously enough, the same writer who characterises the provisional acceptance of the uncontradicted testimony of the Purāṇas and lexicons in locating tribes mentioned in Vedic literature as unhistorical, has no hesitation in identifying the Satvats of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa with the Yādavas and in placing them in the Mathurā region and adjoining districts (ibid, 15). He has not referred to any Vedic text which supports his conjecture regarding the identity of the Satvats and their association with the particular city named by him.

5 Dialogues of the Buddha, II. 270.

6 XIII. 5. 4, 22.

kingdom in the time of which the Brāhmanas speak. It is mentioned both by Pāṇini¹ and Baudhāyana.² The latter regards it as an impure country but evidently not unfrequented by Aryans.³ According to epic tradition it comprised the whole coast from the river Vaitaraṇī⁴ in Orissa to the borders of the Andhra territory. The southern boundary of the Janapada was not well-defined. It reached Yellamanchili and Chipurupalle in the Vizagapatam district and at times even Pishtapura or Pithapuram, north-east of the Godāvari, but not the river itself which flowed through the Andhra country. Pargiter says that Kalinga as a settled kingdom appears to have consisted properly of the plain between the Eastern Ghats (Mahendra range) and the sea. But its kings seem to have exercised suzerainty over the jungle tribes which inhabited the hills far inland, for the Amarakaṇṭaka range, in which the Narmadā rises, is said to be in the western part of Kalinga. That large tracts of the country were covered with forests appears from references to Kalingā-ranya in Pali texts. The windows of the capital city in the days of Kālidāsa looked out on the sea, and the deep roar of the waves drowned the sound of trumpets.⁵ In the days of Yuan Chwang Kalinga occupied a much smaller area. It is distinguished from Wu-t'u (Orissa) and Kung-yü-t'o (Kongoda in the Ganjam district) in the north, and An-to-lo (Andhra or Veṅgī) in the south, and seems to have embraced parts of the Ganjam and Vizagapatam districts. We learn from the Jātakas that an

1 IV, I. 170.

2 I, i. 30-31.

3 There was a considerable Brāhmaṇa population in Kalinga in the days of Aśoka (cf. Edict XIII).

4 Mbh., III. 114.4.

5 Ind. Ant., 1923, 67; Ep. Ind. XII. 2; JASB. 1897, 98 ff; Kūrma P. II, 39. 9; Pādma, Svarga-Khaṇḍa, VI. 22; Vāyu, .77. 4-13; Malalasekera, DPPN, 584; Raghuvamśa, vi. 56.

ancient capital of Kālīṅga was Dantapura-nagara.¹ The Mahābhārata mentions Rājapura as the metropolis.² The *Mahāvastu*³ refers to another city named Simhapura. The Jaina writers mention a fourth town called Kam-chapapura.⁴

The Mahāgovinda Suttanta refers to another southern realm, namely, Assaka, or Āsmaka on the God(h)āvarī,⁵ which existed in the time of the monarchs Reṇu and Dhata-ratṭha (Dhṛita-rāshṭra). It was ruled by king Brahmādatta who held his Court at Potana.

The Āitareya Brāhmaṇa alludes⁶ to princes of the south who are called Bhojas and whose subjects are called

1 Cf. Ep. Ind. ; XIV, p. 361, Dantā-pura-vāsakāt ; Dantakūra, Mbh., V, 48, 76. Dandagula (Pliny, M'Crindle, Megasthenes and Arrian, 1926, p. 144). The name of the city probably survives in that of the fort of Dantavakra near Chicacole in the Gañjām district. Many other Kālīṅga capitals stood in the same district, e. g., Simhapura (Singupuram) near Chicacole, Dubreuil, A. H. D., p. 94, Kālīṅga-nagara (Mukhaliṅgam on the Vamśadharā, Ep. Ind., IV, 187; Kālīṅga-pātam is preferred in Ind. Ant., 1887, 132; JBORS, 1929, pp. 623 f. But the arguments adduced are not all plausible).

2 XII. 4. 3.

3 Senart's edition, p 432.

4 Ind. Ant., 1891, p. 375. The Bhūmikhaṇḍa of the Padmapurāṇa (47.9) mentions Śrīpura as a city in Kālīṅga.

5 Sutta Nipāta, 977, SBE, X, pt. ii, 184. Cf. Asmagi (Bomb. Gaz. I. 1. p. 532 ; Megasthenes and Arrian, 1926, 145) of classical writers. Āsmaka is also mentioned by Pāṇini, IV. I. 173. As the name signifies "the stony region", it can hardly refer to Āśvaka, the land of the Assakenoi in the north-west, which the Cambridge History of India, vol. I, connects with the Sanskrit aśva, and Iranian ašpa, horse. The Commentator Bhaṭṭasvāmin identifies Āsmaka with Mahārāshṭra. The capital was Potali or Potana (Chullakālīṅga Jātaka No. 301 ; Assaka J. (207) ; D. 2. 235 ; Parīśiṣṭa parvan, I. 92. nagare Potanūbhīdhe. Bomb Gaz. I. 1. 535 ; Law, Heaven and Hell in Buddhist Perspective, 74; Mbh. I. 177. 47 ; cf. Pādāna of Lüders' List, 616, and N. G. Majumder's List, 658 (Monuments, p. 365—Visākhaśa Pādā(n)yasa). Dr. Sukthankar points out that the Paudanya of the printed editions of the Mahābhārata is a late corruption. The older MSS. give the name as Potana or Podana. This name reminds one of Bodhan in the Nizam's dominions which lies to the south of the confluence of the Manjirā and the Godāvarī. The city of Podana is said to have been founded by a prince of the Ikshvāku family, who is the eponymous hero of the land of Āsmaka. The neighbouring people of Mūlaka also claimed Ikshvāku descent (Vāyu, 88. 177-178).

6 VIII. 14.

Satvats : “dakṣiṇasyām diśi ye ke cha Satvatām rājāno Bhaṇjyāyaiva te’bhishichyante Bhoj-etye-nān-abhishiktān-āchakshata—” “in the southern region whatever kings there are of the Satvats, they are anointed for Bhaṇjya ; ‘O Bhoja’ they style them when consecrated (in accordance with the action of the deities).” In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa ¹ the defeat by Bharata of the Satvats, and his taking away the horse which they had prepared for an Aśvamedha or horse-sacrifice are referred to. These Satvats must have been living near Bharata’s realm, i.e., near the Ganges and the Yamunā.² But in the time of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa they probably moved farther to the south. They are placed in the southern region (dakṣiṇū diś) beyond the “fixed middle region”—the land of the Kurus, Pañchālas and some neighbouring tribes. The Pañchāla realm, according to epic testimony, extended as far south as the Chambal.³ The Satvat people of the “southern region” mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, therefore, in all probability, lived beyond that river. Their kings were called Bhojas. This account of the Satvats and the Bhojas, deduced from the Brāhmaṇic statements, accords with Purāṇic evidence. It is stated in the Purāṇas that the Sātvat(a)s and the Bhojas were offshoots of the Yadu family which dwelt at Mathurā on the banks of the Yamunā.⁴ We are further told by the same authorities that they were the kindreds of the southern realm of Vidarbha.⁵ We have evidence of a closer connection between the Bhojas and the last-mentioned territory. A place called Bhojakata, is included

1 XIII. 5. 4. 21.

2 ibid., XIII, 5. 4. 11.

3 Mbh., I. 138. 74 ; Dakṣiṇāmśchāpi Pāñchālān yāvach Charmanvatī nadī.

4 Matsya, 43. 48 ; 44. 46-48 ; Vāyu, 94. 52 ; 95. 18 ; 96. 1-2 ; Vishṇu IV. 13. 1-6.

5 Mat., 44. 36 ; Vāyu, 95. 35-36.

within Vidarbha both by the *Mahābhārata*¹ and the Harivaṃśa.² The Chammak grant of the Vākāṭaka king Pravarasena II makes it clear that the Bhojakāṭa territory included the Ilichpur district in Berar, a part of ancient Vidarbha.³ As pointed out by Dr. Smith, the name of Bhojakāṭa, 'castle of the Bhojas,' implies that the province was named after a stronghold formerly held by the Bhojas, an ancient ruling race mentioned in the edicts of Aśoka.⁴ Kalidāsa in his *Raghuvamśa*⁵ calls the king of Vidarbha a Bhoja.⁶

But Vidarbha was not the only Bhoja state. The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa refers to several Bhoja kings of the south. A line of Bhojas must have ruled Dāṇḍaka. A passage in the *Kauṭīliya Arthaśāstra*⁷ runs thus :—

"Dāṇḍakyo nāma Bhojaḥ kāmāt Brāhmaṇa-kanyām abhimanjyamānas sabandhu-rāshṭro vinanāśa"—a Bhoja known as Dāṇḍakya, or king of Dāṇḍaka, making a lascivious attempt on a Brāhmaṇa girl, perished along with his relations and kingdom. We learn from the *Sarabhaṅga Jātaka*⁸ that the kingdom of Dāṇḍaki (Dāṇḍaka) had its capital at Kumbhavatī. According to the *Rāmāyaṇa*⁹ the name of the metropolis was Madhumanta, while the *Mahāvastu*¹⁰ places it at Govardhana (Nāsik).

It is clear, from what has been stated above, that there were, in the age of the later Vaidehas, and the treatises called Brāhmaṇas, many kingdoms in the south, both

1 V. 157. 15-16.

2 Vishṇu parva, 60. 32.

3 JRAS., 1914, p. 329.

4 In Ind. Ant., 1923, 262-263, Bhojakāṭa is identified with Bhat-kuli in the Amraoti district.

5 V. 39-40.

6 Cf. also Mbh., V. 48. 74 ; 157. 17 ; Harivaṃśa, Vishṇu parva, 47, 5.

7 Ed. 1919, p. 11.

8 No. 522.

9 VII. 92. 18.

10 Senart's Edition, p. 363.

Aryan and non-Aryan, namely, the Bhojakingdoms, one of which was Vidarbha, and another, probably, Daṇḍaka, as well as Āsmaka and Kalinga. With the exception of these organised states the whole of Trans-Vindhyan India was occupied by non-Aryan (dasyu) tribes such as the Andhras, Śavaras, Pulindas and probably also the Mūtibas.¹

In the opinion of Dr. Smith the Andhras were a Dravidian people, now represented by the large population speaking the Telugu language, who occupied the deltas of the Godāvari and the Kṛishṇā. Mr. P. T. Śrīnivās Iyengar argues that the Andhras were originally a Vindhyan tribe and that the extension of Andhra power was from the west to the east down the Godāvari and Kṛishṇā valleys.² Dr. Bhandarkar points out that the Serivāṇij Jātaka places Andhapura, i.e., the pura or capital of the Andhras, on the river Telavāha which he identifies with the modern Tel or Telingiri.³ But if "Serī" or *Śrī-rājya*⁴ refers to the Gaṅga kingdom of Mysore, Telavāha may have been another name of the Tuṅgabhadra-Kṛishṇā, and Andhapura identical with Bezvāḍa or some neighbouring city.⁵ The Mayidavolu plates of the early Pallava ruler Śiva-skanda-varman prove that the Andhra country (Andhrāpatha) embraced the lower valley of the Kṛishṇa and had its centre at Dhañṇakāḍa i.e., Bezvāḍa, or some neighbouring city on the south bank of the

1 Ait. Br., VII. 18.

2 Ind. Ant., 1913, pp. 276-78.

3 Ind. Ant., 1918, p. 71. There is also a river called "Ter" in South India. Ep. Ind., XXII. 29.

4 Mysore and Coorg from Inscriptions, 38. 'Serī' may also refer to Śrī Vijaya or Śrī Vishaya (Sumatra ?).

5 The name Telavāha, oil-carrier, reminds one of the passages 'vikhyāta Kṛishṇa-vernā (=Kṛishṇā) taila-snehopalabdha saralatva' (IA, VIII. 17, cf. Ep.XII. 153.)—"with a smoothness caused by sesame oil of the famous (river) Kṛishṇā."

Kṛishṇā.¹ Yuan Chwang applies the name An-to-lo (Andhra) to the district round Ping-ki-lo (Veṅgīpura) near Ellore. In later times the Andhra-Khaṇḍa extended from the Godāvarī to the borders of Kalinga (ārabhya Gaṭamanaditāṭam āKaliṅgam) and included Pīṭhāpurī (Pithapuram)².

The Śavaras and the Pulindas are described in the Matsya and the Vāyu Purāṇas as Dakṣiṇā-patha-vāsinaḥ, inhabitants of the Deccan, together with the Vaidarbhas and the Daṇḍakas :

Teshām pare janapadā Dakṣiṇā-patha-vāsinaḥ

* * * *

Kārūshāścha saha-Ishikā Āṭavyāḥ Śavarās tathā

Pulindā Vinḍhya-Pushikā (?) Vaidarbhā Daṇḍakaiḥ saha.³

Ābhīrāḥ saha cha-Ishikāḥ Āṭavyāḥ Śavarāścha ye

Pulindā Vinḍhya-Mūlikā Vaidarbhā Daṇḍakaiḥ saha.⁴

The Mahābhārata also places the Andhras, Pulindas and Śavaras in the Deccan :

Dakṣiṇā-patha-janmānaḥ sarve naravar-Āndhrakāḥ

Guhāḥ Pulindāḥ Śavarās Ohuchukā Madrakaiḥ (?) saha⁵

The precise position and extent of the country of the Śavaras in the Brāhmaṇa period cannot be shown. They are usually identified with the Suari of Pliny and the Sabaræ of Ptolemy, and are probably represented by the 1 Hultzsch (Ep. Ind. VI. 85) identified the city with Amarāvati, Burgess suggested Dharanikoṭa which lies about 18 miles to the westward from Bezvāḍa, on the right bank of the Kṛishṇā. Fergusson, Sewell and Watters prefer Bezvāḍa itself (Yuan Chwang, II. 216). In the days of the great Chinese pilgrim An-to-lo (Andhra) had its capital at Ping-ki-lo or Veṅgīpura in the Kṛishṇā district.

2 Watters ; II. IA. xx, 93 ; Ep. Ind. IV. 357.

3 Matsyā, 114. 46-48.

4 Vāyu, 45. 126.

5 Mbh., XII. 207. 42.

94 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Savaralu, or Sauras of the Vizagapatam Hills, and the Savaris of the Gwalior territory.¹

The capital of the Pulindas (Pulinda-nagara) probably lay to the south-east of the Daśarnas² who dwelt on the river Dasān (Dhasan) in Bundelkhānd.³

The location of the territory of the Mūtibas, another Dasyu tribe mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa along with the Andhras, Pulindas, and Savaras, is not so certain. Pliny refers to a tribe called "Modubae," and places them along with other peoples between the "Modogalingae," who inhabited a very large island in the Ganges and the Andaræ (Andhras).⁴ The Modubae are associated with the Molindae and the Uberae, perhaps corresponding to the Pulindas and the Savaras of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa. In the *Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra*⁵ the Mūtibas are called Mūvīpa or Mūchīpa. It is not altogether improbable that the last name is connected with that of the river Musi in the Deccan on which Hyderabad now stands.⁶

1 Ind. Ant., 1879, p. 282; Cunn. AGI, new ed., pp. 583, 586; The Imp. Gaz. The Indian Empire, I. 384. Savaras are also found in the south-east portion of the district of Raipur (JASB, 1890, 289), in Sambalpur and Ganjam (ibid 1891, 33), the western part of the Cuttack district as well as the north-western portion of Vizagapatam (ibid 1897, 321).

2 Mbh., II. 5-10.

3 JASB. 1893, 253; Kālidāsa places them in the Vidiśā or Bhīṣa region (Meghadūta, 24-25).

4 M'Crindle, Megasthenes and Arrian, 1926, p. 139-140.

5 XV. 26. 6.

6 cf. Mūshikas, Pargiter, Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, p. 366.

CHAPTER III. MAHĀJANAPADAS AND KINGSHIP

SECTION I. THE SIXTEEN MAHĀJANAPADAS.

The Vedic texts do not throw much light on the political conditions of the period which elapsed from the fall of the Videhan monarchy, probably early in the sixth century B. C., to the rise of Kosala under Mahākosala, the father-in-law of Bimbisāra, about the middle of that century. But we learn from the Buddhist Aṅguttara Nikāya that during this period there were sixteen states of considerable extent and power known as the "Solasa Mahājanapada."¹ These states were :—

- | | |
|--------------------|-----------------------|
| 1. Kāsi | 9. Kuru |
| 2. Kosala | 10. Pañchāla |
| 3. Aṅga | 11. Machchha (Matsya) |
| 4. Magadha | 12. Śūrasena |
| 5. Vajji (Vṛjji) | 13. Assaka (Āśmaka) |
| 6. Malla | 14. Avanti |
| 7. Chetiya (Chedi) | 15. Gandhāra |
| 8. Vatsa (Vatsa) | 16. Kamboja |

These Mahājanapadas flourished together during a period posterior to Karāla-Janaka but anterior to Mahākosala, because one of them, Vajji, apparently rose to power after the fall of the Videhan monarchy, while another, namely, Kāsi, lost its independence before the time of Mahākosala and formed an integral part of the Kosalan empire in the latter half of the sixth century B.C.

The Jaina *Bhagavatī Sūtra*² gives a slightly different list of the sixteen Mahājanapadas :

1 P. T. S. I, 213 ; IV, 252, 256, 260. The Mahāvastu (I. 34) gives a similar list, but omits Gandhāra and Kamboja, substituting in their place Śibi and Daśārṇa in the Punjab (or Rajputana) and Central India respectively. A less complete list is found in the Jana-vasabha-suttanta.

2 Saya xv Uddessa I (Hoernle, the Uvāsagadasāo, II, Appendix) ; W. Kirfel, Die Kosmographie Der Inder, 225.

96 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

- | | |
|--------------------------|--------------------------------|
| 1. Aṅga | 9. Pāḍha (Pāḍya or Pauḍra) |
| 2. Baṅga (Vaṅga) | 10. Lāḍha (Laṭa or Rāḍha) |
| 3. Magaha (Magadhā) | 11. Bajji (Vajji) |
| 4. Malaya | 12. Moli (Malla) |
| 5. Mālava (ka) | 13. Kāsi (Kāśi) |
| 6. Achchha | 14. Kosala |
| 7. Vachchha (Vatsa) | 15. Avāha |
| 8. Kochchha (Kachchha ?) | 16. Sambhuttara (Sumhottara ?) |

It will be seen that Aṅga, Magadhā, Vatsa, Vajji, Kāsi, and Kosala are common to both the lists. Mālava of the Bhagavatī is probably identical with Avanti of the Aṅguttara. Moli is probably a corruption of Malla. The other states mentioned in the Bhagavatī are new, and indicate a knowledge of the far east and the far south of India. The more extended horizon of the Bhagavatī clearly proves that its list is later than the one given in the Buddhist Aṅguttara.¹ We shall, therefore, accept the Buddhist list as a correct representation of the political condition of India after the fall of the House of Janaka.

Of the sixteen Mahājanapadas Kāsi was probably at first the most powerful. We have already seen that Kāsi probably played a prominent part in the subversion of the Videhan monarchy. Several Jātakas bear witness to the superiority of its capital Benares over the other cities, and the imperial ambition of its rulers. The *Guttīla Jātaka*² says that the city of Benares is the chief city in all India. It extended over twelve leagues³ whereas 1 Mr. E. J. Thomas suggests (History of Buddhist Thought, p. 6) that the Jaina author who makes no mention of the northern Kambojas and Gandhāras but includes several south Indian peoples in his list, "wrote in South India and compiled his list from countries that he knew." If the writer was really ignorant of the northern peoples his Mālavas could not have been in the Pañjāb and must be located in Central India. In that case his account can hardly be assigned to a very early date.

2 No. 243.

3 "Dvādasa-yojanikam sakala-Bārāṇasī-nagaram"—Sambhava Jātaka, No. 515; Sarabha-miga J., 483; Bhūridatta J., 543.

Mithilā and Indapatta were each only seven leagues in extent.¹ Several Kāsi monarchs are described as aspirants for the dignity of the chief king of all kings (sabbarājūnam aggarājā), and lord of the whole of India (sakala-Jambudīpa).² The Mahāvagga also mentions the fact that Kāsi was in former times a great and prosperous realm, possessed of immense resources :

“Bhūtapubbaṃ bhikkhave Bārāṇasīyam Brahmaddatto nāma Kāsīrājū ahosi addho mahaddhano mahābhogo mahadbalo mahāvāhano mahāvijito paripuṇṇakosa-kotṭhā-gāro.”³

The Jainas also afford testimony to the greatness of Kāsi, and represent Aśvasena, king of Benares, as the father of their Tīrthaṅkara Pārśva who is said to have died 250 years before Mahāvīra, i.e., in or about 777 B.C.

Already in the Brāhmaṇa period a king of Kāsi, named Dhṛitarāshṭra, attempted to offer a horse-sacrifice, but was vanquished by Śātānika Sātrājita with the result that the Kāsis down to the time of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, gave up the kindling of the sacred fire.⁴ Some of the other Kāsi monarchs were more fortunate. Thus in the *Brahāchatta Jātaka*⁵ a king of Benares is said to have gone against the king of Kosala with a large army. He entered the city of Sāvattthi and took the king prisoner. The Kosāmbī Jātaka,⁶ the Kunāla Jātaka,⁷ and the *Mahāvagga*⁸ refer to the annexation of the kingdom of Kosala

1 Suruchi J., 489 ; Vidhuraṇḍita J., 545.

2 Bhaddasāla Jātaka, 465 ; Dhonaśākha Jātaka, 353.

3 Mahāvagga, X. 2. 3 ; Vinaya Piṭakam, I, 342.

4 Śat. Br., XIII. 5. 4. 19.

5 No. 336.

6 No. 428.

7 No. 536.

8 S. B. E., Vol. XIII, pp. 294-99.

O. P. 90—13.

by the Brahmadattas of Kāsi.¹ The *Assaka Jātaka*² refers to the city of Potali, the capital of Assaka on the Godāvari, as a city of the kingdom of Kāsi. Evidently the reigning prince of Potali was a vassal of the sovereign of Kāsi. In the *Sona-Nanda Jātaka*³ Manoja, king of Benares, is said to have subdued the kings of Kosala, Aṅga and Magadha. In the *Mahābhārata*⁴ Pratardana, king of Kāsi, is said to have crushed the power of the Vīṭahavyas or Haihayas.⁵ In the absence of corroborative evidence it is difficult to say how far the account of the achievements of individual kings, mentioned in the Jātakas and the epic, is authentic. But the combined testimony of many Jātakas and the Mahāvagga clearly proves that Kāsi was at one time a great, almost an imperial power, stronger than many of its neighbours including Kosala.

We learn from the *Bhojājūniya Jātaka*⁶ that "all the kings round coveted the kingdom of Benares." We are told that on one occasion seven kings encompassed Benares.⁷ Benares in this respect resembled ancient Babylon and mediæval Rome, being the coveted prize of its more warlike but less civilized neighbours.

1 The reference in the Mahābhārata (I. 105. 47. ff; 106. 2, 13; 113. 43; 114. 3f; 126. 16; 127. 24) to Kāsi princesses, the mothers of Dhṛitarāshṭra and Pāṇḍu, as Kausalyā, possibly points to the traditional union of the two realms of Kāsi and Kosala in the period when the epic was compiled. The expression Kāsi-Kausalya already occurs in the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa (Vedic Index, I. 195).

2 No. 207.

3 No. 532.

4 XIII. 30.

5 Dr. Bhandarkar points out that several Kāsi monarchs, who figure in the Jātakas, are also mentioned in the Purāṇas, e.g., Vissasena of Jātaka No. 268 Udaya of Jātaka No. 458, and Bhallāṭiya of Jātaka No. 504 are mentioned in the Purāṇas as Vishvakṣena, Udaḥasena and Bhallāṭa. Matsya, 49.57 et seq. Vāyu, 99. 180 et seq.; Vishṇu, IV. 19. 13.

6 No. 23.

7 Jātaka, 181.

The kingdom of Kosala, as we have seen, was bounded on the west by the Gumti, on the south by the Sarpikā or Syandikā (Sai) river,¹ on the east by the Sadānirā which separated it from Videha, and on the north by the Nepāl hills. It included the territory of the Kālāmas of Kesaputta,² possibly on the Gumti, and that of the Śākya of Kapilavastu in the Nepalese Tarai. In the *Sutta Nipāta*³ the Buddha says, "Just beside Himavanta there lives a people endowed with the power of wealth, the inhabitants of Kosala.⁴ They are *Ādichhas*⁵ by family, Śākiyas by birth; from that family I have wandered out, not longing for sensual pleasures." The Majjhima Nikāya,⁶ too, mentions the Buddha as a Kosalan :

"Bhagavā pi Kosalako aham pi Kosalako,"

The political subjection of the Śākya to the king of Kosala in the latter half of the sixth century B.C. is clear from the evidence of the *Aggañña Suttanta*⁷ and the introductory portion of the Bhaddasūla Jātaka.⁸

Kosala proper contained three great cities, namely, Ayodhyā, Śāketa and Sāvattthi or Śrāvastī, besides a number of minor towns like Setavyā⁹ and Ukkatṭha.¹⁰ Ayodhyā (Oudh) was a town on the river Sarayū now

1 Rām, II. 49. 11-12 ; 50. 1; VII. 104. 15.

2 Āṅguttara Nikāya, I. 188 (PTS) ; TC. II. 808. In the Rig-veda, V. 61, the Dālbyhas, a family or clan closely connected with the Keśins (who possibly gave their name to Kesaputta), are placed on the Gumti.

3 S. B. E., X, Part II, 68-69.

4 Kosalesu niketino. As pointed out by Rhys Davids and Stede, Niketin means 'having an abode,' 'being housed,' 'living in,' cf. J. III, 432—dumasākhā-niketinī.

5 Belonging to the Āditya (Sōlar) race (cf. Lüders, Ins., 929 i).

6 II. 124.

7 Dīgha Nikāya, III. (P.T.S.), 83 ; Dialogues III. 80.

8 No. 465 ; Fausboll, IV. 145.

9 Pāyāsi Suttanta.

10 Ambatṭha Sutta.

included in the Fyzabad district. Sāketa is often supposed to be the same as Ayodhyā, but Professor Rhys Davids points out that both cities are mentioned as existing in the Buddha's time. They were possibly adjoining like London and Westminster.¹ Sāvattthī is the great ruined city on the south bank of the Achiravati or Rāptī called Sāhet-Māhet, which is situated on the borders of the Gonda and Bahraich districts of the United Provinces.²

In the Rāmāyaṇa and in the Purāṇas the royal family of Kosala is represented as being descended from a king named Ikshvāku. Branches of this family are represented as ruling at Kusinārā,³ at Mithilā⁴ and at Viśālā or Vaiśālī.⁵ A prince named Ikshvāku is mentioned in a passage of the Ṛig-Veda.⁶ In the *Atharva-Veda*⁷ either this king, or one of his descendants, is referred to as an ancient hero. The Purāṇas give lists of kings of the Aikshvāka dynasty from Ikshvāku himself to Prasenajit, the contemporary of Bimbisāra. The names of many of these kings are found in the Vedic literature. For example :—

Mandhātṛi Yuvanāśva⁸ is mentioned in the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa.⁹ Purūkutsa¹⁰ is referred to in the Ṛig-Veda.¹¹

1 Buddhist India, p. 39.

2 Cunningham, Ancient Geography of India, 1924, p. 469; Smith, E. H. I., 3rd ed. p. 159. The royal palace at Śrāvastī overlooked the Achiravati (DPPN, II. 170n).

3 The Kuśa Jātaka, No. 531. The Mahāvastu (III. 1) places an Ikshvāku king in Benares—Abhūshi Rājā Ikshvāku Vārāṇasyām mahābato.

4 Vāyu P., 89, 3.

5 Rāmāyaṇa, I. 47. 11-12.

6 X. 60. 4.

7 XIV. 39. 9.

8 Vāyu, 88. 67.

9 I. 2. 10 et seq.

10 Vāyu, 88. 72.

11 I, 63. 7; 112. 7. 14; 174. 2, VI. 20. 10.

In the *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*¹ he is styled an Aikshvāka.² Trasadasyu,³ too, finds mention in the Ṛig-Veda.⁴ Tryarūṇa⁵ is also mentioned in the same Veda.⁶ In the *Pañchaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa*⁷ he is called an Aikshvāka. Triśaṅku⁸ is referred to in the Taittirīya Upanishad.⁹

Hariśchandra¹⁰ figures in the *Āitareya Brāhmaṇa*¹¹ and is styled Aikshvāka. Rohita, the son of Hariśchandra¹² is also alluded to in the same Brāhmaṇa.¹³ Bhagīratha¹⁴ figures prominently in the Jaiminīya Upanishad Brāhmaṇa under the slightly different name of Bhageratha¹⁵ and is called Aikshvāka and 'Ekarāt' (sole ruler). Under the name of Bhajeratha he is probably referred to in the *Ṛig-Veda*¹⁶ itself. Ambarīsha¹⁷ is mentioned in the same Veda.¹⁸ Rītuparṇa¹⁹ finds mention in a Brāhmaṇa-like passage of the Baudhāyana Śranta Sūtra.²⁰ Daśaratha and Rāma²¹ bear names that are known to the Ṛig-Veda.²² But these personages and a few others mentioned above are not connected in the Vedic texts with the Ikshvāku family or with Kosala.

Hiraṇyanābha Kausalya,²³ is mentioned in the Praśna Upanishad, as a rājaputra or prince.²⁴ He is undoubtedly

1 XIII. 5. 4. 5.

2 Cf. reference to the Ṛig-Veda, IV, 42. 8 in this connection.

3 Vāyu, 88. 74.

4 IV. 38. 1; VII. 19. 3, etc.

5 Vāyu, 88. 77.

6 V. 27.

7 XIII. 3. 12.

8 Vāyu, 88. 109.

9 I. 10. 1.

10 Vāyu, 88. 117.

11 VII. 13. 16.

12 Vāyu, 88. 119.

13 VII. 14.

14 Vāyu, 88. 167.

15 IV. 6. 1ff.

16 X. 60. 2.

17 Vāyu, 88. 171.

18 I. 100. 17.

19 Vāyu, 88. 173.

20 XVIII. 12 (Vol. II, p. 357).

21 Vāyu, 88. 183-184.

22 I. 126. 4; X. 93. 14.

23 Vāyu, 88. 207.

24 VI. 1. In the Jaim. Up. Br. I. 6. he (cf. Śāṅkh. Śr. Sūtra, XVI. 9. 13) or his son (Śat. Br. XIII. 5. 4. 4). is styled a māhārāja. Too much significance should not be attached to the designation rājaputra (as distinguished from rājā). In the Mbh. V. 165. 18, Bṛihadvala is a rāja of Kosala (Kausalya). In a later passage of the epic (XI. 25. 10) the same ruler is referred to as Kosalānāmādhipatiṃ rājaputram Bṛihadbalaṃ.

connected with Para Āṭṭāra (Āhlāra), the Kosala-Videhan king, mentioned in a gāthā (song) occurring in the *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*¹ and the Śaṅkhāyana Śrauta Śūtra,² as well as a passage of Jaiminiya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa.³ The gāthā as quoted in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa gives to Para the patronymic 'Hairaṇyanābha,' while the Śrauta Śūtra identifies Para with Hiranyanābha himself. It is difficult to say whether the original gāthā extolling the deeds of Para Āṭṭāra (Āhlāra) gave to that conqueror the name 'Hiranyanābha' or the patronymic 'Hairanyanābha.' The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa is the older of the two works mentioning the prince's exploits and is, therefore, more likely to preserve the original text than the sūtra. According to the Praśna Upaniṣad, Hiranyanābha, the father, was a contemporary of Sukeśa Bhāradvāja,⁴ who was himself a contemporary of Kausalya Āśvalāyana.⁵ If it be true, as seems probable, that Āśvalāyana of Kosala is identical with Assalāyana of Sāvattthi mentioned in the *Majjhima Nikāya*⁶ as a contemporary of Gotama Buddha, he must be placed in the sixth century B. C. Consequently Hiranyanābha, and his son, Hairanyanābha too, must have flourished in that century.

Some of the later princes of the Purāṇic list, e. g., Śākya, Siddhodana, Siddhārtha, Rāhula and Prasenajit, are mentioned in Buddhist texts. The exact relations of Hiranyanābha (and Hairanyanābha) with Prasenajit, who also flourished in the sixth century B. C., are not known. The Purāṇic chroniclers make Hiranyanābha an ancestor of Prasenajit, but are not sure about his position in the dynastic list.⁷ Further they refer to

1 XIII. 5. 4. 4. Āṭṭārasya Paraḥ putro'svahi medhyamabandhayat

Hairanyanābhaḥ Kausalyo diśaḥ pūrṇā amanīhata (iti).

2 XVI. 9. 13.

3 II. 6.

4 VI. 1.

5 Praśna, I. 1.

6 II. 147 et seq.

7 AIHT., 173.

Prasenajit as the son and successor of Rāhula, and grandson of Siddhārtha (Buddha). This is absurd, because Prasenajit was of the same age as the Buddha and belonged to a different branch of the Ikshvāku line. The Tibetans represent him as the son of Brahmadatta.¹ It is clear that no unanimous tradition about the parentage of Prasenajit and the position of Hiranyanābha in the family tree has been preserved. Hiranyanābha, or preferably his son, performed an Aśvamedha sacrifice and was apparently a great conqueror. Is this ruler identical with the "Great Kosalan" (Mahākosala) of Buddhist tradition? If he really flourished in the sixth century B.C., he may have been identical with 'Mahākosala,' of Buddhist texts.

Pargiter admits that several Purāṇic passages make Hiranyanābha (and therefore also his son) one of the "future" kings after the Bhārata battle.² He was the only prince of antiquity who is styled in the Vedic literature both a Kausalya and a Vaideha. That description admirably fits Mahākosala whose daughter, the mother of Ajātaśatru according to Buddhist tradition, is called Kosalādevī as well as Vedehī (Vaidehī).

A word may be added here regarding the value of the Purāṇic lists. No doubt they contain names of some real kings and princes. But they have many glaring defects, defects which are apt to be forgotten by writers who make these the basis of early Indian chronology.

(1) Ikshvākuids of different branches and perhaps princes of other tribes e.g., Trasadasyu, king of the Pūrus,³ Rītuparṇa, king of Śaphāla,⁴ Śuddhodana of 1 Essay on Guṇādhyā, p. 173.

2 AIHT, 173.

3 Ṛig-Veda, IV. 38. 1 ; VII. 19. 3.

4 Baudh. Śrautara Sūtra, XVIII. 12 (Vol. II, p. 357) ; Āpas. Śr. Sūtra, XXI. 20. 3. Rītuparṇa is, however, not distinctly called an Ikshvāka. But from the rarity of the name it is possible to surmise that the epic and Purāṇic king of that designation is meant.

Kapilavastu and Prasenajit, king of Śrāvastī, have been mixed up in such a way as to leave the impression that they formed a continuous line of monarchs who ruled in regular succession.

(2) Contemporaries have been represented as successors and collaterals have been represented as lineal descendants, e.g., Prasenajit, king of Śrāvastī, is represented as the lineal successor of Siddhārtha and Rāhula, though he was actually a contemporary of Siddhārtha, i.e., the Buddha, and belonged to a separate line of the Ikshvākuids.

(3) Certain individuals have been omitted, e.g., Vedhas (father, or ancestor of Hariśchandra), Para Āṭṇara (unless he is identical with Hiranyanābha), and Mahākosala.

(4) Names in the list include Śākya, the designation of a clan, and Siddhārtha (Buddha) who never ruled.

It is not easy to find out all the kings of the Purāṇic chronicles who actually ruled over Kosala. Some of the earlier princes e.g., Purukutsa, Trasadasya, Hariśchandra, Rohita, Rituparna and a few others, are omitted from the list of the kings of Ayodhyā given in the Rāmāyaṇa.¹ We gather from the Vedic literature that many, if not all, of these monarchs ruled over territories lying outside Kosala. The only kings or princes in the Purāṇic list who are known from the Vedic and early Buddhist texts to have reigned in Kosala, or over some outlying part of it, are Hiranyanābha,² Prasenajit and Śuddhodana.

1 I. 70.

2 In the Śat. Br. XIII. 5. 4, 4-5, Hiranyanābha is described as Kausalya-rāja, but not as an Aikshvāka. On the other hand Purukutsa Daurgaha is styled Aikshvāka-rājā but not as Kausalya, as if a distinction between Kausalyas and Aikshvākas is meant. The two terms need not refer to kings of the same dynasty ruling over exactly the same territory. As a matter of fact Trasadasya is known to be a king of the Pūrus. An Ikshvākuid styled Vārshṇa, connected with the Vṛishṇis (?), is mentioned in Jaim. Up. Br. 1. 5. 4.

The Buddhist works mention a few other sovereigns of Kosala, but their names do not occur in the epic and Purāṇic accounts. Some of these kings had their capital at Ayodhyā, others at Sāketa, and the rest at Śrāvastī. Of the princes of Ayodhyā, the *Ghata Jātaka*¹ mentions Kālasena. A Kosalarāja reigning in Sāketa is mentioned in the Nandiyamiga Jātaka.² Vaṅka, Mahākosala and many others³ had their capital at Sāvattthī or Śrāvastī. Ayodhyā seems to have been the earliest capital, and Sāketa the next. The last capital was Śrāvastī. Ayodhyā had sunk to the level of an unimportant town in the Buddha's time,⁴ but Sāketa and Śrāvastī were included among the six great cities of India.⁵

The chronology of ancient Kosala is in a state of utmost confusion. If the Purāṇas are to be believed, a prince named Divākara occupied the throne of Ayodhyā in the time of Adhisīma-kṛishṇa, great-great-grandson of Parīkshit. But, as has already been pointed out above, the princes who are mentioned as his successors did not form a continuous line of rulers who reigned over the same territory in regular succession. It is, therefore, a hopeless task to measure the distance separating him from the Buddha and his contemporary with the help of the traditional dynastic lists alone. It is also not known when the older capitals were abandoned in favour of Śrāvastī. But it must have been some time before the accession of Prasenajit, the contemporary of the Buddha, of Bimbisāra, and of Udayana of Kauśāmbī, supposed to be a descendant of Adhisīma-kṛishṇa.

1 No. 454.

2 No. 385.

3 E.g., the Kosalarāja of J. 75; Chatta (336); Sabbamitta (512); and Prasenajit.

4 Buddhist India, p. 34.

5 Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta, S.B.E., XI, p. 99.

We learn from the *Mahāvagga*¹ that during the period of the earlier Brahmadattas of Kāsi, Kosala was a poor and tiny state with slender resources : Dīghiti nāma Kosalarājā ahosi daliddo appadhano appadhogo appabalo appavūhano appavijito aparipunnā-kosa-kotṭhāgāro.

In the sixth and fifth centuries B. C., however, Kosala was a mighty kingdom which contended first with Kāsi, and afterwards with Magadha for the mastery of the upper Ganges valley. The history of these struggles is reserved for treatment in later sections. The rivalry with Magadha ended in the absorption of the kingdom into the Magadhan Empire.

Aṅga was the country to the east of Magadha and west of the chieftains who dwelt in the Rajmahal Hills (Parvatavāsinaḥ). It was separated from Magadha (including Modāgiri or Monghyr) by the river Champā, probably the modern Chāndan.² The Aṅga dominions, however, at one time included Magadha and probably extended to the shores of the sea. The *Vidhura Paṇḍita Jātaka*³ describes Rājagriha as a city of Aṅga. The Śāntiparva of the *Mahābhārata*⁴ refers to an Aṅga king who sacrificed on Mount Viṣṇupada (probably at Gayā). The *Sabhāparva*⁵ mentions Aṅga and Vaṅga as forming one Viśaya or kingdom. The Kathā-sarīt-sāgara says⁶ that Viṭaṅkapur,

1 S. B. E., XVII, p. 294.

2 According to Pargiter (JASB, 1897, 95) Aṅga comprised the modern districts of Bhāgalpur and Monghyr, and also extended northwards up the river Kauśiki or Kośi and included the western portion of the district of Purnea. For it was on that river that Kāśyapa Vibhāṇḍaka had his hermitage. His son Rishyaśṛiṅga was beguiled by courtesans of Aṅga into a boat and brought down the river to the capital. In Mbh. ii. 30. 20-22, however, Modāgiri (Monghyr) and Kauśiki-Kachchha had rulers who are distinguished from Karṇa whose realm (Aṅga) clearly lay between the Māgadhas and the Rājās styled Parvatavāsinaḥ.

3 No. 545.

4 29. 35, JASB, 1897, 94.

5 44. 9 ; cf VI. 18. 28. Aṅgas and Prāchyas.

6 25. 35 ; 26. 115 ; 82. 3-16.

a city of the Aṅgas, was situated on the shore of the sea. The imperial glory of Aṅga is doubtless reflected in the songs of the *Aitareya Brāhmaṇa*¹ which describe the 'world-conquest' (Samantam sarvataḥ prithivīm jayan) of one of its ancient kings in the course of which girls of aristocratic families (āhīya-duhitṛi) were brought as prizes from different climes.

Champā, the famous capital of Aṅga, stood at the confluence of the river of the same name² and the Ganges.³ Cunningham points out that there still exist near Bhāgalpur two villages, Champānagara and Champā-pura, which most probably represent the actual site of the ancient capital. It is stated in the Mahābhārata, the Purāṇas and the Harivaṃśa that the ancient name of Champā was Mālinī :⁴

Champāsya tu purī Champā yū Maliny-abhavat purā.

In the Jātaka stories the city is also called Kāla-Champā. The *Mahā-Janaka Jātaka*⁵ informs us that Champā was sixty leagues from Mithilā. The same Jātaka refers to its gate, watch-tower, and walls. Down to the time of Gautama Buddha's death it was considered as one of the six great cities of India, the other five being Rājagṛīha, Śrāvastī, Sāketa, Kauśāmbī, and Benares.⁶ Champā was noted for its wealth and commerce, and traders sailed from it to Suvarṇa-bhūmi in the Trans-Gangetic region for trading purposes.⁷ Hindu

1 Ait. Br. VIII. 22.

2 Jātaka 506.

3 Mbh. iii, 84, 163 ; 307, 26 (Gāṅgāyāḥ Sūtavishayam Champāmanu yayaḥ purīm) ; Watters, Yuan Chwang, II. 181 ; Daśakumāra Charita, II. 2.

4 Matsya, 48. 97 ; Vāyu, 99. 105-06 ; Hariv., 31. 49 ; Mbh., XII. 5. 6-7 ; XIII. 42. 16.

5 No. 539.

6 Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta.

7 Jātaka, 539, Fausboll's Ed., VI, p. 34.

emigrants to southern Annam and Cochin China are supposed to have named their settlement after this famous Indian city.¹ Other important cities in Aṅga were Assapura (Āśvapura) and Bhaddiya (Bhadrika).²

The earliest appearance of Aṅga is in the *Atharva-Veda*³ in connection with the Gandhāris, Mūjavats, and Magadhas. The Rāmāyaṇa tells an absurd story about the origin of this Janapada. It is related in that epic that Madana or Anaṅga, the god of love, having incurred the displeasure of the God Śiva fled from the hermitage of the latter to escape his consuming anger, and the region where "he cast off his body (aṅga)" has since been known by the name of Aṅga.⁴ The Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas attribute the foundation of the kingdom to a prince named Aṅga.⁵ The tradition may claim some antiquity as Aṅga Vairochana is included in the list of anointed kings in the Āitareya Brāhmaṇa.⁶ The consecration of this ruler with the Aryan ritual styled the Aindra mahābhisheka causes some surprise as the Bodhāyana Dharma Sūtra groups the Aṅgas with peoples

1 Ind. Ant., VI. 229. Itsing, 58. Rhys Davids, Buddhist India, p. 35. Nundolai Dey, Notes on Ancient Aṅga, JASB, 1914. For the Hindu colonisation of Champā, see Eliot, Hinduism and Buddhism, Vol. III, pp. 137 ff. and R. C. Majumdar, Champā. The oldest Sanskrit inscription (that of Vo-can) dates, according to some scholars, from about the third century A. D. The inscription mentions a king of the family of Śrī Māra-rāja.

2 Malalasekera, DPPN, 16; Dhammapada Commentary, Harvard Oriental Series, 29. 59. Cf. Bhaddiya (Bhadrika or Bhadrīkā of Jaina writers). It is possibly represented by Bhadriyā, 8 miles south of Bhāgalpur (JASB, 1914, 337).

3 V. 22. 14.

4 JASB, 1914, p. 317; Rām., I. 23. 14.

5 Mbh. 1. 104. 53-54; Matsya p. 48. 19.

6 VIII. 22; cf. Pargiter, JASB, 1897, 97. In connection with the gifts of the Aṅga King mention is made of a place called Avachatnuka:

Daśanāgasahasrāṇi dattvātreyo' vachatnuka śrāntaḥ pārikuṭān prāpsad dānen-Āṅgasya Brāhmaṇah.

The epithet 'Vairochana' given to the Aṅga King reminds one of 'Vairochani' of the Matsya P. 48, 58.

of mixed origin, and the Mahābhārata brands an Āṅga prince who, by the way, is distinguished from Karna, and is described as skilful in handling elephants, as a Mlechchha or outlandish barbarian. In the Matsya Purāṇa the father of the eponymous hero of the Āṅgas is styled Dānavarshabha (chief among demons).¹

About the dynastic history of Āṅga our information is meagre. The Mahāgovinda Suttanta refers to king Dhatarattha of Āṅga.² The Buddhist texts mention a queen named Gaggara who gave her name to a famous lake in Champā. The *Purāṇas*³ give lists of the early kings of this country. One of these rulers, Dadhivāhana, is known to Jaina tradition. The Purāṇas and the *Harivamśa*⁴ represent him as the son and immediate successor of Āṅga. Jaina tradition places him in the beginning of the sixth century B. C. His daughter Chandanā or Chandrabālā was the first female who embraced Jainism shortly after Mahāvīra had attained the Kevaliship.⁵ Śatānika, king of the Vatsas of Kauśāmbī, near Allahabad, is said to have attacked Champā, the capital of Dadhivāhana, and in the confusion which ensued, Chandanā fell into the hands of a robber, but all along she maintained the vows of the order.

Between the Vatsas and the realm of Āṅga lived the Magadhas, then a comparatively weak people. A great struggle was going on between this kingdom and its great

1 Bodh. Dh. S. I. 1. 29; Mbh. VIII. 22. 18-19; Mat. P. 48. 60. Note also the connection of Āṅgas with Nishadās in Vāyu, 62, 107-23. The Purāṇa describes the royal family as Atrivamśasaṃutpanna. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, however, an Ātreya appears as the priest of the Āṅga King. For a discussion of the origin of the Āṅgas and other kindred tribes, see. S. Lévi pre-Aryen et Pre-Dravidien dans l'Inde, I. A. Juillet-septembre, 1923.

2 Dialogues of the Buddha, II. 270.

3 Matsya, 48. 91-108; Vāyu, 99. 100-112.

4 32. 43.

5 JASB, 1914, pp. 320-21. For the story of Chandanavālā see also Ind. Culture, II. pp. 682 ff.

eastern neighbour.¹ The *Vidhura Paṇḍita Jātaka*² describes Rājagṛiha, the Magadhan capital, as a city of Aṅga while the Mahābhārata refers to a sacrifice which an Aṅga king probably performed at Gayā. These details may indicate that Aṅga succeeded in annexing Magadha. Its frontier thus approached the Vatsa Kingdom whose monarch's alarm may have been responsible for an attack on Champā. The Aṅga king preferred to have friendly relations with Kauśāmbī, possibly because he was threatened by the reviving power of Magadha. Śrī Harsha speaks of a ruler of Aṅga named Drīḍhavarman who gave his daughter in marriage to Udayana, son and successor of Śatānika³ and secured his help in regaining his throne.

The success of Aṅga did not last long. About the middle of the sixth century B. C. Bimbisāra Śreṇika, the Crown Prince of Magadha, is said to have killed Brahmadatta, the last independent ruler of Ancient Aṅga. He took Champā, the capital, and resided there as his father's Viceory.⁴ Henceforth Aṅga becomes an integral part of the growing empire of Magadha.

Magadha corresponds roughly to the present Patna and Gayā districts of South Bihār. It seems to have been bounded on the north and the west by the rivers Ganges and the Śona, on the south by spurs of the Vindhyan range, and on the east by the river Champā which emptied itself into the Ganges near the Aṅga capital.⁵ Its earliest capital was Girivraja, the mountain-girt

1 Champeyya Jātaka.

2 Cowell, VI. 133.

3 Priyadarśikā, Act IV.

4 Hardy, A Manual of Buddhism, p. 163n (account based on the Tibetan Dulva), JASB, 1914, 321.

5 Mbh. II. 20. 29; Mahā-parinibbāna Suttanta (Dialogues ii. 94) and DPPN, I, 331 which show that the Vṛjī frontier commenced from the northern bank of the Ganges as Ukkāvelā or Ukkachelā, was included within the limits of that state; Champeyya Jātaka (506); Fleet, CII, 227; DPPN, 403. In the epic period the eastern boundary of Magadha proper may not have extended as far as the Champā river as Modāgiri (Monghyr) finds mention as a separate state.

city,¹ or old Rājagṛiha, near Rājgir among the hills in the neighbourhood of Gayā. The *Mahāvagga*² calls it "Giribbaja of the Magadhas" to distinguish it from other cities of the same name, e.g., Girivraja in Kekaya. The Mahābhārata refers to it not only as Girivraja, but as Rājagṛiha,³ Bārhadhratha-pura⁴ and Māgadha-pura,⁵ and says that it was an almost impregnable city, puram durādharśam samantataḥ, being protected by five hills, viz. Vaihāra, the grand rock (Vipulāḥ śailo), Varāha, Vṛishabha, Rishigiri and Chaityaka⁶ with their compact bodies (rakṣantīvābhisamhatya samhataṅgā Girivrajam). From the Rāmāyaṇa we learn that the city had another name, Vasumatī.⁷ The Life of Hiuen Tsang mentions still another name, Kuśāgra-pura.⁸ Indian Buddhist writers give a seventh name, Bimbasāra-purī.⁹

In a passage of the *Rig-Veda*¹⁰ mention is made of a territory called Kikaṭa ruled by a chieftain named Pramaganda. Yāska¹¹ declares that Kikaṭa is the name

1 Broadley in JASB. 1872, 299. Girivraja was at one time identified with Giryek on the Pañchana river about 36 miles north-east of Gayā, 6 miles east of Rajgir (Pargiter in JASB. 1897, 86).

2 S. B. E. XIII. 150.

3 Mbh. I. 113. 27; 204. 17; II, 21. 34; III. 84, 104.

4 II. 24. 44.

5 Goratham girimāsūdyā dadriṣur Māgadham puram, II. 20. 30; 21. 13.

6 The names given in the Pāli texts (DPPN, II. 721) are Paṇḍava, Gijjhakūṭa, Vebhāra, Isigili and Vepulla (or Vaṅkaka). The Pāli evidence may suggest that Vipula in the Mbh. verse is a name, and not an epithet. In that case Dr. J. Wenger suggests Chaityakapañchakāḥ (five goodly Chaityakas) for Chaityakapañchamā. (with Chaityaka as the fifth). For a note by Keith see IHQ, 1939, 163-64.

7 I. 32. 8.

8 P. 113. Apparently named after an early Magadhan prince (Vāyu, 99, 224; AIHT, 149).

9 Law, Buddhaghosha, 87 n.

10 III. 53. 14.

11 Nirukta, VI, 32.

of a non-Aryan country. In later works Kikāṭa is given as a synonym of Magadha.¹

Like Yāska the author of the Bṛihad-dharma Purāṇa apparently regarded Kikāṭa as an impure country which, however, included a few holy spots :—

*Kikāṭe nāma deśe' sti Kāka-karṇākhyako nṛipah prajānām hitakṛinnityam Brahma-dveshakaratathā tatra deśe Gayā nāma puṇyadeśo' sti viśrutah nadī cha Karṇadā nāma pitṛinām svargadāyini²
Kikāṭe cha mṛito' pyeśha pāpabhūtau na saṁśayah.³*

It is clear from these verses that Kikāṭa included the Gayā district, but the greater part of it was looked upon as an unholy region (pāpabhūmi, doubtless corresponding to the anārya-nivāsa of Yāska). Kāka-karṇa of line 1, may be the same as Kāka-varṇa of the Śaiśunāga family.

The name Magadha first appears in the *Atharva-Veda*⁴ where fever is wished away to the Gandhāris, Mūjavats, Aṅgas, and Magadhas. The bards of Magadha are, however, mentioned as early as the Yajur-Veda.⁵ They are usually spoken of in the early Vedic literature in terms of contempt. In the Vṛātya book of the Atharva Saṁhitā,⁶ the Vṛātya i.e., the Indian living outside the pale of Brāhmaṇism, is brought into very special relation to the puṁśchalī

1 *Kikāṭeshu Gayā puṇyā puṇyam Rājagriham vanam
Chyāvanasyāśramam puṇyam nadī puṇyā puṇahpunā.*

Cf. Vāyu, 108. 73; 105. 23. Bhāgavata Purāṇa, I. 3. 24: Buddho namnāṅjana-sutaḥ Kikāṭeshu bhaviṣhyati; ibid vii. 10. 19; Sridhara 'Kikāṭeshu madhye Gayā-pradeśe'. Abhidhāna-chintāmaṇi, "Kikāṭa Magadhāhvayāḥ." For an epigraphic reference to Kikāṭa see Ep. Ind. II. 222, where a prince of that name is connected with the Maurya family, See also 'Kekateyaka' (Monuments of Sāñchi, I. 302)

2 Madhya-Khaṇḍam, XXVI. 20. 22.

3 XXVI. 47; cf. Vāyu p. 78. 22; Pādma Pātālakhanda, XI. 45.

4 V. 22. 14.

5 Vāj. Saṁ XXX. 5; Vedic Index, II. 116. For the connection of the Māgadhas with Magadha, see Vāyu p. 62. 147.

6 XV. ii. 5—Śraddhā puṁśchalī Mitro Māgadho...etc; Griffith II. 186.

(harlot) and the Māgadha. "In the eastern region (Prāchyāṇ diśi)" faith is his harlot, Mitra his Māgadha (bard or panegyrist).¹ In the Śrauta Sūtras the equipment characteristic of the Vrātya is said to be given, when the latter is admitted into the Aryan Brāhmaṇical community, to the so-called Brāhmaṇas living in Magadha, Brahmabandhu Māgadha-deśīya.² The Brāhmaṇas of Magadha are here spoken of in a disparaging tone as Brahmabandhu.³ In the Saṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka, however, the views of a Magadha-vāsī Brāhmaṇa are quoted with respect. The Vedic dislike of the Magadhas in early times was due, according to Oldenberg⁴ to the fact that the Magadhas were not wholly Brāhmaṇised. Pargiter suggests⁵ that in Magadha the Aryans met and mingled with a body of invaders from the east by sea.

With the exception of Pramaganda no king of Magadha appears to be mentioned in the Vedic literature. The earliest dynasty of Magadha according to the *Mahābhārata*⁶ and the Purāṇas is that founded by Brihadratha, the son of Vasu Chaidya-Uparichara, and the father of Jarāsandha. *Rāmāyaṇa*⁷ makes Vasu himself the founder of Girivraja or Vasumatī. A Brihadratha is mentioned twice in the Ṛig-Veda,⁸ but there is nothing to show that he is identical with the father of Jarāsandha. The Purāṇas give lists of the "Brihadratha kings" from Jarāsandha's son Sahadeva to Rīpuñjaya, and apparently make Senājit, seventh in descent from Sahadeva, the 1 Cf. Weber, Hist. Ind. Lit., pp. 112.

2 Vedic Index, II, 116.

3 Note also the expression rājānaḥ kshatra-bandhavaḥ applied to Magadhan kings in the Purāṇas (Pargiter, Dynasties of the Kali Age, p. 22).

4 Buddha, 400 n.

5 JASB, 1897, 111; J. R. A. S., 1908 pp. 851-53. Bodh. Dh. Sūtra, I, i. 29 refers to Aṅgas and Magadhas as saṅkīrṇa-yonayaḥ, "of mixed origin".

6 I. 63. 30.

7 I. 32, 7.

8 I. 36. 18; X. 49. 6.

contemporary of Adhisīma-kṛishṇa of the Pārikshita family and Divākara of the Ikshvāku line. But in the absence of independent external corroboration it is not safe to accept the Purāṇic chronology and order of succession of the princes as authentic.¹ Brihadrathas and certain princes of Central India are said to have passed away when Pulika (Puṇika) placed his son Pradyota on the throne of Avanti,² i.e., the Ujjain territory. As Pradyota was a contemporary of Gautama Buddha, and as the Purāṇic passage, "Bṛihadhratheshvatīteshu Vītihoṭreshv-Avantishu", when the Brihadrathas, Vītihoṭras and Avantis (or the Vītihoṭras in Avanti) passed away," suggests that the events alluded to here were synchronous, it is reasonable to conclude that the Brihadratha dynasty came to an end in the sixth century B.C.

Jaina writers mention two early kings of Rājagṛīha named Samudra-vijaya and his son Gaya.³ Gaya is said to have reached perfection which had been taught by the 1 Cf. supra, pp. 80 f, 104, discussion about later Vaideha and Kosalan kings. The number of 'the future Brihadrathas' is given as 16, 22 or 32, and the period of their rule, 723 or 1000 years (DKA, 17, 68). The last King Ripuñjaya or Ariñjaya (ibid 17 n 96) reminds one of Arindama of the Pāli texts (DPPN, ii. 402).

2 Dynasties of the Kali Age, p. 18; cf., IHQ, 1930, p. 683. There is no reason to believe with the late authors of the Kathā-sarīt-sāgara and certain corrupt passages of the Purāṇas, (IHQ, 1930, pp. 679, 691), that there was a Pradyota of Magadha distinct from Mahāsena of Avanti who is called Pradyota by several earlier writers, Buddhist as well as Brāhmaṇical. The use of the expression 'Avantishu' (DKA, 18) in the Purāṇic passage which refers to the dynastic revolution brought about by Pulika, the identity of the names of the Purāṇic family of Pradyota with those of the Avanti line of Mahāsena, and the mention, in reference to Pradyota of the Purāṇas, of epithets like 'pranatasāmanta' and 'nayavarjita' which remind one irresistibly of Chanḍa Pradyota Mahāsena of Avanti as described in Buddhist literature, leave little room for doubt that the Pradyota of the Purāṇas and Pradyota of Avanti cannot be regarded as distinct entities.

3 S. B. E. XLV. 86. A King named Gaya is mentioned in Mbh. vii. 64. But he is described there as a son of Amūrtarayas.

Jinas. But little reliance can be placed on uncorroborated assertions of this character.

The second Magadhan dynasty, according to the less corrupt texts of the Purāṇas, was the Śaiśunāga line which is said to have been founded by a king named Śiśunāga. Bimbisāra, the contemporary of the Buddha, is assigned to this family. Āśvaghoṣa, an earlier authority,¹ refers however, in his Buddha-charita,² to Śreṇya i.e., Bimbisāra, as a scion, not of the Śaiśunāga dynasty, but of the Haryaṅka-kula, and the Mahāvaiṃśa makes 'Susunāga' i.e., Śiśunāga, the founder of a distinct line of rulers which succeeded that of Bimbisāra. The Purāṇas themselves relate that Śiśunāga "will take away the glory of the Pradyotas" whom we know from other sources to be contemporaries of the Bimbisārids :—

*Ashta-triṃśachchhatam bhāvyaḥ Pradyotāḥ pañcha te sutāḥ hatvā teshāṃ yaśaḥ kṛtsnam
Śiśunūgo bhaviṣhyati.*³

If this statement be true, then Śiśunāga must be later than the first Pradyota, namely Chaṇḍa Pradyota Mahāsena, who was, judged by the evidence of the Pāli texts, which is confirmed in important details by the ancient Sanskrit poets and dramatists,⁴ a contemporary of Bimbisāra and his son. It follows that Śiśunāga, according to the last-mentioned authorities, must be later than those kings. But we have seen above that the Purāṇas make Śiśunāga an ancestor of Bimbisāra and the progenitor of his family. This part of the Purāṇic

1 Āśvaghoṣa was a contemporary of Kanishka (C. 100 A. D.) (Winternitz, Ind. Lit. II, 257). On the other hand the Purāṇic chronicles pre-suppose Gupta rule in the Ganges Valley (DKA, 53). C. 320 A. D.

2 XI, 2.

3 Vāyu Purāṇa, 99, 314.

4 Indian culture, VI, 411.

account is not corroborated by independent external evidence.¹ The inclusion of Vārāṇasī and Vaiśālī within Śīśunāga's dominions² proves that he came after Bimbisāra and Ajātaśatru who were the first to establish Magadhan rule in those regions. The Mālālaṅkāravatthu, a Pali work of modern date, but following very closely the more ancient books, tells us that Śīśunāga had a royal residence at Vaiśālī which ultimately became his capital.³ "That monarch (Śīśunāga) not unmindful of his mother's origin⁴ re-established the city of Vesālī (Vaiśālī), and fixed in it the royal residence. From that time Rājagriha lost her rank of royal city which she never afterwards recovered. The last statement indicates that Śīśunāga came after the palmy days of Rājagriha, i.e., the period of Bimbisāra and Ajātaśatru. It may be argued that the Purāṇas make Girivraja, and not Vaiśālī, the abode of Śīśunāga (Vārāṇasyām sutaṁ sthāpya śrayiṣhyati Girivrajaṁ); and as Udāyin, son of Ajātaśatru was the first to transfer the capital from that stronghold to the newly founded city of Pāṭaliputra, Śīśunāga's residence in the older capital points to a date earlier than that of the founder of the more famous metropolis. But the fact that Kālāśoka, son and successor of Śīśunāga, is known to have ruled in Pāṭaliputra shows that he came after Udāyin,

1 We may go even further and characterise certain statements of the Purāṇic bards as self-contradictory. Thus (a) Prodyota is said to have been anointed when the Vitihotras had passed away, (b) Śīśunāga destroyed the prestige of the Pradyotas and became king, and yet (c) contemporaneously with these Śīśunāga kings 20 Vitihotras (and other lines) are said to have endured the same time.

ete sarve bhaviṣhyanti ekakālān mahīkṣitāḥ (DKA 24).

2 Dynasties of the Kali Age, 21; S. B. E., XI, p. xvi.

3 If the Dvātriṁśat-Puttalikā is to be believed, Vaiśālī continued to be graced by the presence of the king till the time of the Nandas.

4 Śīśunāga, according to the Mahāvamśaṭīkā (Turnour, Mahāvamśa, xxxvii), was the son of a Lichchavi rāja of Vaiśālī. He was conceived by a nagara-śobhinī and brought up by an officer of state.

the founder of that city. The further fact of removal of capital in his reign too—which must be regarded as a second transfer¹—shows that his predecessor had reverted to the older stronghold apparently as a place of refuge. The event alluded to in the words “śrayiṣhyati” Girivrajam need not necessarily imply that Girivraja continued to be the capital uninterruptedly till the days of Śiśunāga.

The origin of the Haryāṅka line, to which Bimbisāra belonged according to Aśvaghoṣa, is wrapped up in obscurity. There is no cogent reason why this dynastic designation should be connected with Haryāṅga of Champā mentioned in the *Harivaṁśa*² and the Purāṇas. Haryāṅka-kula may simply be an expression like “aulikara-lāñchhana ātma vaṁśa” of a Maudasor Inscription, pointing to the distinctive mark or emblem of the family.³ Bimbisāra was not the founder of the line. The Mahāvaṁśa states that he was anointed king by his own father when he was only 15 years old.⁴ He avenged a defeat of his father⁵ by the Aṅgas and launched Magadha into that career of conquest and aggrandisement which only ended when Aśoka sheathed his sword after the conquest of Kalinga.

1 SBE, XI, p. xvi.

2 31, 49; Vāyu, 99, 108; J. C. Ghosh in ABORI, 1938(xix), pp. i, 82.

3 Hari has the sense of ‘yellow’, ‘horse’, ‘lion’, ‘snake’, etc.

4 Geiger’s translation, p. 12. This disposes of the view of Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar (Carm. Lec. 1918) who makes Bimbisāra the founder of his dynasty and says that he was a general who carved out a kingdom for himself at the expense of the Vajjis.

5 Turnour, N. L. Dey and others mention Bhātiya or Bhaṭṭiya as the name of the father. The Tibetans, on the other hand, call him Mahāpadma. Turnour, Mahāvaṁśa, I. p. 10; J. A. S. B., 1872, i 298; 1914, 321; Essay on Guṇādhyā, p. 173. The Purāṇas name Hemajit, Kshemajit, Kshetrojā or Kshatraujā as the father of Bimbisāra. If the Purāṇic account is correct Bhātiya or Bhaṭṭiya may have been a secondary name or epithet comparable to the names ‘Seniya’ and ‘Kūṇiya’ of Bimbisāra and Ajātaśatru respectively. But it is not safe to rely on an uncorroborated statement of the Purāṇas, particularly when there is hardly any unanimity with regard to the form of the name.

The Vajji (Vṛjji) territory lay north of the Ganges and extended as far as the Nepāl hills. On the west the river Gaṇḍak possibly separated it from the Mallas and perhaps also the Kosalas. Eastwards, it may have approached the forests that skirted the river Kośi and the Mahānandā. It is said to have included eight confederate clans (aṭṭhakula), of whom the old Videhas, the Lichchhavis, the Jñātrikas and the Vṛjis proper were the most important. The identity of the remaining clans remains uncertain. It may, however, be noted that in a passage of the Sūtrakṛitāṅga, the Ugras, the Bhogas, the Aikshvākas and the Kauravas are associated with the Jñātris and the Lichchhavis as subjects of the same ruler and members of the same assembly.¹ The Āṅguttara Nikāya,² too, refers to the close connection of the Ugras with Vaiśālī, the capital of the Vṛjjan confederation.

The old territory of the Videhas had, as already stated in an earlier section, its capital at Mithilā which has been identified with Janakpur within the Nepāl border. The Rāmāyaṇa clearly distinguishes it from the region round Vaiśālī.³ But in Buddhist and Jaina texts the distinction is not always maintained and Videha is used in a wide sense to include the last-mentioned area.⁴

The Lichchhavi capital was definitely at Vaiśālī which is represented by modern Besarh (to the east of the Gaṇḍak) in the Muzaffarpur district of Bihār. It is

1 S. B. E., XLV, 339. Cf. Hoernle, Uvāsaga-dasāo, II, p. 138, fn. 304.

2 I. 26; III. 49; IV. 208.

3 Rām. I. 47-48.

4 The Āchārāṅga Sūtra (II. 15, § 17; S. B. E., XXII, Intro.) for instance places the Saṁniveśa of Kuṇḍagrāma near Vaiśālī in Videha. The mothers of Māhāvira and Ajātaśatru are called Videha-dattā and Vedeḥī (Vaidehī) respectively.

probably identical with the charming city called Viśālā in the epic.¹

Viśālān nagarīm ramyām divyām svargopamām tadā.

We learn from the introductory portion of the *Ekapaṇṇa Jātaka*² that a triple wall encompassed the town, each wall a league distant from the next, and there were three gates with watch-towers.

The Lichchhavi territory may have extended northwards as far as Nepāl where we find them in the seventh century A.D.

The Jñātrikas were the clan of Siddhārtha and his son Mahāvīra, the Jina. They had their seats at Kuṇḍapura or Kuṇḍagrāma and Kollāga, suburbs of Vaiśālī. In the Mahā-parinibbāna Suttanta,³ however, the abode of the "Nādikas" (identified by Jacobi with the Nātikas or Jñātrikas)⁴ is distinguished from Koṭigāma (Kuṇḍagrāma?). Though dwelling in suburban areas Mahāvīra and his fellow clansmen were known as "Vesālīe," i.e., inhabitants of Vaiśālī.⁵

The Vrijis proper are already mentioned by Paṇini.⁶ Kauṭilya⁷ distinguishes them from the 'Lichchhivikas'. Yuan Chwang⁸ too, draws a distinction between the Fu-li-chih (Vrijī) country and Pei-she-li (Vaiśālī). It seems that Vrijī was not only the name of the confederacy but also of one of its constituent clans. But the Vrijis, like the Lichchhavis, are often associated with the city of Vaiśālī (including its suburbs) which was not only the capital of the Lichchhavi clan, but

1 Rām. Ādi, 45. 10.

3 Ch. 2.

4 S. B. E. XXII, Intro.

2 No. 149.

5. Hoernle Uvāsaga-dasāo, II, p. 4 n.

6 IV. 2. 131.

7 Arthaśāstra, Mysore Edition, 1919, p. 378.

8 Watters, II, 81. Cf. also DPPN, II. 814; Gradual sayings, III. 62; IV. 10. According to Smith (Watters, II. 340) the Vrijī country is roughly equivalent to the northern part of the Darbhanga district and the adjacent Nepalese Tarāi.

also the metropolis of the entire confederacy.¹ A Buddhist tradition quoted by Rockhill² mentions the city proper as consisting of three districts. These districts were probably at one time the seats of three different clans. The remaining peoples of the confederacy viz. the Ugras, Bhogas, Kauravas, and Aikshvākas, resided in suburbs, and in villages or towns like Hatthigāma, Bhoganagara etc.³

We have seen that during the Brahmana period Videha (Mithilā) had a monarchical constitution. The *Rāmāyaṇa*⁴ and the *Purāṇas*⁵ state that Viśālā, too, was at first ruled by "kings." The founder of the Vaiśālīka dynasty is said to have been Viśālā, a son of Ikshvāku according to the Rāmāyaṇa, a descendant of Nabhāga the brother of Ikshvāku, according to the Purāṇas. Viśālā is said to have given his name to the city. After him came Hemachandra, Suchandra, Dhūmrāśva, Śrīñjaya, Sahadeva, Kuśāśva, Somadatta, Kākutstha and Sumati. We do not know how many of these Vaiśālīka "kings" (nṛīpas) can be accepted as historical and 1 Cf. Majjhima Nikāya, II, 101: The Book of the Kindred Sayings, I. (Samyutta Nikāya), by Mrs. Rhys Davids, p. 257.—"A certain brother of the Vajjian clan was once staying near Vesālī in a certain forest tract".

2 Life of Buddha, p. 62.

3 For the Ugras and Bhogas see Hoernle, Uvāsaga-dasāo, II, p. 139 (§ 210): Bṛih. Up. III. 8. 2; S. B. E., XLV, 7ln. In the Aṅguttara Nikāya, I. 26 (Nipāta I. 14. 6), the Ugras are associated with Vaiśālī (Ugga gahapati Vesātiko), and in IV. 212 with Hatthigāma. A city of Ugga is mentioned in the Dhammapadam commentary, Harvard Oriental Series, Vol. 30, 184. Hoernle refers (Uvāsaga-dasāo, II, App. III, 57) to a place called Bhoganagara, or 'City of the Bhogas'. The Mahā-parinibbāna Suttanta mentions Bhaṇḍgāma, Hatthigāma, Ambagāma, Jambugāma and Bhoganagara on the way from Vaisālī to Pāvā (Dīgha, II, 122-26). Cf. also Sutta Nipāta, 194. The association of a body of Kauravas with the Vajjian group of clans is interesting. Kuru Brāhmaṇas, e. g., Ushasti Chākṛāyāna had begun to settle in the capital of Videha long before the rise of Buddhism. For the Aikshvākas of Vaisālī, see Rām. I. 47, 11.

4 I. 47. 11. 17.

5 Vāyu, 86. 16-22; Vishṇu, IV. 1. 18.

as having actually ruled as monarchs in North Bihār. A king named Sahadeva Sārñjaya is mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.¹ In the *Āitareya Brāhmaṇa*² he is mentioned with Somaka Sāhadevya. None of these kings, however, are connected with Vaiśālī in the Vedic literature. The Mahābhārata speaks of a Sahadeva (son of Sṛiñjaya) as sacrificing on the Jumna,³ and not on the Gaṇḍak. The presence of Ikshvākuids as a constituent element of the Vrijī confederacy, which had its metropolis at Vaiśālī, is, however, as already stated, suggested by the Śūtrakṛitāṅga.

✓ The Vrijian confederation must have been organised after the decline and fall of the royal houses of Videha. Political evolution in India thus resembles closely the developments in the ancient cities of Greece where also the monarchies of the Heroic Age were succeeded by aristocratic republics. The probable causes of the transformation in Greece are thus given by Bury : "In some cases gross misrule may have led to the violent deposition of a king ; in other cases if the succession to the sceptre devolved upon an infant or a paltry man, the nobles may have taken it upon themselves to abolish the monarchy. In some cases, the rights of the king might be strictly limited in consequence of his seeking to usurp undue authority ; and the imposition of limitations might go on until the office of the king although maintained in name, became in fact a mere magistracy in a state wherein the real power had passed elsewhere. Of the survival of monarchy in a limited form we have an example at Sparta ; of its survival as a mere magistracy, in the Archon Basileus at Athens."

1 II. 4. 4. 3-4.

2 VII. 34. 9.

3 Mbh. III, 90. 7, with commentary.

The cause of the transition from monarchy to republic in Mithilā has already been stated. Regarding the change at Viśālā we know nothing.

Several scholars have sought to prove that the Lichchhavis, the most famous clan of the Vrijian confederacy (Vajjirattṭhavāsi hi paśāttṭhā)¹, were of foreign origin. According to Smith they had Tibetan affinities. He infers this from their judicial system and the disposal of their dead, viz., exposing them to be devoured by wild beasts.² Pandit S. C. Vidyābhūṣhaṇa held that the name Lichchhavi (Nichchhivi of Mann) was derived from the Persian city of Nisibis.³ The inadequacy of the evidence on which these surmises rest has been demonstrated by several writers.⁴ Early Indian tradition is unanimous in representing the Lichchhavis as Kshatriyas. Thus we read in the Mahā-parinibbān Suttanta: "And the Lichchhavis of Vesālī heard the news that the Exalted One had died at Kusināra. And the Lichchhavis of Vesālī sent a messenger to the Mallas, saying: 'The

1. DPPN, II, 814.

2. Ind. Ant., 1903, p. 233 ff. In the case of Tibet we have only three courts as against the seven tribunals of the Lichchhavis (viz. those of the Vinichchaya mahāmattas) (inquiring magistrates), the Vohārikas (jurist-judges), Suttadharas (masters of the sacred code), the Aṭṭhakulakas, (the eight clans, possibly a federal court), the Senāpati (general), the Uparāja (Viceroy or Vice-Consul), and the rājā (the ruling chief) who made their decisions according to the paveṇi potthaka (Book of Precedents). Further, we know very little about the relative antiquity of the Tibetan procedure as explained by S. C. Das which might very well have been suggested by the system expounded in the Aṭṭhakathā. This fact should be remembered in instituting a comparison between Tibetan and Vajjian practices. Regarding the disposal of the dead attention may be invited to the ancient practices of the "Indus" people (Vats, Excavations at Harappā, I. ch. VI.) and the epic story in Mbh. IV.

3. Ind. Ant., 1902, 143, ff; 1908, p. 78. There is very little in Vidyābhūṣhaṇa's surmise except a fancied resemblance between the names Nichchhivi and Nisibis. Inscriptions of the Achaemenids are silent about any Persian settlement in Eastern India in the sixth or fifth century B. C. The Lichchhavi people were more interested in Yaksha Chaitiyas and the teaching of Mahāvīra and the Buddha than in the deities and prophets of Irān.

4. Modern Review, 1919, p. 50; Law, Some Kṣatriya Tribes, 26ff.

Exalted. One was a Kshatriya and so are we. We are worthy to receive a portion of the relics of the Exalted One." In the Jaina Kalpa Sūtra Trisālā, sister to Chetaka of Vesālī, is styled Kshatriyānī.¹

Manu concurs in the view that the Lichchhavis are Rājanyas or Kshatriyas.²

Jhallo Mallaścha rājanyāṇi vrātyān Nichchhivireva cha Naṭaścha Karaṇaśchaiva Khaso Drāviḷa eva cha.

It may be argued that the Lichchhavis, though originally non-Aryans or foreigners, ranked as Kshatriyas when they were admitted into the fold of Brāhmaṇism like the Drāviḍians referred to in Manu's śloka and the Gurjara-Pratihāras of mediæval times. But unlike the Pratihāras and Draviḍas, the Lichchhavis never appear to be very friendly towards the orthodox form of Hinduism. On the contrary, they were always to be found among the foremost champions of non-Brāhmaṇical creeds like Jainism and Buddhism. Manu testifies to their heterodoxy when he brands them as the children of the Vrātya Rājanyas. The great mediæval Rājput families (though sometimes descended from foreign immigrants) were never spoken of in these terms. On the contrary, they were supplied with pedigrees going back to Rāma, Lakshmaṇa, Yadu, Arjuna and others. A body of foreigners who did not observe ceremonies enjoined in the Brahmanic code, could hardly have been accepted as Kshatriyas. The obvious conclusion seems to be that the Lichchhavis were indigenous Kshatriyas who were degraded to the position of Vrātya when they neglected Brāhmaṇic rites and showed a predilection for heretical doctrines. The Rāmāyaṇa, as we have seen, represents the Vaiśālīka rulers as Ikshvākuids. The Pāli commentary *Paramatthajotikā*¹ traces their origin to Benares. The comparison of the Lichchhavis to the "Tāvatisa gods" hardly accords with the theory that represents them as kinsmen of snub-nosed peoples who lived beyond the Himalayas.² "Let those of the brethren" we are told by a personage of great eminence "who have never seen the Tāvatisa gods, gaze upon this company of the Lichchhavis, behold this company of the Lichchhavis, compare this company of the Lichchhavis—even as a company of Tāvatisa gods."

1 S. B. E., XXII, pp. xii, 227.

2 X. 22.

The date of the foundation of the Lichchhavi power is not known. But it is certain that the authority of the clan was well established in the days of Mahāvīra and Gautama, in the latter half of the sixth century B.C., and was already on the wane in the next century.

Buddhist tradition has preserved the names of eminent Lichchhavis like prince Abhaya, Otthaddha (Mahāli), generals Siha and Ajita, Dummukha and Sunakkhatta.³ In the introductory portion of the *Ekapanna*⁴ and *Chulla Kālīnga*⁵ Jātakas it is stated that the Lichchhavis of the ruling family numbered 7,707.⁶ There was a like number of vice-roys, generals, and treasurers. Too much importance should not be attached to these figures which are merely traditional and may simply point to the large number of 1 Vol. I, pp. 158-65.

2 S. B. E., XI, p. 32; DPPN, II, 779.

3 Anguttara Nikāya, Nipāta III, 74 (P. T. S., Part I, p. 220 f.); Mahāli Sutta, Dialogues of the Buddha, Part I, p. 198, Part III, p. 17. Mahāvagga, S. B. E., XVII, p. 108; Majjhima N., I, 234; 68; II, 252; The Book of the Kindred Sayings, I, 295. For a detailed account of the Lichchhavis, see now Law, Some Kṣatriya Tribes of Ancient India.

4 149.

5 301.

6 Another tradition puts the number at 68,000 (DPPN, II, 781 n). The Dhammapada Commentary (Harvard Oriental Series, 30, 168) informs us that the rājās ruled by turns.

*mahallakas*¹ or elders in the clan. The real power of administration especially in regard to foreign affairs seems to have been vested in a smaller body of nine Gaṇarājās or archons. The Jaina *Kalpasūtra*² refers to the nine Lichchhavis as having formed a league with nine Mallakis and eighteen archons of Kāśi-Kośala.³ We learn from the Nirayāvalā Sūtra that an important leader of this alliance was Cheṭaka whose sister Trisālā or Videha-dattā was the mother of Mahāvīra, and whose daughter Chellanā or Vaidehī was, according to Jaina writers, the mother of Kūṇika-Ajātasatru.

The league was aimed against Magadha. Tradition says that even in the time of the famous Bimbisāra the Vaiśālīans were audacious enough to invade their

1 Cf. the Vajji Mahallakā referred to in Digha, II. 74; Āṅguttara, IV. 19.

2 § 128.

3 Nava Mallāi, (Mallatī) nava Lechchhai (Lechchhatī) Kāśi Kosalagā, (variant Kosalakā) aṭṭhārasa vi gaṇarāyāno.

The Kalpasūtra of Bhadrabāhu, ed. by Hermann Jacobi, 1879, Jinacarita p. 65 (§ 128); Nirayāvalīyā Suttam (Dr. S. Warren), 1879, § 26; SBE, XXII, 1884, p. 266.

Dr. Barua is inclined to identify the nine Lichchhavis and the nine Mallakis with the eighteen gaṇarājās who belonged to Kāśi and Kośala. He refers in this connection to the Kalpadrūmakalikāvyaṅkhyā which represents the Mallakis as adhipas (or overlords) of Kāśi-deśa, and the "Lechchhakis" as adhipas of Kośala-deśa, and further describes them as sāmantas or vassals of Cheṭaka, maternal uncle of Mahāvīra (Indian Culture, Vol. II, p. 810). It is news to students of Indian history that in the days of Mahāvīra the kingdoms of Kāśi and Kośala acknowledged the supremacy of the Mallas and Lichchhavis respectively, and formed part of an empire over which Cheṭaka presided. Even Dr. Barua hesitates to accept this interpretation of the late Jaina commentator in its entirety and suggests that the nine Mallas and the nine Lichchhavis ... derived their family prestige from their original connection with the dynasty of Kāśi and Kośala. The Paramattha-jotikā (Khuddaka-pāṭha commentary), however, connects the Lichchhavis not with the dynasty of Kośala but with that of Kāśi. The divergent testimony of these late commentators shows that they can hardly be regarded as preserving genuine tradition. There is no suggestion in any early Buddhist or Jaina text that either the Lichchhavis or the Mallas actually ruled over any grāma or nigama in Kāśi-Kośala (see Indian Culture, II, 808). The gaṇarājās of Kāśi-Kośala apparently refer to the Kālāmas, Śākyaas and other clans in the Kosalan empire.

neighbours across the Ganges.¹ In the reign of Ajātaśatru the tables were turned, and the great confederacy of Vaisālī was utterly destroyed.²

The Malla territory, ancient Mallo-rattha, the Malla-rāshtra of the Mahābhārata,³ was split up into two main parts which had for their capitals the cities of Kusāvati or Kusinārā and Pāvā.⁴ The river Kakutthā, the Cacouthes of the classical writers, identified with the modern Kuku, probably formed the dividing line.⁵ The division of the people is also known to the great epic⁶ which draws a distinction between the Mallas proper and the Dakṣiṇa or Southern Mallas. There is no agreement among scholars regarding the exact site of Kusinārā. In the Mahā-parinibbāna Suttanta it is stated that the Sāla Grove of the Mallas, the Upavattana (outskirt or suburb)⁷ of Kusinārā, lay near the river Hiranyavati. Smith identifies the stream with the Gaṇḍak and says that Kuśinagara (Kusinārā) was situated in Nepāl, beyond the first range of hills, at the junction of the Little, or Eastern Rāptī with the Gaṇḍak.⁸ He, however, admits that the discovery in the large stūpa behind the Nirvāṇa temple near Kasiā on the Choṭa Gaṇḍak, in the east of the Gorakhpur district, of an inscribed copper-plate bearing the words “[parini]r vāṇa-chaitye tāmrapaṭṭa iti,”⁹ supports the old theory, propounded by Wilson and accepted by Cunningham, that the remains near Kasiā represent Kuśi-nagara.

1 Si-yu-ki, Bk. IX.

2 DPPN, II. 781-82.

3 VI. 9. 34.

4 Kuśa Jātaka, No. 531; Mahā-parinibbāna Suttanta, Dialogues of the Buddha, Part II, pp. 136 ff., 161-62.

5 AGI (1924), 714.

6 Mbh. II. 30. 3 and 12.

7 JRAS, 1906, 659; Digha, II. 137.

8 EHI, third ed., p. 159 n.

9 ASI, A.R., 1911-12, 17 ff.; JRAS, 1913, 152. Kasiā is a village that lies about 35 miles to the east of Gorakhpur (AGI, 493).

Pāvā was identified by Cunningham¹ with the village named Padaraona, 12 miles to the N.N.E. of Kasiā, and separated from it by the Bādhi Nala (identified with the ancient Kakutthā). Carlleyle, however, proposes to identify Pāvā with Fāzilpur, 10 miles S.E. of Kasiā and separated from it by the Kuku.² In the Saṅgīti Suttanta we have a reference to the Mote Hall of the Pāvā Mallas named Ubbhaṭaka.³

The Mallas together with the Licchhavis are classed by Manu as Vrātya Kshatriyas. They, too, like their eastern neighbours were among ardent champions of Buddhism.

Like Videha, Malla had at first a monarchical constitution. The Kusa Jātaka mentions a Malla king named Okkāka (Ikshvāku). The name probably suggests that like the Śākya⁴ the Malla princes also claimed to belong to the Ikshvāku family. And this is confirmed by the fact that in the Mahā-parinibbāna Suttanta they are sometimes called Vāsetṭhas, i.e., "belonging to the Vasishṭha gotra."⁵ The Mahāsudassana Sutta mentions another king named Mahāsudassana.⁶ These rulers, Okkāka and Mahāsudassana, may or may not have been historical individuals. But the tales that cluster round their names imply that Malla-raṭṭha was at first ruled by kings. This conclusion is confirmed by the evidence of the *Mahābhārata*⁷ which refers to an overlord (adhipa) of the Mallas. During the monarchical period the metropolis was a great city and was styled

1 AGI, 1924, 498.

2 Kukulthā; AGI, 1924, 714.

3 DPPN, II, 194.

4 Cf. Dialogues, Part I, pp. 114-15.

5 Dialogues of the Buddha, Part II, pp. 162, 179, 181. Vasishṭha figures in the Rāmāyaṇa as the purohita of the Ikshvākuids.

6 S. B. E., XI, p. 248.

7 II. 30. 3.

Kusāvati. Other important cities were Anupiyā and Uruvelakappa.¹

Before Bimbisāra's time the monarchy had been replaced by republics² and the chief metropolis had sunk to the level of a "little wattle and daub town," a "branch township" surrounded by jungles.³ It was then styled Kusinārā.

The relations of the Mallas with the Lichchhavis were sometimes hostile and on other occasions friendly. The introductory story of the *Bhaddasāla Jātaka*⁴ contains an account of a conflict between Bāndhula the Mallian, Commander-in-chief of the king of Kosala, and 500 elders of the Lichchhavis. The Jaina Kalpasūtra, however, refers to "nine Mallakis" as having combined with the Lichchhavis, and the seigniors of Kāsi-Kosala against Kūnika-Ajātaśatru who, like Philip of Macedon, was trying to absorb the territories of his republican neighbours. The Malla territory was finally annexed to Magadha. It certainly formed a part of the Maurya Empire in the third century B.C.

Chedi was one of the countries encircling the Kurus, paritah Kurūn, and lay near the Jumna.⁵ It was closely connected with the Matsyas beyond the Chambal, the Kāśis of Benares, and the Kārushas in the valley of the Śona,⁶ and 1 Law, Some Kṣatriya Tribes, p. 149. Dialogues, Pt. III (1921), 7; Gradual Sayings, IV. 293. Anupiyā stood on the banks of the river Anomā which lay thirty leagues to the east of Kapilavastu. It was here that the future Buddha cut off his hair and put on the robes of the ascetics. (DPPN, I, 81, 102).

2 Cf. S. B. E., XI, p. 102; Kauṭilya's Arthaśāstra, 1919, p. 378.

3 Kuṇḍa-nagaraka, ujjāṅgala-nagaraka, sākhā-nagaraka.

4 No. 465.

5 Pargiter, JASB, 1895, 253 ff; Mbh, I. 63. 2-58; IV. i. 11.

Santi ramyā janapadā bahvannāḥ paritah Kurūn

Pañchālās-Chedi-Matsyāscha

Śūrasenāḥ Patāchcharāḥ

Daśārnā Navarāshṭrāscha

Mallāḥ Sālvā Yugandharāḥ.

6 Mbh, V. 22, 25; 74. 16; 198. 2; VI. 47. 4; 54. 8.

is distinguished from the Daśārṇas who lived on the banks of the Dhasan.¹ In ancient times it corresponded roughly to the eastern part of modern Bundelkhand and some adjoining tracts.² In the mediæval period, however, the southern frontiers of Chedi extended to the banks of the Narmadā (Mekala-sutā):—

*Nadinām Mekala-sutā nṛipānām Raṇavigrahaḥ kavīnām cha Surānandaś Chedi-maṇḍala-maṇḍanam*³

We learn from the *Chetiya Jātaka*⁴ that the metropolis was Soththivatī-nagara. The Mahābhārata gives its Sanskrit name Śuktimatī, or Śukti-sāhvaya.⁵ The Great Epic mentions also a river called Śuktimatī which flowed by the capital of Rājā Uparichara of the Chedi-vishaya (district).⁶ Pargiter identifies the stream with the Ken, and places the city of Śuktimatī in the neighbourhood of Banda.⁷ Other towns of note were Sahajāti⁸, and Tripurī,⁹ the mediæval capital of the Janapada.

1 Princesses of Daśārṇa were given in marriage to Bhima of Vidarbha and Virabāhu or Subāhu of Chedi (Mbh. III. 69. 14-15).

2 Pargiter (JASB, 1895, 253) places Chedi along the south bank of the Jumna from the Chambal on the north-west as far as Karwī on the south-east; its limits southwards may have been, according to him, the plateau of Malwa and the hills of Bundelkhand.

3 Attributed to Rājasekhara in Jahlapa's Sūktimuktāvalī, Ep. Ind. IV. 280. Konow, Karṇāmañjarī, p. 182.

4 No. 422.

5 III. 20. 50; XIV. 83. 2; N. L. Dey, Ind. Ant., 1919, p. vii of Geographical Dictionary.

6 I. 63. 35.

7 JASB, 1895, 255, Mārkaṇḍeya P., p. 359.

8 Aṅguttara, III. 355 (P.T.S.). Āyasmā Mahāchundo Chetisu viharati Sahajātiyaṁ. Sahajāti lay on the trade route along the river Ganges (Buddhist India, p. 103). Cf. the legend on a seal-die of terra-cotta found at Bhita, 10 miles from Allahabad (Arch. Expl. Ind., 1909-10, by Marshall, JRAS, 1911, 128 f.)—Sahijitiye nigamaśa, in letters of about the third century B.C. see also JBORS, XIX, 1933, 293.

9 Tripurī stood close to the Nerbudda not far from modern Jubbulpore. In the Haimakosha it is called Chedinagari (JASB, 1895, 249). The city finds mention in the Mbh. III. 253. 10, along with Kosalā, and its people, the Traipuras, are referred in VI. 87. 9, together with the Mekalas and the Kurubindas.

The Chedi people are mentioned as early as the Rig-Veda. Their king Kasu Chaidya is praised in a Dānastuti (praise of gift) occurring at the end of one hymn.¹ Rapson proposes to identify him with 'Vasu' of the Epics.

The Chetiya Jātaka gives a legendary genealogy of Chaidya kings, taking their descent from Mahāsammata and Māndhātā. Upachara, a King of the line, had five sons who are said to have founded the cities of Hatthipura, Assapura, Sihapura, Uttarapañchala and Daddarapura.² This monarch is probably identical with Uparichara Vasu, the Paurava king of Chedi, mentioned in the Mahābhārata,³ whose five sons also founded five lines of kings.⁴ But epic tradition associates the scions of Vasu's family with the cities of Kauśāmbī, Mahodaya (Kanauj) and Girivraja.⁵

The Mahābhārata speaks also of other Chedi kings like Damaghosha, his son Śiśupāla Sunītha, and his sons Dhṛiṣṭaketu and Śarabha who reigned about the time of the Bharata war. But the Jātaka and epic accounts of the early kings of Chedi are essentially legendary and, in the absence of more reliable evidence, cannot be accepted as genuine history.

We learn from the *Vedabbha Jātaka*⁶ that the road from Kāśī to Chedi was unsafe being infested with roving bands of marauders.

1 VIII. 5. 37-39.

2 Hatthipura may be identified with Hatthinipura or Hāstinapura in the Kuru country, Assapura with the city of that name in Aṅga, and Sihapura with the town of Lāla from which Vijaya went to Ceylon. There was another Sirmhapura in the Western Punjab (Watters I. 248). Uttarapañchālā is Ahichchhatra in Rohilkhand. Daddarapura was apparently in the Himalayan region. (DPPN, I. 1054).

3 I. 63. 1-2.

4 I. 63. 30.

5 Rāmāyaṇa, I. 32. 6-9; Mahābhārata, I. 63. 30-33.

6 No. 48.

Vamśa or Vatsa was the country south of the Ganges¹ of which Kauśāmbī, modern Kosam, on the Jumna, near Allahabad, was the capital.² Oldenberg³ is inclined to identify the Vamśas with the Vatsas of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa. But the conjecture lacks proof. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa mentions a teacher named Proti Kauśāmbeya⁴ whom Harisvāmin, the commentator, considers to be a native of the town of Kauśāmbī.⁵ Epic tradition attributes the foundation of this famous city to a Chedi prince.⁶ The origin of the Vatsa people, however, is traced to a king of Kāśī.⁷ It is stated in the Purāṇas that when the city of Hāstinapura was washed away by the Ganges, Nichakshu, the great-great-grandson of Janamejaya, abandoned it, and removed his residence to Kauśāmbī. We have already seen that the Purāṇic tradition about the Bhārata or Kuru origin of the later kings of Kauśāmbī is confirmed by two plays attributed to Bhāsa. Udayana, king of Kauśāmbī, is described in the Svapnavāsavadatta and the *Pratijñā Yaugandharāyaṇa*⁸ as a scion of the Bhārata-kula.

The Purāṇas give a list of Nichakshu's successors down to Kshemaka, and cite the following genealogical verse :—

1 Rām. II. 52. 101.

2 Nariman, Jackson and Ogden, Priyadarśikā, lxxvi; the Bṛhat Kathā-Śloka Saṁgraha (4. 14, cf. 8, 21) explicitly states that Kauśāmbī was on the Kālindī or Jumna. Malalasekera, DPPN, 694. The reference in one text to the position of the city on the Ganges is possibly due to its proximity to the confluence of the Ganges and the Jumna in ancient times, or to a copyist's error.

3 Buddha, 393 n.

4 Śat. Br., XII. 2, 2. 13.

5 See p. 70. ante.

6 Rām., I. 32. 3-6; Mbh. I. 63. 31.

7 Harivaṁśa, 29. 73; Mbh., XII. 49. 80.

8 Svapna, ed. Gaṇapati Śāstrī, p. 140; Pratijñā, pp. 61, 121.

Brahma-kshatrasya¹ yo yonir vanīśo devarshi-satkrītaḥ Kshemakam prūpya rājānām sanīsthām prūpsyati vai kalan.

“The family honoured by gods and sages (or divine sages), from which sprang Brāhmaṇas and Kshatriyas (or those who combined the Brāhmaṇa and Kshatriya status) will verily, on reaching Kshemaka, come to an end (or be interrupted) in the Kali Age.”

The criticism that has been offered in this work in regard to the Ikshvāku and Magadhan lists of kings applies with equal force to the Paurava-Bhārata line. Here, too, we find mention of princes (e.g., Arjuna and Abhimanyu) who can hardly be regarded as crowned nripas or monarchs. It is also by no means improbable that, as in the case of the Ikshvākus and the royal houses of Magadha and Avanti, contemporaries have been represented as successors and collaterals described as lineal descendants. There is, moreover, no unanimity in regard to the names of even the immediate predecessors of Udayana, the most famous among the later kings of the family. These facts should be remembered in determining the chronology and order of succession of the Bhārata dynasty of Kauśāmbī. The earliest king of the line about whom we know anything definite is Śatānika II of the Purāṇic lists. His father's name was Vasudāna according to the Purāṇas, and Sahasrānika according to ‘Bhāsa.’ Śatānika himself was also styled Parantapa.² He married a princess of Videha as his son is called

1 Cf. Brahma-Kshatriyāṇām kula of the inscriptions of the Sena kings who claimed descent from the Lunar Race to which the Bharatas, including, the Kurus belonged.

2 Buddhist India, p. 3.

Vaidehiputra.¹ He is said to have attacked Champā, the capital of Aṅga, during the reign of Dadhivāhana.² His son and successor was the famous Udayana, the contemporary of the Buddha and of Pradyota of Avanti and therefore of Bimbisāra and Ajātaśatru of Magadha.

The Bhagga (Bhargha) state of Suṃsumāragiri, 'Crocodile Hill', was a dependency of Vatsa.³ The *Mahābhārata*⁴ and the *Harivaṃśa*⁵ testify to the close connection of these two territories and their proximity to the principality of a Nishāda chieftain, while the Apadāna seems to associate Bhargha with Kārusha.⁶ The evidence points to the location of Suṃsumāragiri between the Jumna and the lower valley of the Śona.

The Kuru realm was according to the *Mahā-Sutasoma Jātaka*⁷ three hundred leagues in extent. The reigning dynasty according to the Pali texts belonged to the Yuddhiṭṭhila gotta, i. e., the family of Yudhisṭhira.⁸ The capital was Indapatta or Indapattana, i. e., Indraprastha or Indrapat near modern Delhi. It extended over seven leagues.⁹ We hear also of another city called Hatthinipura,¹⁰ doubtless, the Hāstinapura of the epic, and a number of nigamas or smaller towns and villages besides

1 Svapna-vāsavadatta. Act VI. p. 129.

2 JASB, 1914, p. 321.

3 Jātaka, No. 353 ; Carmichael Lec., 1918, p. 63.

4 II. 30. 10-11.

Vatsabhumīṇcha Kaunteyo vijigye balavān balāt

Bhargāṇāmadhipaṇchaiva Nishādādhipatiṃ tathā.

"The mighty son of Kunti (i. e. Bhīmasena) conquered by force the Vatsa country and the lord of the Bhargas and then the chieftain of the Nishādas."

5 29. 73. Pratardānāśyā putrau dvau

Vatsa-Bhargau babhūvātuh

"Pratardana had two sons, Vatsa and Bhargha."

6 DPPN, II. 345

7 No. 537.

8 Dhūmakāri Jātaka, No. 413 ; Dasa Brāhmaṇa Jātaka, No. 495.

9 Jātaka Nos. 537, 545.

10 The Buddhist Conception of Spirits ; DPPN, II. 1319.

the capital, such as Thullakoṭṭhita, Kammāssadamma, Kuṇḍi and Vāraṇāvata.¹

The Jātakas mention the Kuru kings and princēs styled Dhanañjaya Koravya,² Koravya,³ and Sutasoma.⁴ We cannot, however, vouch for their historical existence in the absence of further evidence.

The Jaina Uttarādhyayana Sūtra mentions a king named Ishukāra ruling at the town called Ishukāra in the Kuru country.⁵ It seems probable that after the removal of the elder branch of the royal family to Kauśāmbī and the decline of the Ābhipratāriṇas, the Kuru realm was parcelled out into small states of which Indapatta and Ishukāra were apparently the most important. "Kings" are mentioned as late as the time of the Buddha when one of them paid a visit to Raṭṭhapāla, son of a Kuru magnate, who had become a disciple of the Śākya Sage.⁶ Later on, the little principalities gave place to a Saṅgha or republican confederation.⁷

Pañchāla, as already stated, comprised Rohilkhand and a part of the Central Doāb. The Mahābhārata, the Jātakas and the *Divyāvadāna*⁸ refer to the division of this country into two parts, viz. Uttara or Northern Pañchāla and Dakṣiṇa or Southern Pañchāla. The Bhāgirathi (Ganges) formed the dividing line.⁹ According to the

1 The epic (Mbh V. 31. 19 ; 72, 15 etc.) has a reference to four villages, viz., Avisthala, Vṛikasthala, Mākandī, Vāraṇāvata.

2 Kurudhamma Jātaka, No. 276 ; Dhūmakāri Jātaka, No. 413 ; Sambhava Jātaka, No. 515 ; Vidhura Paṇḍita Jātaka, No. 545. Dhanañjaya is, as is well-known, a name of Arjuna.

3 Dasa Brāhmaṇa Jātaka, No. 495 ; Mahā-Sutasoma Jātaka, No. 537.

4 Mahā-Sutasoma Jātaka. Cf. the Mahābhārata, I. 95. 75 where Sutasoma appears as the name of a son of Bhīma.

5 S. B. E., XLV. 62.

6 DPPN, II. 706 f.

7 Arthaśāstra, 1919, 378.

8 P. 435.

9 Mbh., I. 138. 70. For divisions in Vedic times see 70 f. ante.

Great Epic, Northern Pañchāla had its capital at Ahichchhatra or Chhatravatī, the modern Rāmnapur near Aonlā in the Bareilly District, while Southern Pañchāla had its capital at Kāmpilya, and stretched from the Ganges to the Chambal.¹ A great struggle raged in ancient times between the Kurus and the Pañchālas for the possession of Northern (Uttara) Pañchāla. Sometimes Uttara Pañchāla was included in Kururāṭṭha (-rāshṭra)² and had its capital at Hāstinapura,³ at other times it formed a part of Kampilla-rāṭṭha (Kāmpilya-rāshṭra).⁴ Sometimes kings of Kāmpilya-rāshṭra held court at Uttara Pañchāla-nagara, at other times kings of Uttara Pañchāla-rāshṭra held court at Kāmpilya.⁵

The history of Pañchāla from the death of Pravāhaṇa Jaivala or Jaivali to the time of Bimbisāra of Magadha is obscure. The only king who may perhaps be referred to this period is Durmukha (Dummukha), the contemporary of Nimi,⁶ who is probably to be identified with the penultimate sovereign of Mithilā.⁷ In the Kumbhākāra Jātaka it is stated that Durmukha's kingdom was styled Uttara Pañchāla-rāṭṭha (-rāshṭrā); his capital was not Ahichchhatra but Kampilla (Kāmpilya)-nagara. He is represented as a contemporary of Karaṇḍu, king of Kālīṅga, Naggaji (Nagnajit), king of Gandhāra, and Nimi, king of Videha. The *Aitareya Brahmana*⁸ credits him with extensive conquests and names Bṛihaduktha as his priest :—

1 Mbh., I. 138. 73-74.

2 Somanassa Jātaka, No. 505; Mahābhārata, I. 138.

3 Divyāvadāna, p. 435.

4 Brahmadatta Jātaka, No. 323; Jayaddisa Jātaka, No. 513 and Gaṇḍatindu Jātaka, No. 520.

5 Kumbhākāra Jātaka, No. 408.

6 Jātaka, No. 408.

7 Jātaka, No. 541.

8 VIII. 23.

"Etam ha vā Aindraṁ Mahābhishekaṁ Bṛihaduktha Rishir Durmukhāya Pañchālāya provācha tasmādu Durmukhaḥ Pañchālo Rājā saṁ vidyayā samantam sarvataḥ prithivīm jayan pariyāya."

"This great anointing of Indra Bṛihaduktha, the seer, proclaimed to Durmukha, the Pañchāla. Therefore, Durmukha Pañchāla, being a king, by this knowledge, went round the earth completely, conquering on every side."¹

A great Pañchāla king named Chulani Brahmadata is mentioned in the Mahā-Ummagga Jātaka,² the Uttarādhyayana Sūtra,³ the *Svapna-vāsavadatta*⁴ and the Rāmāyaṇa.⁵ In the last-mentioned work he is said to have married the daughters (kanyāḥ) of Kuśanābha who were made hump-backed (kubja) by the Wind-god. In the Jātaka, Kevatta, the minister of Brahmadata, is said to have formed a plan for making Chulani chief king of all India, and the king himself is represented as having laid siege to Mithilā. In the Uttarādhyayana Brahmadata is styled a universal monarch. The story of this king is, however, essentially legendary, and little reliance can be placed on it. The Rāmāyaṇic legend regarding the king is only important as showing the connection of the early Pañchālas with the foundation of the famous city of Kanyākubja (Kanauj) whose name (city of the hump-backed maiden) is accounted for by the curse to which the story refers.⁶

1 Keith, R̥g.-Veda Brāhmaṇas, Harvard Oriental Series, Vol. 25.

2 546.

3 S.B.E., XLV. 57-61.

4 Act V.

5 I. 32.

6 Cf. Watters, Yuan Chwang, I. 341-42. The point seems to be missed by Ratilal Mehta, Pre-Buddhist India, 43 n. The name Kanyākubja or Kānyakubja is already met with in the Mahābhārata I. 175. 3 ; V. 119. 4. Kānyakubji occurs in the Mahābhāṣya IV. 1. 2. (233), along with Āhichchatri. Kāṇakujja appears in Pāli texts (DPPN. I. 498).

The Uttar-ādhyayana Sūtra mentions a king of Kāmpilya named Sañjaya who gave up his kingly power and adopted the faith of the Jinas.¹ We do not know what happened after Sañjaya renounced his throne. But there is reason to believe that the Pañchālas, like the Videhas, Mallas and Kurus, established a Saṅgha form of government of the Rāja-śabd-opajīvin type.²

Matsya was the extensive territory between the hills near the Chambal and the forests that skirted the Sarasvatī of which the centre was Virāṭa-nagara or Bairāt in the modern Jaipur State. The early history of the kingdom has already been related. Its vicissitudes during the period which immediately preceded the reign of Bimbisāra of Magadha are not known.³ It is not included by the Kautilīya Arthasāstra among those states which had a Saṅgha or non-monarchical form of government. The probability is that the monarchical constitution endured till the loss of its independence. It was probably at one time annexed to the neighbouring kingdom of Chedi. The *Mahābhārata*⁴ refers to a king named Sahaja who reigned over the Chedis as well as the Matsyas. It was finally absorbed into the Magadhan Empire. Some of the most famous edicts of Aśoka have been found at Bairāt.

A family of Matsyas settled in the Vizagapatam region in mediæval times.⁵ We are told that Jayatsena, the lord of Utkala, gave to Satyamārtanda of the Matsya family in marriage his daughter Prabhāvatī, and appointed him to

1 S.B.E., XLV. 80-82.

2 Arthasāstra, 1919, p. 378. The Elders of this type of corporations or confederations took the title of Rājā. One of these rājās was apparently the maternal grandfather of Viśākha Pañchālīputra, a disciple of the Buddha (DPPN, II. 108).

3 66 ff ante.

4 V. 74. 16; cf. VI. 47, 67; 52. 9.

5 Dibbida plates, Ep. Ind., V. 108.

rule over the Oddavādi country. After twenty-three generations came Arjuna who ruled in 1269 A.D.

The Śūrasena country had its capital at Mathurā which, like Kauśāmbi, stood on the Jumna. Neither the country nor its metropolis finds any mention in the Vedic literature. But Greek writers refer to the Sourasenoi and their cities Methora (Mathurā) and Cleisobora. Buddhist theologians make complaint about the absence of amenities in Mathurā. They were apparently not much interested in its kettledrums,¹ or in the śāṭakas (garments) and kārshāpanas (coins) about which Patañjali speaks in the Mahābhāṣya.² A highroad connected the city with a place called Verañjā which was linked up with Śrāvastī and the caravan route that passed from Taxila to Benares through Soreyya, Sañkassa (Sāñkāśya), Kaṇṇakujja (Kanyākubja or Kanauj), and Payāga-Patiṭṭhāna (Allahabad).³

In the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas the ruling family of Mathurā is styled the Yadu or Yādava family. The Yādavas were divided into various septs, namely, the Vitihotras, Sātvatas, etc.⁴ The Sātvatas were subdivided into several branches, e.g., the Daivāvṛidhas, Andhakas, Mahā-bhojas and Vṛishṇis.⁵

Yadu and his tribe are repeatedly mentioned in the Ṛig-Veda. He is closely associated with Turvaśa and, in one place, Druhyu, Anu and Pūru.⁶ This association is also implied by the epic and Purāṇic legends which state that Yadu and Turvaśu were the sons of the same parents, and Druhyu, Anu and Pūru were their step-brothers.

1 Gradual Sayings, II. 78 ; III. 188.

2 I. 2. 48 (Kielhorn I. 19).

3 Gradual Sayings, II. p. 66 ; DPPN. II. 438, 930, 1311.

4 Matsya, 43-44 ; Vāyu, 94-96.

5 Vishṇu, IV. 13. 1 ; Vāyu, 96. 1-2.

6 I. 108. 8.

We learn from the *Rig-Veda*¹ that Yadu and Turvaśa came from a distant land, and the former is brought into very special relation to the Parśus or Persians.² The Sātvatas or Satvats also appear to be mentioned in the Vedic texts. In the *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*³ the defeat by Bharata of the Satvats and his taking away the horse which they had prepared for an Āśvamedha sacrifice, are referred to. The geographical position of Bharata's kingdom is clearly shown by the fact that he made offerings on the Sarasvatī, the Jumna and the Ganges.⁴ The Satvats must have been occupying some adjoining region. The epic and Purāṇic tradition which places them in the Mathurā district is thus amply confirmed. At a later time, however, a branch of the Satvats seems to have migrated farther to the south, for in the *Aitareya Brāhmaṇa*⁵ the Satvats are described as a southern people who lived beyond the Kuru-Pañchāla area, i.e., beyond the river Chambal, and were ruled by Bhoja kings. In

1 I. 36. 18 ; VI. 45. 1.

2 VIII. 6. 46. Epigraphic evidence points to a close connection between Western Asia and India from about the middle of the second millennium B. C. Rig-Vedic Gods like Sūrya (Shurias), Marut (Maruttash), Indra, Mitra, Varuṇa, the Nāsatyas, and even Dakṣa (daksh, star, CAH. I. 553) figure in the records of the Kassites and the Mitanni.

3 XIII. 5. 4. 21 Śatānīkaḥ samantāsu medhyam Sātrājito hayam ādatta yajñam Kāśinām Bharataḥ Satvatāmiva.

The Mbh. vii. 66. 7 (mā sattvāni vijijahi) seems to miss the import of the Brāhmaṇic gāthā.

4 Sat. Br. XIII. 5. 4. 11. Āit. Br., VIII. 23 ; Mbh., VII. 66. 8.
Aśtāsaptaśatīm Bharato Dauḥśhantir Yamunāmanu
Gaṅgāyām Vṛitraghne' bādhnāt pañchapañchāśataīm hayān Mahākarma (variant mahādadya) Bharatasya na pūrve nāpare janāḥ divyam martya iva hastyābhyām (variant bāhubhyām) nodāpuḥ pañcha mānavā (iti).

So'śvamedhaśateneshṭvā Yamunāmanu vīryavān triśatāśvān Sarasvatyām Gaṅgāmanu chatuḥśatān...

5 VIII. 14. 3.

the Purāṇas also we find that a branch of the Satvats was styled Bhoja¹ :—

“Bhajina-Bhajamāna-divy-Āndhaka-Devāvṛdha-Mahā-bhoja-Vṛishṇi-saṁjñah Sātvatasya putrā babhūvuh..... Mahābhajastvati dharmātmā tasyānvaye Bhoja-Mārtikūvatā babhūvuh.”

It is further stated that several southern states, Māhishmatī, Vidarbha, etc., were founded by princes of Yadu lineage.² Not only the Bhojas, but the Devāvṛdha branch of the Sātvatas finds mention in the Vedic literature. Babru Daivāvṛdha³ is mentioned in the *Aitareya Brāhmaṇa*⁴ as a contemporary of Bhīma, king of Vidarbha, and of Nagnajit, king of Gandhāra. The Andhakas and Vṛishṇis are referred to in the Aṣṭādhyāyī of Pāṇini.⁵ In the *Kauṭīliya Arthaśāstra*⁶ the Vṛishṇis are described as a Saṅgha, i. e., a republican corporation. The Mahābhārata, too, refers to the Vṛishṇis, Andhakas and other associate tribes as a Saṅgha,⁷ and Vāsudeva, the Vṛishṇi prince, as Saṅgha-mukhya (Elder or Seigneur of the confederacy). The name of the Vṛishṇi corporation (gaṇa) has also been preserved by a unique coin.⁸ It is stated in the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas that Kainsa, like Peisistratus and others of Greek history, tried to make himself tyrant at Mathurā by overpowering the Yādavas, and that Kṛishṇa-Vāsudeva, a scion

1 Vishṇu, IV. 13. 1-6. In Mbh. VIII. 7. 8 the Sātvata-Bhojas are located in Ānartta (Gujrat).

2 Mat., 43. 10-29; 44. 36; Vāyu, 94. 26; 95. 35.

3 Vāyu, 96. 15; Vishṇu, 13. 3-5.

4 VII. 34.

5 IV. 1. 114; VI. 2. 34.

6 P. 12.

7 XII. 81. 25.

8 Majumdar, Corporate Life in Ancient India, p. 119; Allan, CCAI, pp. clvi, 281.

of the Vrishni family, killed him. The slaying of Kamsa by Kṛishṇa is referred to by Patañjali and the Ghata Jātaka.¹ The latter work confirms the Hindu tradition about the association of Kṛishṇa-Vāsudeva's family with Mathurā (Uttara Madhurā).²

1 No. 454.

2 The city is so called to distinguish it from Madura in South India. The question of the historical existence of Kṛishṇa-Vāsudeva has been discussed in my Early History of the Vaishṇava Sect, 1st ed., pp. 26-35; 2nd ed., pp. 51 ff. and my Political History of Ancient India, 1st ed., 1923, p. 312.

Several scholars reject the identification of Kṛishṇa of the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas with the historical Kṛishṇa of the Chhāndogya Upanishad (III. 17). But we should remember that—

(a) Both the Kṛishṇas have the metronymic Devakīputra, son of Devakī, which is rare in early times.

(b) The teacher of the Upanishadic Kṛishṇa belonged to a family (Āṅgīrasa) closely associated with the Bhojas (Rig-Veda, III. 53. 7), the kindreds of the Epic Kṛishṇa (Mbh., II. 14. 32-34).

(c) The Upanishadic Kṛishṇa and his Guru Ghora Āṅgīrasa were worshippers of Sūrya (the Sun-god). We are told in the Śāntiparva (335. 19) that the Sātvata-vidhi taught by the Epic Kṛishṇa was prāk-Sūrya-mukha-nihsṛita.

(d) An Āṅgīrasa was the Guru of the Upanishadic Kṛishṇa. Āṅgīrasī Śruti is quoted as "Śrutināmuttamā Śrutiḥ" by the Epic Kṛishṇa (Mbh., VIII. 69. 85).

(e) The Upanishadic Kṛishṇa is taught the worship of the Sun, the noblest of all lights (gyotir-uttamamiti), high above all darkness (tamasaspari). This has its parallel in the Gītā (XIII. 18—gyotishāmāpi tajjyotis tamasaḥ param uchyaते ;

(f) The Upanishadic Kṛishṇa is taught to value, not any material reward (dakṣhiṇā), but rather the virtues of tapodānam ārjjavam ahimsā satyavachanam. The Gītā also eulogises action performed not for the material fruit thereof. Stress is laid in Gītā XVI. 1-2 on the virtues enumerated in the Upanishads.

The Purāṇas no doubt represent Sāṅdīpani, and not Ghora, as the great teacher of Kṛishṇa. But it is to be remembered that according to the Vishṇu Purāṇa (V. 21. 19) Kṛishṇa went to the sage Sāṅdīpani to learn lessons in the science of arms (astrāśikṣhā) :

Tataḥ Sāṅdīpanīm Kāśyam Avantipuravāsinaṁ astrārtham jagmaturvivān Baladeva-Janārdanaṁ.

The Harivaṁśa, too, informs us (Vishṇuparva, 33.4 ff.) that the residence of Kṛishṇa, who was already a śrutiāhara, with his Guru Sāṅdīpani was due to his desire of receiving lessons in the science of the bow (dhanurvedachikīrṣhārtham). The Veda that he learnt from this teacher is not termed akhila Veda, or Trayī, but simply sāṅga-Vedam, the Veda with its auxiliary treatises. The only Veda that is expressly mentioned is the Dhanurveda (and not the Trayī) together with its four divisions (chatuṣhpāda), etc. The compilers of the Bhāgavata and Brahma Vaivarta Purāṇas (Bhāg. X. 45. 31 ff. ; BV, Janmakhanda, 101-102) introduce

The final overthrow of the Vṛishṇis is ascribed to their irreverent conduct towards Brāhmaṇas.¹ It is interesting to note that the Vṛishṇis and the Andhakas are branded as Vṛātyas i.e. deviators from orthodoxy in the Drona parva of the Mahābhārata.² It is a remarkable fact that the Vṛishṇi-Andhakas and other Vṛātya clans, e.g., the Lichchhavis and Mallas, are found in historical times on the southern and eastern fringe of the "Dhruvā Madhyamā diś" occupied by the Kuru-Pañchālas and two other folks. It is not improbable that they represent an earlier swarm of Aryans who were pushed southwards and eastwards by the Pūru-Bharatas, the progenitors of the Kuru-Pañchālas. It may be remembered that the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa actually refers to the defeat by Bharata of the Satvats—the progenitors of the Vṛishṇi-Andhakas. And the Great Epic refers to the exodus of the Yādavas from Mathurā owing to pressure from the Paurava line of Magadha, and probably also from the Kurus.³

The Buddhist texts refer to Avantiputta, king of the Śūrasenas, in the time of Mahā-Kachchāna,⁴ one of the details about the study of all the Vēdas, Upanishads, treatises on law, philosophy, polity, etc., which are not found in the relevant passage of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, which, according to critics like Bankim Chandra Chāṭṭopādhyāya, represents an earlier and more reliable tradition. Residence with Sāṇḍīpani, therefore, does not conflict with the view that Kṛishṇa accepted the discipleship of Ghora for purposes of religious and philosophical studies (see EHVS, 2nd ed., pp. 73-74). Sāṇḍīpani already knew him to be a Śrutidhara (versed in the Śruti or the Vēdas; Hari-vamśa, Vishṇu-parva, 33, 6).

Real discrepancies in regard to certain names are sometimes met with in Vedic and epic versions of several legends e.g. the story of Śunahṣepa. But even these are not regarded as adequate grounds for doubting the identity of the leading character of the Vedic Ākhyāna with that of the corresponding epic tale.

1 Mahābhārata, Maushala parva, I. 15-22; 2. 10; Arthaśāstra, 1919 p. 12; Jātaka Eng. trans. IV. pp. 55-56, V. p. 138. Fausbøll, IV. 371; V. 267.

2 141. 15.

3 Cf. Bahu-Kurucharā Mathurā, Patañjali, IV. 1. 1; GEI, p. 395 n.

4 M. 2. 83, DPPN, II. 438.

chief disciples of Śākyamuni, through whose agency Buddhism gained ground in the Mathurā region. The name of the king suggests relationship with the royal house of Avanti. A king named Kuvinda is mentioned in the Kāvya-Mīmāṃsā.¹ The Śūrasenas continued to be a notable people down to the time of Megasthenes. But at that time they must have formed an integral part of the Maurya Empire.

Assaka (Aśmaka) was situated on the banks of the Godāvarī.² Its capital, Potali, Potana or Podana³ is possibly to be identified with Bodhan in the Nizam's dominions. This accords with its position between Mūlaka (district round Paithān) and Kalinga⁴ to which Pāli texts bear witness. In the Sona-Nanda Jātaka we find Assaka associated with Avanti. This may suggest that Assaka included at that time Mūlaka and some neighbouring districts and thus its territory approached the southern frontier of Avanti.⁵

In the *Vāyu Purāṇa*⁶ Aśmaka and Mūlaka appear as scions of the Ikshvāku family, and the Mahābhārata speaks of the royal sage Aśmaka (Aśmako nama rājarshi) as having founded the city of Podana. This probably indicates that the Aśmaka and Mūlaka kingdoms were believed to have been founded by Ikshvāku chiefs, just 1 3rd ed. p.50. He prohibited the use of harsh conjunct consonants.

2 Sutta Nipāta, 977.

3 Chulla-Kāliṅga Jātaka, No. 301; D. 2. 235; Law, Heaven and Hell in Buddhist Perspective, 74; Mbh. I. 177. 47. As pointed out by Dr. Sukthankar the older mss. give the name as Potana or Podana and not Paudanya. This agrees with the evidence of the Mahāgovinda Suttanta (Assakānañcha Potanam) and the Parīśiṣṭa parvaṇ (I. 92)—nagara Potanābhīdhe.

4 Sutta Nipāta, 977; Jātaka no. 301.

5 Cf. Bhandarkar, Carṃ. Lec. 1918. pp. 53-54. It appears from the Mahāgovinda Suttanta that at one time Avanti extended southwards as far as the Narmadā valley and included the city of Māhishmatī which stood on the banks of the famous river.

6 88. 177-178; Mbh. I. 177. 47.

as Vidarbha and Daṇḍaka were founded by princes of the Yadu (Bhoja) family. The Mahāgovinda Suttanta mentions Brahmadaṭṭa, king of the Assakas, as a contemporary of Sattabhu, king of Kalinga, Vessabhu, king of Avanti, Bharata, king of Sovira, Renu, king of Videha, Dhataratṭha, king of Aṅga and Dhataratṭha, king of Kāsi.¹

We learn from the *Assaka Jātaka*² that at one time the city of Potali was included in the kingdom of Kāsi, and that its prince, Assaka, was presumably a vassal of the Kāsi monarch. The Chulla Kalinga Jātaka mentions a king of Assaka named Aruṇa and his minister Nandisena, and refers to a victory which they won over the king of Kalinga.

Avanti roughly corresponds to the Ujjain region, together with a part of the Narmadā valley from Māndhātā to Maheshwar, and certain adjoining districts. Late Jaina writers include within its boundaries Tumbavana or Tumain in the Guna district of the Gwalior state about 50 miles to the north-west of Eran.³ The Janapada was divided into two parts by the Vindhya: the northern part drained by the Śiprā and other streams had its capital at Ujjain and the southern part washed by the Narmadā had its centre at Māhissatī or 1 Dialogues of the Buddha, Part II, p. 270. The last-mentioned prince is known to the Śat. Br. XIII. 5. 4. 22.

2 No. 207.

3 Iha iva Jambudvīpe' pāg Bhartārdha Vibhūṣhanam
Avantiriti deśo 'sti svargadeśīya riddhibhiḥ tatra Tumbavanamiti vidyate sanniveśanam.

Parīśiṣṭaparvan, XII. 2-3.

For the position of Tumbavana, see Ep. Ind. XXVI. 115ff.

Māhismatī¹ usually identified with the rocky island of Māndhātā.²

Buddhist and Jain writers mention several other cities of Avanti, viz., Kuraraghara ("osprey's haunt"), Makkarakaṭa, and Sudarśanapura.³ The Mahāgovinda Suttanta mentions Māhissatī as the capital of the Avantis, and refers to their king Vessabhu. The Mahābhārata, however, distinguishes between the kingdoms of Avanti and Māhishmatī, but locates Vinda and Anuvinda of Avanti near the Narmadā.⁴

The Purāṇas attribute the foundation of Māhishmatī, Avanti, and Vidarbha to scions of the Yadu family. The Āitareya Brāhmaṇa also associates the Satvats and the Bhojas, branches of the Yadu family according to the Purāṇas, with the southern realms.⁵

The Purāṇas style the first dynasty of Māhishmatī as Haihaya.⁶ This family is already known to the *Kautilīya Arthaśāstra*⁷ and figures in the Shodāśa-rājika and other episodes of the epic. The Haihayas are said to have overthrown the Nāgas who must have been the aboriginal inhabitants of the Narmadā region.⁸ The Matsya Purāṇa

1 In J. V. 133 (DPPN, I. 1050) Avanti is placed in Dakṣiṇāpatha. This is readily reconcilable with the view that only the southern part is meant by the expression Avanti Dakṣiṇāpatha (Bhandarkar, Carm. Lec. 54).

2 Pargiter in Mark p. Fleet in JRAS, 1910, 444f. There is one difficulty in the way of accepting this identification: Māndhātā lay to the south of the Pāriyātra Mts. (W. Vindhya), whereas Māhismatī lay between the Vindhya and the Riksha—to the north of the Vindhya and to the south of the Riksha, according to the commentator Nīlakaṇṭha (Harivaṃśa, II. 38. 7-19). For identification with Maheśvara, once the residence of the Holkar family, see Ind. Ant. 1875. 346ff. For Māndhātā, see ibid. 1876, 53.

3 Lüders Ins. No. 469; Gradual Sayings, V. 31; Law, Ancient Mid-Indian Kṣatriya Tribes, p. 158; DPPN, I. 193; Kathākośa, 18.

4 Narmadāmahatā, Mbh., II. 31. 10.

5 Matsya, 43. 44; Vāyu, 95-96; Āit. Br., VIII. 14.

6 Matsya, 43. 8-29; Vāyu, 94, 5-26.

7 Arthaśāstra, p. 11; Mbh. vii. 68. 6 etc; Saundara Nanda, VIII. 45.

8 Cf. Nāgpur; and Ind. Ant. 1884. 85; Bomb. Gaz., I. 2. 313 etc.

mentions five branches of the Haihayas, namely Vitihotras Bhojas, Avantis, Kuṇḍikeras or Tuṇḍikeras and the Tāla-jaṅghas.¹ When the Vitihotras and Avantis (or the Vitiho-tras in Avanti) passed away, an amātya, minister or governor, named Pulika (Punika), is said to have killed his master and anointed his own son Pradyota in the very sight of the Kshatriyas.² In the fourth century B.C., Avanti formed an integral part of the Magadha Empire.

The kingdom of Gandhāra included within its boundaries the vale of Kāśmīra and the ancient metropolis of Takshasilā, which lay 2,000 leagues from Benares,³ but nevertheless attracted students and enquirers from the most distant provinces.

The Purāṇas represent the Gandhāra princes as the descendants of Druhyu.⁴ This king and his people are mentioned several times in the Rig-Veda and apparently belonged to the north-west,⁵ a fact that accords with the Purāṇic tradition. Mention has already been made of the early king, Nagnajit who is reported to have been a contemporary of Nimi, king of Videha, Durmukha, king of Pañchāla, Bhīma, king of Vidarbha,⁶ and "Karakandū,"

1. 43. 48-49.

2. We need not infer from this statement that the family of Punika sprang from one of the lower orders of society (e. g., cowherds). The point in the Purāṇic account is that the dynastic change was brought about by an amātya, a civil functionary (not a senāpati like Pushyamitra), and that the army (Kshatriyas) looked on, i.e., treated the matter with indifference or silent approval. In the time of Megasthenes soldiers (kshatriya, khattiya-kula) and councillors (amātyas, amachcha-kula) were distinct orders of society (cf. also Fick, Ch. VI). The Tibetans style Pradyota's father Anantanemi. Essay on Guṇādhyā, p. 173.

3. Jātaka no. 406; Talapatta Jātaka, No. 96; Susima Jātaka, No. 163.

4. Matsya, 48. 6; Vāyu, 99. 9.

5. Vedic Index, I. 385.

6. Kumbhakāra Jātaka; Alt. Br., VII. 34; Śat. Br. VIII. 1. 4. 10; Uttarā-dhyayana Sūtra. A Nagnajit also appears in the Mahābhārata as the Gandhārian contemporary of Kṛishṇa (V. 48. 75). But the same epic mentions Śakuni as the King of Gandhāra in the time of Kṛishṇa and the Pāṇḍavas.

king of Kalinga. Jaina writers tell us that those princes adopted the faith of the Jainas.¹ As Pārśva (777 B.C. ?) was probably the first historical Jina, Nagnajit, if he really became a convert to his doctrines, should have to be placed between 777 B.C. and cir. 544 B.C., the date of Pukkusāti, the Gandhārian contemporary of Bimbisāra. The conversion to Jainism, however, does not accord with the story related in the Jātaka about his own elevation and that of his confrères to the status of Pachcheka Buddhas, or with the interest which the king or his son Svarjit² evinced in Brāhmaṇic ritual. It is, however, to be noted that the views of the family in such matters were not treated with respect. The rival claims of different sects need not be taken too seriously. The only fact that emerges is that tradition knew the family to be interested in religious matters and holding views that did not strictly conform to traditional Brāhmaṇism.

In the middle of the sixth century B.C. the throne of Gandhāra was occupied by Pukkusāti (Pushkarasārin) who is said to have sent an embassy and a letter to king Bimbisāra of Magadha, and waged war on Pradyota of Avanti who was defeated.³ He is also said to have been threatened in his own kingdom by the Pāṇḍavas who occupied a part of the Pāñjāb as late as the time of Ptolemy. In the latter half of the sixth century B.C. Gandhāra was conquered by the king of Persia. In the Bahistān inscription of Darius, cir. 520-518 B.C., the Gandhārians (Gadara) appear among the subject peoples of the Achaemenidan or Achaemenian Empire.⁴

1 S. B. E., XLV. 87.

2 Sat. Br., VIII. 1. 4. 10. Vedic Index, I. 432.

3 Buddhist India, p. 28; DPPN, II. 215; Essay on Guṇādhyā, p. 176.

4 See "Ancient Persian Lexicon and the Texts of the Achaemenidan Inscriptions" by Herbert Cushing Tolman, Vanderbilt Oriental Series, Vol. VI; Old Persian Inscriptions, by Sukumar Sen; Camb. Hist. Ind. I. 334, 338.

Kamboja is constantly associated with Gandhāra in literature and inscriptions.¹ Like Gandhāra it is included in the Uttarāpatha, i.e., the Far North of India.² It should, therefore, be clearly distinguished from "Kambuja" in the Trans-Gangetic Peninsula (i.e., Cambodia),³ and must be located in some part of North-West India close to Gandhāra. The Mahābhārata connects the Kambojas with a place called Rājapura.⁴—"Karna Rājapuram gatvā Kāmbojā nirjitā-stvayā."⁵ The association of the Kambojas with the Gandhāras enables us to identify this Rājapura with the territory of that name mentioned by Yuan Chwang⁶ which lay to the south or south-east

1 Mbh., XII. 207. 43 ; Āṅguttara N., P. T. S., I. 213 ; 4. 252, 256, 261 ; Rock Edict V of Aśoka. Quite in keeping with the association with Gandhāra, famous for its good wool (Rig. V. 1. 126. 7), is the love of Kambojas for blankets (Kambala) to which Yāska (II. 2) bears testimony.

2 Cf. Mbh., XII. 207. 43. Rājatarāṅgīnī, IV. 163-165. The chronicle does not place Kamboja to the north of Kashmir. It simply places the territory in the Uttarāpatha, and clearly distinguishes it from the land of the Tukhāras, apparently lying further to the north.

3 For the Hindu colony of "Kambuja" see Eliot, Hinduism and Buddhism, III, pp. 100 ff. ; B. R. Chatterji, Indian Cultural Influence in Cambodia ; R. C. Majumdar, Champā.

4 Mbh., VII. 4. 5.

5 "Karna having gone to (gatvā) Rājapura" vanquished the Kambojas. The passage can hardly imply that Karna marched to Kamboja "via Rājapura." It is also futile to suggest that Rājapura had anything to do with Rājagṛiha in Bactria (as is done by a writer in the Proceedings and Transactions of the Sixth Oriental Conference, Patna, p. 109). The Ram. I. 6. 22 ; the Mbh. VII. 119. 14. 26. and the Mudrārākshasa, II. clearly distinguishes Kamboja from Bālīhika (Bactria).

6 Watters, Yuan Chwang, Vol. I, p. 284. Cunningham (AGI, 1924, p. 148) identifies Rājapura with the chiefship of Rajaori to the south of Kashmir. The fact that the Mahābhārata (II. 27) makes separate mention of Kamboja and Abhisāra (with which the Rajaori region is identified) need not mean that the two were absolutely distinct entities in all ages. Does not the Great Epic (II. 30. 24-25) distinguish between Suhma and Tāmralipti, and does not the Dasakumārā-charita with equal emphasis place Dāmalīpta in Suhma ? The truth is that Rajaori formed only a part of Kamboja which included other areas as well. The ruling family of Rājauri (Rajaori) in later times were the Khaśas (Stein in JASB 1899, Extra No. 2. 28).

of Punch. The western boundaries of Kamboja must have reached Kāfiristān. Elphinstone found in that district tribes like the 'Caumojee,' 'Camoze,' and 'Camoje' whose names remind us of the Kambojas.¹

Kamboja may have been a home of Brāhmaṇic learning in the later Vedic period. The Vaṁśa Brāhmaṇa actually mentions a teacher named Kāmboja Aupamanyava.² The presence of Āryas (Ayyo) in Kamboja is recognised in the Majjhima Nikāya.³ But already in the time of Yāska the Kambojas had come to be regarded as a people distinct from the Aryans of the interior of India, speaking a different dialect.⁴ We have further changes in later ages. And in *Bhūridatta Jātaka*⁵ the Kambojas are credited with savage (Non-Aryan) customs :

ete hi dhammā anariyarūpā

*Kambojakānaṁ vitathā bahunnān ti.*⁶

These are your savage customs which I hate,

*Such as Kamboja hordes might emulate.*⁷

This description of the Kambojas agrees wonderfully with Yuan Chwang's account of Rājapura and the adjoining countries. "From Lampa to Rājapura the inhabitants are coarse and plain in personal appearance, of rude violent dispositions...they do not belong to India proper,

1 Elphinstone, An Account of the Kingdom of Kābul, Vol. II, pp. 375-377; Bomb. Gaz. I.1, 498n; JRAS., 1843, 140; JASB., 1874 260n; Wilson, Vishnu p., III. 292. With the expression assānam āyatanam, 'land of horses,' used by Pāli texts in reference to the Kambojas (DPPN, I. 526. cf. Mbh. vi. 90. 3) may be compared the names Aspasioi and Assakenoi given by classical writers to the sturdy tribes living in the Alishang and Swāt valleys in the days of Alexander (Camb. Hist. Ind. 352n).

2 Vedic Index, I. 127, 138; Yāska, II. 2.

3 II. 149.

4 II. 2; JRAS., 1911, 801f.

5 No. 543.

6 Jātaka, VI. 208.

7 Cowell's Jātaka, VI. 110.

but are inferior peoples of frontier, (i.e., barbarian) stocks."¹

The Kambojas in the Epic period had their metropolis probably at Rājapura. Dvārakā, mentioned by Rhys Davids as the capital in the early Buddhist period, was not really situated in this country, though it was connected with it by a road.² A real city of the Kambojas was apparently Nandi-nagara mentioned in Lüders' Inscriptions 176 and 472.

The Vedic texts do not mention any king of Kamboja. But, as has already been pointed out, they refer to a teacher named Kamboja Aupamanyava who was probably connected with this territory. In the Mahābhārata the Kambojas are represented as living under a monarchical constitution.³ The Epic makes mention of their kings Chandravarman and Sudakṣiṇa. In later times the monarchy gave place to a Saṅgha form of government. The *Kaṭīliya Arthasāstra*⁴ speaks of the Kambojas as a "vārtā-sāstr-opajīvin" Saṅgha, that is to say, a confederation of agriculturists, herdsmen, traders and warriors. Corporations of Kambojas (Kambojānūcha ye gaṇāh) are also mentioned in the Mahābhārata.⁵

1 Watters I. 284 ; for the Kambojas see also S. Lévi : "Pré-Aryen et Pré-Dravidien dans l'Inde," J. A., 1923.

2 DPPN, I. 526 ; cf. Law : "The Buddhist Conception of Spirits," pp. 80-83.

3 Cf. I. 67. 32 ; II. 4. 22⁹ ; V. 165. 1-3 ; VII. 90. 59, etc.

4 P. 378.

5 VII. 89. 38.

SECTION II. AN EPIC ACCOUNT OF THE MAHĀJANAPADAS.

An interesting account of the characteristics of the peoples of most of the Mahājanapadas described above is to be found in the Karṇa parva of the Mahābhārata.¹

The Kurus, Pañchālas, Matsyas, Kosalas, Kāsis, Magadhas, Chedis and Śūrasenās receive praise. Patriots hailing from Aṅga include their country in this list :

*Kuravaḥ saha Pañchālāḥ Śālvā Matsyāḥ sa-Naimishāḥ²
Kosalāḥ Kāśya' ṅgāścha Kālīṅgā Māgadhistathā
Chedayaścha mahābhāgā dharmam jānanti kṣāvatam
Brāhmaṇ Pañchālāḥ Kauraveyāstu dharmam Satyam Matsyāḥ Śūrasenāścha yajñam.*

"The Kauravas with the Pañchālas, the Śālvās, the Matsyas, the Naimishas, the Kosalas, the Kāsis, the Aṅgas, the Kālīṅgas, the Magadhas, and the Chedis who are all highly blessed, know what the eternal Law of Righteousness is. The Pañchālas observe the Vedic code, the Kauravas the law of righteousness, the Matsyas truth, and the Śūrasenas sacrificial rites."

The Magadhas comprehend hints, the Kosalas understand from what they see,—the Kurus and Pañchālas gather the sense from half-expressed words, while the Śālvās need full instruction.

Īṅgitañāścha Magadhāḥ prekṣhitajñāścha Kośalāḥ. arddhoktāḥ Kuru-Pañchālāḥ Śālvāḥ kṛitsnāunaśāsanāḥ.

1 Mahābhārata, VIII. 40. 29 ; 45. 14-16 ; 28 ; 34 ; 40.

2 The Naimishas occupied Nimsār, 20 miles from Sitāpur, on the left bank of the Gumti river (Ayyar, Origin and Early History of Śaivism in South India, 91).

The Aṅgas had their detractors and come in for a good deal of condemnation along with the Madras and the Gandhāras :

*Āturānām parityāgaḥ sadāra-sūta-vikrayaḥ
Aṅgeshu vartate Karna yeshām adhipatir bhavān.*

“The abandonment of the afflicted and the sale of wives and children are, O Karna, prevalent among the Aṅgas whose overlord thou art.”

Madrakeshu cha saṁsrishṭam saucham Gāndhārakeshu cha, rāja-yājaka-yājye cha nasṭam dattam havir bhavet.

“Amongst the Madrakas all acts of friendship are lost as purity among the Gāndhārakas, and the libations poured in a sacrifice in which the king is himself the sacrificer and priest.”

The verses quoted above give a fair idea of the attitude, mainly of poets of the western part of the Madhyadeśa towards most of the Mahājanapadas of Northern India.

SECTION III. THE FALL OF KĀSĪ AND THE ASCENDANCY OF KOSALA.

Kosalo nāma muditaḥ sphito janapado mahān —Rāmāyaṇa.

The flourishing period of the sixteen Mahājanapadas ended in the sixth and fifth centuries B.C. The history of the succeeding age is the story of the absorption of these states into a number of powerful kingdoms, and ultimately into one empire, namely, the empire of Magadha.

Kāsi was probably one of the first to fall. The Mahāvagga and the Jātakas refer to bitter conflicts between this kingdom and its neighbours, specially Kosala. The facts of the struggle are obscure, being wrapped up in legendary matter from which it is impossible to disentangle them. The Kāsis seem to have been successful at first, but the Kosalas were the gainers in the end.

In the *Mahāvagga*¹ and the *Kosambī Jātaka*² it is stated that Brahmadatta, king of Kāsi, robbed Dīghati, king of Kosala, of his realm, and put him to death. In the *Kunāla Jātaka*³ we are told that Brahmadatta, king of Kāsi, owing to his having an army, seized on the country of Kosala, slew its king, and carried off his chief queen to Benares, and there made her his consort. The *Brahmachatta*⁴ and *Sona-Nanda Jātakas*⁵ also refer to the victories of Kāsi monarchs over Kosala.

1 S.B.E., XVII, 294-99.

2 No. 428.

3 No. 536.

4 No. 336.

5 No. 532.

Success, however, did not remain long with the Kāśis.¹ In the *Mahāsīlava Jātaka*² king Mahāsīlava of Kāśi is said to have been deprived of his realm by the ruler of Kosala. In the *Ghata*³ and *Ekarāja Jātakas*⁴ Vaṅka and Dabbasena, sovereigns of Kosala, are said to have won for their country a decided preponderance over Kāśi. The final conquest of the latter kingdom was probably the work of Kaiśa, as the epithet Barānasiggaho, i.e., "seizer of Benares" is a standing addition to his name.⁵ The interval of time between Kaiśa's conquest of Kāśi and the rise of Buddhism could not have been very long because the memory of Kāśi as an independent kingdom was still fresh in the minds of the people in the Buddha's time and even later when the Anguttara Nikāya was composed.

In the time of Mahākosala (about the middle of the sixth century B. C.) Kāśi formed an integral part of the Kosalan monarchy. When Mahākosala married his daughter, the lady Kosalādevī, to king Bimbisāra of Magadha, he gave a village of Kāśi producing a revenue of a hundred thousand for bath and perfume money.⁶

In the time of Mahākosala's son and successor, Pasenadi or Prasenajit, Kāśi still formed a part of the Kosalan empire. In the *Lohichcha Sutta*⁷ Buddha asks a person named Lohichcha the following questions: "Now what think you Lohichcha? Is not king Pasenadi of Kosala in possession of Kāśi and Kosala?" Lohichcha

1 Cf. Jātaka No. 100.

2 No. 51.

3 No. 355.

4 No. 303.

5 The Seyya Jātaka, No. 282; the Tesakūṇa Jātaka, No. 521; Buddhist India, p. 25.

6 Harita Māta Jātaka, No. 239; Vaḍḍhaki Sūkara Jātaka, No. 283.

7 Dialogues of the Buddha, Part I, 283-97.

replies, "Yes, that is so, Gotama."¹ We learn from the *Mahāvagga*² that a brother of Pasenadi acted as the viceroy of Kāsi.

The *Samyukta Nikāya*³ speaks of Pasenadi as the head of a group of five Rājās. One of these was probably his brother, the viceroy of Kāsi. Among the remaining princes and chiefs we should perhaps include the rājanya Pāyāsi of Setavyā mentioned in the *Pāyāsi Suttanta*⁴ and the ruler of the Kālāmas of Kesaputta.⁵

Another Rājā of the group was apparently the Śākya chief of Kapilavāstu. His political subordination to the Kosalan monarchs appears from several texts.⁶ The ruler of Devadaha may have ranked as another notable vassal of Kosala.⁷

It was probably during the reign of Mahākosala, that Bimbisāra was anointed king of Magadha. With the coronation of this famous ruler ends the period with which this part of the work deals.

1 Cf. Gradual Sayings, V. 40. "As far as the Kāsi-Kosalāns extend, as far as the rule of Pasenadi, the Kosalan rājā, extends, therein Pasenadi, the Kosalan Rājā, is reckoned chief."

2 S.B.E., XVII, 195.

3 The Book of the Kindred Sayings, translated by Mrs. Rhys Davids, I. p. 106.

4 Cf. Milinda, IV. 4. 14; the Vimāna-vatthu commentary; Law, Heaven and Hell, 79, 83. Pāyāsi occurs as the name of a village in a Sahet Mahet Inscription. It has been identified with a village close to the findspot of the record (Ray, DHNI, I. p. 521).

5 Indian Culture, II. 808; Anguttara, I, 188.

6 See Supra p. 99.

7 Kapilavāstu, Devadaha and Koliya are sometimes mentioned as three distinct states (DPPN, I, 102n). The subordination of the Śākyas to the King of Kosala necessarily implies the latter's control over Devadaha which was in part, at any rate, a Śākya city.

SECTION IV. KINGSHIP.

We have endeavoured to give in outline the story of the political vicissitudes through which Northern India and a considerable portion of the Deccan passed from the accession of Parikshit to the coronation of Bimbisāra. We shall now attempt a brief survey of some of the institutions of the age without which no political history is complete. We have seen that during the major part of the period under review the prevailing form of government was monarchical. The later Vedic texts and auxiliary treatises give us a few details about the rank and power of the rulers in the different parts of India, their social status, the methods of their selection and consecration, the chief members of their household, the civil and military services, the limitations of royal authority and popular participation in affairs of the state. Even when all scraps of information are pieced together, the picture is dim. The facts gleaned from Vedic sources which alone can, with confidence, be referred to the period before 500 B.C. have to be elucidated or supplemented by post-Vedic data embodying traditions about the heroic age that preceded the rise and growth of the Magadhan Empire.

The various kinds of rulership prevalent in different parts of India are thus described in the Āitareya Brāhmaṇa :¹

“Ētasyāṁ Prāchyāṁ dīśi ye ke cha Prāchyānām rājānaḥ Sāmraṇyāyaiva te’bhishichyante Samrāt-ityenān-abhihikṭānāchakshata etāmeva Devānām vikitimanu.

Etasyām Dakṣiṇāyām diśi ye ke cha Satvatām Rājāno Bhaṁjyāyaiva te'bhishichyante Bhoj-etyenān-abhishiktān-āchakshata etāmeva Devānām vihitimānu.

Etasyām Pratiçhyām diśi ye ke cha Nīchyānām Rājāno ye'pūchyānām Svārājyāyaiva te'bhishichyante Svarāt-ityenān-abhishiktān-āchakshata etāmeva Devānām vihitimānu.

Etasyām Udichyām diśi ye ke cha pareṇa Himavantām Janapadū Uttara-Kurava Uttara-Madrā iti Vairājyāyaiva te'bhishichyante Virāt-ityenān-abhishiktān-āchakshata etāmeva Devānām vihitimānu.

Etasyām dhruvāyām Madhyamāyām pratiṣṭhāyām diśi ye ke cha Kuru-Pāñchālānām Rājānaḥ sa Vās-Ośīnarānām Rājyāyaiva te'bhishichyante Rāj-etyenān-abhishiktān-āchakshata etāmeva Devānām vihitimānu."

"In this eastern quarter, whatever kings there are of the eastern peoples, they are anointed for overlordship (Sāmrājya); 'O Overlord' they style them when anointed in accordance with the action of the gods. In the southern quarter whatever kings there are of the Satvats, they are anointed for paramount rule (Bhaṁjya); 'O Paramount Ruler' they style them when anointed in accordance with the action of the gods. In this western quarter, whatever kings there are of the southern and western peoples, they are anointed for self-rule (Svārājya); 'O Self-Ruler' they style them when anointed in accordance with the action of the gods. In this northern quarter, the lands of the Uttara-Kurus and the Uttara-Madrās, beyond the Himavat, their (kings) are anointed for sovereignty (Vairājya); 'O Sovereign' they style them when anointed in accordance with the action of the gods. In this firm middle established quarter, whatever kings there are of the Kuru-Pāñchālas with the Vāsas and Uśīnaras, they are anointed for kingship; 'king' they style them when anointed in accordance with the action of the gods."

Several scholars assert that Vairājya means a kingless state. But in the *Aitareya Brāhmaṇa*¹ a king consecrated with Indra's great unction is called Virāt and worthy of Vairājya. When a king consecrated with the Punarbhisheka (renewed anointment) ascends his Āsandī or throne, he prays for attaining Vairājya as well as other kinds of royal dignity. Sāyaṇa takes the word Vairājyam to mean pre-eminence among kings, itarebhyo bhupatibhyo vaiśishtyam. This is virtually the sense of the word that Dr. Keith accepts in his translation.

The Sulcranīti,² too, understands Virāt to denote a superior kind of monarch. In the Mahābhārata Kṛishna is lauded as Samvāt, Virāt, Svarāt and Sura-rāja.³ If the Uttara-Kurus and the Uttara-Madras are to be regarded as republican, it is not because of the use of the term Vairājya, but because in their case it is not the rājan but the janapada which is said to be anointed for sovereignty. It should, however, be remembered that already in the Brāhmaṇa period Uttara-Kuru has become a devakshetra which the arms of a mortal could not reach.⁴

It is not easy to decide whether all the terms Sām-rājya, Bhaujya, Svārājya, Vairājya and Rājya referred to essentially different forms of royal authority in the Brāhmanic period. But two terms at least, namely, Sām-rājya and Rājya are clearly distinguished by the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.⁵

1 VIII. 17.

2 B. K. Sarkar's Translation, p. 24; Kauṭilya (VIII.2), however, takes Vairājya to mean a system of government which comes into existence by forcible seizure of a country from the legitimate ruler for purposes of exploitation.

3 XII. 43. 11; cf. 68. 54.

4 Ait. Br. viii. 23. The existence of Gaṇas and of Gaṇajyeshthas are hinted at Rig. V. 1. 23. 8; II. 23. 1; X. 34. 12; 112. 9; Śat. Br. XIII. 2. 8. 4. etc.

5 V. 1.1. 12-13; cf. Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtra, XV. 1. 1, 2.

Rājā vai Rājasūyeneshtvā bhavati, Samrāj Vājapeyen-āvarāṇi hi Rājyaṇi parāṇi Sāmrajyaṇi. Kāmāyeta vai Rājā Samrāj bhavitum āvarāṇi hi rājyaṇi parāṇi Sāmrajyaṇi. Na Samrāj kāmāyeta Rājā bhavitum āvarāṇi hi rājyaṇi parāṇi Sāmrajyaṇi.

"By offering the Rājasūya he becomes Rājā and by the Vājapeya he becomes Samrāj, and the office of Rājan is the lower and that of Samrāj the higher ; a Rājan might indeed wish to become Samrāj, for the office of Rājan is the lower and that of Samrāj the higher ; but the Samrāj would not wish to become a Rājā for the office of Rājan is the lower, and that of Samrāj the higher."

In the *Rig-Veda*¹ and later on in the Purāṇas Bhoja appears as a proper name. But the Brāhmaṇas regard it as a royal designation, applicable to the consecrated monarchs of the southern region.² The word Cæsar furnishes a parallel. Originally the name of a Roman dictator and of members of his family, it is used, in later ages, as a title by Roman and German Emperors. As to Śvārājya it is sometimes taken to mean uncontrolled dominion, and is opposed to Rājya.³

The king was usually, though not always, a Kshatriya. The Brāhmaṇas were considered to be unsuited for kingship. Thus we read in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa—"To the king (Rājan) doubtless belongs the Rājasūya ; for by offering the Rājasūya he becomes king, and unsuited for kingship is the Brāhmaṇa."⁴

1 III. 53. 7.

2 'Bhoja' may have reference to the king or chieftain as ruler, protector or devourer of his people (Viśāmatā). It appears as an official designation in several inscriptions of Southern India (Ind. Ant. 1876, 177 ; 1877, 25-28). In Mbh. I. 84. 22, it is applied to a ruler and his family who are deprived of many of the attributes of sovereignty (arājā Bhojaśabdāṃ tvaṃ tatra prāpsyasi sāmvaṇṇi).—

3 Kāthaka Saṃhitā, XIV. 5 ; Maitrāyaṇi Saṃhitā, I. 11, 5, etc., Vedic Index, II. 221.

4 V. I. I. 12 ; SBE, XLI ; Eggeling Śat. Br., Part III, p. 4.

Rājña eva rājasūyam. Rājā vai rājasūyeneshtvā bhavati na vai Brāhmaṇo rājyāyālam avaram vai rājasūyam param Vājaḥpeyam.

A Brāhmaṇa king is, however, contemplated in a passage of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.¹ We have references to Śūdra, Āyogava and even non-Aryan kings in other Vedic texts; King Jānaśruti Pautrāyaṇa is branded a Śūdra in the Chhāndogya Upanishad.² King Marutta Āvikshita is styled "Āyogava" in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.³ Āyogava denotes, in legal codes, a member of a mixed caste, a descendant of a Śūdra by a Vaiśya wife.⁴ Nishāda *sthapati*s (kings or chieftains) figure in a Śrauta sūtra and the Rāmāyaṇa. In the Jaiminīya Upanishad Brāhmaṇa it is stated that even an anārya "obtains," prāpnoti, kings.⁵ This points either to non-Aryan kings or to the admission of anāryas into the dominions of Aryan rulers. The Jātakas and the Great Epic refer to kings of various castes including Brāhmaṇas.⁶

Kingship was sometimes hereditary, as is indeed shown by several cases where the descent can be traced. Mention may be made in this connection of the *Pārikshit*as and the kings of Janaka's line; hereditary kingship is also suggested by the expression Daśapurushaṁrājya—a kingdom of ten generations—occurring in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.⁷ But elective monarchy was not unknown.⁸

1 VIII. 23 (story of Atyarātis' offer to Vāsishṭha Sātyahavya).

2 IV. 2. 1-5. Apparently Śūdra kings were not unknown in the age.

3 XIII. 5. 4. 6.

4 Manu-saṁhitā, X. 12.

5 Vedic Index, I. 454; Rām. II. 50. 32; 84. 1. Jaim. Up. Br. 1. 4. 5.

6 Cf. Jātakas, 73. 432, Mbh. i. 100. 49f; 138. 70.

7 XII. 9. 3. 1-3; cf. also the reference to the birth of an heir to the throne (Ait. Br. VIII. 9 and to the king as Rājpitā, VIII. 17).

8 Reference may be made in this connection to the passages of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (e.g. VIII. 12) describing the choice and consecration of divine rulers (Ghoshal, A History of Hindu Political Theories, 1927, p. 26), and notices of royal election in post-Vedic texts looking back to an early period e.g. Mbh., I. 94.

The selection was made sometimes by the people and occasionally by the ministers. The choice was ordinarily limited to the members of the royal family only, as is shown by the legend in Yāska¹ of the Kuru brothers Devāpi and Śamītanu, and the story in the *Samvara Jātaka*² of the Kāsi princes Upasatha and Samvara. In the Jātaka the councillors ask a reigning king, "When you are dead, my lord, to whom shall we give the white umbrella?" "Friends," said the monarch, "all my sons have a right to the white umbrella. But you may give it to him that pleases your mind."

At times the popular choice fell on persons who did not belong to the ruling dynasty. Such may have been the case when the Śrīñjayas expelled their hereditary ruler together with the Sthapati.³ Clear instances of popular preference for individuals outside the royal family are furnished by the Jātakas. The Pādañjali Jātaka,⁴ for instance, tells us that when a certain king of Benares died, his son, Pādañjali by name, an idle lazy loafer, was set aside, and the minister in charge of things spiritual and temporal was raised to the throne. The Sachchaṅkīra Jātaka,⁵ relates a story how nobles, Brāhmaṇas and all classes slew their king and anointed a private citizen. Sometimes the candidate comes from a place outside the realm. The *Darīmukha*⁶ and *Sonaka Jātakas*⁷ tell 49—rājatve taṁ prajāḥ sarvā dharmajña itī vavrire. The expression king-maker (rāja-kartri, Ait. Br. VIII. 17; Śat. Br. III. 4. 1. 7.) points to the important part played by officials including headmen of villages in the choice of the ruler. Both in the Vedic texts (Ait. Br. VIII. 12) and the epic emphasis is laid on the possession of moral qualities. The leader on whom the choice falls is ojishṭha, balishṭha, sahishṭha, sattamaḥ, pārayishṇutama, dharmajña. In the fourth century B.C. physical beauty carried the palm in one territory (Kathaia in the Punjab according to Onesikritos).

1 Nirukta II. 10; Ved. Ind. II, 211.

2 No. 462.

3 Śat. Br. XII. 9. 3. 1 ff.

4 No. 247.

5 No. 73.

6 No. 378; cf. No. 401.

7 No. 529.

us how on failure of heir at Benares a prince of Magadha was elected king.

The monarch during the Brāhmaṇa period was usually allowed to have four queens, viz., the Mahishī, the Parivṛiktī, the Vāvātā and the Pālāgalī. The Mahishī, was the chief wife, being the first one married according to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.¹ The Parivṛiktī was the neglected or discarded wife, probably one that had no son. The Vāvātā is the favourite, while the Pālāgalī was the daughter of the last of the court officials.² The Āitareya Brāhmaṇa,³ however, refers to the "hundred" wives of king Harischandra. In the Jātaka period several kings kept a bigger harem. We are told in the *Kusa Jātaka*⁴ that king Okkāko (Ikshvāku) had sixteen thousand ladies in his harem among whom Silavati was the chief (aggamahesī). The king of Benares according to the Dasaratha Jātaka,⁵ had the same number of wives. In the Suruchi Jātaka,⁶ a king of Mithilā says, "Ours is a great kingdom, the city of Mithilā covers seven leagues, the measure of the whole kingdom is 300 leagues. Such a king should have sixteen thousand women at the least." Sixteen thousand appears to have been a stock phrase. The number is evidently exaggerated. But it indicates that the kings of the Jātaka period were extreme polygamists who frequently exceeded the Brāhmaṇic number of four or even a hundred queens.

The king was consecrated after his succession or election with an elaborate ritual which is described in several Brāhmaṇas, and for which the appropriate formulas (mantras) are given in the Vedic Saṃhitās. Those

1 VI. 5. 3. 1. Ved. Ind., I. 478.

2 Weber and Pischel in Vedic Index, I. 478.

3 VII. 13.

4 No. 531.

5 No. 461. The Rāmāyaṇa (II. 34. 13.) allows this king only 750 ladies besides the chief consorts.

6 No. 489.

who aided in the consecration of the king were called Rājakartri or Rājakrit, i.e., "king-maker." In the *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*¹ the persons meant and specified are the Sūta (minstrel, chronicler or charioteer), and the Grāmaṇi, leader of the host or of the village.² Prof. Rādhākumud Mookerji observes :³ "It is apparent from the lists of persons aiding in the royal coronation that both official and non-official or popular elements were represented in the function." The principal ceremonies or sacrifices of royal inauguration were the Vājapeya, the Rājasūya, the Punar-abhisheka and the Aindra Mahābhisheka.

The Vājapeya (lit. "the drink of strength") bestowed on the performer a superior kind of kingship called "Sāmrajya," while the Rājasūya or royal inauguration merely conferred the ordinary monarchical dignity.⁴ The Punar-abhisheka, or renewed consecration, made the king-elect eligible for all sorts of royal dignity, viz., Rājya, Sāmrajya, Bhaujya, Svārājya, Vairājya, Pāramesh-ṭhya, Māhārājya, Ādhipatya, Svūvaśya and Ātishṭhatva.⁵ The object of the Aindra Mahābhisheka (the great anointing of the king of the celestials) is thus described :

"Sa ya ichchhed evānvit Kshatriyam ayaṁ sarvā jīr-jayetāyaṁ sarvāṁllokān vindetāyaṁ sarveshām Rājñām Śraishṭhyaṁ, Atishṭhām, Paramātām gachcheta, Sām-

1 III. 4. 1. 7 ; XIII. 2. 2. 18.

2 The post of Grāmaṇi seems to have been ordinarily held by a Vaiśya (Vedic Index, I. 247 ; II. 334 ; Camb. Hist. 131 ; Śat Br. V. 3. 1. 6.)

3 The Fundamental Unity of India, p. 83.

4 Rājya, cf. Śat. Br., V. I. 1. 12-13 ; some texts, while agreeing that the Vājapeya is a Sāmraṭsa, says that the Rājasūya is a Varuṇa-sava, consecrated to the universal sway wielded by Varuṇa. Tait. Sañh. (V, 6, 2, 1) and Br. (II, 7, 6, 1) ; Śat. Br. V. 4. 3. 2 ; Keith, The Religion and Philosophy of the Veda and Upanishads, 340 ; Mahābhārata, Bk. II. 12. 11-13. etc.

5 Ait. Br. VIII. 6. For the meaning of these terms see Keith's translation quoted below. Keith's rendering of some of the expressions, e. g., Bhaujya and Vairājya, is, however, hardly satisfactory.

*rājyaṃ, Bhaujyaṃ, Svārājyaṃ Vairājyaṃ, Pāramesh-ṭhyaṃ, Rājyaṃ, Māhārājyaṃ, Ādhipatyam, ayaṃ samanta-paryāyi syāt Sārvabhaumah sārvaṃyusha āntādā parārdhāt
Prithivyaī samudraparyantāyā Ekarāt iti tametena Aindreṇa
Mahābhishhekeṇa kshatriyaṃ śāpayitvā'bhishīchhet.*¹

"If he who knows thus should desire of a kshatriya, 'May he win all victories, find all the worlds, attain the superiority, pre-eminence and supremacy over all kings and overlordship, paramount rule, self-rule, sovereignty, supreme authority, kingship, great kingship and suzerainty, may he be all-encompassing, possessed of all the earth, possessed of all life, from the one end up to the further side of the earth bounded by the ocean, sole ruler ;' he should anoint him with the great anointing of Indra, after adjuring him"²

The Vājapeya rites³ include a race of 17 chariots, in which the sacrificer is allowed to carry off the palm, and from which, according to Eggeling, the ceremony perhaps derives its name. Professor Hillebrandt would claim for this feature of the sacrifice the character of a relic of an old national festival, a kind of Indian Olympic games. After the chariot race the next interesting item is the mounting of a pole, having a wheaten ring or wheel⁴ on the top, by the sacrificer and his wife, from which homage is made to the mother earth. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa says, "Truly he who gains a seat in the air gains a seat above others."⁵ The royal sacrificer having descended from the pole, is offered a throne-seat

1 Ait. Br. VIII. 15.

2 Keith, HOS, Vol. 25.

3 Śat. Br. V. 1. 1. 5. ff ; S.B.E. xli ; Vedic Index, II. 281 ; Keith, Black-yajus, cviii—cxi ; RPVU, 339f.

4 Gaudhūmanī chashālam, "a wheaten headpiece (Eggeling)" "a wheel-shaped garland of meal" (S. B. E., xli, 31 ; Keith R. P. V. U. 339 ; Śat. Br. V 2. 1. 6).

5 Śat. Br., V. 2, 1. 22.

with a goatskin spread thereon and addressed by the Adhvaryu (priest) in the following words : "Thou art the ruler, the ruling lord (yantri, yamana)—thou art firm and steadfast (dhruva, dharuṇa)—(here I seat) thee for the tilling, for peaceful dwelling (kshema), for wealth (rayi), for prosperity (posha), i. e., for the welfare of the people, the common weal."¹

The Rājasūya consisted of a long succession of sacrificial performances which began on the first day of Phālguna and spread over a period of upwards of two years.² The rite is described at great length in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa.³ Besides much mere priestly elaboration, the ritual contains traces of popular ceremonial. The popular features are chiefly these :—

(1) The *Ratninām havīshi*⁴ or presents to the divinities of the bejewelled ones (or those possessed of the jewel offering), viz., the chief queen and court officials ;

(2) The *Abhishechanīya*⁵ or besprinkling ceremony ;

(3) The *dig vyāsthāpana*⁶ or the king's symbolical walking towards the various quarters as an indication of his universal rule ;

(4) Treading upon a tiger skin,⁷ thus gaining the strength and the pre-eminence of the tiger ;

(5) Narration by the kōtri priest of the story (ākhyāna) of Śunaḥśepa.⁸

¹ Sat. Br., V. 2, 1. 25 : The Fundamental Unity of India, p. 80.

² Keith, Black Yajus, pp. cxi-cxiii, RPVU, 341 ; Vedic Index, II. 219 ; SBE., xli, p. xxvi.

³ V. 2. 3. 9 (et seq.) ; S.B.E., xli, 42-113.

⁴ Śat. Br. V. 3. 1. M. Louis Renou says—"les offrandes ne sont pas faites aux ratnin mais aux divinités dans les maisons de chaque ratnin."

⁵ Śat. Br. V. 3. 3-4.

⁶ Śat. Br. V. 4. 1. 3 ; Keith, Black Yujus, op. cit.

⁷ Śat. Br. V. 4. 1. 11.

⁸ Ait. Br. vii. 13 ff ; Keith, RPVU, 341n.

(6) A mimic cow raid against a relative¹; or a sham fight with a member of the ruling aristocracy (rājanya);²

(7) Enthronement;³

(8) A game of dice in which the king is made to be the victor;⁴

The recipients of the sacrificial honours called "Ratni-nām havishī" were the divinities in the houses of the Ratnins, i. e., of the chief members of the royal household and of the king's civil and military service, viz.—

1. The Senāni (Commander of the army).⁵
2. The Purohita (Royal Chaplain).
3. The Mahishī (Chief Queen).
4. The Sāta (Charioteer and Bard).⁶
5. The Grāmanī (Leader of the Host or Village Headman).⁷
6. The Kshattri (Chamberlain)—forerunner of the Antarvamsika or Superintendent of the Seraglio of later times.⁸
7. The Samgrahitri (Treasurer)—forerunner of the Sannidhātṛi.
8. The Bhāgadugha (Collector of the Royal Share, i. e., Taxes)—forerunner of the Samūhartṛi.
9. The Akshāvāpa (Keeper of the Dice).⁹

1 RPVU, 342; cf. Śat. Br. V. 4. 3. 3 et seq.

2 Cf. Taittiriya Samhitā, 1. 8. 15 with commentary; Vedic Index II. 219. SBE: xli, 100, n. 1.

3 Śat. Br. V. 4. 4. 1.

4 Śat. Br. V. 4. 4. 6; Keith, Religion and Philosophy of the Veda, etc. p. 342.

5 Cf. Senāpati in Ait. Br. viii. 23.

6 The importance of this office is shown by the cases of Sumantra and of Sānjaya who is called a Mahāmātra (Mbh., XV. 16. 4).

7 Cf. the Adhikṛitas appointed for grāmas or villages by the paramount ruler (Samrāj) mentioned in the Praśna Upanishad (III. 4).

8 Vidura was the Kshattri (Mbh., I. 200. 17; II. 66. 1., etc.) at the Kuru Court. For the views of different commentators see Vedic Index. I. 201.

9 Cf. the position of Kaṅka (Yudhisṭhira) at the Matsya Court.

10. The Go-vikartana (lit. Cutter-up of Cattle, i. e., the King's Companion in the Chase).

11. The Pālāgala (Courier)—forerunner of the Dūta (Śāsanahara, etc.).¹

The most essential part of the Rājasūya was the Abhisheka or besprinkling. It began with offerings to the deities Savitā Satyaprasava, Agni Gṛihapati, Soma Vanaspati, Bṛhaspati Vāk, Indra Jyeshtha, Rudra Paśupati, Mitra Satya and Varuṇa Dharmapati. The consecration water (Abhishechanīyā Āpah) was made up of seventeen kinds of liquid including the water from the river Sarasvatī, sea-water, and water from a whirlpool, a pond, a well and dew. The sprinkling was performed by a Brāhmaṇa priest, kinsman or brother of the king-elect, a friendly Rājanaya and a Vaiśya.

The two most important kinds of Abhisheka were the Punar-abhisheka and the Aindra Mahābhisheka.

The Punar-abhisheka or Renewed Anointment is described in the Āitareya Brāhmaṇa.² It was intended for Kshatriya conquering monarchs. The first interesting part of the ceremony was the king's ascent to the throne or Āsandi which was made of udumbara wood with the exception of the interwoven part (vivayana) which consisted of muñja grass. Then came the besprinkling. Among other things the priest said : "Do thou become here the 1 Curiously enough, this list of the ratnins does not include the Sthapati, probably a local ruler, vassal chief, or governor who is, however, mentioned in Śat. Br. V. 4. 4. 17, in connection with the concluding ceremonies of the rājasūya. The sacrificial sword (sphya) given by the priest to the king is passed on successively to the king's brother, the sūta or the sthapati, the grāmaṇi and finally to a tribesman (sajāta). The post of sthāpāti was held by Uparikas or governors of Bhuktis (provinces) in the Gupta period (Fleet, CII, p. 120). Slightly different lists of ratnins are found in the Taittiriya texts. A group of eight vīras finds mention in the Pañchaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa (Camb. Hist. Ind. I. 131). In Śat. Br. XIII. 5. 4. 6. we have reference to the Pariveshṭri, the Kshattṛi and the Sabhāsads in connection with a performance of the horse-sacrifice.

2 VIII. 5-11.

overking of kings ; the great, of the great people, the supreme ruler of the people (or the peasantry)."¹ "Rājñām tvām Adhirāja bhaveha ; Mahāntām tvā mahīnām Samrājām charshanām."² The king was next required to get down from the throne and make obeisance to the holy power (Brahman) ; "Brahmāṇa eva tat Kshatram vaśam eti tad yatra vai Brahmanah Kshatram vaśam eti tad rāshtram samṛiddham tad vīravādāhāsmīn vīro jāyate,"³ "verily thus the lordly power (Kshatra) falls under the influence of the holy power (Brahman). When the lordly power falls under the influence of the holy power, that kingdom is prosperous, rich in heroes ; in it a hero or heir (vīra) is born."⁴ Here there is provision for the prevention of royal absolutism.

Janamejaya, the son of Parikshit, was evidently consecrated with the Punar-abhisheka.⁵

The Aindra Mahābhisheka⁶ or Indra's great unction consisted of five important ceremonies. In the first place, an Oath is administered by the priest to the king-elect : "From the night of thy birth to that of thy death for the space between these two, thy sacrifice and thy gifts, thy place, thy good deeds, thy life and thine offspring let me takē, if thou play me false."⁷ Next follows the Ārohana or enthronement. When the king is seated on the throne we have the *Utkrośana*⁸ or proclamation. The king-makers should say "The Kshatriya, if not proclaimed, cannot show his strength, let us

1 Keith, HOS, 25 (slightly emended).

2 Ait. Br., VIII. 7.

3 Ait. Br., VIII. 9.

4 Keith.

5 Ait. Br., VIII. 11. A second coronation of the Ceylonese king Devānaṃpiya Tissa is referred to by the chronicles (Geiger's trans. of the Mahāvamsa, p. xxxii).

6 Ait. Br. viii. 12-23.

7 Keith ; Ait. Br. VIII. 15.

8 Ait. Br. VIII. 17.

proclaim him. "Be it so" (the people reply). Him the king-makers proclaim saying :

"Him do ye proclaim, O men (janāḥ) as king and father of kings....The sovereign lord of all beings (Viśvasya bhūtasya adhipati) hath been born, the eater of the folk (Viśāmattā) hath been born, the destroyer of enemies (Amitrāṇām hantā) hath been born, the protector of the Brāhmanas (Brāhmaṇānām goptā) hath been born, the guardian of the law (Dharmasya goptā) hath been born."

Here we have the important attributes of kingship. In the words Viśvasya bhūtasya adhipati (supreme lord of all beings) we have a reference to the king's sovereignty and imperium. The expression Viśāmattā, devourer of the folk, alludes to his power of taxation. As Amitrāṇām hantā he exercises supreme command to weed out enemies. The epithet Brāhmaṇānām goptā gives expression to his special relations with the hierarchy, while the style Dharmasya goptā points to his duties in connection with the preservation of the laws and their proper administration for the promotion of the common weal (Yoga-kshema).

When the king has been proclaimed there is an address with the formula, abhimantrāṇa.¹

Varuṇa the Wise One

Hath set him down, preserving order,

.....for kingship.....

Then comes the anointment (abhishechana)

The following kings are said to have been consecrated with the Aindra Mahābhisheka ; Janamejaya Pārikshita, Śāryāta Mānava, Śātānika Sātrājita, Āmbāshṭhya, Yudhāmsraushti Augrasainya, Viśvakarmā Bhauvana, Sudās Paijavana, Marutta Āvikshita, Aṅga Vairochana and Bharata Dauḥshyanti.² The first-mentioned king, and probably the third, fourth, fifth and ninth also, belonged to the post-Parikshit period.¹ Durmukha Pāṇchāla and Atyarāti Jānantapi were informed of the efficacy of the rite. The first made good use of the advice. But the latter who neglected his priest, and wanted to conquer the Uttara-Kurus, whom "no mortal man could vanquish," perished at the hands of a king of the Śibis.

¹ Ibid., VIII. 18.

² Ibid., VIII. 21-23.

Closely connected with the Aindra mahābhisheka was another important ceremonial called the Aśvamedha or horse-sacrifice. All the kings who were, according to the Āitareya Brāhmaṇa, actually consecrated with Indra's great unction are represented as "going round the earth completely, conquering on every side, and offering the horse in sacrifice" (samantam sarvataḥ prithivīm jayan parīyāyāśvena cha medhyeneje). To the list of kings and princes who performed the famous rite the *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*² adds the names of the Pārikshitas (or Pārikshitiyas) Bhīmasena, Ugrasena and Śrutasena; the Kosalan king (Kausalyarāja) Para Āṭṇāra Hairanya-nābha; the Aikshvāka king Purukutsa Daurgaha; the Pāṇchāla kings Kraivya, the superman of the Krivis (Krivīmām atipurusha) and Śona Sātrāsāha; the Matsya king Dhvasan Dvaitavana, and the Śvikna king Rishaba Yājñātura. The Āpastamba Śrauta Sūtra says that a paramount king (Sārvabhauma Rājā) may perform the 1 Śātānika defeated Dhṛitarāshṭra of Kāśi who, according to the Mahāgovinda Suttanta, was a contemporary of Sattabhu of Kālīṅga and of Brahmadata of Assaka. As the Deccan kingdoms are not referred to in pre-Pārikshita works, it is probable that Śātānika and his contemporaries flourished after Parikshit. Āmbāshṭhya and Yudhāmsraushṭhi were contemporaries of Parvata and Nārada who were very near in time to Nagnajit, the contemporary of Nimi, probably the penultimate king of Videha. Aṅga was probably the immediate predecessor of Dadhivāhana who, according to Jaina evidence, flourished in the 6th century B.C.

2 XIII. 5. 4. 1-23.

Āśvamedha.¹ The Āśva or steed for a year roamed under guardianship of a hundred princes, and a hundred nobles, a hundred sons of heralds (or charioteers) and village headmen, a hundred sons of warriors and treasurers² (chamberlains?) equipped with various kinds of defensive and offensive weapons. If the year were successfully passed the steed was sacrificed. The features of the rite included panegyrics of the sacrificer along with righteous kings of yore by lute-players including a Rājanya who sings to the lute three songs made by himself, "such war he waged, such battle he won." There is also a "circle of tales," *Pāriplava Ākhyāna*³ which lasts by series of ten days for the whole year.

The kingship disclosed in Brāhmaṇic songs and ritual is not merely a "Patriarchal Presidency." The monarch is not merely a chief noble, the first among equals, 'President of a Council of Peers.' In a famous Atharvanic laud the rājā of the Kurus, is extolled as a deva who

1 XX. i. 1. Variant readings (e. g. āpyasūrvabhaumah) of the relevant text seem hardly acceptable; Cf. Baudh. XV. 1. Even as late as the time of Bhavabhūti (eighth century A. D.) the Āśvamedha was looked upon as "the super-eminent touchstone to test the might of warriors conquering the world and an indication of the conquest of all the warriors"—Āśvamedha iti viśvavijayinām Kshatriyānāmūrjasvalaḥ sarva-kshatṛiyya-paribhāvi mahānūtkarṣhā-nishkarṣhaḥ (Uttara-Rāma-charitam, Act IV, translated by Vinayak Sadashiv Patvardhan). The sacrifice seems also to have been performed in early times to atone for sinful work. There was also a Vishṇuite adaptation of the famous rite—no animals being killed on the occasion, and the oblations prepared in accordance with the precepts of the Āraṇyakas. Reference may be made to the story of Uparichara Vasu in the Śāntiparva of the Mahābhārata, Ch. 335-339 (Raychaudhuri, EHVS., 2nd ed., 132). Regarding the significance of the Āśvamedha, see also D. C. Sircar's note in Indian Culture, I, pp. 311 ff; II, 789 ff.

2 Śat. Br. XIII. 4. 2. 5, tasyaite purastādrakṣhitāra upakliptā bhavanti. Rājaputrāḥ kavachinaḥ śataṁ rājanya nishānginaḥ śataṁ sūtagrāmaṇyām putrā ishuparshinaḥ śataṁ Kshātra Saṁgrahitṛiṇām putrā daṇḍinaḥ śatamaśvasataṁ nirashtam niramaṇam yasminnenamapisṛijya rakshanti.

3 S. B. E. xlv. pp. 298 ff; Pāriplava Ākhyāna in Śat. Br. XIII. 4. 3. 2; Keith, Black Yajus, pp. cxxxii f; RPVU, 343 f; Hopkins, GEI. 365, 386.

172 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

surpassed mere mortals (martyas). The consecrated king is the lord of all beings. He is called "viśvasya bhūtasya adhipati," and is further described as the devourer of the people—viśāmattā.¹ "Rājā ta ekaṁ mukhaṁ tena mukhena viśo'tsi."² He is surrounded by armed kinsmen and retainers.³ He can "banish a Brāhmaṇa at will, mulot and overpower a Vaiśya at will, and exact labour from or slay a Śūdra at will."⁴ Further he claims the power of giving his kingdom away to anybody he liked. In the Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad Janaka says to Yājñavalkya, "So'haṁ Bhagavate Videhān dadāmi māñchāpi saha dāsyūyeti."⁵

The king, however, was not an absolute despot in practice. His power was checked, in the first place, by the Brāhmaṇas. We have seen that the most powerful sovereigns, even those who were consecrated with the Punarabhisheka, had to descend from the throne and make obeisance to the 'holy power' (Brahman) that was the repository of culture and education in those days. We learn from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,⁶ and the *Kauṭīliya Arthaśāstra*⁷ that even a powerful king like Janamejaya was humbled by the Brāhmaṇas. Karāla Janaka met his doom for a crime against a Brāhmaṇa maiden. The Vṛishnis perished on account of their irreverent conduct towards Brāhmaṇas.⁸ This shows

1 Ait. Br., VIII. 17.

2 Kaush., Up., II. 6.

3 Ait. Br. iii. 48. "Sixty-four armed warriors assuredly were his (a Kuru's) sons and grandsons." When a Pañchāla King makes an offering there arise "Six thousand and three and thirty warriors clad in mail." Śat. Br. XIII. 5. 4. 16; cf. 4. 2. 5.

4 Ait. Br. vii. 29.

5 Bṛih. Up., IV. 4. 23.

6 VII. 27.

7 Ed. 1919, p. 11.

8 Cf. also the fate of the Vaitahavyas, Camb. Hist. 121.

that not only kings, but republican corporations (Saṅgha), too, had to cultivate friendly relations with the Brāhmaṇas.

The second check was supplied by the ministers individually or in council, and village headmen who aided in the consecration of the king and whom the king consulted on important occasions. In the Vedic texts the Sūta and the Grāmaṇi are styled Rājakarṣi or Rājakṛit, i.e., King-maker, "Rajakṛitah Sūta-Grāmaṇyah."¹ The very title indicates their importance in the body politic. They, as well as the other Ratnins, figure prominently in the sacrifice of royal inauguration.

The existence of a Royal Council (Sabhā) is clearly suggested by references to sabhāsads in Vedic texts, particularly in connection with king Marutta Āvikshita.² In the *Rāmāyaṇa*³ the sabhā is clearly a body in which the Rājakarṣis have a place along with the amātyas and the Rājapurohita (royal chaplain). The claim of the ministers and headmen to be consulted is recognised in Pāli texts while dealing with the period down to the time of Bimbisāra. The Mahāvagga says, "King Brahmadatta of Kāsi, O Bhikkhus, having entered Benares, convoked his ministers and counsellors (Amacce Pārisajje sannipātā petvā)⁴ and said to them: 'If you should see, my good sirs, young Dīghāvu, the son of king Dīghīti of Kosala, what would you do to him?' " The *Mahā assāroha Jātaka*⁵ refers to a king who by beat of drum through the city gathered together his councillors (amachcha, amātya). The Chulla-Sutasoma Jātaka refers to the eighty

1 Śat. Br., III. 4. 1. 7; XIII. 2. 2. 18; In Rām. II. 67. 2; 79. 1. the King-makers are dvijātayah.

2 Āit. Br. viii. 21; Śat. Br. XIII. 5. 4. 6.

3 II. 67. 2-4.

4 S.B.E., XVII 304; Vinayaṭīkā (Oldenberg), I (1879), p. 348. Cf. Rām. II, 79, Sāmātyāḥ Saṅgarishadh.

5 No. 302,

thousand councillors of a king headed by his general,¹ (Senāpati pamukhāni asīti amachcha sahāssāni). The power of councillors (amātyas) to depose a prince and elect a king is recognised in the Pāṇḍjali, Saṁvara, and Sonaka Jātakas respectively. There is evidence regarding special gemots of village headmen. We are told that "when Seniya Bimbisāra, the king of Magadha, was holding an assembly of the eighty thousand Grāmanikas (village headmen) he sent message to Śoṇa Kolivisa."²

Another check was supplied by the general body of the people (Jana, Mahājana) who were distinct from the ministers and Grāmanīs, or Grāmikas, and who used to meet in an assembly styled Samiti or Parishad in the Upanishads.³ In the Utkrośana passage of the *Aitareya Brāhmaṇa*⁴ the people (Janāḥ) are clearly distinguished from the Rājakartāraḥ among whom, according to the *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*⁵ were included the Sūta and the Grāmanī.⁶ That the Samiti or Parishad was an assembly of the whole people, is apparent from such expressions as "bhūyishthāḥ Kuru-Pañchālāssāgatā bhavitāraḥ...,"⁷ "Pañchālānām Samitiṁ eyāya", "Pañchālānām Parishadam ājagāma," "samaggā Śivayo hutvā". The *Chhāndogya Upanishad*⁸ mentions the Samiti of the Pañchāla people presided over by king Pravāhaṇa Jaivali, Śvetaketurh

1 Cowell's Jātaka, V, p. 97 (No. 525) ; 'eighty thousand' is a stock number and should not be taken too literally.

2 Mahāvagga, S.B.E. XVII, p. 1.

3 In the Jaim. Up. Br. II. 11. 4. we find a reference to the Parishad, the Sabhā and the Saṁsad. It is not clear, if these are distinct institutions. The sabhā and the samiti are, however, distinguished in the Atharva-Veda.

4 VIII, 17 ; cf. Śat. Br. V. 33. 12.

5 III, 4. 1. 7 ; XIII. 2. 2. 18.

6 For Mahājana, see Jātaka (525) Vol. V. p. 187 ; Jātakas (542, 547), Vol. VI. p. 156, 489 etc. ; cf. Śat. Br. V. 3. 3. 12.

7 "Most of the Kuru-Pañchalas shall be assembled together," Jaim. Up. Br. III. 7. 6.

8 V. 3. 1.

Āruṇeyah Pañchālānām Samitim eyāya ; tam ha Pravāhaṇo Jaivalīr uvācha." The *Bṛihadāraṇyaka Upanishad*¹ uses the term Parishad instead of Samiti, "Śvetaketur ha vā Āruṇeyah Pañchālānām Parishadamājagāma." The analogy of the Lichchhavi Parishā and of similar assemblies mentioned in Buddhist works shows that the functions of the Kuru and Pañchāla Parishads were not necessarily confined to philosophical discussions only. The *Jaiminiya Upanishad Brāhmaṇa*² refers to disputations (saṁvāda) and witnesses (upa-draśtrī) in connection with popular assemblies, and informs us that the procedure among the Kurus and the Pañchalas was different from that of Śūdras. The people took part in the ceremony of royal inauguration.³ The *Dummedha Jātaka*⁴ refers to a joint assembly of ministers, Brāhmaṇas, the gentry, and the other orders of the people.

That the people actually put a curb on royal absolutism is proved by the testimony of the *Atharva-Veda*⁵ where it is stated that concord between king and assembly was essential for the former's prosperity. We have evidence that the people sometimes expelled and even executed their princes together with unpopular officials. Thus it is stated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa,⁶ "Now Dush-tarita Paumsāyana had been expelled from the kingdom which had come to him through ten generations, and the Śrīñjayas also expelled Revottaras Pātava

1 VI. 2. 1.

2 III. 7. 6.

3 Ait. Br., VIII. 17.

4 No. 50 ; cf. Vessantarā Jātaka (No. 547), Vol. VI, pp. 490 ff. The whole Śivi people assembled to discuss a matter of public importance, to give advice to the King and to inflict punishment on a prince.

5 VI. 88. 3.

6 XII. 9. 3. 1 et seq. ; Eggeling, V. 269.

Chākra Sthapati.”¹ The *Aitareya Brāhmaṇa*² refers to personages who were expelled from their kingdoms (rāshṭras) and who were anxious to recover them with the help of the Kshatriya consecrated with the Punar-abhisheka. Such persons were the Indian counterparts of the French “emigrants” who sought to reclaim revolutionary France with the help of the troops of the Hapsburgs and the Hohenzollerns.³ We learn from the *Vessantara Jātaka*⁴ that the king of the Śivis (Śibis) was compelled to banish prince Vessantara in obedience to “the people’s sentence” (Sivīnaṃ vachanātthena samhū ratthā nirajjati).

The king was told :

“Sache tvaṃ na karissasi Sivīnaṃ vachanaṃ idaṃ maṇe taṃ saha puttēna Sivihatthe karissare ti”

The bidding of the Sivi folk if you refuse to do

The people then will act, methinks, against your son and you.

The king replied :

“Eso che Sivīnaṃ chhando chhandam na pamudāmase”

Behold the people’s will, and I that will do not gainsay.

The *Padakusalamānava Jātaka*⁵ tells a story how the town and the countryfolk of a kingdom assembled (jānapadā negamū cha samāgatā), beat the king and priest to death as they became a source, not of weal, but of woe (lit. fear, yato khemaṃ tato bhayaṃ), and anointed a good man as king. A similar story is told in the Sachchāṅkīra Jātaka.⁶ We are told in the *Khaṇḍakālā Jātaka*⁷ that 1 For the designation ‘Sthapati’, see ante, p. 167.

2 VIII. 10.

3 Cf. Lodge, Modern Europe, p. 517.

4 No. 547 : Text VI. 490-502. The Śibis are known to Ait. Br. viii. 23.

5 No. 432.

6 No. 73.

7 No. 542.

the people of one kingdom killed the minister, deposed the king, made him an outcaste and anointed a prince as king. The ex-king was not allowed to enter into the capital city. Fick¹ points out that in the Talapatta Jātaka a king of Takshasilā says that he has no power over the subjects of his kingdom. This is in striking contrast with the utterance of Janaka quoted above.² Evidently the royal power had declined appreciably, at least in some of the north-western Janapadas, since the days of Janaka.³

1 The Social Organisation in North-East India, trans. by Dr. S. K. Maitra, pp. 113-114. Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar follows him in Carmichael Lectures, 1918, 134f.

2 P. 172, "Bhagavate Vidhān dadāmi".

3 Note the references to elected Kings (e. g. amongst the Kathaioi) and autonomous folks by the historians of Alexander in the fourth century B.C. The Ambashthas had a strong monarchy in the Brāhmaṇa period (Ait. Br. viii 21.) In the days of Alexander (Inv. Alex. 252) the constitution was democratic.

PART II

Political History of Ancient India

PART II

From the Coronation of Bimbisāra to the Extinction of the Gupta Dynasty

CHAPTER I. INTRODUCTION.

SECTION I. FOREWORD.

The following pages deal with the political history of India from the time of Bimbisāra to that of the Guptas. For this period we are fortunately in possession of authentic historical materials in addition to literary tradition to which reference has already been made in the first part of the book. These materials are derived principally from the following sources: inscriptions, coins, accounts left by foreign observers and works of Indian authors of known date and authenticity.

Inscriptions engraved on stone and copper undoubtedly form the most copious and important source. Hardly less important are the coins which constitute almost the sole evidence of the history of certain dynasties and republican communities of the second and first centuries B. C. Foreign accounts, especially the records of Greek diplomats and navigators and of Chinese annalists and pilgrims, are especially valuable in connection with the vexed question of Indian chronology. Works of Indian writers of known epochs, that illumine the darkness of our period, and afford interesting glimpses of political history, are extremely rare and comprise the Mahābhāṣya (Great Commentary) of Patañjali, the Kalpanāmandītikā of Kumāralāta, the Life of Vasubandhu by Paramārtha and the Harsha-charita (Deeds of Harsha) by Bānabhaṭṭa.

For the history of the period from Bimbisāra to Aśoka the writer of these pages cannot claim much originality. The subject has been treated by Rhys Davids and Smith, and a flood of new light has been thrown on particular dynasties by Geiger, Bhandarkar, Rapson, Jayaswal, Jackson, Herzfeld, Hultsch and others. Use has been made of the information contained in their works, and it has been supplemented with fresh data gathered mainly from epical, Jaina, Buddhist and classical sources. As instances it may be pointed out that attention to the name Haryanka, given to the Bimbisārid family by Aśvaghoṣa, was first drawn in these pages. The tradition recorded in the Harsha-charita and Jaina works regarding the tragic end of Śiśunāga's line and origin of the Nandas has been collated with the evidence of the Graeco-Latin writers. Epic data have been used largely to locate tribes like the Kambojas and the Pulindas who figure in the Aśokan edicts, and to explain expressions like stryadhaksha, viḥarayātrā, anusamāyāna etc. Old materials have also been presented in many cases in a new shape, and the author's conclusions are often different from those of former writers.

In the chapter on the Later Mauryas the author has examined the causes of the dismemberment of the Maurya Empire, and has tried to demonstrate the unsoundness of the current theory that "the fall of the Maurya authority was due in large measure to a reaction promoted by the Brāhmanas."¹

The treatment of the history of the Early Post-Mauryan and Scythian periods, though not entirely original, is different in many respects from that of previous authors. It has not been possible to accept the current views with regard to the lineage of Pushyamitra and the history and chronology of several dynasties, notably of the Early Sātavāhanas, the Greeks of Śākala, and the Śaka-Pahlavas of the Uttarāpatha or North-West India. As early as 1923 the writer of these pages assigned to the Nāgas of the Jumna valley and Eastern Malwa and the Bhāraśivas their proper place in the history of the post-Kushan period, a fact which has been ignored in some recent publications.

¹ The Chapter on the Later Mauryas was published in the AJSB, 1920 (No. 18, pp. 305 ff.).

In the account of the Gupta period use has been made of the mass of fresh materials accumulated since the publication of the works of Bühler, Fleet, Smith and Allan. The notices of the most famous ruling family of the age in early epigraphs and literature, which are sometimes overlooked, have received due attention, its relations with southern dynasties like the Vākatakas have been discussed, and an attempt has been made to present a connected history of the so-called 'Later Guptas.'¹

1 The Chapter on the so-called Later Guptas was published in the JASB., 1920 (No. 19, pp. 313 ff).

SECTION II. LOCAL AUTONOMY AND IMPERIAL UNITY.

The chief interest of the political history of the post-Bimbisārian Age lies in the interplay of two opposing forces, one centrifugal, the other centripetal, viz., the love of local (Jānapada) autonomy and the aspiration for imperial unity. The former ideal is best expressed in the words of Manu—sarvaṃ paravaśaṃ duḥkham, sarvaṃ ātmavaśaṃ sukham,¹ “subjection to others is full of misery, subjection to self leads to happiness.” The predilection for local self-rule was in part fostered by geographical conditions. The intersection of the land of India by deep rivers and winding chains of mountains flanked by dreary deserts or impenetrable forests, developed a spirit of isolation and cleft the country asunder into small political units whose divergences were accentuated by the infinite variety of local conditions. But the vast riparian plain of the north and the extensive plateau in the interior of the Deccan Peninsula, decked with green by the life-giving streams that flow from the majestic heights of the Himalayas and the Western Ghats, fostered an opposite tendency—an inclination towards union and coalescence. The sands which choked the Sarasvatī, the floods that swelled the Lauhitya, the dangers that lurked in the Mahātavī proved no effective bar to unity. The five hills of Girivraja could not permanently withstand the conquering heroes who were charged with an imperial mission. The head of the Vindhya bent in reverence before the sage who was bringing the culture of the Ganges valley to the banks of the Godāvarī and the Tāmraparṇī.

¹ Manusamhitā, IV. 160.

The desire for union under one political authority became manifest as early as the Brāhmaṇa period and found expression in passages like the following :—

“May he (the king) be all-encompassing, possessed of all the earth, possessed of all life, from the one end up to the further side of the earth bounded by the ocean, sole ruler (ekarāt).”

The ideal persists throughout our period and inspired poets and political philosophers who spoke of the thousand yojanas (leagues) of land that stretch from the Himālayas to the sea as the proper domain of a single universal emperor (chakravarti-kshetra) and eulogised monarchs who protected the earth decked with the Ganges, as with a pearl necklace, adorned with the Himavat and the Vindhya, as with two earrings, and robed with a swinging girdle in the shape of the rocking oceans.

The imperial ideal had to contend with the centrifugal tendencies of Jānapada (provincial and tribal) autonomy. The two forces operated in successive epochs almost with the regularity of the swing of the pendulum. The aspiration for a unity that transcended local boundaries owed its success not a little to the presence of another factor in Indian politics—the danger threatening from foreign invaders. It was only when the “earth was harassed by the barbarians” (Mlechchhairudvejyamānā) that she sought refuge in the strong arms of Chandra Gupta Maurya, the first great historical emperor of India—whose dominions undoubtedly overstepped the limits of Āryāvarta. Among the early empire-builders of the south was a prince who rid his country of the Scythians, Greeks and Parthians (Saka-Yavana-Pahlava-nishūdana). And the rulers who revived the imperial glory of the Gangetic Provinces in the fourth and fifth centuries A.D., were warriors who humbled the pride of the Scythian “Son of Heaven” and braved the wrath of the Śaka king in his own city. According to sacred legends Vishṇu in the shape of a Boar had rescued the earth in the aeon of universal destruction. It is significant that the worship of the Boar Incarnation became widely popular in the Gupta-Chalukya period. The poet Viśākhadatta actually identifies the man in whose arms the earth found refuge when harassed by the Mlechchhas, who "shook the yoke of servitude from the neck" of his country, with the Vārāhitānu (Boar form) of the Self-Existent Being. Powerful emperors both in the north and the south recalled the feats of the Great Boar and the mightiest ruler of a dynasty that kept the Arabs at bay for centuries actually took the title of Ādivarāha or the Primeval Boar. The Boar Incarnation then symbolized the successful struggle of Indians against the devastating floods issuing from the regions outside their borders that threatened to overwhelm their country and civilisation in a common ruin.

CHAPTER II

THE RISE OF MAGADHA

Sarvamūrdhābhishiktānāmesha mūrdhni jvalishyati prabhāharo'yañ sarveshāñ jyotishāmiva bhāskaraha enamāsādyā rājānaḥ samriddha-balavāhanā Vināśamupayāsyanti śalabhā iva pāvakam.

—Mahābhārata.¹

SECTION I. GENERAL CHARACTER OF THE PERIOD C. 544 B. C. to 324 B. C.

The most remarkable feature of the age that commenced with the coronation of Bimbisāra c. 545—44 B.C.,² and ended with the retirement of Alexander from India and the accession of Chandra Gupta Maurya (324 B. C.), is the rise of a New Monarchy in the Eastern part of the Indian sub-continent which is already heralded by a Brāhmaṇa passage cited above³ :

“In this eastern quarter (prāchyāñ diśi), whatever kings there are of the eastern peoples, they are anointed for overlordship (Sāmrājya) ; ‘O Overlord’ (Samrāt) they style them when anointed.”

The eastern peoples (prāchyas) are not enumerated in the same manner as those of the southern, the northern and the central regions. But it may be safely assumed that the name used in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa stands for the Prasii of the Graeco-Roman writers. The most famous nations of the east in the Brāhmaṇa-Upanishad period were the Kāśis, the Kosalas and the Videhas. But a new star was soon in the ascendant. Under the vigorous kings of the race of Bimbisāra and Nanda Magadha played the same part in ancient Indian politics as Wessex did in pre-Norman England and Prussia in Hohenzollern Germany. Several circumstances contributed to the pre-eminence of the new aspirant for imperial power—its position of vantage between the upper and lower parts of the vast riparian plain of Northern India, the possession of an almost unassailable stronghold amidst five hills, and another at and near the confluence of several rivers, the arteries of commerce and navigation in those days, a superbly rich and fruitful soil, and resources including a powerful elephant corps which greatly impressed the classical writers and Kauṭilya.

¹ II. 19. 10-11.

² See below, Section VII.

³ Pp. 156-7.

But strategic position and material wealth cannot suffice to raise a nation to greatness. As Burke says, it is the quality and spirit of the people 'that give all their life and efficacy to them'. As in several Atlantic lands, so in Magadha, we have a fusion of folks and cultures. Kikatas mixed here with enterprising clans coming from upper India as Celts did with Latins and Teutons in Mediaeval France and some adjoining territories. It is not difficult to find out two strands in the cultural—no less than the racial—texture of the population. The same nation that produced relentless fighters and 'exterminators of kings' and clans like Jarāsandha of epic legend, Ajātaśatru, Mahāpadma, Chandāsoka (the ruthless conqueror of Kalinga) and perhaps Samudra Gupta, hearkened at the same time to the devout teachings of Madhyama Prātibodhīputra, Varḍhamāna Mahāvira, and Gautama Buddha, and played a conspicuous part in the propagation of a world religion as it did in the establishment of an empire embracing nearly the whole of India. The birth of Ajātaśatru and the enlightenment of the Buddha took place in the same country and the same age, and they met in Rājagriha as Charles V and

Martin Luther did at Worms. The symbol of aggressive imperialism stood face to face with the preacher of piety and morality, leader of a movement that was destined to convulse a continent. The two ideologies did not long remain apart. They were harmonised and the magician who worked the miracle was Dharm-āśoka who combined in himself the imperial tradition of his forbears as well as the spiritual fervour of the sage of the Śākya.

A characteristic of the people of Magadha was an elasticity of social behaviour which was absent in the system which developed on the banks of the Sarasvatī and the Drishadvatī. In their country Brāhmaṇas could associate with Vrātyas, the Rājanya could admit the Śūdra girl to the harem, the Vaiśya and even the Yavana could be promoted to gubernatorial office, hereditary rulers of aristocratic lineage could be expelled to make room for the offspring of a nagara-sobhinī, and the "royal throne of kings" was not beyond the reach of a barber.

Magadhan rulers and chancellors like Vassakāra and Kauṭilya, were not over-scrupulous in their methods. Tradition credits some of them with the use of Machiavellian diplomacy in disintegrating kingdoms and republics, and invention of engines of destruction which worked with deadly effect. But they had the sagacity to evolve an administrative system in which princes royal, ministers of state as well as leading men of villages had their due share. Foreign diplomats and pilgrims in the fourth century B.C., as well as the fifth and seventh centuries A.D. speak of their sense of justice, their hospitals, charitable institutions and public works. They believed in ceaseless endeavour with the object of realising the dream of a united Jambudvīpa (Greater India) integrated by political as well as spiritual ties. In the Māgadha bards, the rulers of Girivraja and Pāṭaliputra had a body of devoted men who could rouse popular enthusiasm in a cause in which they believed. These singers and chroniclers have left a legacy which is invaluable to the student of ancient history.

The rise of Magadha synchronised with, and may have been a contributory cause of, an exodus of people from the Madhya-deśa to the outlying parts of India, notably the west and the south. The displacement of the Yādavas in antiquity is vouched for by epic tradition. It is well-known that the Vṛishṇis and cognate clans of Dvārka in Kāthiāwār and several peoples of the Deccan claimed Yadu lineage. It was in the period under review that the Far South of India comes definitely within the geographical horizon of the grammarians and foreign diplomats some of whom graced the Durbar of Magadhan Kings. Sapta-Sindhu had at last developed into Jambudvīpa. And the time was not distant when a notable attempt would be made to impress the stamp of unity on it in the domain of culture and politics.

In making their prowess felt throughout the vast sub-continent of India the great men of Magadha had at first to face three problems, viz., those presented by the republics mainly on their northern frontier, the monarchies that grew up on the Rāptī, the Jumna and the Chambal, and the foreign impact that made itself felt in the Punjab. We turn first to the republics.

SECTION II. REPUBLICS IN THE AGE OF BIMBISĀRA.

It was Rhys Davids who first drew pointed attention to the survival, side by side with the monarchies, of a number of small aristocratic republics in the age of the Buddha and of Bimbisāra.¹ The most important amongst these states were the Vrijians of North Bihār and the Mallas of Kusinārā (Kusīnagara) and Pāvā. An account of both these peoples has already been given.² Among the smaller republics we find mention of the Śākyas of Kapilavastu, the Koliyas of Devadaha and Rāmagāma, the Bhaggas (Bhargas) of Sumsumāra Hill, the Bulis of Allakappa, the Kālāmas of Kesaputta, and the Moriyas of Pipphalivana.

The Śākyas were settled in the territory bordered on the north by the Himālayas, on the east by the river Rohiṇī,³ and on the west and south by the Rāptī.⁴ Their capital, Kapilavastu, stood close to the western bank of the Rohiṇī, some eight miles to the west of the famous Lumbinivana,⁵ the place of the Buddha's nativity, the site of which is marked by the Rummindei pillar of one of the greatest of his followers.⁶ The city is possibly mentioned in the Tirthayātrā section of the *Mahābhārata*⁷ under the name of Kapilāvata. It was connected by roads with the capitals of the Kosalas and

1 Buddhist India, p. 1.

2 Supra pp. 118ff, 126ff.

3 A tributary of the Rāptī (Oldenberg, Buddha, p. 96). Cunningham (AGI, new ed. 476) identifies it with the Kohāna.

4 Rapson Ancient India, p. 161; Oldenberg, Buddha, pp. 95-96.

5 AGI (new) 476.

6 Kapilavastu is sometimes identified with Piprāwā in the north of the Basti district, or Tilaura Koṭ and neighbouring ruins in the Tarāi about 10 miles to the N.W. of Piprāwā. (Smith, EHI, third ed., p. 159.)

7 III. 84. 31.

the Vrijikas, and through them with the other great cities of the age. The Śākya had a town called Devadaha which they appear to have shared with their eastern neighbours, the Koliyas. They acknowledged the suzerainty of the king of Kosala and, like him, claimed to belong to the solar (Āditya) race and Ikshvāku family.

The Koliyas claim to have been cadets from the royal house of Benares. Tradition connects them with the cities of Rāmāgama and Devadaha.¹ The river Rohiṇī separated their capital from that of the Śākya, and helped to irrigate the fields of both the clans.² "Once upon a time in the month of Jeṭṭhamāsa when the crops began to flag and droop, the labourers from amongst both the peoples assembled together." Then followed a scramble for water. Bloodshed was averted by the mediation of the Buddha.³ From the mutual recriminations in which they indulged, we learn that the Śākya had the custom of marrying their own sisters. Cunningham places the Koliya country between the Kohāna and Aumi (Anomā) rivers. The Anomā seems to have formed the dividing line between the Koliyas on the one hand and the Mallas and Moriyas on the other.

The Bhaggas (Bhargas) are known to the *Āitareya Brāhmaṇa*⁴ and the Aṣṭādhyāyī of Paṇini.⁵ The former work refers to the Bhārgāyaṇa prince Kairiśi Sutvan. In the latter half of the sixth century B.C., the Bhagga state was a dependency of the Vatsa kingdom; for we learn from the preface to the Dhonaśākha Jātaka,⁶ that prince Bodhi, the son of Udayana, king of the Vatsas, dwelt

1 DPPN, I. 689f. The Koliya capital stood close to the eastern bank of the Rohiṇī.

2 The Kuṇāla Jātaka (introductory portion).

3 DPPN, I. 690, Cunn. AGI (new) 477; 491 ff.

4 VIII. 28.

5 IV. i. 111, 177.

6 No. 353.

in Sumsumāragiri and built a palace called Kokanada. The Mahābhārata and the Harivaṃśa also testify to the close connection between the Vatsas and the Bhargas (Bhaggas) and their proximity to the Nishādas. The testimony of the epic and the Apadāna seems to locate them in the Vindhyan region between the Jumna and the Śon.¹

Regarding the Bulis and the Kālāmas we know very little. The *Dhammapada commentary*² refers to the Buli territory as the kingdom of Allakappa, and says that it was only ten leagues in extent. From the story of its king's intimate relationship with king Veṭhadīpa it may be presumed that Allakappa lay not far from Veṭhadīpa, the home of a famous Brāhmaṇa in the early days of Buddhism, who made a cairn over the remains of the Buddha in his native land.³ The Kālāmas were the clan of the philosopher Ālāra, a teacher of Gautama before he attained to Sambodhi.⁴ The name of their nigama (town) Kesaputta, reminds us of the Keśins, a people mentioned in the *Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa*⁵ and probably also in the Aṣṭādhyāyī of Pāṇini,⁶ and connected with the Pañchālas and Dālbyhas who appear in the Rig-Veda,⁷ as settled on the banks of the Gomatī. Kesaputta itself seems to have been annexed to Kosala,⁸ and no doubt acknowledged the suzerainty of the king of that powerful state.

1 Mbh., II. 30. 10-11 ; Hariv., 29. 73. DPPN, II. 345 ; Supra p. 133.

2 Harvard Oriental Series, 28, p. 247.

3 Majumdar Śāstrī connects Veṭhadīpa with Kasia (AGI, 1924, 714) ; cf. Fleet in JRAS, 1906, p. 900n ; Hoey suggests that Veṭhadīpa is Bettiah in the Champaran District of Bihār.

4 Buddhacharita, XII, 2.

5 Yed. Ind., Vol. I, p. 186.

6 VI. 4. 165.

7 V. 61.

8 The Aṅguttara (P. T. S., I, 188 ; Nipāta III, 65).

The Moriyas (Mauryas) were the same clan which gave Magadha its greatest dynasty.¹ They are sometimes spoken of as of Śākya origin, but the evidence is late. Earlier evidence distinguishes between these two clans.² The name is derived, according to one tradition, from mōrā (māyūrā) or peacock. The place where they settled down is said to have always resounded with the cries of these birds. Pipphalivana, the Moriya capital, is apparently identical with the Nyagrodhavana or Banyan Grove, mentioned by Hiuen Tsang, where stood the famous Embers 'Tope'.³ Fa Hien tells us that the Tope lay four yojanas to the east of the river Anomā, and twelve yojanas (probably some 54 miles) to the west of Kusinārā.⁴

It will perhaps not be quite out of place to say here a few words about the internal organisation of the republics. Space, however, forbids a detailed treatment of the subject. They fall mainly into two classes, viz., those that were constituted by the whole or a section of a single clan (Kula) e.g., the Śākyas, the Koliyas, the Mallas of Kusinārā the Mallas of Pāvā etc., and those that comprised several clans like the Vrijis (Vajjis) and the Yādavas. The distinguishing feature of a state of this type is the absence of one single hereditary monarch who exercised full control over it. The Basileus, if he survived at all, must have done so as a mere magistracy or as a dignified

1 "Then did the Brāhmaṇa Cānakka anoint a glorious youth, known by the name Candagutta, as king over all Jambudīpa, born of a noble clan, the Moriayas." Geiger, Mahāvamsa, p. 27; DPPN, II. 673.

2 Mahāparinibbāna Sutta.

3 Rhys Davids, Buddhist Suttas, p. 135; Watters Yuan Chwang, II. pp. 23-24; Cunningham, AGI, new ed., pp. 491f, 496f.

4 AGI (new) 491, Legge, Fa Hien, p. 79; Watters, I, 141; cf. JRAS., 1903. As Kasia (Kusinārā, Kuśinagara) lay 35 miles to the east of Gorakhpur (AGI, 493), the Moriya city could not have been situated very far from the last-mentioned town. The Moriayas seem also to have been close neighbours of the Koliyas beyond the Anomā and the Mallas of Anupiyā on the banks of that river.

part of the constitution.¹ The efficient part comprised a president (chief gaṇapati, gaṇajyestha, gaṇarāja, saṃgha-mukhya) and a council of archons taken from the ruling class. Such a president was Chetaka of Vaisāli and Akoup-his of Nysa in later times, the terrestrial counterpart of Indra, in his capacity as the Jyeshtha of the Marud-gaṇa.² According to a Jaina tradition the number of members of the supreme executive in charge of foreign and military affairs was in some states nine.³ There were functionaries like uparājās and senāpatīs who exercised judicial and military functions. All these Elders possibly answer to the Mahallakas of Pāli texts and Mahattaras of the Vāyu Purāṇa,⁴ whom it was the duty of the citizens to respect and support.

Some of the clans had an elaborate system of judicial procedure with a gradation of officers. Others, notably the Koliyas, had a police force which earned notoriety for extortion and violence.⁵ Reverence for tradition, especially for traditional religion with its shrines and ministers, was a feature that recalls the part that ancestral religion played in ancient Babylonia and modern Nippon.

Perhaps the most important institution of the free republics was the Parishā, the popular assembly, where young and old held frequent meetings, made their decisions and carried them out in concord. Kettledrums⁶ were used by an officer (styled sabhāpāla in the epic) to 1 Cf. the case of Ugrasena among the Yādavas.

2 Rig-veda I. 23. 8 ; cf. II. 23. 1.

3 Nava Mallāi, Nava Lechchhāi etc. supra p. 125. In Nysa the governing body consisted of 300 members. The number of "leading men of cities and provinces" entrusted by the Kshudrakas with power to conclude a treaty is not definitely stated.

4 Vāyu. 96. 35.

5 DPPN. I. 690.

6 Kindred Sayings II. 178 (reference to kettledrum of the Dasārhas ; cf. Mbh., I. 220. 11.

bring the people to the Mote Hall, called Santhāgāra in the Pali texts. The procedure is perhaps analogous to that followed in the Kuru-Pañchāla assembly mentioned in the Jaiminiya Upanishad Brāhmaṇa, in a palaver in Śakra's heaven described in the Mahāgovinda Suttanta, or in formal gatherings of the Chapters of the Buddhist Order referred to in the Vinaya texts. Members "are seated in a specified order. After the president has laid the proposed business before the assembly, others speak upon it, and recorders take charge of the unanimous decision arrived at."¹ If there is any disputation (saṁvāda) the matter is referred to a committee of arbitrators. It is possible that technical expressions like āsana-prajñāpaka (seat-betokener), ñatti (jñapti, motion), śalākā-gāhāpaka (ballot-collector), gaṇa-pūra (whip), ubbāhikā (referendum) found in the Rules of the Order, were adopted from those in use in the assemblies of the free tribes or clans.

¹ Jaim. Up. Br. III. 7. 65. Camb. Hist. Ind., I. 176; cf., Carm. Lec. 1918. 180ff.

SECTION III. THE MINOR PRINCIPALITIES AND THE GREAT MONARCHIES.

An important feature of Indian history throughout the ages is the presence of numerous petty Rājās holding their courts either in some forest region, mountain fastness, or desert tract away from the main currents of political life, or in a riparian or maritime district, each separated from his neighbour by a range of hills, a stream, a forest or an expanse of sandy waste. It is impossible to enumerate all such tiny states that flourished and decayed in the days of Bimbisāra. But a few deserve notice. Among these were Gandhāra ruled by Paushkarasārin or Pukkusāti, a remote predecessor of Āmbhi, Madra governed by the father of Khemā, a queen of Bimbisāra, Roruka (in Sauvira or the Lower Indus Valley) under the domination of Rudrāyana,¹ Śurasena ruled by Avantiputta (either a successor of, or identical with, Subāhu), and Aṅga under the sway of Driḍhavarman and Brahmadatta.

It is difficult to say anything about the ethnic affiliation of these rulers. The form of the names indicates that they were either Aryans themselves or had come under the influence of Aryan culture. But there were certain principalities which were definitely styled Nishāda in the epic, and Ālavaka, (forest-folk of Yaksha-infested land) in the Pāli texts and were doubtless of non-Aryan origin.

One of these, the realm of Ālavaka,² demands some notice as the relic of a past that was fast disappearing. This little state was situated near the Ganges and was probably identical with the Chanchu territory visited by Yuan

1 Divyāvadāna, p. 545.

2 Sutta Nipata, S.B.E., X, II, 29-30.

Chwang (Hiuen Tsang). Cunningham and Smith identify it with the Ghāzipur region.¹ The name is derived from the capital Ālavī² (Sanskrit Aṭavī, cf. Āṭavika) or Ālabhiyā³ which stood close to a large forest that doubtless suggested the particular nomenclature.⁴ In the Abhidhānappadīpikā Ālavī finds a place in a list of twenty famous cities : Bārāṇasī, Sāvattihī, Vesālī, Mithilā, Ālavī, Kosambhī, Ujjeni, Takkasilā, Champā, Sāgala, Suṇṇāragira, Rājagaha, Kapilavatthu, Sāketa, Indapatta, Ukkattha,⁵ Pāṭaliputtaka, Jettuttara,⁶ Samkassa⁷ and Kusinārā. The *Chullavagga*⁸ mentions the Aggālave shrine at Ālavī which the Buddha honoured by his visits, as it lay on the way between the capitals of Kosala and Magadha. In the Uvāsaga-dasāo the king of Ālabhiyā is named Jiyasattū (Jita-śatru, conqueror of enemies). But Jiyasattū seems to have been a common designation of kings⁹ like the epithet Devānampiya of a later age.¹⁰ The name is given also to the rulers of Sāvattihī, Kampilla, Mithilā, Champā, Vāṇiyagāma, Bārāṇasī and Polasapura,

1 Watters, Yuan Chwang, II, pp. 61, 340.

2 Sutta Nipāta ; The Book of the Kindred Sayings, Vol. I. p. 275.

3 Uvāsaga-dasāo II. p. 103 ; Appendix, pp. 51-53.

4 Cf. The Book of the Kindred Sayings, Vol. I. p. 160. The derivation of the name of the country from aṭavī was suggested by Hoernle who also pointed out the reference in the Abhidhānappadīpikā. Cf. also the references to forest peoples and kingdoms in the inscriptions of Aśoka and Samudra Gupta.

5 A town in the Kingdom of Kosala (Dialogues of the Buddha, I, 108).

6 Near Chitor (N. L. Dey).

7 Sanskrit Sāṅkāsya or Kapiṭhikā which is identified by Cunningham with Sankisa on the Ikshumati river, in the Farukhabad District, U. P. (Cunn. AGI, new ed. pp. 422f, 706).

8 VI 17 ; cf. also Gradual Sayings, IV. 147 ; DPPN, I. 295.

9 Cf. Amitrāṇāṁ hantā of the Alt. Br. The Essay on Guṇādhyā (189 mentions Hatthālāvaka as the king of Ālavī.

10 In Babylon, however, the style "favourite of the gods" is found as early as the age of Hammurabi (Camb. Anc. Hist. I. p. 511 ; I. C., April-June, 1946. p. 241).

who were all contemporaries of Mahāvīra.¹ Buddhist writers refer to other "Yakkha" principalities besides Ālavaka.²

The most important factors in the political history of the period were, however, neither the republics nor the forest principalities but the four Great Kingdoms of Kosala, Vatsa, Avanti and Magadha.

In Kosala king Mahākosala had been succeeded by his son Pasenadi or Prasenajit. As already stated, the Kosalan monarchy had spread its tentacles over a vast area extending perhaps from the Gumti to the Little Gaṇḍak and from the Nepalese Tarāi to the Ganges, possibly even to the eastern part of the Kaimur range. It counted amongst its vassals several rājās,³ including, doubtless, the rulers of the Kāśis, the Śākya and the Kālāmas. Among its officials were two Mallas, Bandhula and his nephew Dīrgha Chārāyana,⁴ who must have helped their sovereign to secure influence in the tiny state beyond the Little Gaṇḍak from which they came. "Nine Mallakis" appear as allies of the rulers of Kāśi-Kosala in Jaina texts. Friendship with the "Visālikā Lichchhavi" and with Seniya Bimbisāra,⁵ the master of Magadha, must have favoured peaceful penetration in the east and left the king free to organise his kingdom and dealing drastically with robbers and savages who menaced the road from 1 Cf. Hoernle, Uvāsaga-dasāo, II, pp. 6, 64, 100, 103, 106, 118, 166. In the Ārya Mañjuśrī Mūla Kalpa (ed. G. Śāstri p. 645), a king of Gauḍa is styled "Jitaśatru". It is absurd to suggest, as does Hoernle (p. 103 n), that Jiyasattū, Prasenajit and Cheḍaga were identical. Cf. Indian Culture, II, 806.

2 Cf. Sutta Nipāta, S.E.E., Vol. X. ii. p. 45.

3 For the identification of the Rājās, see Part I ante, 155f.

4 Majjhima N., II. P. 118. He is probably identical with the person of that name mentioned in the Kauṣṭhīya Arthaśāstra and inscriptions (nītivijita Chārāyana), Ep. Ind. III. 210) as a writer on polity, and by Vātsyāyana as an authority on Erotics.

5 Majjhima, N. II. p. 101.

200 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Sāketa to Sāvatti, and interfered with the peaceful life of the monks.

The character of such a man, one of the leading figures of the age, who had received his education at Taxila, and became a friend of the Buddha, deserves study and we have an admirable exposition by Mrs. Rhys Davids. "He is shown combining like so many of his class all the world over, a proneness to affairs of sex with the virtues and affection of good 'family man', indulgence at the table with an equally natural wish to keep in good physical form, a sense of honour and honesty, shown in his disgust at legal cheating, with a greed for acquiring wealth and war indemnities, and a fussiness over lost property, a magnanimity towards a conquered foe with a callousness over sacrificial slaughter and the punishment of criminals. Characteristic also are both his superstitious nervousness over the sinister significance of dreams due, in reality, to disordered appetites, and also his shrewd politic care to be on good terms with all religious orders, whether he had testimonials to their genuineness or not."²

The family life of the king had its bearing on affairs of the state. He married a Magadhan princess which must have cemented his friendship with Bimbisāra, who got a Kosalan wife in return. Another queen of Pasenadi (Prasenajit) was the famous Vāsabhakkhattiyā, daughter of Mahānāman, the Sākyan, by a slave girl.³ The issues of this marriage were a son, Viḍūḍabha (Viduratha), who rose to be his father's senāpati (general),⁴ and

1 Mahāvagga, SBE, XIII, pp. 220, 261. Among the marauders was the notorious Aṅgulimāla.

2 Sage and king in Kosala-Saṅghyutta, Bhandarkar Commemoration Volume, p. 134.

3 DPPN, II. 171 ; 857.

4 For the employment of princes as Senāpati, see Kauṭilya (Mysore edition, 1919, p. 34 ; cf. 346.

afterwards his successor,¹ and a daughter Vajirā or Vajirī Kumārī² who became the queen of Ajātasatru, the successor of Bimbisāra on the throne of Magadha. The careers of the prince and the princess are bound up with memorable events viz., the war of the Kosalan king with Ajātasatru, the loss of his throne as a result of his son's revolt, and the terrible vengeance that the latter wreaked on the Śākya for sending the offspring of a slave woman to the Kosalan harem to become the mother of the prince.

When the Magadhan war brought disaster to the king's arms he married Mallikā, daughter of the chief of garland-makers, who sweetened his days till her death, and made herself famous by her benefactions. Among these was a garden, the Mallikārama, which was set apart for religious discussions.³ She leaned towards the Buddha and his order, though her husband, with great insight, extended his patronage to Brāhmaṇas as well.⁴ Mallikā and Sumanā, the king's sister,⁵ remind one of Kāruvākī and Rājyaśrī, famous for their charity and interest in Buddhist teaching in the days of Aśoka and Harsha respectively.

The internal organisation of the kingdom of Kosala presents some interesting features. There was a body of ministers at the centre, but they had little control over the 1 Viṣṇudabha's name is generally omitted in Purāṇic manuscripts. The Purāṇas, however, mention a king named Suratha. Pargiter points out (D. K. A., 12, n 63) that one manuscript of the Vishnu Purāṇa gives the name Viduratha instead of Suratha. But that prince is represented as the great-grandson of Prasenajit. Similarly, the Purāṇas represent Udayin as the grandson of Ajātasatru. These instances emphasize the need for a critical handling of the Purāṇic lists.

2 Majjhima, II, p. 110.

3 DPPN. II. 455-7. A more famous place, Jetavana, is said to derive its name from a son of Prasenajit.

4 Dialogues of the Buddha, I, pp. 108, 288. For Pasenadi's benefactions to the Buddha and his followers see Gagga Jātaka, no. 155. For preparations for a great sacrifice, see Kindred Sayings, I. 102.

5 DPPN. II. 168 ff, 172, 1245.

king's whims. Those specifically mentioned by tradition were Mṛigadhara,¹ Ugga, Siri-Vaḍḍha, Kāla and Junha. The generals included the Crown Prince and some Malla chiefs. Police duties on roads were performed by soldiers. Portions of the royal domain were granted to Brāhmaṇas like Pokkharasādī, with power over them as if they were kings. The weakness of the system soon became apparent, and led to the downfall of the king. Ministers, who were lavish in their charity, were preferred to those who approved of a more economical policy, and one of the favourites is said to have actually been allowed to rule over the kingdom for seven days. The large powers granted to Brāhmaṇa donees must have promoted centrifugal tendencies, while the infidelity of some of the generals including the Crown Prince, and the cruel treatment by the latter, when he became king, of vassal clansmen contributed to the eventual downfall of the monarchy.

In the Vatsa kingdom which, probably at this time, extended along the southern frontier of Kosala, king Śātānika Parantapa was succeeded by his son Udayana who rivals Śrī Ramachandra, Nala and the Pāṇḍavas in being the hero of many romantic legends.² The commentary on the Dhammapada gives the story of the way in which Vāsuladattā or Vāsavadattā, the daughter of Pradyota, king of Avanti, became his queen. It also mentions two other consorts of the 1 Hoerle, Uvāsaga-daśāo. II, Appendix, p. 56. DPPN, I, 332, 572, 960; II, 1146.

2 For a detailed account of the legends, see "Essay on Guṇāḍhya and the Brihaṭkathā," by Prof. Félix Lacote, translated by Rev. A. M. Tabard. See also Annals of the Bhandarkar Institute, 1920-21; Gune, "Pradyota, Udayana, and Śreṇika—A Jaina Legend"; J. Sen, "The Riddle of the Pradyota Dynasty" (I. H. Q., 1930, pp. 678-700); Nariman, Jackson and Ogden, Priyadarśikā, lxii ff.; Aiyangar Com. Vol., 352 ff.; Maḷalasekera, DPPN, I, 379-80; II, 316, 859.

Vatsa king, viz., Māgandiyā,¹ daughter of a Kuru Brāhmaṇa, and Sāmāvati, the adopted child of the treasurer Ghosaka. The Milindapañho refers to a peasant woman named Gopāla-mātā who also became his wife.² The Svapna-Vāsavadatta attributed to Bhāsa, and some other works, mention another queen named Padmāvati who is represented as sister to king Darśaka of Magadha. The Priyadarśikā speaks of Udayana's marriage with Āraṇyakā, the daughter of Driḍhavarman, king of Aṅga. The Ratnāvalī tells the story of the love of the king of Vatsa and of Sāgarikā, an attendant of his chief queen Vāsavadattā. Stories about Udayana were widely current in Avanti in the time of Kālidāsa as we learn from the Meghadūta: "prāpy-Āvantim Udayana-kathā-kovida grāmayiddhān." The Jātakas throw some side-light on the character of this king. In the preface to the Mātanga Jātaka it is related that in a fit of drunken rage he had Piṇḍola Bhāradvāja tortured by having a nest of ants tied to him. The Kathā-sarit-sāgara of Somadeva, a writer of the eleventh century A.D., contains a long account of Udayana's Digvijaya.³ The Priyadarśikā of Śrī Harsha⁴ speaks of the king's victory over the lord of Kāliṅga, and the restoration of his father-in-law Driḍhavarman to the throne of Aṅga. It is difficult to disentangle the kernel of historical truth from the husk of popular fables. It seems that Udayana was a great king who really made some conquests, and contracted matrimonial alliances with the royal houses of Avanti, Aṅga and Magadha. But his career was meteoric. He left no worthy successor. Bodhi, his son by the chief queen, preferred a quiet life amidst the sylvan surroundings of 1 Cf. Anupamā, Divyāvadāna, 36.

2 IV. 8. 25; DPPN, I. 379-80.

3 Tawney's Translation, Vol. I, pp. 148 ff.

4 Act IV.

Sumśumarāgiri to the troubles of imperial adventure. The kingdom, harassed by various wars, was at last overcome by its ambitious neighbour on the south-west, viz., Avanti, and was governed by a prince of the royal line of Ujjain.¹

The throne of Avanti was, in the days of Udayana, occupied by Chanda Pradyota Mahāsena whose daughter, Vasavadattā, became the chief queen of the lord of the Vatsas. Regarding the character of Pradyota the Mahāvagga says that he was cruel.² The Purāṇas observe that he was "nayavarjita", i.e., destitute of good policy and add that "he will indeed have the neighbouring kings subject to him—sa vai pranata-sāmantah". He had at one time made the Vatsa king a captive and had a close relation on the throne of Mathurā. The terror that he struck among his neighbours is apparent from a statement of the *Majjhima Nikāya*³ that Ajātasatru, son of Bimbisāra, fortified Rājagriha because he was afraid of an invasion of his territories by Pradyota. He also waged war on Pushkarasarin, the king of Taxila.⁴

1 Cf. story of Maṇiprabha from Avāśyaka-Kathānakas. Jacobi, pariśiṣṭa-pārvan, 2nd ed. xii, Tawney, Kathā-sarit-sagara, II. p. 484. According to the Avāśyaka-Kathānaka IV, reproduced by Bhadrēśvara in his Kahāvali, Maṇiprabha, great-grandson of Pradyota ruled at Kauśāmbī, while his brother Avantisena exercised sway at Ujjain (Avanti).

2 S.B.E., XVII. p. 187.

3 III. 7.

4 Pradyota was unsuccessful in this war and was only saved from disaster by the outbreak of hostilities between Pushkarasarin and the Pāṇḍavas (Essay on Guṇādhyā, 176).

SECTION IV. MAGADHA CRESCENT—BIMBISĀRA.

According to Jaina legend Pradyota went forth to attack Rājagṛiha even during the lifetime of Bimbisāra.¹ The last-mentioned prince, the real founder of Magadhan imperial power in the historic period, was the son of a petty chief of South Bihār, whose very name seems to have been forgotten. Tradition tried to fill the lacuna possibly by an imaginary nomenclature.² An early authority describes the family to which the prince belonged as the Haryanka-kula. As we have already seen,³ there is no reason to discard this evidence in favour of the later tradition of the Purāṇas. Young Bimbisāra, who also bore the name or epithet of Seniya (Śreṇika), is said to have been anointed king by his own father when he was only fifteen years old.⁴ The momentous event cannot fail to recall a solemn ceremony that took place some nine hundred years later when another king of Magadha clasped his favourite son in arms in the presence of the princes royal and ministers, in council assembled, and exclaimed, "Protect the entire land".

The new ruler had a clear perception of the political situation of his time. The military power of the Vṛjji Confederation was growing in the North. Aggressive monarchies under ambitious rulers were following a policy of expansion from their bases in Srayastī and Ujjain. The cruel and unscrupulous ruler of the

1. He was foiled by the cunning of Prince Abhaya (Annals of the Bhandarkar Institute, 1920-21, 3; cf. DPPN, I, 128).

2. Among the names given by various late writers we find the following: Bhāṭiyo (Bhāṭṭiya, Bodhisa), Mahāpadma, Hemajit, Kshemajit, Kshetrojā or Kshettrauja.

3. Supra p. 115ff.

4. Mahāvamśa (Geiger's trans.) p. 12.

last-mentioned city engaged in hostilities with Pushkara-sārin of Taxila. The king of Taxila harassed by numerous enemies including the mysterious Pāṇḍavas who are known to have been in possession of Śākala (in the Punjab) in the days of Ptolemy, turned to the king of Magadha for help. Though ready to oblige his Gandhārian friend by receiving an embassy, Bimbisāra, who had to liquidate the long-standing feud with his eastern neighbour across the Champā, was in no mood to alienate Pradyota or any of the other military chiefs of the age.

When the king of Avanti was suffering from jaundice he sent the physician Jivaka. He also pursued a policy of dynastic marriages like the Hapsburgs and Bourbons of Europe and contracted alliances with the ruling families of Mādra,¹ Kosala² and Vaiśālī. These measures were of great importance. They not only appeased the most formidable militarists of the age, but eventually paved the way for the expansion of the kingdom both westward and northward. Bimbisāra's Kosalan wife brought a Kāśī village producing a revenue of a hundred thousand for bath and perfume money.³ The Vaiśālīan connection produced momentous consequences in the next reign.

1 Khemā, the princess of Śākala (Mādra) is said to have been the chief consort of Bimbisāra. Was she connected with the Pāṇḍavas who are found in Śākala as late as the age of Ptolemy?

2 According to the Dhammapada commentary (Harvard, 29, 60; 30, 225) Bimbisāra and Pasenadi were connected by marriage, each having married a sister of the other.

3 Jātaka, Nos. 239, 283, 492. According to the Thusa Jātaka (338) and the Mūshika Jātaka (373) the Kosalan princess was the mother of Ajātaśatru. The preface to the Jātakas says, "At the time of his (Ajātaśatru's) conception there arose in his mother, the daughter of the king of Kosala, a chronic longing to drink blood from the right knee of king Bimbisāra". In the Saṃyukta Nikāya (Book of Kindred Sayings, 110) Pasenadi of Kosala calls Ajātaśatru his nephew. In Vol. I, page 38 n of the Book of the Kindred Sayings, however, Maddā (Madrā) appears as the name of Ajātaśatru's mother. A Tibetan writer, calls her Vāsavi (DPPN I. 34.). The Jaina writers represent Chellapā, daughter of Cheṭaka of Vaiśālī as the mother of Kūṇika-Ajātaśatru. The Nikāyas call Ajātaśatru Vedehiputta

The shrewd policy of Bimbisāra enabled him to devote his undivided attention to the struggle with Aṅga which he annexed after defeating Brahmadatta.¹ The annexation of Aṅga by Bimbisāra is proved by the evidence of the *Mahāvagga*² and that of the Śonadaṇḍa Sutta of the Dīgha Nikāya in which it is stated that the revenues of the town of Champā have been bestowed by King Bimbisāra on the Brāhmaṇa Śonadaṇḍa. We learn from Jaina sources that Aṅga was governed as a separate province under the Magadhan Crown Prince with Champā as its capital.³ The king himself resided in Rājagriha-Girivraja.⁴ Thus by war and policy Bimbisāra added Aṅga and a part of Kāśi to the Magadhan dominions, and launched Magadha to that career of conquest and aggrandisement which only ended when Aśoka sheathed his sword after the conquest of Kāliṅga. We learn from the Mahāvagga that Bimbisāra's dominions embraced 80,000⁵ townships.

The victories of Bimbisāra's reign were probably due in large measure to the vigour and efficiency of his administration. He exercised a rigid control over his (Vaidehiputra) i.e. son of the Videhan princess. This is taken to confirm the Jaina tradition because Vāiśālī was situated in Videha. Buddhaghosha, however, resolves "Vedehi" into Veda-Iha, Vedena Ihati or intellectual effort (BKS, Vol. I. 109n) and seems to suggest that the expression Vedehiputta simply means "Son of the accomplished Princess". We should moreover remember that the Kosalan monarch Para Aṅgāra, had the epithet Vaideha and the name Kauśalyā was applied to several Kāśi princesses in the epic. The appellation Vaidehiputra, therefore, does not necessarily disprove the Kosalan parentage of the mother of Ajātaśatru. The matter is obscure and we must await fresh discoveries.

1 JASB., 1914, p. 321.

2 SBE., XVII, p. 1.

3 Hemchandra, the author of the Pārisiṣṭha parvan VII. 22; cf. also the Bhagavati Sūtra and the Nirayāvalī Sūtra (ed. Warren, p. 3). King (rājā) Kuṇḍiya, son of King Sepiya by Chellanādevī, ruled in Champā-nagara in Bhāratavarsha, which is in Jambudvīpa.

4 Sutta Nipāta, SBE., X, ii. 67.

5 Apparently a stock number.

High Officers,¹ dismissing those who advised him badly and rewarding those whose advice he approved of. The result of the 'purge' was the emergence of the type of official represented by Vassakāra and Sunitha. The High Officers (Rājabhāṭa) were divided into several classes; viz., (1) Sabbatthaka (the officer in charge of general affairs), (2) Senā-nāyaka Mahāmattas (generals), and (3) Vohārika Mahāmattas (judges).² The Vinaya texts afford us a glimpse of the activities of these Mahāmātras, and the rough and ready justice meted out to criminals. Thus we have reference not only to imprisonment in jails (kārā), but also to punishment by scourging (kaṣā), branding, beheading, tearing out the tongue, breaking ribs, etc. There seems to have been a fourth class of mahāmātras who were responsible like the village syndic and headmen (grāmahojaka or grāmakūṭa) for the levy of the tithe on produce.³

In provincial administration a considerable degree of autonomy was allowed. We hear not only of a sub-king at Champā, but of *maṇḍalika rājās*⁴ corresponding perhaps to the earls and counts of mediaeval European polity. But Bimbisāra, like William the Conqueror, sought to check the centrifugal tendencies of the system by a great gemote of village headmen (grāmikas) who are said to have assembled from the 80,000 townships of the realm.

Measures were taken for the improvement of communications and the foundation of a new royal residence. Yuan Chwang (Hiuen Tsang) refers to Bimbisāra's road and causeway, and says that when Kuśāgrapara

1 Chullavagga of the Vinaya piṭaka, VII. 3. 5. See also Vinaya, I. 73 ; 74 f. 207, 240.

2 Another judicial officer mentioned in Pali texts, (Kindred Sayings, II. 172) is the Vinichchay-āmachchs.

3 Camb. Hist. I. 199.

4 DPPN, II. 898.

(old Rājagṛiha) was afflicted by fires, the king went to the cemetery and built a new city. Fa Hien, however, gives the credit for the foundation of New Rājagṛiha to Ajātaśātru. The patronage of Jivaka shows that medical arrangements were not neglected.

In one respect Bimbisāra was unfortunate. Like Prasenajit he was possibly the victim of the malevolence of the Crown Prince whom he had appointed to the vice-royalty of Champā,¹ and had perhaps even admitted to royalty, following the precedent of his own father.² The ungrateful son, who is variously called Ajātaśātru, Kūṇika and Aśokachanda³ is said to have put his father to death. The crime seriously affected the relations of Magadha with Kosala. Dr. Smith regards the story of the murder as 'the product of Odium theologicum,' and shows excessive scepticism in regard to the evidence of the Pāli canon and chronicles. But the general credibility of these works has been maintained by scholars like Rhys Davids and Geiger whose conclusions seem to be confirmed directly or indirectly by the testimony of independent classical and Jaina writers.⁴

1 Bhagavati Sūtra, Nirayāvali Sūtra, Parisiṣṭaparvan IV. 1-9; VI. 22. and the Kathākośa, p. 178.

2 Chullavagga, VII. 3. 5. Bimbisāra seems to have sought the assistance of other sons, too, in the work of government. One of these, Abhaya (son of Padmāvatī of Ujjain or of Nandā) helped his father to foil the machinations of Pradyota. Other children, recorded by tradition were Vimala Koṇḍañña by Ambapālī, Halla and Vehalla by Chellanā; Kāla, Silavat, Jayasena and a girl Chundi by other wives.

3 Kathākośa. The Aṇḍapātīya sūtra styles him Devānuṣṭhiya (IA, 1881. 108) a title possibly identical with Devānuṣṭhiya of inscriptions of the third century B. C.

4 Cf. the Jaina attempt to whitewash Kūṇika from the stain of intentional parricide (Jacobi referring to the Nirayāvali Sūtra in his Kalpa Sūtra of Bhadravāhu, 1879, p. 5).

SECTION V. MAGADHA MILITANT—KŪNIKA-AJĀTAŚATRU.

Whatever may have been the mode by which he acquired the throne, Kūnika-Ajātaśatru proved to be an energetic ruler. The defences of the realm were strengthened by fortifications at Rajagriha and the foundation of a new stronghold at Pāṭaligrama near the junction of the Śon and the Ganges. Like Frederick II of Prussia he carried out the policy of a father with whom his relations were by no means cordial. His reign was the highwater mark of the power of the Haryāṅka dynasty. He not only humbled Kosala and permanently annexed Kāśi, or a part of it, but also absorbed the state of Vaiśālī. The traditional account of his duel with Kosala is given in Buddhist texts.¹ It is said that when Ajātaśatru murdered Bimbisāra, his father, the queen Kosalā Devī died of love for him. Even after her death the Magadhan King continued to enjoy the revenues of the Kāśi village which had been given to the lady for bath money. ✓ But Prasenaḥjit, the sovereign of Kosala, determined that no parricide should have a village which was his by right of inheritance. War followed, sometimes the Kosalan monarch got the best of it, and sometimes the rival king. On one occasion Prasenaḥjit fled away in defeat to his capital Śrāvastī; on another occasion he took Ajātaśatru prisoner but spared his life as he was his nephew. He confiscated the army of the captive prince but sought to appease him by the offer of the hands of his daughter Vajirā. The princess was dismissed with the

¹ The Book of the Kindred Sayings, I. pp. 109-110. The Saṃyutta Nikāya and the Haritamāta, Vaḍḍhaki-Sūkara, Kummā Sapiṇḍa, Taṇḍhā Sūkara and the Bhaddasāla Jātakas.

Kāsi village in question, for her bath money. Her father could not enjoy the fruits of peace for more than three years.¹ During his absence in a country town, Dīgha Chārāyaṇa, the Commander-in-Chief, raised prince Viḍūḍabha to the throne.² The ex-king set out for Rājagṛiha, resolved to take Ajātaśatru with him and capture Viḍūḍabha. But he died from exposure outside the gates of the Magadhan metropolis.

The traditional account of the war with Vaiśālī is preserved in part by Jaina writers. King Seniya Bimbisāra is said to have given his famous elephant Seyanaga (Sechanaka, the sprinkler), together with a large necklace of eighteen strings of jewels, to his younger sons Halla and Vehalla born from his wife Chellāṇā, the daughter of Rājā Chetaka of Vaiśālī. His eldest son Kūṇiya (Ajātaśatru), after usurping his father's throne, on the instigation of his wife Paṃmāvai (Padmāvati),³ demanded from his younger brothers the return of both gifts. On the latter refusing to give them up and flying with them to their grandfather Chetaka in Vaiśālī, Kūṇiya, having failed peacefully to obtain the extradition of the fugitives, commenced war with Chetaka.⁴ According to Buddhaghosha's commentary the Sumaṅgala-vilāsinī,⁵ the cause of the war was a breach of trust on the part of the Lichchhavis in connection with a mine of precious gems or some fragrant

1 DPPN, II. 172.

2 Bhaddasāla Jātaka.

3 The appellation Padmāvati is of so frequent occurrence in connection with Magadhan royalty that it seems to be an epithet rather than a personal name. The mother of prince Abhaya, a queen of Ajātaśatru, and a sister of Darśaka, all have this name according to tradition. Cf. the name Padminī applied to the most commendable type of women. It is also not improbable that the name belongs to the domain of mythology.

4 Uvāsaga-dasāo, II, Appendix, p. 7; cf. Tawney, Kathākośa, pp. 176 ff.

5 Burmese Edition, Part II, p. 99. See now H. C. Law, Buddhist Studies p. 199; DPPN, II. 781.

material near a port on the Ganges over which a condominium was exercised by Ajātasatru and his northern neighbours.

The preliminaries to the struggle between Magadha and Vaiśālī are described in several Pāli texts.¹ In the Mahāvagga it is related that Sunīdha and Vassakāra, two ministers of Magadha, were building a fort at Pāṭaligrāma in order to repel the Vajjis (Vṛjīs). The Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta says: "The Blessed One was once dwelling in Rājagaha on the hill called the Vulture's Peak. Now at that time Ajātasattu Vedehiputta, the king of Magadha, was desirous of attacking the Vajjians; and he said to himself, 'I will root out these Vajjians, mighty and powerful though they be, I will destroy these Vajjians, I will bring these Vajjians to utter ruin'".

"So he spake to the Brāhmaṇa Vassakāra, the prime minister of Magadha, and said, 'Come now, Brāhmaṇa, do you go to the Blessed One, and....tell him that Ajātasattu... has resolved, 'I will root out these Vajjians'. Vassakāra hearkened to the words of the king..." (and delivered to the Buddha the message even as the king had commanded).

In the Nirayāvalī Sūtra (Nirayāvaliyā-Sutta) it is related that when Kūṇika (Ajātasatru) prepared to attack Cheṭaka of Vaiśālī the latter called together the eighteen *Gaṇarājas*² of Kāśi and Kosala, together with the Lichchhavis and Mallakis, and asked them whether they would satisfy Kūṇika's demands, or go to war with him. The good relations subsisting between Kosala and Vaiśālī are referred to in the Majjhima Nikāya.³ There is thus no reason to doubt the authenticity of the Jaina statement regarding the alliance between Kāśi-Kosala on the one hand and Vaiśālī on the other. It seems that all the enemies of Ajātaśatru including the rulers of Kāśi-Kosala and Vaiśālī offered a combined resistance. The Kosalan war and the Vajjian war were probably not isolated events but parts of a common movement directed against the establishment of the hegemony of Magadha. The flames fused together into one big conflagration.¹ We are reminded of the tussle of the Samnites, Etruscans and Gauls with the rising power of Rome.

1. SBE, XI, pp. 1-5; XVII. 101; Gradual Sayings IV. 11. etc.

2. Chiefs of republican clans.

3. Vol. II, p. 101.

In the war with Vaiśālī Kūṇiya-Ajātaśatru is said to have made use of the Mahāsīlakaṇṭaga and ra(t)hamusala. The first seems to have been some engine of war of the nature of a catapult which threw big stones. The second was a chariot to which a mace was attached and which, running about, effected a great execution of men.² The ra(t)hamusala may be compared to the tanks used in the great world wars.

The war is said to have synchronised with the death of Gosāla Mañkhaliputta, the great teacher of the Ājīvika sect. Sixteen years later at the time of Mahāvīra's death the anti-Magadhan confederacy is said to have been still in existence. We learn from the Kalpa Sūtra that on the death of Mahāvīra the confederate kings mentioned in the Nirayāvalī Sūtra instituted a festival to be held in memory of that event.³ The struggle between the Magadhan king and the powers arrayed against him thus seems to have been protracted for more than sixteen years. The 1 We are told that even Pradyota of Avanti made preparations to avenge the death of his friend Bimbisāra (DPPN, I. 34).

2 Uvāsaga-dasāo, Vol. II, Appendix, p. 60; Kathākośa, p. 179.

3 S.B.E., xxii, 266 (pāra. 128). As pointed out by Jacobi (The Kalpasūtra of Bhadravāhu, 6 ff.), the traditional date of Mahāvīra's Nirvāṇa is 470 years before Vikrama (58 B.C.) according to the Śvetāmbaras, and 605 according to the Digambaras. It is suggested that Vikrama of the Digambaras is intended for Śalivahana (78 A.D.). A different tradition is, however, recorded by Hemchandra who says that 155 years after the liberation of Mahāvīra Chandragupta became king :—

Aṭṭhakathā gives an account of the Machiavellian tactics¹ adopted by Magadhan statesmen headed by Vassakāra to sow the seeds of dissension among the Vaiśālīans and thus bring about their downfall.²

The absorption of Vaiśālī and a part at least of Kāśī as a result of the Kosalan and Vajjian wars probably brought the aspiring ruler of Magadha face to face with the equally ambitious sovereign of Avanti. We have already referred to a statement of the Majjhima Nikāya that on one occasion

*evam cha śrī Mahāvīra mukter varshaśate gate pañchapañchāśadadhike Chandragupto bhavan nṛpaḥ.
Sthavirāvalīcharita, Parisiśṭṭaparva, VIII. 339.*

As Chandragupta's accession apparently took place between 326 and 312 B.C., the tradition recorded in Hemchandra's Parisiśṭṭaparvan would place the date of Mahāvīra's death between 481 and 467 B.C. But early Buddhist texts (Dialogues, III, pp. 111, 203; Majjhima, II, 243) make the famous Jaina teacher predecease the Buddha, and the latest date assigned by reliable tradition to the Parinirvāṇa of the Śākya sage is 486 B.C. (Cantonese tradition, Smith, EHI, 4th ed., 49). According to Ceylonese writers, Śākyamuni entered into nirvāṇa in the eighth year of Ajātaśatru (Ajātasattuno vasse aṭṭhame muni nibbute, Mahāvamsa, Ch. II). This would place the accession of the son of Bimbisāra in 493 B.C., if the Cantonese date for the nirvāṇa of the Buddha is accepted. Jaina writers put the interval between Kūṣika's accession and the death of their master at 16 and 'x' years. According to Buddhist chroniclers the interval would be less than 8 years as Mahāvīra predeceased the Buddha. The divergent data of the Jaina and Buddhist texts can only be reconciled if we assume that the former take as their starting point the date of the accession of Kūṣika as the rājā of Champā, while the Buddhists begin their calculation from a later date when Ajātaśatru mounted the throne of Rājagṛha. According to Buddhist tradition Vassakāra's visit to the Buddha in connection with the Vṛjji incident took place a year before the parinirvāṇa. The destruction of the Vṛjji power took place some three years later on (DPPN, I. 33-34) i.e. c. 484 B.C. Too much reliance cannot, however, be placed on the traditional chronology.

1 Diplomacy (upatāpana) and disunion (mithubheda), DPPN, II. 846; JRAS, 1931. Cf. Gradual Sayings, IV. 12. "The Vajjians cannot be overcome in battle, but only by cunning, by breaking up their alliance."

2 Cf. Modern Review, July, 1919, pp. 55-56. According to the Ārya Mañjuśrī-Mūla-Kaṭpa (Vol. I, ed. Ganapati Śāstrī, pp. 603 f) the dominions of Ajātaśatru embraced, besides Magadha, Aṅga, Vārāṇasī (Benares), and Vaiśālī in the north. In the opinion of Dr. Jayaswal the Parkham statue is a contemporary portrait of king Ajātaśatru. But this view has not met with general acceptance.

Ajātaśatru was fortifying his capital because he was afraid of an invasion of his dominions by Pradyota. We do not know whether the attack was ever made. Ajātaśatru does not appear to have succeeded in humbling Avanti. The conquest of that kingdom was reserved for his successors.

It was during the reign of Ajātaśatru that both Mahāvīra and Gautama, the great teachers of Jainism and Buddhism respectively, are said to have entered nirvāṇa. Shortly after the death of Gautama a Council is said to have been held by the monks of his Order for the recitation and collection of the Doctrine.

SECTION VI. AJĀTAŚATRU'S SUCCESSORS—THE TRANSFER OF CAPITAL AND THE FALL OF AVANTI

Ajātaśatru was succeeded according to the Purāṇas by Darśaka. Geiger considers the insertion of Darśaka after Ajātaśatru to be an error, because the Pāli Canon indubitably asserts that Udāyi-bhadda was the son of Ajātaśatru and probably also his successor. Jaina tradition recorded in the *Kathākośa*¹ and the *Parīśiṣṭaparvan*² also represents Udaya or Udāyin as the son of Kūṇika by his wife Padmāvati,³ and his immediate successor.

Though the existence of Darśaka, as a ruler of Magadha and a contemporary of Udayana, is rendered probable by references in the Svapna-Vāsavadatta attributed to Bhāsa, yet in the face of Buddhist and Jaina evidence it cannot be confidently asserted that he was the immediate successor of Ajātaśatru on the imperial throne of Magadha. He may have been one of the maṇḍalika rājās like the father of Viśākha Pāñchālīputra. His inclusion among Magadhan suzerains is possibly paralleled by that of Śuddhodana in the main list of the Ikshvākuids. Certain writers identify him with Nāga-Dāsaka who is represented by the Ceylonese Chronicles as the last king of Bimbisāra's line.⁴ The Dīvyāvadāna,⁵ however,

1 P. 177.

2 P. 42.

3 Buddhist writers represent Vajirā, daughter of Prasenajit, as the mother of Udāyi.

4 e. g. Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar. In this connection mention was made in earlier editions of a passage in the Sī-yu-ki, (Beal's Trans. II. p. 102): "To the south-west of the old Saṅghārāma about 100 li is the Saṅghārāma of Ti-lo-shi-kia...It was built by the last descendant of Bimbisāra rāja." The name of the second Saṅghārāma was sought to be connected with that of Darśaka who was here represented as the last descendant of Bimbisāra. But I now think that the connection of the monastery with the name of Darśaka is extremely doubtful. See Watters II. p. 106f.

5 P. 369.

omits this name altogether from the list of the Bimbisārids. There was thus no unanimity even among Buddhists about the lineage and position of the king.

Udāyin : Before his accession to the throne Udāyin or Udāyi-bhadda, the son of Ajātasatru, seems to have acted as his father's Viceroy at Champā.¹ The Parīśiṣṭa-parvan informs us that he founded a new capital on the banks of the Ganges which came to be known as Pāṭali-putra.² This part of the Jaina tradition is confirmed by the testimony of the *Gārgī Samhitā*³ and the Vāyu Purāṇa according to which Udāyin built the city of Kusumapura (Pāṭaliputra) in the fourth year of his reign. The choice of the place was probably due to its position in the centre of the realm which now included North Bihār. Moreover, its situation at the confluence of two large rivers, the Ganges and the Śoṇ and close to other streams, was important from the commercial as well as the strategic point of view. In this connection it is interesting to note that the Kautilya Arthaśāstra recommends a site at the confluence of rivers for the capital of a kingdom.

The *Parīśiṣṭa-parvan*⁴ refers to the king of Avanti as the enemy of Udāyin. This does not seem to be improbable in view of the fact that his father had to fortify his capital in expectation of an attack about to be made by Pradyota, ruler of that country. The fall of Aṅga and Vaiśālī and the discomfiture of Kosala had left Avanti the only important rival of Magadha. This last kingdom had absorbed all the monarchies and republics of Eastern India. On the other hand, if the Kathā-sarit-sāgara and the *Avaiyaka kathānakās*⁵ are to be believed, the kingdom

1 Jacobi, Parīśiṣṭa-parvan, p. 42.

2 VI, 34 ; 175-180.

3 Kern, Bṛhat Samhitā, 36.

4 Pp. 45-46, Text VI, 191. Abhūdasaṇanītyam Avantiśo' py-Udāyinaḥ

5 See Supra sec. III. p. 204.

of Kauśāmbī was at this time annexed to the realm of Pālaka of Avanti, the son of Pradyota and was governed by a prince belonging to his family. The two kingdoms, Magadha and Avanti, were brought face to face with each other. The war of nerves between the two for ascendancy probably began, as we have seen, in the reign of Ajātaśatru. It must have continued during the reign of Udāyin. The issue was finally decided in the time of Śīśunāga, or of Nanda as Jaina tradition seems to suggest.²

Udāyin's successors in the Purāṇas are Nandivardhana and Mahānandin. According to the Jainas he left no heir.³ The Ceylonese chroniclers place after Udāyi the kings named Anuruddha, Muṇḍa and Nāga-Dāsaka. This tradition is partially confirmed by the 1 For a traditional account of the conflict between Udāyin and the king of Avanti, see IHQ, 1929, 399.

In the opinion of Dr. Jayaswal one of the famous "Patna Statues" which, at the time of the controversy, stood in the Bhārhut Gallery of the Indian Museum (Ind. Ant., 1919, pp. 29ff.), is a portrait of Udāyin. According to him the statue bears the following words :

Bhage ACHO chhonidhiṣe.

He identifies ACHO with king Aja mentioned in the Bhāgavata list of Śīśunāga kings, and with Udāyin of the Matsya, Vāyu and Brahmāṇḍa lists. Dr. Jayaswal's reading and interpretation of the inscription have not, however, been accepted by several scholars including Dr. Barnett, Mr. Chanda and Dr. R. C. Majumdar. Dr. Smith, however, while unwilling to dogmatize, was of opinion that the statue was pre-Maurya. In the third edition of his Asoka he considers Dr. Jayaswal's theory as probable. The characters of the short inscription on the statue are so difficult to read that it is well-nigh impossible to come to a final decision. For the present the problem must be regarded as not yet definitely solved. Cunningham described the statue as that of a Yaksha. According to him the figure bore the words "Yakhe Achusanigika." Mr. Chanda's reading is : Bha (?) ga Achachha nivika (the owner of inexhaustible capital, i. e., Vaiśravaṇa). See Indian Antiquary, March, 1919. Dr. Majumdar reads : Gate (Yakhe?) Lechchhai (vi) 40. 4. (Ind. Ant., 1919).

2 Ind. Ant., II. 362.

3 Pariśiṣṭaparvan, VI. 236.

Aṅguttara Nikāya which alludes to Muṇḍa,¹ King of Pāṭaliputra. The Divyāvadāna, too, mentions Muṇḍa but omits the names of Anuruddha and Nāga-Dāsaka. The Aṅguttara Nikāya by mentioning Pāṭaliputra as the capital of Muṇḍa indirectly confirms the tradition regarding the transfer of the Magadhan metropolis from Rājagṛiha to Kusumapura or Pāṭaliputra before his reign.

The Ceylonese aver that all the kings from Ajātaśatru to Nāga-Dāsaka were parricides.² The citizens drove out the family in anger and raised an amātya (official) to the throne.

Susunāga or Śīsunaṅga, the new king³ seems to have been acting as the Magadhan Viceroy at Benares. The employment of amātyas as provincial governors or district officers need not cause surprise. The custom continued as late as the time of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi and Rudradāman I. The Purāṇas tell us that "placing his son at Benares he will repair to (the stronghold of) Girivraja". He had a second royal residence at Vaiśālī which ultimately became his capital.⁴ "That monarch (Śīsunaṅga), not unmindful of his mother's origin,⁵ re-established the city of Vesālī (Vaiśālī) and fixed in it the royal residence. From that

1 Aṅg. III. 57. "The venerable Nārada dwelt near Pāṭaliputta in the Cock's Park. Now at that time Bhaddā, the dear and beloved queen of king Muṇḍa died." The king's grief was intense. The queen's body was placed in an oil vessel made of iron. A treasurer, Piyaka, is also mentioned. (Gradual Sayings, III. 48).

2 The violent death of Kūṇika (Ajātaśatru) is known to Jain tradition (Jacobi, Parīśiṣṭaparvan, 2nd ed. p. xiii).

3 The question of the relative merits of Purāṇic and Ceylonese accounts of this king and his place in early Magadhan lists of kings have been discussed in Part. I. p. supra, 115 ff.

4 SBE, XI, p. xvi. "If the Dvātriṃśat puttalikā is to be believed Vesālī (Vaiśālī) continued to be a secondary capital till the time of the Nandas.

5 Śīsunaṅga, according to the Mahāvamsa (Turnour's Mahāvamsa, xxxvii), was the son of a Lichchhavi rājā of Vaiśālī. He was conceived by a nagara-śobhinī and brought up by an officer of state.

time Rājagaha (Rājagriha-Girivraja) lost her rank of royal city which she never afterwards recovered".

The most important achievement of Śiśunāga seems to have been the destruction of the 'glory' of the Pradyota dynasty of Avanti. Pradyota, the first king of the line, had been succeeded, according to tradition, by his sons Gopāla and Pālaka after whom came Viśākha and Āryaka. The name of Gopāla is omitted in the Purāṇas with the possible exception of the k Vishṇu manuscript, where it finds mention instead of Pālaka.¹ The accession of the latter synchronised, according to Jaina accounts, with the passing away of Mahāvira. He is reputed to have been a tyrant. Viśākha-bhūpa (i.e., king Viśākha, called Viśākha-yūpa in most Purāṇic texts) may have been a son of Pālaka.² The absence of any reference to this prince in non-Purāṇic accounts that have hitherto been available, may suggest that he ruled in some outlying district (Māhiśmati), or was set aside in favour of Āryaka who occupied the throne, as a result of a popular outbreak, almost immediately after the fall of Pālaka. The Purāṇas place after Āryaka or Ajaka a king named Nandivardhana, or Vartivardhana, and add that Śiśunāga will destroy the prestige of the Pradyotas and be king. Dr. Jayaswal identifies Ajaka and Nandivardhana of the Avanti list with Aja-Udayin and Nandivardhana of the Purāṇic list of Śiśunāga kings. Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar, on the other hand, says that Āryaka or Ajaka was the son of Gopāla, the elder brother of Pālaka.¹ 'Nandivardhana' and 'Vartivardhana' are apparently corruptions of Avantivardhana, the name of a son of Pālaka according to the Kathā-sarit-sāgara,² of Gopāla according to the Nepalese Bṛihat-kathā,³ or possibly identical with Avantisena, a grandson of Pālaka according to the Āvaśyaka Kathānakas.⁴ The Pradyota dynasty must have been humbled by Śiśunāga in the time of king Avantivardhana. The Magadhan victory was doubtless facilitated by the revolution that placed Āryaka, a ruler about whose origin there is hardly any unanimity, on the throne of Ujjain.

1 Essay on Guṇāḍhya, 115 ; Gopāla and Pālaka find mention in the Bṛihat-Kathā, Svapna-Vāsavadatta, Pratjñā-Yaugandharāyaṇa, Mṛichchhakatika etc. A prince named Kumārasena is known to the Harsha-charita. According to the Nepalese Bṛihat-kathā (cf. Kathā-sarit-sāgara XIX. 57) Gopāla succeeds Mahāsena (Pradyota) but abdicates in favour of his brother Pālaka. Pālaka renounces the crown in favour of Avantivardhana, son of Gopāla. In the Āvaśyaka Kathānakas (Pariśiṣṭa parvan, 2nd ed, xii) Avantisena is mentioned as a grandson of Pālaka.

2 DKA., 19 n29. The Kalki Purāṇa (1. 3. 32f.) mentions a king named Viśākha-yūpa who ruled at Māhiśmati near the southern frontier of ancient Avanti.

Śiśunāga⁵ was succeeded according to the Purāṇas by his son Kākavarṇa, and according to the Ceylonese chronicles by his son Kālāsoka. Jacobi, Geiger and Bhandarkar agree that Kālāsoka, "the black Aśoka" and Kākavarṇa, "the crow-coloured" are one and the same

1 Carm. Lec. 1918, 64f. But J. Sen rightly points out (IHQ, 1930, 699) that in the Mṛichchhakatika Āryaka is represented as a cow-boy who was raised to the throne after the overthrow of the tyrant Pālaka.

2 Tawney's translation, II, 485. Cf. Camb. Hist. Ind., I, 311.

3 Essay on Guṇādhya, 115.

4 Parīśiṣṭa parvan, 2nd ed. p. xii.

TRADITIONAL GENEALOGY OF THE PRADYOTAS.

5 The Kāvya Mīmāṃsā (3rd ed. p. 50) contains an interesting notice of this king and says that he prohibited the use of cerebrals in his harem.

individual. The conclusion accords with the evidence of the Aśokāvadāna which places Kākavarnin after Muṇḍa, and does not mention Kālāśoka.¹ The new king already served his apprenticeship in the art of government possibly at Benares and in the district of Gayā. The two most important events of his reign are the meeting of the second Buddhist Council at Vaiśālī, and the final transfer of the capital to Pāṭaliputra.

Bāṇa in his *Harsha-charita*² gives a curious legend concerning his death. It is stated that Kākavarṇa Śaiśunāgi had a dagger thrust into his throat in the vicinity of his city. The story about the tragic fate of this king is, as we shall see later on, confirmed by Greek evidence.

The traditional successors of Kālāśoka were his ten sons who are supposed to have ruled simultaneously. Their names according to the Mahābodhivaṃsa were Bhadrāsena, Koranḍavarṇa, Maṅgura, Sarvañjaha, Jālika, Ubhaka, Sañjaya, Koravya, Nandivardhana and Pañchamaka.³

Only one of these names viz. that of Nandivardhana occurs in the Purāṇic lists.⁴ This prince attracted some attention in recent years. His name was read on a Patna statue⁵ and in the famous Hāthigumphā inscription of Khāravela. He was sought to be identified with Nandarāja of Khāravela's record on the strength of Kshemen-dra's reference to Pūrvananda (Nanda the Elder) who,

1 Dīvyāvadāna, 369; Geiger, Mahāvamsa, p. xli.

2 K. P. Parab, 4th ed. 1918. p. 199.

3 The Dīvyāvadāna (p. 369) gives a different list of the successors of Kākavarṇin: Sahālin, Tulakuchi, Mahāmaṇḍala and Prasenajit. After Prasenajit the crown went to Nanda.

4 Bhandarkar, Carm. Lec. 1918, 83.

5 Dr. Jayaswal opined that the headless "Patna statue" which stood, at the time when he wrote, in the Bhārhut Gallery of the Indian Museum, was a portrait of this king. According to him the inscription on the statue runs as follows:—

Sapa (or Sava) khate Vaṭa Nāndi.

we are told, should be distinguished from the Navanandāh or New (Later) Nandas, and taken to answer to a ruler of the group represented by Nandivardhana and Mahānandin of the Purāṇas.¹ In the works of Kshemendra and Somadeva, however, Pūrvananda (singular) is distinguished, not from the Navanandāh, but from Yogananda (Pseudo-Nanda), the re-animated corpse of

He regarded Vaṭa Nāṁdi as an abbreviation of Vartivardhana (the name of Nandivardhana in the Vāyu list) and Nandivardhana. Mr. R. D. Banerji in the June number of the Journal of the Bihar and Orissa Research Society, 1919, said that there cannot be two opinions about the reading Vaṭa Nāṁdi. Mr. Chanda, however, regarded the statue in question as an image of a Yaksha and read the inscription which it bore as follows :—

Yakha sa (?) vaṭa nāṁdi.

Dr. Majumdar said that the inscription might be read as follows :—

Yakhe saṁ vajinām 70.

He placed the inscription in the second century A. D., and supported the Yaksha theory propounded by Cunningham and upheld by Mr. Chanda. He did not agree with those scholars who concluded that the statue was a portrait of a Śaiśunāga sovereign simply because there were some letters in the inscription under discussion which might be construed as a name of a Śaiśunāga king. Referring to Dr. Jayaswal's suggestion that the form Vaṭa Nāṁdi was composed of two variant proper names (Vartivardhana and Nāṁdivardhana)—he said that Chandragupta II was also known as Devagupta, and Vīgrahapāla had a second name Śūrapāla ; but who had ever heard of compound names like Chandra-Deva, or Deva-Chandra, and Śūra-Vīgraha or Vīgraha-Śūra ? (Ind. Ant., 1919).

Mahāmahopādhyāya Haraprasād Śāstri took Vaṭa Nāṁdi to mean Vrātya Nāṁdi and said that the statue had most of the articles of dress as given by Kātyāyana to the Vrātya Kshatriyas. In the Purāṇas the Śiśunāga kings are mentioned as Kshattrabandhus, i. e., Vrātya Kshatriyas. The Mahāmahopādhyāya thus inclined to the view of Dr. Jayaswal that the statue in question was a portrait of a Śaiśunāga king (JBORS., December, 1919).

Mr. Ordhendu Coomarr Gangoly, on the other hand, regarded the statue as a Yaksha image, and drew our attention to the catalogue of Yakshas in the Mahāmāyūrī and the passage "Nāṁdi cha Vardhanas chaiva nagare Nandivardhane" (Modern Review, October, 1919). Dr. Barnett was also not satisfied that the four syllables which might be read as Vaṭa Nāṁdi mentioned the name of a Śaiśunāga king. Dr. Smith, however, in the third edition of his Asoka admitted the possibility of Dr. Jayaswal's contention. We regard the problem as still unsolved. The data at our disposal are too scanty to warrant the conclusion that the inscription on the "Patna statue" mentions a Śaiśunāga king. The script seems to be late.

¹ Jayaswal (supported by R. D. Banerji) : The Oxford History of India, Additions and Corrections ; JBORS, 1918, 91.

king Nanda.¹ The Purāṇic as well as the Ceylonese, chroniclers know of the existence of only one Nanda line and agree with Jaina tradition in taking nava to mean nine (and not new).² They represent Nandivardhana as a king of the Śaiśunāga line—a dynasty which is sharply distinguished from the Nandas. The Purāṇas contain nothing to show that Nandivardhana had anything to do with Kalinga.³ On the contrary, we are distinctly told that when the Śaiśunāgas and their predecessors were reigning in Magadha 32 kings ruled in Kalinga synchronously. “It is not Nandivardhana but Mahāpadma Nanda who is said to have brought ‘all under his sole sway’ and ‘uprooted all Kshatriyas.’ So we should identify Nandārāja of the Hāthigumphā inscription who held possession of Kalinga either with the all-conquering Mahāpadma Nanda or one of his sons.”

1 Cf. Kathā-sārīt-sāgara, Durgāprasād and Parab's edition, p. 10.

2 Cf. Jacobi, Parīśishta-parva, VIII. 3 ; App. p. 2 : ‘Nandavamse Navamo Nandārājā’.

3 Chanda, Memoirs of the Archaeological Survey of India, No. I, p. 11.

SECTION VII. CHRONOLOGY OF THE HARYAŅKA- ŚAIŚUNĀGA KINGS.

There is considerable disagreement between the Purāṇas and the Ceylonese chronicles regarding the chronology of the kings of the Bimbisārian (or Haryaṅka) and Śaiśunāga dynasties. Even Smith and Pargiter are not disposed to accept all the dates given in the Purāṇas.¹ According to Ceylonese tradition Bimbisāra ruled for fifty-two years, Ajātaśatru for 32 years, Udayi for 16 years, Anuruddha and Muṇḍa for 8 years, Nāga-Dāsaka for 24 years, Śiśunāga for 18 years, Kālāśoka for 28 years and Kālāśoka's sons for 22 years. Gautama Buddha died in the eighth year of Ajātaśatru,² i.e., in the (52+8=) 60th year (i.e., a little more than 59 years) after the accession of Bimbisāra. The event happened in 544 B.C. according to a Ceylonese reckoning, and in 486 B.C. according to a Cantonese tradition of 489 A.D., based on a 'dotted record' brought to China by Saṅgha-bhadra. The date 544 B.C. can, however, hardly be reconciled with a gāthā transmitted in the Ceylonese chronicles which states that Priyadarśana (Aśoka Maurya) was consecrated 218 years after the Buddha had passed into nirvāṇa.³ This fact and certain Chinese and Chola

1 Pargiter (AIHT pp. 286-7) reads the Matsya Purāṇa as assigning the Śiśunāgas 163 years, and further reduces the number to 145 allowing an average of about 14½ years for each reign. He places the beginning of the Śiśunāgas (among whom he includes the Bimbisārids) in B.C. 567 and rejects (287n) the traditional figures for the reigns of Bimbisāra and his son. Cf. also Bhandarkar, Carm. Lec., 1918, p. 68. 'A period of 363 years for ten consecutive reigns' i.e., 36.3 years for each 'is quite preposterous.'

2 Mahāvamsa, Ch. 2 (p. 12 of translation).

3 Dve satāni cha vassāni atthārāsa vassāni cha

Sambuddhe parinibbute abhisitto Piṇḍassano.

Ibid p. xxiii. (Cf. Dip. 6. 1).

synchronisms led Geiger and a few other scholars to think that the era of 544 B.C. is a comparatively modern fabrication and that the true date of the death of the Buddha is 483 B.C.—a result closely approaching that to which the Cantonese tradition leads us. The Chola synchronisms referred to by these scholars are, however, not free from difficulties, and it has been pointed out by Geiger himself that the account in Chinese annals of an embassy which Mahānāman, king of Ceylon, sent to the emperor of China in 428 A.D., does not speak in favour of his revised chronology. The traditional date of Menander which is 500 A.D., works out more satisfactorily with a Nirvāṇa era of 544 B.C., than with an era of 483 or 486 B.C. In regard to the Maurya period, however, calculations based on the traditional Ceylonese reckoning will place the accession of Chandragupta Maurya in $544-162=382$ B.C., and the coronation of Aśoka Maurya in $544-218=326$ B.C. These results are at variance with the evidence of Greek writers and the testimony of the inscriptions of Aśoka himself. Classical writers represent Chandragupta as a contemporary of Alexander (326 B.C.) and of Seleukos (312 B.C.). Aśoka in his thirteenth Rock Edict speaks of certain Hellenistic kings as alive. As one at least of these rulers died not later than 258 B.C. (250 B.C. according to some authorities) and as rescripts on morality began to be written when Aśoka was anointed twelve years, his consecration could not have taken place after 269 B.C. (261 B.C. according to some). The date cannot be pushed back beyond 277 B.C., because his grandfather Chandragupta must have ascended the throne after 326 B.C., as he met Alexander in that year as an ordinary individual and died after a reign of 24 years, and the next king Bindusāra, the father and immediate predecessor of Aśoka, ruled for at least 25 years. $326 \text{ B.C.} - 49 = 277 \text{ B.C.}$ Aśoka's coronation, therefore, took place between 277 and 261 B.C., and as the event happened, according to the old Gāthā recorded by the Ceylonese chroniclers, 218 years after the parinirvāṇa of the Buddha, the date of the Great Decease should be placed between 495 and 479 B.C. The result accords not with the Ceylonese date 544 B.C., but with the Cantonese date 486 B.C., and Geiger's date 483 B.C., for the parinirvāṇa. The Chinese account of embassies which King Meghavarna sent to Samudra Gupta, and King Kia-Che (Kassapa) sent to China in 527 A.D., also speaks in favour of the date 486 B.C. or 483 B.C., for the Great Decease. Geiger's date, however, is not explicitly recognised by tradition. The same remark applies to the date (Tuesday, 1 April, 478 B.C.) preferred by L. D. Swami Kannu Pillai.¹ The Cantonese date may, therefore, be accepted as a working hypothesis for the determination of the chronology of the early dynasties of Magadha. The date of Bimbisāra's accession, according to this reckoning, would fall in or about $486 + 59 = 545 \text{ B.C.}$, which is very near to the starting point of the traditional Ceylonese Nirvāṇa era of 544 B.C. 'The current name of an era is no proof of origins.' It is not altogether improbable that the Buddhist reckoning of Ceylon originally started from the coronation of Bimbisāra and was later on confounded with the era of the Great Decease.

In the time of Bimbisāra Gandhāra was an independent kingdom ruled by a king named Paushkarasārin (Pukkusāti). By B.C. 519 at the latest it had lost its independence and had become subject to Persia, as we learn from the inscriptions of Darius. It is thus clear that Paushkarasārin and his contemporary Bimbisāra lived before B.C. 519. This accords with the chronology which places his accession and coronation in or about B.C. 545-44.

1 An Indian Ephemeris, 1, Pt. 1, 1922, pp. 471 ff.

228 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

SUGGESTED CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE

(APPROXIMATE DATES)

Year B.C.	Event
565	Birth of the Buddha.
560	Birth of Bimbisāra.
c. 558	Accession of Cyrus the Achaemenid.
545-44	Accession of Bimbisāra. Epoch of a Ceylonese Era.
536	The Great Renunciation (of the Buddha).
530	Enlightenment.
530-29	The Buddha's visit to Bimbisāra.
527	Traditional Epoch of the era of Mahāvira's Nirvāṇa
522	Accession of Darius I.
493	Accession of Ajātaśatru.
486	Cantonese date of the Parinirvāṇa of the Buddha. The death of Darius I. Council of Rājagṛiha.
461	Accession of Udāyibhadraka.
457	Foundation of Pāṭaliputra (Kusumapura).
445	Aniruddha (Anuruddha) and Muṇḍa.
437	Nāga-Dāsaka (omitted in the Divyāvadāna and Jaina texts).
413	Śiśunāga.
395	Kālāśoka (Kākavarṇa).
386	Council of Vaiśālī.
367	Sons of Kālāśoka, and de facto rule of Mahāpadma Nanda.
345	End of the Śiśunāga dynasty.

SECTION VIII. THE NANDAS.

The Śaiṣunāga dynasty was supplanted by the line of Nanda.¹ With the new family we reach a stage of East Indian history when the indubitable evidence of inscriptions becomes available to supplement the information gleaned from traditional literary sources. The famous Hāthigumphā record of Khāravela, of the second or first century B.C., twice mentions Nanda-rāja in connection with Kaliṅga.

*Pañchame cedāni vase Nandārāja-ti-vasa-sata-oghātitaṁ
Tānasuliya-vāṭa pañāḍi(m) nagaram pavesa(yati).....*

“And then, in the fifth year, (Khāravela) caused the canal opened out by King Nanda three hundred years²

1 According to Jaina tradition Nanda was proclaimed king after Udāyin's assassination, and sixty years after the Nirvāṇa of Varddhamāna (Parīśiṣṭa P. VI. 243).

2 This interpretation of 'tivasasata' accords substantially with the Purāṇic tradition, regarding the interval between the Nandas and the dynasty to which Śātakarṇi, the contemporary of Khāravela in his second regnal year, belonged (137 years for the Mauryas + 112 for the 'Śuṅgas' + 45 for the Kāṇvas = 294). If the expression is taken to mean 103 years (as is suggested by some scholars), Khāravela's accession must be placed 103 - 5 = 98 years after Nandārāja. His elevation to the position of Yuṣṭārāja took place 9 years before that date i.e., 98 - 9 = 89 years after Nanda i.e., not later than 324 - 89 = 235 B.C. Khāravela's senior partner in the royal office was on the throne at that time and he may have had his predecessor or predecessors. But we learn from Aśoka's inscriptions that Kaliṅga was actually governed at that time by a Maurya Kumāra, (and not by a Kaliṅga-adhipati or chakravartī) under the suzerainty of Aśoka himself. Therefore, tivasasata should be understood to mean 300 and not 103 years. S. Konow (Acta Orientalia, I. 22-26) takes the figure to express not the interval between Nanda and Khāravela, but a date during the reign of Nanda which was reckoned from some pre-existing era. But the use of any such era in the particular country and epoch is not proved. Khāravela himself, like Aśoka, uses regnal years. The agreement with Purāṇic tradition speaks in favour of the view adopted in these pages.

back to be brought into the capital from the Tanasuliya road."

Again, in connection with the twelfth year of Khāravela's reign, we have a reference to Nadarāja-jita Kaliṅga-jana-saṁ (n) i (ve) saṁ (or, according to another reading, Nanda-rājanītaṁ Kaliṅga Jina saṁnivesaṁ),¹ i.e., a station or encampment, or a Jaina shrine, in Kaliṅga acquired² by king Nanda.

The epigraphs, though valuable as early notices of a line known mainly from literature, are not contemporaneous. For contemporary reports we must turn to Greek writers. There is an interesting reference, in the *Cyropaedia*³ of Xenophon, who died some time after 355 B.C., to "the Indian king, a very wealthy man". This cannot fail to remind one of the Nandas whom the unanimous testimony of Sanskrit, Tamil, Ceylonese and Chinese writers describe as the possessors of enormous wealth.⁴ Clearer information about the ruling family of Magadha

1 Barua, Hāthigumphā Inscription of Khāravela (IHQ. XIV. 1938 pp. 259ff). Sanniveśa is explained in the dictionaries as an assemblage, station, seat, open space near a town etc. (Monier Williams). A commentator takes it to mean 'a halting place of caravans or processions'. Kuṇḍagrāma was a sanniveśa in Videha (SBE, XXII, Jaina Sūtras, pt. I. Intro.). The reference in the inscription to the conquest of a place, or removal of a sacred object from Kaliṅga by Nandarāja disposes of the view that he was a local chief (Camb. Hist. 538).

2 Dr. Barua (op. cit. p. 276n) objects to a Nanda conquest (or domination) of any part of Kaliṅga on the ground that the province "had remained unconquered (avijita) till the 7th year of Aśoka's reign". But the claim of the Maurya secretariat is on a par with Jahāngir's boast that "not one of the Sultans of lofty dignity has obtained the victory over it" (i.e., Kangra, Rogers, Tūzuk, II. 184). Kaliṅgas appear in the Purāṇas among the contemporaries of the Śaiṣunāgas who were overpowered by Nanda, the Sarva-Kṣhatrāntaka.

3 III. ii. 25 (trans. by Walter Miller).

4 Cf. the names Mahāpadmapati and Dhana Nanda. The Mudrārākṣhaśa refers to the Nandas as 'navanavatiśatadravyakoṭīśvarāḥ' (Act III, verse 27), and 'Artharuchi' (Act. I.)

A passage of the Kathā-sarit-sāgara says that King Nanda possessed 990 millions of gold pieces. Tawney's Translation Vol. I, p. 21.

Dr. Aiyangar points out that a Tamil poem contains an interesting statement regarding the wealth of the Nandas "which having accumulated first in Pāṭali,

(c. 326 B.C.) is supplied by the contemporaries of Alexander whose writings form the bases of the accounts of Curtius, Diodoros and Plutarch. Unfortunately, the classical writers do not mention the family name 'Nanda'. The reading 'Nandrum' in the place of 'Alexandrum' in the account of Justin is absolutely unjustifiable.

For a detailed account of the dynasty we have to rely on Indian tradition. Indian writers seem to be mainly interested in the Nanda age partly as marking an epoch in a social upsurge and the evolution of imperial unity, and partly as accessory to the life-sketch of Jaina patriarchs and to the Chandragupta-kathā of which we have fragments in the Milindapañho, the Mahāvamsa, the Purāṇic chronicles, the Bṛihat-Kathā and its later versions, the Mudrā-rākshasa and the Arthaśāstra.

The first Nanda was Mahāpadma or Mahāpadmapati¹ according to the Purāṇas and Ugrasena according to the Mahābodhivamsa. The Purāṇas describe him as a son of the last Kshatrabandhu (so-called Kshatriya) king of the preceding line by a Śūdrā mother. (Śūdrā-garbh-odbhava). The Jaina Parīśiṣṭaparvan,² on the hid itself in the floods of the Ganges." Beginnings of South Indian History, p. 89.

According to Ceylonese tradition "The youngest brother (among the sons of Ugrasena) was called Dhana Nanda, from his being addicted to hoarding treasure. ...He collected riches to the amount of eighty koṭis—in a rock in the bed of the river (Ganges) having caused a great excavation to be made, he buried the treasure there...Levying taxes among other articles even on skins, gums, trees, and stones he amassed further treasures which he disposed of similarly." (Turnour, Mahāvamsa, p. xxxix).

Huen Tsang, the Chinese pilgrim, refers to "the five treasures of King Nanda's seven precious substances."

1 'Sovereign of an infinite host' or 'of immense wealth' according to the commentator (Wilson, Vishṇu P. Vol. IX, 184n). A city on the Ganges, styled Mahāpadmapura, is mentioned in Mbh. XII. 353. 1.

2 P. 46. Text VI, 231-32

other hand, represents Nanda as the son of a courtesan by a barber. The Jaina tradition is strikingly confirmed by the classical account of the pedigree of Alexander's Magadhan contemporary who was the predecessor of Chandragupta Maurya. Referring to this prince (Agrammes) Curtius says,¹ "His father was in fact a barber, scarcely staving off hunger by his daily earnings, but who, from his being not uncomely in person, had gained the affections of the queen, and was by her influence advanced to too near a place in the confidence of the reigning monarch. Afterwards, however, he treacherously murdered his sovereign, and then, under the pretence of acting as guardian to the royal children, usurped the supreme authority, and having put the young princes to death, begot the present king."

The barber ancestry of Agrammes, recorded by the classical writers is quite in keeping with the Jaina story of the extraction of the Nanda line. That the Magadhan contemporary of Alexander and of young Chandragupta was a Nanda king is not disputed. The real difficulty is about his identity. He could not possibly have been the first Nanda himself. The words used in reference to Agrammes, "the present king," i.e., Alexander's contemporary in Curtius' narrative, make this point clear. He (Agrammes) was born in purple to one who had already "usurped supreme authority" having secured the affections of a queen. That description is scarcely applicable to the founder of the dynasty who was, according to Jaina testimony, the son of an ordinary courtesan (ganikā) by a barber apparently without any pretensions to supreme power in the state.

The murdered sovereign seems to have been Kālāsoka-Kākavarṇa who had a tragic end as we learn from the

1 McCrindle, The Invasion of India by Alexander, P. 222.

Harsha-charita. Kākavarṇa Śaiśunāgi, says Bāṇa, had a dagger thrust into his throat in the vicinity of his city. The young princes referred to by Curtius were evidently the sons of Kālāśoka-Kākavarṇa. The Greek account of the rise of the family of Agrammes fits in well with the Ceylonese account of the end of the Śaiśunāga line and the rise of the Nandas, but not with the Purāṇic story which represents the first Nanda as a son of the last Śaiśunāga by a Śūdra woman, and makes no mention of the young princes. The name Agrammes is probably a distorted form of the Sanskrit Augrasainya, "son of Ugrasena".¹ Ugrasena is, as we have seen, the name of the first Nanda according to the Mahābodhivaṃsa. His son may aptly be termed Augrasainya which the Greeks corrupted into Agrammes and later on into Xandrames.²

The Purāṇas call Mahāpadma, the first Nanda king, the destroyer of all the Kshatriyas (sarva-Kshatrāntaka) and the sole monarch (ekarāt) of the earth which was under his undisputed sway, which terms imply that he finally overthrew all the dynasties which ruled contemporaneously with the Śaiśunāgas, viz., the Ikshvākus, Pañchālas, Kāśis, Haihayas, Kalingas, Āśmakas, Kurus,

1 "Augrasainya" as a royal patronymic is met with in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, viii. 21.

2 The identification of Xandrames (taken to answer to Sanskrit Chandramas), the Magadhan contemporary of Alexander, with Chandragupta, proposed by certain writers, is clearly untenable. Plutarch (Life of Alexander, Ch. 62) clearly distinguishes between the two, and his account receives confirmation from that of Justin (Watson's tr., p. 142). Xandrames or Agrammes was the son of a usurper born after his father had become king of the Prasii, while Chandragupta was himself the founder of a new sovereignty, the first king of his line. The father of Xandrames was a barber who could claim no royal ancestry. On the other hand, Brāhmaṇical and Buddhist writers are unanimous in representing Chandragupta as a descendant of a race of rulers, though they differ in regard to the identity of the family and its claim to be regarded as of pure Kshatriya stock. Jaina evidence clearly suggests that the barber usurper is identical with the Nāpita-kumāra or Nāpitasū (Parīśiṣṭa, VI. 231 and 244) who founded the Nanda line.

234 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

- Maithilas, Śūrasenas, Vitihotras,¹ etc. The Jainas, too, allude to the wide dominion of Nanda.² The Indian account of the unification of a considerable portion of India under Nanda's sceptre is corroborated by several classical writers who speak of the most powerful peoples who dwelt beyond the 'extensive deserts' (apparently of Rājputāna) and the Ganges in the time of Alexander, viz., the Prasii (Prāchyas) and the Gangaridae (people of the lower Ganges Valley) as being under one sovereign who had his capital at Palibothra (Pāṭaliputra).³

1 Conquest of some of the territories occupied by the tribes and clans named here by former kings of Magadha does not necessarily mean the total extinction of the old ruling families, but merely a deprivation of their glory (yaśaḥ) and an extension of the suzerainty of the conqueror. Extirpation cannot be meant unless it is definitely asserted as in the case of Mahāpadma Nanda's conquest, or that of Samudra Gupta in Āryāvarta. It may also sometimes be implied by the appointment of a prince of the conquering family as viceroy. Allowance, however, must be made for a good deal of exaggeration. Even the Vajjians were not literally 'rooted out' by Ajātaśatru, as the most important of the constituent clans, viz., the Lichchavis, survive till the Gupta Age. A branch of the Ikshvākus may have been driven southwards as they are found in the third or fourth century A.D. in the lower valley of the Kṛishṇā. The Kāśis overthrown by Nanda may have been the descendants or successors of the prince whom Śīśunāga had placed in Benares. The Haihayas occupied a part of the Narmadā valley. Conquest of a part of Kālīṅga by Nanda is suggested by the Hāthigumphā record, that of Āsmaka and part of the Godāvarī valley by the city called 'Nau Nand Dehra' (Nander, Macauliffe, Sikh Religion, V. p. 236). Vitihotra sovereignty had terminated before the rise of the Pradyotas of Avanti. But if the Purāṇic statement (DKA, 23, 69) "Contemporaneously with the aforesaid Kings (Śīśunāgas etc.) there will be.....Vitihotras" has any value, the Śīśunāgas may have paved the way for a restoration of some scion of the old line in Avanti. According to the evidence of the Purāṇas (Vāyu, 94. 51-52) the Vitihotras were one of the five gaṇas of the Haihayas, and the survival of the latter is well attested by epigraphic evidence. The Maithilas apparently occupied a small district to the north of the Vajjian dominions annexed by Ajātaśatru. The Pañchālas, Kurus, and the Śūrasenas occupied the Gangetic Doāb and Mathurā and the control of their territories by the King of Magadha c. 326 B.C. accords with Greek evidence.

2 Samudravasaneśebhya āsmudramapiśriyaḥ upāya hastairākṛishya tataḥ so' kṛita Nandasāt

Parīśiṣṭa Parvan, VII. 81.

3 Inv. Alex., 221, 281; Megasthenes and Arrian by McCrindle (1926) pp. 67, 141, 161.

Pliny informs us¹ that the Prasii surpass in power and glory every other people in all India, their capital being Palibothra (Pāṭaliputra), after which some call the people itself Palibothri, nay, even the whole tract of the Ganges. The author is referring probably to conditions in the time of the Mauryas, and not in that of the Nandas. But the greatness that the Prasii (i.e. the Magadhans and other eastern peoples) attained in the Maurya Age would hardly have been possible but for the achievements of their predecessors of which we have a record by the historians of Alexander. The inclusion of the Ikshvāku territory of Kosala within Nanda's dominions seems to be implied by a passage of the *Kathā-saritsāgara*² which refers to the camp of king Nanda in Ayodhyā. Several Mysore inscriptions state that Kuntala, a province which included the southern part of the Bombay Presidency and the north of Mysore, was ruled by the Nandas.³ But these are of comparatively modern date, the twelfth century, and too much cannot be built upon their statements. More important is the evidence of the Hāthigumphā inscription which mentions the constructive activity of Nandarāja in Kalinga and his conquest (or removal) of some place (or sacred object) in that country. In view of Nanda's control over parts of Kalinga, the conquest of Āsmaka and other regions lying further south does not seem to be altogether improbable. The existence on the Godāvari of a city called "Nau Nand Dehra" (Nander)⁴ also suggests that the Nanda dominions may have embraced a considerable portion of the Deccan.

1 Megasthenes and Arrian (1926) p. 141.

2 Tawney's Translation, p. 21.

3 Rice, Mysore, and Coorg from the Inscriptions, p. 3; Fleet, Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, 284. n. 2.

4 Macauliffe's Sikh Religion, V, p. 236.

The Matsya Purāṇa assigns 88 years to the reign of the first Nanda, but 88 (Ashṭāśīti) is probably a mistake for 28 (Ashṭāvīṁśati), as the Vāyu assigns only 28 years. According to Tāranāth Nanda reigned 29 years.¹ The Ceylonese accounts inform us that the Nandas ruled only for 22 years. The Purāṇic figure 28 is probably to be taken to include the period when Nanda was the de facto ruler of Magadha before his final usurpation of the throne.

Mahāpadma-Ugrasena was succeeded by his eight sons who were kings in succession. They ruled for twelve years according to the Purāṇas. The Ceylonese Chronicles, as we have already seen, give the total length of the reign-period of all the nine Nandas as 22 years. The Purāṇas specify the name of one son of Mahāpadma, viz., Sukalpa.² The Mahābodhivamsa gives the following names: Paṇḍuka, Paṇḍugati, Bhūtapāla, Rāshtrapāla, Govishāṇaka, Daśasiddhaka, Kaivarta and Dhana. The last king is possibly identical with the Agrammes or Xandrames of the classical writers. Agrammes is, as we have seen, probably a distortion by the Greeks of the Sanskrit patronymic Agrasainya.

The first Nanda left to his sons not only a big empire but also a large army and, if tradition is to be believed, a full exchequer and an efficient system of civil government. Curtius tells us that Agrammes, king of the Gangaridae and the Prasii, kept in the field for guarding the approaches to his country 20,000 cavalry and 200,000 infantry, besides 2,000 four-horsed chariots, and what was the most formidable force of all, a troop of elephants

1 Ind. Ant., 1875, p. 362.

2 The name has variants. One of these is Sahalya. Dr. Barua makes the plausible suggestion that the prince in question may be identical with Sahalin of the Dīvyāvadāna (p. 369; Pargiter, DKA, 25 n 24; Buddha Dharma Kosha, 44). The evidence of that Buddhist work in regard to the relationship between Sahalin and Kāka-varṇa can, however, hardly be accepted. The work often errs in this respect. It makes Pushyamitra a lineal descendant of Aśoka (p. 433).

which, he said, ran up to the number of 3,000. Diodoros and Plutarch give similar accounts. But they raise the number of elephants to 4,000 and 6,000 respectively. The name of one of the generals, Bhaddasāla is preserved by Buddhist tradition.¹

The immense riches of the Nandas have already been referred to. The family may also be credited with irrigation projects in Kalinga and the invention of a particular kind of measure (Nandopakramāṇi mānāni).² The existence of a body of capable ministers is vouched for both by Brāhmanical and Jaina tradition. But in the end they proved no match for another traditional figure whose name is indissolubly linked up with the fall of the Nandas and the rise of a more illustrious race of rulers.

No detailed account of this great dynastic revolution has survived. The accumulation of an enormous amount of wealth by the Nanda kings probably implies a good deal of financial extortion. Moreover, we are told by the classical writers that Agrammes (the Nanda contemporary of Alexander) "was detested and held cheap by his subjects as he rather took after his father than conducted himself as the occupant of a throne."³

The Purāṇic passage about the revolution⁴ stands as follows :

*Uddharishyati tām sarvām
Kauṭilyo vai dvījarshabhaḥ*

1 Milinda-Pañho, SBE, xxxvi, pp. 147-8.

2 S. C. Vasu's trans. of the Ashtādhyāyī of Pāṇini, rule illustrating sūtra II. 4. 21.

3 McCrindle, The Invasion of India by Alexander, p. 222. Cf. Jaina Parīśiṣṭa parvan, vi. 244.—

tataścha kechit sāmāntā madenāndham bhaviṣṇavaḥ Nandasya na natiḥ chakrurasau nāpitasūriti.

4 The dynastic change is also referred to by the Kauṭilya Arthaśāstra, the Kāmandakiya Nitisāra, the Mudrārākshasa, the Chanda Kausika, the Ceylonese Chronicles etc.

*Kauṭilyaś-Chandraguptam tu tato rājye bhishekskyati.*¹

The *Milinda-Paṇḥo*² refers to an episode of the great struggle between the Nandas and the Mauryas : "There was Bhaddasāla, the soldier in the service of the royal family of Nanda, and he waged war against king Chandagutta. Now in that war, Nāgasena, there were eighty Corpse dances. For they say that when one great Head Holocaust has taken place (by which is meant the slaughter of ten thousand elephants, and a lac of horses and five thousand charioteers, and a hundred koṭis of soldiers on foot), then the headless corpses arise and dance in frenzy over the battle-field." The passage contains a good deal of mythical embellishment. But we have here a reminiscence of the bloody encounter between the contending forces of the Nandas and the Mauryas.³

1 Some Mss. read dvirashṭabhiḥ in place of dvijarshabhaḥ. Dr. Jayaswal (Ind. Ant. 1914, 124) proposed to emend it to Virashṭrābhiḥ. Virashṭrās he took to mean the Āraṭṭas and added that Kauṭilya was helped by the Āraṭṭas "the band of robbers" of Justin. Cf. Cunningham, Bhilsa Topes, pp. 88, 89. Fargiter, however, suggests, (Dynasties of the Kali Age, p. 26, 35) that dvijarshabhaḥ (the best among the twice-born, i.e., Brāhmaṇas) may be the correct reading instead of "dvirashṭabhiḥ."

2 IV. 8. 26. Cf. SBE, xxxvi. pp. 147-48.

3 Cf. Ind. Ant., 1914, p. 124n.

CHAPTER III. THE PERSIAN AND MACEDONIAN INVASIONS.

SECTION I. THE ADVANCE OF PERSIA TO THE INDUS.

While the kingdoms and republics of the Indian interior were gradually being merged in the Magadhan Empire, those of North-West India (including modern Western Pākistān) were passing through vicissitudes of a different kind. In the first half of the sixth century B.C., the Uttarāpatha (northern region) beyond the Madhyadeśa (Mid-India, roughly the Ganges-Jumna Doāb, Oudh and some adjoining tracts), like the rest of India, was parcelled out into a number of small states the most important of which were Kamboja, Gandhāra and Madra. No sovereign arose in this part of India capable of welding together the warring communities, as Ugrasena-Mahā-padma had done in the East. The whole region was at once wealthy and disunited, and formed the natural prey of the strong Achaemenian monarchy which grew up in Persia (Irān).

Kurush or Cyrus (558-530 B.C.¹) the founder of the Persian Empire, is said to have led an expedition against India through Gedrosia, but had to abandon the enterprise, escaping with seven men only.² But he was more successful in the Kābul-valley. We learn from Pliny that he destroyed the famous city of Kāpiśī, at or near the confluence of the Ghorband and the Panjshir. Arrian informs us³ that "the district west of the river Indus as far as the river Cophen (Kābul) is inhabited by the Astaceni-ans

1 550-529 B.C. according to A Survey of Persian Art, p. 64.

2 H. and F., Strabo, III, p. 74.

3 Chinnoek, Arrian's Anabasis, p. 399.

(Āshṭakas)¹ and the Assacenian (Āsvakas), Indian tribes. These were in ancient times subject to the Assyrians, afterwards to the Medes, and finally they submitted to the Persians, and paid tribute to Cyrus, the son of Cambyses, as ruler of their land." Strabo tells us that on one occasion the Persians summoned the Hydraces (the Kshudrakas) from India (i.e., the Pañjāb) to attend them as mercenaries.

In the Behistun or Bahistān inscription of Dārayavaush or Darius I (c. 522-486 B.C.) the third sovereign of the Achaemenian dynasty, the people of Gandhāra (Gadāra) appear among the subject peoples of the Persian Empire. But no mention is there made of the Hidus (Hindus, people of Sindhu or the Indus Valley) who are explicitly referred to in the Hamadan Inscription, and are included with the Gandhārians in the lists of subject peoples given by the inscriptions on the terrace at Persepolis, and around the tomb of Darius at Naqsh-i-Rustum.² From this it has been inferred that the "Indians" (Hidus) were conquered at some date between 519 B.C. (the probable date of the Behistun or Bahistān inscription),³ and the end of the reign of Darius in 486 B.C.⁴ The preliminaries to this conquest are described by Herodotus:⁵ "He (Darius) being desirous to know in what part the Indus, 1 Patañjali (IV. 2. 2) refers to "Āshṭakam nāma dhanva;" (cf. Hasht-nagar, and Athakanagara, Lüders, 390).

2 Ancient Persian Lexicon and the Texts of the Achaemenian Inscriptions by H. C. Tolman; Rapson, Ancient India; Herzfeld, MASI, 34, pp. 1 ff.

3 In the opinion of Jackson (Camb. Hist. India, I, 334) the Bahistān Rock Inscription is presumably to be assigned to a period between 520 and 518 B.C. with the exception of the fifth column, which was added later. Rapson regarded 516 B.C. as the probable date of the famous epigraph, while Herzfeld prefers the date 519 B.C. (MASI, No. 34, p. 2).

4 Herzfeld is, however, of the opinion that reference to the 'Thatagush' in early Persian epigraphs shows that (part of) the Pañjāb, like Gandhāra, was Persian from the days of Cyrus the Great.

5 McCrindle, Ancient India as described in Classical Literature, pp. 4-5.

which is the second river that produces crocodiles, discharges itself into the sea, sent in ships both others on whom he could rely to make a true report and also Scylax of Caryanda. They accordingly setting out from the city of Caspatyrus¹ and the country of Paktyike (Pakthas ?)² sailed down the river towards the east and sunrise to the sea ; then sailing on the sea westwards, they arrived in the thirtieth month at that place where the king of Egypt despatched the Phoenicians, to sail round Libya. After these persons had sailed round, Darins subdued the Indians and frequented the Sea."

Herodotus tells us that "India" constituted the twentieth and the most populous satrapy of the Persian Empire, and that it paid a tribute proportionately larger than all the rest,—360 talents of gold dust, equivalent to £1,290,000 of the pre-war period. There is no reason to believe that all this gold came from Bactria or Siberia. Gold deposits are not unknown in several tracts of the North-West Frontier, and quantities of gold are recovered from the alluvium of rivers. A small quantity of the precious metal used to be imported by Bhotiya traders from the Tibetan Hills.³ Gandhāra was included in the seventh satrapy. The details regarding "India" left by Herodotus leave no room for doubt that it embraced the Indus Valley and was bounded on the east by the desert of Rājaputāna. "That part of India towards the rising sun is all sand ; for of the people with whom we are acquainted, the Indians live the furthest towards the east and the sunrise, of all the inhabitants of Asia, for the Indians'

1 Camb. Hist. Ind., I, 336. The city was probably situated in ancient Gandhāra.

2 Ibid., 82, 339. Paktyike is apparently the ancient name of the modern Pathan country on the north-west borderland of the sub-continent of India.

3 Crooke, The North-Western Provinces of India, 1897, p. 10 ; Amrita Bazar Patrika, 19-7-59, p. 6 ; cf. Watters, Yuan Chwang, I. 225, 239.

242 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

country towards the east is a desert by reason of the sands."

The organisation of the empire into Satrapies served as a model to several succeeding dynasties, and was given a wider extension in India by the Śakas and the Kushāns in the centuries immediately preceding and succeeding the Christian era. The Deśa-goptri of the Gupta Age was the lineal successor of the Satrap (Kshatra-pāvan) of earlier epochs.

The Persian conquerors did much to promote geographical exploration and commercial activity. At the same time they took from the country not only an enormous amount of gold and other commodities such as ivory and wood, but denuded it of a great portion of its man-power. Military service was exacted from several tribes. Contact between the East and the West became more intimate with important results in the domain of culture. If the Achaemenians brought the Indian bowmen and lancers to Hellenic soil, they also showed the way of conquest and cultural penetration to the peoples of Greece and Macedon.

Khshayārshā or Xerxes (486-465 B.C.), the son and successor of Darius I, maintained his hold on the Indian provinces. In the great army which he led against Hellas both Gandhāra and "India" were represented. The Gandhārians are described by Herodotus as bearing bows of reed and short spears, and the "Indians" as being clad in cotton garments and bearing cane bows with arrows tipped with iron. One of the newly discovered stone-tablets at Persepolis¹ records that Xerxes "by Ahuramazda's will" sapped the foundations of certain temples of the Daivas and ordained that "the Daivas shall not be worshipped".

¹ The Illustrated London News, Feb. 22, 1936, p. 328. See, Old Persian Inscriptions, 152.

Where the Daivas had been worshipped, the king worshipped Ahuramazda together with Ātam (divine world order). 'India' may have been among the lands which witnessed the outcome of the religious zeal of the Persian king.

Among interesting relics of Persian dominion in India mention is sometimes made of a Taxila inscription in Aramaic characters of the fourth or fifth century B.C.¹ But Herzfeld points out² that the form Priyadarśana occurs in the record which should be referred to the reign of Aśoka, and not to the period of Persian rule. To the Persians is also attributed the introduction of the Kharoshthī alphabet, the "Persepolitan capital" and words like "dipi" (rescript) and "nipishṭa" ("written") occurring in the inscriptions of Aśoka. Persian influence has also been traced in the preamble of the Aśokan edicts.

1 JRAS., 1915, I p. 340-347.

2 Ep. Ind., XIX. 253.

SECTION II. THE LAST OF THE ACHÆMENIDS AND ALEXANDER.

The Persian Empire rapidly declined after the death of Xerxes. After a period of weak rule and confusion, the crown went to Darius III Codomannus (335-330 B.C.). This was the king against whom Alexander, the great king of Macedon led forth his famous phalanx. After several engagements in which the Persian forces suffered repeated defeats, the Macedonian conqueror rode on the tracks of his vanquished enemy and reached the plain watered by the river Bumodus.

Three distinct groups of Indians figured in the army which mustered under the banner of the Persian monarch in that region. "The Indians who were conterminous with the Bactrians as also the Bactrians themselves and the Sogdianians had come to the aid of Darius, all being under the command of Bessus, the Viceroy of the land of Bactria. They were followed by the Sacians, a Scythian tribe belonging to the Scythians who dwell in Asia. These were not subject to Bessus but were in alliance with Darius...Barsaentes, the Viceroy of Arachotia, led the Arachotians and the men who were called Mountaineer Indians. There were a few elephants, about fifteen in number, belonging to the Indians who live this side of the Indus. With these forces Darius had encamped at Gaugamela, near the river Bumodus, about 600 stades distant from the city of Arbela."¹ The hold of the Achaemenians on the Indians in the various provinces on the frontier had, however, grown very feeble about this time, and the whole of north-western India was parcelled out into innumerable kingdoms, principalities and republics. A list of the more important among these is given below :—

¹ Chinnock, Arrian's Anabasis, pp. 142-143.

1. The Aspasian territory (Alishang-Kūnar-Bajaur valley) :

It lay in the difficult hill country north of the Kābul river watered by the Khoes, possibly the modern Alishang, and the Euaspla, apparently the Kūnar. The name of the people is derived from the Irānian "Aspa," i.e., the Sanskrit "Āśva" (horse) or Āśvaka. The Aspasians were thus the western branch of the Āsvakas (Assakenians).¹ The chieftain, hyparch, of the tribe dwelt in a city on or near the river Euaspla, supposed to be identical with the Kūnar, a tributary of the Kābul. Other Aspasian cities were Andaka and Arigaeum.²

2. The country of the Guraeans :

It was watered by the river Guraeus, Gauri, or Pañj-kora, and lay between the land of the Aspasians and the country of the Assakenians.

3. The Kingdom of Assakenos (part of Swat and Buner) :

It stretched eastwards as far as the Indus and had its capital at Massaga, a "formidable fortress probably situated not very far to the north of the Malakand Pass but not yet precisely identified." The name of the Assakenians probably represents the Sanskrit Āśvaka 'land of horses', not Āśmaka, 'land of stone'. The territory occupied by the tribe was also known in different ages as Suvāstu, Udyāna and, according to some, Oddiyāna. The Āsvakas do not appear to be mentioned by Pāṇini unless we regard them as belonging to the same stock as the Āśmakas³ of the south

1 Camb. Hist Ind., 352. n. 3.

2 Chinnock's Arrian pp. 230-231.

3 IV. I. 173.

for which there is no real ground. They are placed in the north-west by the authors of the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa and the Bṛihat Saṁhitā. The Assakenian king had a powerful army of 20,000 cavalry, more than 30,000 infantry and 30 elephants. The reigning king at the time of Alexander's invasion is called by the Greeks Assakenos. His mother was Kleophis. Assakenos had a brother¹ who is called Eryx by Curtius and Aphrikes by Diodoros.² There is no reason to believe that these personages had any relationship with king Śarabha, whose tragic fate is described by Bāṇa and who belonged apparently to the southern realm of the Aśmakas in the valley of the Godāvari.

4 Nysa :

This was a small hill-state which lay at the foot of Mt. Meros between the Kophen or Kābul river and the Indus.³ It had a republican constitution. The city was alleged to have been founded by Greek colonists long before the invasion of Alexander.⁴ Arrian says,⁵ "The Nysaeans are not an Indian race, but descended from the men who came to India with Dionysus." Curiously enough, a Yona or Greek state is mentioned along with Kamboja in the *Majjhima Nikāya*⁶ as flourishing in the time of Gautama Buddha and Assalāyana: "Yona Kambojesu dveva vaṇṇā Ayyo c'eva Dāsoca (there are only

1 Invasion of Alexander, p. 378.

2 He led the flying defenders of the famous fortress of Aornos against the Greeks (Camb. Hist. Ind., I. 356). Aornos is identified by Sir Aurel Stein with the height of Una between the Swat and the Indus (Alexander's Campaign on the Frontier, Benares Hindu University Magazine, Jan., 1927). The southern side of the stronghold was washed by the Indus (Inv. Alex., 271.)

3 Inv. Alex., 79, 193.

4 McCrindle, Invasion of Alexander, p. 79; Hamilton and Falconer, Strabo, Vol. III. p. 76. Dr. K. P. Jayaswal informed me that he referred to the Nysaeans Indo-Greeks in a lecture delivered as early as 1919.

5 Chinnock's Arrian, p. 399.

6 II. 149.

two social grades among the Yonas and the Kambojas, viz., Aryan and Dāsa)."

According to Holdich the lower spurs and valleys of Kohi-Mor in the Swat country are where the ancient city of Nysa once stood.¹ At the time of Alexander's invasion the Nysaeans had Akouphis for their President. They had a Governing Body of 300 members.²

5. Peukelaotis (in the Peshāwar District) :

It lay on the road from Kābul to the Indus. Arrian tells us³ that the Kābul falls into the Indus in the land called Peukelaotis, taking with itself the Malantus, Soastus and Guraeus. Peukelaotis represents the Sanskrit Pushkarāvati. It formed the western part of the old kingdom of Gandhāra. The people of the surrounding region are sometimes referred to as the "Astakenoi" by historians. The capital is represented by the modern Mir Ziyārat and Chārsadda, about 17 miles N. E. of Peshāwar, on the Swat river, the Soastus of Arrian, and the Suvāstu of the Vedic texts.

The reigning hyparch at the time of Alexander's invasion was Astes⁴ identified with Hasti or Ashtaka. He was defeated and killed by Hephaestion, a general of the Macedonian king.

6. Taxila or Takshaṣilā (in the Rāwalpindi District) :

Strabo says* "between the Indus and the Hydaspes (Jhelum) was Taxila, a large city, and governed by good laws. The neighbouring country is crowded with inhabitants and very fertile." The kingdom of Taxila formed the eastern part of the old kingdom of Gandhāra.

1 Smith, EHI, 4th ed., p. 57. Camb. Hist., I, p. 353.

2 Invasion of Alexander, p. 81.

3 Chinnock's Arrian's Anabasis of Alexander and Indica, p. 403.

4 Chinnock, Arrian, p. 228.

5 H. and F.'s. tr., III, p. 90.

In B. C. 327 the Taxilian throne was occupied by a hyparch, or basileus, whom the Greeks called Taxiles. When Alexander of Macedon arrived in the Kābul valley he sent a herald to the king of Taxila to bid him come and meet him. Taxiles accordingly did come to meet the conqueror, bringing valuable gifts. When he died his son Mopbis or Omphis (Sanskrit Āmbhi) succeeded to the government. Curiously enough, the reputed author of the Kauṭīliya Arthaśāstra, himself a native of Taxila according to the Mahāvamsa Tīkā, refers to a school of political philosophers called Āmbhīyas, and Dr. F. W. Thomas connects them with Taxila.¹

7. The kingdom of Arsakes :

The name of the principality represents the Sanskrit Uraśā, which formed part of the modern Hazāra District. It adjoined the realm of Abisares, and was probably, like the latter, an offshoot of the old kingdom of Kamboja. Uraśā is mentioned in several Kharoṣṭhī inscriptions, and, in the time of the geographer Ptolemy, absorbed the neighbouring realm of Taxila.

8. Abhisāra :

Strabo observes² that the kingdom was situated among the mountains above the Taxila country. The position of this state was correctly defined by Stein who pointed out that *Dāravābhisāra*³ included the whole tract of the lower and middle hills lying between the Jhelum and the Chenāb. Roughly speaking, it corresponded to the Punch and some adjoining districts in Kāśmīra with a part at least of the Hazāra District of the North-West Frontier Province. It was probably an offshoot of the old kingdom of Kamboja. Abisares, the contemporary of Alexander,

1 Bārhaspatya Arthaśāstra. Introduction, p. 15.

2 H. & F.'s tr., III, p. 90.

3 Cf. Mbh. VII. 91., 43.

was a shrewd politician of the type of Charles Emanuel III of Sardinia. When the Macedonian invader arrived in Taxila he informed him that he was ready to surrender himself and the land which he ruled. And yet before the battle which was fought between Alexander and the famous Poros, Abisares intended to join his forces with those of the latter.¹

9. The kingdom of the Elder Poros :

This territory lay between the Jhelum and the Chenāb and roughly corresponded to parts of the modern districts of Guzrāt and Shāhpur.² Strabo tells us³ that it was an extensive and fertile district containing nearly 300 cities. Diodoros informs us⁴ that Poros had an army of more than 50,000 foot, about 3,000 horse, above 1,000 chariots, and 130 elephants. He was in alliance with Embisaros, i.e., the king of Abhisāra.

Poros probably represents the Sanskrit Pūru or Paurava. In the Rig-Veda the Pūrus are expressly mentioned as on the Sarasvatī. In the time of Alexander, however, we find them on the Hydaspes (Jhelum). The Bṛihat Samhitā,⁵ too, associates the 'Pauravas', with 'Madraka' and 'Mālava.' The Mahābhārata,⁶ also, refers to a "Puram Paurava-rakshitam", city protected by the Pauravas, which lay not far from Kaśmīra. It is suggested in the *Vedic Index*⁷ that either the Hydaspes was the earlier home of the Pūrus, where some remained after the others had wandered east, or the later Pūrus, represent a successful onslaught upon the west from the east.

1 Chinnock, Arrian, p. 276. Inv. Alex, 112.

2 It apparently included the old territory of Kekaya.

3 H. & F.'s tr., III. p. 91.

4 Invasion of Alexander, p. 274.

5 XIV. 27.

6 II. 27, 15-17.

7 Vol. II, pp. 12-13.

10. The country of the people called Glauganikai¹ (Glauganicians) by Aristobulus, and Glausians by Ptolemy :

This tract lay to the west of the Chenāb and was conterminous with the dominion of Poros.² It included no less than seven and thirty cities, the smallest of which had not fewer than 5,000 inhabitants, while many contained upwards of 10,000.

11. Gandarī (in the Rechna Doāb) :

This little kingdom lay between the Chenāb and the Rāvi and (if Strabo has given the correct name of the territory) probably represented the easternmost part of the old Mahājanapada of Gandhāra.³ It was ruled by the Younger Poros, nephew of the monarch who ruled the country between the Jhelum and the Chenāb.

12. The Adraistai (in the Bari Doāb) :⁴

They dwelt on the eastern side of the Hydraotes or the Rāvi, and their main stronghold was Pimprama.

13. Kathaioi or Cathaeans (probably also in the Bari Doāb) :

Strabo points out⁵ that "some writers place Cathaia and the country of Sopeithes, one of the nomarchs, in the tract between the rivers (Hydaspes and Acesines, i.e., the Jhelum and the Chenāb); some on the other side of the Acesines and of the Hydarotis, i. e., of the Chenāb and the Rāvi, on the confines of the territory of the other Poros, the nephew of Poros who was taken prisoner

1 With the second part of the name anika, troop or army, may be compared that of the Sanakānikas of the Gupta period. Dr. Jayaswal, who, doubtless following Weber in IA, ii (1873), p 147, prefers the restoration of the name as Glauchukāyanaka, does not apparently take note of this fact.

2 Chinnock, Arrian, p. 276. Inv. Alex. 112. The country was subsequently given to the elder Poros to rule.

3 But see Camb. Hist. Ind., I, 370, n. 4; the actual name of the territory in older times was, however, Madra.

4 Adrijas? Mbh., VII. 159.5.

Yaudheyān Adrijān rājan Madrakān Mālavān api.

5 H. & F.'s tr., III, p. 92.

by Alexander." The Kathaioi probably represent the Sanskrit Kaṭha, Kāṭhaka,¹ Kantha² or Krātha.³ They were the most eminent among the independent tribes dwelling in the area of which the principal centre was Sangala (Sāṅkala). This town was probably situated in the Gurudāspur district, not far from Fathgarh.⁴ Anspach locates it at Jandiāla to the east of Amritsar.⁵

The Kathaians enjoyed the highest reputation for courage and skill in the art of war. Onesikritos tells us that in Kathaia the handsomest man was chosen as king.⁶

14. The kingdom of Sophytes (Saubhūti), probably along the banks of the Jhelum :

In the opinion of Smith, the position of this kingdom is fixed by the remark of Strabo⁷ that it included a mountain composed of fossil salt sufficient for the whole of India ; Sophytes was, therefore, according to him, the "lord of the fastness of the Salt Range stretching from the Jhelum to the Indus." But we have already seen that the classical writers agree in placing Sophytes' territory east of the Jhelum. Curtius tells us⁸ that the nation ruled by Sopeithes (Sophytes), in the opinion of the "barbarians," excelled in wisdom, and lived under good laws and customs. They did not acknowledge and rear children according to the will of the parents, but as the officers entrusted with the medical inspection of infants might direct, for if they

1 Jolly, SBE., VII. 15; Ep. Ind., III. 8.

2 Cf., Pāṇini, II. 4. 20.

3 Mbh., VIII. 85. 16.

4 JRAS., 1903, p. 687.

5 Camb. Hist. Ind., I, 371.

6 McCrindle, Ancient India as described in Classical Literature, p. 38.

7 H. & F.'s tr., III, p. 93.

8 Invasion of India by Alexander, p. 219.

252 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

remarked anything deformed or defective in the limbs of a child they ordered it to be killed. In contracting marriages they did not seek an alliance with high birth but made their choice by the looks, for beauty in the children was highly appreciated. Strabo informs us¹ that the dogs in the territory of Sopeithes (Sophytes) were said to possess remarkable courage. We have some coins of Sophytes bearing on the obverse the head of the king, and on the reverse the figure of a cock.² According to Smith the style is suggested probably by the "owls" of Athens. Strabo calls Sophytes a nomarch which probably indicates that he was not an independent sovereign, but only a viceroy of some other king.³

15. The kingdom of Phegelas or Phegeus (in the Bari Doāb) :

It lay between the Hydraotes (Rāvi) and the Hyphasis (Bias).⁴ The name of the king, Phegelas, probably represents the Sanskrit Bhagala—the designation of a royal race of Kshatriyas mentioned in the Gaṇapāṭha.⁵

16. The Siboi (in the lower part of the Rechna Doāb) :

They were the inhabitants of the Shorkot region in Jhang district below the junction of the Jhelum

1 H. & F., III, p. 93.

2 Whitehead (Num. Chron., 1943, pp. 60-72) rejects the identification of Sophytes with Saubhūti. He thinks that "Saubhūti is a philologist's creation. There is no historical evidence that Saubhūti existed" (p. 63). Subhūti (from which Saubhūti is apparently derived) is a fairly common name in Indian literature (The Questions of King Milinda, Part II, SBE, XXXVI, pp. 315, 323; Geiger, the Mahāvamsa, tr., 151n, 275). It is by no means improbable that a Hindu Rajah should strike a piece bearing a Hellenized form of his name, as the Hinduised Scythian rulers did in later ages.

3 Was it the Great King of W. Asia or some Indian potentate? Among other nomarchs mention may be made of Spitaces, a nephew and apparently a vassal of the elder Poros (Camb. Hist. Ind., 36, 365, 367).

4 Inv. Alex., P. 281, 401.

5 Invasion of Alexander, p. 401. Cf. Kramadīśvara, 769.

and the Chenāb.¹ They were probably identical with the Śiva people mentioned in a passage of the *Rig-Veda*² where they share with the Alinas, Pakthas, Bhalānases, and Viśāṇins the honour of being defeated by Sudās.³ The Jātakas mention a Sivi country and its cities Aritthapura⁴ and Jetuttara.⁵ It is probable that Śiva, Śivi, Śibi, and Siboi were one and the same people. A place called Śiva-pura is mentioned by the scholiast on Pāṇini as situated in the northern country.⁶ It is, doubtless, identical with Śibipura mentioned in a Shorkot inscription edited by Vogel. In the opinion of that scholar the mound of Shorkot marks the site of this city of the Śibis.⁷

The Siboi dressed themselves with the skins of wild beasts, and had clubs for their weapons.

The *Mahābhārta*⁸ refers to a rāṣṭra or realm of the Śivis ruled by king Uśinara, which lay not far from the Yamunā.⁹ It is not altogether improbable that the Uśinara country¹⁰ was at one time the home of the Śivis. We find them also in Sind, in Madyamikā (Tambavati nagari ?) near Chitor in Rājputāna,¹¹ and, in the Daśa-kumāra-charita, on the banks of the Kāveri.¹²

1 Inv. Alex., p. 232.

2 VII. 18. 7.

3 Vedic Index. Vol. II, pp. 381-382. A 'Śaibya' is mentioned in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (VIII. 23 ; Vedic Index, 1. 31).

4 Ummadanti Jātaka, No. 527 ; cf. Pāṇini, VI. 2. 100.

5 Vessantara Jātaka, No. 547. See also ante, p. 198, n 6.

6 Patañjali, IV, 2. 2 ; Ved. Ind., II, p. 382. IHQ, 1926, 758.

7 Ep. Ind., 1921, p. 16.

8 III. 130-131.

9 Cf. Siba (Cunn. AGI., revised ed., pp. 160-161).

10 Vide pp. 65, 66 ante.

11 Vaidya, Med. Hind. Ind., 1, p. 162 ; Carm. Lec., 1918, p. 173. Allan, Coins of Anc. Ind. cxviii.

12 The southern Śivis are probably to be identified with the Chola ruling family (Kielhorn, List of Southern Inscriptions, No. 685).

17. The Agalassoī :

This people lived near the Siboi, and could muster an army of 40,000 foot and 3,000 horse.

18. The Sudracae or Oxydrakai :

The accounts of Curtius and Diodoros¹ leave the impression that they lived not far from the Siboi and the Agalassoī, and occupied part of the territory below the confluence of the Jhelum and the Chenāb. At the confluence Alexander garrisoned a citadel and thence came into the dominions of the Sudracae and the Malli (Mālavas). The former may have occupied parts of the Jhang and Lyallpur districts. The name of the Sudracae or the Oxydrakai represents the Sanskrit Kshudraka.² They were one of the most numerous and warlike of all the Indian tribes in the Pañjāb. Arrian in one passage refers to the "leading men of their cities and their provincial governors" besides other eminent men. These words afford us a glimpse into the internal condition of this and similar tribes.

19. The Malloi :

They seem to have occupied the right bank of the lower Hydraotes (Rāvi) and are mentioned as escaping across that river to a city of the Brāhmaṇas. The Akesines (Chenāb) is said to have joined the Indus in their territory.³ Their name represents the Sanskrit Mālava. According to Weber, Āpīśali (according to Jayaswal, Kātyāyana), speaks of the formation of the compound "Kshaudraka-Mālavāh." Smith points out that the Mahābhārata couples the tribes in question as forming part of the Kaurava host in the Kurukshetra war.¹ Curtius tells us² that the Sudracae and the Malli had an army consisting of 90,000 foot soldiers, 10,000 cavalry and 900 war chariots.

1 Inv. Alex. 233-4. 286-7.

2 Mbh., II. 52. 15 ; VII. 68.9.

3 Megasthenes and Arrian (2nd ed.) 196. The accuracy of this statement may be doubted. The Malloi territory seems to have included part of the Jhang district, besides a portion of South Lyallpur, West Montgomery, and perhaps North Multan.

Sir R. G. Bhandarkar informs us that Pāṇini refers to the Mālavas as living by the profession of arms.³ In later times they are found in Rājputāna, Avanti and the Mahi valley.

20. The Abastanoi :

Diodoros calls them the Sambastai,⁴ Arrian Abastanoi, Curtius Sabarcae, and Orosius Sabagrae. They were settled on the lower Akesines (Chenāb) apparently below the Mālava country, but above the confluence of the Chenāb and the Indus. Their name represents the Sanskrit Āmbashṭha or Ambashṭha.⁵ The Ambashṭhas are mentioned in several Sanskrit and Pāli works. An Āmbashṭha king is mentioned in the *Aitareya Brāhmaṇa*⁶ whose priest was Nārada. The *Mahābhārata*⁷ mentions the Ambashṭhas along with the Śivis, Kshudrakas, Mālavas and other north-western tribes. The Purāṇas represent them as Ānava Kshatriyas and kinsmen of the Śivis.⁸ In the Bṛhaspatya Arthaśāstra,⁹ the Āmbashṭha country is mentioned in conjunction with Sind :

Kāśmīra-Hūn-Āmbashṭha-Sindhavaḥ.

1. EHL, 1914, p. 94n. ; Mbh., VI. 59. 135.

2. Invasion of Alexander, 234.

3. Ind. Ant., 1913, p. 200.

4. Invasion of Alexander, p. 292.

5. Dr. Surya Kānta draws a distinction between Āmbashṭha and Ambashṭha, regarding the former as a place-name, and the latter as the name of a particular class of people, 'an elephant-driver, a Kshatriya, a mixed caste'. (B. C. Law Vol. II, pp. 127ff). To us the distinction seems to be based upon philological conjectures.

6. VHH-21.

7. II. 52. 14-15.

8. Pargiter, AIHT., pp. 108. 109.

9. Ed. F. W. Thomas, p. 21.

In the Ambaṭṭha Sutta,¹ an Ambaṭṭha is called a Brāhmaṇa. In the Smṛti literature, on the other hand, Ambashṭha denotes a man of mixed Brāhmaṇa and Vaiśya parentage. According to Jātaka IV. 363, the Ambaṭṭhas were farmers. It seems that the Ambashṭhas were a tribe or clan who were at first mainly a fighting race, but some of whom took to other occupations, viz., those of priests, farmers and, according to Smṛti writers, physicians (Ambashṭhānām chikitsitam).²

In the time of Alexander, the Ambashṭhas were a powerful tribe having a democratic government. Their army consisted of 60,000 foot, 6,000 cavalry and 500 chariots.³

In later times the Ambashṭhas are found in South-Eastern India near the Mekala range, and also in Bihār and possibly in Bengal.⁴

1 Dialogues of the Buddha, Part 1. p. 109.

2 Manu, X. 47. Dr. Surya Kānta suggests the reading (Law Volume, II, 134) cha hāstinam. In his dissertation he speaks of the possibility of Ambashṭha being a Sanskritized form of a Celtic word meaning 'husbandman, tiller of the ground'. It is also pointed out that the word may be 'an exact parallel to 'mahāmātra' inasmuch as 'ambhas' means 'of large measure', 'an elephant', so that Ambashṭha would mean 'one sitting on the elephant', i.e., a driver, a keeper, a sāmanta, or a Kshatriya. They lived on warfare, presumably as gajārohas, and banner-bearers.

A distinction is drawn between Ambashṭha and Āmbashṭha. The last-mentioned expression is considered to be a place-name, based on the plant name Āmba. For other notes on the subject see Prabāsi, 1351 B. S. ; I, 206 ; JUPHS, July-Dec, 1945, pp 148 ff ; History of Bengal (D. U.), pp. 568 ff.

3 Invasion of Alexander, p 252.

4 Cf. Ptolemy, Ind. Ant., XIII, 361 ; Bṛihat Samhitā ; XIV. 7 ; Mekhalā-mushṭa of Mārkaṇḍeya P., LVIII. 14, is a corruption of Mekal-Āmbashṭha. Cf. also the Ambashṭha Kāyasthas of Bihār, and the Vaidyas of Bengal whom Bharata Mallika classes as Ambashṭha. This is not the place to discuss the authenticity or otherwise of the tradition recorded by Bharata and some of the Purāṇas. The origin of the Vaidyas, or of any other caste in Bengal, is a thorny problem which requires separate treatment. What the author aims at in these pages is to put some available evidence, early or late, about the Abastanoi. That some Ambashṭhas, and Brāhmaṇas too, took to the medical profession is clear from the evidence of Manu and 21-22. The Xathroi and the Ossadioi :

The Xathroi are according to McCrindle¹ the Kshatri of Sanskrit literature mentioned in the Laws of Manu as an impure tribe, being of mixed origin. V. de Saint-Martin suggests that in the Ossadioi we have the Vasāti of the Mahābhārata,² a tribe associated with the Śibis and Sindhu-Sauvīras of the Lower Indus Valley.³ Like the Abastanoi, the Xathroi and the Ossadioi seem to have occupied parts of the territory drained by the lower Akesines (Chenāb) and situated between the confluence of that river with the Rāvi and the Indus respectively.

23-24. The Sodrai (Sogdoi) and the Massanoi :

They occupied Northern Sind with contiguous portions of the Pañjāb (Mithan-koṭ area) and the Bahawalpur state, below the confluence of the Pañjāb rivers. The territories of these two tribes lay on opposite banks of the Indus. The Sodrai are the Śūdra tribe of Sanskrit literature, a people constantly associated with the Ābhiras who were settled near the Sarasvati.⁴ Their royal seat (basileion) stood on the Indus. Here another Alexandria was founded by the Macedonian conqueror.

Atri (Saṁhitā, 378) and Bopadev. It is equally clear that the Vaidya problem cannot be solved in the way it has been sought to be done in some recent publications. Due attention should be given to historical evidence bearing on the point like that of Megasthenes and of certain early Chalukya, Pāṇḍya, and other epigraphs, e.g. the Talamāñchi plates, Ep. Ind. IX. 101 ; Bhandarker's List 1371, 2061, etc.

1 Invasion of Alexander, p. 156 n.

2 VII. 19. 11 ; 89. 37 ; VIII. 44 49.

3 "Abhishāhāḥ Śūrasenāḥ Śivayo'tha Vaśātayaḥ" (Mbh., VI. 106. 8).

"Vaśāti Sindhu-Sauvīrā iti prāyo' tikutsitāḥ."

'Gāndhārāḥ Sindhu-Sauvīrāḥ Śivayo'tha Vaśātayaḥ' (Mbh., VI. 51. 14).

4 Paṭāñjali, I. 2. 3 ; Mbh., VII. 19. 6 ; IX. 37. 1.

25. The kingdom of Mousikanos :¹

This famous state included a large part of modern Sind. Its capital has been identified with Alor in the Sukkur district. The characteristics of the inhabitants of the realm of Mousikanos as noticed by Strabo are given below :²

"The following are their peculiarities ; to have a kind of Lacedæmonian common meal, where they eat in public. Their food consists of what is taken in the chase. They make no use of gold nor silver, although they have mines of these metals. Instead of slaves, they employed youths in the flower of their age, as the Cretans employ the Aphamiotæ, and the Lacedæmonians the Helots. They study no science with attention but that of medicine ;³ for they consider the excessive pursuit of some arts, as that of war, and the like to be committing evil. There is no process at law but against murder and outrage, for it is not in a person's own power to escape either one or the other ; but as contracts are in the power of each individual, he must endure the wrong, if good faith is violated by another ; for a man should be cautious whom he trusts, and not disturb the city with constant disputes in courts of justice."

From the account left by Arrian it appears that the "Brachmans," i.e., the Brāhmaṇas exercised considerable influence in the country. They were the instigators of a revolt against the Macedonian invader.⁴

1 Bevan in Camb. Hist. Ind. p. 377, following Lassen (Inv. Alex. 157 n) restores the name as Mūshika. Dr. Jayaswal in his Hindu Polity suggests Muchukarṇa. Cf. Maushikāra (Patanjali, IV. i. 4).

2 H. & F., III, p. 96.

3 This trait they shared with the Ambashthas (cf. Manu, X.47).

4 Chinnock, Arrian, p. 319. Cf. Strabo, xv. i. 66,—"Nearchos says that the Brachmans engage in the affairs of the state and attend the king as councillors."

26. The principality of Oxykanos :

Curtius calls the subjects of Oxykanos the Praesti (Proshthas ?).¹ Oxykanos himself is styled both by Strabo and Diodoros Portikanos. Cunningham places his territory to the west of the Indus in the level country around Larkhāna.²

27. The principality of Sambos :³

Sambos was the ruler of a mountainous country adjoining the kingdom of Mousikanos, with whom he was at feud. His capital, called Sindimana, has been identified, with little plausibility, with Sehwan, a city on the Indus.⁴ According to Diodoros 'a city of the Brāhmaṇas' (Brāhmaṇavāṭa ?) had to be stormed whilst the operations against Sambos were going on.⁵

28. Patalene :

It was the Indus delta, and took its name from the capital city, Patala, probably near the site of Bahmaṇābād.

Diodoros tells us⁶ that Tauala (Patala) had a political constitution drawn on the same lines as the Spartan ; for in this community the command in war was vested in two hereditary kings of different houses, while a Council of Elders ruled the whole state with paramount authority. One of the kings in the time of Alexander was called Moeres.⁷

The states described above had little tendency to unity or combination. Curtius tells us⁸ that Āmbhi, ruler of

1 Mbh., VI. 9. 61.

2 Invasion of Alexander, p. 158; AGI, Revised ed. 300.

3 Śambhu, according to Bevan (Camb. Hist. Ind., 377). Śāmba is a possible alternative.

4 McCrindle, Invasion of Alexander, p. 404 ; AGI, Revised ed., 302 f.

5 Diod. XVII. 103. 1 ; cf. Alberuni (I. 316 ; II. 262).

6 Inv. Alex., p. 296.

7 Inv. Alex. p. 256. cf. Maurya.

8 Inv. Alex., p. 202.

Taxila, was at war with Abisares and Poros. Arrian informs us that Poros and Abisares were not only enemies of Taxila but also of the neighbouring autonomous tribes. On one occasion the two kings marched against the Kshudrakas and the Mālavas.¹ Arrian further tells us that the relations between Poros and his nephew were far from friendly. Sambos and Mousikanos were also on hostile terms. Owing to these feuds and strifes amongst the petty states, a foreign invader had no united resistance to fear; and he could be assured that many among the local chieftains would receive him with open arms out of hatred for their neighbours.

The Nandas of Magadha do not appear to have made any attempt to subjugate these states of the Uttarāpatha (North-West India). The task of reducing them was reserved for a foreign conqueror, viz., Alexander of Macedon. The tale of Alexander's conquest has been told by many historians including Arrian, Q. Curtius Rufus, Diodoros Siculus, Plutarch and Justin. We learn from Curtius that Scythiads and Dahae served in the Macedonian army.² The expedition led by Alexander was thus a combined Śaka-Yavana enterprise. The invader met with no such general confederacy of the native powers like the one formed by the East Indian states against Kūṇika-Ajātaśatru. On the contrary he obtained assistance from many important chiefs like Āmbhi of Taxila, Sangæus (Sañjaya ?) of Pushkarāvati, Kophaïos or Cophæus (of the Kābul region ?), Assagetes (Āsvajit ?), and Sisikottos (Śaśigupta) who got as his reward the satrapy of the Assakenians.³ The only princes or peoples who thought of combining against the invader were Poros and Abisares, and the Mālavas (Malloi), Kshudrakas

1 Chinnock, Arrian, p. 279.

2 Inv. Alex., p. 208.

3 Inv. Alex., p. 112.

(Oxydrakai), and the neighbouring autonomous tribes. Even in the latter case personal jealousies prevented any effective results. Alexander met with stubborn resistance from individual chiefs and clans, notably from Astes (Hastī or Ashtaka?), the Aspasiens, the Assakenians, the elder Poros, the Kathaians, the Malloi, the Oxydrakai, and the Brāhmaṇas of the kingdom of Mousikanos. Massaga, the stronghold of the Assakenians, was stormed with great difficulty, Poros was defeated on the banks of the Hydaspes (B. C. 326), the Malloi and the Oxydrakai were also no doubt crushed. But Alexander found that his Indian antagonists were different from the effete troops of Persia. Diodoros informs us that at Massaga, where Alexander treacherously massacred the mercenaries, "the women, taking the arms of the fallen, fought side by side with the men." Poros, when he saw most of his forces scattered, his elephants lying dead or straying riderless, did not flee—as Darius Codomannus had twice fled—but remained fighting, seated on an elephant of commanding height, and received nine wounds before he was taken prisoner.² The Malloi almost succeeded in killing the Macedonian king. But all this was of no avail. A disunited people could not long resist the united forces of the Hellenic world led by the greatest captain of ancient Europe. Alexander succeeded in conquering the old Persian provinces of Gandhāra and "India," but was unable to try conclusions with Agrammes king of the Gangaridae and the Prasii, i.e., the last Nanda king of Magadha and the other Gangetic provinces in Eastern India. Plutarch informs us that the battle with Poros depressed the spirits of the Macedonians and made them very unwilling to advance further into India. Moreover they were afraid of the "Gandaritai and the Praisiai" who were reported to be waiting for Alexander with an army of 80,000 horse, 200,000 foot, 8,000 war-chariots and 6,000 fighting elephants. As a matter of fact when Alexander was retreating through Karmania he received a report that his satrap Philippos, governor of the Upper Indus Province, had been murdered (324 B.C.). Shortly afterwards the Macedonian garrison was overpowered. The Macedonian satrap of Sind had to be transferred to the north-west borderland beyond the Indus and no new satrap was appointed in his place. The successors of Alexander at the time of the Triparadeisos agreement in 321 B.C., confessed their inability to remove the Indian Rājās of the Pañjāb without royal troops under the command of some distinguished general. One of the Rājās, possibly Poros, was treacherously slain by an officer named Eudemos. The withdrawal of the latter (cir. 317 B.C.) marks the ultimate collapse of the first serious attempt of the Yavanas to establish an empire in India.

1 Inv. Alex., p. 270.

2 Cf. Bury, History of Greece for Beginners, pp. 428-29.

The only permanent effect of Alexander's raid seems to have been the establishment of a number of Yavana settlements in the Uttarāpatha. The most important of these settlements were :

1. The city of Alexandria (modern Charikar or Opian ?)¹ in the land of the Paropanisadae, i.e., the Kābul region.
2. Boukephala, on the spot whence the Macedonian king had started to cross the Hydaspes (Jhelum),
3. Nikaia, where the battle with Poros took place,
4. Alexandria at or near the confluence of the Chenāb and the Indus, to the north-east of the countries of the Sodrai, or Sogdoi, and Massanoi, and ¹ According to Tarn (The Greeks in Bactria and India, 462) Alexandria stood on the west bank of the united Panjshir-Ghorband rivers near the confluence facing Kāpiśa on the east bank. It is represented by the modern Begram.

5. Sogdian Alexandria,¹ below the confluence of the Pañjāb rivers.

Aśoka recognised the existence of Yona (Yavana) settlers on the north-western fringe of his empire, and appointed some of them (e.g., the Yavana-rāja Tushāspā)² to high offices of state. Boukephala Alexandria flourished as late as the time of the Periplus of the Erythraean Sea.³ One of the Alexandrias (Alasanda) is mentioned in the Mahāvamsa.⁴

Alexander's invasion produced one indirect result. It helped the cause of Indian unity by destroying the power of the petty states of north-west India, just as the Danish invasion contributed to the union of England under Wessex by destroying the independence of Northumbria and Mercia. If Ugrasena-Mahāpadma was the precursor of Chandragupta Maurya in the east, Alexander was the forerunner of that emperor in the north-west.

1 Inv. Alex., pp. 293, 354 ; Bury, History of Greece for Beginners, p. 433 ; Camb. Hist. Ind., I.376f.

2 For the nationality of Tushāspā and significance of the term "Yavana," see Raychaudhuri, Early History of the Vaishnava Sect, 2nd Ed., pp. 28f.

3 Schoff's tr., p. 41.

4 Geiger's tr., p. 194.

CHAPTER IV. THE MAURYA EMPIRE : THE ERA OF DIGVIJAYA

SECTION I. THE REIGN OF CHANDRAGUPTA MAURYA.

*Mlechchhairudvejyamānā bhujayugamadhunā saṁśritā rājamūrtteḥ
Sa Śrīmadbandhubhṛtyaśchiramavatu mahīm pārthivaś-Chandraguptaḥ.
—Mudrārākshasa.*

In B.C. 326 the flood of Macedonian invasion had overwhelmed the Indian states of the Pañjāb, and was threatening to burst upon the Madhyadeśa. Agrammes was confronted with a crisis not unlike that which Arminius had to face when Varus carried the Roman Eagle to the Teutoburg Forest, or which Charles Martel had to face when the Saracens carried the Crescent towards the field of Tours. The question whether India was, or was not, to be Hellenized awaited decision.

Agrammes was fortunate enough to escape the onslaught of Alexander. But it is doubtful whether he had the ability or perhaps the inclination to play the part of an Arminius or a Charles Martel, had the occasion arisen. But there was at this time another Indian who was made of different stuff. This was Chandragupta, the Sandroktopos (Sandrokottos etc.) of the classical writers. The rise of Chandragupta is thus described by Justin :¹

“India after the death of Alexander had shaken, as it were, the yoke of servitude from its neck and put his governors to death. The author of this liberation was

¹ Watson's tr., p. 142 with slight emendations.

Sandrocottus. This man was of humble origin, but was stimulated to aspire to regal power by supernatural encouragement; for, having offended Alexander¹ by his boldness of speech and orders being given to kill him, he saved himself by swiftness of foot; and while he was lying asleep, after his fatigue, a lion of great size having come up to him, licked off with his tongue the sweat that was running from him and after gently waking him, left him. Being first prompted by this prodigy to conceive hopes of royal dignity he drew together a band of robbers,² and solicited the Indians to support his new sovereignty.³ Sometime after, as he was going to war with the generals of Alexander, a wild elephant of great bulk presented itself before him of its own accord and, as if tamed down to gentleness, took him on its back and became his guide in the war and conspicuous in fields of battle. Sandrocottus thus acquired a throne when Seleucus was laying the foundations of his future greatness."

The above account, shorn of its marvellous element, amounts to this, that Chandragupta, a man of non-monarchical rank, placed himself at the head of the 1 Some modern scholars propose to read 'Nandrum' (Nanda) in place of 'Alexandrum.' Such conjectural emendations by modern editors often mislead students who have no access to original sources and make the confusion regarding the early career of Chandragupta worse confounded (cf. Indian Culture, Vol. II, No. 3, p. 558; for 'boldness of speech', cf. Grote XII. 141, case of Kleitus, and pp. 147 ff, case of Kallisthenes)

2 The original expression used by Justin has the sense of 'mercenary soldier' as well as that of 'robber'. And the former sense is in consonance with Indian tradition recorded by Hemachandra in the Parīśiṣṭaparvan (VIII, 253-54):

Dhātuvūdopārjitena draviṇena Chaṇḍiprasūh chakrepattyaḍi sāmāgrīm Nandamuchchhettumudṛyataḥ.

i.e., Chāṇakya gathered for Chandragupta an army with wealth found underground, (lit 'with the aid of mineralogy') for the purpose of uprooting Nanda.

3 According to the interpretation accepted by Hultzsch—"instigated the Indians to overthrow the existing government."

Indians who chafed under the Macedonian yoke, and after Alexander's departure defeated his generals and "shook the yoke of servitude from the neck" of India. The verdict of the Hydaspes was thus reversed.¹

The ancestry of Chandragupta is not known for certain. Hindu literary tradition connects him with the Nanda dynasty of Magadha.² Tradition recorded in Mediaeval inscriptions, however, represents the Maurya family (from which he sprang) as belonging to the solar race.³ "From Māndhātṛi, a prince of that race, sprang the Maurya line." In the Rājputāna Gazetteer,⁴ the Moris (Mauryas) are described as a Rājput clan. Jaina tradition recorded in the *Parīśiṣṭaparvan*⁵ represents Chandragupta as the son of a daughter of the chief of a village of peacock-tamers (Mayūra-

1 The anti-Macedonian movement led by Chandragupta, and those who co-operated with him, probably began in Sind. The Macedonian Satrap of that province withdrew before 321 B.C. Āmbhi and the Paurava remained in possession of portions of the Western and Central Pañjāb and some adjoining regions till sometime after the Triparadeisos agreement of 321 B.C.

2 The Mudrārākshasa calls him not only Mauryaputra (Act II, verse 6) but also Nandānvaya (Act IV). Kshemendra and Somadeva refer to him as Pūrvananda-sūta, son of the genuine Nanda, as opposed to Yoga-Nanda. The commentator on the Vishṇu Purāṇa (IV, 24—Wilson IX, 187) says that Chandragupta was the son of Nanda by a wife named Murā, whence he and his descendants were called Mauryas. Dhruṇḍirāja, the commentator on the Mudrārākshasa, informs us on the other hand that Chandragupta was the eldest son of Maurya who was the son of the Nanda king Sarvārthasiddhi by Murā, daughter of a Vṛishala (Śūdra?).

3 Ep. Ind., II. 222. The Mahāvamsaśikā also connects the Mauryas with the Śākya who, as is well-known, claimed to belong to the race of Āditya (the Sun). Cf. also Avadānakalpalatā, No. 59.

4 II A, the Mewar Residency, compiled by Major K. D. Erskine (p. 14).

5 Page 56; VIII. 229f.

poshaka).¹ The *Mahāvamsa*² calls him a scion of the Khattiya clan styled Moriya (Maurya). In the *Divyāvadāna*³ Bindusāra, the son of Chandragupta, claims to be an anointed Kshatriya, Kshatriya Mūrdhābhishikta. In the same work⁴ Asoka, the son of Bindusāra, calls himself a Kshatriya. In the *Mahāparinibbāna Sutta*⁵ the Moriyas are represented as the ruling clan of Pippalivana, and as belonging to the Kshatriya caste. As the Mahāparinibbāna Sutta is the most ancient of the works referred to above, and forms part of the early Buddhist canon, its evidence should be preferred to that of later compositions. It is, therefore, practically certain that Chandragupta belonged to a Kshatriya community, viz., the Moriya (Maurya) clan.

In the sixth century B. C. the Moriyas were the ruling clan of the little republic of Pippalivana which probably lay between Rummindai in the Nepalese Tarai and Kasia in the Gorakhpur district. They must have been absorbed into the Magadhan empire along with the other states of Eastern India. Tradition avers that they were reduced to great straits in the fourth century B. C., and young Chandragupta grew up among peacock-tamers, herdsmen and hunters in the Vindhyan forest. The classical notices of his encounter with a lion and an

1 Buddhist tradition also testifies to the supposed connection between the expressions Moriya (Maurya) and Mora or Mayūra (peacock)—see Turnour, Mahāvamsa (Mahāwansa), xxxix f. Aelian informs us that tame peacocks were kept in the parks of the Maurya Palace at Pāṭaliputra. Sir John Marshall points out that figures of peacocks were employed to decorate some of the projecting ends of the architraves of the east gateway at Sāñchi (A Guide to Sāñchi, pp. 44, 62). Foucher (Monuments of Sanchi, 231) does not regard these birds as a sort of canting badge for the dynasty of the Mauryas. He apparently prefers to imagine in them a possible allusion to the Mora Jātaka.

2 Geiger's Translation, p. 27. Moriyānaṃ Khattiyānaṃ vamsa jāta.

3 Cowell and Neil's Ed., p. 370.

4 Page 409.

5 SBE., XI, pp. 134-135.

elephant accord well with his residence amidst the wild denizens of that sequestered region. During the inglorious reign of Agrammes, when there was general disaffection amongst his subjects, the Moriyas evidently came into prominence, probably under the leadership of Chandragupta. These clansmen were no longer rulers and were merely Magadhan subjects. It is, therefore, not at all surprising that Justin calls Chandragupta a man of humble origin. Plutarch, as well as Justin, informs us that Chandragupta paid a visit to Alexander. Plutarch says ¹ "Androkottus himself, who was then a lad, saw Alexander himself and afterwards used to declare that Alexander might easily have conquered the whole country, as the then king was hated by his subjects on account of his mean and wicked disposition." From this passage it is not unreasonable to infer that Chandragupta visited Alexander with the intention of inducing the conqueror to put an end to the rule of the tyrant of Magadha. His conduct may be compared to that of Rānā Saṃgrāma Siṃha who invited Bābur to put an end to the regime of Ibrāhīm Lūdi.² Apparently Chandragupta found Alexander as stern a ruler as Agrammes, for we learn from Justin that the Macedonian king did not scruple to give orders to kill the intrepid Indian lad for his boldness of speech.³ The young Maurya apparently thought of ridding his country of both the oppressors, Macedonian as well as Indian. With the help of Kauṭilya, also called Chāṇakya or Vishnugupta, son of a Brāhmaṇa of Taxila, he is said to have over-

1 Life of Alexander lxii.

2 Regarding the conduct of Saṃgrāma Siṃha, see Tod's Rājasthān, vol. I, p. 240, n. (2). Anne Susannah Beveridge, the Bābur-nāma in English, Vol. II, p. 529.

3 As already stated the substitution of 'Nanda' for Alexander cannot be justified.

thrown the infamous Nanda. Traditional accounts of the conflict between Chandragupta and the last Nanda are preserved in the Milindapañho, the Purāṇas, the Mudrārākṣhasa, the Mahāvamsa Tikā and the Jaina Pariśiṣṭaparvan. The *Milindapañho*¹ tells us that the Nanda army was commanded by Bhaddasāla. The Nanda troops were evidently defeated with great slaughter, an exaggerated account of which is preserved in the Milindapañho.

"Sometime after" his acquisition of sovereignty, Chandragupta went to war with the prefects or generals of Alexander² and crushed their power.

The overthrow of the Nandas, and the liberation of the Pañjāb were not the only achievements of the great Maurya. Plutarch tells us³ that he overran and subdued the whole of India with an army of 600,000 men. Justin also informs us that he was "in possession of India." In his Beginnings of South Indian History,⁴ Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar says that Māmulanār, an ancient Tamil author, makes frequent allusions to the Mauryas in the past having penetrated with a great army as far as the Podiyil Hill in the Tinnevely district. The statements of this author are said to be supported by Paraṇar or Param Korṇanār and Kallil Āttiraiyanār. The advanced party of the invasion was composed of a warlike people called Kośar.⁵ The invaders advanced from the Koṅkan, passing the hills Elilmalai, about sixteen miles north of Cannanore, and entered the Kongu (Coimbatore) district, ultimately going as far as the Podiyil Hill (Malaya?).

1 SBE., Vol XXXVI, p. 147.

2 Cf. Smith, Asoka, third edition, p. 14 n. For the relative date of the assumption of sovereignty and the war with the prefects see Indian Culture, II, No. 3, pp 559 ff.

3 Alex. LXII.

4 Chap. II, cf JRAS, 1924, 666.

5 For the Kośar see Indian Culture, I, pp. 97 ff. Cf Kośakāra.

Unfortunately the name of the Maurya leader is not given. But the expression Vamba Moriyar, or Maurya upstarts,¹ would seem to suggest that the first Maurya, i.e., Chandragupta, and his adherents were meant.²

Certain Mysore inscriptions refer to Chandragupta's rule in North Mysore. Thus one epigraph says that Nāgarkhaṇḍa in the Shikārpur Tāluq was protected by the wise Chandragupta, "an abode of the usages of eminent Kshatriyas."³ This is of the fourteenth century and little reliance can be placed upon it. But when the statements of Plutarch, Justin, Māmulanār, and the Mysore inscriptions referred to by Rice, are read together, they seem to suggest that the first Maurya did conquer a considerable portion of trans-Vindhyan India.

Whatever we may think of Chandragupta's connection with Southern India, there can be no doubt that he pushed his conquests as far as Surāshṭra in Western India. The Junāgaḍh Rock inscription of the Mahākshatrapa Rudradāman refers to his Rāshṭriya or High 1 Beginnings of South Indian History, p. 89. Cf. Maurye nava rājani (Mudrārākshasa, Act IV).

2 Barnett suggests (Camb. Hist. Ind., I. 596) that the 'Vamba Moriyar' or 'Bastard Mauryas' were possibly a branch of the Konkani Mauryas. But there is hardly any genuine historical record of the penetration of the Mauryas of the Koṅkan deep into the southern part of the Tamil country. For other suggestions, see JRS., 1923, pp. 93-96. Some Tamil scholars hold that "the Moriyar were not allowed to enter Tamilakam, and the last point they reached was the Venkaṭa hill" (IHQ., 1928, p. 145). They also reject Dr. Aiyangar's statement about the Koṣar. But the view that the arms of Chandragupta possibly reached the Pāṇḍya country in the Far South of India which abounded in pearls and gems receives some confirmation from the Mudrārākshasa, Act III, verse 19, which suggests that the supremacy of the first Maurya eventually extended "from the lord of mountains (the Himālayas), cooled by showers of the spray of the divine stream (Ganges) playing about among its rocks, to the shores of the southern ocean (Dakṣiṇārnava) marked by the brilliance of gems flashing with various colours." The description, however, may be purely conventional.

3 Rice, Mysore and Coorg from the Inscriptions, p. 10. Fleet, however, is sceptical about the Jain tradition (Ind. Ant., 1892, 156 ff.). Cf. also JRS., 1911, 814-17.

Commissioner, Pushyagupta, the Vaiśya, who constructed the famous Sudarśana Lake.¹

Reference has already been made to an Aramaic Inscription from Taxila which mentions the form Priyadarśana, a well-known epithet of Aśoka Maurya. But it is well to remember that in the Mudrārākshasa Piadamśana is used as a designation of Chandasiri or Chandragupta himself.² Further, in Rock Edict VIII of Aśoka, his ancestors, equally with himself, are styled Devānaṃpiya. It is, therefore, not unreasonable to conclude that, like his famous grandson, Chandragupta, too, was known as 'Devānaṃpiya Piyadasi' (or 'Priyadarśana'), and it is not always safe to ascribe all epigraphs that make mention of Priyadarśana, irrespective of their contents, to Aśoka the Great.

The Seleukidan War.

We learn from Justin³ that when Chandragupta acquired his throne in India Seleukos (Seleucus), a general of Alexander, was laying the foundations of his future greatness. Seleukos was the son of Antiochos, a distinguished general of Philip of Macedon, and his wife Laodike. After the division of the Macedonian Empire among the followers of Alexander he carried on several wars in the east. He first took Babylon,⁴ and then his

1 The subjugation of the whole of Northern India (Udichī) from the Himālayas to the sea is probably suggested by the following passage of the Kaṭṭiliya Arthaśāstra (IX, 1) traditionally ascribed to a minister of Chandragupta, "Deśaḥ Prithivī ; tasyāṃ Himavat Samudrāntaram Udichinaṃ yojanasahasra parimānam atiryak Chakravartī-Kshetram." Cf. Mudrārākshasa, Act III. Verse 19.

2 Act VI.

3 Watson's tr., p. 143.

4 Seleukos obtained the satrapy of Babylon first after the agreement of Triparadeisos (321 B.C.) and afterwards in 312 B.C. from which year his era is dated. In 306 B.C., he assumed the title of king (Camb. Anc. His., VII, 161; Camb. Hist. Ind., I, 433).

strength being increased by this success, subdued the Bactrians. He next made an expedition into India. Appianus says¹ that he crossed the Indus and waged war on Chandragupta, king of the Indians, who dwelt about it, until he made friends and entered into relations of marriage² with him. Justin also observes that after making a league with Chandragupta, and settling his affairs in the east, Seleukos proceeded to join in the war against Antigonos (301 B. C.). Plutarch supplies us with the information that Chandragupta presented 500 elephants to Seleukos. More important details are given by Strabo who says :³

"The Indians occupy (in part) some of the countries situated along the Indus, which formerly belonged to the Persians: Alexander deprived the Ariani of them, and established there settlements (or provinces) of his own. But Seleucus Nicator gave them to Sandrocottus in consequence of a marriage contract, and received in turn 500 elephants." "The Indians occupied a larger portion of Ariana, which they had received from the Macedonians."⁴

It will be seen that the classical writers do not give us any detailed record of the actual conflict between Seleukos and Chandragupta. They merely speak of the results. There can be no doubt that the invader could not make much headway, and concluded an alliance which was cemented by a marriage contract. In his *Asoka*⁵ Dr. Smith observes that the current notion that the Syrian

1 Syr. 55 ; Ind. Ant., Vol VI. p. 114, Hultsch, xxxiv.

2 Appianus uses the clear term kedos (connection by marriage), and Strabo (XV) only an epigamia. The cession of territory in consequence of the marriage contract clearly suggests that the wedding did take place.

3 H. & F., III, p. 125.

4 Ibid., p. 78. Tarn, Greeks in Bactria and India 100.

5 Third Ed., p. 15.

king 'gave his daughter in marriage' to Chandragupta is not warranted by the evidence, which testifies merely to a 'matrimonial alliance.' But the cession of territory "in consequence of the epigamia" may rightly be regarded as a dowry given to a bridegroom. The Indian Emperor obtained some of the provinces situated along the Indus which formerly belonged to the Persians. The ceded country comprised a large portion of Ariana itself, a fact ignored by Tarn. In exchange the Maurya monarch gave the "comparatively small recompense of 500 elephants". It is believed that the territory ceded by the Syrian king included the four satrapies : Aria, Arachosia, Gedrosia and the Paropanisadai, i.e., Herat, Kandahār, Makrān and Kābul. Doubts have been entertained about this by several scholars including Tarn. The inclusion of the Kābul valley within the Maurya Empire is, however, proved by the inscriptions of Aśoka, the grandson of Chandragupta, which speak of the Yonas and Gandhāras as vassals of the Empire. And the evidence of Strabo probably points to the cession by Seleukos of a large part of the Iranian Tableland besides the riparian provinces on the Indus.

Megasthenes.

We learn from the classical writers that after the war the Syrian and Indian Emperors lived on friendly terms. Athenaios tells us that Chandragupta sent presents including certain powerful aphrodisiacs to the Syrian monarch.¹ Seleukos sent an envoy to the Maurya court, whose name was Megasthenes. Arrian tells 1 Inv. Alex., p. 405. Cf. Smith, EHI, 4th ed., p. 153. The treaty between Chandragupta and Seleukos ushered in a policy of philhellenism which bore fruit in the succeeding reigns. In the days of Bindusāra and Aśoka there was not only an exchange of embassies with the Hellenistic powers of the West, but the services of Greek philosophers and administrators were eagerly sought by the imperial government.

us¹ that Megasthenes originally lived with Sibyrtios, the satrap of Arachosia. He was sent from thence to Pātaliputra where he often visited the Maurya Emperor, and wrote a history on Indian affairs. The work of Megasthenes has been lost. The fragments that survive in quotations by later—authors like Strabo, Arrian, Diodoros and others, have been collected by Schwanbeck, and translated into English by McCrindle. As Professor Rhys Davids observes, Megasthenes possessed very little critical judgment, and was, therefore, often misled by wrong information received from others. But he is a truthful witness concerning matters which came under his personal observation. The most important piece of information supplied by him is, as Rhys Davids pointed out, the description of Pātaliputra which Arrian quotes in Chapter X of his Indica :

“The largest city in India, named Palimbothra, is in the land of the Prasians, where is the confluence of the river Erannobaos² and the Ganges, which is the greatest of rivers. The Erannobaos would be third of the Indian rivers.....Megasthenes says that on the side where it is longest this city extends 80 stades ($9\frac{1}{2}$ miles) in length, and that its breadth is fifteen ($1\frac{3}{4}$ miles); that the city has been surrounded with a ditch in breadth 6 plethra (606 feet), and in depth 30 cubits; and that its wall has 570 towers and 64 gates.”³

There were many other cities in the empire besides Pātaliputra. Arrain says, “It would not be possible to record with accuracy the number of the cities on account of their multiplicity. Those which are situated near the rivers or the sea are built of wood ; for if they were built of brick they could not long endure on account of the rain and because the rivers overflowing their banks fill the plains with water. But those which have been founded in commanding places, lofty and raised above the adjacent country, are built of brick and mortar." The most important cities of Chandragupta's empire besides the metropolis, were Taxila, Ujjain, Kauśāmbī and possibly Puṇḍranagara.¹

1 Chinnock's tr., p. 254.

2 Erannobaos = Hiraṇyavāha, i.e., the Śoṇa (Harshacharita, Pārab's ed., 1918, p. 19). Cf. Anuśaṇam Pāṭaliputram (Patañjali, II, 1.2). For references to “Pāṭaliputra in a Tamil classic” see Aiyangar Com. Vol. 355 ff.

3 Cf. Patañjali, IV. 3.2: “Pāṭaliputrakāḥ prāsādāḥ Pāṭaliputrakāḥ prākārā iti.”

Ælian gives the following account of the palace of Chandragupta. "In the Indian royal palace² where the greatest of all the kings of the country resides, besides much else which is calculated to excite admiration, and with which neither Susa, nor Ekbatana can vie (for, methinks, only the well-known vanity of the Persians could prompt such a comparison³), there are other wonders besides. In the parks tame peacocks are kept, and pheasants which have been domesticated ; there are shady groves and pasture ground planted with trees, and branches of trees which the art of the woodsman has deftly interwoven ; while some trees are native to the soil, others are brought from other parts, and with their beauty enhance the charms of the landscape. Parrots are natives of the country, and keep hovering about the king and wheeling round him, and vast though their numbers be, no Indian ever eats a parrot. The Brachmans honour them highly above all other birds—because the parrot alone can imitate human speech. Within the palace grounds are artificial ponds in which they keep fish of enormous size but quite tame. No one has permission to fish for these except the king's sons while yet in their boyhood. These youngsters amuse themselves while fishing in the unruffled sheet of water and learning how to sail their boats.”¹

1 Puṇḍranagara has been identified with Mahāsthānagarh in the Bogra District of Bengal. The identification seems to be confirmed by an inscription, written in early Mauryan Brāhmī character, which has recently been discovered at Mahāsthāna. The record makes mention of Puṇḍanagara and its storehouse filled with coins styled Gaṇḍakas, Kākanikas, etc, and refers to a people called Saḍvargikas. (Barua, IHQ, 1934, March, 57 ff ; D. R. Bhandarkar, Ep., Ind., April, 1931, 83 ff. ; P. C. Sen, IHQ, 1933, 722 ff.) Dr. Bhandarkar reads Sa(h)va(h)giya in the place of Saḍvargika which is more plausibly suggested by Dr. Barua. If the record really belongs to the early Maurya period the reference to coins is interesting. Dr. K. P. Jayaswal thinks that coins of the Maurya age bear certain symbols that can be recognized (cf. JRAS, 1936, 437 ff.).

2 The "Sugāṅga" palace was the favourite resort of Chandragupta (JRAS, 1923, 587.)

3 The statement should be remembered by those modern writers who find traces of Persian influence in Maurya architecture.

The imperial palace probably stood close to the modern village of Kumrahār.² The unearthing of the ruins of the Maurya pillar-hall and palace near Kumrahār, said to have been built on the model of the throne-room and palace of Darius at Persepolis, led Dr. Spooner to propound the theory that the Mauryas were Zoroastrians.³ Dr. Smith observed that the resemblance of the Maurya buildings with the Persian palace at Persepolis was not definitely established. Besides, as Professor Chanda observes, “Ethnologists do not recognize high class architecture as test of race, and in the opinion of experts the buildings of Darius and Xerxes at Persepolis are not Persian in style, but are mainly dependent on Babylonian models and bear traces of the influence of Greece, Egypt and Asia Minor.”

We learn from Strabo⁴ that the king usually remained within the palace under the protection of female guards⁵

1 McCrindle, Ancient India as described in Classical Literature, pp. 141-42.

2 Smith, The Oxford History of India p. 77. Macphail, Aśoka, pp. 23-25.

3 J.R.A.S., 1915, pp. 63 ff, 405 ff.

4 H. & F.'s Tr., Vol. III, p. 106; cf. Smith, EHI., 3rd ed., p. 123.

5 The same writer tells us that these women were bought from their parents. In view of this statement it is rather surprising that Megasthenes is quoted as saying that none of the Indians employed slaves. Note also the story narrated by

(cf. strî gaṇair dhanvibhiḥ of the Arthaśāstra) and appeared in public only on four occasions, viz., in time of war; to sit in his court as a judge; to offer sacrifice and to go on hunting expeditions.

Chandragupta's Government

Chandragupta was not only a great soldier and conqueror, he was a great administrator. Megasthenes, the Greek ambassador at his court, has left detailed accounts of his system of government. The edict of his grandson Aśoka, and the Arthaśāstra attributed to his minister, Kauṭilya, confirm in many respects the particulars of the organisation of the empire given by the distinguished envoy. The Arthaśāstra certainly existed before Bāṇa (seventh century A.D.) and the Nandisūtra of the Jainas (not later than the fifth century A.D.). But it is doubtful if, in its present shape, it is as old as the time of the first Maurya. Reference to Chinapaṭṭa China silk, which, be it remembered, occurs frequently in classical Sanskrit literature, points to a later date, as China was clearly outside the horizon of the early Mauryas, and is unknown to Indian epigraphy before the Nāgārjunikoṇḍa inscriptions. Equally noteworthy is the use of Sanskrit as the official language, a feature not characteristic of the Maurya epoch. A date as late as the Gupta period is, however, precluded by the absence of any reference to the Denarius in the sections dealing with weights and coins. Quite in keeping with this view is the reference to the Arthaśāstra contained in Jaina canonical works that were reduced to writing in the Gupta age. We have already adduced grounds for believing that the Arthaśāstra probably existed before the second century A.D.¹ Though Athenaios that Amitrochates (i.e., Bindusāra) begged Antiochos Soter to buy and send him a professor (Monahan, The Early History of Bengal, pp. 164, 176, 179).

¹ P. 9 f. ante.

a comparatively late work, it may be used, like the Junāgaḍh Inscription of Rudradāman, to confirm and supplement the information gleaned from earlier sources.

The Supreme Government consisted of two main parts :

1. The Rājā, and
2. The "Councillors" and "Assessors" (Mahāmātras, and Amātyas or Sachivas).

The Rājā or sovereign was the head of the state. He was considered to be a mere mortal, though a favoured mortal, the beloved of the deities.¹ The possession of the material resources of a great empire and control over a vast standing army gave him real power. But there was a body of ancient rules, Porāṇā pakiti, which even the most masterful despot viewed with respect. The people were an important element of the state. They were looked upon as children for whose welfare the head of the state was responsible, and to whom he owed a debt which could only be discharged by good government. There was a certain amount of decentralisation, notably in the sphere of local government, and there was usually at the imperial headquarters, and also at the chief centres of provincial government, a body of ministers who had a right to be consulted specially in times of emergency. Nevertheless the powers of the king were extensive. He had military, judicial, legislative, as well as executive functions. We have already seen that one of the occasions when he left his palace was war.² He considered plans of military operations with his *Senāpati*³ or Commander-in-Chief.

1 Cf. ante 198n 10.

2 Cf. Strabo, XV. i; and Kauṭilya Bk. X.

3 Kauṭ., p. 38. In the last days of the Maurya empire we find the Senāpati overshadowing the king and transferring to himself the allegiance of the troops.

He also sat in his court to administer justice. "He remains there all day thus occupied, not suffering himself to be interrupted even though the time arrives for attending to his person. This attention to his person consists of friction with pieces of wood, and he continues to listen to the cause, while the friction is performed by four attendants who surround him."¹ The Kautiliya Arthasāstra says,² "when in the court, he (the king) shall never cause his petitioners to wait at the door, for when a king makes himself inaccessible to his people and entrusts his work to his immediate officers, he may be sure to engender confusion in business, and to cause thereby public disaffection, and himself a prey to his enemies. He shall, therefore, personally attend to the business of gods, of heretics, of Brāhmaṇas learned in the Vedas, of cattle, of sacred places, of minors, the aged, the afflicted, the helpless and of women ;—all this in order (of enumeration) or according to the urgency or pressure of those works. All urgent calls he shall hear at once."

As to the king's legislative function we should note that the *Kautiliya Arthasāstra*³ calls him "dharma-pravartaka," and includes Rājaśāsana among the sources of law. As instances of royal "Śāsanas" or rescripts may be mentioned the Edicts of Aśoka, the famous grandson of Chandragupta.

Among executive functions of the king, our authorities mention the posting of watchmen, attending to the accounts of receipts and expenditure, appointment of ministers, priests and superintendents, correspondence with the Mantriparishad or Council of Ministers, collection of the secret information gathered by spies, reception of envoys, etc.¹

1 H. & F., Strabo III, pp. 106-107.

2 Shamasastri's translation, p. 43.

3 Bk. III, Chap. I.

It was the king who laid down the broad lines of policy and issued rescripts for the guidance of his officers and the people. Control was maintained over the most distant officials by an army of secret reporters and overseers and, in the days of Chandragupta's grandson, by itinerant judges. Communication with them was kept up by a network of roads, and garrisons were posted at strategic points.

Kauṭilya holds that Rājatva (sovereignty) is possible only with assistance.² A single wheel can never move. Hence the king shall employ Sachivas and hear their opinion. The Sachivas or Amātyas of Kauṭilya correspond to the "seventh caste" of Megasthenes which assisted the king in deliberating on public affairs. This class was small in numbers, but in wisdom and justice excelled all the others.³

The most important amongst the Sachivas or Amātyas were undoubtedly the Mantrins or High Ministers, probably corresponding to the Mahāmātras of Aśoka's Rock Edict VI and the "advisers of the king" referred to by Diodoros.⁴ They were selected from those Amātyas whose character had been tested under all kinds of allurements.⁵ They were given the highest salary, viz., 48,000 paṇas per annum.⁶ They assisted the king in examining 1 Kauṭilya, Bk. I, Ch. xvi ; xvii ; Bk. VIII, Ch. i. Cf. Aśoka's Rock Edicts III (regulation about alpa vyayatā and alpa bhāṇdatā), V (appointment of high officials), VI (relations with the Parishad, and collection of information from the Paṭivedakā), and XIII (diplomatic relations with foreign powers).

2 Cf. Manu, VII. 55.

3 Chinnock, Arrian, p. 413.

4 II, 41.

5 Sarvopadhā śuddhāṃ Mantrināḥ kuryāt.—Arthaśāstra, 1919, p. 17. For upadhā see also the Junāgaḍh Rock Inscription of Skanda Gupta.

6 Kauṭilya, p. 247. According to Smith (EHI, 4th ed., p. 149) the value of a silver paṇa may be taken as not far from a shilling.

the character of the Amātyas who were employed in ordinary departments.¹ All kinds of administrative measures were preceded by consultation with three or four of them.² In works of emergency (ātyayike kārye) they were summoned along with the Mantriparishad.³ They exercised a certain amount of control over the Imperial Princes.⁴ They accompanied the king to the battle-field, and gave encouragement to the troops.⁵ Kautilya was evidently one of those Mantrins. Another minister (or Pradeshtri?) was apparently Maniyatappo, a Jatilian, who helped the king to "confer the blessings of peace on the country by extirpating marauders who were like unto thorns."⁶ That there were at times more than one Mantrin is proved by the use of the plural Mantrinah.

In addition to the Mantrins there was the Mantriparishad, i.e., Assembly of Counsellors or Council of Ministers. The existence of the Parishad as an important element of the Maurya constitution is proved by the third and sixth Rock Edicts of Aśoka.⁷ The members of the Mantriparishad were not identical with the Mantrins. In several passages of Kautilya's Arthaśāstra the Mantrins are sharply distinguished from the Mantriparishad.⁸ The latter evidently occupied an inferior position. Their salary was only 12,000 panas, whereas the salary of a Mantrin was 48,000. They do not appear to have been consulted on ordinary occasions, but were summoned

1 Ibid. p. 16.

2 Ibid. pp. 26, 28.

3 Ibid. p. 29 Cf. Aśoka's Rock Edict VI.

4 Ibid. p. 333.

5 Ibid. p. 368. Cf. the Udayagiri Inscription of Śāba.

6 Turnour's Mahāvamsa, p. xlii. The evidence is late.

7 Note also Pliny's reference to noble and rich Indians who sit in council with the king (Monahan, The Early History of Bengal, 148) ; cf. Mbh. iii, 127.

8 Amātyaparshad ; xii, 320, 139 Amātya Samiti.

9 Cf. pp. 20, 29, 247.

along with the Mantrins when Ātyayika kārya,¹ i.e., works of emergency had to be transacted. The king was to be guided by the decision of the majority (Bhūyishṭhāh). They also attended the king at the time of the reception of envoys.² From the passage "Mantripariśhadam dvādaśāmātyān kurvāta"—"the Council of Ministers should consist of twelve Amātyas," it appears that the Parishad used to be recruited from all kinds of Amātyas (not necessarily from Mantrins alone). From Kauṭilya's denunciation of a king with a "Kṣudrapariśhad,"³ a small council, his rejection of the views of the Mānavas, Bārhaspatyas and the Aśvanasās, his preference for an "Akṣudra-pariśhad," a council that is not small, and his reference to Indra's Parishad of a thousand Rishis, it may be presumed that he wanted to provide for the need of a growing empire. Such an empire was undoubtedly that of Chandragupta who may have been prevailed upon by his advisers to constitute a fairly big assembly.⁴

Besides the Mantrins and the Mantripariśhad, there was another class of Amātyas who filled the great administrative and judicial appointments.⁵ The Kauṭīliya Arthasāstra says⁶ that the "dharmopadhāśuddha" Amātyas, officers purified by religious test, should be employed in 1 Arthasāstra, 29. Cf. Mbh, iv. 30, 8. Aśoka's R. E. VI.

2 Arthasāstra, p. 45.

3 P. 259.

4 The Divyāvadāna (p. 372) refers to the five hundred councillors (Pañcāmātyaśatāni) of Bindusāra, son and successor of Chandragupta Maurya. Patañjali refers to Chandragupta Sabhā. But we have no indication as to its constitution.

5 Cf. the Karma-Sachivas of the Junāgaḍh Rock Inscription of Rudradāman I.

6 P. 17. Cf. McCrindle, Megasthenes and Arrian, 1926, 41, 42.

civil¹ and criminal² courts; the "arthopadhāsuddha" Amātyas, officers purified by money-test, should be employed as Samāhartṛi ("Chancellor of the Exchequer and Minister of the Interior") and Sannidhātṛi (High Treasurer and Keeper of Stores);³ the "kāmopadhāsuddha" Amātyas, officials purified by love-test, should be appointed to superintend the pleasure grounds, the "bhāyopadhāsuddha" Amātyas, officers purified by fear-test, should be appointed to do work requiring immediate attention (āsanna kārya), while those who are proved to be impure should be employed in mines, timber and elephant forests,⁴ and manufactories. Untried Amātyas were to be employed in ordinary or insignificant departments (sāmānya adhikaraṇa). Persons endowed with the qualifications required in an Amātya (Amātyasampadopeta) were appointed Nisṛiṣṭārtihāh or Ministers Plenipotentiary, Lehkhakas or Ministers of Correspondence, and Adhyakshas or Superintendents.

The statements of the Kauṭīliya Arthaśāstra regarding the employment of Amātyas as the chief executive and judicial officers of the realm, are confirmed by the classical writers. Strabo, for example, observes,⁵ "the seventh caste consists of counsellors and assessors (Symbouloi and Synedroi) of the king. To these persons belong the offices of state, tribunals of justice, and the whole

1 Civil (Dharmasthiya) Courts were established "in the cities of Sangrahana (in the midst of a collection of ten villages), Dronamukha (in the centre of four hundred villages), Sthāniya (in the centre of eight hundred villages), and at places where districts met (Janapada-sandhi; ?union of districts;)," and consisted of three Dharmasthas (judges versed in the sacred law) and three Amātyas.

2 A Criminal (Kaṇṭakaśodhana) Court consisted of 3 Amātyas, or 3 Pradeshtṛis. The functions of the latter will be described later on.

3 For the duties of these officers see Kauṭīliya's Arthaśāstra, Bk. II, 5-6, 35; Bk. IV, 4; Bk. V, 2. For the revenue system under the Mauryas, see Ghoshal, Hindu Revenue System, pp. 165 ff.

4 Cf. Nāgavana of Pillar Edict V.

5 H. & F., Vol. III, p. 103. Cf. Diodoros, II. 41.

administration of affairs." Arrian also says, "from them are chosen their rulers, governors of provinces, deputies, treasurers, generals, admirals, controllers of expenditure, and superintendents of agriculture."

The Adhyakshas who formed the pivot of the Kauṭīliyan administration, are evidently referred to by Strabo as Magistrates in the following passage :¹

"Of the Magistrates, some have the charges of the market,² others of the city, others of the soldiery.³ Some⁴ have the care of the rivers, measure the land, as in Egypt, and inspect the closed reservoirs from which water is distributed by canals, so that all may have an equal use of it. These persons have charge also of the hunters, and have the power of rewarding or punishing those who merit either. They collect the taxes, and superintend the occupations connected with land, as wood-cutters, carpenters, workers in brass, and miners. They superintend the public roads, and place a pillar at every ten stadia to indicate the byways and distances. Those who have charge of the city (astynomoi) are divided into six bodies of five each.⁵ Next to the Magistrates of the city is a third body of governors, who have the care of military affairs. This class also consists of six divisions each composed of five persons.⁶

1 One class of Adhyakshas, those in charge of women, are referred to in the Aśokan inscriptions.

2 "District" according to the Cambridge History of India, I, 417.

3 Cf. the Durga-vāshītra-dāṇḍa-mukhyas of Kauṭīlya, Bk. XIII, Chs. III and V.

4 i.e., the district officials (Agronomoi).

5 Each body was responsible for one of the following departments, viz., (1) the mechanical arts, (2) foreign residents, (3) registration of births and deaths, (4) trade, commerce, weights and measures, (5) supervision and sale of manufactured articles and (6) collection of tithes on sales. In their collective capacity they looked after public buildings, markets, harbours and temples. Prices were regulated by them.

6 Each division or Board was responsible for one of the following departments, viz., the navy, transport and commissariat (cf. Viśhṭi karmāṇi of

The Magistrates in charge of the city and those in charge of military affairs are evidently the same as the Nagarādhyakshas and Balādhyakshas of the Arthaśāstra.¹ Dr. Smith remarks,² "the Boards described by Megasthenes as in charge of the business of the capital and the army are unknown to the author (Kaṭilya), who contemplated each such charge as the duty of a single officer. The creation of the Boards may have been an innovation effected by Chandragupta personally." But the historian overlooks the fact that Kaṭilya distinctly says : "Bahumukhyam anityam chādhyakṣanāṃ sthāpayet," "each department shall be officered by several temporary heads ;³ "Adhyakṣaḥ Saṅkhyāyaka-Lekhaka-Rūpadarśaka-Nivīgrāhaka-Uttarādhyakṣa-sakhāḥ karmāṇi kuryuḥ," "the Superintendents shall carry on their duties with the assistance of accountants, scribes, coin-examiners, stock-takers and additional secret overseers." Evidently Dr. Smith notices only the Adhyakshas but ignores the existence of the Uttarādhyakshas and others. As in regard to the Arthaśāstra Smith notices only the Adhyakshas, so in regard to the classical accounts he takes note only of the Kaṭilya, Bk. X, Ch. iv), the infantry, the cavalry, the chariots and the elephants. In the Śāntiparva of the Mahābhārata the divisions are stated to be six (CIII, 38) or eight (LIX, 41-42) :

*Rathā Nāgā Hayāśchaiva Pādātāśchaiva Pāṇḍava
Viśṭīr Nāvāś Charāśchaiva Deśikā iti chāṣṭamam Aṅgānyetāni Kauravya prakāśāni balasya tu*

"Chariots, elephants, horses, infantry, burden-carriers, ships, spies with local guides as the eighth—these are the open "limbs" of a fighting force, O descendant of Kuru."

The Raghuvamśa (IV, 26) refers to Shadvidham balam. Cf. Mbh. V. 96. 16.

1 Mysore Ed., 1919, p. 55. Nagara-Dhanya-Vyavahārika-Kārmāntika-Balādhyakṣaḥ. Cf. Balaṭpradhānā and Nigamaṭpradhānāḥ of Mbh., V. 2. 6.

2 EHI, 1914, p. 141. Cf. Monahan, Early History of Bengal, pp. 157-64, Stein, Megasthenes und Kaṭilya, pp. 233 ff.

3 Arthaśāstra, 1919, p. 60. On page 57 we have the following passage—Hasty-aśva-ratha-padātam-aneka-mukhyam-avasthāpayet, i.e., elephants, cavalry chariots, and infantry shall each be placed under many chiefs.

Boards, but ignores the chiefs who are expressly mentioned in two passages,¹ viz.—

“One division is associated with the Chief Naval Superintendent,” “another (division) is associated with the person who has the charge of the bullock-teams.” The Chief Naval Superintendent and the Person in Charge of the Bullock-teams, doubtless, correspond to the Nāvadhyaksha and the Go’dhyaksha of the Arthasāstra. It is a mistake to think that the Nāvadhyaksha of the early Hindu period was a purely civil official, for he was responsible for the destruction of Himsrikās (pirate ships?) and the *Mahābhārata*² clearly refers to the navy as one of the aṅgas or limbs of the Royal Forces. The civil duties of the Nāvadhyaksha have their counterpart in those of Megasthenes’ Admiral relating to the “letting out of ships on hire for the transport both of passengers and merchandize.”³

Central popular assemblies like those that existed among the Licchavis, Mallas, Śākya and other Saṅghas had no place in the Maurya constitution. The custom of summoning a great assembly of Grāmikas or Village Headmen seems also to have fallen into disuse. The royal council gradually became an aristocratic body attended only by nobles and rich men.⁴

Administration of Justice

At the head of the judiciary stood the king himself. Besides the royal court there were special tribunals of justice both in cities (nagara) and country parts (janapada) presided over by Vyāvahārika Mahāmātras and Rājūkas respectively. Greek writers refer to judges who listened 1 H. & F., Strabo, III, p. 104.

2 XII. lix, 41-42.

3 Strabo, XV, 1. 46.

4 Pliny quoted in Monahan's Early History of Bengal, 148.

to cases of foreigners. Petty cases in villages were doubtless decided by the headmen and the village elders. All our authorities testify to the severity of the penal code. But the rigours of judicial administration were sought to be mitigated by Aśoka, grandson of Chandragupta, who meted out equal justice to all and instituted the system of itinerant Mahāmātras to check maladministration in the outlying provinces. Considerable discretion was, however, allowed to the Rājūkas. We are informed by Greek writers that "theft was a thing of very rare occurrence" among Indians. They express their surprise at this for they go on to observe that the people "have no written laws but are ignorant of writing, and conduct all matters by memory." The assertion about the Indians' ignorance of writing is hardly correct. Nearchus and Curtius record that Indians use pieces of closely woven linen and the tender bark of trees for writing on. Strabo tells us that a philosopher who has any useful suggestion to offer, commits it to writing. Attention may also be invited to the marks on Mauryan pillars intended to show the by-roads and distances.¹

Provincial Government

The Empire was divided into a number of provinces which were subdivided into āhāras or vishayas (districts), because "No single administration could support the Atlantean load." The exact number of provinces in Chandragupta's time is unknown. In the time of his grandson, Aśoka, there were at least five, viz. :

- | | |
|------------------------------|-----------------|
| 1. Uttarāpatha ² | capital, Taxila |
| 2. Avantirāṭṭha ³ | „ Ujjayini |

1 Monahan, Early History of Bengal, pp. 143, 157, 167 f.

2 Divyāvadāna, p. 407.

3 The Questions of King Milinda, pt. II, p. 250n. Mahāvamsa, Ch. XIII ; Mahābodhivamsa, p. 98.

- | | | |
|--|-----|--------------------------|
| 3. Dakṣhiṇāpatha | ... | capital, Suvarṇagiri (?) |
| 4. Kāliṅga | ... | " Tosali |
| 5. Prāchya, Prāchina (Prasii) ¹ | ... | " Pāṭaliputra. |

Of these only the first two and the last one can be said, with any amount of certainty, to have formed parts of Chandragupta's Empire. — But, it is not altogether improbable that Dakṣhiṇāpatha, too, was one of Chandragupta's provinces. The outlying provinces were ruled by princes of the blood royal who were usually styled Kumāras. We learn from the *Kauṭīliya Arthaśāstra*² that the salary of a Kumāra was 12,000 paṇas per annum.

The Home Provinces, i.e., Prāchya and the Madhyadeśa (Eastern India and Mid-India), were directly ruled by the Emperor himself with the assistance of Mahāmātras or High Officers stationed in important cities like Pāṭaliputra, Kauśāmbī, etc.

Besides the Imperial Provinces Maurya India included a number of territories which enjoyed a certain amount of autonomy. Arrian refers to peoples who were autonomous and cities which enjoyed a democratic Government.³ The *Kauṭīliya Arthaśāstra*⁴ refers to a number of Saṅghas, i.e., economic, military or political corporations or confederations evidently enjoying autonomy in certain matters, e.g., Kamboja, Surāshṭra, etc. The Kambojas find prominent mention as a unit in the Thirteenth Rock Edict of Aśoka. R. E. V. alludes to various nations or peoples on the western border (Aparātā) in addition to those named specifically.⁵ It is not improbable that Surāshṭra was included among these nations which, judged by the title of its local rulers, enjoyed a 1 Cf. the Questions of Milinda, II. 250a.

2 P. 247.

3 Monahan, The Early History of Bengal, 150; Chinnock, Arrian, 413.

4 P. 378.

5 I. H. Q. 1931, 631.

considerable amount of autonomy. The commentary on the Petavatthu refers to one of the local Rājas named Piṅgala,¹ the contemporary of Aśoka. Another contemporary,² the Yavana-rāja Tushāspa finds mention in Rudradāman's inscription at Junāgaḍh. The Yavana-rāja was probably a Greek chief of the North-West who was appointed to look after the affairs of Surāshṭra by Aśoka, just as Rājā Mān Singh of Amber was appointed Subadār of Bengal by Akbar. His relations with Aśoka may also be compared to that subsisting between the Rājā of the Śākya state and Pasenadi. In the time of the first Maurya Surāshṭra had an officer named Pushyagupta, the Vaiśya, who is described as a Rāshṭriya of Chandragupta. In the Bombay Gazetteer,³ the word Rāshṭriya was taken to mean a brother-in-law. Kielhorn, however, in the Epigraphia Indica,⁴ took the term to mean a provincial Governor. This rendering does not seem to be quite adequate because we have already seen that Surāshṭra had possibly its group of Rājās in the Maurya Age and could not be regarded as an Imperial Province under a bureaucratic governor of the ordinary type. The Rāshṭriya of the inscription seems to have been a sort of Imperial High Commissioner,⁵ and the position of Pushyagupta in Surāshṭra was probably like that of Lord

1 Law, Buddhist Conception of Spirits, 47 ff.

2 Attempts in recent times to assign Tushāspa to the post-Aśokan period lack plausibility. In the Junāgaḍh epigraph the name of the suzerain invariably accompanies that of the local ruler or officer. There is no reason to think that the relationship between Aśoka and Tushāspa was different from that between Chandragupta and Pushyagupta, or between Rudradāman and Suviśākha.

3 Vol. I, Part I, p. 13.

4 Vol. VIII, p. 46.

5 Cf. the type met with in the Near East after the First World War. The High Commissioner acted for the defacto paramount power. His office does not preclude the possibility of the existence of a local potentate or potentates. Note also Wendel Wilkie's observations (One World, p. 13) on the British "ambassador" to Egypt who is "for all practical purposes its actual ruler."

Cromer in Egypt. Neither the Arthaśāstra nor the edicts of Aśoka mention clearly any class of officials called Rāshṭriya.¹ It is, however, probable, that the Rāshṭriya was identical with the Rāshṭrapāla whose salary was equal to that of a Kumāra or Prince.²

A hereditary bureaucracy does not seem to have come to existence in the early Maurya period at least in the territory of Surāshṭra. The assumption of the title of Rājā by local rulers and the grant of autonomy to the Rājūkas in the days of Aśoka ultimately let loose centrifugal forces which must have helped in the dismemberment of the empire.

Overseers and Spies

The classical writers refer to a class of men called Overseers (Episkopoi) who "overlook what is done throughout the country and in the cities, and make report to the king where the Indians are ruled by a king, or the magistrates where the people have a democratic Govern-

1 The Aśokan inscriptions however, mention the Raṭhikas and the Pāli English Dictionary edited by Rhys Davids and Stede compares Raṭṭhika with Rāshṭriya.

2 Arthaśāstra, p. 247. For Rāshṭriya see also Mbh., XII. 85, 12; 87. 9. According to Amara (V. 14) a Rāshṭriya is a rājaśyāla (brother-in-law of the king). But Kshirasvāmin says in his commentary that except in a play a Rāshṭriya is a Rāshṭrādīkṛita, i.e., an officer appointed to look after or supervise the affairs of a rāshṭra, state or province. Cf., the Macedonian episkopos. Note the position of Eudamos in relation to the Indian Rājās of the Pañjāb, and that of Pratipāra Tantrapālas of the tenth century A.D. Dr. Barua draws attention (in IC. X, 1944, pp. 88 ff.) to several texts including Buddhaghosha's statement that during a royal state-drive the place assigned to the Rāshṭriyas 'was just between the Mahāmātras and Brahmins shouting the joy of victory. They themselves were gorgeously dressed holding swords and the like in their hands. This may well be true. But the texts cited by him are not adequate enough to prove that in the days of Chandragupta Maurya the Rāshṭrika or Rāshṭriya was nothing more than the foremost among the bankers, business magnates etc. who functioned as Mayors, Sheriffs and Justices of the Peace. The analogy of Tushāspā and Suvisākha mentioned in the same epigraph suggests that the Rashtriya here was a more exalted functionary, and that the evidence of Kshirasvāmin cannot be lightly brushed aside.

ment.”¹ Strabo calls this class of men the Ephori or Inspectors. “They are,” says he, “intrusted with the superintendence of all that is going on, and it is their duty to report privately to the king...The best and the most faithful persons are appointed to the office of Inspectors.”² The Overseer of Arrian and the Inspector of Strabo may correspond to the Rāshtriya of the Junāgaḍh Inscription or to the Pradeshtri or the Gūḍha-Purushas (secret emissaries) of the Arthaśāstra. Pradeshtri may be derived from Pradiś which means ‘to point,’ ‘to communicate.’³

Strabo speaks of different classes of Inspectors. He tells us that the City Inspectors employed as their co-adjutors the city courtesans ; and the Inspectors of the Camp, the women who followed it. The employment of women of easy virtue as spies is also alluded to by the Kautiliya Arthaśāstra. According to that work there were two groups of spies, viz. :

1. Samsthāh, or stationary spies, consisting of secret agents styled Kāpaṭika, Udāsthita, Grihapatika, Vaidehaka and Tāpasa, i.e., fraudulent disciples, recluses, householders, merchants and ascetics.

2. Saṅchārāh or wandering spies,⁴ including emissaries termed Satri, Tikshṇa and Rashada, i.e., class-mates, firebrands and poisoners and certain women described as Bhikshukīs (mendicants), Parivrājikās (wandering nuns), Mundas (shavelings) and Vrishalīs. It is to the last class, viz., the Vrishalīs that Strabo evidently refers.⁵ We

1 Chinnock, Arrian, p. 413.

2 H. and F., Strabo, III, p. 103.

3 Cf. Thomas, JRAS., 1915, p. 97.

4 Cf. Lüders, Ins. No. 1200.

5 A Vrishalī is taken to mean a ganikā or courtesan by the author of the Bhagavadgītā (p. 94).

have also explicit references to courtesan (pūnśchalī, veśyā, rūpājīvā) spies in the Arthaśāstra.¹

Care of Foreigners

It is clear from the accounts of Diodoros² and Strabo³ that the Maurya government took special care of foreigners. "Among the Indians officers are appointed even for foreigners, whose duty is to see that no foreigner is wronged. Should any one of them lose his health, they send physicians to attend him, and take care of him otherwise, and if he dies they bury him, and deliver over such property as he leaves to his relatives. The judges also decide cases in which foreigners are concerned with the greatest care and come down sharply on those who take unfair advantage of them."⁴

Village Administration

The administrative and judicial business of villages was, in Ancient India, carried on by the Grāmikas,⁵ Grāmabhojakas or Āyuktas who were, no doubt, assisted by the village elders.⁶ The omission of the Grāmika from the list of salaried officials given in the *Arthaśāstra*⁷ is significant. It probably indicates that in the days of the author of the treatise the Grāmika was not a salaried 1 Pp. 224, 316 of the Arthaśāstra (1919).

2 II. 42.

3 XV. I. 50.

4 McCrindle, Megasthenes and Arrian, 1926, p. 42.

5 Pick, Social Organisation, 162; Arthaśāstra, pp. 157, 172. Cf. Lüders, Ins. Nos. 48, 69a. The Kāliṅga Edicts refer to Āyuktas who helped the princely viceroys and Mahāmātras in carrying out Imperial Policy. In the early Post-Mauryan and Scythian Age they are distinctly referred to as village officials (Lüders' List, No. 1347). In the Gupta Age the designation is applied to various functionaries including district officers.

6 Grāma-viddhas, Artha, pp. 48, 161, 169, 178. Cf. Lüders, Ins., No. 1327. Rock Edicts, V and VIII refer to Mahālakas and Vṛiddhas.

7 Bk V, Ch. III.

servant of the crown, but an elected¹ official of the villagers. The king's servant in the village was the *Grāma-bhṛitaka*² or Grāma-bhojaka.³ Above the Grāmika the Arthaśāstra places the Gopa,⁴ who looked after 5 or 10 villages, and the Sthānika who controlled one quarter of a janapada or district. The work of these officers was supervised, according to that treatise by the Samāhartṛi with the help of the Pradeshṭris.⁵ Rural administration must have been highly efficient. We are told by Greek observers that the tillers of the soil received adequate protection from all injury and would devote the whole of their time to cultivation.

Revenue and Expenditure

The cost of civil and military administration even at the centre must have been enormous. The chief sources of revenue from villages were the Bhāga and the Bali. The Bhāga was the king's share of the produce of the soil which was normally fixed at one-sixth, though in special cases it was raised to one-fourth or reduced to one-eighth. Bali seems to have been an extra impost from the payment of which certain tracts were exempted. According to Greek writers husbandmen paid, in addition to a fourth part of the produce of the soil, a land tribute because, according to their 1 There is, however, evidence to show that in early times adhikṛitas were appointed for villages by the paramount ruler (Praśna Upanishad, III. 4).

2 Artha, pp. 175, 248.

3 The Grāmabhojaka of the Jātakas was an amātya of the king (Fick, Social Organization in NE Ind. p. 160).

4 The Gopas proper do not find mention in early epigraphs, but Lüders' Ins. No. 1266, mentions "Senā-gopas."

5 Artha, pp. 142, 217. We do not know how far the system described in the treatise on polity applies to the early Maurya period. In the days of Aśoka the work of supervision was done largely by special classes of Mahāmātras (cf. R.E.V. and the Kalinga Edicts), Pulisā (agents) and Rājukas (Pillar Edict. IV).

belief, "all India is the property of the crown and no private person is permitted to own land." Taxes on land were collected by the Agronomoi who measured the land and superintended the irrigation works. Other state dues included tribute and prescribed services from those who worked at trades, and cattle from herdsmen. In urban areas the main sources of revenue included birth and death taxes, fines and tithes on sales. The Mahābhāshya of Patañjali has an interesting reference to the Mauryas' love of gold which led them to deal in images of deities. The distinction between taxes levied in rural and in fortified areas respectively is known to the Arthasāstra which refers to certain high revenue functionaries styled the Samāhartṛi and the Sannidhātṛi. No such officials are, however, mentioned in Maurya inscriptions. Greek writers, on the other hand, refer to 'treasurers of the state' or 'superintendents of the treasury'.

A considerable part of the revenue was spent on the army. The artisans, too, received maintenance from the Imperial exchequer. Herdsmen and hunters received an allowance of grain in return for clearing the land of wild beasts and fowls. Another class which benefited from royal bounty were the philosophers among whom were included Brāhmaṇas as well as Śramaṇas or ascetics. Vast sums were also spent for irrigation, construction of roads, erection of buildings and fortifications, and establishment of hospitals in the days of Chandragupta's grandson.

The Last Days of Chandragupta

Jaina tradition recorded in the *Rājavalīkathe*¹ avers that Chandragupta was a Jaina and that, when a great famine occurred, he abdicated in favour of his son

¹ Ind. Ant., 1892, 157.

Simhasena and repaired to Mysore where he died. Two inscriptions on the north bank of the Kāveri near Seringapatam of about 900 A.D., describe the summit of the Kalbappu Hill, i.e., Chandragiri, as marked by the footprints of Bhadravāhu and Chandragupta Munipati.¹ Dr. Smith observes :² "The Jain tradition holds the field, and no alternative account exists." Chandragupta died about 300 B.C., after a reign of 24 years.³

If the Parīśiṣṭaparvan ⁴ of Hemachandra is to be believed Chandragupta had a queen named Durdharā who became the mother of Bindusāra, the son who succeeded him on the throne. In the absence of corroborative evidence, however, the name of the queen cannot be accepted as genuine.

1 Rice, Mysore and Coorg from the Inscriptions, pp. 3-4.

2 The Oxford History of India, p. 76. As already stated, Fleet is sceptical about the Jaina tradition (Ind. Ant., 1892, 156 f.). According to Greek evidence Chandragupta was a follower of the sacrificial religion (see p. 277 ante). The epithet Vṛishala applied to him in the Mudrārākshasa suggests that in regard to certain matters he did deviate from strict orthodoxy (Indian Culture, II, No. 3, pp. 558 ff. See also C. J. Shah, Jainism in Northern India, 135 n, 138).

3 For the date of Chandragupta Maurya see Indian Culture, Vol II, No. 3, pp. 560 ff. Buddhist tradition of Ceylon puts the date 162 years after the parinirvāṇa of the Buddha, i.e., in 382 B.C., if we take 544 B.C., to be the year of the Great Decease; and 324 B.C., if we prefer the Cantonese date 486 B.C., for the death of the Buddha. The earlier date is opposed to Greek evidence. The date 324 B.C., accords with the testimony of Greek writers. The Jaina date 313 B.C., for Chandragupta's accession, if it is based on a correct tradition, may refer to his acquisition of Avanti in Malwa, as the chronological datum is found in a verse where the Maurya king finds mention in a list of successors of Pālaka, king of Avanti. Cf. I.H.Q., 1929, p. 402.

4 VIII. 439-443, For another tradition see Bigandet, II. 128.

SECTION II. THE REIGN OF BINDUSĀRA.

Chandragupta Maurya was succeeded in or about the year 300 B.C. by his son Bindusāra Amitraghāta. The name or title Amitraghāta (slayer of foes) is a restoration in Sanskrit¹ of the Amitrachates of Athenaios, and Allitrochades of Strabo, who is stated to have been the son of Sandrocottus. Fleet prefers the rendering Amitrakhāda or devourer of enemies, which is said to occur as an epithet of Indra.² In the Rājavalīkathā the name of Chandragupta's son and successor is given as Simhasena. From Aśoka's Rock Edict VIII (e.g. the Kālsī Text) it appears probable that Bindusāra, as well as other predecessors of Aśoka, used the style Devānampriya.

If the author of the Ārya-Maṇjuśrī Mūla Kalpa, Hemachandra and Tāranātha are to be believed, Kauṭilya or Chāṇakya continued to serve as minister for some time after the accession of Bindusāra.³ "Chāṇakya" says Tāranātha, "one of his (Bindusāra's) great lords, procured the destruction of the nobles and kings of sixteen

1 Cf., Weber, IA, ii (1873), p. 148, Lassen, and Cunningham (Bhilsa Topes, p. 92). The term Amitraghāta occurs in Patañjali's Mahābhāṣya, III. 2. 2. Cf., also Mbh. 30. 19; 62. 8; VII. 22. 16, where Amitraghātin occurs as an epithet of princes and warriors. Dr. Jarl Charpentier observes (in Le Monde Oriental, quoted in Calcutta Review, May-June, 1926, p. 399), "that the Greek word Amitrachates as a synonym of Bindusāra, should be rendered Amitraghāta seems clear not only from the Mahābhāṣya but also from the royal title amitrāṇāmhantā in Āit. Br., VIII. 17." In JRAS., 1928, January, however, he prefers to restore Amitrachates as Amitrakhāda (p. 135). Cf. Ṛig-veda, X. 152. 1.

2 JRAS., 1909, p. 24.

3 Jacobi, Parīśiṣṭaparvan, p. 62; VIII. 446 ff; Ind Ant., 1875, etc. For the alleged connection of Bindusāra and Chāṇakya with another minister named Subandhu, the author of the Vāsavadattā Nāṭyadhārā, see Proceedings of the Second Oriental Conference, pp. 208-11 and Parīśiṣṭa, VIII. 447. The Divyāvadāna (p. 372) mentions Khallāṭaka as Bindusāra's agrāmātya or chief minister.

towns,¹ and made the king master of all the territory between the eastern and western seas." The conquest of the territory between the eastern and western seas has been taken by some scholars to refer to the annexation of the Deccan.² But we should not forget that already in the time of Chandragupta the Maurya Empire extended from Surāshṭra to Bengal (Gangaridae), i.e., from the western to the eastern sea. Tāranātha's statement need mean nothing more than the suppression of a general revolt. No early tradition expressly connects the name of Bindusāra with the conquest of the Deccan.³ The story of the subjugation of sixteen towns may or may not be true, but we are told in the *Divyāvadāna*⁴ that at least one town of note, viz., Taxila, revolted during the reign of Bindusāra. The king is said to have despatched Aśoka there. While the prince was nearing Taxila with his troops, the people came out to meet him, and said, "We are not opposed to the prince nor even to king Bindusāra, but the wicked ministers (Duṣṭāmātyāḥ) insult us". The high-handedness of the Maurya officials in the outlying provinces is alluded to by Aśoka himself in his Kalinga Edict.⁵ Addressing his Mahāmātras the Emperor says :

"All men are my children : and, just as I desire for my children that they may enjoy every kind of prosperity and happiness both in this world and in the next, so also I desire the same for all men. You, however, do

1 Were these the capitals of the sixteen mahājanapadas?

2 Cf. Smith, EHI., 3rd ed., p. 149, JRAS., 1919, 598 ; Jayaswal, The Empire of Bindusāra, JBORS., ii. 79ff.

3 See, however, Subramaniam, JRAS., 1923, p. 96, "My Guru's Guru had written in his commentary on a Saṅgam work that the Tulu-nāda was established by the son of Chandragupta," perhaps Tuliyan (Tuli = Bindu).

4 Cowell and Neil's Ed., p. 371.

5 Smith, Aśoka, third edition, pp. 194-95.

not grasp this truth to its full extent.¹ Some individual, perchance, pays heed, but to a part only, not the whole. See then to this, for the principle of government is well established. Again, it happens that some individual incurs imprisonment or torture, and when the result is his imprisonment without due cause, many other people are deeply grieved. In such a case you must desire to do justice² ...and for this purpose, in accordance with the Law of Piety, I shall send forth in rotation every five years such persons (Mahāmātras) as are of mild and temperate disposition, and regardful of the sanctity of life, who knowing this my purpose will comply with my instructions.³ From Ujjain, however, the Prince for this purpose will send out a similar body of officials and will not over-pass three years. In the same way from Taxila."

Taxila made its submission to Aśoka. The Maurya prince is further represented as entering the "Svaśa rājya" (Khaśa according to Burnouf).⁴

Foreign Relations

In his relations with the Hellenistic powers Bindusāra pursued a pacific policy. We learn from the classical 1 "You do not learn how far this (my) objects reaches." (Hultzsch, Inscriptions of Aśoka, p. 95).

2 "It happens in the administration (of justice) that a single person suffers either imprisonment or harsh treatment. In this case (an order) cancelling the imprisonment is (obtained) by him accidentally, while (many) other people continue to suffer. In this case you must strive to deal (with all of them) impartially." (Hultzsch, p. 96).

3 "I shall send out every five years (a Mahāmātra) who will be neither harsh nor fierce, (but) of gentle actions. (viz., in order to ascertain) whether (the judicial officers) paying attention to this object...are acting thus, as my instruction (implies)." (Hultzsch p. 97).

4 Divyāvadāna, p. 372. The emendation Khaśa is supported by the testimony of Tāranātha (IHQ. 1930, 334). For the Kaśas see JASB, (Extra No. 2, 1899).

writers¹ that the king of Syria despatched to his court an ambassador named Deīmachos. Pliny² tells us that (Ptolemy II) Philadelphos, King of Egypt (B. C. 285-247), sent an envoy named Dionysios. Dr. Smith points out that it is uncertain whether Dionysios presented his credentials to Bindusāra or to his son and successor, Aśoka. It is, however, significant that while Greek and Latin writers refer to Chandragupta and Amitraghāta they do not mention Aśoka. This is rather inexplicable if an envoy whose writings were utilized by later authors, really visited the third of the great Mauryas. Patrokles,³ an officer who served under both Seleukos and his son, sailed in the Indian seas and collected much geographical information which Strabo and Pliny were glad to utilize. Athenaios tells an anecdote of private friendly correspondence between Antiochos (I, Soter), king of Syria, and Bindusāra which indicates that the Indian monarch communicated with his Hellenistic contemporaries on terms of equality and friendliness. We are told on the authority of Hegesander that Amitrochates (Bindusāra), the king of the Indians, wrote to Antiochos asking that king to buy and send him sweet wine, dried figs, and a sophist, and Antiochos replied: We shall send you the figs and the wine, but in Greece the laws forbid a sophist to be sold.⁴ In connection with the demand for a Greek sophist it is interesting to recall the statement of Diodoros that one Iamboulos was carried to the king of Palibothra (Pāṭaliputra) who had a great love for the Graecians. Dion Chrysostom asserts that the poetry of Homer is sung by the Indians

1 e.g., Strabo.

2 McCrindle, Ancient India as described in Classical Literature, p. 108.

3 Smith, Aśoka, third edition, p. 19.

4 McCrindle, Inv. Alex., p. 409. Hultzsch, Aśoka, p. xxxv. Bindusāra's interest in philosophy is also proved by his association with Ajīva-parivṛājakas, (Divyāvadāna, 370 ff). Cf., also the first lines of Pillar Edict VII.

who had translated it into their own language and modes of expression.¹ Garga and Varāhamihira in a later age testify to the honour that was paid to Greeks for their knowledge of astronomy.²

Bindusāra's Family

Bindusāra had many children besides Aśoka, the son who succeeded him on the throne. We learn from a passage of the Fifth Rock Edict in which the duties of the *Dharma-mahāmātras*³ are described, that Aśoka had many brothers and sisters. The Divyāvadāna mentions two of these brothers, namely, Susīma and Vigataśoka.⁴ The Ceylonese Chronicles seem also to refer to these two princes though under different names, calling the former Sumana and the latter Tishya. Susīma-Sumana is said to have been the eldest son of Bindusāra and a step-brother of Aśoka, while Vigataśoka-Tishya is reputed to have been the youngest son of Bindusāra and a co-uterine brother of Aśoka, born of a Brāhmaṇa girl from Champā.⁵ Hsien Tsang mentions a brother of Aśoka named Mahendra. Ceylonese tradition, however, represents the latter as a son of Aśoka. It is possible that the Chinese pilgrim has confounded the story of Vigataśoka with that of Mahendra.⁶

1 McCrindle, Ancient India, p. 177. Cf. Grote, XII. p. 169, possible representation of a Greek drama on the Hydaspes.

2 Bṛihat Samhitā, II, 14. Aristoxenus and Eusebius refer to the presence in Athens, as early as the fourth century B. C., of Indians who discussed philosophy with Socrates. (A note by Rawlinson quoted in the Amrita Bazar Patrika, 22-11-36, p. 17).

3 "High Officers for the Establishment and Propagation of the Law of Duty."

4 Pp. 369-73; Smith, Aśoka 3rd ed., pp. 247 ff.

5 According to R. L. Mitra (Sanskrit Buddhist Literature of Nepal, 8) and Smith the name of Aśoka's mother was Subhadrāṅgī. Bigandet II. 128 mentions Dhammā as the mother of Aśoka and Tissa.

6 Cf. Smith, Aśoka, 3rd ed., p. 257.

Bindusāra died after a reign of 25 years according to the Purāṇas, and 27 or 28 years according to Buddhist tradition.¹ According to the chronology adopted in these pages his reign terminated about 273 B.C.²

1 Hultzsch points out (p. xxxii) that Burmese tradition assigns 27 years to Bindusāra, while Buddhaghosha's Samanta-pāsādikā agrees with the Mahāvamsa in allotting 28 years to that king.

2 Cf. Smith, Aśoka. p. 73.

SECTION III. THE EARLY YEARS OF AŚOKA.

Both the Divyāvadāna and the Ceylōnese Chronicles agree that there was a fratricidal struggle after the death of Bindusāra. Aśoka is said to have overthrown his eldest step-brother with the help of Rādhagupta whom he made his Agrāmātya (Chief Minister). Dr. Smith observes,¹ "the fact that his formal consecration or coronation (abhisheka) was delayed for some four years² until 269 B.C., confirms the tradition that his succession was contested, and it may be true that his rival was an elder brother named Susīma." In his *Aśoka*³ published a few months later, he says, "it is possible that the long delay may have been due to a disputed succession involving much bloodshed, but there is no independent evidence of such a struggle." Dr. Jayaswal⁴ gave the following explanation for the delay in Aśoka's coronation: "it seems that in those days for obtaining royal *abhisheka*⁵ the age of 25 was a condition precedent. This seems to explain why Aśoka was not crowned for three or four years after accession." The contention can hardly be accepted. The Mahābhārata, for instance, informs us that the abhisheka of king Vichitravīrya took place when he was a mere child who had not yet reached the period of youth :

Vichitravīryaṇcha tadā bālam aprāptayauvanam

1 The Oxford History of India, p. 93.

2 Mahāvamsa, Geiger's translation, p. 28.

3 Third edition.

4 J.BORS., 1917, p. 438.

5 There were other kinds of abhisheka also, e.g., those of Yuvarāja, Kumāra, and Senāpati, as we learn from the epics and the Kauṭīliya (trans., pp. 377, 391).

*Kururāṇṇe mahābāhur abhyashīñchadanantaram.*¹

Dr. Smith characterises² the Ceylonese tales which relate that Aśoka slew many of his brothers as silly because Aśoka certainly had brothers and sisters alive in the seventeenth and eighteenth years of his reign, whose households were objects of his anxious care. But we should remember that the Fifth Rock Edict refers only to the family establishments of his brothers (olodhanesu bhātinaṃ) as existing. This does not necessarily imply that the brothers themselves were alive. We should, however, admit that there is nothing to show, on the contrary, that the brothers were dead. The Fifth Rock Edict, in our opinion, proves nothing regarding the authenticity or untrustworthiness of the Ceylonese tradition. In the Fourth Rock Edict Aśoka himself testifies to the growth of unseemly behaviour to kinsfolk and slaughter of living creatures.

The first four years of Aśoka's reign is, to quote the words which Dr. Smith uses in another connection, "one of the dark spaces in the spectrum of Indian history ; vague speculation, unchecked by the salutary limitations of verified fact, is at the best, unprofitable."

Like his predecessors³ Aśoka assumed the title of Devānaṃpiya. He generally described himself as Devānaṃpiya Piyadasi.⁴ The name Aśoka is found only in literature, and in two ancient inscriptions, viz., the Māski Edict of Aśoka himself, and the Junāgaḍh inscription

1 Mbh., I. 101. 12. As the Ādiṣarva refers to Dattāmitra and Yavana rule in the lower Indus valley its date cannot be far removed from that of Aśoka and Khāravēla. Cf. also the cases of Samprati, Parīśiṣṭa parvan, IX. 52, who was anointed king though a baby in arms, and of Amma II, Eastern Chalukya.

2 EHI, 3rd ed., p. 155.

3 Cf. Rock Edict VIII, Kālsī, Shāhbāzgarhi and Mānsahra Texts.

4 We have already seen that the epithet 'Piadaṃsana' is sometimes applied to Chandragupta also (Bhandarkar, Aśoka, p. 5 ; Hultzsch, CII, Vol. I, p. xxx).

of the Mahākshatrapa Rudradāman I. The name Dharmāsoka is found in one Mediaeval epigraph, viz., the Sārnāth inscription of Kumāradevi.¹

During the first thirteen years of his reign Aśoka seems to have carried on the traditional Maurya policy of expansion within India, and of friendly co-operation with the foreign powers, which was in vogue after the Seleukidan war. Like Chandragupta and Bindusāra he was aggressive at home but pacific abroad. The friendly attitude towards non-Indian powers is proved by the exchange of embassies and the employment of Yavana officials like Tushāspa.² In India, however, he played the part of a conqueror. The Divyāvadāna credits him, while yet a prince with the suppression of a revolt in Taxila and the conquest of the Svaśa (Khaśa ?) country. In the thirteenth year of his reign (eight years after consecration), he effected the conquest of Kalinga. We do not know the exact limits of this kingdom in the days of Aśoka. But if the Sanskrit epics and Purāṇas are to be believed, it extended to the river Vaitaraṇī in the north,³ the Amarakaṇṭaka Hills in the west⁴ and Mahendragiri in the south.⁵

An account of the Kalinga war and its effects is given in Rock Edict XIII. We have already seen that certain places in Kalinga formed parts of the Magadhan dominions in the time of the Nandas. Why was it necessary for Aśoka to reconquer the country? The question admits of only one answer, viz., that it

1 Dharmāsoka-narādhipasya samaye Śrī Dharmachakro Jīno yādrik tannaya rakshitah punarayañchakre tatopyadbhutam.

2 Note also the part played by the Yona named Dhammarakkhita (Mahāvamsa, trans., p. 82).

3 Mbh., III. 114. 4.

4 Kūrma Purāṇa, II. 39, 9. Vāyu, 77, 4-13.

5 Raghuvamśa, IV. 38-43 : VI, 53-54.

severed its connection with Magadha after the fall of the Nandas. If the story of a general revolt in the time of Bindusāra be correct then it is not unlikely that Kaliṅga, like Taxila, threw off the allegiance of Magadha during the reign of that monarch. It appears, however, from Pliny, who probably based his account on the Indika of Megasthenes, that Kaliṅga was already an independent kingdom in the time of Chandragupta. In that case there can be no question of a revolt in the time of Bindusāra. Pliny says,¹ "the tribes called Calingae are nearest the sea...the royal city of the Calingae is called Parthalis. Over their king 60,000 foot soldiers, 1,000 horsemen, 700 elephants keep watch and ward in 'procinct of war.'"²

The Kaliṅga kings probably increased their army considerably during the period which elapsed from the time of Megasthenes to that of Aśoka, because during the war with Aśoka the casualties exceeded 250,000. It is, however, possible that the huge total included not only combatants but also non-combatants. The existence of a powerful kingdom so near their borders, with a big army 'in procinct of war,' could not be a matter of indifference to the kings of Magadha. Magadha learnt to

1 Ind. Ant., 1877, p. 338.

2 If, as is probable, Kaliṅga included at this time the neighbouring country of Aśmaka, then Parthalis may be the same as "Potali." For an interesting account of Kaliṅga and its early capitals Dantakūra and Tosali, see Sylvain Lévi, "Pré-Aryen et Pré-Dravidien dans l'Inde," J. A., Juillet-Septembre 1923; and Indian Antiquary, 1926 (May), pp. 94, 98. "The appellation of Kaliṅga, applied to Indians throughout the Malay world, attests the brilliant rôle of the men of Kaliṅga in the diffusion of Hindu civilisation." Not far from the earliest capital (Paloura-Dantapura-Dantakūra) lay the apheterion, "where vessels bound for the Golden Peninsula ceased to hug the shore and sailed for the open sea." Note, in this connection, the name Ho-ling (Po-ling, Kaliṅga) applied by the Chinese to Java (Takakusu, I-tsing, p. xlvii), an island which was known by its Sanskrit name to Ptolemy (150 A. D.) and even to the Rāmāyaṇa (Kishk. 40: 30). For the connection of early Kaliṅga with Ceylon, see IA, VIII, 2, 225.

her cost what a powerful Kalinga meant, in the time of Khāravela.

We learn from the Thirteenth Rock Edict that Aśoka made war on the Kalinga country and annexed it to his empire. "One hundred and fifty thousand persons were carried away captive, one hundred thousand were slain, and many times that number died." Violence, slaughter, and separation from their beloved ones befell not only to combatants, but also to the Brāhmanas, ascetics, and householders.

The conquered territory was constituted a viceroyalty under a prince of the royal family stationed at Tosali,¹ apparently situated in the Puri district. The Emperor issued two special edicts prescribing the principles on which both the settled inhabitants and the border tribes should be treated. These two edicts are preserved at two sites, now called Dhauli² and Jaugada.³ They are addressed to the Mahāmātras or High Officers at Tosali and Samāpā.⁴ In these documents the Emperor makes the famous declaration "all men are my children," and charges his officers to see that justice is done to the people.

The conquest of Kalinga was a great landmark in the history of Magadha, and of India. It marks the close of that career of conquest and aggrandisement which was ushered in by Bimbisāra's annexation of Aṅga. It

1 Toasali (variant Tosala) was the name of a country as well as a city. Lévi points out that the Gaṇḍavyūha refers to the country (Janapada) of Amita-Tosala in the Dakṣiṇāpatha, "where stands a city named Tosala." In Brāhmaṇical literature Tosala is constantly associated with (South) Kosala and is sometimes distinguished from Kalinga. The form Tosalei occurs in the Geography of Ptolemy. Some mediaeval inscriptions (Ep. Ind., IX. 286; XV 3) refer to Dakṣiṇa (South) Tosala and Uttara (North) Tosala.

2 In Puri.

3 In Gañjam.

4 For the identification of Samāpā, see Ind. Ant., 1923, pp. 66 ff.

opens a new era—an era of peace, of social progress, of religious propaganda and at the same time of political stagnation and, perhaps, of military inefficiency during which the martial spirit of imperial Magadha was dying out for want of exercise. The era of military conquest or *Digvijaya*¹ was over, the era of spiritual conquest or Dhamma-vijaya was about to begin.

We should pause here to give an account of the extent of Aśoka's dominions and the manner in which they were administered before the Emperor embarked on a new policy.

Aśoka mentions Magadha, Pāṭaliputra, Khalatikapavata (Barābar Hills), Kosambī, Lummini-gāma, Kalinga (including Tosali, Samāpā and Khepinṅgalapavata or the Jaugaḍa Rock), Aṭavi (the forest tract of Mid-India perhaps identical with Ālavī of the Buddhist texts), Suvarṇagiri, Isila, Ujjayinī and Takshaṣilā expressly as being among those places which were under his rule.

Beyond Takshaṣilā the empire stretched as far as the confines of the realm of "Antiyako Yonarājā," usually identified with Antiochos II Theos of Syria (261-246 B. C.), and included the wide territory round Shāh-bāzgarhi² and Mānsahra³ inhabited by the Yonas, Kambojas and the Gandhāras. The exact situation of this Yona territory has not yet been determined. The Mahāvamsa evidently refers to it and its chief city Alasanda which Cunningham and Geiger identify with the town of Alexandria (Begram, west of Kāpiśa)

1 Cf. sara-sake vijaye (Bühler, cited in Hultzsch's Inscriptions of Aśoka, p. 25).

2 In the Peshawār District.

3 In the Hazāra District.

founded by the Macedonian conqueror near Kābul.¹ Kamboja, as we have already seen, corresponds to Rājapura or Rajaur near Punch in Kāśmīra and some neighbouring tracts including Kāfiristān. The tribal territory of the Gandhāras at this time probably lay to the west of the Indūs, and did not apparently include Takshaśilā which was ruled by a princely Viceroy, and was the capital of the province of Uttarāpatha.² The capital of Trans-Indian Gandhāra was Pushkarāvati, identified by Coomaraswamy with the site known as Mir Ziyārat or Balā Hīsār at the junction of the Swāt and Kābul rivers.³

The inclusion of Kāśmīra within Aśoka's empire is proved by the testimony of Hiuen Tsang's *Records*⁴ and Kalhaṇa's *Rājatarāṅginī*⁵: Kalhaṇa says: "The faithful Aśoka, reigned over the earth. This king who had freed himself from sins and had embraced the doctrine of the Jina covered Śushkalettra and Vitastātra with numerous Stūpas. At the town of Vitastātra there stood within the precincts of the Dharmāranya Vihāra a Chaitya built by him, the height of which could not be reached by the eye. That illustrious king built the town of Śrinagari. This sinless prince after removing the old stuccoed enclosure of the shrine of Vijayēśvara built in its stead a new one of stone. He...erected within the enclosure of Vijayēśa, and near it, two temples which were called Aśokeśvara." The description of Aśoka as a follower of the Jina, i.e., Buddha, and the builder of numerous stūpas leaves no room for doubt that the 1 Cunn. AGI, 18. Geiger, Mahāvamsa, 194. The Yona territory probably corresponds to the whole or a part of the Province of the Paropamisadae.

2 Cf. Kalīṅga Edict; Divyāvadāna, p. 407, Rājño'sokasy-ottarāpathe Takshaśilā nagarasi, etc.

3 Cf. Carm. Lec. 1918, p. 54. Indian and Indonesian Art, 55.

4 Watters, Vol. I, pp. 267-71.

5 I. 102-06.

great Maurya monarch is meant. We are told by Kalhaṇa himself that he is indebted for much of the above account to an earlier chronicler named Chhavillākara.

The inscriptions near Kālsī and those on the Rummindei and the Nigāli Sāgar pillars prove the inclusion of the Dehra-Dūn District and the Tarāi within the limits of Aśoka's Empire, while the monuments at Lalitapātan and Rāmpurwā attest his possession of the valley of Nepāl and the district of Champāran. Further evidence of the inclusion of the Himālayan region within Aśoka's empire is possibly furnished by Rock Edict XIII which refers to the Nābhapaṃtis of Nābhaka, probably identical with Na-pei-kea of Fa Hien,¹ the birthplace of Krakuchchhanda Buddha, about 10 miles south or south-west of Kapilavastu.²

According to Bühler, Rock Edict XIII also mentions two vassal tribes Viśa (Besatae of the Periplus ?) and Vajri (Vṛjikas ?). More recent writers do not accept Bühler's reading and substitute (Rāja) Visayamhi, 'in the (king's) territory,' in its place. There is, thus no indubitable reference either to the Vṛjikas or the 'Besatae' in the inscriptions of Aśoka.

We learn from the classical writers that the country of the Gangaridae, i.e., Bengal,³ formed a part of the dominions of the king of the Prasii, i.e., Magadha, as early as the time of Agrammes, i.e., the last Nanda king.¹ A passage of Pliny clearly suggests that the "Palibothri," i.e., the rulers of Pāṭaliputra, dominated the whole tract along the Ganges.² That the Magadhan kings retained their hold on Bengal as late as the time of Aśoka is proved by the testimony of the *Divyāvadāna*³ and of Hiuen Tsang who saw Stūpas of that monarch near Tāmralipti and Karnaśuvārṇa (in West Bengal), in Samatāṭa (East Bengal) as well as in Puṇḍravardhana (North Bengal). Kāmarūpa (Assam) seems to have lain outside the empire. The Chinese pilgrim saw no monument of Aśoka in that country.

¹ Legge, 64.

² "The Brahma(vaivarta ?) purāṇa assigns Nābhikapura to the territory of the Uttara-Kurus" (Hultzsch, CII, Vol. I. p. xxxix n). Mr. M. Govinda Pai (Aiyangar Com. Vol. 36), however, invites attention to the Nābhakānanas, apparently a southern people, mentioned in the Mbh. vi. 9. 59. In connection with the northern limits of the Maurya empire attention may also be invited to the statement in the Divyāvadāna (p. 372) about Aśoka's subjugation of the Svaśa (Khaśa ?) country. According to a legend narrated by the Chinese pilgrims (Watters, Yuan Chwang, II, p. 295) exiles from Takshāśilā settled in the land to the east of Khoten in the days of Aśoka.

³ For early references to Vaṅga, see Lévi "Pré-Aryen et Pré-Dravidién dans l'Inde." For its denotation, see Mānasi o Marmavānī, Srāvāṇa, 1336.

We have seen that in the south the Maurya power at one time, had probably penetrated as far as the Podiyil Hill in the Tinnevely district.⁴ In the time of Aśoka the Maurya frontier had receded probably to the Pennār river near Nellore as the Tamil Kingdoms are referred to as "Prachamta" or border states and are clearly distinguished from the imperial dominions (Vijita or Rājā-vishaya), which stretched only as far south as the Chitaldrug District of Mysore. The major part of the Several scholars find it mentioned in the Aitareya Āraṇyaka. But this is doubtful. Bodhāyana brands it as an impure country and even Patañjali excludes it from Āryāvarta. The country was, however, Aryanised before the Manusmṛhitā which extends the eastern boundary of Āryāvarta to the sea, and the Jain Prajñāpanā which ranks Aṅga and Vaṅga in the first group of Aryan peoples. The earliest epigraphic reference to Vaṅga is probably that contained in the Nāgārjunikoṇḍa Inscriptions.

1 McCrindle, Inv. Alex., pp. 221, 281.

2 Ind. Ant., 1877, 339. Megasthenes and Arrian (1926) p. 141-2.

3 P. 427. Cf. Smith's Aśoka, 3rd ed., p. 255. The Mahāsthāna Inscription which is usually attributed to the Maurya period, contains no reference to Aśoka.

4 Mr. S. S. Desikar thinks that the last point reached by the Mauryas was the Veṅkaṭa hill (IHQ., 1928, p. 145).

Deccan was ruled by the viceregal princes of Suvarṇagiri¹ and Tosali, the Mahāmātras of Isila and Samāpā and the officers in charge of the Aṭavi or Forest Country.² But in the belt of land on either side of the Nerbudda, the Godāvarī and the upper Mahānadī there were, in all probability, certain areas that were technically outside the limits of the empire proper. Aśoka evidently draws a distinction between the forests and the inhabiting tribes which are in the dominions (vijita) and peoples on the border (antā avijitā) for whose benefit some of the special edicts were issued. Certain vassal tribes are specifically mentioned, e.g., the Andhras, Palidas (Paladas, Pārimdas), Bhojas and Rāṭhikas (Riṣṭikas, Rāshṭrikas?). They enjoyed a status midway between the Provincials proper and the unsubdued borderers. The word Petenika or Pitinika mentioned in Rock Edicts V and XIII should not, according to Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar and some other writers, be read as a separate name but as an adjective qualifying Riṣṭika (Edict V) and Bhoja (Edict XIII). They draw our attention to certain passages in the *Āṅguttara Nikāya*³ where the term Pettanika occurs in the sense of one who enjoys property given by his father.⁴ The view that Pitinika is merely 1 A clue to the location of this city is probably given by the inscriptions of the later Mauryas of the Koṅkan and Khāndesh, apparently the descendants of the Southern Viceroy (Ep. Ind., III, 136). As these later Maurya inscriptions have been found at Vāda in the north of the Thāṇa district (Bomb. Gaz., Vol. I, Part II, p. 14) and at Wāghlī in Khāndesh (ibid., 284), it is not unlikely that Suvarṇagiri was situated in that neighbourhood. Curiously enough, there is actually in Khāndesh a place called Songir. According to Hultzsch, (CII, p. xxxviii) Suvarṇagiri is perhaps identical with Kanakagiri in the Nizām's dominions, south of Maskī, and north of the ruins of Vijayanagara. Isila may have been the ancient name of Siddāpura.

2 Edict XIII.

3 III, 76, 78 and 300 (P.T.S.).

4 Ind. Ant., 1919, p. 80. Cf. Hultzsch, Aśoka, 10; IHQ, 1925, 387. Other scholars, however, identify the Pitinikas with the Paṭhānakas or natives of an adjective of Rāṭhika (Riṣṭika) or Bhoja is not, however, accepted by Dr. Barua who remarks that "it is clear from the Pāli passage, as well as from Buddhaghosha's explanations, that Raṭṭhika and Pettanika were two different designations."

The Andhras are, as we have already seen, mentioned in a passage of the Āitareya Brāhmaṇa. The Bhojas are also mentioned in that work as rulers of the south.¹ Pliny, quoting probably from Megasthenes, says that the Andarae (Andhras) possessed numerous villages, thirty towns defended by walls and towers, and supplied their king with an army of 100,000 infantry, 2,000 cavalry and 1,000 elephants.² The earliest Andhra capital (Andhapura) was situated on the Telavāha river which, according to Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar, is either the modern Tel or Telingiri, both flowing near the confines of the Madras Presidency and the Central Provinces. But the identification is by no means certain.³ The Palidas were identified by Bübler with the Pañḥaṇ, and some go so far as to suggest that they are the ancestors of the Sātavāhana rulers of Pañḥaṇ. See Woolner, Aśoka Text and Glossary, II, 113; also JRAS., 1923, 92. Cf. Barua, Old Brāhmī Ins., p. 211.

1 For other meanings of Bhoja, see Mbh., Ādi., 84, 22; IA. V. 177; VI 25-28; VII. 36. 254.

2 Ind. Ant. 1877, pp. 339.

3 P. 92 ante. In historical times the Andhras are found in possession of the Krishṇā and Guṇṭūr districts as we learn from the Mayidavolu plates and other records. The earliest capital of the Andhra country or "Andhrāpatha" known from the inscriptions is apparently Dharmākaṣa at or near Amarāvati (or Bezvaṇa). Kubiraka of the Bhāṭṭiprolu inscription (c. 200 B.C.) is the earliest known ruler. One recension, in the Brāhmī script, of the Rock Edicts of Aśoka, has recently been discovered in the Kurnool District (IHQ. 1928, 791; 1931, 817 ff.; 1933, 113ff.; IA., Feb., 1932, p. 39) which falls within the "Andhra" area of the Madras Presidency. Recent discoveries of the Aśokan epigraphs include, besides the Yerragudi inscriptions (Kurnool District) two new rock edicts at Kopbal in the s. w. corner of the Nizam's dominions. The Kopbal inscriptions are found on the Gavimath and the Pāṅkigunḍu Hills. They belong to the class of Minor Rock Edicts.

Pulindas¹ who are invariably associated with the Nerbudda (Revā) and the Vindhyan region :—

Pulinda-rāja sundarī nābhimaṇḍala nipīta salilā
(Revā).²

*Pulindā Vindhya Pushikā(?) Vaidarbhā Daṇḍakaiḥ saha*³
*Pulindā Vindhya Mūlikā Vaidarbhā Daṇḍakaiḥ saha*⁴

Their capital Pulinda-nagara lay not far from Bhilsā and may have been identical with Rūpnāth, the find-spot of one recension of Minor Rock Edict I.⁵

Hultzsch, however, doubts the identification of the "Palidas" of Shahbazgarhi with the Pulindas, for the Kālsi and Girnār texts have the variants Pālada and Pārinda—names that remind us of the Pāradas of the Vāyu Purāṇa,⁶ the *Harivaṃśa*⁷ and the Bṛihat Saṃhita.⁸ In those texts the people in question are mentioned in a list of barbarous tribes along with the Śakas, Yavanas, Kambojas, Pahlavas, Khasas, Māhishikas, Cholas, Keralas, etc. They are described as multakeśā ("having dishevelled hair"). Some of the tribes mentioned in the list belong to the north, others to the south. The association with the Andhras in Aśokan inscriptions suggests that in the Maurya period they may have been in the Deccan. But the matter must be regarded as not definitely settled. It is interesting to note in this connection that a river Pāradā (identified

1 Hultzsch, Aśoka, 48 (n. 14).

2 Subhandu's Vāsavadattā.

3 Matsya P. 114, 48.

4 Vāyu, 55, 126.

5 The Navagrāma grant of the Mahārāja Hastin of the year 198 (A. D. 517) refers to a Pulinda-rāja-rāshṭra which lay in the territory of the Parivrajaka kings, i.e., in the Dabhālā region in the northern part of the present Central Provinces (Ep. Ind., xxi, 126).

6 Ch. 88.

7 I, 14.

8 XIII, 9.

with the Paradi or Par river in the Surat District) is mentioned in a Nāsik inscription.¹

The Bhojas and the Raṭhikas (Riṣṭikas) were evidently the ancestors of the Mahābhojas and the Mahārāṭhis of the Sātavāhana period.² The Bhojas apparently dwelt in Berar,³ and the Raṭhikas or Riṣṭikas possibly in Mahārāshṭra or certain adjoining tracts.⁴ The former were, in later ages, connected by matrimonial alliances with chieftains of the Kanarese country.

In the west Aśoka's Empire extended to the Arabian Sea and embraced all the Aparāntas⁵ including no doubt the vassal state (or confederation of states) of Surāshṭra the affairs of which were looked after by the Yavana-rāja Tushāspḥa with Giri-nagara (Girnar) as his capital. Dr. Smith says that the form of the name shows that the Yavana-rāja must have been a Persian. But according to this interpretation the Yavana Dhammadeva, the Śaka Ushavadāta (Risahabha-datta), the Parthian Suviśākha and the Kushān Vāsudeva must have been all native Hindus of India. If Greeks and other foreigners adopted Hindu names there is no wonder that some of them assumed Irāṇic appellations. There is, then, no good ground for assuming that Tushāspḥa was not a Greek, but a Persian.⁶

1 Rapson, Andhra Coins, lvi. Pargiter places the Pāradas in the north-west, AIHT, p. 268.

2 Smith, Asoka, third ed., pp. 169-70.

3 Cf. Bhoja-kaṭa, Bhāt kulī in Amraoti.

4 The Rāmāyaṇa, IV. 41. 10, places the Riṣṭikas between the Vidarbhas of (Berar) and the Māhishakas of the Nerbudda valley or of Mysore. Raṭhika is also used as an official designation and it is in that sense that the expression seems to be used in the Yerragudi inscription (Ind. Culture, I, 310; Aiyangar Com. Vol. 35; IHQ, 1933, 117).

5 Śūrpāraka, Nāsik, etc., according to the Mārkaṇḍeya P. 57, 49-52.

6 Cf. IA, 1919, 145; EHVS, 2nd. ed. pp. 28-29.

Rapson¹ seems to think that the Gandhāras, Kambojas, Yavanas, Rishṭikas, Bhojas, Pētenikas, Pāladas and Andhras lay beyond Aśoka's dominions, and were not his subjects, though regarded as coming within his sphere of influence. But this surmise can hardly be accepted in view of the fact that Aśoka's Dharma-mahāmātras were employed amongst them "on the revision of (sentences of) imprisonment or execution, in the reduction of penalties, or (the grant of) release" (Rock Edict V).² In the Rock Edict XIII, they seem to be included within the Rāja-Vishaya or the King's territory, and are distinguished from the real border peoples (Am̐ta, Pracham̐ta), viz., the Greeks of the realm of Antiochos and the Tamil peoples of the south (Nichā). But while we are unable to accept the views of Rapson, we find it equally difficult to agree with Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar³ who denies the existence of Yonas and others as feudatory chieftains in Aśoka's dominions. The case of the Yavana-rāja Tushāspa clearly establishes the existence of such vassal chiefs whose peoples undoubtedly enjoyed partial autonomy though subject to the jurisdiction of special Imperial officers like the Dharma-mahāmātras.

Having described the extent of Aśoka's empire we now proceed to give a brief account of its administration. Aśoka continued the Council government of his predecessors. There are references to the Emperor's dealings with the Parishā or Parishad in Rock Edicts III and VI. Senart took Parishā to mean Saṅgha and Bühler understood by it the Committee of caste or sect.

1 CHI, pp. 514, 515.

2 "They are occupied in supporting prisoners (with money), in causing (their) fetters to be taken off, and in setting (them) free" (Hultzsch, Aśoka, p. 33).

3 Aśoka, 28.

But Dr. K. P. Jayaswal pointed out that the Parishā of the Edicts is the Mantriparishad of the Arthaśāstra.¹ The inscriptions prove that Aśoka retained also the system of Provincial Government existing under his forefathers. Tosali, Suvarṇagiri, Ujjayini and Takshaśilā were each under a prince of the blood (Kumāla or Ayaputa).²

The Emperor and the Princes were helped by bodies (Nikāyā) of officials who fell under the following classes :—

1. The *Māhāmātras*³ and other Mukhyas.
- 2-3 The Rājūkas and Rāthikas.
4. The Pradeśikas or Prādeśikas.
5. The Yutas.⁴
6. Pulisā.
7. Paṭivedakā.
8. Vachabhūmikā.
9. The Ipiṅkaras.
10. The Dūtas.
- 11-12. The Āyuktas and Kāranakas.

1 Compare the references to the "Sarājikā Parishā" in the Mahāvastu, Senart, Vol. III, pp. 362, 392. For different kinds of Parishā, see Āṅguttara I. 70.

2 That Ayaputa or Āryaputra meant a member of a ruling house or clan appears probable from the evidence of the Bālacharita, attributed to Bhāsa, in which Vasudeva is addressed by a Bhaṭa as Āryaputra. Pandit T. Ganapati Śāstri further points out that in the Svapnanāṭaka the term Āryaputra is employed as a word of respect by the chamberlain of Vāsavadattā's father in addressing King Udayana (Introduction to the Pratimā-nāṭaka, p. 32). An interesting feature of Aśoka's administration was the employment of a Yavana governor or episkopos in one territory to which reference has already been made.

3. Cf. also Arthaśāstra, pp. 16, 20, 58, 64, 215, 237-39; Rājasekhara, KM, XLV, 53.

4 The Yuktas of the Arthaśāstra, pp. 59, 65, 199, Rāmāyana, VI, 217, 34; Mahābhārata, II, 56, 18, Manu, VIII. 34; cf. the Rāja-yuktas of the Sāntiparva, 82. 9-15.

There was a body of Mahāmātras in each great city and district of the empire.¹ The inscriptions mention the Mahāmātras of Pāṭaliputra, Kauśāmbī, Tosali, Samāpā, Suvarṇagiri and Isila.² In the Kalinga Edicts we have certain Mahāmātras distinguished by the terms Nagalaka and Nagala-Viyohālaka. The Nagalaka and Nagala-Viyohālaka of the Edicts correspond to the Nāgaraka and Paura-vyāvahārika of the *Arthaśāstra*³ and no doubt administered justice in cities.⁴ In Pillar Edict I mention is made of the Amṭa Mahāmātras or the Wardens of the Marches, who correspond to the Antapālas of the *Arthaśāstra*⁵ and the Goptris of the age of Skanda Gupta. The Kaṭṭhīya tells us that the salary of an Antapāla was equal to that of a Kumāra, a Paura-vyāvahārika, a member of the Mantriparishad or a Rāshṭrapāla.⁶ In Edict XII mention is made of the Ithihaka Mahāmātras who, doubtless, correspond to the Stry-adhyakshas (the Guards of the Ladies) of the epics.⁷

1 The Empire, as already stated, was divided into a number of provinces (diśā, deśa etc). Each province seems to have been further subdivided into āhūlas or districts under regular civil administration, and kōṭṭa-vishayas or territories surrounding forts (Hultzsch, p. xi). Each civil administrative division had a pura or nagara (city) and a rural part called janapada which consisted of grāmas or villages. An important official in each janapada was the Rājūka. The designations Prādeśika and Rāṭhika possibly suggest the existence of territorial units styled pradeśa and raṭṭha or rāshṭra.

2 Mahāmātras of Śrāvastī are, according to certain scholars, mentioned in the Sohagaura copperplate inscription found in a village on the Rāptī, not far from Gorakhpur. But the exact date of the record is not known (Hoernle, JASB, 1894, 84; Fleet, JRAS, 1907, 523 ff.; Barua, Ann. Bhand. Or. Res. Inst., xi, i (1930), 32 ff.; IHQ, 1934, 54 ff.; Jayaswal, Ep. Ind., xxii, 2).

3 P. 20, 143 f. Cf. the royal epistates or city governor in the Antigonid realm (Tarn, GBI., 24).

4 Cf. also Nagara-dhānya Vyāvahārika, p. 55. The Nagalaka may have had executive functions as well, as is suggested by the evidence of the Arthaśāstra (ff. Ch. 36).

5 Pp. 20, 247.

6 P. 247.

7 Rām. II. 16. 3 Vṛiddhān vetrapānin...stryadhyakshān; Mbh. IX, 29, 68, 90; XV. 22, 20; 23, 12. Cf. the Antarvaṃśika of the Arthaśāstra.

As to the Rājūkas, Dr. Smith takes the word to mean a governor next below a Kumāra.¹ Bühler identifies the Rājuka of the Aśokan inscriptions with the Rajjuka or the Rajjugāhaka amachcha (Rope-holder, Field-measurer or Surveyor) of the Jātakas.² Pillar Edict IV refers to the Rājūkas as officers "set over many hundred thousands of people," and charged with the duty of promoting the welfare of the Jānapadas to whom Aśoka granted independence in the award of honours and penalties. The reference to the award of penalties (Danda) probably indicates that the Rājūkas had judicial duties. In the Rock Edict III as well as in Pillar Edict IV they are associated with the Yutas, and in the Yerraguḍi inscriptions with the Raṭhikas.³ Strabo⁴ refers to a class of Magistrates (Agronomoi) who "have the care of the rivers, measure the land, as in Egypt, have charge also of hunters and have the power of rewarding or punishing those who merit either." The measuring of the land connects those Magistrates with the Rajjugāhaka Amachcha of the Jātakas,⁵ while the power of rewarding and punishing people connects them with the Rājūkas of Aśoka. It is probable, therefore, that the Agronomoi referred to by Strabo were identical with the Rājūkas and the Rajjugāhaka Amachchas. The *Arthasāstra*⁶ refers to a class of officials called "Chora Rajjukas," but there

1 Aśoka, 3rd ed., p. 94.

2 The Social Organisation in North-East India by Fick, translated by S. Maitra, pp. 148-51.

3 IHQ. 1933, 117; Barua takes the expressions Jānapada and Raṭhika of the Yerraguḍi copy of the Minor Rock Edict to mean 'people of the district' and 'citizens of the hereditary tribal states' respectively. But Raṭhika of the record probably corresponds to Rāshṭriya of the Junāgaḍh inscription of Rudradāman so that the expressions Jānapadas and Raṭhikas mean 'people of the country parts' and 'officials of the district.' Cf. Raṭhika Mahāmātra of Bṛihat Sam, XV. 11.

4 H. & F., Vol. III, p. 103.

5 Cf. Maitra, Fick, pp. 148-49.

6 P. 234.

is no reference to the Rājukas proper although on p. 60 "Rājju" is mentioned in conjunction with "Chora Rājju."

As regards the Pradesikas or Prādesikas, Senart, Kern and Bühler understood the term to denote local governors or local chiefs. Smith took it to mean District Officers. Hultsch compares it with Prādesikeśvara of Kalhana's Rājatarāṅginī.¹ The word occurs only in the Third Rock Edict where the functionaries in question are included with the Rājukas and the Yutas in the ordinance of the Anusamyāna or circuit. Thomas derives the word from pradeśa which means report² and identifies the Prādesikas or Pradesikas of the Edict with the Pradeshtṛis of the Arthashastra. The most important functions of the Pradeshtṛis were Bali-pragraha (collection of taxes or suppression of recalcitrant chiefs), Kaṇṭakaśodhana (administration of criminal justice), Choramārgaṇa, (tracking of thieves) and Adhyakshāṇām adhyaksha purushāṇām cha niyamanam (checking superintendents and their men). They acted as intermediaries between the Samāhartṛi on the one hand and the Gopas, Sthānikas and Adhyakshas on the other.³ It is, however, doubtful if the Prādesikas can really be equated with Reporters. The more probable view is that they correspond to the subordinate governors, the nomarchs, hyparchs and meridarchs of the Hellenistic kingdoms.

As to the Yutas or Yuktas, they are described by Manu⁴ as the custodians of Pranashṭādhigata dravya

1 IV. 126.

2 JRAS, 1915, p. 97, Arthashastra, p. 111. In the Vishṇu Purāṇa, V, 26 3. Pradeśa has apparently the sense of counsel, instruction. S. Mitra suggests, (Indian Culture, I, p. 310) that the Prādesikas were Mahāmātras of the provincial governments, while the Rājukas were Mahāmātras of the central government.

3 Cf. Arthashastra, pp. 142, 200, 217, 222. Pradeshtṛis also occur in the Irda grant. Ep. Ind. XXII. 150 ff.

4 VIII 34.

320 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

(lost property which was recovered). In the Arthaśāstra, too, they are mentioned in connection with Samudaya or state funds¹ which they are represented as misappropriating. Hultsch suggests that they were 'secretaries' employed for codifying royal orders in the office of the Mahāmātras. The Pulisā—or Agents are apparently identical with the Purushas or Rāja Purushas of the Arthaśāstra.² Hultsch prefers to equate them with the Gūḍha-purushas and points out that they were graded into high ones, low ones, and those of middle rank.³ They were placed in charge of many people⁴ and controlled the Rājūkas. The Paṭivedakā or Reporters are doubtless the Chāras mentioned in Chapter 16 of the Arthaśāstra,⁵ while the Vachabhūmikas or "Inspectors of cowpens" were evidently charged with the superintendence of "Vraja" referred to in Chapter 24.⁶ The Lipikaras are the royal scribes one of whom, Chapada, is mentioned by name in Minor Rock Edict II. Dūtas or envoys are referred to in Rock Edict XIII. If the Kauṭīliya is to be believed, they were divided into three classes, viz., Nisṛishṭārthāḥ or Plenipotentiaries, Parimitārthāḥ or Chargés d'Affaires and Śāsanaharas or conveyers of royal writ.⁷ The Āyuktas possibly find mention in the Kaliṅga Edicts. In the early Post-Mauryan and Scythian Age Āyuttas appear as village officials.⁸ In the Gupta Age they figure as officers in charge of 1 Cf. also Mbh. ii. 5. 72. Kachchichchāya vyāye yuktah sarve gaṇaka lekhaḥāḥ.

2 Pp. 59, 75.

3 The three classes of Purushas are also known to the Great epic (Mbh. ii. 5. 74).

4 Pillar Edict VII.

5 P. 38.

6 Pp. 59-60.

7 With the Śāsanaharas may be compared the Lekha-harakas of the Harshacharita, Uchchhāsa II, p. 52.

8 Lüders' List, No. 1347.

Vishayas or districts,¹ and also as functionaries employed in restoring the wealth of conquered kings. The full designation of the officers in question was Āyukta-Puruṣa.² They may have been included under the generic name of Pulisā referred to above. The Kāranakas who appear to be mentioned in the Yerraguḍi copy of Aśoka's Minor Rock Edict, probably refer to judicial officers, teachers, or scribes.³

1 Ep. Ind., XV, No. 7, 138.

2 Fleet, CII, pp. 8. 14.

3 Cf. Karāṇika, Officer-in-Charge of Documents or Accounts (IHQ, 1935, 586). In inscriptions of the seventh century A.D. the word Karāṇa stood for Adhikarāṇa (Departmental or District Secretariat). Prabāsa, 1350 B.S. Śrāvāṇā, 294. In Mbh. ii. 5. 34, Kāraṇika has, according to the commentary, the sense of teacher. In the text itself the officers in question instruct the Kumāras and have to be dharme sarvaśāstreshu kovidāḥ, implying that their duties included among other things, those relating to Dharma (law, justice?).

CHAPTER V. THE MAURYA EMPIRE :

THE ERA OF DHAMMAVIJAYA AND DECLINE.

SECTION I. ĀSOKA AFTER THE KALINGA WAR.

Chakkavattī ahum rājā Jambusamjassa issaro muddhābhisitto khattiyo manussādhipatī ahum adandena asatthena vijeyya paṭhaviṃ imam asāhasena dhammena samena manussāsiyā dhammena rajjam kāretvā asmim paṭhavimandale
—Āṅguttara Nikāya.

We have already seen that the Kalinga war opened a new epoch in the history of Magadha and of India. During the first thirteen years of his reign Āsoka was a typical Magadhan sovereign—the inheritor of the policy of Bimbisāra, of Mahāpadma and of Chandragupta—conquering peoples, suppressing revolt, annexing territory. After the Kalinga war all this is changed. The older political philosophy which tradition associates with the names of Vassakāra and Kauṭilya gave way to a new statecraft inspired by the teaching of the sage of the Śākya. Before proceeding to give an account of the remarkable change we should say a few words about the religious denominations of India and the condition of society during the reign of the great innovator.

In the days of Āsoka the people of India were divided into many sects of which the following were the most important :—

1. The orthodox Deva-worshippers.¹
2. The Ājīvikas or the followers of Gosāla Maṅkhaliputta.²

¹ Among the Devas worshipped in the Maurya period, Patañjali makes special mention of Śiva, Skanda and Viśākha.

² This teacher was born in Saravaṇa, probably near Sāvasthī or Śrāvastī. Jaina writers represent him as a person of low parentage and of contemptible

3. The Nirgranthas or Jainas, i.e., the followers of Nigantha Nātaputta who is commonly called Mahāvira or Vardhamāna.

4. The followers of Gautama Buddha Śākyamuni.

5. Other sects alluded to in Pillar Edict VII.

In Edict IV we have the following account of the prevailing state of society : "for a long period past, even for many hundred years, have increased the sacrificial slaughter of living creatures, the killing of animate beings, unseemly behaviour to relatives, unseemly behaviour to Brāhmaṇas and ascetics (Śramaṇas)."¹ Kings used to go out on so-called *Vihāra yātrās*² in which hunting and other similar amusements used to be practised.³ The people performed various ceremonies (maṅgala)⁴ on occasions of sickness, weddings of sons,⁵ the weddings of daughters, the birth of children, and character. The attitude of Buddhist authors is also not friendly. In reality he was one of the leading sophists of the sixth century B. C., and, for a time, was a close associate of Mahāvira. According to the Ājīvika belief as expounded in the Sāmañña-phala Sutta "the attainment of any given condition, of any character, does not depend on human effort (purisa-kāre). There is no such thing as power or energy, or human strength or human vigour (purisa-parakkamo). All beings...are bent this way and that by their fate (niyati)."⁶ (Dialogues, Pt. I, p. 71; Barua, The Ājīvikas, 1920, p. 9.) An Ājīvaparivṛājaka appears as a court astrologer of Bindusāra in the Divyāvadāna (pp. 370 ff.). A tax on "Ājīvakas" is referred to in an inscription of the twelfth century A. D. (Hultzsch, SII. I. 88) showing that the sect flourished in S. India even in that late age.

1 Cf. Ajātaśatru's treatment of Bimbisāra, Viṣṇuśakya's massacre of the Śākya, Udayana's cruelty towards Piṇḍola, and Nanda's haughty demeanour towards Chāṇakya.

2 Tours of pleasure, cf. Kauṭilya, p. 332. Mahābhārata, XV. 1. 18 :

Vihārayātrāsu punaḥ Kururājo Yudhishtīraḥ sarvān kāmān mātātejāḥ pradadāu-Ambikāsute.

3 R. Edict VIII.

4 For "Maṅgala" see also Jātakas No. 87, and No. 163 (Haṭṭhi-maṅgala), and Harsha-charita, II (p. 27 of Parab's edition, 1918).

5 For Avāha and Vivāha see also Mbh., V. 141. 14; Kauṭilya, VII. 15.

324. POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

departure on journeys. The womankind performed many, manifold, trivial and worthless ceremonies.¹

From the references in the Edicts to Brāhmaṇas, Kaivartas (of Kevāṭa bhoga) and Śramaṇas, Bikṣu and *Bikṣuvī-Saṃgha*s it may be concluded that Varna (social gradation) and Āśrama (stages of socio-religious discipline) were established institutions. The position of the slaves and labouring poor in general (dāsa, bhataka) was, in some cases at any rate, not enviable. Women had to tolerate the pardah as well as polygamy. Ladies of the harem were under special guards (stry-āthyaśha). As will be seen in the following pages, the policy of Aśoka in regard to social matters was, in the main, one of mitigation and not, except in respect of certain kinds of Samāja and sundry obnoxious practices, of radical reform.

The Change of Aśoka's Religion

Aśoka had doubtless inherited the traditional devotion of Hindu kings to the gods (devas) and the Brāhmaṇas and, if the Kāśmīra chronicle of Kalhaṇa is to be believed, his favourite deity was Śiva. He had no scruples about the slaughter of men and animals: "formerly, in the kitchen of His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King each day many hundred thousands of living creatures were slaughtered to make curries." The hecatombs of thousands of men and women sent to their doom during the Kālīṅga war have already been mentioned. The sight of the misery and bloodshed in that sanguinary campaign made a deep impression on him and awakened in his breast feelings of anusochana, "remorse, profound sorrow, and regret". About this time he came under the influence of Buddhist teaching. We read in Rock Edict XIII "after that, now that the Kālīṅgas had been annexed, began His Sacred Majesty's zealous practice of the Law of Piety (dhramasīlana), his love of that Law (dhramakamata), and his inculcation of that Law (dhramanuśasti)."¹

1 R. Edict IX.

Although Āśoka became a Buddhist² he was not an enemy either of the Devas or of the Brāhmaṇas. Up to 1 The view held by some recent writers that the conversion of Āśoka took place before the Kāliṅga war rests on the evidence of the Mahāvamsa (Ch. V) and on certain assumptions, viz., that Āśoka's dhramakamata became tivra (intense) immediately after the Kāliṅga war (there being no interval) and that Āśoka was indifferent during the period of Upāsakatva (when he was only a lay disciple) which, therefore, must have preceded the Kāliṅga war, immediately after which his devotion became tivra. But the so-called indifference or want of activity is only relative. On the other hand, the supporters of the new theory have to explain why a recent convert to Buddhism should engage in a sanguinary conflict involving the death of countless Śramaṇas. Why again do the Minor Rock Edicts refer to contact with the Samgha, and not the Kāliṅga war, as the prelude and cause of more intense activity? It is to be noted that activity in the period of Upāsakatva is also described as parākrama, though it was surpassed by the greater energy of the period after contact with the Holy Order. Note also the explicit reference to dhramakamata as the result of the annexation of Kāliṅga sometime after (tato pachhā adhunā) the war. The use of the expressions tato pachhā and adhunā suggests that an interval supervened between the war and the intensity of Āśoka's dhramasīlana and dhramakamata. Moreover, we learn from the Minor Edicts and Pillar Edict VI that pious proclamations began to be issued a little more than 2½ years after Āśoka became an Upāsaka and 12 years after his coronation. This would place his conversion a little less than 9½ years after his Abhisheka, i.e., a little less than 1½ years after the Kāliṅga war.

2 Śākya (Rūpnāth), Buddha Śākya (Maski), Upāsaka (Sabasrām); see Hultzsch, CII, p. xlv. Cf. also Kalhaṇa, Rājatarāṅgiṇī, 1. 102ff. That Āśoka did become a Buddhist admits of no doubt. In the Bhābrū Edict he makes an open confession of his faith in the Buddha, the Dharma (Doctrine) and the Samgha (Order of Monks). He called the Buddha Bhagavat. He went on pilgrimage to the places of the Blessed One's nativity and enlightenment and worshipped at the former place. He declared that whatsoever had been spoken by the Buddha, all that was quite well spoken. He also believed in the cult of the "former" Buddhas. He took much interest in the exposition of the Buddhist Doctrine so that it might endure long. As to the Samgha he kept in close touch with it since his memorable visit to the Fraternity a year or so after his conversion. He impressed on the clergy the need of a correct exposition of the true doctrine and appointed special officers to busy themselves with the affairs of the Brotherhood. He also laid emphasis on Vinaya-samutkarsha and took steps to maintain the integrity of the Church and prevent schism within its fold.

the last he took pride in calling himself Devānampiya, beloved of the gods.¹ He found fault with unseemly behaviour towards Brāhmaṇas² and inculcated liberality to the same class. He was perfectly tolerant. "The king does reverence to men of all sects."³ He reprobated ātmapāsamā-pūjā, honour to one's own sect, when coupled with para-pāsamā-garāhā, disparagement of other sects. That he was sincere in his professions is proved by the Barabar Cave Dedications to the Ājīvika monks. His hostility was chiefly directed not towards the Devas and the Brāhmaṇas, not even towards Varṇāśrama, but the killing of men in war and Samājas (festive gatherings), ill-treatment of friends and acquaintances, comrades and relatives, slaves and servants, the slaughter of animals in sacrifice, and the performance of vulgar, useless and offensive ceremonies.

The Change of Foreign Policy

The effect of the change of religion was at once felt in foreign policy. The Emperor declared that "of all the people who were slain, done to death, or carried away captive in Kalinga, if the hundredth part or the thousandth part were now to suffer the same fate, it would be a matter of regret to His Sacred Majesty. Moreover, should any one do him wrong, that too must be borne with by His Sacred Majesty, so far as it can possibly be borne with." In Kalinga Edict I, the Emperor expressed his desire that the unsubdued peoples in the frontiers of the imperial dominions (Antā aviṣṭā) "should not be afraid of him, that they should trust him, and should receive from him happiness not sorrow." The chiefest

1 The title is reminiscent of the age of Hammurabi (Camb. Anc. Hist. I. p. 511).

2 Edict IV.

3 Edict XII

conquest in the Emperor's opinion was the conquest by righteousness (Dhamma-vijaya). In Edict IV he exultingly says, "the reverberation of the war-drums (Bherighoso) has become the reverberation of the Law of Piety (Dhammaghoso)." Not content with what he himself did he called upon his sons and even his great grandsons to eschew new conquests—putra papotra me asu navam vijayam ma vijetaviyam. Here we have a complete renunciation of the old policy of military conquest or Digvijaya and the enunciation of a new policy, viz., that of Dhammavijaya.¹ The full political effects of this change of policy became manifest only after the death of Aśoka, perhaps even after the 27th year of his consecration. From the time of Bimbisāra to the Kalinga war the history of India was the story of the expansion of Magadha from a tiny state in South Bihār to a gigantic Empire extending from the foot of the Hindukush to the borders of the Tamil country. After the Kalinga war ensued a period of stagnation at the end of which the process is reversed. The empire gradually dwindled down in extent till it sank to the position from which Bimbisāra and his successors had raised it.

1 The Aśokan conception of Dhamma-vijaya was similar to that described in the Chakkavatti Sihanāda Sutta, "conquest not by the scourge, not by the sword, but by righteousness" (Dialogues of the Buddha, Part III, p 59). It was different from the Hindu conception explained and illustrated by the Mahābhārata (XII, 59,38-39), the Harivaṃśa (I. 14.21), the Kauṭīliya (p. 382), and the Raghuvamśa (IV. 43). Attention may be invited in this connection to a statement of Arrian that "a sense of justice prevented any Indian king from attempting conquest beyond the limits of India" (Camb. Hist. Ind. I. 321); M'crindle, Ancient India as described by Megasthenes and Arrian, 209. Incidentally it may be pointed out that the discourse entitled the Chakkavatti-Sihanāda (Lion Roar of the Chakravarti or emperor who 'conquers by righteousness') possibly affords a clue to proper appreciation of the famous Sarnath Capital with its Chakra and crowning lions. Cf. also Rāmāyaṇa II. 10. 36. Yāvadā vartate chakram tāvatī me vasundharā.

True to his principle Aśoka made no attempt to annex the frontier (Prachīnta, am̐ta, sāmanta, sāmīpa), kingdoms, viz., Chola, Pāṇḍya, Satiyaputra, Keralaputra, Tāmbapāṇi (Ceylon) and the realm of Am̐tīyako Yonarāja, who is usually identified with Antiochos II Theos, King of Syria and Western Asia. On the contrary, he maintained friendly relations with them.

The Chola country was drained by the river Kāveri and comprised the districts of Trichinopoly and Tanjore. We learn from a South Indian inscription¹ that Hara, i.e., the god Śiva, asked Guṇabhara (Mahendravarman I, Pallava), "How could I, standing in a temple on earth, view the great power of the Cholas or the river Kāveri?" When Pulakeśin II Chalukya strove to conquer the Cholas "the Kāveri had her current obstructed by the causeway formed by his elephants." The Chola capital was Uraiyūr (Sanskrit Urāgapura) or Old Trichinopoly.² The principal port was at Kāvīripattinam or Pugaṛ on the northern bank of the Kāveri.³

The Pāṇḍya country corresponded to the Madurā, and Tinnevely districts with perhaps the southern portions of Rāmnad and the Travancore state. It had its capitals at Kolkai and Madurā (Dakṣiṇa Mathurā). The rivers Tāmrāparṇi and Kṛitamālā or Vaigai flowed through it. Kātyāyana derives Pāṇḍya from Pāṇḍu. The Pāṇḍus are

1 Hultzsch, SH, Vol. I, p. 34.

2 Aelian, however, has the following reference to the realm of Soras (Chola?) and its chief city: "There is a city which a man of royal extraction called Soras governed at the time when Eukratides governed the Bactrians, and the name of that city is Perimoda (city of Perumal?). It is inhabited by a race of fish-eaters who go off with nets and catch oysters." For Urāgapura in Cholika Vishaya, see Ep. Ind., X, 103.

3 For the early history of the Chola Kingdom and other Tamil states see CHI, Vol. I, Ch. 24; Smith, EHI, Ch. XVI; Kanakasabhai Pillay, Tamils Eighteen Hundred Years Ago; Krishnaswami Aiyangar, Beginnings of South Indian History and Ancient India; K. A. Nilakanta Sastri, The Pāṇḍyan Kingdom, The Colas, etc.

mentioned as the ruling race of Indraprastha in the Mahābhārata as well as in several Jātakas.¹ Ptolemy (cir. 150 A. D.) speaks of the country of the Pandouoi in the Pañjāb. There can be no doubt that Pāṇḍu was the name of a real tribe or clan in northern India. Kātyāyana's statement regarding the connection of the Pāṇḍyas with the Pāṇḍus receives some support from the fact that the name of the Pāṇḍya capital (Madurā) was identical with the famous city of Mathurā in the Śūrasena country which, according to Epic tradition, was the seat of a family intimately associated by ties of friendship and marriage with the Pāṇḍus of Indraprastha. The connection between the Pāṇḍus, the Śūrasenas and the Pāṇḍyas seems to be alluded to in the confused stories narrated by Megasthenes regarding Herakles and Pāndaia.²

Satiyaputra is identified by Mr. Venkatesvaraiyar³ with Satya-vrata-kshetra or Kañchīpura. But Dr. Aiyangar points out that the term Satya-vrata-kshetra is applied to the town of Kāñchī or a part of it, not to the country dependent upon it. There is besides the point whether vrata could become puta. Dr. Aiyangar supports Bhandarkar's identification with Satpute. He takes Satiyaputra to be a collective name of the various matriarchal communities like the Tulus and the Nāyars of Malabar.⁴ According to Dr. Smith⁵ Satiyaputra is represented by the Satyamaṅgalam Tāluk of Coimbatore. Mr. T. N. Subramaniam⁶ prefers Koṅgunāḍu ruled by the

1 I find it difficult to agree with Dr. Barua, Inscriptions of Aśoka, Part II (1943), p. 232, that the "line of Yudhisṭhira"...that ruled at Indraprastha in the Kuru country "has nothing to do with Pāṇḍu's eldest son."

2 Ind. Ant., 1877, p. 249.

3 JRAS, 1918, pp. 541-42.

4 JRAS, 1919, pp. 581-84.

5 Aśoka, Third Ed., p. 161

6 JRAS, 1922, 86.

Koṣar people famous for their truthfulness. Mr. K. G. Sesha Aiyar¹ takes Satiyaputra to be the equivalent of Atiyamān, chief of Kutiraimalai with his headquarters at Takadūr, now in Mysore. Mr. P. J. Thoma, however, gives reasons for identifying it with "Satyabhūmi" of the Keralolpatti, a territory which corresponds roughly to "North Malabar including a portion of Kasergode Tāluk, South Canara."²

Keralaputra (Ketalaputo or Chera) is "the country south of Kūpaka (or Satya), extending down to Kanneti in Central Travancore (Karunagapalli Tāluk). South of it lay the political division of Mūshika."³ It was watered by the river Periyar, perhaps identical with the Churnī of the *Arthaśāstra*⁴ on the banks of which stood its capital Vañji (near Cochin) and at its mouth the seaport of Muziris (Kranganur).

Ceylon was known in ancient times as Pārasamudra⁵ as well as Tāmraparṇī (Greek Taprobane).⁶ Tāmbapāṇi,

1 Cera kings of the Sangam period, 17-18

2 JRAS, 1923, p. 412. B. A. Saletore is, however, inclined to disparage the authority of the Keralolpatti (Indian Culture, I, 668). But Kirfel points out (Die Kosmographie Der Inder, 1920, p. 78) that Satiya (variants Satiratha, Sanipa) finds mention in the list of southern Janapadas, along with the Mūshakas, in the Jambukhaṇḍa section of the Mahābhārata (Bk. VI). For other views see, Ind. Cult., Vol. II, 549 ff.; Aiyangar. Coni. Vol., 45-47. Mr. M. G. Pai suggests that 'Satiya' corresponds to Śāntika of the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, 58.37, and the Bṛihat Samhitā, xiv, 27, and included South Kanara. Cf. Setae of Pliny, (Bomb. Gaz. Gujrat, 533).

3 JRAS, 1923, p. 413.

4 P. 75. Cf. Śuka samśesa (Aiyar, Cera kings, 94).

5 Greek Palaesimundu, see Ray Chaudhuri, Ind. Ant., 1919, pp. 195-96. commentary on the Kaṭṭiliya, Ch. XI; Rāmāyaṇa, VI. 3. 21 (Lañkā described as sthitā 'pāre samudrasya').

On reading Law's Ancient Hindu Polity (p. 87 n.) I find that the identification was also suggested by Mr. N. L. Dey. The equation Pārasamudra = Palaesimundu is not less plausible than the equations Sātavāhana = Śālivāhana; Kātāha = Kaḍāram = Kiḍāram = Kantoli (cf. Dr. Majumdar, Suvarṇadvīpa, 56, 79, 168).

6 For other names of Ceylon see "Megasthenes and Arrian" published by Chuckerverty and Chatterjee, 1926, p. 60 n. For a short history of the island i.e., Tāmraparṇi is mentioned in Rock Edicts II and XIII of Aśoka. Dr. Smith lately¹ took the word to mean not Ceylon but the river Tāmraparṇi in Tinnevely. He referred to the Girnar text “ā Tāmbapaṇṇi” which according to him indicated that the river was meant, not the island. Now, in Edict II the phrase “ā Tāmbapaṇṇi” comes after Ketalaputo and not after Paḍā. The expression “Ketalaputo as far as the Tāmraparṇi” is hardly appropriate because the Tāmraparṇi is a Pāṇḍyan river.² We, therefore, prefer to take Tāmraparṇi to mean Ceylon. Aśoka’s Ceylonese contemporary was Devānampiya Tissa whose accession may be dated about 250 or 247 B.C.

Aśoka maintained friendly relations not only with the Tamil powers of the south, but also with his Hellenistic frontager, Antiochos II Theos, king of Syria and Western Asia (B.C. 261-246); and even with the kings the neighbours of Antiochos, namely, Ptolemy II Philadelphos, king of Egypt (B.C. 285-247); Magas, king of Cyrene in North Africa (who probably died not later than B.C. 258)³; Antigonos Gonatas, king of Macedonia (B.C. 277 or 276-239); and Alexander who ruled over Epirus (B.C. 272-c.255) according to Norris, Westergaard, Lassen, Senart, Smith and Marshall.⁴ Beloch and Hultzsich, however, see Camb. Hist. Ind., Chap XXV, and IHQ, II. 1, p. 1 ff. According to tradition recorded in the Dipavaṃsa and the Mahāvaṃsa the first Aryan immigrants were led by Prince Vijaya of Lāla, whom the chronicles represent as a grandson of a Princess of Vaṅga. The identification of Lāla is, however, open to controversy, some placing it in Gujarāt, others identifying it with Rāḍhā or Western Bengal. Barnett may be right in his assumption that the tradition of two different streams of immigration was knit together in the story of Vijaya. See also IHQ, 1933, 742 ff.

1 Aśoka, 3rd Ed., p. 162.

2 Even those who prefer to see in the passage a reference to a kingdom in the Valley of the Tāmraparṇi river, have to prove that such a kingdom did exist in the Maurya age apart from “Paḍā” and Taprobane, and to explain the particular way in which it is mentioned in Edict II.

3 Tarn, Antigonos Gonatas, p. 449 f.

4 Monuments of Sānchī, I, 28 n.

suggest¹ that Alikasudara of Edict XIII is Alexander of Corinth, the son of Craterus (B.C. 252—cir. 244) and not Alexander of Epirus (272—cir. 255), the son of Pyrrhus.

Though Aśoka did not covet the territories of his neighbours, there is evidence that he gave them advice on occasions, and established philanthropic institutions in their dominions. In other words, he regarded them as objects of spiritual conquest (Dhamma-vijaya).

"My neighbours, too, should learn this lesson."²

"Among his frontagers the Cholas, the Pāṇḍyas, the Satyaputra, the Ketalaputra as far as Tāmraparnī, Antiochos, the Greek king, and even the kings the neighbours of that Antiochos, everywhere have been made healing arrangements of His Sacred and Gracious Majesty the King."

In Edict XIII Aśoka declares that the "conquest of the Law of Piety,.....has been won by His Sacred Majesty.....among all his neighbours as far as six hundred leagues, where the king of the Greeks named Antiochos dwells, and beyond (the realm) of that Antiochos (where dwell) the four kings (rājāno) severally Ptolemy (Turamāyo), Antigonos (Antekina), Magas (Maga or Maka), and Alexander (Alikasudaro)—(likewise) in the south (nicha), the Cholas and the Pāṇḍyas as far as Tāmbapāṇni.....Even where the envoys (dūtā) of His Sacred Majesty do not penetrate,³ those people, too, hearing His Sacred Majesty's ordinance based upon the Law of Piety and his instruction in the Law, practise

1 JRAS, 1914, pp. 943 ff. Ins. of Aśoka, xxxi.

2 M. R. Edict I.

3 Have we here a reference to countries like Suvannabhūmi named in the list of territories to which missionaries were sent according to the Mahāvamsa?

and will practise the Law.”¹ Buddhism doubtless made some progress in Western Asia and influenced later sects like the Manichaeans. But Greeks apparently were not much impressed by lessons on non-violence. When the strong arm of Aśoka, “who possessed the power to punish in spite of his repentance,” was withdrawn, the Yavanas poured once more into the Kābul valley, the Pañjāb and the Madhya-deśa and threw all the province into confusion. The southern missions were more successful. Curiously enough, the Ceylonese chronicles do not seem to refer to the envoys sent to the independent Tamil and Hellenistic kingdoms² but name the missionaries sent to Ceylon and Suvaṇṇabhūmi (Lower Burma and Sumatra). The Ceylonese mission was headed by prince Mahendra who secured the conversion of Devānaṃpiya Tissa and many of his people. No direct reference to Suvaṇṇabhūmi occurs in the Edicts hitherto discovered.

The Change in Internal Policy

The effects of Aśoka's change of religion after Kalinga war were felt not only in foreign policy but also in internal affairs. The principal objects of his complaint according to Rock Edict IV and the Kalinga Edicts were :

1 For Buddhism in Western Asia, see Beal, Si-yu-ki, II. 378 ; and Alberūni, p. 21 ; JRAS, 1913, 76 ; M'Crindle, Ancient India as Described in Classical Literature, p. 185 ; Eliot, Hinduism and Buddhism, Vol. III, pp. 3, 450 f. ; cf. Smith, EHI, 4th ed., 197 ; Burlingame, trans., Dhammapadam Commentary, Introduction.

2 Mention is however made of the Yona country along with Kasmira, Gandhāra and Himālaya (Geiger, 82). This Yona territory is perhaps to be identified with the homonymous land in the Kābul valley associated with Kamboja and Gandhāra in the Aśokan Inscriptions. But reference in a vague way to the Levantine world is not completely ruled out. The Deccan lands mentioned in connection with the traditional missionary activity of the Aśokan age include Mahishamaṇḍala, Vanavāsa (in the Kanarese area), Aparāntaka (on the west coast), and Mahārāṭṭha (Mahārāshṭra) in the upper valley of the Godāvarī.

334 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

1. The sacrificial slaughter (āraṁbho) of living creatures.
2. Violence (vihiṁsā) to animate beings.
3. Unseemly behaviour to (asaṁpratipati) to kinsmen (jñāti).
4. Unseemly behaviour to Brāhmaṇas and Śramaṇas.
5. Maladministration in the Provinces.

According to Rock Edict I, Aśoka saw much offence not only in the sacrificial slaughter of animals, but also in certain Samājas or festive gatherings which, as we learn from the Kauṭīliya,¹ were often witnessed by kings and emperors.² The Samāja, says Smith, was of two kinds. The popular festival kind, accompanied by animal fights, heavy drinking and feasting, including much consumption of meat, was necessarily condemned by Aśoka, as being inconsistent with his principles. The other kind, the semi-religious theatrical performance, sometimes given in the temples of Sarasvatī, the goddess of learning, was apparently not included among offensive Samājas. Dr. Thomas³ describes the disapproved Samāja as "a celebration of games or contests taking place in an arena or amphitheatre surrounded by platforms (mañcha) for spectators (prekshā)."⁴ This kind of Samāja is apparently referred to in the following lines of the Virāṭa parva of the Mahābhārata :—

*Ye cha kechinniyotsyanti Samājeshu niyodhakāḥ.*⁴

"Those combatants who will take part in wrestling in the Samājas."

¹ p. 45.

² For the holding of Samājas in Magadha and in neighbouring countries see Vinaya, IV, 267; Mahāvastu, III, 57 and 383.

³ JRS., 1914, pp. 392 ff.

⁴ Virāṭa, 2, 7.

*Tatra Mallāḥ samāpetur digbhyo rājan sahasrasaḥ samāje Brahmaṇo rājan tathā Paśupater api Mahākāyāḥ mahāvīryāḥ Kālakanjā ivāsurāḥ.*¹

"O king, there arrived, by thousands, boxers from all quarters, in that festive gathering in honour of Brahman as well as Paśupati (Śiva). They possessed gigantic bodies and immense strength like the Titans styled Kālakanjā."

The harmless Samāja is well illustrated by the gathering in the temple of the goddess of learning referred to in Vātsyāyana's Kāmasūtra (Pakshasya māśasya vā prajñāte' hanī Sarasvatyā bhavane niyuktānām nityam Samājah). According to Hultzsch the harmless Samāja refers to edifying shows.²

Āsoka determined to put a stop to the practices, referred to above, which he did not approve. At the same time he sought to improve the moral and material condition of the people to such an extent as to effect the "association of gods with men".³ He did all this "in order that he might discharge the debt (which he owed) to living beings (that) he might make them happy in this (world) and (that) they might attain heaven in the other (world)." The means employed to achieve this object may be classed under four heads :

1. Administrative reforms.
2. Dissemination of instructions in the Dhamma (Law of Piety or Duty).
3. Benevolent activity ; promotion of the welfare of man and beast.

1 Virāṭa, 13, 15-16.

2 See also IHQ, 1928, March, 112 ff.

3 Cf. Minor Rock Edict I. Cf. The description in the Harivaṃśa of a prosperous realm where (rājye mahodaye) gods and men dwelt together (Bhaviṣya-parva, Ch. 32.1) "Devatānām manushyānām saha-vāso' bhavattadā." Hultzsch, however, compares (xiv) Deva with Divyāni rūpāni of Rock Edict IV.

4. Religious toleration and prevention of schism in the Buddhist church.

Administrative Reforms

In the first place, Aśoka instituted the Quinquennial and Triennial Anusamyāna or Circuit of the Yutas, Rājukas, Prādesikas, and Mahāmātras. Jayaswal and Smith¹ were of opinion that the whole administrative staff from the Rājukas and the Prādesikas down to the Yutas could not possibly have gone on circuit at once every five years. They interpreted the term as signifying a regular system of transfers from one station to another. But there is nothing in the text to show that all the officers were required to go on circuit at once. The anusamyāna of the Yutas, Rājukas and Prādesikas was quinquennial and was mainly intended for propaganda work. The anusamyāna of the Mahāmātras was specially instituted for the purpose of checking miscarriage of justice, arbitrary imprisonment and torture in the outlying provinces (Kaliṅga, and the Ujjayinī and Takshaśilā regions).

Secondly, Aśoka created a number of new posts, e.g., Dharma-mahāmātras and possibly Dharma-yutas.² The Dharma-mahāmātras were given a protective mission among people of all sects including the Brāhmaṇas and the Nirgranthas or Jainas, and among the Yavanas, Kambojas, Gandhāras, Ristikas and all the Aparāntas. "Among servants and masters, Brāhmaṇas and the wealthy (Ibhyas),¹ among the helpless and the aged, they are employed in freeing from worldly cares their subordinates (in the department) of the Law of Piety. They are also employed on the revision (of sentences of) imprisonment or execution, in the reduction of penalties, or (the grant of) release, on the grounds of motive, having children, instigation, or advanced years... At Pāṭaliputra and in all provincial (bāhira) towns, in the family establishments of the king's brothers and sisters, as well as of other relatives, they are everywhere employed." The Dharma-mahāmātras were further engaged everywhere in the imperial dominions (vijita) or indeed in the whole world (Prithivī) as known to the Mauryas, among the Dharma-yutas with regard to "the concerns of the Law, the establishment of the Law, and the business of almsgiving." The border countries (deśa) were placed under the special care of the Āvutikas.²

1 Aśoka, 3rd edition, p. 164; Mr. A. K. Bose (IHQ, 1933, 811) takes anusamyāna in the sense of 'a court-house or a citadel.' But the epic reference to puṇyātīrthānusamyānam (Mbh. i. 2. 123). 'going forth to holy places of pilgrimage,' suggests that the interpretation proposed by Kern and Bühler is the one least open to objection. See also Barua, Aśoka Edicts in New Light, 83 ff.

2 Dhammayuta may not be an official designation. It may mean simply 'one devoted to Dhamma' (morality, righteousness). Cf. Bhandarkar, Aśoka, 2nd. ed. pp. 311, 343.

The emperor was naturally anxious to keep himself fully informed without delay about all public affairs, specially about the doings of the Mahāmātras on whom the success of his mission mainly depended. He, therefore, gave special directions to the Paṭivedakas or Reporters that when a matter of urgency committed to the Mahāmātras and discussed in the Parishad or Council occasioned a division of opinion or nijhatī (adjournment ?)³ he must be informed without delay.

1 We have here a reference probably to the fourfold division of society into Brāhmaṇas, Kshatriyas or nobles (Ibhyas), Vaiśyas (Aryas), and Śūdras (Bhāṭa).

2 Cf. Hultzsch, Aśoka, 100 n 7.

3 For procedure in cases of disputations in an Assembly see also Jaim. Up. Br. III. 7.6. Can Nijhatī imply reference to the Upadrashṭṛis hinted at in the Brāhmaṇa passage? The help of Upadrashṭṛis was invoked by the Kuru-Pañchālas to arrive at a satisfactory agreement or understanding in case of dispute. (Cf. also Barua, Aśoka Edicts in New Light p. 78.)

It is apparent from the Kalinga Edicts and Rock Edict VI that Aśoka kept a watchful eye on the Mahāmātras especially on those who administered justice in cities. But he was more indulgent towards the Rājūkas for whose intelligence he apparently entertained great respect. To the Rājūkas "set over many-hundred thousands of people" the emperor granted independence in the award of honours and penalties in order that those officials might perform their duties confidently and fearlessly. He wanted, however, to maintain some uniformity in penalties as well as in procedure. For this reason he issued the following rule :—

"To condemned men lying in prison under sentence of death a respite of three days is granted."

Lastly, Aśoka issued certain regulations restricting slaughter and mutilation of animals, and up to the twenty-seventh year of his coronation effected twenty-five jail deliveries. This suggests, as has been pointed out by Hultzsch, that the emperor used to proclaim an amnesty to criminals at almost every anniversary of his coronation.

Measures adopted to disseminate Instructions in the Law of Piety.

Though himself convinced of the truth of the Buddha's teaching, of the efficacy of worship at Buddhist holy places, of the necessity of making a confession of faith in the Buddhist Trinity, of keeping in close touch with the Buddhist Order of monks and maintaining its discipline and solidarity, Aśoka probably never sought to impose his purely sectarian belief on others. He attempted, however, to put an end to practices and institutions that he considered to be opposed to the fundamental principles of morality which, according to him, constituted the essence of all religions. The prospect that he held before the people at large is not that of sambodhi (or of nirvāṇa) but of svarga (heaven) and of mingling with the devas. Svarga could be attained and the gods could be approached by all people, high or low, if only they showed parākrama, zeal, not in adherence to a sectarian dogma or the performance of barren ritual (maṅgala) but in following the ancient rule (porāṇa pakiti), the common heritage of Indians of all denominations, viz., "obedience must be rendered to parents and elders; firmness (of compassion) must be shown towards living creatures; truth must be spoken; these same moral virtues must be practised. In the same way the teacher must be revered by the pupil, and fitting courtesy should be shown to the relatives." In Edict XIII we have the following: "hearkening to superiors, hearkening to father and mother, hearkening to teachers (or elders), and proper treatment of friends, acquaintances, comrades, relatives, slaves¹ and servants, with steadfastness of devotion." Edict VII lays stress on "mastery over the senses, purity of mind, gratitude, and steady devotion". In the Second Pillar Edict it is declared that the Law of Piety consisted in Apāsinave, bahukayāne, dayā, dāne, sache, sochaye, "little impiety, many good deeds, compassion, liberality, truthfulness, purity".

In the Pillar Edicts again prominence is given to self-examination and spiritual insight. Towards the end of his career Aśoka seems to have been convinced that reflection and meditation were of greater efficacy than moral regulations. But the need for such regulations was keenly felt by him in the early years of his reign.

¹ For the question of slavery in Maurya India, see Monahan, Early History of Bengal, pp. 164-65. It is to be noted that Aśoka did not abolish slavery, just as he did not do away with caste or pardah. He simply wanted to mitigate the rigours of the existing social polity.

We learn from Minor Rock Edict I that for more than two-and-a-half years Aśoka was a lay disciple (Upāsaka). During the first year he did not exert himself strenuously. Later on he seems to have entered¹ the Saṅgha and begun to exert himself strenuously.² He issued the famous proclamation, "Let small and great exert themselves," and caused to be engraved the imperishable record of his purpose on the rocks and upon stone pillars wherever there were stone pillars in his dominions.

1 "Approached," according to Hultzsch, in whose opinion the two-and-a-half years of Upāsakatva include the period which followed his "visit" (not "entry") to the Saṅgha. The view that Aśoka actually joined the Holy Order is, however, supported by I-tsing who mentions an image of Aśoka dressed in the garb of a Buddhist monk (Takakusu, I-tsing, 73). That rulers and statesmen could be monks as well, even in early times, appears probable from Lüders Ins. No. 1144 which refers to a Śramaṇa mahāmūtra of Nāsik in the days of the early Sātavāhana king Kṛishṇa. Cf. Milinda, IV. 6. 49 (ref. to a Śramaṇa King); Geiger, trans., Mahāvamsa, 240 (Kūṭakapṇa Tissa).

2 Rock Edict IV has been interpreted by scholars to mean that Aśoka sought to promote the observance of the Buddhist doctrine by exhibiting spectacles of aerial chariots (Vimānadasanā), of elephants (Hastidasanā), masses of fire (Agikhaṁdhāni) and other representations of a divya, i.e., divine (not terrestrial) nature. Dr. Bhandarkar (Ind. Ant., 1912, p. 26), refers to the Pāli Vimānavatthu which describes the splendour of the various celestial abodes (Vimānas) in order to induce listeners and spectators to live good and unblemished lives, and thereby attain to these. Aśoka is said to have made representations of these Vimānas and paraded them in various places. Hasti, according to Dr. Bhandarkar, is Śveto hasti, i.e., Buddha himself, who is also described as "Gajatama," i.e., Gajottama, the most excellent elephant. As regards Agikhaṁdha (Agniskandha) Dr. Bhandarkar draws our attention to Jātaka No 40 which refers to a blazing fire-pit created by Māra on the surface of which the Bodhisattva strode and gave a bowl to a hungry Pachcheka Buddha and extolled alms-giving. Hultzsch suggests that Hasti may refer to the vehicles of the four "Mahārājas" (lokapālas or guardians of quarters). He takes Agikhaṁdha to refer to 'radiant beings of another world' while Jarl Charpentier (IHQ, 1933, 87) understands it to mean piles of (hell-)fire. The interpretation of Hultzsch accords better with the testimony of the commentary on the Rāmāyaṇa (II. 68.16) which explains divyaṁ as viśiṣṭa devatādhishṭhitam. The celestial elephant figures prominently in the Tārāvaloka story of the Kathā-sarit-sāgara (Penzer, VIII. 131), and Asoka at first utilised the existing administrative machinery for religious propaganda.¹ He commanded his Council (Parishad) to inculcate the Dharma on the subordinate officials styled Yutas and ordered the latter as well as the higher officials styled Rājukas, and Prādesikas to inculcate the same while they set out for tour (anusambyāna). The Dharma which they were to preach was explained thus : "An excellent thing is the hearkening to father and mother ;² an excellent thing is liberality to friends, acquaintances, relatives, Brāhmaṇas and ascetics ; excellent is abstention from the slaughter of living creatures ; excellent is small expense with small accumulation."

mountain of fire, ibid 50, 51 ; III. 6, 17 ; Cf. also aggi-khando in Jataka, VI 330, Coomaraswamy in B. C. Law, vol. I, 469 ; Note the Sutta referred to in Geiger, Mahāvamsa, trans. pp. 85, 110.

The passage containing the words Vimānadasanā, Hastidasanā, etc., has been explained differently in A Volume of Indian Studies presented to Professor E. J. Rapson, pp. 546 f. According to the interpretation that finds favour with some recent writers, the spectacles in question were exhibited not by Asoka, but by previous rulers to the accompaniment of the sound of drums. But thanks to Asoka "the sound of the bheri had become the sound of dharma," that is to say, instruction in dharma took the place of martial music that used to be heard on the occasion of pompous shows of edifying subjects in bygone times. What former kings could not accomplish by gaudy spectacles, was achieved by Asoka by the simple unostentatious teaching of the true Doctrine. The bheri was now used to announce the king's rescripts on morality,—cf. the Yerragudi copy of the Minor Rock Edict—Rājake ānāpitiye bherinā jānapadam ānūpayisati raṭṭhikānam cha (Ind. Culture, I, p. 310 ; IHQ, 1933, 117).

1 According to one view Asoka sent special missionaries styled Vyuṭha to expound his teaching. The interpretation of Vyuṭha as missionary was suggested by Senart and accepted by Smith (Asoka, Third Ed., p. 153). Dr. Bhandarkar takes Vyuṭha or Vivutha to mean "officials on tour." Hultzsch thinks that Vyuṭha refers to Asoka himself while he was on tour (p. 169, note 8). The word has also the sense of dawn, day-break, day, in other words, it has a chronological significance. Other interpretations are also suggested by scholars. The least plausible is the one offered by Dr. Barua (D. R. Bhandarkar volume, 369.) who finds in the expression reference to the copies of the particular proclamation sent forth from the capital.

2 Cf. Sigālovāda Suttanta (Dialogues of the Buddha, III, ¶73 ff.).

342 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

When he had been consecrated thirteen years, Aśoka created the new officials called Dharma-mahāmātras who were specially entrusted with the work of "dhammādhithāna" and "dhammavadhi", i.e., the establishment and increase of Piety.

While his officers were busy preaching the new Gospel, the emperor himself did not remain idle. Already in his eleventh regnal year he had "started on the path" leading to Sambodhi (ayāya Sambodhim),¹ and commenced the tours of Piety (Dhamma-yātā) in the place of the old tours of pleasure (Vihāra-yātā). In the tours of Piety this was the practice—visiting ascetics and Brāhmaṇas, with liberality to them; visiting elders, with largess of gold; visiting the people of the country or perhaps rural areas (Janapada) with instruction in the Law of Piety, and discussion of that Law. The memory of a pious tour in Aśoka's twenty-first regnal year² (B. C. 249 according to Smith) is preserved by the Rummindei and Nigāli Sāgar epigraphs in the Nepalese Tarai. These records prove that Aśoka visited the birth-place of Gautama and paid reverence to the stupa of Konākamana, one of the former Buddhas.³

In 242 B.C., according to Dr. Smith, Aśoka issued the Seven Pillar Edicts which contain, among other things, a review of the measures taken during his reign for the "promotion of religion, the teaching of moral duty".

1 Some scholars take Sambodhi to mean 'supreme knowledge'. But Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar contends that Sambodhi is equivalent to the Bodhi Tree or the Mahābodhi Temple at Bodh Gayā. According to the Divyāvadāna (p. 393) Aśoka visited Bodhi in the company of the Sthavira or Elder Upagupta (Hultzsch, CII, xliii).

2 Were these tours decennial?

3 He had enlarged the stupa of Konākamana six years earlier, but his personal presence on that occasion is by no means clear.

Benevolent Activity. Promotion of the Welfare of Man and Beast.

Asoka abolished the sacrificial slaughter of animals, offensive Samājas and the massacre of living creatures to make curries in the imperial kitchen. Rock Edict VIII refers to the abolition of the vihāra-yātrās or tours of pleasure in which hunting and other similar amusements used to be practised. Pillar Edict V contains a code of regulations¹ restricting the slaughter and mutilation of animals. Dr. Smith points out that the prohibitions against animal slaughter in this edict coincide to a considerable extent with those recorded in the Arthaśāstra.

The emperor established healing arrangements in two kinds, namely, healing arrangements for men and healing arrangements for beasts. Medicinal herbs also both for men and for beasts, wheresoever lacking, were imported and planted. Roots also and fruits,² wheresoever lacking, were imported and planted. On the roads wells were dug, probably at intervals of 8 kos, flights of steps built for descending into the water, and banyan trees and mango groves planted for the enjoyment of man and beast.

Pillar Edict VII refers to the employment of superior officers (Mukhyas) in the distribution of alms, both the emperor's own and those of the queens and princes. One of the Minor Pillar Edicts refers to the donations of the second Queen Kāruvāki,³ mother of Tivara: "whatever gift has been given here by the second Queen—be it a mango-garden, or pleasure-grove (ārāma) or alms-house

1 Dhamma-niyama, cf. Patañjali I, I, I.

2 Cf. reference to figs in Bindusāra's correspondence with Antiochos.

3 Dr. Barua suggests the identification of this lady with Asandhimittā of the Mahāvamsa and the Sumāṅgalavilāsini (Indian Culture, I, 123). The suggestion, though ingenious, is hardly convincing.

(dānagriha) or aught else—is reckoned as proceeding from that queen.”

Mention may also be made of remission of taxes by the emperor himself, e.g. in Lumminigāma, and money-grants (hirannapatividdhāna) to old men. The people of janapadas (districts), doubtless including the *grāmas*¹ (villages), were also sought to be benefited by the grant of autonomy and the establishment of uniformity of punishment and procedure (daṇḍasamatā and vyāvahārasamatā) as well as diffusion of moral instruction (dhramanusasti).

Religious Toleration and the Prevention of Schism in the Buddhist Church.

In Rock Edict XII the emperor declares that he “does reverence (Pūjā) to men of all sects (Pāsāṇḍāni) whether ascetics (Pavajitāni) or householders (Gharastāni) by gifts and various forms of reverence”. That he was sincere in his professions is proved by the Barabar cave dedications in favour of the Ājīvika ascetics, who were more closely connected with the Jainas than with the Buddhists.

The emperor only cared for the “growth of the essence (Sāra-Vaḍḍhi) of the matter in sects”. He says that “he who does reverence to his own sect while disparaging the sects of others wholly from attachment to his own, with intent to enhance the splendour of his own sect, in reality by such conduct inflicts the severest injury on his own sect.” Concord (or concourse, Samavāyo) is praised by him as meritorious (Samavāyo eva sādhu).

Just as Aśoka tried to secure concord among the various sects, so he wanted to prevent schism within the ¹ References to grāmas are found in the compounds Lummini-gāma and gāma-kaṣṭha (Pillar Edict V).

Buddhist church. Tradition affirms that a Buddhist Council was convened at Pāṭaliputra in the seventeenth year of his reign for the purpose of suppressing heresy and making a compilation of the true Buddhist doctrine (Saddhammasaṅgaha). The Sārnāth Edict and its variants may perhaps be regarded as embodying the resolution of this Council.¹

Aśoka as a Builder.

The gift of cave dwellings to the Ājivika monks affords us a glimpse into another side of Aśoka's activity. As late as the fifth century A.D., sojourners in Pāṭaliputra were struck with wonder at the magnificence of the emperor's architectural achievements. Tradition credits him with the construction of a splendid palace besides numerous relic mounds, monasteries and temples. He is actually known to have enlarged the stūpa of Konākamana, a 'former Buddha' and a predecessor of Śākyamuni. He also set up 'pillars of morality' Dharma-stambhas. Modern critics are eloquent in their praise of the polished surface of his columns and the fine workmanship of their crowning sculptures.²

Character of Aśoka. His Success and Failure.

Aśoka is one of the most interesting personalities in the history of India. He had the energy of a Chandragupta, the versatility of a Samudragupta and the catholicity of an Akbar. He was tireless in his exertion and unflagging in his zeal—all directed to the promotion of the spiritual and material welfare of his people whom he looked upon as his children. His illustrious grandfather

1. Smith, Aśoka, third., ed. p. 55.

2. For Aśoka's achievements in the domain of art, see Smith, HFAIC, 13, 57 ff.; Aśoka, pp. 107 ff.; CHI, 618 ff.; Havell, ARI, 104 ff., etc.

was accustomed to dispose of cases even when indulging in the luxury of a massage of the limbs. Similarly, Aśoka used to listen to reports about the affairs of his people even while 'he was eating, in the harem, in the inner apartment, at the cowpen, in the palanquin and in the parks'. The great soldier who had brought under subjection a huge territory unconquered even by his ever victorious grandfather, could, at the same time, argue points of doctrine and discipline with a fraternity of erudite monks. The statesman who could pilot an empire through the storm and stress of a war that involved the death and deportation of hundreds of thousands of men was, at the same time, capable of organizing religious missions the sphere of whose activities embraced three continents, and transforming a local sect in the Ganges Valley into one of the great religions of the world. The man who penetrated into the jungles of the Nepalese Tarai to pay homage to the birth-place of the Buddhas, bore no ill-will towards the descendants of their Brāhmaṇa and Jaina opponents, and granted cave-dwellings to the adherents of a rival sect. The king who undertook tours with the object of granting largesses of gold to Brāhmaṇas and Śramaṇas, admitted to office Yavanas in whose country there were neither Brāhmaṇas nor Sramaṇas. He preached the virtues of concord and toleration in an age when religious feeling ran high and disruptive influences were at work within the fold of the Jaina and Buddhist churches. He preached non-violence when violence in war, religious ritual, royal pastime and festive gatherings was the order of the day. He eschewed military conquest not after defeat but after victory and pursued a policy of patience and gentleness while still possessed of the resources of a mighty empire. The forbearance of this strong man was only matched by his truthfulness, and he describes in burning words which no Kalinga patriot could have improved upon, the terrible misery that he had inflicted on a hapless province. The example of Dharmāśoka, the pious king, exercised an ennobling influence on posterity. In the second century A.D. Queen Gautami Balaśri takes pride in the fact that her son was "alien to hurting life even towards an offending enemy" (Kitāparādhe pi satujane apānahisāruchi). Even in the fifth century A.D., the rest-houses and free hospitals of Magadha excited the wonder and admiration of foreigners. The benefactions of Dharmāśoka were a source of inspiration to royal personages as late as the time of Govindachandra of the Gāhaḍavāla dynasty.

We have already seen that the political record of the great Maurya's early years was brilliant. His reign saw the final triumph of those centripetal forces that had been at work since the days of Bimbisāra. The conquest of Kalinga completed the unification of non-Tamil India under the hegemony of Magadha. The dream of a United Jambudvīpa was nearly realised.

But the policy of Dhamma-vijaya which he formulated after the Kalinga War was not likely to promote the cause for which a long line of able sovereigns from Bimbisāra to Bindusāra had lived and struggled. The statesman who turned civil administrators into religious propagandists, abolished hunting and jousts of arms, entrusted the fierce tribesmen on the North-West Frontier and in the wilds of the Deccan to the tender care of "superintendents of piety" and did not rest till the sound of the war-drum was completely hushed and the only sound that was heard was that of moral teaching, certainly pursued a policy at which Chandragupta Maurya would have looked askance. Dark clouds were looming in the north-western horizon. India needed men of the calibre of Puru and Chandragupta to ensure her protection against the Yavana menace. She got a dreamer. Magadha after the Kalinga War frittered away her conquering energy in attempting a religious revolution, as Egypt did under the guidance of Ikhnaton. The result was politically disastrous—as will be shown in the next section. Aśoka's attempt to end war met with the same fate as the similar endeavour of President Wilson.

According to Dr. Smith's chronology Aśoka died in 232 B.C., after a reign of about 40 years. A Tibetan tradition is said to affirm that the great Emperor breathed his last at Taxila.¹

1 The Oxford History of India, p. 116. I cannot vouch for the authenticity of this tradition.

SECTION II. THE LATER MAURYAS AND THE DECLINE OF THEIR POWER.

The Magadha Empire under Aśoka extended from the foot of the Hindukush to the borders of the Tamil country. But the withdrawal of the strong arm of Piyadasi was perhaps the signal for the disintegration of this mighty monarchy. "His sceptre was the bow of Ulysses which could not be drawn by any weaker hand." The provinces fell off one by one. Foreign barbarians began to pour across the north-western gates of the empire, and a time came when the proud monarchs of Pāṭaliputra and Rājagriha had to bend their knees before the despised provincials of 'Andhra' and Kalinga.

Unfortunately, no Megasthenes or Kauṭilya has left any account of the later Mauryas. It is impossible to reconstruct a detailed history of Aśoka's successors from the scanty data furnished by one or two inscriptions and a few Brāhmaṇical, Jaina and Buddhist works.

Aśoka had many children. In Pillar Edict VII, he pays attention to the distribution of alms made by all his children, and in particular to those made by the "Princes, sons of the Queens". It is to this last category that belonged some of the Kumāraś who represented the Imperial authority at Takshaśilā, Ujjayini, and Tosali. Tivara¹ the son of queen Kāruvāki, the only prince actually named in the inscriptions, does not appear to have mounted the imperial throne. Three other sons, namely, Mahendra, Kunāla (Dharma-vivardhana, Suyāśas?), and Jalauka are mentioned in literature. It is, however, uncertain whether Mahendra was a son of Aśoka or his brother.

1 For Tivara as a Magadhan name see the Book of Kindred Sayings, II, pp. 128-30.

The Vāyu Purāṇa says that after Aśoka's death his son Kunāla reigned for eight years. Kunāla's son and successor was Bandhupālita, and Bandhupālita's dāyāda or heir was Indrapālita. After Indrapālita came Devavarman, Satadhanus and Brihadratha.

The Matsya Purāṇa gives the following list of Aśoka's successor :—Daśaratha, Samprati, Śatadhanvan and Brihadratha.

The Viṣṇu Purāṇa furnishes the following names :—Sūyaśas, Daśaratha, Saṅgata, Śālīsūka, Somaśarman Śatadhanvan and Brihadratha.

The *Divyāvadāna*¹ has the following list :—Saṁpadi, Vṛihaspati, Vṛihasena, Pushyadharman and Pushyamitra.

Jaina writers refer to a Maurya King of Rājagriha, named Balabhadra.²

The Rājatarāṅginī mentions Jalauka as the successor of Aśoka in Kaśmira, while Tāranātha mentions another successor Virasena who ruled in Gandhāra and was, as Dr. Thomas suggests, probably the predecessor of Subhāgasena of Polybius.³

It is not an easy task to reconcile the divergent versions of the different authorities. The reality of the existence of Kunāla is established by the combined testimony of the Purāṇic and Buddhist works (which represent him as the father of Saṁpadi) as well as the evidence of Hemachandra and Jinaprabhasuri, the well-known Jaina writers. The names Dharma-vivardhana occurring in the Divyāvadāna and the Records of Fa Hien and Sūyaśas found in the Viṣṇu and the Bhāgavata Purāṇas were probably birudas or epithets of this prince. Tradition is not unanimous regarding the accession of Kunāla to the imperial

1 P. 433.

2 Jacobi, Introduction to the Kalpasūtra of Bhadrabāhu, 1879, p. 9.

3 Ind. Ant., 1875, p. 362 ; Camb. Hist. Ind., I, p. 512.

throne. He is reputed to have been blind. His position was, therefore, probably like that of Dhṛitarāshṭra of the Great Epic and, though nominally regarded as the sovereign, he was physically unfit to carry on the work of government which was presumably entrusted to his favourite son Samprati, who is described by Jaina and Buddhist writers as the immediate successor of Aśoka.

Kunāla's son was Bandhupālita according to the Vāyu Purāṇa, Saṃpadi (Samprati) according to the Divyāvadāna and the Pāṭaliputrakalpa of Jinaprabhasuri,¹ and Vigataśoka according to Tāranātha.² Either these princes were identical or they were brothers. If the latter view be correct then Bandhupālita may have been identical with Daśaratha whose reality is established by the brief dedicatory inscriptions on the walls of cave-dwellings at the Nāgārjuni Hills which he bestowed upon the Ājīvika. Daśaratha, who receives the epithet "devānampiya" in the inscriptions, was a grandson of Aśoka according to the Matsya and Vishṇu Purāṇas, and the predecessor of Samprati (variant Saṅgata) according to the same authorities.

Indrapālita must be identified with Samprati or Śāliśūka according as we identify Bandhupālita with Daśaratha or Samprati. "In the matter of the propagation of the Jaina faith, Jaina records speak as highly of Samprati as Buddhist records do of Aśoka." The Pāṭaliputrakalpa of Jinaprabhasuri³ says, "in Pāṭaliputra flourished the great king Samprati, son of Kunāla, lord of Bhārata with its three continents (trikhaṇḍam Bharata-kshetram Jināyatanamaṇḍitam), the great Arhanta who established Vihāras for Śrāmaṇas even in non-Aryan countries."

1 See also Parīśiṣṭaparvan, IX, 51-53.

2 Ind. Ant., 1875, 362.

3 Bomb., Gaz. I, i, 6-15. Parīśiṣṭa, XI, 65.

352 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Dr. Smith shows good grounds for believing that the dominions of Samprati included Avanti and Western India.¹ In his *Aśoka*² he admits that the hypothesis that Aśoka left two grandsons, of whom one (Daśaratha) succeeded him in his eastern and the other (Samprati) in his western dominions, is little more than a guess.³ The Jaina writers represent Samprati as ruling over Pāṭaliputra as well as Ujjayinī. His name is mentioned in the Purāṇic list of Aśoka's Magadhan successors.

The existence of Śālīśūka is proved not only by the testimony of the Vishṇu Purāṇa but also by that of the *Gārgī Samhitā*⁴ and the e Vāyu manuscript referred to by Pargiter. He may have been identical with Vṛihaspati, son of Samprati, according to the Divyāvadāna, unless Vṛihaspati represented a different branch of the imperial family.

Devavarman and Somaśarman are variant readings of the same name. The same is the case with Śatadhanus⁵ and Śatadhanvan. It is not easy to identify Vṛishasena and Pushyadharman; they may be merely birudas or secondary names of Devavarman and Śatadhanvan. But the possibility that they represent a distinct branch of the Maurya line is not entirely excluded.

1 Pariśiṣṭaparvan, xi. 23. itaścha Samprati nṛīpo yayāvUjjayinīm purīm.

2 Third ed. p. 70.

3 Curiously enough, Prof. Dhruva maintains in spite of this and the clear evidence of jaina literature that "historians say that on the death of Kunāla there was a partition of the Maurya Empire between his two sons Daśaratha and Samprati (JBORS, 1930,30)." Prof. Dhruva's emendations of the text of the Yugapurāṇa are largely conjectural and of little probative value.

4 Kern's Bṛihatsamhitā, p. 37. The Gārgī Samhitā says, "There will be Śālīśūka, a wicked quarrelsome king. Unrighteous, although theorising on righteousness, dharmavādi adhārmikah (sic) he cruelly oppresses his country".

5 For an interesting account of a King named Śatadhanu see Vishṇu Purāṇa III. 18. 51; Bhāg II. 8. 44. His identity is, however, uncertain.

The last of the Imperial Mauryas of Magadha, Brihadratha, is mentioned not only in the Purāṇas but also in Bāṇa's Harsha-charita. He was crushed by his general Pushyamitra who is perhaps wrongly described by the Divyāvadāna as of Maurya descent. A Maurya minister is said to have been imprisoned by the regicide family.

Petty Maurya kings continued to rule in Western India as well as Magadha long after the extinction of the Imperial line. King Dhavala of the Maurya dynasty is referred to in the Kaṇaswa inscription of A. D. 738.¹ Dr. D.R. Bhandarkar identifies him with Dhavalappadeva, the overlord of Dhanika, mentioned in the Dabok (Mewar) inscription of cir. A. D. 725.² Maurya chiefs of the Koṅkaṇ and Khāndesh are referred to in Early Chalukya and Yādava epigraphs.³ A Maurya ruler of Magadha named Pūrṇavarman is mentioned by Hiuen Tsang.

There can be no doubt that during the sovereignty of the later Mauryas the Magadha Empire experienced a gradual decay. Aśoka died in or about the year 232 B. C. Within a quarter of a century after his death a Greek army crossed the Hindukush which was the Maurya frontier in the days of Chandragupta and his grandson. The Yuga Purāṇa section of the Gārgi Samhitā bears testimony to the decline of the Maurya power in the Madhyadeśa after the reign of Śāliśūka :

1 Ind. Ant., XIII, 163 ; Bomb. Gaz., I. Part 2, p. 284. Kaṇaswa is in the Kotah state, Rājputāna. It is not unlikely that Dhavala was a descendant of some princely Viceroy of Ujjain. See also reference to the Mauryas in the Navasārikā grant Fleet, DKD, 375.

2 Ep. Ind., XII, p. 11. But see Ep. XX. 122. The date A. D. 725 is not accepted by other scholars who prefer A. D. 813.

3 Bomb. Gaz., I. Part 2, pp. 283, 284. Bühler suggests (Ep. Ind., III, p. 136) that these Maurya chieftains of the Koṅkaṇ were probably descendants of the princely viceroy of the Deccan. He also draws our attention to the family name 'More' which is met with in the Mahratta country, and is apparently a corruption of 'Maurya.'

*Tataḥ Sāketam ākramya
 Pañchālān Mathurāṁstatthā
 Yavanā dushtavikrāntāḥ prāpsyanti Kusumadhvajam tataḥ Pushpapure prāpte kardame prathite hite ākulā viśayāḥ sarve bhaviṣhyanti na saṁśayaḥ.¹*

“Then the viciously valiant Greeks, after reducing Sāketa (in Oudh), the Pañchāla country and Mathurā, will reach (or take) Kusumadhvaja. Pushpapura (Pāṭaliputra) being reached....all provinces will undoubtedly be in disorder.”

Where was now the power that had expelled the prefects of Alexander and hurled back the battalions of Seleukos ?

According to Mahāmahopādhyāya Haraprasād Śāstrī² a reaction promoted by the Brāhmaṇas had sapped the foundations of the Maurya authority and dismembered the empire.

Among the causes of the alienation of the Brāhmaṇas the foremost place is given to Aśoka's Edict against animal sacrifices. The Edict, in Paṇḍit Śāstrī's opinion, was certainly directed against the Brāhmaṇas as a class and was specially offensive because it was promulgated by a Śūdra ruler. As to the first point we should remember that prohibition of animal sacrifices did not necessarily imply hostility towards Brāhmaṇas. Long before Aśoka Brāhmaṇa sages whose teachings have found a place in the Holy Śruti, the most sacred literature of the Brāhmaṇas, declared themselves in no uncertain terms against sacrifices, and in favour of Ahimsā (non-violence).

¹ Kern. Bṛihat Samhitā, p. 37.

² JASB, 1910, pp. 259 ff.

In the *Muṇḍaka Upanishad*¹ we have the following Śloka:—

Plavā hyete adriḥhā yajñarūpā ashtādaśoktam avaram yeshu karma etachchhreyo ye'bhinandanti mūḍhā jarāmṛityuṁ te punarevāpi yanti.

“Frail, in truth are those boats, the sacrifices, the eighteen in which this lower ceremonial has been told. Fools, who praise this as the highest good, are subject again and again to old age and death.” In the *Chhāndogya Upanishad*² Ghora Āṅgīrasa lays great stress on Ahimsā.

As to the second statement we should remember that tradition is not unanimous in representing the Mauryas as of Śūdra extraction. Certain Purāṇic texts assert no doubt, that after Mahāpadma there will be kings of Śūdra origin.³ But this statement cannot be taken to mean that all the post-Mahāpadma kings were Śūdras, as in that case the Śuṅgas and the Kāṇvas also will have to be classed as Śūdras.⁴ The Mudrārākshasa, the evidence of which is cited to prove that Chandragupta was a Śūdra,⁵ is a late work, and its evidence is contradicted by

1 1. 2. 7 ; S. B. E. The Upanishads, pt II. p. 31.

2 III. 17. 4.

3 Tataḥ prabhṛtirājāno bhaviṣhyāḥ Śūdrayonayaḥ. The reading in other texts is, however, Tato nripā bhaviṣyanti Śūdraḥ prāyastvadhārmikāḥ (DKA, 25).

4 Among real Śūdra (or partially Śūdra) kings may be included the Nandas, a few rulers mentioned in the Garuḍa Purāṇa (Ch. 145. 4) and the Si-yü-ki of Hiuen Tsang (Watters, I. 322 ; II. 252), and certain princes of Western India and the Indus Valley mentioned on pp. 54-55 of Pargiter's Dynasties of the Kālī age.

5 In the play Chandragupta is styled 'Nandānvaya' and Vṛishala. As to the former appellation we should note that the play describes Nanda as abhijana. Further it calls Chandragupta Mauryaputra, and though commentators try to reconcile the epithets Nandānvaya and Mauryaputra, we learn from early Buddhist writers that Maurya is not a metronymic of Chandragupta or of his father, but the designation of an old clan. The Greeks, too, refer to a tribe called Morieis (Weber IA, ii. (1873) p 148 ; Max Muller, Sans. Lit., 280 ; Cunn. JASB, XXIII, 680). As to the epithet Vṛishala it should be remembered earlier authorities. As already pointed out above¹ the Mahāparinibbāna sutta represents the Moriyas (Mauryas) as belonging to the Kshatriya caste. The *Mahāvamsa*² refers to the Moriyas as a noble (kshatriya) clan and represents Chandragupta as a scion of this clan. In the *Divyāvadāna*³ Bindusāra, son of Chandragupta, said to a girl, "Tvaṃ Nāpinī, ahaṃ Rāja Kshatriyo Mūrdhābhishikṭaḥ katham mayā sārḍhaṃ samāgamobhavishyati?" Thou art a barber girl, I am a consecrated kshatriya (king). How can I unite myself with thee?" In the same work⁴ Aśoka says to one of his queens (Tishyarakshitā), "Devi ahaṃ Kshatriyah katham palāṇḍuṃ paribhakshayāmi?" 'Queen, I am a kshatriya, how can I take onion?' In a Mysore inscription Chandragupta is described as "an abode of the usages of eminent kshatriyas."⁵ The Kauṭīliya's preference of an "abhiṣāta" king seems also to suggest that the sovereign of the reputed author was born of a noble family.⁶

Having referred to the prohibition of animal sacrifices Pandit Śāstrī goes on to say: "this was followed by that a Purāṇic text applies it even to the founder of the so-called Andhra dynasty (Pargiter, DKA, 38). But we learn from contemporary epigraphs that the dynasty regarded itself as 'Bamhaya.' According to Manu (X.43) the epithet Vṛishala could be applied to degraded Kshatriyas (cf. IHQ, 1930, 271 ff. Cf. also Mbh. XII. 90, 15ff., "The Blessed Dharma is Vṛisha. He who deals with it in such a way that it ceases to be of any use, i.e., transgresses it, is called a Vṛishala, Vṛishohi Bhagavān Dharmo yastasya kurute hyalam). The Mauryas by their Greek connection and Jaina and Buddhist leanings certainly deviated from the Dharma as understood by the great Brāhmaṇa law-givers. Attention may be invited in this connection to the epithet Vasalaka (Vṛishala) applied by Brāhmaṇas to the Buddha himself (Mookerji, Hindu Civilization, 264).

1 p. 267 supra.

2 Geiger's Translation, p. 27.

3 P. 370.

4 P. 709.

5 Rice, Mysore and Coorg from the Inscriptions, p. 10.

6 Cf. Arthaśāstra, p. 326. See also supra, 266 f. (the reign of Chandragupta).

another edict in which Aśoka boasted that those who were regarded as gods on earth have been reduced by him into false gods. If it means anything it means that the Brāhmaṇas who were regarded as Bhūdevas or gods on earth had been shown up by him."

The original passage referred to above runs thus :—

Y (i)-imāya kālāya Jambudīpasi amisā devā hsu te dāni m (i) s-kaṭā.

Pandit Śāstri followed the interpretation of Senart. But Sylvain Lévi¹ has shown that the word amisā cannot stand for Sanskrit amṛishā, for in the Bhābrū edict we find Musā and not Misā for Sanskrit mṛishā (falsely or false). The recently discovered Māski version reads misibhūtā for misaṁkaṭā, showing that the original form was miśrībhūtā. It will be grammatically incorrect to form misibhūtā from Sanskrit mṛishā. The word miśra means mixed. And miśrībhūtā means "made to mix" or made to associate. The meaning of the entire passage is "during that time the men in India who had been unassociated with the gods became associated with them."² There is thus no question of "showing up" anybody.³

Pandit Śāstri adds that the appointment by Aśoka of Dharma-mahāmātras, i.e., of superintendents of morals,

1 Hultzsch, Aśoka, 168.

2 Cf. Āpastamba Dharmasūtra, II. 7. 16. 1: "Formerly men and gods lived together in this world. Then the gods in reward of their sacrifices went to heaven, but men were left behind. Those men who perform sacrifices in the same manner as the gods did, dwell with the gods and Brahma in heaven." My attention was first drawn to this passage by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar. Cf. also Harivaṁśa (III. 32. 1): 'Devatānāṁ manushyānāṁ saha-vāsobhavattadā'; and SBE, XXXIV, p. 222-3 (Śāṅkara's Com. on the Vedāntasūtras): "The men of ancient times, in consequence of their eminent religious merit, conversed with the gods face to face. Smṛiti also declares that 'from the reading of the Veda there results intercourse with the favourite divinity.' " was a direct invasion of the rights and privileges of the Brāhmaṇas. It is hardly correct to represent the Dharma-mahāmātras as mere superintendents of morals when their duties consisted in the establishment of the Law of Piety (which included liberality to Brāhmaṇas), the promotion of the welfare of the Yavanas, Kambojas, Gandhāras, Rīṣikas, Brāhmaṇas and others, revision of sentences of imprisonment or execution, the supervision of the family establishments of the Emperor's brothers and other relatives, and the administration of alms-giving.¹ These duties were not essentially those of a mere superintendent of morals, and were not a direct invasion of the rights and privileges of the Brāhmaṇas. Moreover, there is nothing to show that the Dharma-mahāmātras were wholly recruited from non-Brāhmaṇas.

3 The true import of the passage was pointed out by Dr. Bhandarkar in the Indian Antiquary, 1912, p. 170.

Our attention is next drawn to the passage where Aśoka insists upon his officers strictly observing the principles of Danḍa-samatā and Vyavahāra-samatā. Paṇḍit Śāstri takes the expressions to mean 'equality of punishment' and 'equality in lawsuits' irrespective of caste, colour and creed, and adds that this order was very offensive to the Brāhmaṇas who claimed many privileges including immunity from capital punishment.

The passage containing the expressions Danḍa-samatā and Vyavahāra-samatā should not be divorced from its context and interpreted as if it were an isolated ukase. We quote the passage with the context below :—

"To my Rājukas set over many hundred thousands of people I have granted independence (or discretion) in the award of honours and penalties. But as it is desirable that there should be uniformity in judicial procedure

1 Aśoka, third ed., pp. 168-69.

(Vyavahāra-samatā) and uniformity in penalties (Danḍa-samatā), from this time forward my rule is this—"To condemned men lying in prison under sentence of death a respite of three days is granted by me."

It is clear from the extract quoted above that the order regarding Vyavahāra-samatā and Danḍa-samatā is to be understood in connection with the general policy of decentralisation which the Emperor introduced. Aśoka allowed discretion to the Rājūkas in the award of penalties, but he did not like that the Danḍa and Vyavahāra prevalent within the jurisdiction of one Rājūka should be entirely different from those prevailing within the jurisdiction of others.¹ He wanted to maintain some uniformity (samatā) both in Danḍa (penalties) as well as in Vyavahāra (legal procedure). As an instance he refers to the rule about the granting of a respite of three days to condemned men. The Samatā which he enforced involved a curtailment of the autonomy of the Rājūkas and did not necessarily infringe on the alleged immunity of the Brāhmaṇas from capital punishment.

But were the Brāhmaṇas really immune under all circumstances from capital punishment in ancient India? We learn from the *Pañchaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa*² that a Purohita (priest) might be punished with death for treachery to his master. The Kauṭīliya,³ tells us that a Brāhmaṇa guilty of treason was to be drowned. Readers of the Mahābhārata are familiar with the stories of the punishments inflicted on Māṇḍavya and Likhita.⁴ The life of a Brāhmaṇa was not so sacrosanct in ancient as in mediaeval and modern India. We learn from the 1 I am indebted for this suggestion to Mr. S. N. Majumdar.

2 Vedic Index, II. p. 84. The story of Kutsa and his chaplain, Caland, Pañch. Br., XIV. 6.8; cf. Bṛihadāraṇyaka Up., III, 9. 26.

3 P. 229.

4 Ādi, 107 and Śānti, 23, 36.

Āitareya Brāhmaṇa that king Hariścandra of the Ikshvāku family did not scruple to offer a Brāhmaṇa boy as a victim in a sacrifice.

Against the surmises regarding the anti-Brāhmaṇical policy of Aśoka we have the positive evidence of some of his inscriptions which proves the Emperor's solicitude for the well-being of the Brāhmaṇas. Thus in Rock Edict III he inculcates liberality to Brāhmaṇas. In Edict IV he speaks with disapproval of unseemly behaviour towards the same class. In Edict V he refers to the employment of Dharma-mahāmātras to promote the welfare and happiness of the Brāhmaṇas.

Pandit Śāstri says further that as soon as the strong hand of Aśoka was removed the Brāhmaṇas seemed to have stood against his successors. We have no evidence of any such conflict between the children of Aśoka and the Brāhmaṇas. On the other hand, if the Brāhmaṇa historian of Kāśmīra is to be believed, the relations between Jalauka, one of the sons and successors of Aśoka, and the Brāhmaṇical Hindus were entirely friendly.¹

In conclusion Pandit Śāstri refers to the assassination of the last Maurya Emperor of Magadha by Pushyamitra Śuṅga and says, "We clearly see the hands of the 1 Note also the employment of Brāhmaṇa officers, e.g., Pushyamitra, by the later Mauryas. Kalhana has nothing but praise for Aśoka. Another Brāhmaṇa writer, Bāṇa, applies the epithet anūrya (ignoble) not to the Maurya kings, but to the Brāhmaṇa general who overthrew the last of them. Viśākhadatta compares Chandragupta with the Boar Incarnation of Viṣṇu. Certain epic and Purāṇic writers, it is true, refer to the Mauryas as asuras, and the Gārgī-Saṁhitā draws pointed attention to the oppressive rule of some of the later members of the family. But there is little to suggest that the Brāhmaṇas were special victims of Maurya tyranny. On the contrary, members of the class were freely admitted to high office as evidenced by the case of Pushyamitra. The epithet asura or sura-dvish was applied not only to the Mauryas but to all persons 'beguiled by the Buddha'. The testimony of the Purāṇas in this respect is contradicted by that of contemporary epigraphs which refer to Aśoka and the only one among his imperial descendants who has left any epigraphic record as devānampiya, that is, the beloved (and not the enemy) of the gods.

Brāhmaṇas in the great revolution." But the Buddhist remains at Bhārhut, erected "during the sovereignty of the Śuṅgas" do not bear out the theory which represents them as the leaders of a militant Brāhmaṇism. Are inferences deduced from uncorroborated writings of late authors like the compiler of the Divyāvadāna and perhaps Tāranātha, to be preferred to the clear testimony of contemporary monuments? Even admitting that Pushyāmītra was a militant Brāhmaṇist we fail to see how the decay and dismemberment of the Maurya empire can be attributed primarily to him or to his Brāhmaṇist followers. The empire was a shrivelled and attenuated carcass long before Pushyāmītra's coup d'état of c. 187 B.C. We learn from the Rājatarāṅginī that immediately after the death of Aśoka one of his own sons, Jalauka, made himself independent in Kāśmīra and conquered the plains including Kanauj. If Tāranātha is to be believed another prince, Virasena, apparently wrested Gandhāra from the hands of the feeble successor of the great Maurya at Pāṭaliputra. The virtual secession of Vidarbha or Berar is vouched for by the Mālavikāgnimitram of Kālidāsa. The loss of the northern provinces is confirmed by Greek evidence. We learn from Polybius that about 206 B.C., there ruled over them a king named Sophagasenus (Subhāgasena, probably a successor of Virasena). We quote the passage referring to the king below :—

"He (Antiochos the Great) crossed the Caucasus (Hindukush) and descended into India; renewed his friendship with Sophagasenus, the king of the Indians; received more elephants, until he had 150 altogether, and having once more provisioned his troops, set out again personally with his army, leaving Androstenes of Cyzicus, the duty of taking home the treasure which this king had agreed to hand over to him."

It will be seen that Subhāgasena was a king and not a petty chief of the Kabul valley as Dr. Smith would have us believe. He is called "king of the Indians," a title which was applied by the classical writers to great kings like Chandragupta and Demetrios. There is nothing in the account of Polybius to show that he was vanquished by the Syrian king in war or was regarded by the latter as a subordinate ruler. On the contrary, the statement that Antiochos "renewed his friendship (or alliance) with Sophagasenus, king of the Indians" proves that the two monarchs met on equal terms and friendly relations were established between them. The renewal of friendship on the part of the Greek king, and the surrender of elephants on the part of his Indian brother, only remind us of the relations subsisting between Chandragupta and Seleukos. Further the expression "renewal of friendship" seems to suggest that Subhāgasena had had previous dealings with Antiochos. Consequently he must have come to the throne sometime before 206 B.C. The existence of an independent kingdom in the north-west before 206 B.C. shows that the Maurya Empire must have begun to break up nearly a quarter of a century before the usurpation of Pushyamitra.

We have seen that the theory which ascribes the decline and dismemberment of the Maurya Empire to a Brāhmanical revolution led by Pushyamitra does not bear scrutiny. Was the Maurya disruption due primarily to the Greek invasion? The earliest Greek invasion after Aśoka, that of Antiochos the Great, took place about 206 B.C., and we have seen that the combined testimony of Kalhaṇa and Polybius leaves no room for doubt that the dissolution of the empire began long before the raid of the Hellenistic monarch.

What then were the primary causes of the disintegration of the mighty empire? There are good grounds for believing that the government of the outlying provinces by the imperial officials was oppressive. Already in the time of Bindusāra ministerial oppression had goaded the people of Taxila to open rebellion. The Divyāvadāna says ¹

“Atha Rājño Vindusārasya Takshasilā nāma nagaram viruddham. Tatra Rājñā Vindusāren Āśoko visarjitah... yāvat Kumāraschaturāṅgena balakāyena Takshasilām gataḥ, śrutvā Takshasilā nivāsinaḥ paurāḥ...pratyudgamya cha kathayanti ‘na vayam Kumārasya viruddhāḥ nāpi Rājño Vindusārasya api tu duṣṭāmātyā asmākaṁ paribhavaṁ kurvanti.’”

“Now Taxila a city of king Bindusāra’s revolted. The king Bindusāra despatched Āśoka there..while the prince was nearing Taxila with the fourfold army, the resident Pauras (citizens of Taxila), on hearing of it...came out to meet him and said :—‘We are not opposed to the prince nor even to king Bindusāra. But these wicked ministers insult us.’”

Taxila again revolted during the reign of Āśoka and the cause was again the tyranny of the ministers. *Rājñ-ośokasy-ottarūpathe Takshasilā nagaram viruddham...*². Prince Kunāla was deputed to the government of the city. When the prince went there the people said “na vayam Kumārasya viruddhā na rājño’-śokasy-āpi tu duṣṭātmanō’ mātyā āgatyaśmākaṁ apamānaṁ kurvanti.”

The Divyāvadāna is no doubt a late work, but the reality of ministerial oppression to which it refers, is affirmed by Āśoka himself in the Kaliṅga Edicts. Addressing the High officers (Mahāmātras) in charge of Tosali he says : “All men are my children ; and just as I desire for my children that they may enjoy every kind of prosperity and happiness both in this world and in the next, so also I desire the same for all men. You, however, do not grasp this truth to its full extent. Some individual, perchance, pays heed, but to a part only, not the whole. See then to this, for the principle of government is well-established. Again, it happens that some individual incurs imprisonment or torture and when the result is his imprisonment without due cause, many other people are deeply grieved....Ill performance of duty can never gain my regard.... The restraint or torture of the townsmen may not take place without due cause. And for this purpose, in accordance with the Law of Piety, I shall send forth in rotation every five years such persons as are of mild and temperate disposition, and regardful of the sanctity of life...From Ujjain, however, the Prince for this purpose will send out a similar body of officials, and will not over-pass three years. In the same way—from Taxila.”¹

1 P. 371.

2 Divyāvadāna, 407f.

From the concluding words of the Edict it appears that official maladministration was not confined to the province of Kalinga. The state of affairs at Ujjain and Taxila was similar. It is thus clear that the loyalty of the provincials was being slowly undermined by ministerial oppression long before Pushyamitra's coup d'état of c. 187 B.C.² and the Greek invasion of c. 206 B.C. Aśoka no doubt did his best to check the evil, but he was ill served by his officers. It is significant that the provincials of the north-west—the very people who complained of the oppression of the dushtāmātyas as early as the reign of Bindusāra, were among the first to break away from the Maurya empire.

1 Smith, Aśoka, Third Ed., pp. 194-96.

2 The Jaina date 313-108=205 B.C. for Pushyamitra's accession may refer to the assumption of power by Pushyamitra in Avanti, while the date c. 187 B.C. refers to the dynastic revolution in Magadha.

The Magadban successors of Aśoka had neither the strength nor perhaps the will to arrest the process of disruption.¹ The martial ardour of imperial Magadha had vanished with the last cries of agony uttered in the battle-fields of Kalinga. Aśoka had given up the aggressive militarism of his forefathers and had evolved a policy of Dhamma-vijaya which must have seriously impaired the military efficiency of his empire.² He had called upon his sons and even great-grandsons to eschew new conquests, avoid the shedding of blood and take pleasure in patience and forbearance as far as possible. These latter had heard more of Dhamma-ghosha than of Bheri-ghosha. It is, therefore, not at all surprising that the rois faineants who succeeded to the imperial throne of Pāṭaliputra proved unequal to the task of maintaining the integrity of the mighty fabric reared by the genius of Chandragupta and Chāṇakya.

1 On the contrary, if the Gārgī Samhitā is to be believed, one of his successors, namely Śāliśūka, actually quickened the pace by his tyranny—Sarāshṭra mardate ghorāṁ dharmavādi adhārmikāḥ (sic). Some of Aśoka's descendants (e.g., Jalauka) set up independent sovereignties, and were thus directly responsible for the dismemberment of the empire.

2 Cf. the events narrated on page 353 ante, and "Garga's" attack on the policy of so-called Dharmavijaya, "conquest conformable to Dharma" attributed to Śāliśūka, which, in the opinion of the present writer, is hard to dissociate from Dhamma-Vijaya as promulgated by Aśoka himself and recommended for adoption by his "sons and even great-grandsons." Attention to the passage in the Gārgī Samhitā was also drawn by Jayaswal (JBORS, IV, 261)—sthāpa-yishyati mohātmā vijayaṁ nāma dhāmikam, "the fool will establish the so-called conquest of Dharma." The expression mohātmā reminds one of the later meaning of 'Devānāmpīya' (fool, idiot like a brute, beast, Apte, Sanskrit-English Dictionary, 510). An eminent writer takes Vijaya to be a proper name, the appellation of the elder brother of Śāliśūka, whom the latter established on the throne. But it is not clear why the enthronement of a righteous (dhārmika) man should earn for the person responsible for the action the opprobrious epithet mohātmā. Besides, Vijaya does not occur as a royal name in any of the lists of later Mauryas known to tradition. (For reference to divergent views see Cal. Rev., Feb. 1943, p. 123 ff; Feb. 1946 p. 79 ff). As pointed out by Dr. Sircar, conjectural emendations of the text of the Gārgī Samhitā in support of a particular theory do not carry conviction (Cal. Rev. 1943, April, 39ff).

366 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

The disintegration which set in before 206 B.C. was accelerated by the invasions led by the Yavanas referred to in the Gārgī Saṁhitā and the Mahābhāshya of Patañjali. The final coup de grace was given by Pushyamitra.

The royal hunt and jousts of arms in Samājas were abolished. The army seems to have been practically inactive during the last 29 years of Aśoka's reign as the emperor himself declares with a feeling of exultation that 'the sound of the bheri had become the sound of the True Law, Dharma'. The Chinese Hou Hanshu (quoted by S. Konow, CII, Vol. II, p. lxvii) testifies to the fact that people of India "practise the religion of the Buddha ; it has become a habit with them not to kill and not to fight". The ease with which general Pushyamitra overthrew his king, in the very sight of the army, shows that unlike the earlier kings of the dynasty who took the field in person, the last of the Mauryas lost touch with his fighting forces, and ceased to command their affection. The largesses of gold lavished on the religious must also have crippled the financial resources of the empire. The system of autonomous Rājūkas instituted by Aśoka must have let loose centrifugal forces that his successors were unable to check.

GENEALOGY OF THE MAURYA DYNASTY

CHAPTER VI. THE ŚUNGA (?) EMPIRE AND THE BACTRIAN GREEKS.

SECTION I. THE REIGN OF PUSHYAMITRA.

Satatañ kampayāmāsa Yavanāneka eva yaḥ balapauruṣhasampannān kṛitāstrānamitaujaśaḥ yathāsurān Kālakeyān devo vajradharastathā.

—Mahābhārata.¹

Audbhijjo bhavitā kaśchit senānīḥ Kāśyapo dvijaḥ aśvamedhañ Kaliyuge punaḥ pratyaharishyati.

—Harivaṃśa.²

The Mauryas had done much for Indian unity by bringing the greater part of the country under "one umbrella," by defending it against the generals of Alexander and Seleukos, by establishing a uniform system of administration, by using Prākṛit for official purposes throughout the length and breadth of the empire and attempting to knit together the different sections of its composite population by the strong tie of a common Dharma. With the fall of the dynasty Indian history for the time being loses its unity. The command of one single political authority is no longer obeyed from the snowy heights of the Hindukush to the verdant plains of Bengal and the Upper Carnatic. Hordes of outlanders pour through the north-western gates of the country and establish aggressive monarchies in Gandhāra, Western Mālwa and neighbouring regions. The Pañjāb is seized by foreigners and the Deccan by local dynasts. The political connection of the Madhyadeśa with the valleys of the Indus and the Godāvarī is temporarily snapped, and the splendour of the Magadhan metropolis is dimmed by the rising glory of Śākala, Vidiśā, Pratishṭhāna and other cities. Brāhmaṇism gains ground in the Ganges valley and the Deccan, while Jainism flourishes in Orissa. The sects of the Māheśvaras and the Bhāgavatas become powers to reckon with. The study of Sanskrit receives an impetus at the hands of the grammarians of the Madhyadeśa, while Prākṛit literature enjoys the patronage of the courts of Pratishṭhāna and Kuntala in Southern India.

1 II. 4. 23.

2 III. 2. 40.

Brihadratha, the last Maurya Emperor of Magadha, was, according to the Purāṇas and the Harsha-charita, assassinated by his general, Pushyamitra, who usurped the throne, and founded a new line of kings.

The origin of the usurping family is wrapped up in obscurity. According to the Divyāvadāna Pushyamitra was lineally descended from the Mauryas. The Mālavikāgnimitram, on the other hand, makes Agnimitra, son of Pushyamitra, a scion of the Baimbika family,¹ while the Purāṇas, and apparently the *Harsha-Charita*² represent

1 In the Mālavikāgnimitram (Act IV. Verse 14 ; Tawney's translation, p. 69) Agnimitra claims to belong to the Baimbika-kula. A king named Bimbaki is mentioned in The Ocean of Story, Penzer I, 112, 119. Mr. H. A. Shah suggests (Proceedings of the Third Oriental Conference, Madras, p. 379) that the Baimbikas were connected with the family of Bimbisāra. It is more probable that the epithet 'Baimbika' (in the passage dākṣhiṇyaṁ nāma bimbosṭhi Baimbikānāṁ kulavratam) is connected with bimbikā, a kind of plant (IC, 1938, Jan. 365) and also perhaps with the river Bimbikā mentioned in the Bharhut Inscriptions (Barua and Sinha, p. 8). Cf. Pādma, Bhūmikhaṇḍa 90, 24 ; Baimbaki in Patañjali, IV, 1. 97. In the Harivaṁśa (Bhaviṣya, II. 40) the Brāhmaṇa Senāni who is to restore the Aśvamedha in the Kali yuga is represented as an Audbhijja, 'Plant-born', and a Kāśyapa. Jayaswal identifies him with Pushyamitra. Curiously enough, the Baudhāyana Śrauta Sūtra (ed. Caland, Vol. III, p. 449) represents the Baimbakayaḥ as Kāśyapas.

2 It is, however, to be noted that the Harsha-charita never applies the designation Śuṅga to Pushyamitra himself, but only to one of the latest kings in the Purāṇic list. The Purāṇas may have combined the Baimbikas and Śuṅgas under the common name of Śuṅga.

these kings as Śuṅgas. One writer suggests that the Śuṅgas whose names ended in Mitra were Irāṇians, worshippers of Mithra (the Sun).¹ Others, regard them as Indian Brāhmaṇas. Curiously enough, Pāṇini² connects the Śuṅgas with the well-known Brāhmaṇa family of the Bhāradvājas. Śauṅgīputra, "son of a female descendant of Śuṅga," is the name of a teacher in the Bṛihadāranyaka Upanishad.³ Śauṅgāyani, "descendant of Śauṅga" is the name of a teacher in the Vaiśva Brāhmaṇa. Macdonell and Keith point out that the Śuṅgas are known as teachers in the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra.⁴ In view of the conflicting statements in the Mālavikāgnimitram, the Purāṇas, etc., it is difficult to say whether Pushyamitra and his known descendants (down to Vasumitra) were Śuṅgas of the Bhāradvāja Gotra or Baimbikas of Kaśyapa lineage. The historic "Śuṅgas" of the time of Dhanabhūti are assigned by competent scholars to the period B.C. 100-75. This accords with the testimony of the Harsha-charita which, while denying this dynastic epithet to Pushyamitra, applies it to the latest kings of the Purāṇic list, the immediate predecessors of Vasudeva Kāṇva.

It is not known for certain when and why the family of Pushyamitra, like the Kadambas of a later date, exchanged the quill for the sword. There is no reason to think that Aśoka tyrannised over the Brāhmaṇas and that his oppression forced them to engage in non-priestly pursuits. Brāhmaṇa Senāpatīs were by no means rare in 1 JASB, 1912, 287. Cf. 1910. 260.

2 In Sūtra IV, 1, 117. Also Kramadīśvara, 763.

3 VI. 4. 31.

4 XII. 13. 5, etc. The Vaiśva Brāhmaṇa seems to associate the Śuṅgas with the Madra country. Ved. Index, II, p. 123. For Tāranātha's reference to Pushyamitra, see JBORS, IV, pt. 3, 258. For Bhāradvājas as champions of autocracy and of ministerial usurpation, see Kauṭīliya, 31, 316.

ancient India.¹ The fact that officers of this class found employment under the Later Mauryas proves conclusively that the latter could not have pursued an anti-Brahmanic policy.

The Dominions of Pushyamitra extended to the river Narmadā, and included the cities of Pāṭaliputra, Ayodhyā, Vidiśā, and, if the author of the Divyāvadāna and Tāranātha are to be believed, Jālandhara and Śākala.² It appears from the Divyāvadāna,³ that the Emperor himself continued to reside in Pāṭaliputra. The Mālavikāgnimitram tells us that Vidiśā (Besnagar in Eastern Mālwa) was governed by Prince Agnimitra, probably as his father's viceroy (Goptri).⁴ Another viceroy, also a relation of the emperor, may have governed Kosala.⁵ Agnimitra's queen had a brother of inferior caste, named Virasena. He was placed in command of a frontier fortress on the banks of the Narmadā (Atthi devīe vanṇāvaro

1 Cf. the cases of Droṇa, Kṛpā and Aśvatthāman in the Mahābhārata, of Ravidēva in the Indian Antiquary, VIII. 20, of Kholeśvara, the commander of Yādava kings, and of Someśvara, the Brāhmaṇa general of the Pāla kings.

2 Jaina writers, e.g., Merutuṅga, include Avanti within the dominions of Pushyamitra. This province was lost to the Śātavāhanas, and Śākala to the Greeks.

3 P. 434.

4 Mālavikāgnimitram, Act V, pp. 370, 391 of G. Vidyānidhi's ed. esp. verse 20. Saṃpadyate na khalu Goptari nā Agnimitre.

5 The possible existence of this vicereignty is disclosed by an inscription discovered at the door of a temple at Ayodhyā, which records the erection of a "ketana" (abode) by a Kosalādhipa who was the sixth (brother, son or descendant?) of Senāpati Pushyamitra, the performer of two horse-sacrifices (Nāgarī Prachārīṇi Patrikā, Vaiśākha, Sam. 1981; JBORS, X (1924) 203; XIII (1927) facing 247. Mod. Review, 1924, October, p. 431; IHQ, 1929, 602f.; Ep. Ind. XX. 54ff.). It is interesting to note that the title, "Senāpati" clung to the deva (king) Pushyamitra even after the performance of the Aśvaniedha. Cf. the epithet Vāhinīpati applied to king Virāṭa in the Mahābhārata and the title Yavuga applied to Kushān emperors besides other epithets. Cf. also the style Mahārāja Mahāsenāpati in CII., Vol. 3, p. 252, and the title Mahāmaṇḍaleśvara applied to Bijjala and others even after the assumption of the full royal style (Bomb. Gazz., II. ii. 474ff.).

bhādā Viraseṇo nāma, so bhaṭṭiṇā antav (p) āladugge Nammadātīre¹ (hāvido).

Affairs in the Deccan.

It appears from the Mālavikāgnimitram that the foundation of the dynasty of Pushyamitra almost synchronised with the establishment of a new kingdom in the Deccan, viz., Vidarbha or Berar. Agnimitra's Amātya (Minister) refers to the kingdom as "achirādhishṭhita" (established not long ago) and compares its king to a tree which is newly planted and, therefore, not firm (nava-saṁropaṇa-śithīla-staruk). The king of Vidharbha is represented as a relation (sister's husband) of the Maurya minister (Sachiva) and a natural enemy (Prakṛityamitra) of the family of Pushyamitra. It appears that during the reign of Brihadratha Maurya there were two parties or factions in the Magadha Empire, one headed by the king's Sachiva or minister, the other headed by his Senāpati or general. The minister's partisan Yajñasena got the rulership of Vidarbha, while the general's son Agnimitra obtained the viceroyalty of Vidiśā. When the general organised his coup d'état, killed the king, and imprisoned the minister, Yajñasena apparently declared his independence and commenced hostilities against the usurping family. This is why he is called achirādhishṭhita-rājya and prakṛity-amitra by Agnimitra and his Amātya.

1 Act I. Some manuscripts mention Mandākinī as the name of the river (cf. IHQ. 1925, 214). A stream called Mandākinī lies 5 miles south of the Tāpī (Ind. Ant., 1902, 254). Another Mandākinī flowed near Chitrakūṭa (Rām. 92. 10-11). Lüders' Inscriptions, Nos. 687-688, seem to suggest that Bharhut (in Baghelkhand) was governed by a Śuṅga feudatory. If Pushyamitra was a Śuṅga Baghelkhand must have formed part of the empire of his family. In the Monuments of Sāñchī, I. iv. 271, the author does not agree with Bühler in assigning the ins. to the middle of the second century B.C. He prefers B.C. 100-75. Palaeographically the epigraphs are classed with the ins. of Indrāgnimitra, Brahmanitra and Vishnumitra.

MAGADHAN ANTAGONIST OF KHĀRAVELA 373

The Mālavikāgnimitram says that when Kumāra Mādhavasena, a cousin of Yajñasena and a partisan of Agnimitra, was secretly on his way to Vidiśā, he was captured by an Antapāla (Warden of the Marches) of Yajñasena and kept in custody. Agnimitra demanded his surrender. The Vidarbha king promised to give him up on condition that his brother-in-law, the Maurya minister, should be released. This enraged the ruler of Vidiśā who ordered Vīrasena to march against Vidarbha. Yajñasena was defeated. Mādhavasena was released and the kingdom of Vidarbha was divided between the two cousins, the river Varadā (Wardha) forming the boundary between the two states. Both the rulers seem to have accepted the suzerainty of the House of Pushyamitra.

In the opinion of several scholars an enemy more formidable than Yajñasena threatened Pushyamitra's dominions from Kalinga (Orissa). In his *Oxford History of India*¹ Dr. Smith accepts the view that Khāravēla, king of Kalinga, defeated Pushyamitra who is identified with Bahapatimita or Bahasatimita, a prince supposed to be mentioned in the Hāthīgumphā Inscription of the Kalinga monarch. Prof. Dubreuil also seems to endorse the view that Khāravēla was an antagonist of Pushyamitra, and that the Hāthīgumphā Inscription is dated the 165th year of Rāja-Muriya-kāla (era of king Maurya) which corresponds to the 13th year of the reign of Khāravēla.

Dr. R. C. Majumdar, however, points out² that of the six letters of the Hāthīgumphā Inscription which have been read as Bahasati-mitam, the second letter seems to have a clear u sign attached to it, and the third and fourth letters look like pa and sa. Even if the reading

¹ Additions and corrections, and p. 58n. Cf. also S. Konow in Acta Orientalia, I. 29. S. Konow accepts Jayaswal's identification, Bahasatimita = Pushyamitra.

² Ind. Ant., 1919, p. 189. Cf. Allan CICAI, p. xcvi.

Bahasati-mitam, or Bahapati-mitam, be accepted as correct, the identification of Bahasati (Bṛihaspati-mitra) with Pushyamitra merely on the ground that Bṛihaspati (Jiva) is the regent, nakshatrādhīpa, of the nakshatra or zodiacal asterism Pushya, also named Tishya, in the constellation Cancer or the Crab, cannot be regarded as final in the absence of more convincing evidence.¹ In this connection we should note that the *Divyāvadāna*² distinguishes between a king named "Vṛihaspati" and king Pushyamitra,³ and represents Pāṭaliputra as the residence of the latter whereas the Magadha antagonist of Khāravela is possibly called "Rājagahanapa"⁴ and apparently resided in the city of Rājagṛiha.

The date "165th year of the Muriyakāla" was deduced from a passage of the Hāthigumphā Inscription which was read as follows :⁵—"Pānāntariya-saṭhi-vasa-sate Rāja-Muriya-kāle vochchhine...". There is another passage in the same inscription which runs thus :—Pañchame cha (or che) dānī vase Nāmda-rāja ti-vasa-sata (m ?)—oghāṭitam Tanasuliya-vāṭa-panāḍim nagaram pavesayati.⁶ If Pānāntariya-saṭhi-vasa-sate be taken to mean "in the 165th year",

1 Cf. Chandra in IHQ, 1929, p. 594 ff.

2 Pp. 433-34.

3 It is not suggested that Vṛihaspati of the Divyāvadāna is necessarily to be identified with any king named Bṛihaspatimitra mentioned in inscriptions, though the possibility is not entirely excluded. What we mean to point out is that the name "Bṛihaspati" is not to be equated with Pushyamitra, simply because Bṛihaspati is the "regent" of the asterism Pushya, because in literature 'Vṛihaspati,' 'Pushyadharman' and 'Pushyamitra' occur as names of distinct individuals. Regarding the proposed identification of Pushyamitra with Bṛihaspatimitra, see also IHQ, 1930, p. 23.

4 Cf. Lüders' reading, Ep. Ind., X, App. No. 1345. With Jayaswal, S. Konow (Acta Orientalia, I, 26) reads "Rājagahan upapīḍāpayati," though he admits that "Rājagahanapa (m) pīḍāpayati" is also possible.

5 Cf. Bhagwanlal Indraji, Actes du sixième congrès international des Orientalistes. Pt. III, Section 2, pp. 133 ff.; Jayaswal JBORS, 1917, p. 459.

6 Ibid. p. 455. For the interpretation of the passage, see p. 229 supra. S. Konow translates it differently :—"And now in the fifth year he has the ti-vasa-sata should be taken to mean 103 years, and we shall have to conclude that Khāravela flourished some 165 years after a Maurya king, and only 103 years after Nandarāja, which is impossible as the Nandas preceded the Mauryas. If, on the other hand, ti-vasa-sata be taken to mean 300 years, pānāntariya-saṭhi-vasa-sata should be taken to mean not 165 but 6,500 years. In other words Khāravela will have to be placed 6,500 years after a Maurya which is also impossible. Jayaswal himself subsequently gave up the reading "...Pānāntariya-saṭhi-vasa-sate Rāja-Muriya-kāle vochchhine cha chhe-yaṭhi Argasi ti kāmṭariyam upādiyati" in line 16, and proposed to read "Paṭālīko chatare cha veduriyagabhe thamḃhe paṭiṭhāpayati pānatarīyā sata-sahasēhi. Muriya kālām vochchhinām cha choyāṭhi agasatikāmṭariyam upādāyati." He translated the passage thus :—"on the lower-roofed terrace (i.e., in the verandah) he establishes columns inlaid with beryl at the cost of 75,00,000 (Paṇas), he (the king) completes the Muriya time (era), counted and being of an interval of 64 with a century."¹ With regard to this new reading and translation Mr. R. P. Chanda observed² "the rendering of vochhine as 'counted' is even more far-fetched than 'expired'. The particle cha after vochhine makes it difficult to read it as vochchinam qualifying the substantive Muriyakālam. Even if we overlook vochhine, the passage appears to be a very unusual way of stating a date. Still aqueduct which was shut (or opened) in the year 103 (during the reign of) the Nanda king, conducted into the town from Tanasuliya Vāṇa."

1 JBORS, Vol. IV, Part iv, p. 394 f. for Dr. Barua's suggestions see IHQ, 1938, 269.

2 M. A. S. I., No. 1, p. 10. Cf. also S. Konow in Acta Orientalia, I, 14-21. Like Fleet S. Konow finds no date in the passage but regards the reading Rāja Muriya kāla as certain. According to him Khāravela restored some texts missing in the time of the Maurya king Chandragupta. Dr. Barua does not regard the reading Muriya as certain.

more unusual is the statement of a date as an independent achievement in a praśasti." According to Fleet the use of the term "vochchhina" which is applied to sacred texts which have been 'cut off,' 'interrupted'—quite prohibits the existence of a date. It may be added that there is no reliable evidence of the existence of a Rāja-Muriya-kāla in the sense of an era founded by the first Maurya. The use of regnal years by Aśoka points to the same conclusion.¹ Jayaswal himself admits in the Epigraphia Indica,² that "there is no date in a Maurya era in the 16th line," of the Hāthīgumphā inscription.³

Dr. Jayaswal at one time took ti-vasa-sata to mean 300 years and placed Khāravela and Pushyamitra three centuries after Nandarāja whom he identified with Nandavardhana. But we have already seen that Nandavardhana or Nandivardhana was a Śaisunāga king

1 An era of Samprati, grandson of Aśoka, is however, mentioned in an ancient Jain MS. (EHI 4, p. 202n). If we refer the year 164 to this era, the date of Khāravela must be brought down to (cir 224—164=) 60 B. C. In "A note on the Hāthīgumphā Inscription of Khāravela" Barnett suggests the following rendering of the passage which is supposed to contain the words Muriya-kāla: "And when the Mauryan (?) time-reckoning.....which consisted of lustres (antara) of five (years) each, had broken down, he found (a new time-reckoning) consisting of lustres of 7 years each (saptikāntariyam) and mounting up to the 64th year (chatuḥ shashtyagram). To reform the calendar Khāravela introduced a new cycle of 64 years consisting of 9 Yugas of 7 years each. According to Dr. F. W. Thomas (JRAS. 1922, 84) antara = antargṛiha = cell. The passage means that cells which had been left unfinished during the time of the Maurya kings were constructed by Khāravela.

2 XX. 74.

3 His latest reading of the inscriptional passage is as follows;—
 "Paṭalako, chaturō cha veḍūriya-gabhe thambhe paṭiṭhāpayati, pānā-tariya sataśahase(hi); Muriya-kāla-vochchinam cha choyaṭh(i) Aṁga satika (m) turiyam upādayati."

"Paṭalaka(?).....(he) sets up four columns inlaid with beryl at the cost of seventy-five hundred thousands;...(he) causes to be compiled expeditiously the (text) of the sevenfold Aṁgas of the sixty-four (letters)." Ep. Ind., XX, pp. 80, 89.

and that the Śaiśunāgas do not appear to have had anything to do with Kalinga. "It is not Nandivardhana but Mahāpadma Nanda who is said to have brought 'all under his sole sway' and 'uprooted all Kshatriyas' or the old reigning families. So we should identify 'Nandārāja' of the Hāthīgumphā inscription, 'who held possession of Kalinga either with the all-conquering Mahāpadma Nanda or one of his sons.'¹ Professor Barua objects to the identification of "Nandārāja," the conqueror of Kalinga, with a king of the pre-Aśokan Nanda line on the ground that in the Aśokan inscriptions it is claimed that Kalinga was not conquered (avijita) before Aśoka. But such claims are on a par with the Gupta boast that Samudra Gupta was ajita-rājajetā, conqueror of unconquered kings,² and that the Aśvamedha sacrifice had been revived, after a long period of abeyance, by him. We know that as a matter of fact the claims, if taken too literally, had very little substance in them. The suggestion in the Cambridge History of Ancient India that Nandarāja may have been a local ruler of Kalinga is negatived by the internal evidence of the Hāthīgumphā Inscription.³ A post-Aśokan "neo-Nanda" line of Magadha is also unknown to sober history.⁴

1 M. A. S. I., No. I, p. 12.

2 Allan, Gupta Coins, p. ex. Cf. Jahāngir's boast that "not one of the mighty emperors has conquered" Kangra, (ASI, AR, 1905-6. p. 11). Avijita may simply refer to the fact that Kalinga was not included within the limits of Aśoka's Vijita (empire) or Rāja-vishya (Royal Dominions).

3 Cf. the passage—"Nandārāja nītaṁ cha Kalinga Jinasamnivesam" which proves clearly that Nanda was an outsider.

4 A late Nanda or Nandodbhava line is known to epigraphy. But it ruled in Orissa. See R. D. Banerji. Orissa, I. 202; Kumar Bidyādhara Singh Deo, Nandapur, I. 46; Ep. Ind. xxi, App. Ins. No. 2043.

378 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

As Mahāpadma Nanda and his sons ruled in the fourth century B. C., Khāravela is to be assigned either to the third century B. C., (taking ti-vasa-sata to mean 103)¹ or to the first century B. C. (taking ti-vāsa-sata to mean 300). In neither case could he be regarded as a contemporary of Pushyamitra who ruled from about 187 to 151 B. C.

The Yavana Invasion.

The only undoubted historical events of Pushyamitra's time, besides the coup d' état of c. 187 B. C., and the Vidarbha war, are the Greek invasion from the North-West referred to by Patañjali and Kālidāsa, and the celebration of two horse-sacrifices.

Patañjali is usually regarded as a contemporary of Pushyamitra. Sir R. G. Bhandarkar draws our attention to the passage in the Mahābhāshya—īha Pushyamitraṁ yājayāmah: "here we perform the sacrifices for Pushyamitra"—which is cited as an illustration of the Vārttika teaching the use of the present tense to denote an action which has been begun but not finished.² The instances given by Patañjali of the use of the imperfect to indicate an action well-known to people, but not witnessed by the speaker, and still possible to have been seen by him, are, "arunad Yavanah Śāketam: arunad Yavano Madhyamikām." This, says Sir R. G. Bhandarkar, shows that a certain Yavana or Greek chief had besieged Śāketa or Ayodhyā and another place called Madhyamikā¹ when Patañjali wrote this. It is, however, possible that the instances cited by the great grammarian are stock illustrations (mūrdhābhishikta udāharana) which are simply quoted by him from earlier authorities. But a war with Greeks in the days of Pushyamitra is vouched for by Kālidāsa. In his Mālavikāgnimitram the poet refers to a conflict between prince Vasumitra, grandson and general of Pushyamitra, and a Yavana on the southern (or right) bank of the Sindhu.² Unfortunately the name of the leader of the invaders is not given either in the Mahābhāshya or in the Mālavikāgnimitram. There is considerable divergence of opinion with regard to his identity. But all agree that he was a Bactrian Greek.

1 Konow (Acta Orientalia, Vol. I, pp. 22-26) accepts the date 103, but refers it (along with another date, 113, which he, with Fleet, finds in line 11) to a Jaina era. This era he is inclined to identify with that of Mahāvira's Nirvāṇa. Apparently he is not aware of the existence of another Jaina reckoning, viz., the era of Samprati. Dr K. P. Jayaswal (Ep. Ind., XX. 75) now assigns the date 103 to a Nanda era and says that the date refers to the time when the Tanasuliya Canal, which Khāravela extended to the capital in the 5th year of his reign, was originally excavated.

2 Ind. Ant., 1872, p. 300.

The Bactrian Greeks were originally subjects of the Seleukidan Empire of Syria (and Western Asia). We learn from Strabo, Trogus and Justin that "about the middle of the third century B. C. when the Selenkid rulers were pre-occupied in the west" Diodotos, "Governor of the thousand cities of Bactria" (Balkh region to the south of the Oxus), revolted and assumed the title of king. He was succeeded, according to Justin, by his son Diodotos II who entered into an alliance with Arsakes who about this time (c. 247 B.C.) tore Parthia in Northern Irān from the Seleukidan Empire.

The successor of Diodotos II, was Euthydemos. We learn from Strabo³ that Euthydemos and his party occasioned the revolt of all the country near the province of Bactriana. We are told by Polybius that Antiochos III (223-187 B.C.) of Syria made an attempt to recover the lost provinces but afterwards made peace with Euthydemos.

1 Nāgari near Chitor; cf. Mbh., II. 32.8; Ind. Ant., VII, 267.

2 The Indus or possibly a stream of the same name in Central India (Cf. IHQ, 1925, 215).

3 H. & F.'s Tr., Vol. II. p. 251.

The historian says, "Antiochos the Great received the young prince (Demetrios, son of Euthydemos) and judging from his appearance, conversation and the dignity of his manners that he was worthy of royal honour he first promised to give him one of his daughters,¹ and secondly conceded the royal title to his father. And having on the other points caused a written treaty to be drawn up and the terms of the treaty to be confirmed on oath, he marched away, after liberally provisioning his troops, and accepting the elephants belonging to Euthydemos. He crossed the Caucasus (Hindukush) and descended into India; renewed his friendship with Sophagasenos, the king of the Indians; received more elephants, until he had 150 altogether, having once more provisioned his troops, set out again personally with his army, leaving Androstenes of Cyzicus, the duty of taking home the treasure which this king had agreed to hand over to him."

Not long after the expedition of Antiochos the Great, the Bactrian Greeks themselves formed the design of extending their kingdom by the conquest of the territories lying to the south of the Hindukush. Strabo says, "the Greeks who occasioned its (Bactria's) revolt became so powerful that they became masters of Ariana and India, according to Apollodoros of Artemita.² Their chiefs, particularly Menander (if he really crossed the Hypanis³ to the east and reached Isamus⁴) conquered more nations than Alexander. These conquests

1 Tarn's scepticism (Greeks in Bactria and India, 82, 201) about the marriage is not warranted by cogent evidence. His arguments are in part of a negative character. He seems to prefer his own interpretation of certain coins of Agathokles to the clear testimony of Polybius.

2 Artemita lay to the east of the Tigris. The books of Apollodoros are assigned to a date between C. 130 B.C. and 87 B.C. (Tarn, Greeks, 44 ff);

3 i.e., the Hyphasis or Vipāsā (the Beas).

4 The Trisāmā? In the Bhāgavata Purāṇa (V. 19, 17) a river of this name is mentioned in conjunction with the Kauśiki, Mandākinī, Yamunā, etc.

were achieved partly by Menander, partly by Demetrios, son of Euthydemos, king of the Bactrians. They got possession not only of Patalene (the Indus Delta), but of the kingdoms of Saraostos (Surāshṭra or Kāṭhiāwār), and Sigerdīs (probably Sāgaradvīpa)¹ which constitute the remainder of the coast. Apollodoros in short says that Bactriana is the ornament of all Ariana. They extended their empire even as far as the Seres and Phryni."²

Strabo gives the credit for spreading the Greek dominion furthest to the east into India partly to Menander and partly to Demetrios, son of Euthydemos and son-in-law of Antiochos the Great.

Menander has been identified with the king Milinda who is mentioned in the Milinda-pañho as a contemporary of the Buddhist Thera (Elder) Nāgasena, and also in the Avadāna-kalpalatā of Kshemendra.³ This monarch was born at Kalsigrāma⁴ in the "Island" of Alasanda or Alexandria⁵ and had his capital at Sāgala or Śākala, modern Śiālkoṭ, in the Pañjāb,⁶ and not at Kābul as Dr. Smith seemed to think.⁷ The extent of his conquests is indicated by the great variety and wide diffusion of his coins which have been found over a very wide extent of country as far west as Begram near Kābul and as far east as Mathurā.⁸ The author of the Periplus states

1 Mahābharāta, II. 31. 66, Cutch ?

2 Strabo, Hamilton and Falconer, Vol. II, pp. 252-53. The Chinese and peoples of the Tarim basin are apparently meant.

3 Stūpa avadāna (No. 57) ; Smith, Catalogue of Coins, Indian Museum, p. 3 ; SBE, 36, xvii.

4 Trenckner. Milindapāñho, p. 83.

5 Ibid., p. 82 (CHI, 550). The identity of this "Alexandria" is uncertain. Tarn (p. 141) seems to prefer Alexandria in the Kābul Valley. The Milinda, VI. 21. seems to suggest location on the sea unless a different Alexandria is meant.

6 Milinda, pp. 3, 14.

7 EHI., 1914, p. 225.

8 SBE., Vol. XXXV, p. xx. Tarn, 228.

382 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

that small silver coins, inscribed with Greek characters and bearing the name of Menander were still current in his time (cir. 60-80 A.D.) at the port of Barygaza (Broach). Plutarch tells us that Menander was noted for justice, and enjoyed such popularity with his subjects that upon his death, which took place in camp, diverse cities contended for the possession of his ashes. The statement of Plutarch is important as showing that Menander's dominions included many cities. The recently discovered Bajaur Relic Casket Inscription confirms the numismatic evidence regarding the westward extension of his empire.¹

Demetrios has been identified by some with king Dattāmitra mentioned in the Mahābhārata,² the "great Emetreus, the king of Inde" of Chaucer's Knights Tale and Timitra of a Besnagar seal.³ The wide extent of his conquests is proved by the existence of several cities named after him or his father in Afghanistan as well as India. Thus in the work of Isidor of Charax⁴ we have a reference to a city named Demetriaspolis in Arachosia. The Vyākaraṇa (grammar) of Kramadiśvara mentions a city in Sauvira called Dattāmitri.⁵ Ptolemy the Geographer

1 Ep. Ind. XXIV. 7 ff. The King's name is given as Minadra.

2 I, 139, 23.

3 EHI⁴, p. 255n

4 JRAS., 1915, p. 830. Parthian Stations, 19.

5 Ind. Ant., 1911. Foreign Elements in the Hindu Population; Bomb. Gaz., I. ii. 11, 176, Kramadiśvara, p. 796. The reference is probably to a Demetrias in the lower Indus Valley. Johnston differs from the view (JRAS, April, 1939; IHQ, 1939). We should, however, not ignore the evidence of Mbh. I. 139, verses 21-23 which clearly refer to a Yavanādhipa and Dattāmitra in connection with Sauvira. If Dattāmitra is not Demetrios and Dattāmitri not a city founded by him, it will be interesting to know with whom Dattāmitra and the Yavanādhipa of the epic are proposed to be identified. A Nāsik (Deccan) Inscription (No. 1140 Lüders' List) makes mention of a Yonaka from the north (Otarāha), a native of Dattāmitri. Thus epic and epigraphic evidence together with that of Sanskrit grammarians clearly establishes the connection between the Yonas or Yavanas (Greeks), Dattāmitri and Sauvira.

mentions the city of Euthymedia (? Euthydemia¹) which was identical with Śākala,² and was, according to the Milinda-paṇḥo, the capital of an Indo-Greek kingdom in the time of Menander.

It is permissible to conjecture that one of the two conquering kings, viz., Menander and Demetrios, was identical with the Yavana leader who penetrated to Śāketa in Oudh, Madhyamikā near Chitor, and the river Sindhu possibly in Central India, in the time of Pushyamitra. Goldstücker, Smith and many other scholars identified the invader with Menander who crossed the Hypanis (Beas) and penetrated as far as the Isamus (Trisāmā³?). On the other hand, Dr. Bhandarkar suggested, in his Foreign Elements in the Hindu Population, the identification of the invader with Demetrios. We learn from Polybius that Demetrios was a young man at the time of Antiochos III's invasion (between 211 and 206 B.C.). Justin says that Demetrios was "king of the Indians" when Eukratides was king of the Bactrians and Mithradates was the king of the Parthians. "Almost at the same time that Mithradates ascended the throne among the Parthians, Eukratides began to reign among the Bactrians; both of them being great men...Eukratides carried on several wars with great spirit, and though much reduced by his losses in them, yet, when he was besieged by Demetrios, king of the Indians, with a garrison of only 300 soldiers, he repulsed, by continual sallies, a force of 60,000 enemies".

1 We are hardly justified in rejecting the reading 'Euthyde' (Tarn, p. 486) simply on the ground urged by Tarn (p. 247) which do not appear to be convincing, and accept a reading which is "meaningless and wrongly accentuated". See also Keith in D. R. Bhandarkar Volume, 221f.

2 Ind.-Ant., 1884, pp. 349-50.

3 As already stated, Trisāmā is a river mentioned in the Bhāgāvata Purāṇa. Note the absence of any reference to the Ganges in the account of Menander's conquests.

384 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Dr. Smith assigns Mithradates to the period from 171 to 136 B.C. (to 138/37 B.C. according to Debevoise). Eukratides and Demetrios must also be assigned to that period, that is the middle of the second century B.C.¹

We have seen that Demetrios was a young man and a prince in or about 206 B.C. We now find that he ruled as king of the Indians about the middle of the second century B. C. He was, therefore, the Indo-Greek contemporary of Pushyamitra who ruled from c. 187 to 151 B. C. Menander, on the other hand, must have ruled over the Indo-Greek kingdom much later, as will be apparent from the facts noted below. Justin tells us that Demetrios was deprived of his Indian possessions by Eukratides.² Eukratides was killed by his son with whom he had shared his throne.³ The identity of the parricide is uncertain but no one says that he was Menander.⁴

Justin furnishes the important information that the prince who murdered Eukratides was a colleague of his father. We know that Greek rulers who reigned conjointly sometimes issued joint coins. Thus we have joint coins of Lysias and Antialkidas, Agathokleia and Strato, of Strato I and Strato II, and of Hermaios and Kalliope. The only Greeks whose names and portraits appear on a

1 The activity of Mithradates I began after the death of Antiochus IV in 163 B.C. See Tarn, pp. 197 ff. According to Debevoise, A Political History of Parthia, p. 20 ff. Antiochus IV, Epiphanes, crossed the Euphrates in 165 B.C. Mithradates I died in 138/37 B.C., the first Parthian date fixed by numismatic and cuneiform evidence. Eukratides assumed the title "Great" before 162 B.C. (date of Timarchus) (The Cambridge Shorter History of India, p. 64). His coins are copied by Plato (165 B.C.) as well as Timarchus.

2 Watson's tr., p. 277.

3 Ibid., p. 277.

4 According to Cunningham and Smith the parricide was Apollodotos. But Rapson shows good reasons for believing that Apollodotos did not belong to the family of Eukratides, but was, on the other hand, a ruler of Kāpiśa who was ousted by Eukratides (JRAS. 1905, pp. 784-85). Rawlinson points out (Intercourse between India and the Western World, p. 73) that Apollodotos uses the epithet coin or medallion together with those of Eukratides are Heliokles and his wife Laodike. Cunningham and Gardner suggested that Heliokles and Laodike were the father and mother of Eukratides. But Von Sallet¹ proposed an entirely different interpretation of the coins in question. He thought that they were issued by Eukratides, not in honour of his parents, but on the occasion of the marriage of his son Heliokles with a Laodike whom Von Sallet conjectured to have been daughter of Demetrios by the daughter of Antiochos III. If Von Sallet's conjecture be accepted then it is permissible to think that Heliokles was the colleague of Eukratides referred to by Justin, and the murderer of his father.

It is clear from what has been stated above that Demetrios was succeeded by Eukratides, who, in his turn, was probably followed by Heliokles. Menander could not in that case have reigned earlier than Heliokles. It may, however, be argued that after Demetrios the Indo-Greek kingdom split up into two parts: one part which included the Trans-Jhelum territories was ruled by Eukratides and his son; the other part which included "Euthymedia" (Euthydemia ?) or Śākala was ruled by Menander who thus might have been a younger contemporary of Eukratides (cir. 171-165 B.C.) and consequently of Pushyamitra (cir. 187-151 B.C.).

Now, the disruption of the Indo-Greek kingdom after Demetrios may be accepted as an historical fact. The existence of two rival Greek kingdoms in India and their Philopator, and the title would be somewhat incongruous if he were a parricide. It may be argued that the parricide was Apollodotos Soter and not Apollodotos Philopator, but we should remember that the titles Soter and Philopator sometimes occur on the same coin (Whitehead, Catalogue of Coins, p. 48) and therefore it is impossible to justify the separation of Apollodotos Soter and Apollodotos Philopator as two entities.

¹ Ind. Ant., 1880, p. 256.

mutual dissensions are proved by literary and numismatic evidence. The Purāṇas say:

Bhaviṣhyantiha Yavanā dharmataḥ kāmato'rthataḥ naiva mūrdhābhishiktās te bhaviṣhyanti narādihpāḥ yuga-dosha-durācārā bhaviṣhyanti nṛpās tu te strīnām bāla-vadhenaiḥ hatvā chaiva parasparam.

"There will be Yavanas here by reason of religious feeling or ambition or plunder; they will not be kings solemnly anointed but will follow evil customs by reason of the corruptions of the age. Massacring women and children¹ and killing one another, kings will enjoy the earth at the end of the Kali age."²

The Gārgī Saṁhitā informs us :

Madhyadeśe na sthāsyanti Yavanā yuddha durmadāḥ teshām anyonya sambhāvū (?) bhaviṣhyanti na saṁśayaḥ ātma-chakrotthitān ghoram yuddham parama-dāruṇam.

"The fiercely fighting Greeks will not stay in the Madhyadeśa (Mid-India); there will be a cruel, dreadful war in their own kingdom, caused between themselves."³

Coins bear testimony to struggles between kings of the house of Eukratides and rulers of the family of Euthydemos. But the evidence which we possess clearly indicates that the contemporaries and rivals of Eukratides and Heliokles were Apollodotos, Agathokleia and Strato I, and not Menander. Certain square bronze coins of Eukratides have on the obverse a bust of the king and the legend "Basileus Megalou Eukratidou." On the reverse there is the figure of Zeus and the legend "Kavisiye nagara-devatā." They are often coins of

1 Cf. Cunn. AGI. Revised Ed. 274; Camb. Hist. Ind. 1. 376. "The Macedonians... gave away to a fury of blood-lust, sparing neither woman nor child."

2 Pargiter, Dynasties of the Kali Age, pp. 56, 74.

3 Kern, Bṛihat Saṁhitā, p. 38.

Apollodotos restruck.¹ From this it is clear that Apollodotos was a rival of Eukratides, and was superseded in the rule of Kāpiśa, which lay in the district identified with Kāfiristān and the valleys of Ghorband and Panjshir, by the latter. Rapson further points out² that Heliokles restruck the coins of Agathokleia and Strato I ruling conjointly and also of Strato I reigning alone. Further, the restriking is always by Heliokles, never by Agathokleia and Strato I. From this it is clear that Agathokleia and Strato I ruled over an Indo-Greek principality either before, or in the time of Heliokles, but probably not after him.

We have seen that according to the evidence of Justin and the Kāpiśa coins Eukratides fought against two rivals, namely, Demetrios and Apollodotos; his son Heliokles also fought against two rivals, namely, Agathokleia and Strato I. As Demetrios and Apollodotos were both antagonists of Eukratides and used the same coin-types, the inevitable inference is that they were very near in time as well as in relationship to one another, in fact that one immediately followed the other. Now Demetrios was beyond doubt the son and successor of Euthydemos, consequently Apollodotos must have been his successor.

As Heliokles was in all probability a son of Eukratides, the rival of Apollodotos, he must have been a younger contemporary of Apollodotos. Consequently Heliokles' antagonists, Agathokleia and Strato I, whose coins he restruck, were very near in time to Apollodotos. Strato I later on ruled conjointly with his grandson Strato II. There is no room for the long and prosperous reign of Menander in the period which elapsed from Demetrios to Strato II.

1 Rapson, JRAS, 1905, 785.

2 JRAS, 1905, pp. 165 ff. CHI, 553.

According to the Buddhist tradition recorded in the Milinda-pañho, Milinda or Menander flourished "500 years," i.e., not earlier than the fifth century¹ after the Parinirvāṇa, parinibbānato pañchavassā sate atikkante ete upajjissanti.² This tradition points to a date not earlier than the period 144-44 B.C. according to Ceylonese reckoning, or 86 B.C.-14 A.D. according to Cantonese tradition, for Menander. Thus both according to numismatic evidence and literary tradition Menander could not have been the Indo-Greek contemporary of Pushyamitra. It is Demetrios who should, therefore, be identified with the Yavana invader referred to by Patañjali and Kālidāsa, one of whose armies was defeated by Prince Vasumitra.³

The Aśvamedha Sacrifices.

After the victorious wars with Vidarbha (Berar) and the Yavanas Pushyamitra completed the performance of two horse-sacrifices. These sacrifices are regarded by some scholars as marking an early stage in the Brāhmaṇical reaction which was fully developed five centuries later in the time of Samudra Gupta and his successors.

1 Cf. the interpretation of somewhat similar chronological data by Franke and Fleet (JRAS, 1914, 400-1); and Smith EHI, 3rd edition, 328.

2 Trenckner, the Milinda-pañho, p. 3. Tarn is not quite right in saying (134 n) that Apollodorus makes Menander contemporary with Demetrios, Trogu with Apollodotos, and some coin indications (CHI, 551) with Eukratides. Strabo following Apollodorus and possibly other authorities simply says that extensive Bactrian conquests in the Indian interior were achieved partly by Menander and partly by Demetrios. It is nowhere clearly stated that the two conquerors were contemporaries. The book of Trogu on which another conclusion is based, is lost. Coin indications are not clear enough. E.g. the imitation of certain coins of Demetrios by Maues does not prove chronological proximity.

3 S. Konow (Acta Orientalia, 1. 35) points out that there is no evidence that Menander transgressed the river Yamunā, and that Demetrios was the ruler who besieged Sāketa and Madhyamikā. In IHQ, 1929, p. 403, Mr. R. P. Chanda regards Strabo's attribution of the Indian conquests to Demetrios as doubtful. But the cities in the Pañjāb and the Lower Indus Valley named after Demetrios and possibly his father leave no room for doubt that Strabo is right.

Buddhist writers are alleged to represent Pushyamitra as a cruel persecutor of the religion of Śākyamuni. But the probative value of the Divyāvadāna, on which some modern writers place their chief reliance in regard to the matter, is seriously impaired by the representation of the "persecuting" monarch as a Maurya, a descendant of Aśoka himself.¹ Moreover, the prime motive which is said to have inclined the king to a vicious policy is, according to this Buddhist work, personal glory and not religious fanaticism. Pushyamitra did not dispense with the services of pro-Buddhist ministers, and the court of his son was graced by Paṇḍita-Kauśikī.² The *Mahāvamsa*³ admits the presence, in Bihar, Oudh, Malwa and adjacent provinces, of numerous monasteries with thousands of monks in the age of Duṭṭhagāmaṇi of Ceylon (C. 101-77 B.C.) which is partly synchronous with the Baimbika-Śuṅga period. The Buddhist monuments at Bhārhut erected "during the sovereignty of the Śuṅgas" do not also bear out the theory that the Śuṅgas, among whom Pushyamitra is included by the Purāṇas, were the leaders of a militant Brāhmaṇism. Though staunch adherents of orthodox Hinduism, kings of the line of Pushyamitra do not appear to have been as intolerant as some writers represent them to be.

The Mantri-parishad in the days of Pushyamitra.

Patañjali refers to the Sabhā of Pushyamitra. But it is uncertain as to whether the term refers to a Royal Durbar, a tribunal of justice, or a Council of Magnates. The existence of Councils or Assemblies of Ministers (Mantri-Parishad) is, however, vouched for by Kālidāsa. If the poet is to be believed the Council continued to be an important element of the governmental machinery. He gives us the important information that even viceregal princes were assisted by Parishads.¹ The Mālavikāgnimītram refers in clear terms to the dealings of Prince Agnimitra, the Viceroy of Vidiśā (in Eastern Mālwa), with his Parishad :

1 IHQ, vol. V. p. 397; Divyāvadāna, 433-34.

2 Mālavikāgnimitram, Act I

3 Geiger, trans. p. 193.

“Deva evam Amātya-parishado vijñāpayāmi”²

“Mantri-prishado’ pyetaḍ-eva darśanam

Dvidhā vibhaktāṁ śrīyam-udvahanau dhuraṇi rathāśvāviva saṁgrahituh tau sthāsyatas-te nripater nideśe paraspar-āvagraha-nirvikārau³

Rājā : tena hi Mantri-parishadāṁ brūhi senānye Vira-senāya likhyatām evaṁ kriyatām iti.”⁴

It seems that the Amātya-parishad or Mantri-parishad was duly consulted whenever an important matter of foreign policy had to be decided upon.

1 Bühler (Ep. Ind. III, 137) points out that Aśoka's Kumāras were also each assisted by a body of Mahāmātras. These may have corresponded to the Kumārāmātyas of the Gupta period.

2 “King ! I will announce this decision to the Council of Ministers.”

3 “This is also the view of the (Council of Ministers). Those two kings, upbearing the fortune of their superior lord divided between them, as the horses upbear the yoke of the charioteer, will remain firm in their allegiance to thee, not being distracted by mutual attacks.” Act V, verse 14,

4 “King : Tell the Council then to send to the General Virasena written instructions to this effect.” (Tawney, Mālavikāgnimitra, pp. 89-90.)

SECTION II. AGNIMITRA AND HIS SUCCESSORS.

Pushyamitra died in or about 151 B.C., probably after a reign of 36 years,¹ and was succeeded by his son Agnimitra.² The name of a prince named Agnimitra has been found on several copper coins discovered in Rohilkhand. Cunningham³ was of opinion that this prince was probably not to be identified with the son of Pushyamitra, but belonged to a local dynasty of North Pañchāla (Rohilkhand). He gave two reasons for this conclusion :

1. Agnimitra's is the only coin-name found in the Purāṇic lists. The names of the other "Mitra" kings occurring on coins of the so-called "Pañchāla series," do not agree with those found in the Purāṇas.

2. The coins are very rarely found beyond the limits of North Pañchāla.

As to the first point Rivett-Carnac⁴ and Jayaswal⁵ have shown that several coin-names besides that of Agnimitra can be identified with those found in the 1 Only thirty years according to a Jaina tradition—"atthasayam Muriyāṇaṇi tisa chchia Pūsamittassa" (IA. 1914. 118 f. Merutuṅga).

2. The commentary on the Amarakośa seems to suggest that Agnimitra is the original of king Śūdraka of tradition (Oka, p. 122 ; Ann. Bhand. Or. Res. Inst., 1931, 360). On the other hand Keith refers to a tradition recorded in the Vira charita and by the younger Rājasekhara which represents Śūdraka as a minister of a Śātavāhana king. We are further told by another writer that Śūdraka defeated prince Svāti and ruled for a long time. A tale alluded to in the Harsha-charita represents him as an enemy of Chandraketu, lord of Chakora, apparently in South India (Keith, The Sanskrit Drama, p. 129 ; Sanskrit Literature, p. 292 ; Ghosh, History of Central and Western India, pp. 141 f.) The story of Śūdraka is essentially legendary and it is difficult to extract any historical truth out of it. The abeyance of Śātavāhana power in the Upper Deccan for a long period is a fact. But it is due to the irruption of foreign tribes from the north. Disloyal ministers may have helped to bring in the invader.

3 Coins of Ancient India, p. 79. Cf. Allan, CICAI., p. cxx.

4 JASB, 1880, 21 ff ; 87 ff ; Ind. Ant., 1880, 311.

5 JBORS, 1917, p. 479. Cf. 1934, pp. 7 ff.

Purāṇic lists of Śuṅga and Kāṇva kings; for example, Bhadra-ghosha may be identified with Ghosha, the seventh king of the Purāṇic list of Śuṅga kings. Bhūmimitra may be identified with the Kāṇva king of that name. Jethamitra, who is identified with the successor of Agnimitra, viz Vasu-Jyeshṭha or Su-Jyeshṭha, who is called simply Jyeshṭha in the ḷ Vishṇu manuscript,¹ no doubt left coins that belong to a different series. But even he is closely connected with an Agnimitra. Several names indeed cannot be identified, but they may have been names of those Śuṅgas who survived the usurpation of Vasudeva Kāṇva and the remnant of whose power was destroyed by the so-called Andhras and Śiśunandī.²

As to the second point we should remember that "Mitra" coins, even those which undoubtedly belong to the so-called Pañchāla series, have been found in Oudh, the Basti district, and even Pāṭaliputra, as well as in Pañchāla. Names of two "Mitra" kings, Brahmamitra and Indramitra, of whom the latter undoubtedly belonged to the Pañchāla group, are found engraved on two rail pillars at Bodh Gayā as well as on coins discovered at Mathurā, Pañchāla and Kumrahar.³ In the face of these facts it is difficult to say that the "Mitras" in question were a local dynasty of North Pañchāla.

¹ Dynasties of the Kali Age, p. 31, n. 12. Cf. Allan, CICAI., p. xcvi.

² Dynasties of the Kali Age. p. 49.

³ Cunningham, Coins of Ancient India, pp. 84, 88; Allan, CICAI., pp. cxix, cxx; Marshall, Archaeological Survey Report for 1907-8, p. 40; Bloch ASR, 1908-9, p. 147; IHQ, 1930, pp 1 ff. The name Im.....tra occurs in a mutilated inscription on a rail pillar at Bodh Gayā with the title Rājā added before it. Marshall, Bloch and Rapson agree in identifying king Im.....tra with Indramitra of coins. Bloch further identifies him with Kauśikīputra Indrāgnimitra, husband of Āryā Kuraṅgī, whose name occurs on certain pieces of copper. The epithet Kauśikīputra reminds one of Paṇḍita-Kauśikī of the Mālavikāgnimitram (Act 1). The Kuśika family was apparently intimately associated with the rulers of the age. Kauśikī mentioned in the Mālavikāgnimitram was sister to the minister of a prince of Berar. The sister of the prince himself was one of the queens of Agnimitra's successor, as we have already seen, was Jyeshṭha (of the k Vishnu manuscript), who is very probably identical with Jethamitra of the coins.¹

The next king Vasumitra was a son of Agnimitra. During the life-time of his grandfather he had led the imperial army against the Yavanas and defeated them on the Sindhu (possibly in Central India) which probably formed the boundary between the empire of Pushyamitra and the Indo-Greek territories in Malwa.

Vasumitra's successor is called Bhadraka in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, Ādraka and Odraka in the Vishnu, Āndhraka in the Vāyu, and Antaka in the Matsya Purāṇa. Jayaswal identified him with Udāka, a name occurring in a Pabhosā inscription. The epigraph has been translated thus: "By Āsāḍhasena, the son of Gopāli Vaihidari and maternal uncle of king Bahasatimitra, son of Gopāli, a cave was caused to be made in the tenth year of Udāka for the use of the Kassapiya Arhats." We learn from another Pabhosā inscription that Āsāḍhasena belonged to the royal family of Adhichhatrā (Alichhatrā), the capital of North Pañchāla. Jayaswal maintained that Odraka (identified with Udāka) was the paramount Śuṅga sovereign, while the family of Āsāḍhasena was either gubernatorial or feudatory to the Magadha throne. Marshall,² on the other hand, identified the fifth Śuṅga with king Kāsiputra.³ Bhāgabhadra mentioned in a Garuḍa Pillar Inscription found in the old city of Vidiśā, now Besnagar. Jayaswal identified Bhāgabhadra with Bhāga Śuṅga, i.e., Bhāgavata Agnimitra. King Brahmamitra is the husband of Nāgadevī, another prominent donor mentioned in the epigraphs.

1 Coins of Ancient India, p. 74. Allan, CICAI, xcvi. Note the connection of Jethamitra with Agnimitra. The name of a Jyeshṭhamitra is said to occur also in a Brāhmī inscription on certain stone fragments recently discovered at Kosam (Amrita Bazar Patrika, July 11, 1936, p. 5).

2 A Guide to Sāñchī, p. 11 n.

3 Sircar suggests Kautsiputra.

of the Purāṇas. This theory has to be given up in view of the discovery of another Besnagar Garuḍa Pillar Inscription (of the twelfth year after the installation of Mahārāja Bhāgavata) which proves that there was at Vidiśā a king named Bhāgavata apart from king Kāsiputra Bhāgabhadra. In the absence of clear evidence connecting "Udāka" with Vidiśā it cannot be confidently asserted that he belonged to the house of Agnimitra and Bhāgavata. The view of Marshall seems to be more probable.¹

It appears that the successors of Agnimitra at Vidiśā cultivated friendly relations with the Greek sovereigns of the Western Pañjāb. The policy of the Bactrian Greeks in this respect resembled that of their Seleukidan predecessors. Seleukos, we know, first tried to conquer the Magadha Empire, but, frustrated in his attempts, thought it prudent to make friends with the Mauryas. The Bactrians, too, after the reverses they sustained at the hands of Pushyamitra's general, and weakened moreover by internal dissensions, apparently gave up, for a time at least, their hostile attitude towards the imperial power in the Ganges valley. We learn from the Besnagar Inscription of the reign of Bhāgabhadra that Heliodora (Heliodoros), the son of Diya (Dion), a native of Taxila, came as an ambassador from Mahārāja Antialikita (Antialkidas) to Rājā Kāsiputra Bhāgabhadra the Saviour (Trātāra) who was prospering in the fourteenth year of his reign. The ambassador, though a Greek, professed the Bhāgavata religion and set up a Garuḍa-dhvaja in honour of Vāsudeva (Kṛishṇa), the god of gods.

1 Dr. Barua points out (IHQ, 1930, 23) that "in the absence of the word rājā preceding Udākasa, it is difficult to say at once whether Udāka is the personal name of a king or the local name of the place where the cave was excavated."

He was apparently well-versed in the *Mahābhārata*¹ which he might have heard recited in his native city of Taxila.

Nothing in particular is known regarding the three immediate successors of Bhadraka. The ninth king Bhāgavata had a long reign which extended over 32 years. Dr. Bhandarkar identifies him with the Mahārāja Bhāgavata mentioned in one of the Besnagar Inscriptions referred to above. Bhāgavata's successor Devabhūti or Devabhūmi was a young and dissolute prince. The Purāṇas state that he was overthrown after a reign of 10 years by his Amātya or minister Vasudeva. Bāṇa in his Harshacharita says that the over-libidinous Śuṅga was bereft of his life by his Amātya Vasudeva with the help of a daughter of Devabhūti's slave woman (Dāsī), disguised as his queen. Bāṇa's statement does not necessarily imply that Devabhūti was identical with the murdered Śuṅga. His statement may be construed to mean that Vasudeva entered into a conspiracy with the emissaries of Devabhūti to bring about the downfall of the reigning Śuṅga (Bhāgavata), and to raise Devabhūti to the throne. But in view of the unanimous testimony of the Purāṇas this interpretation of the statement of Bāṇa cannot be upheld.

The Śuṅga power was not altogether extinguished after the tragic end of Devabhūti. It probably survived in Central India² till the rise of the so-called Andhras, Andhrabhṛityas or Śātavāhanas who "swept away the remains of the Śuṅga power" and probably appointed

1 The three immortal precepts, lit. steps to immortality, dama, chāga and apramāda, self-control, self-denial and watchfulness, mentioned in the second part of Heliodora's inscription, occur in the Mahābhārata (V. 43. 22; XI. 7. 23: Damas-tyāgo' pramādaścha te trayo Brahmano hayāḥ. Cf. also Gītā, XVI. 1.2). See JASB, 1922, No. 19, pp. 269-271; ASI, 1908-1909, p. 126; JRAS, 1909, 1055, 1087f, 1093f; 1910, 815; 1914, 1031f; IHQ. 1932, 610; Annals of the Bhandarkar Institute, 1918-19, p. 59.

2 Cf. Dynasties of the Kali Age, p. 49.

Śiśunandī¹ to govern the Vidiśā region. Śiśunandī's younger brother had a grandson (dauhitra) named Śiśuka who became the ruler of Purikā.²

1 Ibid., 49.

2 For the location of Purikā see JRAS, 1910, 446 ; cf. Ep. Ind., xxvi, 151.

SECTION III. IMPORTANCE OF THE BAIMBIKA-ŚUNGA PERIOD OF INDIAN HISTORY.

The rule of the emperors of the house of Pushyamitra marks an important epoch in the history of India in general and of Central India in particular. The renewed incursions of the Yavanas, which once threatened to submerge the whole of the Madhyadeśa, received a check, and the Greek dynasts of the borderland reverted to the prudent policy of their Seleukidan precursors. There was an outburst of activity in the domains of religion, literature and art, comparable to that of the glorious epoch of the Guptas. In the history of these activities the names of three Central Indian localities stand pre-eminent: Vidiśā (Besnagar), Gonarda and Bhārbut. As Foucher points out "it was the ivory-workers of Vidiśā who carved, in the immediate vicinity of their town, one of the monumental gates of Sāñchi." Inscriptions at Vidiśā (and Ghosundī) testify to the growing importance and wide prevalence of the Bhāgavata religion. Though no Aśoka arose to champion this faith, the missionary propaganda of its votaries must have been effective even in the realms of Yavana princes, and a Yāvāna dūta or ambassador was one of its most notable converts. Gonarda¹ was the traditional birth-place of the celebrated Patañjali, the greatest literary genius of the period. Bhārbut saw the construction of the famous railing which has made the sovereignty of the Śuṅgas (Suganam raja) immortal.

1 See IHQ. 1926, 267. According to the Sutta Nipāta Gonarda stood midway between Ujjain and Besnagar (Vidiśā)—Carm. Lec. 1918, 4; Journal of the Andhra Historical Research Society, Jan., 1935, pp. 1 ff. (Sircar's trans. of S. Lévi's note on Gonarda).

CHAPTER VII. THE FALL OF THE MAGADHAN AND INDO-GREEK POWERS.

SECTION I. THE KĀNVA, THE LATER ŚUNGA AND THE LATER MITRAS.

Vasudeva at whose instance the "over-libidinous Śunga" was "reft of his life" founded about 75 B.C. a new line of kings known as the Kāṇva or Kāṇvāyana dynasty. The Purāṇas give the following account of this family. "He (Vasudeva), the Kāṇvāyana, will be king 9 years. His son Bhūmimitra will reign 14 years. His son Nārāyaṇa will reign 12 years. His son Suśarman will reign 10 years. These are remembered as the Śunga-bhṛitya Kāṇvāyana kings. These four Kāṇva Brāhmaṇas will enjoy the earth.¹ They will be righteous. In succession to them the "earth" will pass to the Andhras." Bhūmimitra may have been identical with the king of that name known from coins.²

1 Possibly only Eastern Mālwa where stood the later "Śunga" capital Vidiśa or Besnagar, and some adjoining tracts.

2 Mr. J. C. Ghosh is inclined to include among the Kāṇva kings a ruler named Sarvatāta who is known (from the Ghosunḍī Inscription, Ind. Ant. 1932, Nov., 203 ff; Ep. Ind., xxii, 198 ff.) to have been a devotee of Saṃkarṣaṇa and Vasudeva and a performer of the horse-sacrifice. But the identification of the Gājāyana family, to which the king belonged, with the Gādāyanas or Godāyanas (cf. IHQ, 1933, 797 ff) does not seem to be plausible. There seems to be no more reason to identify the Gājāyanas with the Gādāyanas than with the Gāhāyanas or Gāṅgāyanas of the Śunaka or Kaśyapa group (Caland, Bauddh. Śrauta Sūtra, III, 423-454). It is important to remember the fact that the Harivaṃśa refers to a Kaśyapa dvija as the reviver of the Aśvamedha in the Kali Age. The Gāṅgāyanas no doubt also recall the Gaṅgas of Mysore who claimed to belong to the Kāṇvāyana gotra (A New History of the Indian People, Vol. VI, p 248). But the equation Gājāyana = Gāṅgāyana is not proved.

The chronology of the Kāṇva dynasty is a matter of controversy. In his Early History of the Deccan, Sir R. G. Bhandarkar observes, "the founder of the Andhra-bhṛityas is said to have uprooted not only the Kāṇvas, but 'whatever was left of the power of the Śuṅgas.' And the Kāṇvas are pointedly spoken of as Śuṅga-bhṛityas or servants of the Śuṅgas. It, therefore, appears likely that when the princes of the Śuṅga family became weak, the Kāṇvas usurped the whole power and ruled like the Peshwas in modern times, not uprooting the dynasty of their masters but reducing them to the character of nominal sovereigns. Thus then these dynasties reigned contemporaneously, and hence the 112 years that tradition assigns to the Śuṅgas include the 45 assigned to the Kāṇvas."

Now, the Purāṇic evidence only proves that certain princes belonging to the Śuṅga stock continued to rule till the so-called "Andhra-bhṛitya" conquest and were the contemporaries of the Kāṇvas. But there is nothing to show that these rois faineants of the Śuṅga stock were identical with any of the ten "Śuṅga" kings mentioned by name in the Purāṇic lists, who reigned 112 years. On the contrary, the distinct testimony of the Purāṇas that Devabhūti, the tenth and last "Śuṅga" of the Purāṇic lists, was the person slain by Vasudeva, the first Kāṇva, probably shows that the rois faineants, who ruled contemporaneously with Vasudeva and his successors, were later than Devabhūti, and were not considered to be important enough to be mentioned by name. Consequently the 112 years that tradition assigns to the ten "Śuṅga" kings from Pushyamitra to Devabhūti do not include the 45 assigned to the Kāṇvas. It is, therefore, not unreasonable to accept with slight modifications the views of Dr. Smith regarding the date of the family. According to the system of chronology adopted in these pages, the period of Kāṇva rule extended from cir. B.C. 75 to cir. B.C. 30.

Very little is known about the history of Magadha proper after the Kāṇvas. To reconstruct the history of the province from the fall of the Kāṇvas to the rise of the Gupta dynasty is a difficult task. The so-called Andhras or Śātavāhanas who are represented as destroying the Kāṇva sovereignty, apparently in Eastern Mālwa, do not appear to have ruled in Magadha proper.¹ The greatest among them are called 'Sovereigns of the Deccan' (Dakṣiṇāpathapati) and an accurate idea of the field of their political and military activities may be obtained from the epithets 'trisaṃuda-toyapītāvāhana,' 'whose chargers had drunk the water of the three oceans,' and 'trisaṃudrādhipati,' 'overlord of the three seas' occurring in epigraphic and literary records. The sway of rulers like the Guptas, on the other hand, is said to have extended as far as the four seas.

The discovery of a clay seal with the legend *Mokhalīṇam*² suggests that at one time the Gayā region was under the sway of Maukharī chiefs. But the precise date of the record is not known. Equally uncertain is the date of Mahārūjā Trikanala who ruled in the same

1 There is no valid reason for connecting the Nūruvar Kannar (Silappadikaram, xxvi, Dikshitar's trans. 299 f.) either with the Śātakarṇis or with Magadha. The expression "Kannar" sometimes stands alone proving that Nūruvar is only a qualifying adjective, not a part of the name. The Ganges, even if it be the Bhāgirathī, and not Gautamī Gaṅgā or the Godāvarī, with which the family is associated, flows through other territories besides Magadha, showing that there is no necessary connection between that province and the kings in question.

2 Fleet, CII, 14. The legend is written in Mauryan Brāhmī. The Maukharis in question may have exercised sway over some little principality under the suzerainty of the Mauryas or the Śuṅgas. Three inscriptions have recently been discovered at Baḍvā in the Kotah State in Rājputāna recording the erection of sacrificial pillars by Maukharī Mahāsenāpatis (generals or military governors) in the third century A. D. (Ep. Ind. XXIII, 52).

region in the year 64 of an unspecified era. Epigraphic evidence of a late date points to some connection between the Lichchhavis and Pushpapura (Pāṭaliputra). But it is difficult to say how far the tradition is genuine. The only rulers of note in the centuries immediately preceding the Christian era, whom we know from epigraphic evidence to have ruled in Magadha and the neighbouring provinces, are the so-called ‘Mitras’. The prevalence of ‘Mitra’ rule is also hinted at by references in Jaina literature to Balamitra and Bhānumitra among the successors of Pushyamitra. From a study of available epigraphs Dr. Barua has compiled a list of ‘Mitra kings’. It includes the names of Brihatsvātinimitra, Indrāgnimitra, Brahmamitra, Brihaspatimitra, (Dhar)mamitra and Vishṇumitra. To these should perhaps be added the names of Varuṇamitra and Gomitra.¹ Of these only Indrāgnimitra, Brahmamitra and possibly Brihaspatimitra are definitely associated with Magadha in addition to other territories. The rest are connected with Kauśāmbī and Mathurā.

It is not known in what relationship most of these “Mitra” kings stood to one another or to the celebrated families of the Śuṅgas and the Kāṇvas.

In Pāṭaliputra as well as in Mathurā the “Mitras” seem to have been replaced eventually by the Scythian ‘Murundas’ and Satraps who, in their turn, were supplanted by the Nāgas and the Guptas. Some scholars place

¹ Allan refers to kings Brahmamitra, Dridhamitra, Suryamitra and Vishṇumitra who issued coins identical in type with those of Gomitra. They were followed by rulers whose names ended in—datta, —bhūti and —ghosha.

402 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

immediately before the Guptas a family called Kota which may have ruled in Pāṭaliputra.¹

1 For statements in this section see Ep. Ind. VIII, 60ff; Harshacharita VIII, (p. 251); Cunn., Mahābodhi; ASI., 1908-9, 141; IHQ 1926, 441; 1929, 398, 595f; 1930, 1 ff. 1933, 419; Kielhorn, N. I. Inscriptions. No. 541; Indian Culture, I, 695; EHI. 3rd ed. 227n; JRAS., 1912, 122; Smith, Catalogue of Coins in the Indian Museum, 185, 190, 194; Allan, CICA. pp. xcvi-xcviii, cx, 150 ff, 169 ff, 173 ff, 195 ff, 202 ff.

SECTION II. THE ŚĀTAVĀHANAS AND THE CHETAS.

While the Śuṅgas and Kāṇvas were engaged in their petty feuds, new powers were rising in trans-Vindhyan India. These were the Śātavāhana¹ (the so-called Andhra or Andhra-bhṛitya²) kingdom of Dakṣiṇāpatha and the Cheta or Cheti kingdom of Kalinga.

The founder of the Śātavāhana dynasty was Simuka whose name is misspelt as Śisuka, Sindhuka and Śipraka in the Purāṇas. Those works state that the "Andhra" Simuka will assail the Kāṇvāyanas and Suśarman, and destroy the remains of the Śuṅgas' power and will obtain this "earth". If this statement be true then it cannot be denied that Simuka was for some years a contemporary of Suśarman (40-30 B.C.) and flourished in the first century B.C. Rapson, Smith and many other scholars, however, reject the unanimous testimony of the Purāṇas. They attach more importance to a statement about which there is not the same unanimity, that the "Andhras" ruled for four centuries and a half. Accordingly they place Simuka towards the close of the third century B.C., and say that the dynasty came to an end in the third century A.D.

A discussion of Simuka's date involves the consideration of the following questions :—

1 The form Sātivāhana is found in the Bhāgalpur Grant of Nārāyaṇapāla and the form Śālivāhana in literature. See also Sir R. G. Bhandarkar, EHD, Section VII.

2 The designation 'Andhra-jātiya' or 'Andhra' is found in the Purāṇas which represent the founder as a bhṛitya or servant of the last Kāṇva king. Sir R. G. Bhandarkar, following apparently the Vishṇu Purāṇa, styles the dynasty founded by Simuka Andhra-bhṛitya, i.e., Andhras who were once

1. What is the age of the script of the Nānāghāt record of Nāyanikā, daughter-in-law of Simuka (or of his brother and successor, Krishṇa)?

2. What is the actual date of Khāravela's Hāthigumphā Inscription which refers to a Śātakarṇi, who was apparently a successor of Simuka?

3. What is the exact number of the so-called Andhra kings and what is the duration of their rule?

As to the first point we should note that according to Mr. R. P. Chanda the inscription of Nāyanikā is later than the Besnagar Inscription of Bhāgavata, possibly the penultimate king of the "line" of Pushyamitra mentioned in the Purāṇas.¹ Consequently Simuka servants. But that designation should properly be applied to the seven Abhiras who are mentioned as the successors of the line of Simuka on page 45 of Pargiter's Dynasties of the Kali Age (cf. Vishnu, P. IV. 24. 13).

1 MASI., No. 1, pp. 14-15. In IHQ, 1929 (p. 601) Mr. Chanda points to the agreement of the Nānāghāt script with the Besnagar Inscription of the time of Antialkidas. But the exact date of Antialkidas is uncertain. He may have belonged to the latter half of the second century B.C. or the first half of the next century.

Mr. R. D. Banerji, while disagreeing with the views of Mr. Chanda in regard to certain points, admits, after a detailed examination of certain epigraphs, that "the Nānāghāt inscriptions show the use of a very large number of Kṣatrapa or early Kuṣāṇa forms side by side with older ones" (Mem. Asiat. Soc. Bengal, Vol. XI, No. 3, p. 145). According to Rapson (Andhra Coins, lxxvii) the form of the akshara-'da' found in the Nānāghāt record resembles that of a coin-legend which is assignable to the first or second century B.C.

It is not suggested that either Banerji or Rapson placed the Nānāghāt record in the first century B.C. But some of the facts they have placed before us do not preclude the possibility of a date in the first century B.C. The theory that the record belongs to the second century B.C. rests in some measure on the assumption tacitly accepted by the older generation of scholars that Khāravela's thirteenth year corresponds to the year 165 of the time of the Maurya kings (Bühler, Indian Palaeography, 39; Rapson xvii).

may be placed in the Kāṇva period, i.e., in the first century B. C.—a date which accords with Purāṇic evidence.¹

As to the second point Mr. R. D. Banerji gives good grounds for believing that the expression Ti-vasa-sata occurring in the passage "Pañchame che dāni vase Nāṇdarāja ti-vasa-sata....." of the Hāthigumphā Inscription means not 103 but 300.² This was also the view of Mr. Chanda and, at one time, of Dr. Jayaswal.³

1 Bühler also observes (ASWI., Vol. V, 65) that the characters of the Nānāghaṭ inscriptions belong to a period anterior by about 100 years to that of the edicts of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi and his son Pulumāyi. Scholars who place the Nānāghaṭ record in the first half of the second century B.C., and the epigraphs of the time of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi in the second century A.D., will have to account for the paucity of Śātavāhana records during a period of about three hundred years (if that be the actual length of the interval between the age of the husband of Nāganikā and the reign of the son of Balaśrī). Mr. N. G. Majumdar (The Monuments of Sāñchī, Vol. I, pt. iv, p. 277) places the Nānāghaṭ record during the period 100-75 B.C.

2 JBORS., 1917, 495-497.

3 JBORS., 1917, 432; cf. 1918, 377, 385. The older view was changed in 1927, 238, 244. According to the usually accepted interpretation of a passage in the Hāthigumphā record Khāravela, in his fifth year, extended an aqueduct that had not been used for "ti-vasa-sata" since Nandarāja. If "ti-vasa-sata" is taken to mean 103 years, Khāravela's accession must be placed 103-5=98 years after Nandarāja. His elevation to the position of Yuvarāja took place 9 years before that date, i.e., 98-9=89 years after Nandarāja (i.e., not later than 324 B.C.—89=235 B.C.). Khāravela's father was apparently on the throne at that time, and he seems to have been preceded by his father. But we learn from Aśoka's inscriptions that Kālīṅga was actually governed at that time by a Maurya Kumāra under the suzerainty of Aśoka himself. Therefore "ti-vasa-sata" should be taken to mean 300, and not 103 years. The figure 'three hundred' (a round number) is in substantial agreement with the Purāṇic tradition about the interval between the Nandas and Śātakarṇi I, 137 (period of the Mauryas) + 112 (of the Śuṅgas) + 45 (of the Kāṇvas) + 23 (of Simuka) + 10 (of Kṛishṇa) = 327.

If Ti-vasa-sata means 300, Khāravela and his contemporary Śātakarṇi may have flourished 300 years after Nandarāja, i.e., in or about 24 B. C. This agrees with the Purāṇic evidence according to which Śātakarṇi's father (or uncle) Simuka assailed the last Kāṇva king Suśarman (c. 40-30 B. C.).¹

We now come to the third point, viz., the determination of the exact number of Śātavāhana kings, and the duration of their rule.

Regarding each of these matters we have got in the Purāṇas quite a number of different traditions. As to the first the Matsya Purāṇa says—

“Ekona-vimśatir² hyete Andhrā bhokshyanti vai mahim,” but it gives thirty names.³

The Vāyu Purāṇa, with the exception of the ‘M’ manuscript, says—

“Ityete vai nripās trimśad Andhrā bhokshyanti ye mahim”, (these thirty Andhras will enjoy the earth); but most of the Vāyu manuscripts name only seventeen, eighteen, or nineteen kings.

As to the duration of the Andhra rule several Matsya manuscripts assign to them a period of 460 years.

“Teshām varsha śatāni syuś chatvāri shastir eva cha.”

Another Matsya manuscript puts it slightly differently :—

“Dvādaśādhikam eteshām rājyaṁ śata-chatuṣṭayam” i.e. the period of their sovereignty is 412 years;

1 Simuka may have ascended the throne (in the Deccan) several years before the date 40-30 B.C. when he assailed the Kāṇvāyanas, possibly in Central India. The period of his rule after the defeat of the Kāṇvas may have been less than 23 years. Thus the actual interval between the Nandas and Śātakarṇi may well have been a little less than 327 years.

2 Variant ekona-navatim (DKA, 43).

3 Fargiter points (p. 36) out that 3 Matsya Mss. name 30, and the others vary the number from 28 to 21.

while the reigns of kings mentioned in certain Vāyu Mss. amount, according to Sir R. G. Bhandarkar, to only 272 years and a half.

Obviously according to one tradition there were about seventeen, eighteen or nineteen kings, whose rule lasted some three centuries, while according to another tradition there were thirty kings the length of whose reigns covered a period of more than 400 years. In the opinion of Sir R. G. Bhandarkar the longer list includes the names of princes belonging to all the branches of the so-called Andhra-bhṛitya dynasty, and that the longer period represents the total duration of all the princes belonging to the several branches. The period of about three centuries, and the seventeen, eighteen or nineteen names given in the Vāyu Purāṇa, and hinted at in the Matsya, refer to the main branch. That there were several families of Śātavāhanas or Śātakārṇis, distinct from the main line that had its principal seat in the upper Valley of the Godāvarī, cannot be denied. The Kāvya Mīmāṃsā of Rājasekhara and several other works as well as epigraphs in the Kanarese country and elsewhere testify to the existence of Śātavāhanas and Śātakārṇis who ruled over Kuntala¹ (the Kanarese districts) before the Kadambas. The fullest Matsya list includes a group of kings (Nos. 10-14), including one named "Kuntala" Śātakārṇi, who are (generally speaking) passed over in silence by the Vāyu.² Skandāsvāti, No. 11 of the full list, reminds one of Skandānāga-Śātaka, a prince of a Kanarese line of Śātakārṇis

1 A Śātavāhana of Kuntala is referred to by the Kāvya-Mīmāṃsā (1934, ch. X, p. 50) as having ordered the exclusive use of Prākṛit in his harem. He may have been identical with the famous king Hāla (cf. Kuntala-janavaya-īcena Hālena, ibid., Notes, p. 197).

2 Even Hāla (No. 17) is omitted in the Vāyu Ms. (DKA, p. 36) and the Brahmāṇḍa P. (Rapson, Andhra Coins, lxvii).

mentioned in a Kanheri inscription.¹ As to Kuntala Śātakarṇi (No. 13), the commentary on Vātsyāyana's Kāmasūtra takes the word "Kuntala" in the name Kuntala Śātakarṇi Śātavāhana to mean "Kuntala-vishaye jātatvāt tat-samākhyah."² It is, therefore, fair to conclude that the Matsya MSS. which mention 30 Śātavāhana kings include not only the main group of kings but also those who were closely associated with Kuntala.

On the other hand, the Vāyu, Brahmāṇḍa and certain Matsya MSS., generally speaking, show a tendency to omit the Śātavāhanas of Kuntala and the rulers of the period of Śaka revival under Rudra-dāman I, and mention only about 19 kings most of whom belonged to the main line whose rule may have lasted for about three centuries. If the main line of Śātavāhana kings consisted only of about nineteen princes, and if the duration of their rule be approximately three centuries, there is no difficulty in accepting the Purāṇic statement that Simuka flourished in the time of the later Kāṇvas, that is to say, in the first century B.C., and that his dynasty ceased to rule in the Northern Deccan in the third century A.D. The sovereignty of the Śātavāhanas and Śātakarṇis of Kuntala lasted longer and did not come to an end probably before the fourth century A.D., when it was ended by the Kadambas. Thus the total duration of the rule of all the lines of 1 Rapson, Andhra Coins, liii. The fact that he was a prince at the time of the record need not prove that he never came to the throne. The Purāṇic lists themselves often include names of princes (e.g., Arjuna, Abhimanyu, Siddhārtha) who never ruled as kings. Certain Matsya Mss. insert the group to which Skandasvāti belongs after no. 29, i.e., Chaṇḍaśrī (DKA, p. 36).

2 He was so named because he was born in the Kuntala country. Cf. names like Uruvela-Nadi - and Gayā Kassapa (Dialogues of the Buddha, I. 194).

Śātakarṇis is really more than 400 years.¹ The kings of the Kuntala group (Nos. 10-14 of the DKA list) are no doubt usually placed before the great Gautamīputra and his successors. But Pargiter points out that in certain Matsya MSS. No. 10-15 are placed after the penultimate king of the line (No. 29).² As to Hāla (No. 17) if he is really the author of the Gāthāsaptasatī, he could hardly have flourished before the fourth century A.D. The references to Vikramāditya-charita, Āṅguraka-vāra and Rādhikā make it difficult to assign to him a date before the Great Gautamīputra. We have many other instances of the inversion of the order of kings in the Purāṇas.³ The fact that the extant Purāṇic texts do misplace kings appears abundantly clear from the recent discovery of a coin of Śiva Śrī Āpilaka whom Mr. Dikshit connects with the later Śātavāhanas though the Purāṇas place him early in the list.⁴

Regarding the original home of the Śātavāhana family there is also a good deal of controversy. Some scholars

1 The period '300 years' (Vāyu P.) may refer to the rule of the Śrīparvatīya Andhras (DKA, 45). Even then it is important to remember that the cessation of "Andhra" rule in the upper Deccan in the third century A.D. is not incompatible with a date for the founder in the first century B.C. For the rule of the Śātakarṇis survived in Kuntala till the rise of the Kadambas. Thus the Purāṇas are right in assigning to the entire line of 30 kings a period of about four centuries and a half.

2 DKA, p. 36. On pp. 20, 35, Pargiter gives other instances of 'misplacement' of kings by the Purāṇic MSS.

3 See pp. 104, 115f ante.

4 See Advance, March 10, 1935, p. 9. The coin belongs to the Mahākosala society of Raipur (C.P.). It bears the figure of an elephant with Brāhmī legend on the obverse. The reverse is blank. On numismatic grounds the place of this ruler is, according to Mr. K. N. Dikshit, more with the later kings of the dynasty than with the earlier ones as indicated in the Purāṇas. For the late date of Hāla of the Kuntala country see Bhand. Com. Vol., 189. Cf. Reference to Rādhā in the Saptaśatakam (Ind. Ant., III 25n.).

Mr. K. P. Chaṭṭopādhyāya deduces from the discrepant lists of the Matsya, and Vāyu purāṇas, and from epigraphic and numismatic evidence, certain think that the Śātavāhanas were not Andhras (Telugus) theories about (1) the existence of two contemporary Śātavāhana kingdoms ruled by son and father respectively, (2) cross-cousin marriages and (3) matrilineal succession, which he discusses in JASB, 1927, 503 ff and 1939, 317-339. In his opinion the discrepancies in the Purāṇic lists cannot be due to any oversight or slip on the part of the editors (1927, p. 504). They are to be explained by the theory of an original version (that contained in the Matsya) which gives the full list of Gautamīputras as well as Vāsishṭhīputras, and a "revised text" (contained in the Vāyu and Brahmāṇḍa) which retains the Gautamīputras but from which certain names were deliberately expunged as the rulers in question were not considered by the revising authorities to possess the privilege of having the names preserved in the Purāṇas (ibid. p. 505). Kings (e.g., Vāsishṭhīputra Pulumāvi), whose names are "expurged" from the "revised text" of the Vāyu and the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇas, belong to a "set" which is genealogically connected with the other, viz., the Gautamīputra group, whose names are retained in the revised versions, but "the succession did not coincide with the mode of descent." For instance, Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi, according to the revised list, was succeeded not by his son Pulumāvi, but by another Gautamīputra, viz., Yajña Śrī (p. 509). It is further added that 'on the coins of the Śātavāhanas the royal prefix and the mother's clan-name are associated together and also disappear together except in the case of the third king of the line.' In the inscriptions also the association is invariable (excluding the doubtful case of Śivamakasada), except in the case of the third king, Śrī Śātakarṇi of the Nānāghaṭ Cave Inscriptions. It is, therefore, to be concluded that, except for the third king of the line, the royal title and relationship to the mother went together. In other words, the succession was matrilineal (p. 518); "The son succeeded to the conquered realm, and the sister's son to the inherited kingdom" (p. 527).

This footnote cannot afford space for an exhaustive review of the dissertation of Mr. Chaṭṭopādhyāya. Nor is it concerned with theories and speculations about social organisation based on 'mother right or father right', cross-cousin marriage in general, and royal successions, that are not germane to the discussion about the Śātavāhana dynasty. We shall try to confine ourselves to the points that are really relevant to an enquiry about that illustrious line itself. A study of the Purāṇic lists analysed by Pargiter (Dynasties of the Kali Age, pp. 35ff.) would show that the discrepancies in the Purāṇic lists are not capable of as simple a solution as that proposed by Mr. Chaṭṭopādhyāya. It cannot be said, for example, that Gautamīputra (No. 23) is mentioned in all Matsya texts and retained in all Vāyu MSS., and that his son Pulumāvi (No. 24) of the so-called "Vāsishṭhīputra group" is always mentioned in the Matsya and omitted only in "later revised versions" of the Vāyu, etc. Gautamīputra is omitted in Matsya MSS. styled c, k and l by Pargiter (p. 36), and also in the e Vāyu MSS, while his son Pulumāvi is omitted in Matsya e, f and l MSS. but mentioned in the Vishṇu and Bhāgavata lists, notwithstanding the activities of the so-called revisers. The theory of succession of sisters' sons in the so-called revised list of the Vāyu, Brahmāṇḍa, etc., is clearly negated by numerous passages where a but merely Andhra-bhṛityas, servants of the Andhras, successor is distinctly referred to even in these Purāṇas as the son of a predecessor (cf. the cases not only of the first Śrī Śātakarṇi but also of Śātakarṇi II, Lambodara, and even Yajña Śrī—(DKA, p. 39, fn. 40, 44; p. 42, fn. 12.)). The use of the expression tato (DKA, 39) in the Matsya Purāṇa to indicate the relationship between Śātakarṇi I and Pūrṇotsaṅga when taken along with the words tasyāpi Pūrṇotsaṅgaḥ (Vishnu IV. 24. 12) and Paurṇamāsastu tat sūtaḥ (Bhāg. XII. 1. 21) leaves no room for doubt that Purāṇic evidence represents Pūrṇotsaṅga—Paurṇamāsa, as the son and immediate successor of Śātakarṇi I and not a 'distant' offspring or a remote offshoot of a 'cross-cousin marriage', who got the throne by the rule of matrilineal succession. There may be no valid reason as asserted by Mr. Chaṭṭopādhyāya for identifying him with Vēdiśrī of the Nānāghāṭ record. But the reading Vēdiśrī as pointed out by K. Śāstrī is wrong. The proper reading is Khandasirī=Skandaśrī. This prince has been plausibly identified with Pūrṇotsaṅga's successor, the fifth king of the Purāṇic list. It is, therefore, difficult to agree with the view (JASB, 1939, 325) that the prince in question (the so-called Vēdiśrī) 'never came to the throne'. Pūrṇotsaṅga may have been some other 'kumāra'. Cf., the nameless prince (kumāra) 'Śātavāhana' of the Nānāghāṭ record who is mentioned along with 'Hakusirī' (Śaktiśrī). It is also to be noted that even the so-called older version of the Matsya speaks of only 19 kings in one passage.

The Gautamīputras and the Vāsishṭhīputras did not rule over distinct regions. Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi is represented as the Rājā of Mūlaka, i.e., the district round Paithan, along with other territories. Pulumāvi, too, ruled over Paithan as we learn from the Geography of Ptolemy. The epithets "Vijha..... Malaya-Mahida.....pavata pati" and "tisamudatoyapīta-vāhana" applied to Gautamīputra suggest that he was as much entitled to the designation Dakṣiṇāpathapati as his son.

The statement that, except for the third king, the royal title and relationship to the mother went together, is not borne out by recorded facts. In the Myākadoni Inscription, for example (Ep. Ind., XIV. pp. 153 ff.), we have the passage—Raño Śātavahanānānā s (i) ri-Pulum(ā)visa without any mention of the metronymic. Cf. also the passage Raño Sirichada-sātisa (Rapson, Andhra Coins, p. 32). As to cross-cousin marriages, several recorded cases, e.g., those of the wives of Śrī Śātakarṇi I and Vāsishṭhīputra Śrī Śātakarṇi of the Kanheri Inscription, do not support the theory propounded by Mr. Chaṭṭopādhyāya. The kings in question may, doubtless, have been polygamous. But that the extra queens, if any, included cousins is only a guess. The marriages actually hinted at in the epigraphic records of the Śātavāhanas (unlike those of the Ikshvākus) are not of the 'cross-cousin' type. Indian history knows of cases where a queen or other royal personage takes as much pride in the mother's family as in that of the father (cf. ubhayakulālanākārabhūtā Prabhāvatī, JASB, 1924, 58). Does Nāyanikā lay any claim to a Śātavāhana origin? The table of cross-cousin marriage on p. 325 of JASB, 1939 would make Śātakarṇi (No. 6 of the list) a brother of of Kanarese origin. Mr. O. C. Gangoly points out¹ that in some class of literature a distinction is suggested between the Āndhras and the Śātavāhanas. In the Epigraphia Indica,² Dr. Sukthankar edited an inscription of Siri-Pulumāvi, "king of the Śātavāhanas," which refers to a place called Śātavāhanihāra.³ The place finds mention also in the Hirahadagalli copper-plate inscription of the Pallava king Siva-skandavarman in the slightly altered form of Sātāhani-rattha. Dr. Sukthankar suggests that the territorial division Śātavāhani-Śātāhani must have comprised a good portion of the modern Bellary district of the Madras Presidency, and that it was the original home of the Śātavāhana family. Other indications point to the territory immediately south of the Madhya-deśa as the original home of the Śātavāhana-Śātakarṇis. The *Vinaya Texts*⁴ mention a town called "Setakannika" which lay on the southern frontier of the Majjhima-deśa. It is significant that the earliest records of the Śātakarṇis are found in the Northern Deccan and Central India; and the Hāthigumphā Inscription of Khāravela, king of Orissa, refers to the family as 'protecting the West'. The name 'Andhra' probably came to be Nāyanikā and a brother-in-law of Śātakarṇi (No. 3 of the list) and a son of Mahārāṭhi Tranakayiro. This is negatived by the Nānāghāṭ epigraph which refers to the Mahārāṭhi as Amgiya (or Āmbhiya) kulavardhana, whereas both the Śātakarṇis belong to the family of Simuka Śātavāhana according to Purāṇic evidence. Gautamī-Balaśrī who is turned into a sister or clan-sister of Śivasvātī (JASB, 1927, 590) refers merely to her position as a badhū, mātā, and pitāmahī, but never for once suggests that she herself sprang from the family the restoration of whose glory is referred to in exulting terms.

1 JAHRS, XI, pp 1 and 2, pp 14-15. The Āndhras contributed one melody which is recognised in the musical literature of India as Āndhrī, while the Śātavāhanas contributed another named after them as Śātavāhani according to the text of the Bṛihat-Deśi.

2 Vol. XIV (1917).

3 See also Annals of the Bhandarkar Institute, 1918-19, p. 21, 'On the Home of the so-called Andhra Kings.'—V. S. Sukthankar. Cf. JRS., 1923, 89 f.

4 S. B. E., XVII, 38.

applied to the kings in later times when they lost their northern and western possessions and became a purely Andhra power, governing the territory at the mouth of the river Kṛishṇā.¹

There is reason to believe that the so-called "Andhra," "Andhra-bhṛitya" or Śātavāhana kings were Brāhmaṇas with a little admixture of Nāga blood. The Dvātrīṃśat-puttalikā represents Sālivāhana (Prakṛit form of Śātavāhana) as of mixed Brāhmaṇa and Nāga origin.² The Nāga connection is suggested by names like Nāga-nikā³ and Śkanda-nāga-Śātaka, while the claim to the rank of Brāhmaṇa is actually put forward in an inscription. In the Nāsik prāśasti of Gautamiputra Śātakarṇi the king is called "Eka Bamhana," i.e., the unique Brāhmaṇa. Some scholars, however, are inclined to take Bamhana to mean merely a Brāhmaṇical Hindu, but this interpretation cannot be accepted in view of the fact that Gautamiputra is also called "Khātiya-dapa-māna-madana", i.e., the destroyer of the pride and conceit of Kshatriyas. The expression "Eka-bamhana" when read along with the passage "Khātiya-dapa-māna-madana" leaves no room for doubt that Gautamiputra of the Śātavāhana family not only claimed to be a Brāhmaṇa,⁴ but a Brāhmaṇa

1 Cf. the transformation of the Eastern Chāḷūkyas into Cholas from the time when Kulottuṅga I mounted the Chōla throne. For the origin and meaning of the names Śātavāhana and Śātakarṇi see also Camb. Hist. Ind., Vol. 1, p. 599n; JBORS., 1917, December, p. 442n; IHQ, 1929, 388; 1933, 88, 256 and JRAS., 1929, April; also Bulletin of the School of Oriental Studies, London, 1938, IX. 2. 327f. Both Barnett and Jayaswal connect them with the Sātiya-putas. Przyluski thinks that the names may have been sanskritised from Austro-Asiatic terms signifying, "Son of—horse." For other interpretations see Aravamuthan, the Kaveri, the Maikharis, p. 51n. (karṇi=ship; Vāhana=Oar or Sail); Dikshitar, Indian Culture, II, 549 ff.

2 Cf. E. H. D., Sec. VII.

3 Bühler., ASWI, vol v, p 64 n4.

4 In Indian Culture, I, pp. 513 ff., and Ep. Ind., XXII. 32ff. Miss Bhramar Ghosh and Dr. Bhandarkar seem to reject the interpretation of the expressions "Eka Bamhana" and "Khātiya-dapa-māna-madana" proposed by like Paraśurāma who humbled the pride of the Kshatriyas. As a matter of fact in the prastāvi the king is described as "the unique Brāhmaṇa in prowess equal to Rāma".¹

According to the Purāṇas Simuka (c. 60-37 B.C.) gave the final coup de grace to the Śuṅga-Kaṇva power. He was succeeded by his brother Kṛishṇa (c. 37-27 B.C.). This king has been identified with Kaṇha "Rājā of the Sādavāhana-kula" mentioned in a Nāsik inscription.

Senart and Bühler. It is suggested that the word bamhaṇa may stand for Brahmaṇya, that Khatiya may refer to the Xathroi or Khatriaiotribe mentioned by classical writers, and that the expression Rājarisi-vadhu used in reference to Gautamī Balaśrī is enough to show that the Śātavāhana rulers never claimed themselves to be Brahmarshis or Brāhmaṇa sages. It is nobody's case that the Śātavāhanas claimed to be mere "Brāhmaṇa sages." But is it not a bit too ingenious to imagine that the well-known terms Brāhmaṇa and Kshatriya are not to be taken in their ordinary sense, and that they really stand for non-Brāhmaṇas and non-Kshatriyas? As to the use of the expression Rājarisi-vadhu, would not Brahmarshi be a singularly inappropriate description of a family of kings even though they were Brāhmaṇas? The term Rājarshi is not used exclusively to denote non-Brāhmaṇa rulers. In the Padma Purāṇa (Pātāla-khaṇḍam, 61, 73), for instance, Dadhichi is styled a Rājarshi. In the Vāyu Purāṇa (57, 121 ff.) the epithets "Rājarshayo mahāsattvāḥ" are used in reference to Brahma-Kshatramayā nṛpāḥ (Brahma-kshatrādayo nṛpāḥ, according to the reading of the Matsya text, 143, 37:40). In the Matsya Purāṇa (50, 5-7) the epithet Rājarshi is applied to a king who sprang from the family of the Maudgalyas who are called Kshatroṇetū dvijātayaḥ, and one of whom is styled Brahmishṭhaḥ. The Annadāmaṅgala refers to Kṛishṇa Chandra as Rāja-Rājachakravartī Rishi-Rishirāja.

Attention may no doubt be invited to the Purāṇic statement that the founder of the "Andhra" dynasty was a vyishala (DKA, 38). But the explanation will be found in the Mahābhārata. The great epic (XII. 63. 1 ff.) informs us that 'drawing the bowstring, destruction of enemies... are not proper (akāryam paramam) for a Brāhmaṇa. A Brāhmaṇa should avoid royal service (rāja-preshya). A Brāhmaṇa who marries a Vyishali and takes to royal service (rāja-preshya) and other work not legitimate for him is akarmā, a Brāhmaṇa so-called (Brahma-bandhu). He becomes a Śūdra. The Śātavāhanas actually drew the bowstring and intermarried with Dravidians and Śakas as the Mauryas had intermarried with Yavanas.

1 A pun is here intended as Rāma seems to refer to Bala Deva as well. The use of the name of Rāma, instead of Bala (cf. Bala-Keśava in Hariv. Vishṇuparva, 52, 20) is significant. Taken in conjunction with ekabamhaṇa it undoubtedly implies comparison with Bhṛigu-Rāma or Paraśu-Rāma as well.

The record tells us that a certain cave was caused to be made by a high official (Śramaṇa Mahāmātra) of Nāsik in the time of King Kaṇva.

Kaṇva-Kṛishṇa was succeeded according to the Purāṇas by Śātakarṇi (c. 27-17 B.C.). This Śātakarṇi has been identified with—

(1) King Śātakarṇi Dakṣiṇāpatha-pati (lord of the Deccan), sōn (or nephew) of Simuka Śātavāhana, mentioned in the Nānāghaṭ Inscription of Nāyanikā¹;

(2) Śātakarṇi, lord of the west, who was defied (or rescued ?) by Khāravela, king of Kaliṅga ;

(3) Rājan Śrī Śātakarṇi of a Sāūchi Inscription ;

(4) The elder Sarāganus mentioned in the Periplus ;

(5) Śātakarṇi, lord of Pratishṭhāna, father of Śaktikumāra, mentioned in Indian literature ; and

(6) Siri-Sāta of coins.²

The first, fifth and sixth identifications are usually accepted by all scholars. The second identification is also probable because the Purāṇas place Śātakarṇi, the successor of Kṛishṇa, after the Kāṇvas, i.e., in the first century B.C., while the Hāthigumbhā Inscription seems to place Khāravela 300 years after Nanda-rāja, i.e., possibly in the first century B.C.

Marshall objects to the third identification on the ground that Śrī Śātakarṇi—who is mentioned in the

The comparison of a militant ruler claiming Brāhmaṇahood and fighting against Kṣatriyas, with Paraśu-Rāma is a favourite theme of writers of Prāśastis—cf. Bhṛigupatiriva dripta kshatrasaṁhāra-kārin which is applied to Ambāprasād in the Chitor-gaḍh ins. of 1274 A.D.

1 The usual view among scholars is that Śātakarṇi I is a son of Simuka. If he is a nephew (son of Kṛishṇa, brother of Simuka) as the Purāṇas assert, it is difficult to explain why Kṛishṇa's name should be omitted from the family-group, mentioned in the Nānāghaṭ records, while the name of Simuka as well as that of the father of Śātakarṇi's queen should find prominent mention. The final decision must await future discoveries.

2 Andhra Coins (Rapson), p. xciii. CHI, 531.

Nānāghāt and Hāthīgumphā Inscriptions reigned in the middle of the second century B.C.; his dominions, therefore, could not, in his opinion, have included Eastern Mālwa (the Sāñchi region) which, in the second century B.C., was ruled by the Śuṅgas and not by the "Andhras".¹ But we have seen that the date of the Hāthīgumphā Inscription is possibly the first century B.C. (300 years after Nanda-rāja). The Purāṇas, too, as is well-known, place the kings mentioned in the Nānāghāt Inscription not earlier than the Kāṇvas, i.e., in the first century B.C. As Śuṅga rule had terminated about this time the identification of the successor of Kṛishṇa of the Śātavāhana family with Śātakarṇi of the Sāñchi Inscription, therefore, does not conflict with what is known of the history of Eastern Mālwa in the second century B.C. Lastly, it would be natural for the first Śātakarṇi to be styled simply Śātakarṇi or the elder Śātakarṇi (Sara-ganus, from a Prākṛit form like Sāḍaganna), while it would be equally natural for the later Śātakarṇis to be distinguished from him by the addition of a geographical designation like Kuntala, or a metronymic like Gautamīputra or Vāsishṭhiputra.

We learn from the Nānāghāt Inscriptions that Śātakarṇi, son (?) of Simuka, entered into a matrimonial alliance with the powerful Aṅgiya or Ambhiya² family, the scions of which were called Mahārāṭhi, and became sovereign of the whole of Dakṣiṇāpatha. He seems also to have controlled Eastern Mālwa and undoubtedly performed the Aśvamedha sacrifice. The conquest of Eastern Mālwa by his family is possibly implied by coins and the Sāñchi Inscription when read along with the Purāṇic statement that in succession to the Śuṅgabhrītya Kāṇvāyana kings, the 'earth'¹ will pass to the 'Andhras'. The inscription records the gift of a certain Ānaṇḍa, the son of Vasīṭhi, the foreman of the artisans of Rājjan Siri-Śātakarṇi.² Śātakarṇi seems to have been the first prince to raise the Śātavāhanas to the position of paramount sovereigns of Trans-Vindhyan India. Thus arose the first great empire in the Godāvari valley which rivalled in extent and power the Śuṅga empire in the Ganges valley and the Greek empire in the Land of the Five Rivers. According to the evidence of Indian as well as classical writers,³ the capital of the Śātavāhana Empire was at Pratiśṭhāna, "the modern Paithan on the north bank of the Godāvari in the Aurangabad District of Hyderabad".

1 A Guide to Sāñchi, p. 13.

2 ASI, 1923-24, p. 88.

After the death of Śātakarṇi his wife Nāyanikā or Nāganikā, daughter of the Mahārāṭhi Tranakayiro Kalalāya, the scion of the Aṅgiya (?) family, was proclaimed regent during the minority of the princes Vedaśrī (?Khandasirī or Skandaśrī) and Śakti-Śrī (Sati Sirimata) or Haku-Siri. The last-mentioned prince is probably identical with Śakti-kumāra, son of Śālivāhana, mentioned in Jaina literature.⁴

1 i.e. the Vidiśā region in Eastern Mālwa. For the connection of the Śuṅgas with Vidiśā, see, Pargiter, DKA, 49. The Kāṇvāyanas had become King 'among the Śuṅgas' (Śuṅgeshu, DKA, 34), apparently in the Vidiśā territory.

2 The conquest of West Mālwa is probably suggested by round coins of Śrī Sāta (Rapson, Andhra Coins, xcii-xciii).

3 Cf. Jñāprabhasuri, Tirthakalpa, JBGRAS, X, 123; and Ptolemy Geography, vii. 1. 82. See also Āvaśyaka Sūtra, JBORS., 1930, 290; Sir R. G. Bhandarkar, EHD, Sec. VII.

4 Viracharitra, Ind. Ant., VIII, 201. ASWI, V, 62n.

The Śātavāhanas were not the only enemies of the decadent Magadha empire in the first century B. C. We learn from the Hāthīgumphā Inscription that when Śātakarṇi was ruling in the west, Khāravela of Kalinga carried his arms to Northern India and humbled the king of Rājagṛiha.

Khāravela belonged to the Cheta dynasty. Mr. R. P. Chanda points out that Cheta princes are mentioned in the Vessantara Jātaka.³ The Milinda-paṇḥo contains a statement which seems to indicate that the Chetas were connected with the Chetis or Chedis. The particulars given in that work regarding the Cheta king Sura Parichara agree with what we know about the Chedi king Uparichara.⁴

Very little is known regarding the history of Kalinga from the death of Aśoka to the rise of the Cheta or Cheti dynasty probably in the first century B.C. (three

1 On page 57 of Rapson's Andhra Coins Kalalāya Mahārāṭhi bears the name "Sadakana" (= Śātakarṇi). His other name or epithet "Tranakayiro" reminds us of "Tanaka" which occurs as a variant of the name of the 18th "Andhra" king of Pargiter's list (DKA, 36, 41).

2 ASI. AR, 1923-24, p. 88; A. Ghosh, History of Central and Western India, 140. Mr. Ghosh identifies him with the fifth king of the Purāṇic list.

3 No. 547.

4 Rhys Davids, Milinda, SBE, XXXV, p. 287; Mbh. I, 63, 14. According to Sten Konow (Acta Orientalia, Vol. 1, 1923, p. 38) Ceti (not Ceta) is the designation of the dynasty of Khāravela occurring in the Hāthīgumpha Inscription.

hundred years after the Nandas). The names of the first two¹ kings of the Cheta line are not clearly indicated in the Hāthīgumphā inscription. Lüders Ins. No. 1347 mentions a king named Vakradeva (Vakadepasiri or Kūdepasiri?) But we do not know for certain whether he was a predecessor or successor of Khāravela.

During the rule of the second king, who must have reigned for at least 9 years (c. 37-28 B.C.), Khāravela occupied the position of Crown Prince (Yuvarāja). When he had completed his 24th year, he was anointed Mahārāja of Kaliṅga (c. 28 B.C.). His chief queen was the daughter of a prince named Lalāka, the great-grandson (according to some) of Hathisinha. In the first year of his reign he repaired the gates and ramparts of his capital, Kaliṅga-nagara. In the next year (c. 27 B.C.), without taking heed of Śātakarṇi, he sent a large army to the west and with its aid, having reached the Kṛishṇaveṇā, struck terror into the hearts of the people (or city) of Musika (Asika?)-nagara.² According to another interpretation, "he went to the rescue of Śātakarṇi and having returned with his purpose accomplished, he with his allies made gay the city." He followed up his success by further operations in the west and, in his fourth year, compelled the Rāṭhikas and Bhojakas to do him homage. In the fifth year (c. 24 B.C.) he had an aqueduct, that had been opened out 300 years back by Nandarāja, conducted into his capital.

Emboldened by his successes in the Deccan the Kaliṅga king turned his attention to the North. In the eighth year he stormed Gorathagiri (Barābar Hills near Gayā) and harassed (the king of ?) Rājagriha.¹ If Dr. Jayaswal is right in identifying this king with Brihaspatimitra, then king Brihaspati must have ruled over Magadha after the Kāṇva dynasty.

¹ For Purusha-Yuga (generation) see Hemachandra, Parīśiṣṭa-parvan, VIII. 326 gāmi purusha-yugūni nava yāvattavānvayaḥ.

² Cf. Ep. Ind. XX. 79, 87. Barua reads Aśvaka o Rṣika (Old Brāhmī Ins., p. 176; Asika IHQ, 1938, 263). Dr. F. W. Thomas, too, finds in the passage no reference to a Musika capital (JRAS., 1922, 83). The alternative interpretation in the next sentence is his. Cf. Bühler, Indian Palaeography, 39.

The attack on Northern India was repeated possibly in the tenth and certainly in the twelfth year. In the tenth year the Kalinga king, in the opinion of some scholars, overran countries in Bhārat-varsha, which are taken to refer to those in Upper India. In the twelfth year he claims to have terrified or harassed the kings of Uttarāpatha and watered his elephants in the Gaṅgā (Ganges).² The north-western expeditions apparently led to no permanent result. But in north-eastern India the Kalinga king was more successful; the repeated blows certainly "struck terror into the Magadhas," and compelled the Magadha king (Brihaspatimitra ?) to bow at his feet.

Having subjugated Magadha, and despoiled Aṅga, the invader once more turned his attention to Southern India. Already in his eleventh year "he had had Pithuḍa ploughed with a plough drawn by an ass."³ Lévi⁴ identified this city with Pihunḍa of the Uttarādhyaṇa (21), and 'Pitundra metropolis' of Ptolemy in the interior

1 Some scholars find in line 8 of the Hāthīgumphā Ins. a reference to the Yavana-rajā (Di) ma (ta), i.e., Demetrios who "went off to Mathurā in order to relieve his generals who were in trouble" (Acta Orientalia, I, 27; Cal. Rev. July, 1926, 153). But the reading is doubtful (cf. Barua, Old Brāhmī Inscriptions in the Udayagiri and Khandagiri Caves, pp. 17-18; IHQ., 1929, 594). Even if the reading Dimata be correct, the reference may be to Diyumeta or Diomedes (Whitehead, Indo-Greek Coins, p. 36) and not necessarily to Demetrios.

2 Some scholars find here a reference to the Sugaṅgiya palace (Ep. Ind., xx, 88).

3 Barua interprets the passage differently. But cf. Nilakanta Sastri, The Pandyan Kingdom, p. 26.

4 Ind. Ant., 1926, 145. Sea-faring merchants are represented as going by boat from Champā to Pihunḍa in the days of Mahāvira, the Jina. Cf. Mbh. I. 65, 67, 186, VII. 50.

of the country of Masulipatam (Maisoloi). The conqueror seems to have pushed further to the south and made his power felt even in the Tamil country by princes amongst whom the most eminent was the king of the Pāṇḍyas. In the thirteenth year Khāravela erected pillars on the Kumārī Hill (Udayagiri in Orissa) in the vicinity of the dwelling of the Arhats (Khaṇḍagiri?).

SECTION III. THE END OF GREEK RULE IN NORTH-WEST INDIA.

While the remnant of the Maḡadhan monarchy was falling before the onslaughts of the Śātavāhanas and the Chetas, the Greek power in the North-West was also hastening towards dissolution. We have already referred to the feuds of Demetrios and Eukratides. The dissensions of these two princes led to a double succession, one derived from Demetrios holding for a time Kāpiśa and then Śākala (Śiālkoṭ) with a considerable portion of the Indian interior, the other derived from Eukratides holding Nicaea¹, Takshaśilā and Pushkarāvati as well as Kāpiśa (which was conquered from Apollodotos) and Bactria. According to Gardner and Rapson, Apollodotos, Antimachos, Pantaleon, Agathokles, Agathokleia,² the Stratos, Menander, Dionysios, Zoilos,³ Hippostratos and Apollophanes⁴ probably belonged to the house of Euthydemos and Demetrios. Most of

1. It lay on the Jhelum between that river and the Chenāb and was probably conquered by Heliokles in the reign of Strato I (CHI, 553, 699).

2. According to some numismatics (CHI, 552) she was probably Menander's queen. But the theory has to explain why the 'evidence' regarding the supposed relationship is so vague (contra Heliokles and Laodike, Hermaios and Kalliope).

3. "Apollodotos Philopator, Dionysios and Zoilos show a common and peculiar monogram struck probably by the same moneyer in one mint". Hoards of coins of these three princes have been found on the upper Sutlej. Coins of Zoilos have also been found at Pathankot and near Śākala (JRAS, 1913, 645nl; JASB 1897, 8; Tarn, The Greeks in Bactria and India, 316 f.)

4. Apollophanes shares a monogram with Zoilos and Strato (Tarn, Greeks, 317). Polyxenos, too, belongs to this group (p. 318). Whitehead considers him a close relation of Strato I (Indo-Greek Coins, 54n). The later kings of this group are connected with the Eastern Pañjāb (EHI, 4th ed., pp. 257-58). Tarn infers from a statement of Plutarch that after the death of Menander the eastern capital was shifted from Śākala to Bukephala.

these sovereigns used similar coin-types,¹ specially the figure of the goddess Athene hurling the thunderbolt, which is characteristic of the Euthydemian line. Pantaleon and Agathokles strike coins with almost identical types.² They both adopt the metal nickel for their coins, and they alone use in their legends the Brāhmī alphabet. They seem, therefore, to have been closely connected probably as brothers. It is not improbable that Agathokleia was their sister.³ Agathokles (and possibly Antimachos) issued a series of coins⁴ in commemoration of Alexander, Antiochos Nikator (Antiochos III Megas according to Malala), Diodotos Soter, Euthydemos and Demetrios Aniketos (the Invincible).

Apollodotos, the Stratos, Menander and some later kings used the Athene type of coins. Apollodotos and Menander are mentioned together in literature. The author of the Periplus of the Erythraean Sea says that "to the present day ancient drachmae are current in Barygaza (Broach) bearing inscriptions in Greek letters, and the devices of those who reigned after Alexander, Apollodotos and Menander". Again, in the title of the lost forty-first book of Justin's work, Menander and Apollodotos are mentioned as Indian kings.⁵ It appears from the Milinda-paṭṭha that the capital of the dynasty to which Menander belonged was Śākala or Sāgala.⁶

1 For an interesting account of Indo-Greek coin-types see H. K. Dab IHQ, 1934, 509 ff.

2 Dancing girl in oriental costume according to Whitehead; Māyā, mother of the Buddha, in the nativity scene according to Foucher (JRAS, 1919, p. 90).

3 Agathokleia is also closely connected with the Stratos, being probably mother of Strato I, and great-grandmother of Strato II.

4 According to Tarn (447 f) the fictitious Seleukid pedigree is the key to the (pedigree) coin series of Agathokles, the Just.

5 Rhys Davids, Milinda, SBE, 35, p. xix. Cf. JASB, Aug., 1833.

6 "Atthi Yonakānam nānāpuṭabhedanam Sāgalannāma nagaram," "Jambudīpe Sāgala nagare Milindo nāma Rājā ahasi." "Atthi kho

We learn from Ptolemy, the Geographer that the city had another name Euthymedia or Euthydemia, a designation which was probably derived from the Euthydemian line. An inscription on a steatite casket which comes from Shinkot in Bajaur territory refers to the 5th regnal year of Māhārāja Minādra (Menander). The record proves that in the 5th year of his reign the dominions of Menander probably included a considerable portion of the Trans-Indus territory. The Kāpiśa and Nicaea coins indicate how some of the rulers of the Euthydemian group were gradually pushed to the Indian interior. They had to remove their capital to Śākala.

To the rival family of Eukratides belonged Heliokles and probably Antialkidas who ruled conjointly with Lysias. A common type of Antialkidas is the Pilei of the Dioscuri, which seems to connect him with Eukratides; his portrait according to Gardner resembles that of Heliokles. It is not improbable that he was an immediate successor of Heliokles.¹ A Besnagar Inscription makes him a contemporary of Kāsi (Kośi = Kautsi?) putra Bhāgabhadra of Vidiśā who ruled some time after Agnimitra probably in or about the latter half of the second century B.C. The capital of Antialkidas was probably at Takshaśilā or Taxila, the place from which his ambassador Heliodoros went to the kingdom of Bhāgabhadra. But his dominions seem also to have included Kāpiśi or Kāpiśa.² After his death the western Greek kingdom probably split up into three parts, viz.,

Nāgasena Sūgalaṃ nāma nagaraṃ, tattha Milindo nāma Rājā rajjam kāreti." The form Yonaka from which chronological conclusions have been drawn in recent time, is comparable to Madra, Vṛjika (Pāṇini, IV. 2. 131).

1 Gardner, Catalogue of Indian Coins in the British Museum, p. xxxiv.

2 Cāmb. Hist., 558.

Takshaśilā (ruled by the line represented by Archebios¹), Pushkalāvati (governed by Diomedes, Epander,² Philoxenos, Artemidoros, and Peukolaos), and Kāpiśi with the Kābul region held successively by Amyntas and Hermaeus (Hermaios). With Hermaios was associated his queen, Kalliope. Kāpiśa was, according to Chinese evidence, probably occupied by the Sai-wang (Śāka lord) some time in the latter part of the second century B.C. But the barbarian chieftain, like the Kushān Yavuga of later times, may have acknowledged the nominal suzerainty of the Greek Basileas, as Teutonic chieftains in Europe were, during the fifth century A.D., sometimes content with the rank of 'patrician' and 'consul,' under the nominal authority of the titular Roman emperor.

The Greek power must have been greatly weakened by the feuds of the rival lines of Demetrios and Eukratides. The evils of internal dissension were aggravated by foreign inroads. We learn from Strabo³ that the Parthians deprived Eukratides (and the Scythians) by force of arms of a part of Bactriana, which embraced the satrapies of Aspionus and Turiva (possibly Aria and Arachosia according to Macdonald). There is reason to believe that the Parthian king Mithradates I penetrated even into India. Orosius, a Roman historian, who flourished about 400 A.D., makes a definite statement to the effect that Mithradates (c. B.C. 171-138)

1 A copper piece of this king is ~~restruck~~, probably on a coin of Heliokles (Whitehead, p. 39).

2 The 'Pallas and thunderbolt' type of his silver coins, probably connects him with the Śākala group, ibid. 64. Among the rulers of the Gandhāra region we should perhaps also include Telephos whose coinage resembles that of Maues, ibid. 80. A prince named Nikias apparently ruled in the Jhelum District (EHI, 4th ed., 258).

3 H. and F.'s Vol. II, pp.251-253.
O.P. 90—54.

subdued the natives between the Hydaspes¹ and the Indus. His conquest thus appears to have driven a wedge between the kingdom of Eukratides and that of his rival of the house of Euthydemus.

The causes of the final downfall of the Bactrian Greeks are thus stated by Justin : "the Bactrians harassed by various wars lost not only their dominions but their liberty ; for having suffered from contentions with the Sogdians, the Drangians and the Indians (?) they were at last overcome as if exhausted by the weaker Parthians."²

The Sogdians were the people of the region now known as Samarkand and Bukhārā. They were separated from Bactriana by the Oxus and from the Śakas by the Jaxartes or the Syr Daria.³ By the term Sogdian Justin probably refers not only to the Sogdiani proper but also to the well-known tribes which, according to Strabo,⁴ deprived the Greeks of Bactriana, viz., the Asii, Pasiani, Tochari, Sacarauli and the Sacae or Śakas. The story of the Śaka occupation of the Indo-Greek possessions will be told in the next chapter. The Latin historian Pompeius Trogus describes how Diodotos had to fight Scythian tribes, the Sarancae (Saraucae) and Asiani, who finally conquered Sogdiana and Bactria. The occupation of Sogdiana probably entitled them to the designation Sogdian used by Justin. Sten Konow⁵

1 In the Cambridge History of India, Vol. I, p. 568, however, this river has been identified with a Persian stream, the Medus Hydaspes of Virgil.

2 Sten Konow translates the passage from Justin thus : The Bactrians lost both their empire and their freedom, being harassed by the Sogdians (beyond the Oxus), the Arachoti (of the Argandāb valley of S. Afghanistan), the Drangae (lake-dwellers, near the Hamun Lake) and the Arei (of Herat), and finally oppressed by the Parthians (Corpus, ii. 1, xxi-xxii).

3 Strabo, XI. 8. 8-9.

4 H. and F.'s Tr., Vol. II, pp. 245-246. Cf. J.R.A.S. 1906, 193 f.; Whitehead, Indo-Greek Coins, 171.

5 Modern Review, April, 1921, p. 464. Corpus, II. 1, xxii, lvii f.

suggests the identification of the Tochari of the Classical writers with the 'Ta-hia of the Chinese historians. He further identifies the Asii, Asioi or Asiani with the Yüe-chi. We are inclined to identify the Tochari with the Tukhāras who formed an important element of the Bactrian population in the time of Ptolemy and are described by that author as a great people.¹ They are apparently "the war-like nation of the Bactrians" of the time of the Periplus.

The Drangians, literally 'lake-dwellers',² referred to by Justin, inhabited the country about the Hamun lake (Zareh) between Areia (Herat), Gedrosia (Baluchistān) and Arachosia (Kandahār) and the desert of Eastern Persia, close to and perhaps including at times within its political boundaries the neighbouring province now called Sistān or Seistan (Śakasthāna).³ Numismatic evidence indicates that a family whose territory lay mainly in southern Afganisthān, viz., the so-called dynasty of Vonones, supplanted Greek rule in a considerable part of the Helmund valley, Ghazni and Kandahār (Arachosia). Vonones is a Parthian (Imperial) name. Hence many scholars call his dynasty a Parthian family, and some go so far as to assert that this Vonones is the Arsakid king of that name who reigned from A. D. 8 to 14.⁴ But names are not sure proofs of nationality. Sir R. G. Bhandarkar calls the dynasty Śaka.⁵ The best name for the family would be Drangian, because the chief centre of their power probably

1 Ind. Ant., 1884, pp. 395-396.

2 Schoff, Parthian Stations, 32.

3 Corpus, xl; Whitehead, Indo-Greek Coins, 92; MASI, 34. 7. Isidore, places Drangiana (Zarangiana) beyond Phra (Farah), and locates Śakasthāna beyond this territory, (Schoff, 9). But Herzfeld points out that Sistān is the Achaemenian 'Zrang'.

4 Camb. Short Hist. 69.

5 Isidore of Charax who mentions the revolt of Tiridates against Phraates (26 B.C.) and is quoted by Pliny (Schoff, Parthian Stations, pp. 5, 13 ff, 17 ; lay in the Helmund valley, Arachosia being ruled by a viceroy.¹ On coins Vonones is associated with two princes, viz.,

(i) Špalahora (Spalyris) who is called Mahārāja-bhrātā (the king's brother).

(ii) Špalaga-dama, son of Špalahora.

There is one coin which Edward Thomas and Cunningham attributed to Vonones and Azes I. But the coin really belongs to Maues.² There is a silver coin of a prince named Spalirises which bears on the obverse the legend Basileus Adelphoy Spaliriso, and on the reverse "Mahārāja bhrātā dharmiasa Spalirisasa," i.e., of Spalirises the Just, brother of the king. This king has been identified by some with Vonones and by others with Maues.³ Vonones was succeeded as supreme ruler by Spalirises.⁴ The coins of Spalirises present two varieties, viz.,

1. Coins which bear his name alone in both the legends :

JRAS. 1904, 706 ; 1906, 180 ; 1912, 990) refers (Parthian Stations, 9, para 18, ZDMG., 1906, pp. 57-58 ; JRAS., 1915, p. 831 ; Tarn. The Greeks in Bactria and India, 53) to Sigal in Sacastene (near Kandahar ?) as the royal residence of the Śakas (not Parthians) about the beginning of the Christian era. The names of the brother or brothers and nephew of Vonones, (or Maues) ruling in southern Afghanistan seem to be Scythian (cf. Rapson quoted in Corpus II. 1, xlii). Thus the local rulers of southern Afghanistan about B.C. 26 or a little later were probably Śakas. It is, however, possible that they acknowledged the supremacy of the great king of Parthia.

1 Corpus, xlii.

2 Whitehead, Catalogue of Coins in the Panjāb Museum (Indo-Greek Coins), p. 93. Smith, Catalogue, 38. Tarn possibly repeats the mistake (Greeks, 344 n 2).

3 Herzfeld identifies the royal brother of Spalirises with Maues (Camb. Short Hist. 69).

4 It should be noted that certain coin-types of Spalirises are found restruck on coins of Vonones (CHI, 574) and on a copper coin of Spalyris and Špalagadama (Corpus, II. 1. xli). This proves that Spalirises was later than Vonones, Spalyris and Špalagadama. The square Omicron on a coin of Spalyris probably points to a date not earlier than Orodes II (55 to 38/7 B.C.). Tarn, Greeks, 326.

2. Coins on which his name occurs on the obverse in the Greek legend, and those of Azes on the reverse in the Kharoshthi legend.

The second variety proves that Spalirises had a colleague named Azes who governed a territory where the prevailing script was Kharoshthi. This Azes has been identified with king Azes of the Pañjāb about whom we shall speak in the next chapter.

As regards the Indian enemies of the Bactrian Greeks we must refer in the first place to the prince of the house of Pushyamitra who is represented in Kālidāsa's Mālavikāgnimitram as defeating the Yavanas on the Sindhu. An Indian named Bhadrayaśas seems to have had some share in the destruction of the Greek kingdom of the Eastern Pañjāb. The Nāsik prāśasti of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi represents that king as the destroyer of the Yavanas, apparently of Western India.

The final destruction of Greek rule was, as Justin says, the work of the Parthians. Marshall tells us¹ that the last surviving Greek principality,² that of Hermaios in the Kābul valley, was overthrown by the Parthian king Gondophernes.³ The Chinese historian Fan-ye also refers to the Parthian occupation of Kabul.⁴ "Whenever any of the three kingdoms of Tien-tchou (India Proper), Ki-pin (Kāpiśa) or Ngansi (Parthia),

1 A Guide to Taxila, p. 14.

2 Among the latest Greek rulers of the Kābul Valley we have to include Theodamas whose existence is disclosed by a Bajaur Seal Inscription (Corpus, II, i. xv. 6).

3 In ASI, AR, 1929-30 pp. 56 ff., however, Marshall modifies his earlier views in regard to the conquest of the Greek kingdom of Kābul by the Parthians. He suggests that the Kābul Valley became a bone of contention between Parthians and Kushāns and changed hands more than once before the final eclipse of the Parthian power.

4 JRAS., 1912, 676; Journal of the Department of Letters, Calcutta University, Vol. I, p. 81.

430 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

became powerful, it brought Kābul into subjection. When it grew weak it lost Kābul.....Later, Kābul fell under the rule of Parthia."¹ The real conquest of Kābul by the Parthians could hardly have taken place till after the time of Isidore (last quarter of the first century B.C.)² because the writings of that geographer do not include the Kābul valley in the list of the eastern provinces of the Parthian Empire. By A.D. 43-44, however, Parthian rule had extended to this region as we learn from Philostratus.

1 Cf. Thomas JRAS., 1906, 194. For the results of India's contact with the Hellenic world in the domains of religion, administration, literature, science and art see Bhandarkar, "Foreign Elements in the Hindu Population" (Ind. Ant., 1911); Raychaudhuri, "Early History of the Vaishnava Sect, 1st ed." p. 106; Foucher, "The Beginnings of Buddhist Art," pp. 9, 111 f.; Coomaraswami, "History of Indian and Indonesian Art," pp. 41 f.; Sten Konow, "Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum," Vol. II, Pt. 1. xv; Hopkins, "Religion of India," pp. 544 f.; Keith, "The Sanskrit Drama," pp. 57 f.; Keith, "A History of Sanskrit Literature," pp. 352 f.; Max Müller, "India—What can it teach Us," pp. 321 f.; Smith, EHI*, pp. 251-6; "A History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon," Chap. XI; Imp. Gaz., The Indian Empire, Vol. II, pp. 105 f., 137 f., etc.

2 Tarn, The Greeks in Bactria and India, 53; Schoff, The Parthian Stations of Isidore of Charax, 17.

CHAPTER VIII. SCYTHIAN RULE IN NORTHERN INDIA.

SECTION I. THE SAKAS.

In the second and first centuries B.C., Greek rule in parts of Kāfiristān, Gandhāra and possibly the Hazāra country, was supplanted by that of the Śakas. In the days of Darius, the Achaemenid king of Persia (B. C. 522-486), the Śakas lived beyond Sogdiana (para-Sugdama) in "the vast plains of the Syr Darya, of which the modern capital is the town of Turkestan."¹ But already towards the end of the first century B.C. they were established at Sigal in modern Sīstān.² The story of their migration from central Asia has been recorded by Chinese historians. The History of the First Han Dynasty (Ts'ien Han-Shu) states "formerly when the Hiung-nū conquered the Ta-Yü-tchi the latter emigrated to the west, and subjugated the Tabia;³ whereupon the Sai-wang went to the south, and ruled over Kipin."⁴ Sten Konow points out that the Sai-wang are the same people which are known in Indian tradition under the designation Śaka-muruṇḍa,⁵ Muruṇḍa being a later form of a Śaka word which has the same meaning as Chinese "wang," i.e., king, master, lord. In

1 E. Herzfeld, MASI, 34, 3.

2 Schoff, Isidore, Stathmoi Parthikoi, 17.

3 c. 174-160 B.C. according to some scholars.

4 JRAS., 1903, p 22; 1932, 958; Modern Review, April, 1921, p. 464. The Śaka occupation of Ki-piñ must be posterior to the reign of Eukratides and his immediate (Greek) successors.

5 Professor Hermann identifies the Sai-wang with the Sakarauoi or Sakaraukoi of Strabo and other classical authors. Corpus, II. 1. xxf., For Muruṇḍa, see pp. xx.

Indian inscriptions and coins it has frequently been translated with the Indian word Svāmin.

The name of the Śaka king who occupied Kipin is not known. The earliest ruler of that region mentioned in Chinese records is Wu-t'ou-lao whose son was ousted by Yin-mo-fu, the son of the prince of Yung-k'ü,¹ with Chinese help. Yin-mo-fu established himself as king of Kipin during the reign of the Emperor Hsüan-ti, which lasted from 73 to 48 B.C., and killed the attendants of an envoy sent in the reign of the Emperor Yüan-ti (B.C. 48-33). In the reign of Ch'eng-ti (32-7 B.C.) the support of China was sought without success by the king of Kipin, probably the successor of Yin-mo-fu, who was in danger from some powerful adversary, apparently a king of the Yue-chi, who had relations with China about this time as is proved by the communication of certain Buddhist books to a Chinese official in 2 B.C.²

S. Lévi at first identified Kipin with Kāśmīra. But his view has been ably controverted by Sten Konow³ who accepts the identification with Kāpiśa.⁴ Gandhāra was at one time the eastern part of the realm of Kipin. A passage of Hemachandra's Abhidhāna-Chintāmaṇi

1 The identification of Yung-k'ü with Yonaka (Tarn, 297) and that of Yin-mo-fu with Hermaios (Tarn, 346) are purely conjectural. Mention may be made in this connection of Zonkab in Tibbat (JASB, 1895, 97). But the problem of identification must await future discoveries.

2 Calc. Rev., Feb., 1924, pp. 251, 252; Smith, EH1., 3rd ed., p. 258n.; JRAS., 1913, 647; Ind. Ant., 1905, Kashgar and the Kharoshthi.

3 Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 291.

4 The country drained by the northern tributaries of the river Kābul, ibid., p. 290; cf. Watters, Yuan Chwang, Vol. I, pp. 259-260. The city of Kāpiśi probably stood at the junction of the Ghorband and the Panjshir (Foucher, Indian Studies presented to Prof. Rapson, 343). Kipin according to the Tsien Han-shu joins Wu-i-shan-li (Arachosia and Persia according to Schoff, Parthian Stations, 41) on the south-west. Corpus, II. 1. xxiv; JRAS., 1912, 684 n. Cf. Dr. Herrmann (JRAS., 1913, 1058 n.) who holds that Ki-pin was Gandhāra. The reference to a gold as well as a silver currency in Ki-pin is worthy of note (Corpus, II. 1. xxiv). Cf. the gold coin of the city of Pushkalāvati (CHI, 587).

seems to suggest that the capital of the Sai-wang (Śaka-Muraṇḍa) was Lampāka or Laghman (Lampākāstu Muraṇḍāḥ syuḥ).¹ Sten Konow says that according to the Ts'ien Han-shu, or Annals of the First Han Dynasty, the Sai, i.e., the Śakas, passed the Hientu (the hanging passage), i.e., the gorge west of Skardu on their way to Kipin.² Though the Śakas wrested parts of Kipin (Kāpiśa-Gandhāra) from the hands of Greek meridarchs (governors) they could not permanently subjugate Kābul,³ where the Basileus (king) maintained a precarious existence. They were more successful in India. Inscriptions at Mathurā and Nāsik prove that the Śakas extended their sway as far as the Jumna in the east and the Godāvari in the south, and destroyed the power of the 'Mitras' of Mathurā and the Śātavāhanas of Paiṭhan.⁴

No connected or detailed account of the Śaka potentates of Kipin is possible. Śakas are mentioned along with the Yavanas in the Rāmāyaṇa,⁵ the Mahābhārata,⁶ the *Manusmṛiti*⁷ and the Mahābhāṣya.⁸ The *Harivaṃśa*⁹ informs us that they shaved one-half of their heads. The Jaina work Kālakūchārya-kathānaka states that their kings were called Śāhi.¹⁰ Some of these 'Śāhis' are said to have been induced by a Jaina teacher

1 Lampāka (Laghman) is 100 miles to the east of Kapisene (AGI, 49).

2 Ep. Ind., XIV, 291. Corpus, II. I. xxiii. For possible alternative routes of conquest, see JRS., 1913, 929, 959, 1008, 1023.

3 Journal of the Department of Letters, Vol. I, p. 81.

4 Some of the Śakas seem to have penetrated to the far south of India. A Nāgārjunikoṇḍa Inscription refers to a Śaka named Moda and his sister Budhi. Ep. Ind. xx. 37.

5 I, 54. 22; IV, 43, 12.

6 II, 32. 17.

7 X. 44.

8 Ind. Ant., 1875, 244.

9 Chap. 14, 16. JRS., 1906, 204.

10 ZDMG., 34, pp. 247 ff., 262; Ind. Ant., X, 222.

to proceed to Surātṭha (Surāshṭra) Vishaya (country) and Ujjain in Hindukadeśa (India) where they overthrew some local chiefs and ruled for four years till they were themselves ousted by the founder of the era of 58 B.C.

The Śakas are also mentioned in the Praśastis of Gautamiputra Śātakarṇi and Samudra Gupta. Their kingdom or empire "Śakasthāna" is probably mentioned in the Mahāmāyūrī (95), in the Mathurā Lion Capital Inscription and in the Chandravalli Stone Inscription of the Kadamba Mayūrasarman. The passage in the Mathurā inscription containing the word Śakasthāna runs thus :—

Sarvasa Sakastanasa puyae.

Cunningham and Bühler interpreted the passage as meaning "for the merit, or in honour, (of the people) of the whole of Sakasthāna." Dr. Fleet, however, maintained that "there are no real grounds for thinking that the Śakas ever figured as invaders of any part of northern India above Kāthiāwād and the western and southern parts of the territory now known as Mālwa." He took Sarva to be a proper name and translated the inscriptional passage referred to above as "a gift of Sarva in honour of his home."¹

Fleet's objection is ineffective. Chinese evidence clearly establishes the presence of Śakas in Kipin, i.e., Kāpiśa-Gandhāra.² As regards the presence of the tribe at Mathurā, the site of the inscription, we should note that the *Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa*³ refers to a Śaka settlement in the Madhyadeśa. Dr. Thomas⁴ points out that the 1 JRS., 1904, 703 f. ; 1905, 155, 643 f. ; Mr. N. G. Majumdar (JASB., 1924, 17) takes Śakastana, to mean Śakrasthāna, i.e., 'the place of Indra.' Cf. Fleet in JRS., 1904, 705.

2 Note also the Kāpiśa types of the coins of Maues and Spalirises (CHI, 560n, 562, 591) and the foundation of a Kāpiśa satrapy (Corpus, ii. 1. 150f.)

3 Chapter 58.

4 Ep. Ind., IX, pp. 138 ff. ; JRS., 1906, 207 f., 215 f.

epigraphs on the Lion Capital exhibit a mixture of Śaka and Persian nomenclature. The name Mevaki for instance, which occurs in the inscription, is a variant of the Scythian name Mauakes.¹ The termination “-ās” in Komūsā and °Samūśo seems to be Scythic. Dr. Thomas further points out that there is no difficulty in the expression of honour to the “whole realm of the Śakas” since we find in the Wardak, Sui Vihār and other inscriptions even more comprehensive expressions, e.g., Sarva sattvanam—‘of all living creatures’. As regards Fleet’s renderings “svaka” and “sakatthūna,” one’s own place, Dr. Thomas says that it does not seem natural to inscribe on the stone honour to somebody’s own home. A pūjā addressed to a country is unusual, but inscription G of the Lion Capital contains a similar pūjā addressed to the chief representatives of the Śaka dominions.

Śakasthāna, doubtless, included the district of Scythia mentioned in the Periplus, “from which flows down the river Sinthus (Indus) the greatest of all the rivers that flow into the Erythraean Sea (Indian Ocean).” The metropolis of “Scythia” in the time of the Periplus was Minnagara; and its market town was Barbaricum on the seashore.

Princes bearing Śaka names are mentioned in several inscriptions discovered in Taxila, Mathurā and Western India. According to Dr. Thomas “whatever Śaka dynasties may have existed in the Pañjāb or India, reached India neither through Afghanistan nor through Kāśmīra but, as Cunningham contended, by way of Sindh and the valley of the Indus.”² This theory cannot be accepted

1 Cf. Maues, Moga, and Mavaces, the commander of the Śakas who went to the aid of Darius Codomannus (Chinnock, Arrian, p. 142). Cf. also the coin-name Mevaku (S. Konow, Corpus, xxxiii n.). In the period 106 to 101 B.C. the king of Ferghana bore the Śaka name of Mu-ku’a (Tarn, Greeks, 308 f).

2 J.R.A.S., 1906, p. 216.

in its entirety in view of the inadequate representation of Sind by Śaka coins, the Chinese account of the Śaka occupation of Kipin and the epigraphic evidence regarding the existence of a Scythian Satrapy at Kāpiśi and a Śaka principality in the Hazāra country.¹ We cannot also overlook the fact that some of the Śaka names hitherto discovered are those of the Northern Śakas who lived near the Sogdianoi.² The names Maues, Moga³ and Mevaki,⁴ for instance, are variants of the Śaka name Mauakes. We learn from Arrian that a chief named Mauakes or Mavaces led the "Sacians (Śakas), a Scythian tribe belonging to the Scythians who dwelt in Asia," who lived outside the jurisdiction of the Persian governor of the Bactrians and the Sogdianians, but were in alliance with the Persian king. Chhaharata, Khakharāta or Kshaharāta, the family designation of several satrapal houses of Taxila, Mathurā, Western India and the Deccan, is perhaps equivalent to Karatai, the name of a Śaka tribe of the North.⁵

The conquest of the Lower Indus Valley, Cutch and parts of Western India may, however, have been effected by the Sakas of Western Śakasthāna (Sistān) who are mentioned by Isidore of Charax. The name of the capitals

1 CHI, 569n, JASB., 1924, p. 14; S. Konow. Corpus, II. i. 13 f. The Śaka conquest of Ki-pin did not mean the total extinction of the Greek principality in the Kābul region. The History of the Later Han Dynasty (A.D. 25-220) refers to the existence, side by side, of the kingdoms of Ki-pin and Kābul before the conquest of the latter state by the Parthians. Like the Śātavāhanas, the Greeks of the Kābul territory may have restored their fallen fortunes to a certain extent after the first rush of barbarian invasion had spent its force. It is also possible that Scythian chiefs for a time acknowledged the nominal suzerainty of the Greek Basileus.

2 Ind. Ant., 1884, pp. 399-400.

3 Taxila plate.

4 Mathurā Lion Capital.

5 Ind. Ant., 1884, p. 400; cf. Corpus, II, I. xxxvi: "Kharaosta and Maues would belong to the north-western Śakas of Ki-pin and not to the branch which came to India from Seistān." Cf. xxxiii (case of Liaka).

of "Scythia" (which embraced the Lower Indus Valley) and of the Kingdom of Mambarus (Nambanus ?) in the time of the Periplus was Minnagara, and this was evidently derived from the city of Min in Śakasthāna mentioned by Isidore.¹ Rapson points out that one of the most characteristic features in the names of the Western Kshatrapas of Chashtana's line, viz., "Dāman" (-dama) is found also in the name of a prince of the Drangianian house of Vonones. Lastly, the Kārdamaka family from which, according to a Kanheri Inscription, the daughter of the Mahākshatrapa Rudra claimed descent, apparently derived its name from the Kārdama river in the realm of the Persians.²

The earliest Śaka kings mentioned in Indian inscriptions are, perhaps, Damijada³ and Maues. The latter is usually identified with Moga of the Taxila plate. He is possibly mentioned also in the Maira Inscription.⁴ Maues-Moga was a mighty sovereign (Maharaya). His dominions included Chuksha near Taxila which was ruled by a satrapal, i.e., a viceregal, family. Numismatic evidence points to his sway over Kāpiśi and Pushkarāvati as well as Taxila. His satraps probably put an end to Greek and Indian rule in the country round Mathurā. In parts of the Eastern Pañjāb and certain adjacent

1 JRAS., 1915, p. 830.

2 Shāmasastry's trans. of the Arthasāstra. p. 86, n. 6. cf. Artemis (Ptolemy, 324). For another view see Ind. Ant., XII. 273 n. The word Kārdamika occurs in the Mahābhāshya (IV. 2. 1. Word Index, p. 275); Kramadīśvara, 747; and Kardamila in Mbh. III. 135. 1. The Kārdama river may be identified with the Zarafshan which flowed through the old Achæmenian Satrapy of Bactria or Balkh. The Uttarakāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa (Chs. 100 and 102) connects a line of Kārdama kings with Bāhli or Bāhlika (IHQ., 1933, pp. 37 ff.).

3 Or Namijada, Shahdaur Ins., Corpus, II. i. 14, 16.

4 At Maira in the Salt Range, a Kharoshthi Inscription has been found in a well which seems to be dated in the year 58 and possibly contains the word Moasa, 'of Moa or Moga.'

438 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

tracts indigenous tribes like the Audumbaras, Trigartas, Kunindas, Yaudheyas, Ārjunāyanas had begun to assert their independence probably after the collapse of the Euthydemian monarchy. Maues struck coins with the types of Eukratides and Demetrios. But the absence of the Athena Alkis type leads Tarn to surmise that he did not annex Menander's home kingdom (i.e., the district round Śākala).¹

The dates assigned to Maues by various scholars range from B.C. 135 to A.D. 154. His coins are found ordinarily in the Pañjāb, and chiefly in the western portion of the province of which Taxila was the ancient capital. There can thus be no doubt that Maues was the king of Gandhāra. Now, it is impossible to find for Maues a place in the history of the Pañjāb before the Greek king Antialkidas who was reigning at Taxila when king Bhāgabhadra was on the throne of Vidiśā in Central India for fourteen years. The date of Bhāgabhadra is uncertain but he must be placed later than Agnimitra, son of Pushyamitra, who ruled from cir. B.C. 151 to 143. The fourteenth year of Bhāgabhadra, therefore, could not have fallen before c. 129 B.C. Consequently Antialkidas could not have been ruling earlier than the second half of the second century B.C.,² and his reign could not have ended before 129 B.C. The Śaka occupation of Gandhāra must, therefore, be later than 129 B.C. All scholars except Fleet identify Maues with Maharaya Moga of the so-called Sirsukh or Taxila plate, dated in the year 78 of an unspecified era. The generally accepted view is that the era is of Śaka institution. As 1 Tarn, The Greeks in Bactria and India, 322-330. The conquest of this kingdom may have been effected by Azes I. Whitehead, Indo-Greek Coins, 112; Tarn, GBI, 349; or by Rājuvula, Allan, CICAI, 185.

2 Cf., now Marshall, Monuments of Sāñchi, I, 268n.

the era is used only in Northern India and the borderland, it is permissible to conjecture that it came into existence after the Śaka occupation of those regions. We have already seen that this occupation could not have taken place before 129 B.C. The era used in the Taxila plate could not, therefore, have originated before 129 B.C. The year 78 of the era could not have fallen before B.C.(129-78=) 51. Consequently the rule of Maues-Moga cannot have ended before B.C. 51. He must be placed even later, because we learn from Chinese records that Yin-mo-fu was in possession of Kipin or Kāpiśa-Gandhāra about 48-33 B.C., and he was preceded by Wu-tou-lao and his son. As there is no real ground for identifying Maues-Moga with any of these rulers he will have to be placed after 33 B.C. He cannot perhaps be placed later than the middle of the first century A.D., because we learn from Philostratos and the author of the Periplus that about the time or a little later both Taxila and Minnagara, the metropolis of Scythia, i.e. the Śaka kingdom in the Indus valley, had passed into the hands of the Parthians. It seems, therefore, that Maues-Moga ruled after 33 B. C., but before the latter half of the first century A.D. According to Fleet, Moga flourished in the year 22 A.D.—the year 78 of the era commencing 58 B.C. which afterwards came to be known as the Kṛita-Mālava-Vikrama era. But the matter must be regarded as not definitely settled. The Khalatse Inscription of the year 187 (?) of Uvima (? Wema Kadphises) and the Taxila Silver Vase Inscription of the year 191 of Jihonika possibly suggest that the era to which the dates of these inscriptions, and presumably that of the so-called Sirsukh (Taxila) plate of Moga, are to be referred, began much earlier than B.C. 58.

Numismatists say that Maues was succeeded on the throne of Gandhāra by Azes who put an end to the remnant of Greek rule in the Eastern Pañjāb by annexing the kingdom of Hipposstratos. In the opinion of Marshall he also conquered the Jumna valley where the Vikrama era was in use.¹ The coins of Azes are very closely related to the issues of the rulers of the Vonones group, and the assumption has always been made that Azes, the king of the Pañjāb, is identical with Azes, the colleague of Spalirises. Some scholars think that there were two kings of the name of Azes and that the first Azes was the immediate successor, not of Maues, but of Spalirises and that Maues came not only after Azes I, but also after Azes II. But the last part of the theory cannot be accepted in view of the synchronism of Gondophernes and Azes II proved by the fact that Aspavarman served as Strategos, i.e., general or governor, under both the monarchs.² As Gondophernes ruled in the year 103,³ while Maues-Moga ruled in the year 78,⁴ and as both these dates are usually referred by scholars to the same era, both Gondophernes and his contemporary Azes II must be later than Maues-Moga. There is no room for Maues-Moga between Azes I and Azes II, because we shall see presently that the succession from Azes I to Azes II is clearly established by numismatic evidence. Maues came either before Azes I or after Azes II; but we have already seen that he could not have reigned after Azes II. He must, therefore, be placed before Azes I. He may have been ruling in the Pañjāb when Vonones was ruling in Sistān. When Vonones was succeeded by Spalirises, Maues was succeeded by Azes I. We have already seen that Spalirises and Azes I issued

1 JRAS. 1947, 22.

2 Whitehead, Catalogue of Coins in the Pañjāb Museum, p. 150.

3 Cf. the Takht-i-Bāhi Inscription.

4 Cf. the Taxila Plate of Patika.

joint coins.¹ The relationship between the two monarchs is not known. They may have been related by blood, or they may have been mere allies like Hermaios and Kujāla Kadphises.²

King Azes I struck some coins bearing his own name in Greek on the obverse, and that of Azilises in Kharoshthi on the reverse.³ Then again we have another type of coins on which the name in Greek is Azilises, and in Kharoshthi is Aya (Azes). Dr. Bhandarkar and Smith postulate that these two joint types, when considered together, prove that Azilises, before his accession to independent power, was the subordinate colleague of an Azes, and that an Azes similarly was subsequently the subordinate colleague of Azilises. The two princes named Azes cannot, therefore, be identical, and they must be

1 Rapson on pp. 573-574 of CHI, identifies Azes, the colleague of Spalirises, with Azes II, and makes him the son of Spalirises. On page 572, however, the suggestion is found that Azes II was the son and successor of Azilises. It is difficult to see how the two views can be reconciled. For an inscription of Azes see Corpus, II. i. 17 (Shahdaur Inscription of Śivarakshita). The name of Aja or Aya (Azes) has also been recognised by certain scholars in the Kalawān Inscription of the year 134 and in the Taxila silver scroll record of the year 136. The absence of any honorific title before the name makes it difficult to say whether it refers to a king, and, if it does refer to a king, whether the ruler in question was Azes I or Azes II. Moreover, if Aja or Aya is a royal name, then it would seem, from the analogy of other early Indian epigraphs, that the years 134 and 136 actually belonged to his reign; not years of an era which he founded but of an era which he used. The absence of any honorific title has, however, led some writers to suggest that Aja-Aya was the founder of the reckoning mentioned in the epigraphs, and not the reigning sovereign in the years 134 and 136. The identity of the reckoning with the era of 58 B.C. cannot be regarded as certain, though the theory has many advocates. Another thorny problem is the relation between this reckoning and the reckoning or reckonings used by Moga and Gondophernes. For the Kalawān Inscription see Ep. Ind. XXI. 251 ff.; IHQ. 1932, 825; 1933, 141; India in 1932-33, p. 182.

2 Cf. Whitehead, p. 178; Marshall, Taxila, p. 16.

3 Coins of Azilises are imitated by Mahādeva Dharaghosha Andumbara (CHI, 529). Along with certain caskets discovered in Taxila (ASI. AR. 1934-35, pp. 29, 30) was a silver coin of the dioskouri type of Azilises and a Roman coin issued by Augustus. The deposit was probably made early in the first century A. D. We have here new data for settling the chronology of the O. P. 90-56.

distinguished as Azes I and Azes II. Whitehead, however, observes that the silver coins of Azilises are better executed and earlier in style than those of Azes. The best didrachms of Azes compare unfavourably with the fine silver coins of Azilises—with Zeus obverse and Dioskouroi reverse, and with other rare silver types of Azilises. If Azilises preceded Azes, then following Dr. Smith we must have Azilises I and Azilises II, instead of Azes I and Azes II. In conclusion Whitehead says that the differences in type and style between the abundant issues of Azes can be adequately explained by reasons of locality alone, operating through a long reign.¹ Marshall, however, points out that the stratification of coins at Taxila clearly proves the correctness of Smith's theory, according to which Azes I was succeeded by Azilises, and Azilises by Azes II.²

Recent discoveries have unearthed the gold coin of a king named Athama. Whitehead has no hesitation in recognising him as a member of the dynasty of Azes and Azilises. His date is, however, uncertain.

Unlike most of the Indo-Greek princes,³ the Śaka kings style themselves on their coins Basileus Basileon, Maues—Azes group of kings. It may be remembered that Kadphises I copied the bust of Augustus or one of his immediate successors on his coins. Azilises should not be far removed in date from the Julian Emperors or from the period of Kushān invasion.

1 Inferior workmanship according to some, is a sign of remoteness (from Gandhāra?) rather than of late date (cf. CHI, 569f). G. Hoffmann and Sten Konow not only reject the duplication of Azes, but suggest the identification of Azes with Azilises. According to Marshall Azilises ruled north-westwards as far as Kapīśi (JRAS, 1947, 25 ff).

2 The coins which Smith assigns to Azes II are found generally nearer the surface than those of Azes I (JRAS, 1914, 979). For Konow's view, see Ep. Ind., 1926, 274 and Corpus, II. i. xxxix-xl. The name 'Azes' is found in association with several rulers of various dates, while that of Azilises is found only with one (viz., Azes). This possibly points to the plurality of the kings named Azes.

3 With the exception perhaps of Eukratides one of whose coins bears corresponding to the Prākṛit on the reverse Mahārājasa Rājarājasa. They also appropriate the epithet Mahatasa, corresponding to the Greek Megalos, which we find on the coins of Greek kings. The title Rājarāja—king of kings—was not an empty boast. Moga had under him the viceroys (satraps) Liaka and Patika of Chuksha (Chach) in the Western Punjab. One of the kings named Azes had under him at least one subordinate ruler, e.g., the Stratagos Aspavarman. The title Satrap or Kshatrapa occurs in the Behistun Inscription of Persia in the form Khshathrapāvan which means ‘protector of the kingdom.’¹ “Strategos,” a Greek word, means a general. It is obvious that the Scythians continued in North-Western India the Perso-Hellenic system of government by Satraps and military governors. Coins and Inscriptions prove the existence of several other Satrapal families besides those mentioned above.

The North Indian Kshatrapas or Satraps may be divided into three main groups, viz. :—

1. The Satraps of Kāpiśi, Puspapura and Abhisāra prastha,
2. The Satraps of the Western Pañjāb, and
3. The Satraps of Mathurā.

A Mānikialā inscription affords the bare mention of a Satrap of Kāpiśi, who was the son of the Satrap Graṇavhryaka.² A Kābul Museum stone Inscription of the year 83³ discloses the name of a Satrap of Puspapura he legend Maharajasa rajatirajasa Evukratidasa (Corpus, II. i. xxix n.), and of a few other rulers including Hermatōs (Whitehead, p. 85).

1 Cf. Ksha-pāvan of the Rig-veda (Vedic Index, I. 208), Rāshṭra-pāla of the Arthaśāstra and Goptri or Deśa-goptri of the Mālavikāgnimitram and the Gupta inscriptions.

2 Rapson, Andhra Coins, ci; Ancient India, 141; JASB., 1924, 14, Corpus, II, i, 150-1.

3 Acta Orientalia, xvi, Paro iii, 1937, pp. 234 ff.

named Tiravharna. 'Puspapura', the city of flowers, may have reference to Pushkarāvati (lotus-city). The name of Śivasena, 'the Kshatrapa in the town of Abhisāraprastha' occurs in the legend of a copper seal ring found in the Pañjāb.¹ The territory of the three Satraps may have corresponded to Yona, Gandhāra and Kamboja of Aśokan epigraphs.

The Pañjāb Satraps belonged to three families, viz.—

(a) The Kusulua or Kusuluka Group.—It consisted of Liaka and his son Patika, possibly of the Chhaharata or Kshaharāta family, who apparently governed the district of Chuksha.² According to Fleet there were two Patikas.³ But in the opinion of Marshall there was only one viceroy of the name of Patika.⁴ The Satrapal line of Kusuluka was intimately connected with the Satraps of Mathurā.⁵ The coins of Liaka Kusuluka show the transition of the district to which they belonged, i.e., a part of Eastern Gandhāra, from the rule of the Greek house of Enkratides to the Śakas.⁶ We learn from the Taxila, or the so-called Sirsukh, plate, dated in the year 78, that Liaka was a Satrap of the great king Moga and that Patika, his son, was a great gift-lord (mahādānapati).⁷

(b) Manigul and his son Zelonises or Jihonika.—Numismatists consider them to be Satraps of Pushkalāvati during the reign of Azes II. But the Taxila Silver

1 Corpus, II. i. 103.

2 Bühler, Ep. Ind., IV, p. 54; Konow, Corpus, II. i. 25-28. Chuksha, according to Stein, is the present Chach in the north of the District of Attock. See also AGI², 63, 126.

3 JRS., 1907, p. 1035. The existence of at least two Liakas is, however, proved by the Taxila plate and the Zeda inscription (Corpus, II. i. 145). A Lia(ka) appears also to be mentioned in the Mānsehrā inscription of the year 68. He may have been identical with the father of Patika, Ep. Ind. XXI, 257.

4 JRS., 1914, pp. 979 ff.

5 Cf. Inscription G on the Mathurā Lion Capital.

6 Rapson's Ancient India, p. 154.

7 Ep. Ind., XXI, 257; JRS., 1932, 953n.

Vase Inscription of the year 191 discovered by Marshall in 1927¹ shows that Jihonika was a Kshatrapa in Cukhsa near Taxila in the year 191 of an era of Śaka (or Parthian?) institution whose exact epoch is not known.² The successor of Zeionises was apparently Kuyula Kara³

(c) The House of Indravarman⁴—It consisted of Indravarman, his son Aspavarman, and Aspa's nephew Sasa(s) or Sasa(n). Aspavarman acted as governor of both Azes II and Gondophernes, while Sasa(s) served under Gondophernes and Pakores.

The Satraps of Mathurā.

The earliest of this line of princes probably were the associated rulers Hagāna and Hagāmasha. They were perhaps succeeded by Rājuvula, who may have governed Śākala at an earlier stage. According to Sircar he established himself in Mathurā late in life. The genealogical table of the house of Rājuvula or Rājula as arranged by Sten Konow⁵ is given below in a foot-note.

Rājuvula or Rājula is known from inscriptions as well as coins. An inscription in Brāhmī characters at 1 JRAS., 1928, January, 137 f. Corpus, II, i. 81f.

2 Ep. Ind., XXI. 255f.

3 CHI, 582n, 588.

4 Indravarman has been identified by some scholars with Itravarma, son of Vijayamitra, who is known from certain coins. Vijayamitra is further regarded as identical with, or a successor of, Viyakamitra, a feudatory of Minedra (Menander). The importance of these identifications, in determining the chronological relation of the Indo-Greeks and the Śakas, is obvious (Sircar, Select Inscriptions, 102 ff; Mookerji, IC, XIV, 4, 1948, 205 f).

5 Corpus II, i. 47.

Mora near Mathurā calls him a Mahākshatrapa or Great Satrap (viceroy). But the Greek legend on some of his coins describes him as "king of kings, the Saviour" showing that he probably declared his independence.

Rājuvula was apparently succeeded by his son Śudāsa, Soṃdāsa or Śoḍāsa. Inscription B on the Mathurā Lion Capital mentions him as a Kshatrava (Satrap) and as the son of the Mahākshatrava Rajula (Rājuvula). But later inscriptions at Mathurā written in Brāhmī characters call him a Mahākshatrapa. One of these inscriptions gives a date for him in the year 72¹ of an unspecified era. It is clear that during his father's lifetime he was only a Satrap. But on his father's death some time before the year 72, he became a Great Satrap. Sten Konow adduces grounds for believing that Śoḍāsa dated his inscription in the so-called Vikrama era.² Consequently the year 72, in his opinion, possibly corresponds to A. D. 15.

Dr. R. C. Majumdar refers the dates of the Northern Satraps (of Taxila and Mathurā) to the Śaka era, and places them in the middle of the second century A.D. But Ptolemy, who flourished about that time, places neither Taxila nor Mathurā within Indo-Scythia, i.e., the Śaka dominion. This shows that neither Taxila nor Mathurā was a Śaka possession in the second century A.D. The principal Indo-Scythian possessions in Ptolemy's time were Patalene (the Indus Delta), Abiria (the Ābhira country in Western India), and Syrastrène (Kāthiāwād).³ This is exactly what we find in the Junāgaḍh

The genealogy, as reconstructed by Sten Konow, is not accepted by many scholars. An older view makes Kharaosta the son of a daughter of Rājuvula. For R's connection with C. Pañjāb, see Allan, CCAI, 185. Cf. 438 ante.

1 42 according to Rapson. But 72 is preferred by most scholars.

2 Ep. Ind., Vol. XIV, pp. 139-141.

3 Ind. Ant., 1884, p. 354.

inscription of the Saka ruler Rudradāman I, who flourished in the middle of the second century A.D. In Ptolemy's time Taxila was included within the Arsa (Sanskrit Uraśā) territory,¹ and Mathurā belonged to the Kaspeiraioi.² Dr. Majumdar suggests that Ptolemy probably noticed the Śaka empire of Maues and his successors (which included Taxila, Mathurā and Ujjayinī) under the name of 'Kaspeiraioi.'³ But we should remember that far from including Taxila, Mathurā and Western India within one empire, Ptolemy sharply distinguishes the land of the Kaspeiraioi from Indo-Scythia which was the real Śaka domain in the middle of the second century A.D.⁴ Moreover, the territory of the Kaspeiraioi must have included the region below the sources of the Jhelum, Chenab and the Ravi, i.e., Kaśmīra and its neighbourhood;⁵ and there is no evidence that the dynasty of Maues ever ruled in Kaśmīra. It was only under the kings of Kanishka's dynasty that Kaśmīra and Mathurā formed parts of one and the same empire. As suggested by the Abbé Boyer the Kaspeiraioi of Ptolemy evidently referred to the Kushān empire.

We learn from the Mathurā Lion Capital Inscriptions that when Sudāsa, i.e. Śodāsa, was ruling as a mere Kshatrapa, Kusuluka Patika was a Mahākshatrapa. As Śodāsa was a Mahākshatrapa in the year 72, he must have been a

1. Ind. Ant., 1884, p. 348.

2. Ind. Ant., 1884, p. 350.

3. Journal of the Department of Letters, University of Calcutta, (Vol. I, p. 98 n.

4. Cf. Ptolemy, Ind. Ant., 1884, p. 354, and the Junāgaḍh inscription of the Śaka ruler Rudradāman.

5. Land of Kaśyapa? Rājatarāṅgiṇī, 1, 27. 1A. IV, 227. Stein accepts the identification of the territory of the Kaspeiraioi with Kaśmīra, but rejects Wilson's assumption that Kaśmīra was derived from Kaśyapa pura (JASB, 1899, Extra 2, pp. 9-13). The evidence of Ptolemy seems to suggest that the city of Kaspeira stood close to Multan. Alberuni (I, 298) in a later age mentions Kaśyapapura as a name of Multan itself.

Kshatrapa before 72. Consequently Kusuluka Patika must have been reigning as a Mahākshatrapa contemporary of the Kshatrapa Śodāsa before the year 72. The Taxila plate of the year 78, however, does not style Patika as a Kshatrapa or Mahākshatrapa. It calls him Mahādānapati (great gift-lord) and gives the satrapal title to his father Liaka.¹ Dr. Fleet thinks² that we have to do with two different Patikas. Marshall and Sten Konow on the other hand, hold the view that the Mahādānapati Patika, who issued the Taxila plate, is identical with the Mahākshatrapa Kusuluka Patika of the Mathurā Lion Capital, but the era in which the inscription of Sam 72 is dated, is not the same as in the Taxila plate of Sam 78. In other words while Fleet duplicates kings, Marshall and Sten Konow duplicate eras. It is difficult to come to any final decision from the scanty data at our disposal. Fleet's theory is not improbable in view of the fact that we have evidence regarding the existence of at least two Liakas. But the duplication of kings is not absolutely necessary as the designation 'mahādānapati' given to Patika in the Taxila plate does not preclude the possibility of his having been a Mahākshatrapa as well a few years back. We should remember in this connection that there are instances among the Western Kshatrapas of Chashtana's line, of Mahākshatrapas being reduced to a humbler rank³ while other members of the family held the higher office,⁴ and of a Kshatrapa (Jayadāman) being mentioned without the satrapal title.⁵ It is, therefore, not altogether improbable that the inscription of Sam 72 and 1 Sten Konow, Corpus, Vol. II, Pt. I, 28; Ep. Ind. XIX, 257.

2 J.R.A.S., 1913, 1001 n.

3 Cf. Majumdar, The Date of Kanishka, Ind. Ant., 1917.

4 Rapson, Coins of the Andhra Dynasty, etc., cxxiv f.

5 Andhau Inscriptions.

that of Sam 78 are dated in the same era, and yet the two Patikas are identical.¹ If Sten Konow and Sir John Marshall are right in reading the name of Aja-Aya (Azes) in the Kalawān Copper-plate Inscription of the year 134 and the Taxila Inscription of 136, we have additional instances of a ruler of this age being mentioned without any title indicative of his rank.

Kharaosta was, according to Konow, the father-in-law, and according to Fleet, a grandson (daughter's son), of Rājuvula and consequently a nephew of Śodāsa.² The inscriptions A and E on the Mathurā Lion Capital mention him as the Yuvaraya Kharaosta. Sten Konow thinks³ that he was the inheritor to the position as "king of kings" after Moga. His known coins are of two types, presenting legends in Greek characters on the obverse and in Kharoshthi on the reverse. The Kharoshthi legend runs thus : Kshatrapasa pra Kharaostasa Arṭasa putrasa. 'Pra' according to Sten Konow, may be a reflex of Prachakshasa.⁴

The coins of the family of Rājuvula are imitated from those of the Stratos and also of a line of Hindu princes who ruled at Mathurā. This shows that in the Jumna valley Scythian rule superseded that of both Greek and Hindu princes.

1 The Rājatarāṅgini furnishes an instance of a son being replaced by his father as king (cf. the case of Pārtha), and of a king abdicating in favour of his son and again resuming control over the kingdom ; cf. the case of Kalasa who continued to be a co-ruler after the resumption of control by his father, and that of Rājā Mānsingh of Jodhpur (1804-43). The cases of Vijayāditya VII (Eastern Chalukya, D. C. Ganguli, p. 104) and of Zāfar Khān of Gujarāt may also be cited in this connection (Camb. Hist. Ind., III, 295).

2 JRAS., 1913. 919, 1009.

3 Corpus, 36.

4 Corpus, xxxv. 'prachakshasa' (= epiphanous, "of the gloriously manifest one"), occurs on coins of Strato I and Polyxanos. It is, however, possible that the Sanskrit equivalent of the name of the Satrap is prakhara-ojas, "of burning effulgence".

A fragmentary inscription found by Vogel on the site of Gaṇeśhrā near Mathurā revealed the name of a Satrap of the Kshaharāta family called Ghaṭāka.¹

The Nationality of the Northern Satraps.

Cunningham held that the inscription P on the Mathurā Lion Capital—Sarvasa Sakastanasa puyae—gave decisive proof that Rājuvula or Rājula, Śoḍāsa and other connected Satraps were of Śaka nationality. Dr. Thomas shows, however, that the Satraps of Northern India were the representatives of a mixed Parthian and Śaka domination. This is strongly supported a priori by the fact that Patika of Taxila, who bears himself a Persian name, mentions as his overlord the great king Moga whose name is Śaka. The inscriptions on the Lion Capital exhibit a mixture of Persian and Śaka nomenclature.² Attention may, however, be called here to the fact that in the Harivamśa there is a passage³ which characterises the Pahlavas or Parthians as “śmaśrudhūrīnaḥ” (bearded).⁴ Judged by this test, kings of the family of Rājuvula and Nahapāna, who are not unoften taken to be Parthians, could not have belonged to that nationality as their portraits found on coins⁵ show no traces of beards and whiskers. They were, therefore, almost certainly Śakas.

1 JRAS., 1912, p. 121.

2 Ep. Ind., Vol. IX, pp. 138 ff.; JRAS, 1906, 215 f. For Sten Konow's views see Corpus, II. i. xxxvii.

3 I. 14, 17.

4 The passage is also found in the Vāyu Purāṇa, Ch. 88, 141.

5 JRAS., 1913, between pp. 630-631.

SECTION II. THE PAHLAVAS OR PARTHIANS.¹

Already in the time of Eukratides, Mithradates I, King of Parthia (c. 171-138/37 B.C.), had probably conquered portions of the Pañjab or Sind, and in the days of the Śaka Emperors of the family of Maues-Moga, princes of mixed Śaka-Pahlava origin ruled as Satraps in Northern India. But it is important to note that Isidore of Charax, possibly a younger contemporary of Augustus, who wrote not earlier than 26 B.C. (reign of Phraates IV and the revolt of Tiridates) and is quoted by Pliny, does not include the Kābul Valley, Sind or the Western Pañjāb within the empire of the Parthians or Pahlavas. The easternmost provinces of the Parthian empire mentioned by that writer are Herat (Aria), Farah (the country of the Anauoi, a segment of Aria (i.e., the Herat Province), the districts between the Lake Hamun and the Helmund (Drangiana and Sakasthāna), and Kandahār (Arachosia or "White India"). Towards the middle of the first century A.D., however, Śaka sovereignty in parts of Gandhāra must have been supplanted by that of the Parthians. In 43-44 A.D., when Apollonios of Tyana is reputed to have visited Taxila, the throne was occupied by Phraotes, evidently a Parthian.² He was however independent of Vardanes, the great King of Babylon and Parthia (c. 39-47/48 A.D.)³, and himself powerful enough to exercise

1 The Parthians (Parthava, Pahlava) were an Irānian people established on the borders of the district that is today Mazandarān and Khurāsān. About 249/8 B.C. they revolted against the Seleukids under the command of Aršhaka (Arsaces), a leader of Scythia (A Survey of Persian Art, p. 71).

2 Apratihata (Gondophernes) according to Herzfeld and Tarn (Greeks, 341).

3 Debevoise, A Political History of Parthia, 270.

suzerain power over the Satrap of the Indus. Christian writers refer to a king of India named Gundaphar or Gūdnaphar and his brother Gad who are said to have been converted by the Apostle St. Thomas and who, therefore, lived in the first century A.D.¹ We have no independent confirmation of the story of the biographer of Apollonios. But the "so-called" Takht-i-Bāhi record of the year 103 (of an unspecified era) shows that there was actually in the Peshāwar district a king named Guduvhara (Gondophernes). The names of Gondophernes and, in the opinion of some scholars, of his brother Gad, are also found on coins.² According to Rapson the two brothers were associated as sub-kings under the suzerainty of Orthagnes (Verethragna). Sten Konow, however, identifies Orthagnes with Guduvhara himself, while Herzfeld suggests that he was the "unnamed son of Vardanes, mentioned by Tacitus, who claimed the throne against Volagases I about A.D. 55."³ Dr. Fleet referred the date of the Takht-i-Bahāi (Bāhi) inscription to the Mālava-Vikrama era, and so placed the record in A.D. 47.⁴ He remarked "there should be no hesitation about referring the year 103 to the established Vikrama era of B.C. 58; instead of having recourse, as in other cases too, to some otherwise unknown era beginning at about the same time. This places Gondophernes in A.D. 47 which suits exactly the Christian tradition

1 The original Syriac text of the legend of St. Thomas belongs probably to the third century A.D. (J.R.A.S., 1913, 634). Cf. Ind. Ant., 3, 309.

2 Whitehead, pp. 95, 155. Gondophernes = Vindapharna, "Winner of glory" (Whitehead, p. 146, Rapson and Allan). The king assumed the title of Devavrata. Konow, following Fleet, takes the word Guḍana on the coins to refer to the tribe of Gondophernes (Corpus, II. i. xlv).

3 Corpus, xlv; The Cambridge Shorter History of India, 70.

4 J.R.A.S., 1905, pp. 223-235; 1906, pp. 706-710; 1907, pp. 169-172; 1913-1940; 1913, pp. 999-1003. Cf. the views of Cunningham and Dowson (IA, 4, 307). The discovery of the Khalatse and the Taxila silver vase inscriptions, however, which makes him a contemporary of St. Thomas, the Apostle."

The power of Gondophernes did not probably in the beginning extend to the Gandhāra region. His rule seems to have been restricted at first to Southern Afghanistan.¹ He succeeded, however, in annexing the Peshāwar district before the twenty-sixth year of his reign. There is no epigraphic evidence that he conquered Eastern Gandhāra (Taxila) though he certainly wrested some provinces from the Azes family. The story of the supersession of the rule of Azes II by him in one of the Scythian provinces is told by the coins of Aspavarman. The latter at first acknowledged the suzerainty of Azes (II) but later on obeyed Gondophernes as his overlord. Evidence of the ousting of Śāka rule by the Parthians in the Lower Indus Valley is furnished by the author of the Periplus in whose time (about 60 to 80 A.D.) Minnagara, the metropolis of Scythia, i.e., the Śāka kingdom in the Lower Indus Valley, was subject to Parthian princes who were constantly driving each other out. If Sten Konow and Sir John Marshall are right in reading the name of Aja-Aya or Azes in the Kalawān Inscription of 134 and the Taxila Inscription of 136, then it is possible that Śāka rule survived in a part of Eastern Gandhāra,² while Peshāwar and the Lower Indus Valley passed into makes the theory of Fleet less plausible unless we believe in the existence of a plurality of Śāka-Pahlava eras. Dr. Jayaswal was inclined to place Gondophernes in 20 B.C. But this date is too early to suit the Christian tradition.

1 J.R.A.S., 1913, 1003, 1010.

2 For Fleet's interpretation of "Sa 136 ayasa ashaḍasa masasa, etc.," see J.R.A.S., 1914, 995 ff.; also Calcutta Review, 1922, December, 493-494. Konow thought at one time that ayasa stood for ādyasya (=the first). He took the word as qualifying ashaḍasa. But he changed his views after the discovery of the Kalawān Inscription of 134. He now thinks that the addition ayasa, ajasa does not characterize the era as instituted by Azes, but simply as 'connected with Parthian rulers' (Ep. Ind., xxi. 255 f.). He refers the dates 134, 136 to the era of 58 B.C.

the hands of the Parthians. But the absence of an honorific title before the name of Aja-Aya and the fact that in the record of the year 136 we have reference to the establishment of relics of the Buddha in Takshaṣilā "for the bestowal of health on the Mahārāja Rājātirāja Devaputra Khushaṇa," probably suggest that the years 134 and 136 belong, not to the pravardhamāna-vijayarājya (the increasing and victorious reign) of Azes, but to a period when his reign was a thing of the past (atītarājya), though the reckoning was still associated with his honoured name. The dating in the Jānibighā inscription (Lakṣhmaṇa-senasy = atītarājye sam 83) possibly furnishes us with a parallel.¹

The Greek principality in the Upper Kābul Valley had apparently ceased to exist when Apollonios travelled in India. We learn from Justin that the Parthians gave the coup de grace to the rule of the Bactrian Greeks. Marshall says² that the Kābul valley became a bone of contention between the Parthians and the Kushāns. This is quite in accordance with the evidence of Philostratos who refers to the perpetual quarrel of the "barbarians" with the Parthian king of the Indian borderland in 43-44 A.D.

With Gondophernes were associated as subordinate rulers his nephew Abdagases (in S. Afghanistan), his generals Aspavarman and Sasa(s) or Sasa(n), and his governors Sapedana and Satavastra (probably of Taxila).

After the death of the great Parthian monarch his empire split up into smaller principalities. One of these (probably Sistān) was ruled by Sanabares, another (probably embracing Kandahār and the Western Pañjāb) by Pakores, and others by princes whose coins Marshall

1 Raychaudhuri, Studies in Indian Antiquities, pp. 165 f.

2 ASI, AR, 1929-30, 56 ff.

recovered for the first time at Taxila. Among them was Sasa(s) or Sasa(n) who acknowledged the nominal sway of Pakores. The internecine strife among these Parthian princelings is probably reflected in the following passage of the Periplus :—

“Before it (Barbaricum) there lies a small island and inland behind it is the metropolis of Scythia, Minnagara ; it is subject to Parthian princes who are constantly driving each other out.”

Epigraphic (and in some cases numismatic) evidence proves that the Pahlava or Parthian rule in Afghanistan, the Panjāb and Sind was supplanted by that of the Kushāṇa, Gushāṇa, Khushāṇa or Kushān¹ dynasty. We know that Gondopernes was ruling in Peshāwar in the year 103 (A.D. 47 according to Fleet, somewhat earlier according to others). But we learn from the Panjtār inscription that in the year 122 the sovereignty of the region had passed to a Gushāṇa or Kushān king.² In the year 136 the Kushān suzerainty had extended to Taxila. An inscription of that year mentions the interment of some relics of the Buddha in a chapel at Taxila “for bestowal of perfect health upon the Mahārāja, rājātirāja devaputra Khushāṇa.” The Sui Vihār and Mahenjo Daro Kharoshthī Inscriptions prove the Kushān conquest of the Lower Indus Valley. The Chinese writer Panku, who died in A. D. 92, refers to the Yue-chi occupation of Kao-fou or Kābul. This shows that the race to which the Kushāns belonged took possession of Kābul before A. D. 92. It is, no doubt, asserted by a later writer that Kao-fou is a mistake for Ton-mi. But the mistake

1 For a note on the dynastic nomenclature, see Schafer JAOS. 67. 4.

2 We learn from Phitōstratos that already in the time of Apollonios (A.D. 43-44) the barbarians (Kushāns?) who lived on the border of the Parthian kingdom of Taxila were perpetually quarrelling with Phraotes and making raids into his territories (The Life of Apollonius, Loeb Classical Library, pp. 183 ff.).

in Kennedy's opinion would not have been possible, had the Yue-chi not been in possession of Kao-fou in the time of Panku.¹ The important thing to remember is that a Chinese writer of 92 A. D., thought Kao-fou to have been a Yue-chi possession long before his time. If Sten Konow is to be believed, the Kushāns had established some sort of connection with the Indian borderland as early as the time of Gondophernes. In line 5 of the Takht-i-Bāhī inscription Sten Konow reads "erjhuna Kapasa puyae,"² "in honour of prince Kapa", i.e., Kujūla Kadphises, the Kushān king, who is said to have succeeded Hermaios in the Kābul valley. Kujūla Kadphises has been identified with the Kouei-chouang (Kushān) prince K'ieou-tsieou-k'io who took possession of Kao-fou (Kābul), Po-ta and Ki-pin. It appears from numismatic evidence that this Kushān chief³ was possibly an ally of Hermaios with whom he appears to have issued joint coins.⁴ Kadphises seems also to have been at first on friendly terms with the Parthian rulers of Gandhāra. But 1 JRAS., 1912, pp. 676-678. Note also Pan-ku's reference to a man's head on the coins of Ki-pin (JRAS., 1912 p. 685 n.) which possibly suggests an acquaintance with the coinage of Kuyula Kaphsa (or Kasa?).

2 Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 294; XVIII (1926), p. 282. Corpus, II, i. 62. Some regard this "Kapa" as a phantom. It is interesting to recall in this connection a statement of Philostratos (The life of Apollonius of Tyana, Loeb Classical Library, p. 185) that in A.D. 43-44, the Parthian king of Taxila had enlisted the services of certain "barbarians" to patrol his country so that instead of invading his dominions they themselves kept off the "barbarians" that were on the other side of the frontier and were difficult people to deal with. Prince "Kapa" (if the reading and interpretation be correct) may have been at first one of these friendly barbarian chiefs. His date is indicated by his (?) imitation of a Roman emperor's head of a style not later than about A.D. 60 (JRAS., 1913, 918).

3 Or one of his ancestors? Cf. Tarn, The Greeks, p. 339, 343.

4 Pedigree coins according to Tarn.

KUSHĀN CONQUEST OF NORTH-WEST INDIA 457

the destruction of Hermaios' kingdom by the Parthians¹ probably supplied him with a casus belli. He made war on the latter and eventually destroyed their power in the north-west borderland of India.

1 Before the Parthian conquest, Kāpiśi apparently had to obey, for a time, the rule of Maues and Spalirises (CHI, 590 f). The Kushāns, the "barbarian" enemies of "Phraotes", may have had a hand in the restoration of Greek rule before its final disappearance in the Kābul valley.

SECTION III. THE GREAT KUSHĀNS.

We are informed by the Chinese historians that the Kushāns (chiefs of the Kuei-shuang or Kouei-chouang principality) were a section of the Yueh-chi (Yüe-chi) race. The modern Chinese pronunciation of the name according to Kingsmill is said to be Yue'-ti. M. Lévi and other French scholars write Yue-tchi or Yue'-tchi.

We learn from Ssū-ma-ch'ien (the Chinese annalist, who recorded the story of the travels of Chang-k'ien, the famous envoy), that between B.C. 174 and 165 the Yue-chi were dwelling between the Tsenn-hoang (Tun-huang) country and the K'i-lien mountains, or Tien-chan Range, south and east of Lake Issykul in Chinese Turkestan.¹ At that date the Yue-chi were defeated and expelled from their country by the Hiung-nū who slew their king and made a drinking vessel out of his skull. The widow of the slain ruler succeeded to her husband's power. Under her guidance the Yue-chi in the course of their westward migration attacked the Wu-sun whose king was killed.² After this exploit the Yue-chi attacked the Śakas in the plains of the Jaxartes or the Syr Darya and compelled their king or 'lord' to seek refuge in Kipin (Kāpiśa-Lampāka-Gandhāra).³

Meantime the son of the slain Wu-sun king grew up to manhood and, with the assistance of the Hiung-nū

1 Smith says (EH1⁴, p. 263) that they occupied land in the Kansuh Province in North-Western China. See also CHI, 565.

2 The main section of the Yue-chi passed on westwards beyond Lake Issykkūl, the rest diverged to the South and settled on the frontier of Tibet. The latter came to be known as the "Little Yue-chi". Eventually they established their capital at Purushapura in Gandhāra. Smith, EH1⁴, 264; Konow, Corpus, II. i. lxxvi.

3 A part of the Śaka horde apparently seized Ferghana (Ta Yuan) c. 128 B.C. (Tarn, Greeks, 278 n 4, 279).

drove the Yue-chi further west into the Ta-hia territory washed by the Oxus. The Ta-hia, who were devoted to commerce, unskilled in war and wanting in cohesion, were easily reduced to a condition of vassalage by the Yue-chi who established their capital or royal encampment to the north of the Oxus (Wei), in the territory now belonging to Bukhārā (in ancient Sogdiana). The Yue-chi capital was still in the same position when visited by Chang-kien in or about B.C. 128-26.¹

The adventures of Chang-kien as related by Ssū-mach'ien in the Sse-ke or Shi-ki (completed before B.C. 91) were retold in Pan-ku's Ts'ien Han-shu or Annals of the First Han Dynasty that dealt with the period B.C. 206—A.D. 9 or 24, and was completed by Pan-ku's sister after his death in A.D. 92, with three important additions, namely :—

1. That the kingdom of the Ta-Yue-chi had for its capital the town of Kien-chi (Kien-she), to the north of the Oxus,² and Kipin lay on its southern frontier.

2. That the Yue-chi were no longer nomads.

3. That the Yue-chi kingdom had become divided into five principalities, viz., Hi(eo)u-mi (possibly Wakhān³ between the Pamirs and the Hindukush), Chouangmi or Shuang-mi (Chitral, south of Wakhān and the Hindukush) Konei-chouang or Kuei-shuang, the Kushān principality, probably situated between Chitral and the Panjshir

1 JRAS., 1903, pp. 19-20; 1912, pp. 668 ff., PAOS., 1917, pp. 89 ff.; Whitehead, 171; CHI, 459, 566, 701; Tarn, Greeks, 84, 274 n, 277; Konow, Corpus, II. i. xxii-xxiii, liv, lxii. — — — — —

2 Cf. Corpus, II. i. liv.

3 A Bakanapati, apparently lord of Wakhān, figures in the inscription of Mahārāja rājātirāja devaputra Kushānaputra Shāhi Vamataksha (ma?) whose identity is uncertain. The title devaputra connects him with the Kanishka Group of Kushān kings, and not the Kadphises group. ASI. 1911-12, Pl. I. 15; 1930-34, pt. 2. 288.

country, Hit(h)un (Parwān on the Panjshir) and Kao-fou (Kābul).¹

We next obtain a glimpse of the Yue-chi in Fan-Ye's Hou Han-shu or Annals of the Later Han Dynasty which cover the period between A.D. 25 and 220. Fan-Ye based his account on the report of Pan-young (cir. A.D. 125) and others.² He himself died in 445 A.D. The capital of the Yue-chi was then probably the old Ta-hia (Bactrian) city of Lan-shi (Lan-shen)³ to the south of the Oxus. Fan-Ye gives the following account of the Yue-chi conquest :

"In old days the Yue-chi were vanquished by the Hiung-nū. They then went to Ta-hia and divided the kingdom among five Hi-h(e)ou or Yabgous, viz., those of Hieoumi, Chouang-mi, Kouei-chouang, Hitouen and Toumi. More than hundred years after that, the Yabgou (Yavuga) of Kouei-chouang (Kushān) named K'ieou-tsieou-k'io attacked and vanquished the four other Yabgous and called himself king or lord (Wang); he invaded Ngan-si (the Arsakid territory, i.e., Parthia) and took possession of the territory of Kao-fou (Kābul), overcame Po-ta⁴ and Ki-pin and became complete master of these

1 A later historian regards Kao-fou as a mistake for Tou-mi which, however, was probably not far from Kābul, JRAS., 1912, 669. For the proposed identifications see Corpus, II. i. lvi. Cf. JRAS., 1903, 21; 1912, 669. In Ep. Ind. XXI, 258, S. Konow suggests the identification of Kouei-shuang with Gandhāra or the country immediately to its north.

2 Cf. Konow, Corpus, liv: "It is accordingly the events of the period A.D. 25-125 which are narrated by Fan Ye, though there are some additions referring to a somewhat later time in the case of countries which were near enough to remain in contact with China after the reign of emperor Ngan" (107-25). See also Ep. Ind., XXI, 258.

3 Alexandria = Zariaspa or Bactria (Tarn, Greeks, 115, 298).

4 Perhaps identical with the country of Po-tai which, in the time of Sung-yun, sent two young lions to the King of Gandhāra as present (Beal, Records of the Western World, Vol I, ci). Konow (Ep. Ind., XVIII) identified P'u-ta with Ghazni, but later on (Ep. Ind., XXI, 258) suggested its identification with Butkhāk, ten miles east of Kābul.

kingdoms. K'ieou-tsieou-k'io died at the age of more than eighty. His son Yen-kao-tchen succeeded him as king. In his turn he conquered T'ien-tehou (lit. India, on the banks of a great river, apparently the kingdom of Taxila referred to by Philostratos), and established there a chief for governing it. From this time the Yue-chi became extremely powerful. All the other countries designated them Kushān after their king, but the Han retained the old name, and called them 'Ta-Yue-chi."

"Kieou-tsieou-kio" has been identified with Kujula¹ Kadphises (I),² or Kozola Kadaphes, the first Kushān king who struck coins to the south of the Hindukush. Numismatic evidence suggests that he was the colleague or ally,³ and afterwards the successor, of Hermaios, the last Greek prince of the Kābul valley. The prevalent view that Kadphises conquered Hermaios is, in the opinion of Marshall, wrong. Sten Konow finds his name mentioned in the Takht-i-Bāhī inscription of the year 103 belonging to the reign of Gondophernes.⁴ The inscription probably belongs to a period when the Kushān and Parthian rulers were on friendly terms. But the Parthian attack on the kingdom of Hermaios apparently led to a rupture which ended in war. The result was that the Parthians were ousted by Kadphises I.

1 Cf. Kusuluka. The expression probably means 'strong' or beautiful (Konow, Corpus, 1). According to Burrow (The Language of the Kharoshthī Documents, 82, 87) Kujula = Guśura = Vazir. - Dr. Thomas possibly thinks that the word Kujula has the sense of 'Saviour'.

2 Pahlavi Kad = chief + pises or pes = form, shape, JRAS., 1913, 632 n.

3 Fleet and Thomas, JRAS., 1913, 967, 1034; in the opinion of some scholars Hermaios was dead at the time of the Kushān conquest. Coins bearing his name continued, according to this view, to be struck long after he had passed away. Tarn regards the Hermaios-Kadphises coins as "pedigree coins". Supporters of the 'alliance' theory may point to the gold dollars circulating in Chungking engraved with relief portraits of Marshal Chiang Kaishek and President Roosevelt of the United States (A.B. Patrika, 29-3-1945).

4 The interpretation of Konow is not accepted by Professor Rapson, JRAS., 1930, p. 189.

Marshall identifies Kadphises I with the Kushān king of the Panjtar record (of the year 122) and the Taxila scroll of the year 136.¹ We should, however, remember that in the Taxila inscription of 136 the Kushān king is called Devaputra, a title which was characteristic of the Kanishka group and not of Kadphises I or II unless we identify Kadphises I with Kuyula Kara Kaphsa.² The monogram on the scroll is by no means characteristic only of coins of the Kadphises group, but it is also found, in Marshall's and S. Konow's opinion, on the coins of Zeionises and Kuyula Kara Kaphsa. If, however, S. Konow and Marshall are right in reading the name of Uvima Kavthisa in the Khalatse inscription of the year 184 or 187, and in identifying him with Vima Kadphises, the king of the Panjtar and Taxila records of 122 and 136 may have been a predecessor of Wema (Vima), and should preferably be identified with Kadphises I. But the reading 'Uvima Kavthisa' and his identification with Kadphises II are by no means certain.

Kadphises I probably coined no gold but only copper. His coinage shows unmistakable influence of Rome.³ He

1 JRS., 1914, pp. 977-78; Rapson, CHI, 582, identifies the Kushān king of 136 with Vima (i.e., Kadphises II).

2 Mentioned by R. D. Banerji, Prāchīna Mudrā, p. 85. I cannot vouch for the correctness of the reading.

3 In one class of his copper coins appears a Roman head which was palpably imitated from that of Augustus (B. C. 27-A. D. 14), Tiberius (A. D. 14-37), or Claudius (A. D. 41-54). JRS., 1912, 679; 1913, 912; Smith, Catalogue, 66; Camb. Short Hist. 74. Rome and its people, Romakas, first appear in the Mahābhārata (II. 51, 17) and occur not unfrequently in later literature. Diplomatic relations between Rome and India were established as early as the time of Augustus who received an embassy from king 'Pandion' (JRS., 1860, 309 ff. Camb. Hist. Ind. I. 597.) about B. C. 27-20. An Indian embassy was also received by Trajan (A. D. 98-117) shortly after A. D. 99. Strabo, Pliny and the Periplus refer to a brisk trade between India and the Roman Empire in the first century A. D. See JRS., 1904, 591; IA, 5, 281; 1923, 50. Pliny deplors the drain of specie (JRS., 1912, 986; 1913, 644-1031).

copied the issues of Augustus or those of his immediate successors preferably Claudius (A. D. 41-54),¹ and used the titles Yavuga (chief), Mahārāja, Rājātirāja (the great king, the king of kings) and "Sachadhrama thita", "Steadfast in the True Faith" (of the Buddha ?).²

"K'ieou-tsieon-k'io," or Kadphises I, was succeeded by his son Yen-kao-tchen, the Vima, Wima or Wema Kadphises of the coins, who is usually designated as Kadphises II. We have already seen that he conquered Tien-tchou or the Indian interior, probably Taxila, and set up a chief who governed in the name of the Yue-chi. According to Sten Konow³ and Smith⁴ it was Kadphises II who established the Śaka Era of A. D. 78. If this view be accepted then he was possibly the overlord of Nabapāna, and was the Kushān monarch who was defeated by the Chinese between A.D. 73 and 102 and compelled to pay tribute to the emperor Ho-ti (A.D. 89-105). But there is no direct evidence that Kadphises II established any era. No inscription or coin of this monarch contains any date which is referable to an era of his institution. On the contrary we have evidence that Kanishka did establish an era, that is to say, his method of dating was continued by his successors, and we have dates ranging probably from the year 1 to 99.

The conquests of the Kadphises kings opened up the path of commerce between China and the Roman Empire and India. Roman gold began to pour into this country in payment for silk, spice and gems. Kadphises II began to issue gold coins.⁵ He had a bilingual gold and copper

1 The Cambridge Shorter History, 74, 75.

2 Smith, Catalogue, 67 n ; Konow, Corpus, II. i. lxiv f. ; Whitehead, 181.

3 Ep. Ind., XIV. p, 141.

4 The Oxford History of India, p 128.

5 A gold coin of Wima or Vima, (NC 1934, 232) gives him the title Basileus Basilewn Soter Megas (Tarn, Greeks, 354 n 5). This throws welcome light on the problem of the identification of the nameless king Soter Megas.

coinage.¹ The obverse design gives us a new lifelike representation of the monarch. The reverse is confined to the worship of Śiva, which was gaining ground since the days of the Śiva-Bhāgavatas mentioned by Patañjali.² In the Kharoshthī inscription Kadphises II is called "the great king, the king of kings, lord of the whole world, the Mahīśvara, the defender" ³

We learn from Yu-Houan, the author of the *Wei-liao*⁴ which was composed between A.D. 239-265 and covers the period of the Wei down to the reign of the emperor Ming (227-239),⁵ that the Yue-chi power was flourishing in Kipin (Kāpiśa-Gandhāra), Ta-hia (Oxus valley), Kao-fou (Kābul) and Tien-tchou (India) as late as the second quarter of the third century A.D. But the early Chinese annalists are silent about the names of the successors of Yen-kao-tchen (Kadphises II). Chinese sources, however, refer to a king of the Ta-Yue-chi named Po-tiao or Puā-d'ien (possibly Vāsudeva) who sent an embassy to the Chinese emperor in the year 230.⁶ Inscriptions discovered in India have preserved the names with dates of the following great Kushān sovereigns besides the Kadphises group, viz., Kanishka I (1-23),⁷ Vāsishka (24-28),⁸ Huvishka

1 A silver piece resembling the ordinary small copper type of Vima Kadphises is also known (Whitehead, Indo-Greek Coins, 174). Other silver coins of the monarch are apparently referred to by Marshall (Guide to Taxila, 1918, 81). A silver coin of Kanishka is also known (ASI, AR, 1925-26 pl. lxf). Smith (*EHI*¹, p. 270) and others make mention of silver coins of Huvishka.

2 V, 2, 76; cf. Śaiva, Pāṇini, IV, 1, 112.

3 As already stated Sten Konow finds the name of Vima (Uvima) Kavthisa (Kadphises?) in the Khalatse (Ladakh) inscription of the year 187 (?). Corpus. II. i. 81. The identity of the King in question is, however, uncertain.

4 A History of the Wei Dynasty (A.D. 220-264).

5 Corpus. II. i. lv.

6 Corpus, II, i. lxxvii.

7 See JRAS., 1913, 980; 1924, p. 400. "Three Mathurā Inscriptions and their bearing on the Kushān Dynasty" by Dayārām Sahni; and IHQ., Vol. III (1927), p. 853, "Further Kanishka Notes" by Sten Konow.

8 If Vāsishka be identical with Vas Kushāna of a Sāñchī epigraph, his reign

(28-60),¹ Kanishka II, son of Vā-jheshka (41), and Vāsudeva (67-98).² Huvishka, Vā-jheshka and Kanishka II are probably referred to by Kalhaṇa as Hushka, Jushka and Kanishka who apparently ruled conjointly. It will be seen that Kanishka II ruled in the year 41, a date which falls within the reign of Huvishka (28-60). Thus the account of Kalhaṇa is confirmed by epigraphic evidence.

In the chronological order generally accepted by numismatists, the Kanishka group succeeded the Kadphises group. But this view is not accepted by many scholars. Moreover, there is little agreement even among scholars who place the Kanishka group after the Kadphises kings. The more important theories of Kanishka's date are given below :

1. According to Dr. Fleet, Kanishka reigned before the Kadphises group, and was the founder of that reckoning, commencing B.C. 58, which afterwards came to be known as the Vikrama Samvat.³ This view (held at one time by Cunningham and Dowson, and maintained by

(as sub-king) commenced not later than the year 22 as we learn from an inscription of that year on the pedestal of an image of the Buddha (Pro. of the Seventh Session of the I. H. Congress, Madras, p. 135).

1 See Ep. Ind., XXI, 55 ff.—Mathurā Brāhmī Inscription of the Year 28. Cf. Ep. Ind. xxiii, 35—Hidda inscription of 28.

2 Hyd. Hist. Cong. 164.

3 For discussions about the origin of the so-called Vikrama era see JRAS., 1913, pp. 637, 994 ff. ; Kielhorn in Ind. Ant. xx. (1891) 124 ff. ; 397 ff. ; Bhand. Com. Vol. pp. 187 ff. CHI., pp. 168, 533, 571 ; ZDMG, 1922, pp. 250 ff. Ep. Ind. xxiii. 48 ff. ; xxvi. 119 ff. ; Kielhorn (and now Altekar) adduce evidence which seems to show that the early use of the era, as may be inferred from records with dates that may be recognised to refer to this reckoning, was mainly confined to Southern and Eastern Rājputāna, Central India and the Upper Ganges Valley. The name of the era found in the earliest inscriptions recalls designations like that of king KRITA of Penzer, The Ocean of Story, III. 19. Kṛitiya rulers are mentioned by Fleet, JRAS, 1913, 998n. Kṛita may also have reference to the inauguration of a Golden Age after a period of toil and toil. From the fifth to the ninth century the reckoning was believed to be used Franke) was accepted by Kennedy, but was ably controverted by Dr. Thomas, and can no longer be upheld after the discoveries of Marshall.¹ Inscriptions, coins as well as the testimony of Hiuen Tsang clearly prove that Kanishka's dominions included Gandhāra, but we have already seen that according to Chinese evidence Yin-mo-fu, and not the Kushāns, ruled Kipin (Kāpiśa-Gandhāra) in the second half of the first century B.C. Allan thinks that "the gold coinage of Kanishka was suggested by the especially by the princes and people of Mālava. The connection of the name Vikrama with the era grew up gradually and was far from being generally adopted even in the ninth century A.D. The phraseology employed in the poems and inscriptions of the next centuries shows a gradual advance from the simple Samvat to Vikrama Samvat, Śrīnṛīpa Vikrama Samvat and so on. The change in nomenclature was probably brought about by the princes and people of Gujarāt whose hostility to the Mālavas is well known. The Śātavāhanas could not have founded this or any other era because they always used regnal years, and Indian literature distinguishes between Vikrama and Śālivāhana. As to the claims of Azes, see Calcutta Review, 1922, December, pp. 493-494. Fleet points out (JRAS., 1914, 995 ff.) that even when the name of a real king stands before the statement of the years, so that the translation would be "in the year of such and such a king" he is not necessarily to be regarded as the actual founder of that particular reckoning. The nomenclature of an era, current in a comparatively late period, more than a century after its commencement, is no proof of origins. Therefore, the use of the terms Ayasa or Ajasa in connection with the dates 134 and 136 of the Kalawan and Taxila inscriptions, does not prove that Azes was the founder of the particular reckoning used. His name may have been connected with the reckoning by later generations in the same way as the name of the Valabhi family came to be associated with the Gupta era, that of Śātavāhana with the Śaka era, and that of Vikrama with the "Kṛita" — Mālava reckoning itself which commenced in 58 B.C. Regarding the claims of Vikrama see Bhand. Com. Vol. and Ind. Ant., cited above. The Purāṇas while mentioning Gardabhilla are silent about Vikramāditya. Jaina tradition places Vikramāditya after Nahavāhana, or Nahapāna. Regarding the contention of Fleet that the Vikrama era is a northern reckoning attention may be invited to the observations of Kielhorn and to a note on Chola-Pāṇḍya Institutions contributed by Professor C. S. Srinivasachari to The Young Men of India, July, 1926. The Professor points out that the era was used in Madura in the 5th century A. D. Kielhorn proves conclusively that the area where the era of 58 B.C. was used in the earliest times did not include the extreme north-west of India.

1 Thomas, JRAS., 1913; Marshall, JRAS., 1914.

Roman solidus" and that the Kushān monarch can hardly be placed before Titus (79-81 A.D.) and Trajan (98-117 A.D.).¹

2. According to Marshall, Sten Konow, Smith and several other scholars Kanishka's rule began about 125 or 144 A.D.,² and ended in the second half of the second century A.D.³ Now, we learn from the Sui Vihār inscription that Kanishka's dominions included a portion at least of the Lower Indus Valley. Again we learn from the Junāgaḍh inscription of Rudradāman that the Mahākshatrapa's conquests extended to Sindhu and Sauvira (which included Multān according to the Purāṇas and Alberuni) and even to the land of the Yaudheyas in the direction of the Sutlej. Rudradāman certainly flourished from A.D. 130 to A.D. 150. He did not owe his position as Mahākshatrapa to anybody else (svayam adhigata Mahākshatrapa nāma).⁴ If Kanishka reigned in the middle of the second century A.D., how are we to reconcile his mastery over the Sui Vihār region in the Lower Indus Valley with the

1 Camb. Short History, p. 77.

2 Recently Ghirshman suggested the period A.D. 144-72 for Kanishka (Begram, Recherches Archeologiques et Historiques sur les Kouchans). The argument that India was still in A.D. 425 governed by a Viceroy (and therefore, not by Kanishka or Huvishka) is effectively disposed of by Thomas in JRAS., 1913. 1024. He points out that the historian of the Later Han is obviously referring to the conditions at the time of the invasion of Wima Kadphises, and not to the state of things in A.D. 125.

3 Dr. Sten Konow's views are difficult to ascertain. In the Indian Studies in honour of C. R. Lanman (Harvard University Press), p. 65, he mentions A.D. 134 as the initial point of the Kanishka reckoning which he and Dr. Van Wijk "have tried to establish" (cf. Acta Orientalia, III, 54 ff.). But in IHQ., III (1927), p. 851, he, along with Dr. Van Wijk, shows a predilection for A.D. 128-29 (cf. Cōrpus, lxxvii; Acta Orientalia, V, 168 ff.). Professor Rapson (in JRAS., 1930, 186 ff) points out the conjectural and inconclusive character of the two doctors' calculations. "The year 79," says he, "seems to be out of the running and a dark horse, the year 128-9, is the favourite."

4 Ep. Ind. VIII. 44.

contemporary sovereignty of Rudradāman?¹ Again Kanishka's dates 1-23, Vāsishka's dates 24-28, Huvishka's dates 28-60, and Vāsudeva's dates 67-98, suggest a continuous reckoning. In other words, Kanishka was the originator of an era. But we know of no era, ever current in, or known to, North-West India, which commenced in the second century A.D.

3. Dr. R. C. Majumdar thought that the era founded by Kanishka was the Traikutaka-Kalachuri-Chedi era of 248 A.D.² Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil points out that this is not possible.³ "In fact, the reign of Vāsudeva, the last of the Kushāns, came to an end 100 years after the beginning of the reign of Kanishka. Numerous inscriptions prove that Vāsudeva reigned at Mathurā. It is certain that this country, over which extended the empire of Vāsudeva, was occupied about 350 A.D. by the Yaudheyas and the Nāgas and it is probable that they reigned in this place nearly one century before they were subjugated by Samudragupta. The capitals of the Nāgas were Mathurā, Kāntipura and Padmāvati." The Kushān realm in the Indian borderland was, in A.D. 360, ruled by Grumbates.⁴ The theory of Dr. Majumdar cannot, moreover, be reconciled with the Tibetan tradition which makes Kanishka a contemporary of king Vijaya-kirti of Khotan,⁵ and the Indian tradition which makes Huvishka a contemporary of Nāgārjuna, and hence of a king of the Imperial Śātavāhana line, who can hardly be placed later than the second century A.D., as he is described as 'lord of the three seas' and sovereign of 1 See IHQ., March, 1930, 149.

2 For this era see JRAS., 1905, pp. 566-68.

3 Ancient History of the Deccan, p. 31.

4 E. H. I., p. 290.

5 Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 142.

• THE DATE OF KANISHKA'S CHAPLAIN 469

(South) Kōśala (in the Upper Deccan).¹ Lastly, the catalogues of the Chinese Tripitaka state that An-Shih-Kāo (148-170 A.D.) translated the Mārgabhūmi Sūtra of Saṅgharaksha who was the chaplain of Kanishka.² This shows conclusively that Kanishka flourished before 170 A.D.³ The arguments against the theory of Dr. Majumdar are equally applicable to the surmise of Sir R. G. Bhandarkar who placed Kanishka's accession in A.D. 278.

4. According to Fergusson, Oldenberg, Thomas, Banerji, Rapson and many other scholars Kanishka was the founder of that reckoning commencing A.D. 78, which came to be known as the Śaka era.⁴ This view is not accepted by Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil on the following grounds :—

1 Rājatarāṅgini, I. 173 ; Harsha-charita (Cowell), p. 252 ; Watters, Yuan-Chwang, II. p. 200. The epithet trisamudrādhipati which the Harsha-charita (Book VIII) applies to the Śātavāhana friend of Nāgārjuna cannot fail to remind one of Gautami putra Śātakarpi 'whose chargers drank the water of the three oceans' (trisamudatoyapitavāhana), or one of his immediate successors.

2 Eliot, Hinduism and Buddhism, II. p. 64n. Bunyiu Nanjio's Catalogue, App. II, 4.

3 According to the theory of Dr. Majumdar, Vāsudeva I ruled from (249 + 74) 323 to (249 + 98) 347 A.D. But Chinese evidence places a Po-tiao (Vāsudeva ?) in 230 A.D. The Khalatse Ins. also presents difficulties.

4 For the origin of the Śaka era see Fleet, CII., preface 56 ; JRAS, 1913, pp. 635, 650, 987 ff. ; Dubreuil, A. H. D., 26 ; Rapson Āndhra Coins, p. cv ; S. Konow, Corpus, II. i. xvi f. Nabapāna, who was not even a Mahākshatrapa in the years 42-45, and who never became a paramount sovereign, could not possibly have been the founder of the era. The theory which represents Nabapāna as the founder of the era used in his inscriptions (dated 42-46) is also contradicted by a Jaina tradition (relied on by Sten Konow, Corpus, II. i. xxxviii) which assigns to him (Nabavāhana) a period of only 40 years. Chashjana has no better claims and the evidence of the Periplus shows that he could not have ruled at Ujjain in 78 A.D. As to the theory that Kadphises II founded the reckoning in question, it may be pointed out that no inscription or coin of this monarch contains any date which is referable to an era of his institution. The only Scythian king who did establish an era in the sense that he used a regnal reckoning that was continued by his successors, is Kanishka. And the only reckoning that is attributed by Indian writers, since the days of the early Chalukyas, to a Scythian king is the Śaka era of 78 A.D.

(contd.)

(a) If we admit that Kujūla-Kadphises and Hermaios reigned about 50 A.D. and that Kanishka founded the Śaka era in 78 A.D. we have scarcely 28 years for the duration of the end of the reigns of Kadphises I and the whole of the reign of Kadphises II.

(But the date, A.D. 50, for Kādphises I is uncertain. Even if we accept it as correct, the period of 28 years is not too short in view of the fact that Kadphises II succeeded an octogenerian. When Kadphises I died "at the age of more than eighty" his son must have been an old man. It is, therefore, improbable that "his reign was protracted.")

(b) Marshall, says Prof. G. Jouveau-Dubreuil, has discovered at Taxila in the Chir Stūpa a document dated 136 which, in the Vikrama era, corresponds to 79 A.D., and the king mentioned therein is probably Kadphises I, but certainly not Kanishka.

(Now, the epithet Devaputra applied to the Kushān king of the Taxila scroll of 136, is characteristic of the Kanishka group, and not of the Kadphises kings.¹ So

Regarding the objection that the Śaka era was foreign to the north it may be pointed out that the era of 58 B.C., was equally foreign to the extreme north-west of India. The assertion that the Śaka era was never used in the north-west simply begs the question. It assumes what it has got to prove, viz., that the reckoning used by the house of Kanishka does not refer to the Śaka era. The very name Śaka points to its foreign, and possibly north-western, origin, as the imperial Śakas resided in that region, and it is only the viceroys who dwelt in Mālwa, Kāthiāwār and the Deccan. On the analogy of every famous Indian regnal reckoning it may be confidently asserted that the Śaka era, too, originated with a sovereign and not with a mere viceroy.

1 I am glad to note that a somewhat similar suggestion is now made by Dr. Thomas in Dr. B. C. Law Volume, II. 312. It is, however, by no means clear why it is said that the possibility of the identification of Devaputra with Kanishka 'has been ignored'. The Kadphises kings meant here are Kujūla (Kadphises I), and Vima (Wema) and not Kuyula Kara Kaphsa whose identification with Kadphises I is a mere surmise. Kara or Kala probably means a Mahārājaputra, a prince (Burrow, The Language of the Kharoshthī Documents, 82). Even if Kuyula Kara be identical with Kujūla (cf. Corpus, II, i. lxxv) and the Kushān king of the Taxila inscription of 136, it may be pointed out that it is by no means certain that the date 136 refers to the Vikrama era.

the discovery need not shake the conviction of those that attribute to Kanishka the era of 78 A.D. The omission of the personal name of the Kushān monarch does not necessarily imply that the first Kushān is meant. In several inscriptions of the time of Kumāra Gupta and Budha Gupta, the king is referred to simply as Gupta nripa.)

(c) Professor Dubreuil says : "Sten Konow has shown that the Tibetan and Chinese documents tend to prove that Kanishka reigned in the second century."

(This Kanishka may have been Kanishka of the Ārā Inscription of the year 41 which, if referred to the Śaka era, would give a date in the second century A.D. Po-t'iao of Sten Konow,¹ the king of the Yue-chi who sent an ambassador to China in A.D. 230, may have been one of the successors of Vāsudeva I. "Coins bearing the name of Vāsudeva continued to be struck long after he had passed away."² Dr. Smith, Mr. R. D. Banerji and Dr. S. Konow himself clearly recognise the existence of more than one Vāsueva.)³

(d) Sten Konow has also shown that the inscriptions of the Kanishka era and those of the Śaka era are not dated in the same fashion. (But the same scholar also shows that all the inscriptions of the Kanishka era are also not dated in the same fashion. In the Kharoshthi inscriptions, Kanishka and his successors recorded the dates in the same way as their Śaka-Pahlava predecessors, giving the name of the month and the day within the month. On the other hand, in their Brāhmī records Kanishka and his successors usually adopted the Ancient

1 Vāsudeva ? Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 141. Corpus, II, i. lxxvii : cf. Acta, II, 133.

2 EHI, 3rd ed., p. 272.

3 Ibid. pp. 272-78, Corpus, ii, I. lxxvii.

Indian way of dating.¹ Are we to conclude from this that the Kharoshthi dates of Kanishka's inscriptions are not to be referred to the same era to which the dates of the Brāhmī records are to be ascribed? If Kanishka adopted two different ways of dating, we fail to understand why he could not have adopted a third method to suit the local conditions in Western India. Sten Konow himself points out that in the Śaka dates we have the name of the month as in the Kharoshthi records with addition of the Paksha. "The Śaka era which (the Western Kshatrapas) used was a direct imitation of the reckoning used by their cousins in the north-west, the additional mentioning of the 'paksha' being perhaps a concession to the custom in the part of the country where they ruled." It is not improbable that just as Kanishka in the borderland used the old Śaka-Pahlava method, and in Hindusthān Proper used the ancient Indian way of dating prevalent there, so in Western India his officers added the 'paksha' to suit the custom in that part of the country.)²

1 Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 141. For an exception see ibid., XXI, 60.

2 As to the statement of Fleet endorsed by S. Konow, Corpus, lxxxvii, that the use of the Śaka era was foreign to Northern India attention may be invited to Kielhorn's List of Ins. of Northern India, Nos 351, 352, 362, 364-365, 368, 379, etc. So far as North-West India is concerned there is as little positive proof of the early use of the Vikrama era as of the era of 78 A.D. The paucity of early records dated in the Śaka era in the valley of the Upper Ganges and its tributaries is possibly due to the fact that the era of 58 B.C. already held the field. Later eras of undoubtedly northern origin, like those of the Guptas and Harsha, have practically been forgotten, but the era of 58 B.C. is still in use. In Southern India the case is different. The use of regnal years in the records of the Mauryas (many of which are located in the south) and those of the Śātavāhanas, Chetas, and other early dynasties, proves beyond doubt that there was no early reckoning in use that could compete with the new era that was introduced by the Śaka satraps. The story of the foundation of the Chālukya-Vikrama era suggests that the Śaka reckoning was at times deliberately sought to be discontinued because of its foreign association. This might have happened in the north as well as in the south.

According to Sten Konow Kanishka came from Khotan¹ and belonged to the Little Yüe-chi. The theory presents many difficulties.² It is certain that his successors in 230 were still known as the Ta (Great?) Yüe-chi. The family name according to Kumāralāta's Kalpanāmaṇḍitikā was Kiu-sha.³

Kanishka completed the Kushān conquest of Upper India and ruled over a wide realm which extended from Kāpiśa,⁴ Gandhāra and Kaśmīra to Benares. Traditions of his conflict with the rulers of Soked (Sāketa) and Pāṭaliputra in Eastern India are preserved by Tibetan and Chinese writers.⁵ Epigraphic records give us contemporary notices of him, with dates, not only from Peshāwar and possibly from Zeda (near Uṇḍ) in the Yuzufzai country, but also from Māṇikiālā near Rāwalpindi, from Sui Vihār about 16 miles south-west of Bahāwalpur (north of Sind), from Mathurā and Śrāvastī, and from Sārnāth near Benares.⁶ His coins are found in considerable quantities as far eastwards as Ghāzipur and Gorakhpur.⁷ The eastern portion of his empire was apparently governed by the Mahā-Kshatrapa Kharapallāna and the Kshatrapa Vanashpara. In the northern portion we find the general Lala and the Satraps Vespasi and Liaka. He fixed his own residence at Peshāwar (Purusba-

1 Corpus, II, i, lxxvi; cf. lxi; JRAS., 1903, 334.

2 Ibid., p. lxxvii.

3 Cf. Kuśa of Kanika lekha and Kuśadvīpa of the Purāṇas. See now Shafer, Linguistics in History, JAOS, 67, No. 4.

4 Cf. The story of the Chinese hostage mentioned by H. Tsang.

5 Ep. Ind., xiv, p. 142; Ind. Ant., 1903, p. 382; Corpus, II, i, pp. lxxii and lxxv. The reference may be to Kanishka II.

6 In recent years Mr. K. G. Goswami has drawn attention to a Brāhmī Inscription of Kanishka, dated in the year 2 (?), which he found in the Municipal Museum at Allahabad (Calcutta Review, July, 1934, p. 83).

7 A gold coin from Mahāsthāna (Bogra) represents the standing bearded figure of Kanishka—possibly an imitation of the coinage of the great Kushān king.

pura) and possibly established Kanishkapura¹ in Kaśmīra. It is, however, more probable that Kanishkapura was established by his namesake of the Ārā inscription. After making himself master of the south (i.e., India) Kanishka turned to the west and defeated the king of the Parthians.² In his old age he led an army against the north and died in an attempt to cross the Tsung-ling mountains (Tāghdumbāsh Pāmīr) between the Pāmīr Plateau and Khotan. The Northern expedition is apparently referred to by Hiuen-Tsang who speaks of his rule in the territory to the east of the Tsung-ling mountains, and of a Chinese Prince detained as a hostage at his court.

It is not improbable that Kanishka was the Kushān king repulsed by general Pan-ch'ao during the reign of the Emperor Ho-ti (A.D. 89-105). It has no doubt been argued that Kanishka "must have been a monarch of some celebrity and if the Chinese had come into victorious contact with him, their historians would have mentioned it." But if we identify Pan-ch'ao's Kushān contemporary with Kadphises II, the silence of the Chinese becomes still more mysterious and inexplicable because he was certainly well-known to the annalists. On the other hand, Kanishka was not known to them and the non-mention of his name, if he were Pan-ch'ao's contemporary, cannot be more surprising than that of his predecessor, Wema. In favour of Kanishka's identity with Pan-ch'ao's antagonist we may urge that Kanishka is known to have come into conflict with the Chinese, but the same cannot be said with regard to Wema, the events of whose reign, as recorded by Chinese annalists, do not include a first class war with China. The legend of Kanishka's death published by S. Le'vi contains a significant passage which runs thus :—"I have subjugated three regions ; all men have taken refuge with me, the region of the north alone has not come in to make its submission."¹ Have we not here a covert allusion to his failure in the encounter with his mighty northern neighbour ?

1 Cunningham (AGI², 114) located it near Śrīnagar. Stein and Smith identify it with Kānīspor, "situated between the Vitastā river and the high road leading from Varāhamūla to Śrīnagar" (EHI⁴, p. 275).

2 Ind. Ant., 1903, p. 382.

Kanishka's fame rests not so much on his conquests, as on his patronage of the religion of Sākyamuni. Numismatic evidence and the testimony of the Peshāwar Casket inscriptions show that he actually became a convert to Buddhism possibly at the commencement of his reign, if not earlier. He showed his zeal for his faith by building the celebrated relic tower and Saṅghārāma at Purushapura or Peshāwar which excited the wonder of Chinese and Muslim travellers.² He convoked the last great Buddhist council which was held in Kaśmīra or Jālandhar.³ But though a Buddhist, the Kushān monarch continued to honour the Greek, Sumerian, Zoroastrian Elamite, Mithraic and Hindu gods worshipped in the various provinces of his far-flung empire.⁴ The court of Kanishka was adorned by Pārśva, Vasumitra,

1 EHI⁴, p. 285 ; JRAS, 1912, 674.

2 The fame of the Kanishka Mahāvihāra remained undiminished till the days of the Pāla Kings of Bengal as is apparent from the Ghoshrāvan Inscription of the time of Devapāla. Kanishka's Chaitya is referred to by Alberuni.

3 One account possibly mentions Gandhāra as the place where the Assembly met. The earliest authorities seem to locate it in Kashmīr. Kundalavana vihāra appears to be the name of the monastery where the theologians assembled probably under the presidency of Vasumitra. The chief business of the Synod seems to be the collection of canonical texts, and the preparation of commentaries on them (Smith, EHI⁴, pp. 283 ff ; Law, Buddhistic Studies, 71).

4 See JRAS, 1912, pp. 1003, 1004. The Elamite (Sumerian ? Hastings, 5, 827) goddess Nana possibly gave her name to the famous Nāṇaka coins (cf. Bhandl., Carm. Lec., 1921, p. 161). For the influence of the Mithra (Mihr, Mihira, Mīro) cult on Kushān India, see Sir R. G. Bhandarkar, Vaishnavism, Śaivism and Minor Religious Systems, p. 154. According to Professor Rapson

Aśvaghoṣa,¹ Charaka, Nāgārjuna,² Saṅgharakṣa, Māthara, Agesilaos the Greek and other worthies who played a leading part in the religious, literary, scientific, philosophical and artistic activities of the reign. Excavations at Māt near Mathurā have disclosed a life-size statue of the great king.³

After Kanishka came Vāsishka, Huvishka and Kanishka of the Ārā inscription. We have got inscriptions of Vāsishka dated 24 and 28 which possibly prove his control over Mathurā and Eastern Mālwa.⁴ He may have been identical with Vājreshka, the father of Kanishka of the Ārā inscription, and Jushka of the Rājatarāṅginī, the founder of the town of Jushkapur, modern Zukur to the north of Śrinagar.⁵

Huvishka's dates range from 28 to 60. A Mathurā Inscription⁶ represents him as the grandson of a king who has the appellation "Sacha dhramathita," i.e., steadfast or abiding in the true Law, which occurs on the coins of Kuyula Kaphsa.⁷ Kalhaṇa's narrative leaves the impression that Huvishka ruled simultaneously with (Andhra Coins, xii) the diversity of coin-types does not show religious eclecticism, but reflects the different forms of religion which prevailed in the various districts of the vast empire of the Great Kushāns. Cf., Asavari and Bednur type of coins of the time of Ilutmish and of Hyder Ali.

1 For the legend about Kanishka and Aśvaghoṣa see a recent article by H. W. Bailey (JRAS, 1942 pt. I)—trans, with notes of a fragment of a Khotan Ms. The king's name is spelt Cadrra (Chandra) Kanishka.

2 It is possible that Nāgārjuna was a contemporary, not of Kanishka I, but of Kanishka II and Huvishka.

3 EHI⁴, p. 272. Cf. Coin-portrait, JRAS, 1912, 670.

4 As the Sāñchī images may have been brought from Mathurā, the find-spots need not be regarded as forming necessarily a part of the empire of the king mentioned in the pedestals.

5 EHI⁴, p. 275.

6 JRAS, 1924, p. 402.

7 The epithet is also applied to Amgoka in the Ksharoshthī documents (Burrow, p. 128).

Jushka and Kanishka, i.e., Vā-jheshka and Kanishka of the Ārā inscription of the year 41. The Wardak vase inscription possibly proves the inclusion of Kābul within his dominions. But there is no evidence that he retained his hold on the Lower Indus Valley which was probably wrested from the successors of Kanishka I by Rudradāman. In Kaśmīra Huvishka built a town named Hushkapura.¹ Like Kanishka I, he was a patron of Buddhism and built a splendid monastery at Mathurā.² He also resembled Kanishka in his taste for a diversity of coin-types. Besides a medley of Greek, Persian and Indian deities we have, on one of his coins, the remarkable figure of Roma.³ A Mathurā inscription refers to the restoration during his reign of a delapidated Devakula of his grandfather.

Smith does not admit that the Kanishka of the Ārā inscription of the year 41 was different from the great Kanishka. Lüders, Fleet, Kennedy and Sten Konow, on the other hand, distinguish between the two Kanishkas.⁴ According to Lüders, Kanishka of the Ārā inscription was a son of Vāsishka and probably a grandson of Kanishka I. Kanishka II had the titles Mahārāja, Rājātirāja, Devaputra and possibly Kaisara (Caesar). It is probable that he, and not Kanishka I, was the founder of the town of Kanishkapura in Kaśmīra.

1 It is identified with Ushkūr inside the Bārāmūla Pass (EH1⁴, p. 287).

2 Cf. Lüders, List No. 62

3 Camb. Short Hist., 79. Numismatic evidence possibly suggests that the 'lion-standard' was to some of the Great Kushāns what the Garuda-dhvaja was to their Gupta successors. Cf. Whitehead, 196.

4 Cf. Corpus, II. i. lxxx; 163. Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 143. JRAS, 1913, 98. The mention of a distinguishing patronymic in the record of the year 41, and the fact that no inscriptions of Kanishka are known that are referable to the period 24 to 40 of the era used by the family (when the Kushān throne was occupied by Vāsishka and, possibly Huvishka as a junior partner), suggest that Kanishka of the year 41 is not to be identified with Kanishka of the years 1-23.

The last notable king of Kanishka's line was Vāsudeva I. His dates range from the year 67¹ to 98, i. e., A. D. 145 to 176 according to the system of chronology adopted in these pages. He does not appear to have been a Buddhist. His coins exhibit the figure of Śiva attended by Nandi. There can be no doubt that he reverted to Śaivism, the religion professed by his great predecessor Kadphises II. A king named Vāsudeva is mentioned in the Kāvya Mīmāṃsā as a patron of poets and a Sabhāpati, apparently 'President of a Society' (of learned men). That the Kushān Age was a period of great literary activity is proved by the works of Aśvaghoṣa, Nāgārjuna and others. It was also a period of religious ferment and missionary activity. It witnessed the development of Śaivism and the allied cult of Kārtikeya, of the Mahāyāna form of Buddhism and the cults of Mihira and of Vāsudeva-Kṛishṇa, and it saw the introduction of Buddhism into China by Kāśyapa Mātāṅga (c. 61-68 A.D.).

"The dynasty of Kanishka opened the way for Indian civilization to Central and Eastern Asia."

The inscriptions of Vāsudeva have been found only in the Mathurā region. From this it is not unreasonable to surmise that he gradually lost his hold over the north-western portion of the Kushān dominions.

About the middle of the third century A.D., we hear of the existence of no less than four kingdoms all 'dependent on the Yue-chi,' and ruled probably by princes of the Yue-chi stock.²

1 Mr. M. Nagor makes mention of an inscription incised on the base of a stone image of the Buddha acquired from Pālikherā (Mathura Museum, no 2907) which records the installation of the image in the year 67 during the reign of Vāsudeva.

2 Cf. Kennedy, JRAS, 1913, 1060 f. Among the successors of Vāsudeva I may be mentioned Kanishka (III); Vasu (Whitehead, Indo-Greek Coins, pp. 211-12; cf. RDB, JASB, Vol. IV (1908), 81 ff; Altekar, N.H.I.P. VI, 14 n) or Vāsudeva II.

These were Ta-hia (the Oxus region, i.e., Bactria), Ki-pin (Kāpiśa), Kao-fou (Kābul) and 'Tien-tchou' (lit. India, meaning probably the country on either side of the Indus with a vague suzerainty over a wider area). In 230 the Ta Yue-chi, i.e., the Great (?) Yue-chi king Po-tiao sent an embassy to the Chinese Emperor. The Yue-chi kingdom of 'Tientchou' began to fall to pieces some time after this date and probably disappeared as an important power in the fourth century A. D. having already lost some of the remotest provinces to the Nāgas. Those nearer the Indus emerged as petty states. Śākasthāna and parts of North-West India were conquered by the Sassanians in the days of Varhrān II (A. D. 276-93). During the early part of the reign of Shāpūr II (A. D. 309-79) the Sassanian suzerainty was still acknowledged in those regions.

who is apparently to be identified with Po-tiao, A.D. 230 (Corpus, II, i. lxxvii); and Grumbates, A.D. 360 (Smith, *EHI*⁴, p. 290). Kings claiming to belong to the family of Kanishka continued to rule in Ki-pin and Gandhāra long after he had passed away (Itinerary of Oukong, Cal Rev., 1922, Aug-Sept., pp. 193, 489). The last king of Kanishka's race was, according to tradition, Lagatūrmān who was overthrown by his Brāhmaṇa minister Kallar (Alberuni, II, 13). For an alleged invasion of India in the later Kushān period by Ardeshir Bābagān (A.D. 226-41), the founder of the Sassanian dynasty, see Ferishta (Elliot and Dowson, VI, p. 557). Varhrān II (A.D. 276-93) conquered the whole of Śākasthāna and made his son Varhrān III governor of the conquered territory. Śākasthāna continued to form a part of the Sassanian empire down to the time of Shāpūr II. A Pahlavi Inscription of Persepolis, which Herzfeld deciphered in 1923, dated probably in A.D. 310-11, when Shāpūr II (309-79) was on the throne, refers to the Sassanian ruler of Śākasthāna as "Śākānsāh, minister of ministers (dabirān dabir) of Hind, Śākasthāna and Tukhāristhān" (MASI, 38, 36). The Paikuli Inscription mentions the Śāka chiefs of North-Western India among the retainers of Varhrān III, governor of Śākasthāna in the last quarter of the third century A.D. (JRAS. 1933, 219). The Ābhiras of Western India seem also to have acknowledged the sway of the Sassanians (Rapson, Andhra Coins, cxxxiv). J. Charpentier points out (Aiyangar Com. Vol. 16) that at the time of Cosmas Indicopleustes (c. 500 A.D.) the right side of the Indus Delta belonged to Persia. Persians figure also in early Chalukya epigraphs and the Raghuvamśa of Kalidāsa.

SECTION IV. THE NĀGAS AND THE LATER KUSHĀNS.

The successors of the Great Kushāns in Mathurā and certain neighbouring tracts were the Nāgas.¹ The prevalence of Nāga rule over a considerable portion of northern and central India in the third and fourth centuries A.D., is amply attested by epigraphic evidence. A Lahore copper seal inscription of the fourth century A.D. refers to a king named Māheśvara Nāga, the son of Nāgabhaṭṭa.² The Allahabad Pillar inscription refers to King Ganapati Nāga, while several Vākāṭaka records mention Bhava Nāga, sovereign of the Bhāraśivas, whose grandson's grandson Rudrasena II was a contemporary of Chandra Gupta II, and who accordingly must have flourished before the rise of the Gupta Empire. Some idea of the great power of the rulers of Bhava Nāga's line and the territory over which they ruled may be gathered from the fact that the dynasty performed ten Āśvamedha sacrifices and "were besprinkled on the forehead with the pure water of (the river) Bhāgirathī (Ganges) that had been obtained by their valour."³ The valiant deeds of the family culminating in the performance of ten Āśvamedha sacrifices indicate that they were not a feudatory line owing allegiance to the Kushāns. We learn from the Purāṇas that the Nāgas established themselves at Vidiśā (Basnagar near Bhilsa), Padmāvati

1 A Yūpa Inscription from Barnāla (in the Jaipur state) discloses the existence of a line of kings, one of whom bore a name that ended in—Varddhana. They belonged to the Sohartta or Sohartṛi gotra. But the dynastic designation is not known (Ep. Ind. xxvi. 120). The record is dated in Kṛīṭa 284 corresponding to A. D. 227-28.

2 Fleet, CII, p. 283

3 CII, p. 241 ; AHD, p. 72.

(Padam Pawāyā, "in the apex on the confluence of the Sindhu and Pāra),"¹ Kāntipuri (not satisfactorily identified),² and even Mathurā which was the southern³ capital of Kanishka and his successors. The greatest of the Nāga Kings was perhaps Chandrāmśa,⁴ 'the second Nakhavant,' whose name reminds us of the great king Chandra of the Delhi Iron Pillar inscription. It is by no means clear that the two are identical. But if Chandra preceded the rise of the Gupta empire, it is natural to seek a reference to him in the Purāṇic texts which were not compiled till the Gupta-Vākāṭaka age. The hand of a Nāga princess was sought by Chandra Gupta II in the fourth century, and a 'Nāga' officer governed the Gangetic Doāb as late as the time of Skanda Gupta.⁵ The Kushāns, however, continued to rule in the Kābul valley and parts of the Indian borderland. One of them gave his daughter in marriage to Hormisdas (or Hormuzd) II, the Sassanian King of Persia (A. D. 301-09). As already stated Varhrān II (A. D. 276-93) and his successors up to the time of Shāpūr II seem to have exercised suzerainty over their Scythic neighbours. "When Shāpūr II besieged Amida in A. D. 350, Indian

1 Coins of a Mahārāja or Adhirāja named Bhavanāga have been found at this place. His identity with Bhavanāga of Vākāṭaka epigraphs proposed by Dr. Altekar (J. Num. S. I, V. pt. II) must await future discoveries.

2 Mention is made of a Kāntipurī in the Skanda Purāṇa (Nāgarakhaṇḍa, ch. 47, 4ff). In the story narrated in the text a petty prince of Kāntipurī 'marries a princess of Daśārṇa, the valley of the Dhasan, in Eastern Malwā which, in the time of the Meghadūta, included Vidiśā. Kāntipurī probably lay not far from the last-mentioned city.

3 JRAS, 1905, p. 233.

4 "Nṛpān Vidiśakāmś c = āpi bhaviṣyāṁstu nibōdhata
Śeṣasya Nāga-rājasya putrah para pūrāṇjayaḥ
Bhogī bhaviṣyate (?) rājā nṛpo Nāga-kul-ōdvahaḥ Sadācandras tu Chandrāmśo dvitīyo Nakhavāṁs tathā."

—Dynasties of the Kali Age, p. 49.

5 For later traces of Nāga rule, see Bom. Gaz., 1. 2, pp. 281, 292, 313, 574; Ep. Ind., X, 25.

elephants served under his command.”¹ Shortly afterwards the Sassanian supremacy was replaced by that of the Guptas, and the “Daivaputra Shāhi Shāhānushāhi,” i.e., the Kushān monarch or monarchs of the North-West sent valuable presents to Samudra Gupta.² In the fifth century³ the Kidāra Kushāns established their rule over Gandhāra and Kaśmira.⁴ In the sixth century the Kushāns had to fight hard against the Huns and in the following centuries, against the Muslims. In the ninth century A. D. a powerful Muslim dynasty, that of the Saffārids, was established in Sīstān (Seistan) and the sway of the family soon extended to Ghazni, Zābulistān, Herat, Balkh and Bamiyan.⁵ The later kings of the race of Kanishka seem to have had one residence in Gandhāra at the city of Uṇḍ, Ohind, Waihand or Udabhāṇḍa, on the Indus. Another capital was situated in the Kābul valley. The family was finally extinguished by the Brāhmaṇa Kallār of Lalliya who founded the Hindu Shāhiyya dynasty towards the close of the ninth century A.D. A part of the kingdom of Kābul fell into the hands of Alptigin in the tenth century.⁶

1 JRAS, 1913, p. 1062. Smith (EHI⁴, p. 290) and Herzfeld (MASI, 38, 36) give the date A.D. 360.

2 Cf. also JASB, 1908, 93.

3 Or probably earlier (about the middle of the fourth century according to Altekar, NHIP, VI. 21).

4 JRAS, 1913, p. 1064. Smith, Catalogue, 64, 89. R. D. Banerji, JASB 1908, 91.

5 Nazim, The Life and Times of Sultan Mahmud, 186.

6 Nazim, p. 26.

CHAPTER IX. SCYTHIAN RULE IN SOUTHERN AND WESTERN INDIA

SECTION I. THE KSHAHARĀTAS.

We have seen that in the second and first centuries B.C., the Scythians possessed Ki-pin (Kāpiśā-Gandhāra) and Śakasthāna (Seistan) and soon extended their sway over a large part of Northern India. The principal Scythic dynasties continued to rule in the north. But a Satrapal family, the Kshaharātas, extended their power to Western India and the Deccan, and wrested parts of Mahārāshtra from the Śātavāhanas. The Śātavāhana king apparently retired to the southern part of his dominions, probably to the Janapada of the Bellary District which came to be known as Śātavāhanihāra, and was at one time under the direct administration of a military governor (mahāsenāpati) named Skanda-nāga.¹ The waning power of the indigenous rulers of the Deccan and the waxing strength of the invaders seem to be hinted at in the following lines of the Periplus :

"The city of Calliena (Kalyāna) in the time of the elder Saraganus (probably Śātakarṇi I) became a lawful market town; but since it came into the possession of Sandanes (possibly Sunandana Śātakarṇi)² the port is much obstructed, and Greek ships landing there may chance to be taken to Barygaza (Broach) under guard."

1 Ep. Ind. XIV, 155.

2 Wilson—in JASB, 1904, 272; Smith ZDMG Sept 1903; IHQ, 1932, 234; JBORS, 1932, 71. The adjective 'elder' becomes pointless unless the passage mentions a younger Saraganus, and this person can only refer to Sandane from whom the elder king is distinguished.

The name of the Scythian conquerors of the Broach region and of Mahārāshṭra, Kshaharāta, seems to be identical with "Karatai," the designation of a famous Śaka tribe of the north mentioned by the geographer Ptolemy.¹

The known members of the Kshaharāta, Khakharāta, or Chaharata family are Liaka, Patika, Ghaṭāka, Bhūmaka and Nahapāna. Of these Liaka, Patika, and Ghaṭāka belonged to the Taxila and Mathurā regions respectively. Bhūmakā was a Kshatrpa of Kāthiāwār. Rapson says that he preceded Nahapāna. His coin-types are "arrow, discus and thunderbolt." These types have been compared with the reverse type "discus, bow and arrow" of certain copper coins struck conjointly by Spalirises and Azes (I).

Nahapāna was the greatest of the Kshaharāta Satraps. Eight Cave Inscriptions discovered at Paṇḍulena, near Nāsik, Junnar and Karle (in the Poona district) prove the inclusion of a considerable portion of Mahārāshṭra within his dominions. Seven of these inscriptions describe the benefactions of his son-in-law Ushavadāta (Rishabhadatta), the Śaka, while the eighth inscription specifies the charitable works of Ayama, the Amātya (minister or district officer). Ushavadāta's inscriptions indicate that Nahapāna's political influence probably extended from Poona (in Mahārāshṭra) and Śūrpāraka (in North Koṅkan) to Prabhāsa in Kāthiāwār, Mandasor (Daśapura) and Ujjain in Mālwa and the district of Ajmer including Pushkara, the place of pilgrimage to which Ushavadāta resorted for consecration after his victory over the Mālayas or Mālavas.

¹ Ind. Ant., 1884, p. 400. Mr. Y. R. Gupte points out (Ind. Ant., 1926, 178) that among the shepherds of the Deccan we have the surname Kharāta which he considers to be a shortened form of Khakharāta (Kshaharāta).

The Nāsik records give the dates 41, 42, and 45, of an unspecified era, and call Nahapāna a Kshatrapa, while the Junnar epigraph of Ayama specifies the date 46 and speaks of Nahapāna as Mahākshatrapa. The generally accepted view is that these dates are to be referred to the Śaka era of 78 A.D. The name Nahapāna is no doubt Persian, but the Kshaharāta tribe to which Nahapāna belonged was probably of Śaka extraction and Ushavadāta, son-in-law of Nahapāna, distinctly calls himself a Śaka. It is, therefore, probable that the era of 78 A.D. derives its name of Śaka era from the Śaka princes of the House of Nahapāna. Rapson accepts the view that Nahapāna's dates are recorded in years of the Śaka era, beginning in 78 A.D., and, therefore, assigns Nahapāna to the period A.D. 119 to 124.¹ Several scholars² identify Nahapāna with Mambarus (emended into Nambanus)³ of the Periplus whose capital was Minnagara in Ariake. According to one theory Minnagara is modern Mandasor,⁴ and Ariake is Aparāntika.⁵

1 Allan thinks that the coins of Nahapāna cannot be assigned to so late a date in the second century A.D. He points among other things to the similarity of the bust on the obverse of Nahapāna's silver coins and that on the coins of Rājuvāla. But he admits that this may be due to derivations from a common prototype such as the coins of Strato I. Camb. Short Hist., 80 f.

2 E. g. M. Boyer in Journal Asiatique, 1897; JASB, 1904, 272. In JRAS, 1918, 108, Kennedy points out that the name certainly ends in—bares—baros, and not in banos.

3 JRAS, 1912, p. 785.

4 This is the view of Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar who apparently follows Bomb. Gaz., I, 1, 15 n.; cf., however, Ind. Ant., 1926, p. 143, Capital of Nahapāna (=Junnar). Fleet identifies Miñnāgarā with Dohad in the Pañch Mahāls (JRAS, 1912, p. 788; 1913, 993n). In a paper read at the sixth conference of Orientalists at Patna Dr. Jayaswal referred to a Jaina work which mentions Broach as the capital of Nahapāna (see now Āvaśyaka sūtra, JBORS, 1930, Sept. Dec., 290). For a different tradition see IHQ, 1929, 356. Vasudhara (?) nagari.

5 Cf. also IA, 7, 259, 263: Ariake may also be Aryaka of Varāhamihira's Bṛhat Samhitā.

R.D. Banerji and G. Jouveau-Dubreuil are of opinion that Nahapāna's dates are not referable to the Śaka era. They say that if we admit that the inscriptions of Nahapāna are dated in the Śaka era, there will be only an interval of five years between the inscription of this king, dated 46 and the inscriptions of Rudradāman, dated 52. Within these years must have taken place :

- (1) The end of Nahapāna's reign ;
- (2) The destruction of the Kshaharātas ;
- (3) The accession of Chashtana as Kshatrapa, his reign as Kshatrapa, his accession as a Mahākshatrapa, and his reign as Mahākshatrapa ;
- (4) The accession of Jayadāman as Kshatrapa, his reign as Kshatrapa, and perhaps also his reign as Mahākshatrapa ;
- (5) The accession of Rudradāman and the beginning of his reign.

There is no necessity, however, of crowding the events mentioned above within five years (between the year 46, the last known date of Nahapāna, and the year 52, the first known date of Rudradāman). There is nothing to show that Chashtana's family came to power after the destruction of the Kshaharātas. The line of Chashtana may have been ruling in Cutch and perhaps some adjacent territories, as the Andhau inscriptions of the year 52 suggest, while the Kshaharātas were ruling in parts of Mālwa and Mahārāshtra. Moreover, there is no good ground for believing that a long interval elapsed from the accession of Chashtana to that of Rudradāman. Drs. Bhandarkar and R. C. Majumdar have pointed out that the Andhau inscriptions clearly prove that Chashtana and Rudradāman ruled conjointly in the year 52. Professor J. Dubreuil rejects their view on the ground that there is no "cha" after Rudradāman in the text of the inscription : Rājña Chashtanasa Ysamotika-putrasa rājña Rudradāmasa Jayadāma-putrasa varshe dvipachāse, 50, 2. Professor Dubreuil translates the passage thus :

"In the 52nd year, in the reign of Rudradāman, son of Jayadāman, grandson of Chashtana and great-grandson of Ysamotika".

The Professor who objects to a 'cha' himself makes use not only of "and" but also of the words "grandson" and "great-grandson" no trace of which can be found in the original record. Had his translation been what the writer of the Andhan inscriptions intended, we should have expected to find the name of Ysamotika first, and then the name of Chashtana followed by those of Jayadāman and Rudradāman—Ysamotika prapautrasa Chashtana pautrasa Jayadāma-putrasa Rudradāmansa.¹ Moreover, it is significant that in the text of the inscription there is no royal title prefixed to the name of Jayadāman who ruled between Chashtana and Rudradāman according to Dubreuil. On the other hand, both Chashtana and Rudradāman are called rājā. The two are mentioned in exactly the same way—with the honorific rājā and the patronymic. The literal translation of the inscriptional passage is "in the year 52 of king Chashtana son of Ysamotika, of king Rudradāman son of Jayadāman," and this certainly indicates that the year 52 belonged to the reign both of Chashtana and Rudradāman.² The conjoint rule of two kings was known to ancient Hindu writers on polity.³ The theory of the conjoint

1 Cf. the Junāgaḍh, Guṇḍa and Jasdhan inscriptions.

2 Cf. the coin legends "Heramayasa Katiyapaya," "Gudupharasa Sasasa," "Khatapānā Hagānasa Hagāmashasa," etc., where, too, we have no cha after the second name. Whitehead, Indo-Greek Coins, 86, 147; CHI, 538.

3 Cf. Dvirāja in the Atharva Veda (V. 20, 9); Dvairājya in the Kautiliya Arthasāstra p. 325; Dorajja of the Āyāraṅga Sutta; the classical account of Patalene, p. 259 ante; the case of Dhritarāshtra and Duryodhana in the Great rule of Chashtana and his grandson is supported by the fact that Jayadāman did not live to be Mahākshatrapa and must have predeceased his father, Chashtana, as unlike Chashtana and Rudradāman, he is called simply a Kshatrapa (not Mahākshatrapa and Bhadramukha) even in the inscriptions of his descendants.¹ We have already noticed the fact that the title rājā, which is given to Chashtana and Rudradāman in the Andhan inscriptions, is not given to Jayadāman.

Mr. R. D. Banerji says that the inscriptions of Nahapāna cannot be referred to the same era as used on the coins and inscriptions of Chashtana's dynasty because if we assume that Nahapāna was dethroned in 46 Ś. E., Gautamiputra must have held Nāsik up to 52 Ś. E. (from his 18th to his 24th year), then Pulumāyi held the city up to the 22nd year of his reign, i.e., up to at least 74 Ś. E. But Rudradāman is known to have defeated Pulumāyi and taken Nāsik before that time. Banerji's error lies in the tacit assumption that Rudradāman twice occupied Nāsik before the year 73 of the Śaka era. There is no clear evidence to suggest that the Śātavāhanas lost Poona and Nāsik to that great satrap though they may have lost Malwa and the Koṅkan. Another untenable assumption of Mr. Banerji is that Rudradāman finished his conquests before the year 52 or A. D. 130, whereas the Andhan inscriptions merely imply the possession of Cutch and perhaps some adjoining tracts by the House of Chashtana.

The theory of those who refer Nahapāna's dates to the Śaka era, is confirmed by the fact pointed out by Epic ; of Eukratides and his son in Justin's work ; of Strato I and Strato II ; of Azes and Azilises, etc., etc. The Mahāvastu (III. 432) refers to the conjoint rule of three brothers :—"Kaliṅgeshu Siṃhapuram nāma nagaram tatra trayo bhrātaro ekamātrikā rājyam kārayaṃti." See also IA, 6, 29. Cf. Nilakanta Sastri, Pandyan Kingdom, 120, 122, 180.

¹ Cf. the Guṇḍa and Jasdhan inscriptions.

Professor Rapson, and Dr. Bhandarkar after him, that a Nāsik inscription of Nahapāna refers to a gold currency, doubtless of the Kushāns who could not have ruled in India before the first century A. D.¹

The power of Nahapāna and his allies, the Uttamabhadras,² was threatened by the Mālayas (Mālavas) from the north, and the Śātavāhanas from the south. The incursion of the Mālavas was repelled by Ushavādāta. But the Śātavāhana attack proved fatal to Śaka rule in Mahārāshṭra.

We know very little about Chakora and Śivasvāti mentioned in the Purāṇas as the immediate successors of Sunandana during whose reign Śātavāhana prestige had sunk very low and marauders from Barygaza had been harrying the ports that had once enjoyed the protection of the elder Śātakarṇi, probably Śātakarṇi I. But the king whose name occurs next in the list, viz., Gautamiputra, regained the lost power of the house and dealt a severe blow at the power of the intruders from the north. The Nāsik prāśasti calls him the "uprooter of the Kshaharāta race," and the "restorer, of the glory of the Śātavāhana family". That Nahapāna himself was overthrown by Gautamiputra is proved by the testimony of the Jogalthembi hoard (in the Nāsik district) which consisted of Nahapāna's own silver coins and coins restruck by Gautamiputra. In the 1 Rapson, Coins of the Andhra Dynasty, etc., pp. lviii, clxxxv; Bhandarkar, Ind. Ant., 1918-1919, 'Deccan of the Śātavāhana Period'.

2 The Uttamabhadras may have been a section of the Bhadra tribe mentioned in a list of gaṇas along with the Rohitakas (cf. Rohtak in south-east Punjab), the Āgreyas (of Agra?) and the Mālavas (Mbh. III. 253.20). In Mbh. VI. 50. 47 the Pra-bhadras are associated with the gaṇas or corporations of the Dāserakas, apparently of the desert region of Rājputāna (Monier Williams, Dic. 405).

restruck coins there was not a single one belonging to any prince other than Nahapāna as would certainly have been the case if any ruler had intervened between Nahapāna and Gautamiputra.

SECTION II. THE RESTORATION OF THE ŚĀTAVĀHANA EMPIRE.

Gautamiputra's victory over the Kshaharātas led to the restoration of the Śātavāhana power in Mahārāshṭra and some adjoining provinces. The recovery of Mahārāshṭra is proved by a Nāsik inscription, dated in the year 18¹, and a Karle epigraph addressed to the Amātya or the king's officer in charge of Māmāla (the territory round Karle, modern Māval in the Poona district). But this was not the only achievement of Gautamiputra. We learn from the Nāsik record of queen Gautami Balaśrī that her son destroyed the Śakas (Scythians), Yavanas (Greeks) and Pahlavas (Parthians), and that his dominions extended not only over Asika,² Asaka (Āsmaka on the Godāvari, i.e., part of Mahārāshṭra),³ and Mūlaka (the district around Paṭhan), but also over Suratha (South Kāthiāwār), Kukura (in Western or Central India, possibly near the Pāriyātra or the Western Vindhya),⁴ Aparānta (North Koṅkan), Anupa (district around Māhiśmati on the Narmadā), Vidarbha (Greater Bērar), and Ākara-Avanti (East⁵ and West Mālwa). He is further styled lord of all the mountains from

1 The Nāsik Edict was issued from the camp of victory of the Vejayanti army (Ep. Ind. VIII. 72) and was addressed to the Amātya or the king's officer in charge of Govardhana (Nāsik).

2 On the Kṛishṇaveṇṇā, i.e., the river Kṛishṇā (Khāraveṇṇā's ins., IHQ. 1938. 275) ; cf. Ārshika, Patañjali. IV. 2. 2.

3 Shamasastri's translation of the Arthaśāstra, p. 143, n. 2. Its capital Potana probably corresponds to Bodhan in the Nizam's dominions.

4 Bṛihat Samhitā, XIV. 4.

5 Eastern Mālwa was possibly under Vāsishka, the successor of Kanishka I, in the year 28 of the Kushān Era which corresponds to A.D. 106 according to the system of chronology adopted in these pages. Ākara has been identified with Āgar, 35 miles north-east of Ujjain, Bomb. Gaz., Gujarat, 540 ; Ep. Ind., xliii. 102.

the Vindhya to the Malaya or Travancore hills, and from the Eastern (Mahendra) to the Western (Sahya) Ghāṭs. The possession of Vejayanti in the Kanarese country is possibly hinted at in the Nāsik inscription of the year 18. The names of the Andhra country (Andhrāpatha) and South Kosala are, however, conspicuous by their absence. Inscriptions, coins and the testimony of Hiuen Tsang prove that both these territories were at one time or other included within the Śātavāhana empire. The earliest Śātavāhana king whose inscriptions have been found in the Andhra region is Pulumāyi, son of Gautamiputra. It is, however, possible that some vague claim of suzerainty over the areas in question is implied in the boast that Gautamiputra was lord of the Vindhya and the Eastern Ghats (Mahendra) and that his chargers "drank the water of the three oceans" (tisamudatoya-pita-vāhana). Moreover "Asika" seems to have included a considerable portion of the valley of the Krishnā.

In the Nāsik prāśasti Gautamiputra figures not only as a conqueror, but also as a social reformer. "He crushed down the pride and conceit of the Kshatriyas, furthered the interest of the twice-born, apparently the Brāhmaṇas, as well as the lowest orders (Dvijāvarakuṭubavivadhana)¹ and stopped the contamination of the four varṇas (castes)."

According to Sir R. G. Bhandarkar and Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar, Gautamiputra reigned conjointly with his son Pulumāyi. They give the following reasons in support of their theory :—

1 Kuṭumba means 'a household', 'a family' and avara-kuṭuba may be taken to mean 'households or families of the lowly'. The use of the word kuṭuba may suggest that the 'lowly' order or orders, whose families or households are referred to, are the traders and agriculturists (kuṭumbika).

(1) In Gautami's inscription (dated in the 19th year of her grandson Pulumāyi) she is called the mother of the great king and the grandmother of the great king. This statement would be pointless if she were not both at one and the same time.

(2) If it were a fact that Gautamiputra was dead when the queen-mother's inscription was written, and Pulumāyi alone was reigning, we should expect to find the exploits of the latter also celebrated in the inscription. But there is not a word in praise of him. A king dead for 19 years is extolled, and the reigning king passed over in silence.

(3) The inscription dated in the year 24, engraved on the east wall of the Veranda of the Nāsik Cave No. 3, which records a grant made by Gautamiputra and the "king's mother whose son is living", in favour of certain Buddhist monks "dwelling in the cave which was a pious gift of theirs," presupposes the gift of the Nāsik Cave No. 3 in the 19th year of Pulumāyi. Consequently Gautamiputra was alive after the 19th year of his son.

As regards point (1), it may be said that usually a queen sees only her husband and sometimes a son on the throne. Queen Gautami Balaśri, on the other hand, was one of the fortunate (or unfortunate) few who saw grandchildren on the throne. Therefore she claimed to be the mother of a great king and the grandmother of a great king.

As to point (2), is the silence satisfactorily explained by the theory of conjoint rule? Those who prefer the opposite view may point out that although it is not customary for an ordinary subject to extol a dead king and pass over a reigning monarch in silence, still it is perfectly natural for a queen-mother in her old age to recount the glories of a son who was associated with her in a previous gift.

As to point (3), it is not clear that the gift referred to in the postscript of the year 24 was identical with the grant of the year 19 of Pulumāyi. The donors in the postscript were king Gautamiputra and the rājamātā, the king's mother, apparently Balāsri, while the donor in the year 19 of Pulumāyi was the queen-mother alone. In the inscription of the year 24, the queen-mother is called Mahādevī Jivasutā Rājamātā, the great queen, the king's mother, whose son is alive. In Pulumāyi's inscription the epithets Mahādevī and Rājamātā are retained but the epithet "Jivasutā," "whose son is alive," is significantly omitted. The donees in the former grant were the Tekirasi or Triraśmi ascetics in general, the donees in the latter grant were the monks of the Bhadavānīya school. The object of grant in the former case may have been merely the Veranda of Cave No. 3, which contains the postscript of the year 24, and whose existence before the 19th year of Pulumāyi is attested by an edict of Gautamiputra of the year 18. On the other hand, the cave given away to the Bhadavānīya monks was the whole of Cave No. 3.

If Gautamiputra and his son reigned simultaneously, and if the latter ruled as his father's colleague in Mahārāshtra, then it is difficult to explain why Gautamiputra was styled "Govadhanasa Benākatakasvāmi," "lord of Benākataka in Govardhana" (Nāsik),¹ and why he addressed the officer at Govardhana directly, ignoring his son who is represented as ruling over Mahārāshtra, while in the record of the year 19, Pulumāyi was considered as

1 The use of the expression "Govadhanasa" suggests that there were other localities named Benākataka from which this particular place is distinguished. A Bennākata in the eastern part of the Vākātaka kingdom is mentioned in the Tiroḍi plates of Pravarasena II (? III) (IHQ, 1935, 293; Ep. Ind. XXII, 167 ff). Benā or Bennā is apparently the name of a small stream in each case.

so important that the date was recorded in the years of his reign, and not in that of his father who was the senior ruler.¹

The generally accepted view is that Pulumāyi came after Gautamīputra.

The date of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi is a matter regarding which there is a wide divergence of opinion. There are scholars who believe that the epithets varavārāṇa-vikrama, chāru-vikrama, "whose gait was beautiful like the gait of a choice elephant," and Śaka-nishūdana, destroyer of Śakas, suggest that he was the original of Rājā Vikramāditya of legend who founded the era of 58 B. C. But, as already pointed out, the use of regnal years by Gautamīputra and his descendants indicates that no era originated with the dynasty. Further, Indian literature clearly distinguishes between Vikramāditya of Ujjain and Śālivāhana or the Śātavāhanas of Pratiṣṭhāna. The view accepted in these pages is that Gautamīputra was the conqueror of Nahapāna and that his 18th year fell after the year 46 of the Śaka era, the last recorded date of his vanquished opponent. In other words the conquest of Nāsik by Gautamīputra took place some time after A. D. $78 + 46 = 124$, and his accession after A. D. $124 - 18 = 106$. As he ruled for at least 24 years, his reign must have terminated after A. D. 130.

In the Purāṇic lists compiled by Pargiter the immediate successors of Gautamīputra are Pulomā, his son, and Śātakarṇi. Pulomā is doubtless identical with Siro P(t)olemaios of Baithana mentioned by Ptolemy and Vāsishṭhīputra Svāmī Śrī Pulumāvi of inscriptions and coins. Śātakarṇi is perhaps to be identified with Vāsishṭhīputra Śrī Śātakarṇi of a Kanheri Cave Inscription, or with Vāsishṭhīputra Chatarapana Śātakarṇi of a Nānāghaṭ record. His exact position in the genealogical list cannot be determined with precision. The Kanheri epigraph represents Vāsishṭhīputra Śrī Śātakarṇi as the husband of a daughter of the Mahākshatrapa Ru(dra). Rapson identifies this Rudra with Rudradāman I. There can hardly be any doubt that the Śātavāhana king mentioned in the Kanheri record, or one of his close relations who bore a similar name, was identical with Śātakarṇi, lord of the Deccan, whom Rudradāman "twice in fair fight completely defeated, but did not destroy on account of the nearness of their connection." Dr. Bhandarkar's identification of Vāsishṭhīputra Śrī Śātakarṇi of Kanheri with Vāsishṭhīputra Śrī Śātakarṇi of coins and Śrī Śrī of the Matsya Purāṇa cannot be regarded as more than a conjecture. The ruler mentioned in the Kanheri Inscription may have been a brother of Pulumāyi.

1 Cf. R. D. Banerji, JRAS, 1917, pp. 281 et seq. Note also the epithet (Dakṣiṇā) paṭheśvara 'lord of the Deccan,' applied to Pulumāyi in the prāsaṁsī of the year 19.

We have seen that the capital of Pulumāyi was Baithan, i.e., Paithan or Pratiśṭhāna on the Godāvari, identified by Bhandarkar with Navanara or Navanagara, i.e., the new city. Inscriptions and coins prove that the dominions of this king included the Krishṇā-Godāvari region as well as Mahārāshṭra. It has already been pointed out that the Andhra country is not clearly mentioned in the list of territories over which Gautamiputra held his sway. It is not altogether improbable that Vāsishṭhīputra Pulumāyi was the first to establish the Śātavāhana power firmly in that region. Sukthankar identifies him with Siri Pulumāyi, king of the Śātavāhanas, mentioned in an inscription discovered in Adoni tāluk of the Bellary district. But the absence of the distinguishing metonymic makes the identification uncertain and probably indicates that the king referred to in the inscription is Pulumāyi I of the Purāṇas or some other prince of the dynasty who bore the same name. D. C. Sircar identifies him with the last king of Pargiter's list. Numismatic evidence suggests that the political influence of a Pulumāyi extended to the Coromandel coast, and possibly to the Chanda district of the Central Provinces. But in the absence of epigraphic corroboration the matter cannot be regarded as definitely proved. Moreover, the absence of the metronymic Vāsishṭhīputra makes it uncertain in some cases as to whether the son of the great Gautamīputra is meant.

Vāsishṭhīputra Pulumāyi must have come to the throne some time after A. D. 130. He is known from a Karle epigraph to have ruled for at least 24 years, so that his reign terminated after A.D. 154.

The successors of Pulomā according to the Purāṇic lists compiled by Pargiter are Śiva Śrī¹ Pulomā and Śivaskanda (or Śivaskandha)² Śātakarṇi.

Yajñaśrī Śātakarṇi.³

The immediate successor of Śivaskanda according to the collated text of Pargiter was Yajña Śrī. If the Purāṇas are to be believed his accession took place more

1 Mirashi in the Journal of the Num. Soc. II (1940), p. 88 attributes to him the coins of "Śivaśrī Pulumāyi III" of the Tarhāla hoard. He draws a distinction between this king (who was a Pulumāyi) and Vāsishṭhīputra Śivaśrī Śātakarṇi who is known to Rapson's Catalogue. The Vishṇu Purāṇa, however, represents Śivaśrī as a Śātakarṇi (and not a Pulumāyi). The matter must, therefore, be regarded as sub judice.

2 Mirashi (ibid., 89) identifies him with King Sirikhada or Skanda Śātakarṇi of the Tarhāla hoard (Akola district) and other coins whose name was wrongly read as Chaḍa Śātakarṇi by Smith and Rudra Śātakarṇi by Rapson. This "Rudra" was represented as a ruler of the Andhra-deśa.

3 In J.R.A.S. July, 1934, 560ff, Dr. D. C. Sircar suggests that the name of this king was Śrī Yajña Śātakarṇi as stated in inscriptions, and not Yajña Śrī (as stated in the Purāṇas). It should, however, be remembered that Śrī is here an honorific than 35 years after the close of the reign of Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi, i.e., after A. D. 165 and ended after A. D. 194. Yajña Śrī's inscriptions, which prove that he reigned for at least 27 years, are found at the following places, viz., Nāsik in Mahārāshṭra, Kanheri in Aparānta, and China in the Kṛishṇā district. His coins are found in Gujrat, Kāthiāwār, Aparānta, the Chanda District in the Central Provinces, and the Kṛishṇā district of the Madras Presidency. There can be no doubt that he ruled over both Mahārāshṭra and the Andhra country and recovered Aparānta (N. Konkan) from the successors of Rudradāman I. Smith says that his silver coins imitating the coinage of the Śāka rulers of Ujjain probably point to victories over the latter, and that the coins bearing the figure of a ship suggest the inference that the king's power extended over the sea. He thus anticipated the naval ventures of the Kadambas of Goa, of Sivāji and of the Angrias.¹

Yajñaśrī was the last great king of his dynasty. After his death the Śātavāhanas probably lost North-Western Mahārāshṭra to the Abhira king Īśvarasena.² The later and it is frequently used as a suffix in the names of members of the Śātavāhana royal house (cf. Veda or Skanda-Siri, Haku-Siri, Bala-Śrī, Śiva-Śrī, etc.; Rapson, Andhra Coins pp. xlvi, 1, lii). The mere fact that in certain documents Śrī precedes the name of a king does not prove conclusively that it was never used as a suffix. In the famous inscription of Khāravela the king is called both Siri Khāravela and Khāravela-Siri. In the Mudrārākshasa Śrīmat Chandragupta is also styled Chanda-Siri. Cf. Aśoka Śrī in Parīśiṣṭa-parvan, IX. 14.

1 Rapson, however, says (Coins of the Andhra Dynasty, p. 22) in reference to certain lead coins (of the Coromandel coast): "obv. Ship with two masts. Inscr. not completely read, but apparently Siri-Pu (lumā) visa."

2 The earliest reference to the *Abhira*s to which an approximate date can be assigned is that contained in the Mahābhāshya of Patañjali. The Mahābhāshya as well as the Mahābhārata connects them with the Śūdras—the Sodrai of Alexander's historians. Their country—Abiria—finds mention in the Periplus and the geography of Ptolemy. In the third quarter of the second century A. D., Abhira chieftains figured as generals of the Śāka rulers of Western India. Shortly afterwards a chief named Īśvaradatta, probably an Abhira, became Śātavāhana princes—Vijaya, Chaṇḍa Śrī (variant Chandra Śrī) and Pulomāvi of the Purāṇas—seem to have ruled in Berar, the Eastern Deccan and the Kanarese country.¹ The existence of Vijaya seems now to be confirmed by numismatic evidence.² Chaṇḍa Śrī may have been identical with Vāsisthī-putra “Sāmi_siri Chamḍa Sāta” of the Kodavali rock-cut well Inscription discovered near Piṭhāpuram in the Godāvari region, while Pulomāvi is, in the opinion of Dr. D. C. Sircar, to be identified with the king of the same name mentioned in the Myakadoni inscription of the Bellary District. Coins disclose the existence of a few other kings of the line who must be assigned to the latest Śātavāhana period. Śātavāhana rule in the Mahākshatrapa. His relation to the Ābhira king Māḍhariputra Iśvara Sena, son of Śiva Datta, remains doubtful. But some scholars are inclined to identify the two chiefs. It is also suggested that this dynasty of Iśvara Sena is identical with the Traikūṭaka line of Aparānta, and that the establishment of the Traikūṭaka era in A.D. 248 marks the date at which the Ābhiras succeeded the Śātavāhanas in the Government of Northern Mahārāṣṭra and the adjoining region. The last known rulers of the Traikūṭaka line were Indradatta, his son Dahrasena (455-56 A.D.), and his son Vyāghrasena (489-90), after whom the kingdom seems to have been conquered by the Vākāṭaka king Harisheṇa.

1 The Berar (Akola) group includes certain princes, not included in the Purāṇic lists, e.g., Śrī Kumbha Śātakarṇi, Śrī Karṇa Śātakarṇi (unless he is identified with the so-called Śvātīkarṇa, the fourteenth king of Pargiter's list) and Śrī Śaka Śātakarṇi (Mirashi, J. Num. Soc., II, 1940). Mirashi thinks that the real name of the so-called Kṛishṇa (II) of the Chanda hoard was Karṇa. Among kings of uncertain identity mention may be made of Śrī Śivamaka Sāta of the Amarāvati inscription and Māḍhariputra Śrī Sāta of Kanheri.

2 Mirashi, Journal of the Num. Soc. of India, II (1940), p. 90. The only clear letters are ya-Sātakarṇi. The ascription to Vijaya must be regarded as tentative.

500 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Krishnā, Guṇṭūr and Bellary districts was eventually supplanted by the Ikshvākus¹ and the Pallavas.²

Provincial Government under the Śātavāhanas.

A word may be said here—regarding the internal organisation of the Śātavāhana empire. The sovereign

1 The Ikshvākus are known from inscriptions discovered on the ruins of the Jagayyapeta stūpa in the Krishnā District and also at Nāgārjunikoṇḍa and Gurzala in the Guṇṭūr district (Ep. Ind. 1929, ff. ; 1941, 123 f). They were matrimonially connected with the Kekayas, probably a ruling family of Ancient Mysore (Dubreuil, AHD, pp. 88, 101). The most well-known rulers of the Ikshvāku family of the Eastern Deccan are Chāntamūla, Śrī-Vira-Purusha-datta, Ehuvala Chāntamūla II and possibly 'Rulupurisadāta' (Ep. Ind. xxvi. 125). The Ikshvākus were succeeded by the "Ānanda" kings of Guṇṭūr, the Bṛihat-phalāyanas of Kudurāhāra (near Masulipatam), the Śālaṅkāyanas of Veṅḡi (cf. IA, 5. 175 and the Salakenoi of Ptolemy), and the Viśṇukundins of Leṇḍutūra (near Veṅḡi).

2 The Pallavas—a people of unknown origin, claiming descent from Āśvatthāman and Nāga princesses, are the most important of all the dynasties that succeeded the Śātavāhanas in the Far South. The claim of descent from Brāhmaṇas of the Bharadvāja gotra, the performance of the Āśvamedha and patronage of Sanskrit learning, connect the dynasty with the Śūṅgas, while the Brāhmaṇa-Nāga connection, (cf. Saṁkīrṇa-jāti, Brahma-kshatra, SII, Nos 7, 48), the performance of Vedic sacrifices including the horse-sacrifice, early association with the Śātavāhana Janapada in the Bellary district and the use of Prākṛita in their early records, connect the family with the Śātavāhanas. There is no question of any Parthian affinity as the genealogical lists of the family are singularly devoid of Parthian nomenclature. The elephant's scalp used as a crown is no test of race. The well-known hostility of the family to the Cholas and the decidedly northern character of their culture preclude the possibility of a pure Tamil extraction. The first great Pallava king, Śīva-Skanda-varman, is known from the inscriptions found at Mayidavolu (in Guṇṭūr) and Hirabaḍagalli (in Bellary) to have ruled over an extensive empire including Kāñchī, Andhrāpātha and Śātahani raṭṭha, and performed the Āśvamedha sacrifice. About the middle of the fourth century A. D. the emperor Samudra Gupta invaded Southern India, defeated the reigning Pallava king, Viśṇugopa, and gave a severe blow to the power and prestige of the empire of Kāñchī which, in the long run, probably led to its disruption. The evidence of the Penukoṇḍa Plates, the Tālagunda inscription and the Hebbāḷa grant (IHQ. 1927, 434) seems to suggest that the Pallava supremacy continued for some time to be acknowledged by the early Gaṅgas of Anantapura and East Mysore and the early Kadambas of Vaijayanti (Banavāsi) and Mahisha-Vishaya (Mysore). The history of the Pallavas himself seems to have resided in Pratiśṭhāna or in "camps of victory" in Govardhana (Nāsik district), during the fifth and sixth centuries is obscure. Certain inscriptions disclose the names of the following kings, but little is known about them :—

Kings of Kṛishṇā, Guṇṭūr and Nellore districts

King of Kāñchī

* Kings marked with asterisks may have been identical. But this is by no means certain. The settlement of early Pallava genealogy and chronology must still await future discoveries.

1 A Sihavarman is mentioned in the Palnād inscription. But his identity and date are uncertain.

2 Tāmbrāpa is identified with Chembrolu.

Vaijyantī (in North Kanara) and other places.¹ The imperial dominions were divided into administrative units called āhāra or janapada and placed under rulers who fell into two classes, viz., (a) amātyas who were ordinary civil functionaries and (b) military governors and feudatories styled mahāsenāpati, mahārāṭhi, mahābhōja, and even Rājan. Amātyas are mentioned in connection with Aparānta (North Koṅkan), Govardhana (Nāsik), Māmād(ī)a (Poona), Banavāsī (North Kanara) and Khaddavali (Godāvari region). Mahārāṭhis are found associated with Chitaldrug, Nānāghāt, Karle and Kanheri (in the North Koṅkan). They intermarried with the imperial family (and at times adopted its nomenclature) and also with the Chuṭu, Kauśika and Vāsishṭha clans. The Mahābhōjas had close relations with Chuṭu rulers of Banavāsī. Mahāsenāpatīs are found in Nāsik in the days of Yajña Śrī, and in Bellary in the time of a Pulumāyi. The rule of these military governors, some of whom belonged to the Kuśika family or were matrimonially connected with it, was very much in evidence in the last days of the Śātavāhana empire. Potentates with the title of rājā ruled in the Kolhapur region. The most notable among these were Vāsishṭhiputra Vilivāyakura, Māthariputra Śivalakura and Gautamīputra Vilivāyakura (II). The Vilivāyakura group cannot fail to remind one of Baleokouros of Hippokoura mentioned by the Greek geographer Ptolemy (c. 150 A.D.).

It is from the ranks of military governors and feudatories that the princes who carved out independent principalities on the dissolution of the Śātavāhana empire, evidently sprang. The Śālaṅkāyanas (Salakenoi), for example, who appear to have been a feudatory family in the Andhra country, afterwards set up an independent sovereignty. The Pallavas were doubtless connected with the military governors of the Bellary district.

1 E.g. Navanara—perhaps really identical with the port of Calliena (Kalyāṇa, an ancient name of which, according to the Bombay Gazetteer. XIV. 114 is Navānagara).

The Śātakarṇis of Kuntala.

In the days of the great Gautamiputra, son of Bala Śrī, Banavāsi or Vaijayanti (Kanara) seems to have been the capital of an imperial province under an amātya named Śivagupta. By an obscure transition the sovereignty of the territory passed into the hands of a family, possibly styled Chuṭu in inscriptions,¹ whose connection with the Śātavāhana-Śātakarṇis is not known. The evidence of the Myakadoni inscription and notices in the Kāmasūtra of Vātsyāyana, the Gāthāsaptasatī and the Kāvya Mīmāṃsā, probably suggest that a group of Śātavāhanas preceded the so-called Chuṭu kula in Kuntala or the Kanarese country. Some of them were great patrons of Prākṛit learning. The most famous amongst them was Hāla. Another king of the group was Kuntala Śātakarṇi mentioned in the Kāmasūtra whom the Purāṇas regard as a predecessor of Hāla. The Chuṭu line is represented by Hāritiputra Viṣṇukaḍa-Chuṭu kulānanda Śātakarṇi, Rājā of Vaijayantipura, and his daughter's son Śiva-Skandanāga Śrī who is identified by Rapson with Skandanāga Sātaka of a Kanherī Inscription, and also with Hāritiputra Śiva-[Skanda]-varman, lord of Vaijayanti, mentioned in a Malavalli record (in the Shimoga district of Mysore). The last identification seems to be doubtful as the mother and daughter of Viṣṇukaḍa could hardly have belonged to the same gotra. Hārītiputra Śīva-varman was apparently succeeded by the Kadambas.¹

1 Some scholars do not accept the theory that Chuṭu is a dynastic designation. They regard it as a personal name. Prog. Rep. of the ASI. W. Circle, 1911-12 p. 5.

1 The Kadamba line was founded by Mayurśarman, a Brāhmaṇa, who rose against the Pallavas and helped by "Vrihad Bāṇa" and other kings, compelled the lord of Kañchi to confer on him the Paṭṭabandha of military governorship. He soon pushed his conquests to the western ocean. His great-grandson Kākustha-varman gave his daughters in marriage to the Gupta and other kings. Kṛishṇa-varman I performed the Aśvamedha. Mṛigeśa-varman defeated the Gaṅgas and Pallavas and had his capital at Vaijayanti. Junior branches of the family ruled at Palāśikā, Uchchaśṛiṅgi and Tripurvata. The Kadambas were finally overthrown by the Chalukyas. See Moraes, Kadamba-Kula; Sircar, JIH, 1936, 301 ff.

SECTION III. THE SAKAS OF UJJAIN AND KĀTHIĀWAR.

The greatest rivals of the restored Śātavāhana Empire were at first the Saka Kshatrapas of Ujjain. The progenitor of the Śaka princes of Ujjain was Ysamotika who was the father of Chashtāna, the first Mahākshatrapa of the family. The name of Ysamotika is Scythic.¹ His descendant, who was killed by Chandra Gupta II, is called a Śaka king by Bāṇa in his Harsha-charita. It is, therefore, assumed by scholars that the Kshatrapa family of Ujjain was of Śaka nationality.

The proper name of the dynasty is not known. Rapson says that it may have been Kārddamaka. The daughter of Rudradāman boasts that she is descended from the family of Kārddamaka kings; but she may have been indebted to her mother for this distinction. The Kārddamaka kings apparently derive their name from the Kārdama, a river in Persia.²

According to Dubreuil, Chashtāna ascended the throne in A.D. 78, and was the founder of the Śaka era. But this is improbable in view of the fact that the capital of Chashtāna (Tiastanes) was Ujjain (Ozene of Ptolemy), whereas we learn from the Periplus that Ozene was not a capital in the seventies of the first century A.D.³ The Periplus speaks of Ozene as a former capital, implying that it was not a capital in its own time.

1 JRAS, 1906, p. 211. Lévi and Konow (Corpus, II. i. lxx) identify Ysamotika with Bhūmaka on the ground that the Śaka word "Ysama" means earth. But identity of meaning of names need not necessarily prove identity of persons. Cf. the cases of Kumāra Gupta and Skanda Gupta.

2 Pārasika. Shamasastri's translation of the Kautiliya, p. 86. See also IHQ, 1933, 37 ff. Cf. the Artamis of Ptolemy, VI. 11. 2, a tributary of the Oxus.

3 The Periplus mentions Malichos (Maliku), the king of the Nabataeans, who died in A. D. 75, and Zoscales (Za Hakale), king of the Auxumites, who reigned from A. D. 76 to 80 (JRAS, 1917, 827-830).

The earliest known date of Chashtana is S. E. 52, i.e., A.D. 130. We learn from the Andhau inscriptions that in the year A.D. 130 Chashtana was ruling conjointly with his grandson Rudradāman. Professor Rapson and Dr. Bhandarkar point out that his foreign title Kshatrapa, and the use of the Kharoshthī alphabet on his coins, clearly show that he was a viceroy of some northern power—probably of the Kushāns. Jayadāman, son of Chashtana, seems to have acted merely as a Kshatrapa and to have predeceased his father, and the latter was succeeded as Mahākshatrapa by Rudradāman.

Rudradāman¹ became an independent Mahākshatrapa some time between the years 52 and 72 (A.D. 130 and 150). We learn from the Junāgaḍh Rock Inscription of the year 72 that men of all castes chose him as protector and that he won for himself the title of Mahākshatrapa. This probably indicates that the power of his house had been shaken by some enemy (possibly Gautamiputra), and he had to restore the supreme satrapal dignity by his own prowess.

The place names in the inscription seem to show that the rule of Rudradāman extended over Purv-āpar-Ākar-Āvanti (East and West Mālwa), Anupa-nivṛit or the Māhishmatī region (Māndhātā in Nimād, or Maheśvara),² Ānartta³ (territory around Dwārakā), Surāshṭra (district

1 For references to Rudradāman in literature, see Chatterjee, Buddhist Studies (ed. Law), pp. 384 f.

2 IA, 4, 346.

3 Ānartta may, according to some, however, designate the district around Vaḍanagara (Bom. Gaz. 1, i, 6). In that case Kukura may be placed in the Dwārakā region. The Bhāgavata Purāṇa refers to Dwārakā as "Kukur-Āndhaka-Vṛishṇibhiḥ guptā" (I. 11, 10). The Vāyu Purāṇa (ch. 96, 134) represents Ugrasena, the Yādava rājā, as Kukurodbhava, of Kukura extraction. In Mbh. III. 183. 32, too, Kukuras are closely associated with Daśārhas and Andhakas who are known to have been Yādava clans. In II. 52. 15 they around Junāgaḍh), Svabhra (the country on the banks of the Sābarmatī), Marn (Mārṇār), Kachchha (Cutch), Sindhu-Sauvira (the Lower Indus Valley)¹ Kukura probably between Sind and the Pāriyātra Mt.),² Aparānta (N. Koṅkan),³ Nishāda (in the region of the Sarasvatī and the Western Vindhya),⁴ etc. Of these places Surāshṭra, Kukura, Aparānta, Anupa and Ākarāvanti formed part of Gautamiputra's dominions, and must have been conquered either from that king or one of his immediate successors. The Junāgaḍh inscription gives the information that Rudradāman twice defeated Śātakarṇi, lord of the Deccan, but did not destroy him on account of their near relationship. According to Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar this Śātakarṇi was Gautamiputra himself, whose son Vāsishṭhiputra Śātakarṇi was Rudradāman's son-in-law. According to Rapson the lord of the Deccan defeated by the Saka ruler are associated with the Ambashṭhas and the Pahlavas. A branch of the people may have lived in the lower valley of the Chenab and the Indus, while another branch occupied a portion of Kāṭhiāwār.

1 Sindhu is the inland portion lying to the west of the Indus (Watters, Yuan Chwang, II. 252, 253, read with 256; Vātsyāyana, Kāmasūtra, Benares Ed., 295), Sauvira includes the littoral (Milinda Pañho, S. B. E., XXXVI, 269), as well as the inland portion lying to the east of the Indus as far as Multān (Alberuni, I, 302; IA, 7, 259). The Jaina Pravachanasāroddhāra names Vitabhaya as the capital.

2 Bṛīhat Saṁhitā, V, 71; XIV, 4.

3 Aparānta in its extended sense (cf. Aśoka, RE, V) no doubt embraces not only Śūrpāraka but Nāsik, Bharukachchha, the Mabi valley, Cutch, Surāshṭra, Ānartta, Abu, etc. (Vāyu, 45 129 f.; Matsya, 114 50-51; Mārk, 57, 49 f.—the Puraṇic text is corrupt and Śūrpārakāḥ, Kachchīyāḥ and Ānarttāḥ should be substituted for Śūryārakāḥ, Kāśmīrāḥ and Āvantiyāḥ). But as the Junāgaḍh record distinguishes Aparānta from Surāshṭra, Ānartta, etc., it is clearly used here in its restricted sense.

4 Cf. Nishāda-rāshṭra, Mbh., III, 130. 4 (the place of the disappearance—Vinaśana—of the river Sarasvatī is described as the dvāra of Nishādarāshṭra); note also Pāriyātracharāḥ, Mbh., XII, 135, 3-5. In Mbh. ii. 31. 4-7 a Nishādabhūmi is placed between the Matsyas (of Jaipur) and the Chambal. The Vedic commentator Mahidhara explains the word Nishāda as meaning a Bhil (Vedic Index, I. 454). According to Bühler (IA, 7, 263) Nishāda probably corresponded with Hissar and Bhatnir.

was Pulumāyi. It is more probable that the defeated ruler was Vāsishṭhiputra Śātakarṇi himself, who may have been a brother and a predecessor of Pulumāyi.

The Great Satrap also conquered the Yaulheyas, possibly of Johiya-bār along the Sutlej, who are known, from a stone inscription, to have occupied also the Bijayagadh region in the Bharatpur state. If the Kushān chronology accepted by us be correct, then he must have wrested Sindh-Sauvira from one of the successors of Kanishka I.

Rudradāman apparently held his court at Ujjain, which is mentioned by Ptolemy as the capital of his grandfather Chashtana, placing the provinces of Ānarta and Surāshṭra under his Pahlava (Parthian) *Amātya*¹ Suviśākha. The Amātya constructed a new dam on the famous Sudarśana Lake which owed its origin to the "care bestowed by the Maurya government upon question of irrigation, even in the most remote provinces."

The Great Kshatrapa is said to have gained fame by studying grammar (śabda), polity (artha), music (gandharva), logic (nyāya), etc. As a test of the civilised character of his rule it may be noted that he took and kept to the end of his life, the vow to stop killing men except in battle. The Sudarśana embankment was rebuilt and the lake reconstructed by "expending a great amount of money from his own treasury, without oppressing the people of the town and of the province by exacting taxes (Kara), forced labour (Viśṭi) benevolences (Prāṇaya), and the like.¹ The king was helped in the work of government by an able staff of officials, who were "fully endowed with the qualifications of ministers" (amātya-guṇa samudyuktaiḥ) and were divided into two classes, viz., Matisachiva (Counsellors) and Karma-sachiva (Executive Officers).

1 With this bureaucratic designation is to be contrasted the title Rājā applied to Tushāspa, the local ruler of Surāshṭra in the days of Aśoka, who 'was more than a mere official' (IA., 7, 257 n.). While some of the Śaka provinces or districts were placed under amātyas or officers whose functions were mainly of a civil character, others seem to have been governed by generals (Mahādanda-nāyaka). The name of such a military governor is disclosed by a Sāñchi inscription (JASB, 1923, 343).

Rudradāman had at least two sons and one daughter. The princess was given in marriage to Vāsishṭhiputra Śrī Śātakarṇi of the Śātavāhana family of the Deccan. A Nāgārjunikoṇḍa inscription² refers to a princess from Ujjain named Rudradhara Bhaṭṭārikā who was the queen (Mahādevī) of an Ikshvāku ruler of the Guṇṭār district and some adjoining regions in the lower Kṛishṇā valley. It has been surmised by Vogel that she probably belonged to the house of Chasṭana. Her father is styled a Mahārāja, a title which seems to have been formally assumed by one of the latest successors of Rudradāman I, viz., Svāmī-Rudrasena III, who ruled from c. A.D. 348 to 378, and was, apparently, a contemporary of Samudra-Gupta. It is, however, difficult to say if the Ikshvāku queen was a daughter of Rudrasena III or of some earlier prince.

Rudradāman I, was succeeded by his eldest son Dāmāghsada I. After Dāmāghsada there were, according to Rapson, two claimants for the succession : his son Jivādāman and his brother Rudra Siṃha I. The struggle was eventually decided in favour of the latter. To Rudra Siṃha's reign belongs the Guṇḍa inscription of the year 103 (= A. D. 181) which records the digging of a tank by an Ābhira general named Rudrabhūti, son of the general Bāpaka or Bāhaka. The Ābhiras afterwards possibly usurped the position of Mahākshatrapa. According to Dr. Bhandarkar an Ābhira named Īśvara-datta was the Mahākshatrapa of the period 188-90 A. D. But Rapson places Īśvaradatta after A.D. 236.

1 Bomb. Gaz., I, 1, 39.

2 Ep. Ind., XX, 1 ff.

Rudra Siṃha I was followed by his sons Rudrasena I,¹ Saṅghadāman and Dāmasena. Three of Dāmasena's sons became Mahākshatrapas, viz., Yaśodāman, Vijaysena and Dāmajada Śrī. This last prince was succeeded by his nephew Rudrasena II who was followed by his sons Viśvasiṃha and Bhartridāman. Under Bhartridāman his son Viśvasena served as Kshatrapa.

The connection of Bhartridāman and Viśvasena with the next Mahākshatrapa Rudradāman II and his successors cannot be ascertained. The last known member of the line was Rudra Siṃha III who ruled up to at least A.D. 388.

Rapson points out that from A.D. 295 to c. 340 there was no Mahākshatrapa. The elder branch of the family came to an end after 305 and passed by an obscure transition to a new line of Satraps and Great Satraps. The rulers from A.D. 295 to 332 held only the subordinate title of Satrap, and the higher title was not revived till a few years before A.D. 348, when Rudrasena III styled himself Rājā Mahākshatrapa and Mahārāja Kshatrapa. Now, it is precisely during the period when the old line passed away in obscurity, and the office of Mahākshatrapa remained in abeyance, that we find Śakasthāna and portions of Hind annexed to the Sassanian empire and dominated by Sassanian viceroys. The Sassanian conquest began before the end of the reign of Varhrān (Bahrām) II (A. D. 293) and the Sassanian suzerainty was maintained till the early part of the reign of Shāpūr II (A. D. 309-79). The hold of the Persians on the distant Indian provinces became weak in the middle of the fourth century A. D. when Rudrasena III assumed the title of Mahārāja, and Samudra Gupta, the prototype of the Raghu of Kālidāsa, forced the foreign potentates of the north-west borderland to do him homage.

1 To Rudrasena's reign belong the Mulwasar tank inscription, and the Jasdhan Pillar Inscription of A. D. 205. In the latter epigraph we have the title Bhadramukha applied to all the ancestors of Rudrasena, excepting Jayadāma.

The revived power of the Śakas of Western India did not last long, being finally destroyed by the Guptas. Already in the time of Samudra Gupta the Śakas appear among the peoples who hastened to buy peace by the offer of maidens and other acts of respectful submission. The Udayagiri Inscriptions of Chandra Gupta II testify to that monarch's conquest of Eastern Mālwa. One of the Inscriptions commemorates the construction of a cave by a minister of Chandra Gupta who "came here, accompanied by the king in person, who was seeking to conquer the whole world." The subjugation of western Mālwa is probably hinted at by the epithet "Siṃha-vikrānta-gāmini," resorting to (as a vassal of) Siṃha Vikrama, i.e., Chandra Gupta II, applied to Naravarman of Mandasor.¹ Evidence of the conquest of Surāshṭra is to be seen in Chandra Gupta's silver coins which are imitated from those of Śaka Satraps. Lastly, Bāṇa in his Harsha-charita refers to the slaying of the Śaka king

1 Ind. Ant., 1913, p. 162. The small copper coins of Chandra Gupta II bearing a vase as type were probably struck by him in the Mālava territory which may have been under Śaka domination in the second century A. D. (Allan, CICA, cvi).

by Chandra Gupta : *Ar(l ?)ipure cha para-kalatra kāmukam kāminī-vesaguptaścha Chandra Guptaḥ Śaka-patim aśūtayaditi.*¹

According to the commentator Śaṅkara the Parakalatra and Kāminī referred to above was Dhruva-devī, and the ruler of the Śakas was secretly killed by Chandragupta disguised as Dhruva-devī while the former was making advances of love. The Śṛiṅgāraprakāśa by Bhoja throws additional light on the point quoting passages from the Devichandraguptam (see Aiyangar Com. Vol. 359ff; also Lévi, J. A. 1923, 201 ff; Devichandraguptam by A. Rangaswami Sarasvatī, Ind. Ant. 1923, p. 181 ff.). The last mentioned work is a play by Viśākhadatta, the author of the Mudrārākshasa. Quotations from the Devichandraguptam are also found in the Nāṭya darpaṇa of Rāmachandra and Guṇachandra.

GENEALOGICAL TABLE OF THE ŚAKAS OF UJJAIN

SECTION IV. ADMINISTRATIVE MACHINERY OF THE SCYTHIAN PERIOD.¹

The little that we know about the administration of the Scythian Epoch leaves no room for doubt that the institutions of the age were not haphazard improvisations of military upstarts, having no relations with the past, but a highly developed and organised system—the fruit of the labours of generations of political theorists and practical statesmen (Vaktri-Prayoktri).

The influence of political thinkers (Arthachintakas) on Indo-Scythian Polity is evident. The ablest among the princes of the time assiduously studied the science of polity (Arthavidyā);² and the care taken to train the occupant of the throne, the employment of officers endowed with ministerial qualifications (Amātyaguna), the classification of ministers and other high officials (Sachivas), abstention from oppressive imposition of Pranaya (Benevolences), Vishṭi (forced labour) etc., and the solicitude for the welfare of the Pauras and Jānapadas, people of cities as well as country parts, clearly show that the teaching of the writers of treatises on polity (Arthasāstra) was not lost upon the Scythian conquerors of India. There was no great cleavage with the past,

1 The expression "Scythian Period" has been used in this section in a broad sense to denote the epoch of all the Post-Mauryan dynasties that ruled in India during the centuries immediately preceding and succeeding the Christian era. During the greater part of this period the most powerful potentate in India was the Scythian "King of Kings" who had his metropolis in the North-West, but whose commands were not unoften obeyed on the banks of the Ganges and the Godāvarī. See Cal. Rev., Sept., 1925.

2 The Junāgaḍh Inscription of Rudradāman (Ind. Ant., 1878, p. 261; Ep. Ind., VIII, 36 f.).

and the references to Mahāmātras,¹ Rajjukas,² and Samcharamtaka or *Sanichārin*³ spies, indicate that the official machinery of the Maurya period had not ceased to function at least in Southern India.

But we must not suppose that the entire administrative structure of the period was a replica of the Maurya constitution. The foreign conquerors of North-Western India brought with them several institutions which had been prevalent for ages in the countries through which they passed. Thus the Persian system of government by Satraps was introduced in several provinces of Northern, Western and Southern India, and officials with the Greek titles of *Meridarch*⁴ (probably District Officer) and Strategos (general or governor) ruled contemporaneously with functionaries having the Indian designation of Amātya (minister or civil officer in charge of a district) and Mahāsenāpati (great general or military governor).

The tide of Scythian invasion could not sweep away the tribal republics which continued to flourish as in the days of Buddha and Alexander. Inscriptions and coins testify to the existence of many such communities,⁵ and like the Lichchhavis and *Śākya*s of old, the most powerful among them were found very often ranged against their aggressive royal neighbours who were now mostly Scythian. Unfortunately, the contemporary records do not throw much light

1 Lüders' Ins., Nos. 937, 1144. Note the employment of a Śramaṇa as Mahāmātra (High Officer) by a Śātavāhana ruler.

2 Ins. Nos. 416, 1195. The Rajjukas were Surveyors and Judges in the country parts.

3 Ins., No. 1200; cf. IA, 5, 52, 155.

4 A Meridarkha Theūdora is mentioned in a Swāt Kharoshthī epigraph. Another Meridarkha is mentioned in a Taxila Kharoshthī inscription. The two meridarchs are mentioned as establishing Buddhist relics and sanctuaries (Corpus, II, i, xv).

5 E.g., the Mālavas (Mālayas), Yaudheyas, Ārjunāyanas and possibly the Audumbaras, Kulūtas, Kunindas (see Camb. Hist., 528, 529), and Uttamabhadras. Cf. Smith, Catalogue of Coins, Sec. VII.

on their internal organisation, and it serves no useful purpose to ascribe to them institutions which really belong to their predecessors or successors.

Though the Scythians could not annihilate the republican clans, they did destroy many monarchies of Northern and Western India, and introduce a more exalted type of kingship. The exaltation of monarchy is apparent from two facts, namely, the assumption of high-sounding semi-divine honorifics by reigning monarchs, and the apotheosis of deceased rulers. The deification of rulers, and the use of big titles are not unknown to ancient Indian literature, but it is worthy of note that a supreme ruler like Aśoka, whose dominions embraced the greater part of India and possibly Afghanistan, was content with the titles of "Rājā" and "Devānampīya Piyadasi."¹ The great rulers of the Scythian age, on the other hand, were no longer satisfied with those modest epithets, but assumed more dignified titles like Chakravartin (emperor of a circle of states), Adhirāja (super-king), Rājātirāja (supreme king of kings), and Devaputra (the son and not merely the beloved of the gods).

In Southern India we come across titles of a semi-religious character like Kshemarāja,² Dharma-Mahārājādhirāja and Dharma-Yuvamahārāja,³ assumed by pious defenders of Indian faiths, engaged in upholding dharma as practised by the ancient teachers and law-givers, and

1 'Of Gracious Mien, Beloved of the Gods.'

2 Lüders' Ins., No. 1345. 'The beneficent or propitious king', 'prince of peace'.

3 "The Righteous King of Kings", "the Righteous Crown Prince". Lüders' Ins., Nos. 1196, 1200. For the significance of the title, cf. IA, 5, 51, "Kaliyugadoshāvasanna-dharmodधारणा-nitya sannaddha." Cf. also the epithets "Manvā-dīpraṇīta-vidhi-vidhānadharmā Dharmarāja iva," "prakṣhālita-kali-kalāṅkaḥ" applied to the Maitraka Kings of Valabhī (Bhuvanagar Inscriptions, 31.). Sometimes even Śaka rulers and generals posed as Dharma-vijayī (JASB, 1923, 343).

purging it of the evils of the Kali Age, probably to distinguish themselves from the unbelieving foreigners and barbarian outcastes of the North-West.

The assumption of big titles¹ by kings and emperors was paralleled by the use of equally exalted epithets in reference to their chief consorts. Aśoka's queens appear to have been styled merely Devī. The mother of Tivara, for instance, is called "Dutīā Devī" (the second queen) and the implication is that the elder queen was Prathamā Devī. But in the Scythian epoch we come across the titles of Agra-Mahishī and Mahādevī which distinguished the chief queen from her rivals. Among such chief consorts may be mentioned Ayasi-Kamuia, Nāganikā, and Balāsri.

The apotheosis of deceased rulers is strikingly illustrated by the practice of erecting Devakulas or "Royal galleries of portrait statues." The most famous of these structures was the Devakula of the Pitāmaha (grandfather) of Huvishka referred to in a Mathurā inscription.² The existence of royal Devakulas as well as ordinary temples,

1 It is a characteristic of Indian history that imperial titles of one period became feudatory titles in the next. Thus the title Rājā used by Aśoka became a feudatory title in the Scythian and Gupta periods, when designations like Rājarājā, Rājādhirāja, Mahārājādhirāja, Parama-Bhaṭṭāraka and Parama-Rājādhirāja (Allan, 63), came into general use. But even Mahārājādhirāja became a feudatory designation in the age of the Pratihāras when the loftier style of Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja, Paramēśvara was assumed by sovereign rulers.

2 JRAS, 1924, p. 402. For images of later kings, cf. Beginnings of South Indian History, 144, 153; Raverty, Tabaqāt, I, 622 (effigy of Bikramajit); C. S. Srinivasachari, The Evolution of Political Institutions of South India, Section IV ("The Young Men of India," June and July, 1924), p. 5. Images of Sundara Chola and one of his queens were set up in the Tanjore temple and deified. C. V. Vaidya (Mediaeval Hindu India, I, 98) refers to the prevalence of the custom of raising some temple at the place of burning the dead body of the kings. But it is not clear if the temples contained images of the dead king and his queens. The deification and worship of the dead kings may be compared to devapitṛpūjā referred to in the Kautiliya (II, 6).

and the presence of the living Devaputra probably earned for Mathurā its secondary name of "The city (?) of the gods."¹

The exaltation of royalty in the epoch under review had the sanction of certain writers on kingly duty (Rājadharmā) who represented the king as a "mahatī devatā," a great divinity, in human shape. But it was probably due in the first instance to the Scythians² who acted as carriers of Persian, Chinese and Roman ideas of kingship. The title Rājātirāja, supreme king overpassing other kings, as Rapson points out, is "distinctively Persian." "It has a long history from the *Xshāyathiyanām Xshāyathiya*³ of the inscriptions of Darius down to the Shāhān Shāh of the present day." The Kushān epithet "Devaputra" is apparently of Chinese origin, being the literal translation of the Chinese emperors' title "Son of Heaven" (Tien-tze; tien tzu).⁴ If Lüders is to be believed, one at least of the Indo-Scythian sovereigns (Kanishka of the Ārā Inscription)

1 For a different suggestion see Tarn, The Greeks in Bactria and India, 252. Tarn prefers to translate Ptolemy's phrase as 'daughter of the gods'. But see Lévi, JA, 1915, p. 91.

2 The titles 'Theos' and 'Theotropos' were used by certain Indo-Greek rulers, but their example does not seem to have been widely followed. Gondophernes, it is true, calls himself Devavrata, but not yet Deva or Devaputra. As to theory that the Kushāns had been invested competitively with the title "son of the gods" in opposition to the Hiungnu rather than to the Chinese, it has to be admitted that there is no definite evidence that the title in question originated with the Hiungnu, and was not borrowed in ancient times from the Chinese. Cf. B. C. Law Volume, II. 305 ff. The Kushāns had direct contact with the Chinese in the time of Panchao.

3 Cf. the use of the term 'Kshapayitvā' in connection with the subversion of the Śuṅga sovereignty by Simuka. The expressions Kshatrasya Kshatra (Bṛihad Āraṇyaka Upanishad, I. 4. 14), Adhirāja, Chakravartin, etc., are, no doubt, known to our ancient literature. But there is no proof of the use of the last two as formal styles of sovereigns till the Post-Mauryan period, while the first is never so used.

4 JRAS 1897, 903; 1912, 671, 682. Allan, Coins of the Gupta Dynasties xxvii. Artabanus (I or II) called himself 'son of a God' (Tarn, The Greeks, assumed the Roman title of "Kaisar," and the dedication of temples in honour of emperors on the banks of the Tiber may have had something to do with the practice of erecting Devakulas on the banks of the Jumna.

A remarkable feature of the Scythian Age was the wide prevalence of the system of Dvairājya or Diarchy in Northern and Western India and Yauvarājya (rule of a crown-prince) in N. W. India and the Far South. Under both these forms of government the sovereign's brother, son, grandson, or nephew had an important share in the administration as co-ruler or subordinate colleague. In a Dvairājya or Diarchy the rulers appear to have been of equal status, but in a Yauvarājya (rule of a crown-prince) the reigning prince was apparently a vicegerent. As instances of Dvairājya may be mentioned the cases of Lysias and Antialkidas, Agathokleia and Strato I Strato I and Strato II, Spalirises and Azes, Hagāna and Hagāmasha, Gondophernes and Gad, Gondophernes and Abdagases, Chashtana and Rudradāman, Kanishka II and Huvishka etc., etc. Among ruling Yavarājas may be mentioned Kharaosta and the Pallava Yuva-Mahārājas Śiva-Śkanda-varman, Vijaya-Buddha-varman¹ and Vishnugopa of Palakkada.

The king or viceroy, resided in cities called Adhishthāna. The number of such Adhishthānas and various other kinds of cities (Nagara, Nagarî), was fairly numerous. But regarding their administration our information is very meagre. We hear of "nigama-sabhās"

p. 92). This may suggest Greek influence too. Some writers fail to distinguish between occurrence of similar royal epithets in literature and their formal use in contemporary epigraphic records in the time of the Kings themselves (B. C. Law Volume, II, pp. 305 ff.

¹ IHQ, 1933, 211.

or town councils and of a city official called Nagarākshadārśa.¹ whose functions are nowhere distinctly stated in the inscriptions but seem to have been similar to those of the Nagaravyāvahārikas, or city judges, of the Maurya Age.

Regarding general administration, and the government of provinces, districts and villages, we have more detailed information. The designations of some of the highest officers of state did not differ from those in vogue during the Maurya period. Mahāmātras, and Rajjukas play an important part in the days of the Śātavāhanas and Scythians as in the time of Aśoka. But side by side with these functionaries we hear of others who do not figure in inscriptions of the Maurya Epoch although some of them appear in the Arthaśāstra attributed to Kauṭilya.

The officers most intimately associated with the sovereign were the privy councillors,—the Matissachivas of the Junāgaḍh epigraph and the Rahasyādhipikṛta of the Pallava grants. Among other prominent court officials must be mentioned the Rāja Vaidya,² Royal Physician, and the Rāja Lipikara, Royal Scribe.³

No less important than the privy councillors were the high military officials—the Mahāsenāpati,⁴ the Dandanāyaka and the *Mahādanda-nāyaka*⁵ who probably 1 EHI⁴, 226; Lüder's Ins., No. 1351 (Udayagiri Cave Inscription). Cf. Akshadarśa, Patañjali, Index of Words. Oka, Amarakośa, 123; Agni Purāṇa, 366, 3; Vin. iii. 47. According to the last mentioned text the 'akṣhadassas' constituted a class of Mahāmātras, like their prototypes in the time of Aśoka. In later ages the Akshadarśa might have had revenue functions. Cf. Kshīra's comment on the passage from the Amarakośa referred to above. The duties of the Akshapaṭalikas of the Gupta period may be mentioned in this connection.

2 Ins., 1190-93.

3 Ins., 271; Kauṭ., II, 10.

4 1124, 1146.

5 1328, cf. Majumdar's List of Kharoshthi Ins. No. 36. For the duties of a Dandanāyaka, cf. IA, 4, 106, 275n; 5, 49; Fleet, CII, 16. Dandanāyakas sometimes carved out principalities (rājya) for themselves (JASB, 1923, 343).

correspond to the Senāpati and *Nāyaka*¹ of the Kauṭīliya Arthaśāstra. These important functionaries had probably under them subordinates like Senāgopas (captains), *Gaulmikas*² (commanders of platoons), *Ārakshādhikṛitas*³ (guards), *Aśvavūrakas*⁴ (troopers), *Bhaṭamanushyas*⁵ (mercenaries), etc.

We have already referred to one class of civil officers (Amātyas or Sachivas), viz., the Mati sachivas (counsellors). There was another class of Amātyas who served as executive officers (Karma sachivas). From them were chosen governors,⁶ treasurers,⁷ superintendents,⁸ and secretaries⁹ as in the days of Megasthenes.

Among treasury officials mention is made of the Gaṁjavara,¹⁰ the *Koshthāgārīka*¹¹ and the *Bhāṇḍāgārīka*¹² who was one of the principal ministers of state (Rājāmātya). But we have no epigraphic reference to the Sannidhātri (lit. piler) or the Samāharātri (collector) till the days of the "Śaila" kings of the Vindhyas and the Somavamsi kings of Kosala. The main heads of revenue received into the Bhāṇḍāgāra or Kośa (treasury) were, as enumerated in the Junāgaḍh Inscription, Bali (extra tribute), Śulka (duty), and Bhāga (customary share of the king). These sufficed to fill the exchequer of a benevolent prince like Rudradāman with 1 Kauṭ., Bk. X. Ch. 1, 2, 5.

2 Lüders' Ins., 1200; Ep. Ind., XIV, 155; cf. Manu, VII, 190.

3 Lüders, 1200.

4 Lüders, 381, 728.

5 Lüders, 1200.

6 Lüders' Ins., 965.

7 1141.

8 1180.

9 1125.

10 Lüders, 82; Rājatarāṅgīni. V. 177. Note the employment of a Brāhmaṇa treasurer by a Scythian ruler.

11 Ep. Ind., XX, 28.

12 Lüders, 1141.

kanaka (gold), rajata (silver), vājra (diamond), vaiduryaratna (beryl), etc. Rulers less scrupulous than the Mahākshatraps doubtless oppressed the people with arbitrary imposts, forced labour and benevolences (kara-vishti-pranaya-kriyā-bhik). Besides the Bhūṇḍāgāra, whose existence is implied by Lüders' Ins., No. 1141, we have reference to the storehouse, Koshthāgāra,¹ which is described in Book II, Chapter 15, of the Kautilīya Arthaśāstra. The inscriptions afford us glimpses of the way in which the revenue was spent. The attempts to provide for "pānīya" or drinkable water are specially noteworthy. The Junāgaḍh Inscription tells us how "by the expenditure of a vast amount of money from his own treasury" a great Scythian ruler and his amātya restored the Sudarśana lake. References to the construction or repair of tanks, wells, lakes and other reservoirs of water, Pushkarinīs, udapānas, hradas or taḍāgas, are fairly common. Lüders' Ins., No. 1137, makes mention of makers of hydraulic engines (Audayantrika), while another epigraph² refers to a royal official called Pānīyagharika or superintendent of waterhouses. Inscription No. 1186, after recording the gift of a taḍāga (pond), a nāga (statue of a serpent deity) and a vihāra (pleasance, monastery), refers to the Amātya Śkandasvāti who was the Karmāntika (superintendent of works), an official designation known to the Arthaśāstra.³

In the department of Foreign Affairs we have the Dūta (envoy or messenger), but we do not as yet hear of dignitaries like the Sāmdhivigrahika (officer in charge of peace and war) and *Kumārāmātya*¹ who figure so prominently in inscriptions of the Gupta and Post-Gupta periods.

1 In Ins. No. 937.

2 Lüders, 1279.

3 Bk. I, Ch. 12.

Inscriptions of the period under review refer also to officials like the Mahāsāmiyas who preserved records,² and others whose exact functions and status are nowhere indicated. Amongst these may be mentioned the Abhyamtaropasthāyaka, 'servant of the interior (harem ?)', Māḍabika,³ Tāṭhika and Neyika.⁴

The big empires of North-Western India were split up into vast satrapies and smaller provinces ruled by Mahākshatrapas and Kshatrapas. The satrapies as well as the kingdoms outside the limits of the Scythian Empire, were divided into districts called Rāshṭra, Āhāra, Janapada, Deśa or Vishaya. We do not as yet hear of the organisation into Bhuktis (lit. allotments, administrative divisions) so widely prevalent in Post-Scythian times. Rāshṭra, Āhāra (or Hāra) and Janapada seem to have been synonymous terms in this age, as is proved by the case of the Sātahani-ratṭha (rāshṭra) or Sātavāhani-hāra which is styled a janapada in the Myakadoni Inscription. The chief officer in a Rāshṭra or Āhāra was the Rāshṭrapati, Rāshṭrika (Raṭhika) or Amātya. The Amātya Suviśākha, for instance, governed Surāshṭra

1 Kumāra means 'a youth,' 'a prince'. Hence Kumārāmātya may mean 'junior minister,' or 'prince's minister'. The word Kumāra as the opposite of Praudha may correspond to Chikka, Chenna or Immaḍi of the South. Another interpretation is also possible. Kumārāmātya may mean an amātya from one's youth just as Kumāra-sevaka means ākaumārāparichārahā.

2 For another interpretation see JBBRAS, N.S., IV, 1928, pp. 64, 72; IHQ 1933, 221. In the opinion of V. S. Bakhle the Mahāsāmiya "seems to refer to the resolution of the corporate assembly of the city or to that body itself."

3 The word Māḍabika may perhaps be connected with Māḍamba of the Jaina Kaṭhasūtra. 89. Para. 62 refers to an official styled Māḍambiya (Burgomaster). For a tax Maṇḍapikā see Ep. Ind., XXIII, 137.

4 Sircar equates Neyika with Naiyogika.

under the Mahākshatrapa Rudradāman. The Amātyas Vishṇupālita, Śyāmaka, and Śiva-skanda-datta successively governed the Āhāra or district of Govardhana (Nāsik) in the time of Gautamiputra Śātakarṇi and Pulumāyi, while the neighbouring Āhāra of Māmāla (Poona District) was under an Amātya whose name ended in—Gupta. In the Far South the chief officer of the Āhāra seems to have been called 'Vyāprita.'¹ The Janapadas, particularly those on vulnerable frontiers, were sometimes placed under the charge of military governors (Strategos, Mahāsenāpati, Mahādandanūyaka, etc.). The Janapada of Śātavāhani-bāra was, for instance, under the Mahāsenāpati Skandanāga.² Part of Eastern Mālwa seems to have been governed by a Śaka Mahādandanūyaka shortly before its annexation by the Imperial Guptas and portions of the Indian borderland were governed by a line of Strategoi (Aspavarman, Sasa)³ under Azes and Gondophernes.

Deśa, too, is often used as a synonym of Rāshṭra or Janapada. It was under a Deśādhipakṛita, the Deshmukh of mediaeval times, an officer mentioned in the Hīrahaḍagalli grant of Śiva-Skanda-varman. The next smaller unit was apparently the Vishaya governed by the Vishayapati.⁴ But sometimes even 'Vishaya' was used as a synonym of Deśa or Rāshṭra, and there were cases in the Post-Gupta period of the use of the term to designate a larger area than a Rāshṭra.⁵

The smallest administrative units were the villages called Grāma or Grāmāhāra,⁶ and the smaller towns or

1 Lüders, 1327. 1328.

2 Cf. the Myakadoni Inscription.

3 For an amātya named Sasa, see the Koḍavali Rock Inscription of the Śātavāhana king Siri Chandra Sāti or Śāta (Ep. Ind., XVIII, 318).

4 929n (Lüders).

5 Fleet, CII, 32 n.

6 Lüders, Ins. No. 1195.

emporia called Nigama.¹ The affairs of a Grāma were controlled by officers styled *Grāmeyika Āyutta*² who were apparently headed by the Grāmanî,³ Grāmika,⁴ *Grāmabhojaka*⁵ or (Grāma) Mahattaraka. Lüders' (Mathurā) Inscription, No. 48, gives the names of two such Grāmikas, Jayadeva and Jayanāga. In Southern India we have the curious title "Mulūḷa" applied to the head of a village.⁶ The chief men of the Nigamas were the Gahapatis,⁷ the counterparts of the Grāmaṛiddhas of villages. In Lüders' Inscription, No. 1153, we have evidence of the corporate activity of a dhammanigama headed by the Gahapati. The Grāma and Nigama organisation was the most durable part of the Ancient Indian system of government, and centuries of Scythian rule could not wipe it out of existence. The village and the Nigamas were also the nurseries of those ideas of associate life which found vent in the organisation of societies, committees, assemblies and corporations styled Goshthīs,⁸ Nikāyas,⁹ Parishads,¹⁰ Saṅghas,¹¹ etc., about which the inscriptions of the period speak so much. Not the least interesting of these institutions was the "Goshthi" which 1 In Pali literature Nigamas are distinguished from grāmas, villages, as well as from nagaras, cities which had strong ramparts and gateways (dhīḍha prākāra toraṇa).

2 1327.

3 1333.

4 48, 69a.

5 1200.

6 Ins., 1194. Cf Muruṇḍa = lord (Śaka). For the presence of Śakas in the far south, see Ep Ind., XX, 37.

7 Gahapati, house-lord, was a designation specially applied to the leading men of the gentry, the wealthy middle class, Kalyāṇa-bhattiko, men accustomed to a good dietary. They are often distinguished from priests and nobles (Rhys Davids and Stede).

8 Lüders' Ins., 273, 1332, 1335, 1338.

9 1133.

10 125, 925.

11 5, 1137.

afforded a field for co-operation between kings and villagers. Lüders' Ins., Nos., 1332 to 1338, speak of a Goshthi which was headed by the Rajan, and which counted among its officials the son of a village headman.

A less pleasing feature of ancient Indian polity in the Scythian, as in other times, was the employment of spies, particularly of the "Sancharanitakas," or wandering emissaries, whose functions are described with gruesome details in the Arthasāstra. The evidence of foreign witnesses in Maurya and Gupta periods seems, however, to suggest that political morality did not actually sink so low as a study of the Arthasāstra would lead us to think. Vatsyāyana probably voices the real feelings of his countrymen when he says that every single maxim for which there is provision in a theoretical treatise need not be followed in actual practice, because theoretical manuals have to be comprehensive, but practical application should have a limited range. No sane man will think of eating dog's flesh simply because its flavour, tonic power, dressing, etc., are discussed in medical treatises.

Na śāstramastītye tāvat prayogē kāranaṁ bhavet śāstrārthān vyāpīno vidyāt prayogāṁstvekaśīkān rasa-vīrya vipākā hi śvamāṁsasyūpi vaidyake kīrtitā iti tat kiṁ syūd bhakṣaṇīyaṁ vichakṣaṇaṁ.

CHAPTER X. THE GUPTA EMPIRE : THE RISE OF THE GUPTA POWER.

Imām sūgaraparyantām Himavad-Vindhya-kunḍalām mahīm ekūtapatrāṅkūm Rājasiṃha¹ praśūstu naḥ —Dātavākyaṃ.

SECTION I. THE FOUNDATION OF THE GUPTA DYNASTY.

We have seen that the tide of Scythian conquest, which was rolled back for a time by the Śātavāhanas, was finally stemmed by the Gupta Emperors. It is interesting to note that there were many Guptas among the officials of the Śātavāhana conquerors of the Śakas e.g., Śiva Gupta of the Nāsik Inscription of the year 18, (Pura or Puru ?) Gupta of the Karle inscription, and Śiva-Skanda Gupta of the same epigraph. It is difficult to say whether there was any connection between these Guptas and the Imperial Gupta family of Northern India, two of whom actually bore the names of Skanda Gupta and Puru Gupta.²

1 With Rājasiṃha may be compared the epithet Narendrasimha occurring on coins of Chandragupta II (Allan, Gupta Coins, 43). All the letters here are not clearly legible (ibid., cxiii), but on many coins we find the analogous epithet Siṃha-vikrama (pp. 38 ff.). The reference in the Dātavākya must be to a paramount ruler of Northern India, bounded by the seas and the Himālayan and Vindhyan ranges, who had the epithet 'lion-like king.' The ruler who answers best to the description is Chandra Gupta II. The author of the Dātavākya possibly refers to this monarch. If he is identical with Bhāsa, a distinguished predecessor of Kālidāsa, his career as a poet may have begun before the accession of Chandra Gupta II, Vikramāditya, 'Narendra-Siṃha,' i.e., in the time of the great patron and 'king of poets' (Kavirāja) Samudra Gupta. — 2—In the Modern Review (November), 1929, p. 499 f. it has been suggested that the Guptas are of Kāraskara origin. But the evidence on the point is hardly conclusive. The identification of the "accursed" Chanḍasena of the Kaumudimahotsava (adopted son of Sundaravarman), whose family was Scions of the Gupta family are not unoften mentioned in old Brāhmī Inscriptions. The Ichchhāwar¹ Buddhist Statuette Inscription² mentions the benefaction of Mahādevī, queen of Sri Haridāsa, sprung from the Gupta race (Gupta-vamśodita). A Bharhut Buddhist Pillar Inscription³ of the Śuṅga period refers to a "Gaupṭi" as the queen of Rājān Visadeva, and the grandmother of Dhanabhūti, probably a feudatory of the Śuṅgas.

Traces of "Gupta" rule in Magadha proper, or some neighbouring tract down the Ganges, are found as early as the second century A.D. I-Tsing, a Chinese pilgrim, who travelled in India in the seventh century A.D., mentions a Mahārāja Śrī Gupta who built a temple near Mrigasikhāvana "which was about forty yojanas uprooted (p. 500) with Chandra Gupta I, son of Mahārāja Śrī Ghaṭotkacha whose dynasty ruled gloriously for centuries, is clearly untenable. The mere fact that Lichchhavis helped Chaṇḍasena is not enough to prove that the prince in question is identical with Chandra Gupta I. Lichchhavis appear as enemies of Magadha as early as the fifth century B.C. For a summary of the plot of the drama, which is attributed by some to a female writer, see Aiyangar Com. Vol., 361f. If Sundaravarman, and his son Kalyānavarman are real historical figures, and if they actually ruled over Magadha, they must be placed either before Mahārāja Śrī Gupta or after Bālāditya (6th century A.D.). The memory of Varman ādhipatya over Magadha was fresh at the time of the Sirpur Stone Inscription of Mahāśiva Gupta (Ep. Ind., XI, 191). Cf. also Pūrṇavarman and Devavarman mentioned by Chinese writers, as well as kings of the Maukhari line. The origin of the Imperial Gupta family is wrapped up in obscurity. We only know that they probably belonged to the Dhārāṇa gotra (IHQ, 1930, 565). They may have been related to Queen Dhārini, the chief consort of Agnimitra. Dr. R. C. Majumdar points out (IHQ, 1933, 930 ff) that according to a Javanese text (Tantri Kāmandaka) Mahārāja Aiśvaryapāla of the Ikshvāku race traced his genealogy to the family of Samudra Gupta. Little reliance can, however, be placed on the uncorroborated assertions of late writers. Even more unreliable is the testimony of works like the Bhavishyottara Purāṇa which, according to some critics, 'is a palpable modern forgery' (N.H.I.P., VI. 133n).

1 Bāndā district,

2 Lüders, No. 11.

3 Lüders, No. 687.

to the east of Nālandā, following the course of the Ganges".¹ I-Tsing's date would place him about A.D. 175.² Allan rejects the date, and identifies Śrī Gupta, with Gupta the great-grandfather of Samudra Gupta, on the ground that it is unlikely that we should have two different rulers in the same territory, of the same name, within a brief period. But have we not two Chandra Guptas and two Kumāra Guptas within brief periods? There is no cogent reason for identifying Śrī Gupta of cir. A.D. 175, known to tradition, with Samudra Gupta's great-grandfather who must have flourished about a century later.

The names of Śrī Gupta's immediate successors are not known. The earliest name of a member of the Gupta family of Magadha which appears in inscriptions is that of Mahārāja Gupta who was succeeded by his son Mahārāja Chaṭotkacha.

1 Dr. Majumdar in A New History of the Indian People, VI, 129; Dr. D. C. Ganguli, IHQ, XIV (1938), 332.

2 Allan, Gupta Coins, Introduction, p. xv. Cf. Ind. Ant. X (1881) 110.

SECTION II. CHANDRA GUPTA I.

The first independent sovereign (Mahārājādhirāja)¹ of the line was Chandra Gupta I, son of Ghatotkacha, who may have ascended the throne in 320 A.D., the initial date of the Gupta Era.² Like his great fore-runner Bimbisāra he strengthened his position at some stage of his career, by a matrimonial alliance with the Lichchhavis of Vaiśālī or of Nepāl,³ and laid the foundations of the Second Magadhan Empire. The union of Chandra Gupta I with the Lichchhavi family is commemorated by a series of coins⁴ having on the obverse standing figures of Chandra Gupta and his queen, the Lichchhavi princess Kumāradevi, and on the reverse a figure of Lakshmī, the goddess of luck, with the legend "Lichchhavayah" probably signifying that the prosperity of Chandra Gupta was due to his Lichchhavi alliance. Smith suggests that the Lichchhavis were ruling in Pāṭaliputra as tributaries or feudatories of the Kushāns and that through his marriage Chandra Gupta succeeded to the power of

1 In the Riddhapur plates (JASB, 1924, 58), however, Chandra Gupta I and even Samudra Gupta are called (carelessly) simply Mahārājas.

2 JRAS, 1893, 80; Cunningham, Arch. Sur. Rep., Vol. IX, p. 21. The identity of the Gupta king with whom the era (Gupta prakāla, Guptānam kāla) of 320 A. D. originated, is by no means clear. The claims of Mahārāja Gupta (IHQ, 1942, 273 n) or even (less plausibly) of Samudra Gupta, cannot be altogether disregarded.

3 It is not suggested that the marriage took place after 320 A. D. The chronology of the Guptas before A. D. 380 is still in a stage of uncertainty. Nothing definite can be stated about the relative date of the marriage till we know more about the length of Chandragupta I's reign, and the exact date of his accession, and that of his son and successor, Samudra Gupta. Some scholars think that Chandra Gupta I's alliance was with the ruling family of Nepāl (JRAS, 1889, p. 55) or of Pāṭaliputra (JRAS, 1893, p. 81).

4 There is difference of opinion among scholars regarding the attribution of these coins, see Altekar in Nim. Suppl. No. XLVII, JRASB, III (1937), No. 2, 346. It is difficult to come to any final conclusion till the discovery of coins whose attribution to Chandra Gupta I is beyond doubt, his wife's relatives. But Allan suggests that Pāṭaliputra was in the possession of the Guptas even in Śrī Gupta's time.¹

From the record of Samudra Gupta's conquests it has been deduced that his father's rule was confined to Magadha and the adjoining territories. In the opinion of Allan the Purāṇic verses defining the Gupta dominions refer to his reign :

Anu-Gaṅgā-Prayāgaṁcha Sāketam Magadhāṁstathā Etān janapadān sarvān bhokshyante Guptavaṁśajāḥ.

"Kings born of the Gupta family will enjoy all these territories viz., Prayāga (Allahabad) on the Ganges,² Sāketa (Oudh), and Magadha (South Bihār)."

It will be seen that Vaiśālī (North Bihār) is not included in this list of Gupta possessions. Therefore, it is difficult to concur in Allan's view that Vaiśālī was one of Chandra Gupta's earliest conquests. Nor does Vaiśālī occur in the list of Samudra Gupta's acquisitions, though the reference to Nepāl as a border state in the famous Allahabad inscription may suggest that North Bihār was included within his dominions. It first appears definitely as a Gupta possession in the time of Chandra Gupta II, and constituted a viceroyalty under an imperial Prince. Prāyaga (Allahabad) may have been conquered from a line of kings whose existence is disclosed in certain inscriptions discovered at Bhīṭā.³ Two of these kings, Mahārāja Gautamiputra Śrī Śivamagha and Rājan Vāsishṭhiputra Bhimasena are assigned

1 Kielhorn's North Indian Inscription, No. 541, however, suggests some connection between the Lichchhavis and Pushpapura (Pāṭaliputra).

2 Cf. Anu-Gaṅgāṁ Hāstināpuram, Anu-Gaṅgāṁ Vārāṇasī, Anu-Śoṇam Pāṭali-putram—Patañjali, II. 1. 2.

3 And Bandhogarh (Rewa)—Amrita Bazar Patrika, 11-10-38, p. 2; NHIP. VI, 41 ff. The Magha kings also known from coins (Fatehpur hoard).

by Marshall to the second or third century A.D. The name Śivamegha (or Śivamagha) reminds us of the 'Meghas' (Maghas) who ruled in Kosalā in the third century A.D.¹ Another king, Mahārāja Gautamiputra Vṛishadvaja, is assigned to a third or fourth century A.D.

One of the most memorable acts of Chandra Gupta I was the selection, before the assembled councillors (Sabhyas) and princes of the blood, of Samudra Gupta as his successor.

¹ JRAS, 1911, 132; Pargiter, DKA, p. 51; see also a note on the Kosam Stone Inscription of Mahārāja Bhīmavarman, by Mr. A. Ghosh in Indian Culture, III, 1936, 177, ff; see also I. Ç., I. 694, 715.

SECTION III. SAMUDRA GUPTA PARĀKRAMĀNKA.¹

The exact date when Chandra Gupta I was succeeded by his son, Samudra Gupta, is not known. If the evidence of the spurious Nālandā plate (issued from Nṛipura) has any value the event may have happened before the year 5 of the Gupta Era, i.e., A.D. 325. But this is doubtful. It is clear not only from the Allahabad Praśasti but from the epithet "tatpādaparigṛhita," applied to Samudra Gupta in the Riddhapur inscription, that the prince was selected from among his sons by Chandra Gupta I as best fitted to succeed him. The new monarch may have been known also as Kācha.²

It was the aim of Samudra Gupta to bring about the political unification of India (dharani-bandha) and make

1 The titles Parākrama, Vyāghraparākrama, and Parākrāmānka are found on coins (Allan, Catalogue, pp. cxi, 1f) and in the Allahabad Praśasti (CII, p. 6). Recently a coin has been found with the legend Śrī Vikramah on the reverse (Bamnālā hoard, Nimar district, J. Num. Soc. Ind. Vol. V. pt. 2, p. 140. Dec. 1943).

2 The epithet Sarva-rājo-chchettā found on Kācha's coins shows that he was in all probability identical with Samudra Gupta. Cf. Smith, Catalogue, 96; IA, 1902, 259 f. For another view see Smith, JRAS, 1897, 19; Rapson, JRAS, 1893, 81; Heras, Annals of the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Vol. IX, p. 83f. To us it is unthinkable that the style "uprooter of all kings" could have been assumed by a Gupta monarch other than the one who is actually credited with that achievement by a contemporary inscription, before the events presupposed by the expression had actually happened. In the Poona plates we find the epithet applied to Chandra Gupta II, son of Samudra Gupta, along with many other designations of the latter. But it should be remembered that the plates in question are not official records of the Guptas themselves. In no official epigraph of the Imperial Guptas is the style "Sarva-rājo-chchettā" applied to any other king except Samudra Gupta. The application of the term to Chandra Gupta II in the Poona plates is due to the same carelessness which led the writer to describe Chandra Gupta I as a mere Māhārāja (and not Māhārājadhīrāja). A comparison of the Āmgāchhi record with the Bānagad Inscription shows that writers of Praśastis not unoften carelessly applied to a later king eulogies really pertaining to a preceding ruler.

himself an Ekarāt or sole ruler like Mahāpadma. But his only permanent annexation was that of portions of Āryāvarta in the upper valley of the Ganges and its tributaries, together with certain districts in Central and Eastern India. Following his "Sarvakshatrūntaka"¹ predecessor, this Sarva-rājo-ckchhettā, "exterminator of all kings," uprooted Rudradeva, Matila, Nāgadatta, Chandravarman, Gaṇapati Nāga, Nāgasena, Achyuta, Nandi, Balavarman, and many other kings of Āryāvarta,² captured the scion of the family of Kota and made all the kings of forest countries (āṭavika-rāja) his servants. Rudradeva has been identified by Mr. Dikshit with Rudrasena Vākāṭaka. But the Vākāṭakas can hardly be regarded as rulers of Āryāvarta, and they were far from being uprooted in the time of Samudra Gupta.³ Equally untenable is the identification of Balavarman with a prince of Assam, a province that was then looked upon as a border state (Pratyanta) and not as a part of Āryāvarta. Matila has been identified with a person named "Mattila" mentioned in a seal found in Bulandshahr in the Central Doāb. The absence of any honorific title on the seal leads Allan to suggest that it was a private one. But we have already come across several instances of princes being mentioned without any honorific. Chandravarman has been identified with the king of the same name mentioned in the Susunia⁴ inscription, who was the ruler of Pushkarāṇa and was

1 Destroyer of all Kshatriyas, an epithet of Mahāpadma.

2 Father Heras thinks (Ann. Bhar. Ins., IX, p. 88) that Samudra Gupta undertook two campaigns in Āryāvarta. But his theory involves the assumption that Achyuta and Nāgasena were "violently exterminated" in the second campaign after being "uprooted" in the first. To obviate the difficulty he takes "uprooted" to mean "defeated". This is, to say the least, unconvincing.

3 Cf. IHQ, I, 2, 254. Rudrasena is connected with Deotek in the Chanda Dist. of C. P. Eighth Or. Conf. 613 ff. Ep. Ind. xxvi. 147, 150.

4 "A sandstone hill 12 miles to the north-west of Bankura."

possibly the founder of Chandravarman-koṭa mentioned in the Ghugrahātī grant. Some scholars identify Pushkaraṇa with Pokran or Pokurna in Mārwar, and further equate Siṃhavarman, the name of the father of Chandravarman, with Siṃhavarman of the Mandasor family. But there is very little to be said in support of this conjecture. No mention of Chandravarman, or reference to his exploits, is found in any epigraphic record of the Varman family of Western Mālwa. Pushkaraṇa is really to be identified with a village named Pokharan on the Dāmodar river in the Bankura District, some 25 miles to the north-east of Susunia Hill.¹

Ganapati Nāga, Nāgasena and Nandi seem to have been Nāga princes. That Ganapati Nāga was a Nāga prince is evident. This ruler is also known from coins

1 Cf. Dikshit, ASI, AR, 1927-28, p. 188; S. K. Chatterji, "The Origin and Development of the Bengali Language," II, 1961; IHQ, I, 2. 255. Paṇḍit H. P. Śāstri believed that this local ruler who bore the modest title of Mahārāja was identical also with the mighty emperor (bhūmipati prāpta aikādhirāja) Chandra of the Meharauli Iron Pillar Inscription who "in battle in the Vāṅga countries turned back with his breast the enemies who uniting together came against him and by whom having crossed in warfare the seven mouths of the Indus the Vāḥlikas were conquered." Others suggest the identification of the great Chandra with one or other of the famous Chandra Guptas of the Imperial Gupta Dynasty. But Chandra is never styled either Chandravarman or Chandra Gupta and, unlike the court poets of the Varmans and Guptas, the panegyrist of the mighty Chandra, who is said to have carried his arms to the distant corners of India, never gives the slightest hint about his pedigree. He does not even mention the name of his father. It may be noted here that the Purāṇas represent the Nāgas as ruling in the Jumna valley and Central India early in the fourth century A.D. We learn from the Vishṇu Purāṇa that Nāga dynasties ruled at Padmāvati and Mathurā. A Nāga line probably ruled also at Vidiśā (Pargiter, Kali Age, p. 49). Two kings named Sadā-Chandra and Chandrāmśa, "the second Nakhavant," are mentioned among the post-Andhran kings of Nāga lineage. One of these, preferably the latter, who was obviously a ruler of note, may have been the Chandra of the Meharauli Inscription. The Vāḥlikas beyond "the seven mouths of the Indus" are apparently the Baktrioi occupying the country near Arachosia in the time of the geographer Ptolemy (Ind. Ant., 1884, p. 408). An inscription of Mahārājādhirāja Śrī Chandra has been discovered on a Jaina image at Vaibhāra hill (ASI, AR, 1925-26, p. 125). The identity of this Chandra is not clear.

found at Mathurā,¹ at Pawāyā near Narwar and at Besnagar.² Nāgasena, who met his doom at Padmāvati³ near Narwar on the Sindh river between Gwalior and Jhansi, is mentioned as a scion of the Nāga family in the Harsha-charita (Nāga-kula-janmanah sūrikāśrāvita mantrasya āsīdnāśo Nāgasenāsyā Padmāvatyām).⁴ Nandi was also probably a Nāga prince. In the Purāṇas Śiśu Nandi and Nandiyāśas are connected with the Nāga family of Central India. We know also the name of a Nāga prince named Śivanandi.⁵ Achyuta was probably a king of Ahichchhatrā, modern Rāmanagar in the Bareilly District. To him has been attributed the small copper coins bearing the syllables 'achyu' found at Ahichchhatrā.⁶ As to the Kota-kula Rapson⁷ draws our attention to certain coins bearing the inscription Kota. These resemble the "Śruta coins" attributed to a ruler of 1 Altekar, NHIP, vi, 37.

2 IHQ, I, 2, 255. Note the importance of the name of this king from the point of view of religious history. Cf. Gajamukha of the Bṛihat Samhitā, 58. 58. A reference to king Ganapati Nāga in the Bhāva Śataka, a late work, is more than doubtful. Gajavaktra Śrī of that work is a misreading for Gata Vaktra Śrī (IHQ, 1936, 135ff).

3 Padmāvati—"Padam Pawāyā" (25 miles n. e. of Narwar) in the apex of the confluence of the Sindhu and the Pārā. Nāga coins have been found here; also a palm-leaf capital with an inscription of the first and second century B.C." EH 1*, p. 300 ASI, AR, 1915-16, pp. 101 ff.

4 "In Padmāvati Nāgasena, born in the Nāga family, whose confidential deliberations were divulged by a sārika bird, met his doom."

5 Dubreuil, Ancient History of the Deccan, p. 31. It is interesting to note that Garuḍa was the emblem of the Gupta kings who did much to curb the power of the Nāgas. Cf. the passage of the Junāgaḍh Inscription of Skanda Gupta:

Narapati bhujagānām mānadarṣot phanūnām pratikhṛti Garuḍājñām nirvishim chāvakartā

In the Purāṇas Kṛishṇa, the deity honoured by the Guptas, crushes the head of the serpent Kāliya.

6 Allan, Gupta Coins, xxii; CCAI, lxxix.

7 JRAS, 1898, 449 f.

Śrāvasti and should apparently be referred to the upper Gangetic region.¹

The conquered territories were constituted as Vishayas or Imperial sub-provinces. Two of these vishayas are known from later inscriptions of the family, namely, Antarvedī or the Gangetic Doāb and Airikiṇa in Eastern Mālwa. It is significant that a Nāga styled the Vishayapati Śarva-nāga, figures as a ruler of Antarvedī as late as the time of Skanda Gupta.

The annexation of the northern kingdoms named above was not the only achievement of Samudra Gupta. He made the rulers of the Āṭavika rājyas, or forest states, his servants. But his most daring exploit was an expedition to the south, which made his power felt by the potentates of the Eastern Deccan. We perceive, however, a difference between his northern and southern campaigns. In the north he played the part of a "digvijayī" or "conqueror of the quarters," of the Early Magadhan type.² But in the south he followed the Epic and Kauṭilyan ideal of a "dharma-vijayī" or "righteous conqueror," i.e., he defeated the kings but did not annex their territory. He may have realised the futility of attempting 1 Smith (Coins in the Indian Museum, 258) points out that the Kota coins are common in the Eastern Pañjāb and the Delhi bazaar. A Kota tribe is said to exist also in the Nilgiris (JRAS. 1897, 863; Ind. Ant., iii, 36, 96, 205). The passage in the Allahabad Inscription that "Samudra Gupta caused the scion of the Kota family to be captured by his armies and took pleasure at Pushpābhaya" has been taken by some scholars to suggest that the Kotas were at the time the ruling family of Pāṭaliputra (cf. Jayaswal, History of India, c. 150 A.D. to 350 A.D., p. 113). The identification of the Kota kula, with the Māgadha family of the Kaumudī-mahotsava lacks proof.

2 This kind of Vijaya or conquest is termed Asura-vijaya "demon's conquest" in the Arthaśāstrā (p. 382). The name may have been derived from the Assyrians, the ruthlessness of whose warfare is well-known. For a discussion regarding possible derivation of Asur from Aśśur, see JRAS, 1916, 355; 1924, 265ff. Conquest of this type is first met with in India in the sixth century B.C. (cf. Ajātaśatru's subjugation of the Lichchhavis and Viṣṇuśakya's conquest of the Śākya) when Persia served as a link between Assyria and India.

to maintain effective control over these 'distant regions in the south from his remote base in the north-east of India. His successor tried to maintain his hold on the Deccan by a system of marriage alliances,

The Āṭavika rājyas undoubtedly included the realm of Ālavaka (Ghāzipur) as well as the forest kingdoms connected with Dabhālā, or the Jabbalpur territory.¹ The conquest of this region by Samudra Gupta is suggested also by his Eraṇ inscription.

The Kings of Dakṣiṇāpathā who came into conflict with the great Gupta were Mahendra of Kosala, Vyāghra-rāja of Mahākāntāra, Maṇṭarāja of Kaurāla, Svāmīdatta of Koṭṭāra, a chieftain of Piṣṭapura whose precise name is uncertain,² Damana of Eraṇḍapalla, Viṣṇugopa of Kāñchī, Nilarāja of Avamukta, Hastivarman of Veṅgi, Ugrasena of Palakka, Kubera of Devarāshṭra, Dhanāñjaya of Kusthalapura and others.

Kosala in Dakṣiṇāpatha, i.e., South Kosala, comprised the modern Bilāspur, Raipur and Sambalpur districts, and occasionally possibly even a part of Gañjām.³ Its capital was Śrīpura, the modern Sirpur, about forty miles east

1 Fleet, CII, p. 114; Ep. Ind., VIII, 284-287. In the latter part of the fifth and early part of the sixth century A.D., the Dabhālā country was governed by the Parivṛājaka Mahārājas as feudatories of the Guptas. The Mbh. ii. 31. 13-15, like the Allahabad Prāśasti, distinguishes the Āṭavikas from the Kāntārakas. One of the Āṭavika states may have been Koṭṭāvi mentioned in the commentary on the Rāma-charita of Sandhyākara Nandi (p. 36). In one epigraphic record, Ep. Ind., VII, p. 126, we have a reference to a place called Vaṭāṭavi, while another, Lüders' List. No. 1195, mentions Sahalāṭavi.

2 For the various interpretations of the passage "Paishṭapuraka Mahendragiri Kauṭṭūraka Svāmīdatta," see Fleet, CII, Vol. 3, p. 7; JRAS, 1897, pp. 420, 868-870; IHQ, 1925, 252; Barua, Old Brāhmī Inscriptions, 224. It is not improbable that Mahendragiri in this passage is a personal name. Cf. the name Kumāra-giri given to a chief of Koṇḍaviḍu whose territories included a portion at least of the Godāvari district (Kielhorn, S. Ins., 596). In JRAS, 1897, 870, we have reference to Kamtagir, an ally of Sindbia.

3 Inclusion of Ratnapur, Ep. Ind., X, 26; of Koṅgoda, Ep. Ind., VI, 141, unless Kosala is a misreading for Tosala.

by north from Raipur.¹ Mahākāntāra is apparently a wild tract of the Central Provinces which probably included Kāntāra which the Mahābhārata places between Venvātata (the valley of the Waingāṅgā) and Prāk-Kosala, the eastern part of Kosala mentioned above.²

Kaurāla cannot be Kolleru or Colair which must have been included within the territory of Hastivarman of Veṅgī mentioned separately. Dr. Barnett suggests its identification with one of the villages that now bear the name Korāḍa³ in South India. This is a place named Kolāḍa near Russelkonda in Gañjam.

Koṭṭūra has been identified with Kothoor, 12 miles south-east of Mahendragiri in Gañjam.⁴ Piṣṭapura is Piṭhāpuram in the Godāvari district. Eraṇḍapalla is identified by Fleet with Eraṇḍol in Khandesh, and by Dubreuil with Eraṇḍapali, "a town probably near Chicacole" in the Gañjam district.⁵ But G. Ramdas⁶ suggests the identification of Eraṇḍapalla

1 Fleet, CII, p. 293. Cf. Ep. Ind. xxiii. 118f.

2 Mbh. II. 31. 12-13. G. Ramdas (IHQ, I. 4, 684) identifies Mahākāntāra with the 'Jhāḍ-khaṇḍ' Agency tracts of Gañjam and Vizagapatam. The sway of the rājā of Mahākāntāra or "Greater Kāntāra", may have extended northwards as far as Nachna in the Ajaygarh (not Jaso) state (Smith, JRAS, 1914, 320). The identification of many of the southern kingdoms suggested by Mr. R. Sathianathaier (in his Studies in the Ancient History of Tondamandalam) does not carry conviction. His conclusion that Samudragupta "first emerged on the east coast at Piṭhāpuram and conquered the Western Deccan" is based upon evidence that is clearly inadequate.

3 Cal. Rev., Feb., 1924, 253 n. Cf. Kuṣṭhālam, Tj. 590 (A Topographical List of Inscriptions of the Madras Presidency, by V. Rangacharya). The identification with Yayātinagari (Ep. Ind. XI. 189), which Dhoyi connects with the sports of the Keralis, was suggested in former editions of this work. But the reading Kerali in the Pavanadūta is not beyond doubt. For Kolāḍa see Ep. Ind. XIX. 42.

4 There is another Koṭṭūra 'at the foot of the Hills' in the Vizagapatam district (Vizag., District Gaz., I. 137). See also Koṭṭūru (IA, 4, 329) and Kottūr-nāḍu, MS. 333, Rangacharya's List.

5 Dubreuil, AHD, pp. 58-60. A place called Eraṇḍavalli is mentioned in an inscription of Govinda III (Bhārata Itihāsa Sam. Maṇḍala, A.R. XVI).

6 IHQ, I. 4, p. 683. There is an Eraṇḍī tirtha in Pādma, Svarga khaṇḍa, 45, 57, 61.

with Yeṇḍipalli in Vizagapatam or Eṇḍapilli in Ellore Tāluk. Kāñchi is Conjeeveram near Madras. Avamukta cannot be satisfactorily identified. But the name of its king Nilarāja reminds us of Nilapalli, "an old seaport near Yanam" in the Godāvari district.¹ Veṅgi has been identified with Vegi or Pedda-Vegi, 7 miles north of Ellore between the Kṛishṇā and the Godāvari. Its king Hastivarman was identified by Hultzsch with Attivarman (of the Ānanda family).² But the more probable view is that he belonged to the Śālaṅkāyana dynasty.³ Palakka is probably identical with Palakkada, (or Pālatkaṭa) a Pallava royal residence or seat of a viceroyalty in Guntur or Nellore in South India. Allan and G. Ramdas locate it in the Nellore district.⁴ Devarāshṭra is the Yellamañchili tāluk of the Vizagapatam district.⁵ Kuṣṭhalapura is, according to Dr. Barnett, probably Kuttalur, near Polur, in North Arcot.⁶

The capture and liberation of the southern kings, notably of the ruler of Koṭṭūra near Mt. Mahendragiri remind us of the following lines of Kālidāsa's Raghuvaṃśam :-

*Gṛihīta-pratimuktasya sa dharmā-vijayī nṛipah
Śrīyaṁ Mahendra-nāthasya jahāra natu medinīm*

1 Gazetteer of the Godāvari District, Vol. I, p. 213. Curiously enough, the Brahma Purāṇa (ch. 113. 22f) mentions an Avimukta-kshetra on the bank of the Gautamī, i. e., the Godāvari. Cf. Avimuktesvara, Anantapur, 164 of Rangacharya's List.

2 Attivarman was wrongly assigned to the Pallava race. Cf. IHQ, I, 2, p. 253; Ind. Ant., IX, 102. But he is actually described as born in the lineage of the great saint Ānanda (Bomb. Gaz., I. ii. 334; Kielhorn, S. Ins., 1015; IA, IX, 102; ASI, 1924-25, p. 118).

3 The name Hastivarman is actually found in a Śālaṅkāyana Varṇāvali (IHQ, 1927, 429; 1933, 212; Pedavegi plates of Nandivarman II).

4 IHQ, I, 2, 686. Cf. Ep. Ind. xxiv. 140.

5 Dubreuil, AHD, p. 160; ASR, 1908-09, p. 123; 1934-35, 43, 65.

6 Cal. Rev., 1924, p. 253 n. Cf. Kutalapattu, MS. 179 of Rangacharya's List.

"The righteous conqueror (Raghu) took away from the lord of the Mahendra Mountain, who was made captive and then released, his glory but not his territory".

It is not a little surprising that the Allahabad Praśasti contains no clear reference to the Vākāṭakas who are known to have dominated part of the region between Bundelkhand and the Penguṅgā in the fifth century A.D. The earliest reference to the Vākāṭakas occurs in certain inscriptions of Amarāvati.¹ The dynasty rose to power under Vindhyaśakti I and his son Pravarasena I. Pravara-sena appears to have been succeeded in the northern part of his dominions by his grandson Rudrasena I. Prithivishena I, the son and successor of Rudrasena I, may have been a contemporary of Samudra Gupta and perhaps also of his son Chandragupta II, inasmuch as his son Rudrasena II married the daughter of the last-mentioned Gupta emperor. Prithivishena I's political influence extended over a fairly wide territory. The Nach-nē-ki-talāi and Ganj regions² were in all probability ruled by his vassal Vyāghra-deva. Professor Dubreuil, however, says that the Nāchnā and Ganj inscriptions, which mention Vyāghra, belong, not to Prithivishena I, but to his great-great-grandson Prithivishena II. This is improbable in view of the fact that from the time of Prithivishena II's great-grandfather, if not from a period still earlier, down to at least A. D. 528, the princes of the region which intervenes between Nāchnā and Ganj and the proper Vākāṭaka territory,³ owned the sway of the Gupta empire.

1 Ep. Ind., XV, pp. 261-267. —

2 Fleet, CII., p. 233; Ep. Ind., XVII, 12. Cf. Ind. Ant., June, 1926.

3 This was Berar with the adjoining regions (cf. Ep. Ind. xxvi. 147). That Nāchnā and Ganj were in the Gupta Age apparently included within Dakṣiṇāpatha is suggested by the Bṛihat Samhitā (xiv. 13) which places even Chitrakūṭa in the Dakṣiṇa or Southern Division. A recent Vākāṭaka Inscription discovered in the Drug district contains an interesting reference to Padmapura which Professor Mirashi identifies with the ancestral home of Bhavabhūti

Now as Vyāghra of the Nāchnā and Ganj records acknowledges the supremacy of the Vākātaka Prithivishēṇa, this Prithivishēṇa can only be Prithivishēṇa I, who ruled before the establishment of the Gupta supremacy in Central India by Samudra Gupta and Chandra Gupta II¹ and not Prithivishēṇa II during whose rule the Guptas, and not the Vākātakas, were apparently the acknowledged suzerains of the Central Provinces as we learn from the records of the Parivrājaka Mahārājas.²

The absence of any clear reference to Prithivishēṇa I in Harishēṇa's Prasasti is explained by the fact that Samudra Gupta's operations were actually confined to the eastern part of Trans-Vindhyan India. There is no reliable evidence that the Gupta conqueror carried his arms to the central and western parts of the Deccan proper, i.e., the territory ruled by Prithivishēṇa I himself. Professor Dubréuil has shown that the identification of Devarāshṭra with Mahārāshṭra and of Eraṇḍapalla with Eraṇḍol in Khandesh is probably wrong.³

Though Samudra Gupta did not invade the Western Deccan it is clear from his Eraṇ Inscription that he did deprive the Vākātakas of their possessions in Central India. These territories were not, however, directly governed by the Vākātaka monarch, but were under a vassal prince. In the time of Prithivishēṇa this prince was Vyāghra. We should naturally expect a conflict between the Vākātaka feudatory and the Gupta and with the modern Padampur near Amgaon in the Bhaṇḍārā District of the Central Provinces. IHQ., 1935, 299; Ep. Ind. xxii, 207 ff. The Basim grant implies control of a branch of the family over the part of Berar south of the Ajanta range.

1 The Eraṇ and Udayagiri Inscriptions. For evidence of Palaeography see JRASB, xii. 2, 1946, 73.

2 Cf. Modern Review, April, 1921, p. 475. For Dubréuil's views, see Ind. Ant., June, 1926.

3 Cf. Modern Review, 1921, p. 457.

conqueror. Curiously enough, the Allahabad Prasasti refers to Samudra Gupta's victory over Vyāghrarāja of Mahākāntāra.¹ It is probable that this Vyāghrarāja is identical with the Vyāghra of the Nāchnā inscription who was the Central Indian feudatory of Prithivishena. As a result of Samudra Gupta's victory the Guptas succeeded the Vākātakas as the paramount power in Central India. Henceforth the Vākātakas appear in fact as a purely southern power.

The victorious career of Samudra Gupta must have produced a deep impression on the Pratyanta² nīpatis or frontier kings of North-East India and the Himālayan region, and the tribal states of the Pañjāb, Western India, Mālwa and the Central Provinces, who are said to have gratified his imperious command (prachanḍa śūsana) "by giving all kinds of taxes, obeying his orders and coming to perform obeisance." The most important among the eastern kingdoms which submitted to the mighty Gupta Emperor were Samatāṭa (part of Eastern Bengal bordering on the sea, having its capital probably at Karmmānta or Baḍ-Kamta near Comilla),³ Davāka (not yet satisfactorily identified)⁴ and Kāmarūpa (roughly in Assam). We learn from the Dāmodarpur plates that the major portion of Northern Bengal, then known as Puṇḍravardhana-bhukti, formed an integral part 1 Has the title Vyāghra-parākrama, found on a type of Samudra Gupta's coins that represents the king as trampling on a tiger, anything to do with the emperor's victory over Vyāghra-rāja? It is not a little curious that the next sovereign, conqueror of Rudrasimha III, the last Satrap, assumed the title of Simha-vikrama.

2 For the significance of the term, see Divyāvadāna, p. 22.

3 Bhattasali, Iconography, pp. 4f. JASB, 1914, 85 ff. Cf. the position of Mahārāja Rudradatta under the emperor Vainya Gupta early in the sixth century A.D. — (Gunaighar Ins).

4 Cf. Dekaka (Dacca), Hoyland, The Empire of the Great Mogol, 14. Mr. K. L. Barua identifies Davāka with the Kopili Valley in Assam (Early History of Kāmarūpa, 42 n).

of the Gupta Empire from A.D. 443 to A.D. 543, and was governed by a line of Uparikas as vassals of the Gupta Emperor. The identification of Davāka with certain districts of North Bengal is, therefore, probably wrong. The Northern Pratyantas were Nepāl and Kartripura. The latter principality comprised probably Katārpur in the Jālandhar district, and the territory of the Katuria or Katyur rāj of Kumaun, Garhwāl and Rohilkhand.¹

The tribal states which paid homage were situated on the western and south-western fringe of Āryāvarta proper. Among these the most important were the Mālavas, Ārjunāyanas, Yaudheyas, Madrakas, Ābhīras, Prārjunas, Śanakānikas, Kākas and Kharaparikas.

The Mālavas occupied part of the Pañjāb in the time of Alexander. They were probably in Eastern *Rājaputāna*² when they came into conflict with Ushavadāta. Their exact location in the time of Samudra Gupta cannot be determined. In the time of Samudra Gupta's successors they were probably connected with the Mandasor region. We find princes of Mandasor using the reckoning, commencing B.C. 58, handed down traditionally by the Mālava-gaṇa (Mālava-gaṇ-āmnāta).

The Ārjunāyanas and the Yaudheyas are placed in the northern division of India by the author of the Bṛihat-Saṁhitā. They may have been connected with the Pandounoi or Pāṇḍava tribe mentioned by Ptolemy as settled in the Pañjāb.³ The connection of the Ārjunāyanas

1 EHI⁴, 302 n.; JRS, 1898, 198. Ep. Ind. XIII, 114; cf. J. U. P. Hist. Soc., July-Dec, 1945 p.p. 217 ff, where Mr. Powell-Price suggests 'some sort of connection between the Kuṇḍas and the Katyurs.'

2 Cf. Smith, Catalogue, 161. Allan, CCAI, p. cv. Mālava coins have been found in vast numbers in the Jaipur State (JRS, 1897, 883).

3 Ind. Ant., XIII, 331, 349.

with the Pāṇḍava Arjuna is apparent.¹ Yaudheya appears as the name of a son of Yudhishṭhira in the Mahābhārata.² The Harivaṃśa, a later authority, connects the Yaudheyas with Uśinara.³ A clue to the locality of this tribe is given by the Bijayagaḍh inscription.⁴ The hill-fort of Bijayagaḍh lies about two miles to the south-west of Byānū in the Bharatpur state of Rājaputāna. But the Yaudheya territory must have extended beyond the limits of this area and embraced the tract still known as Johiyabār along both banks of the Sutlej on the border of the Bahāwalpur state.⁵

The Madrakas had their capital at Śākala or Śiālkoṭ in the Pañjab. The Ābhiras occupied the tract in the lower Indus valley and western Rājaputāna, near Vinasāna⁶ in the district called Abiria by the *Periplus*⁷ and the geography of Ptolemy. We have already seen that an Ābhira possibly became Mahākshatrapa of Western India and probably supplanted the Śātavāhanas in a part of Mahārāshṭra before the middle of the third century A.D. A section of the tribe apparently settled in Central India and gave its name to the Āhirwār country between Jhansi and Bhilsa.⁸ The territories of the Prārjunas, Sanakānikas, Kākas and Kharaparikas lay probably in Mālwa and the Central Provinces. The Prārjunakas are mentioned in the Arthaśāstra attributed

1 Their coins are found in the Mathurā region (Smith, Catalogue, 160). The Abhidhāna-chintāmaṇi, p. 434, identifies a river called Ārjuni with the Bāhudā (Rāngaṅgā?).

2 Ādi., 95, 76.

3 Pargiter, Mārkandeya Purāṇa, p. 380.

4 Fleet, CII, p. 251. Yaudheya votive tablets have been found in the Ludhiana District (JRAS, 1897, 887). Coins have been found in the area extending from Saharanpur to Multan (Allan, CCAI, cli).

5 Smith, JRAS, 1897, p. 30. Cf. Cunningham, AGI, 1924, 281.

6 Śūdrābhirān prati dveshād yatra nashṭu Sarasvatī, Mbh., IX, 37, 1.

7 Cf. Ind. Ant., III, 226 f.

8 JRAS, 1897, 891. Cf. Ain-i-Akbari II, 165; Malcolm, C.I. I, 20.

to Kauṭilya¹ and are located by Smith² in the Narsinhapur District of the Central Provinces. A clue to the locality of the Sanakānikas is given by one of the Udayagiri inscriptions of Chandra Gupta II discovered in Eastern Mālwa. The Kākas find mention in the *Mahābhārata*³—Rishikā Vidabhāḥ Kākās Taṅganāḥ Parataṅganāḥ. In the Bombay Gazetteer Kāka is identified with Kākūpur near Bithur. Smith suggests that the name may be locally associated with Kākanāda (Sāñchī). The Kharaparikas may have occupied the Damoh District of the Central Provinces.⁴

The rise of a new indigenous imperial power could not be a matter of indifference to the foreign potentates of the North-West Frontier, Mālwa and Surāshṭra (Kāthiāwār) who hastened to buy peace "by the acts of homage, such as offer of personal service, the bringing of gifts of maidens,⁵ begging for seals marked with the Garuḍa sign (Garutmadaṅka) to allow them to rule over their respective districts and provinces (svavishaya bhukti)."⁶ The foreign powers that thus established diplomatic relations with Samudra Gupta were the *Daivaputra*⁷-Shāhi-Shāhānushāhi and the Śaka *Murundas*⁸

1 P. 194.

2 JRAS, 1897, p. 892.

3 Mbh. VI, 9.64.

4 Bhandarkar, IHQ, 1925, 258; Ep. Ind., XII, 46. H. C. Ray, DHNI, I, 586 mentions a Kharpara padraka apparently in Mālwa. A Benṇākārpara-bhāga is mentioned in the Siwani plate.

5 The presence of Scythian maidens in the Hindu imperial harem is not surprising in view of the known facts about Chandra Gupta Maurya's alliance with Seleukos and the marriage of a Śātakarṇi with the daughter of a great satrap. Cf. also Penzer, II, 47; III, 170.

6 Cf. Nilakanta Sastri, The Pandyas Kingdom, 145. "The victor restored the crown and country of the Chola in the form of a religious gift, which was confirmed by the issue of a royal rescript with the Paṇḍyan seal on it."

7 As to the form Daiva, see Achaemenian inscriptions of Xerxes, and forms like Bhaimarathī (instead of Bhimarathī).

8 Note the imitation by Samudra Gupta of coins of Kushān type with Ardochsho reverse (Allan, xxviii, xxxiv, lxvi). Such coins were, according to scholars, issued by Scythians of the North-West.

as well as the people of Sindhala and all other dwellers in islands.¹

The Daivaputra-Shāhi-Shāhānushāhi belonged apparently to the Kushān dynasty of the north-west, which derived its origin from the Devaputra Kanishka.² The Śaka *Murunda*s must have included the northern chiefs of Scythian nationality who issued the Ardochsho coins as well as the Śaka chieftains of Surāshtra and Central India, the representatives of a power which once dominated even the Ganges valley. Sten Konow tells us that Murunda is a Śaka word meaning lord, Sanskrit Svāmin. The epithet Svāmin was used by the Kshatrapas of Surāshtra and Ujjain. A Sāñchī inscription discovered by Marshall discloses the existence of another Śaka principality or province which was ruled about A.D. 319 by the Mahādandanāyaka Sridharavarman, son of Nanda.³ A Murunda Svāminī (noble lady) is mentioned in a Khoh Inscription of Central India. To Scythian chiefs of the Vindhyan region should perhaps be attributed the so-called "Puri Kushān" coins which are found in large numbers in the neighbourhood of the Eastern Vindhyas and some adjoining tracts. The 1 Some control over the islands in the neighbouring seas is possibly hinted at in the epithet Dhanada-Varuṇendrūntakasama, the equal of Dhanada (Kuvera, lord of wealth, guardian of the north), Varuṇa (the Indian Sea-god, the guardian of the west), Indra, king of the celestials and guardian of the east, and Antaka (Yama, god of death, and guardian of the south). The comparison of Samudra Gupta with these deities is apposite and possibly refers not only to his conquests in all directions, but to his possession of immense riches, suzerainty over the seas, the spread of his fame to the celestial region and his extirpation of various kings. Inscriptions discovered in the Trans-Gangetic Peninsula and the Malay Archipelago testify to the activities of Indian navigators (e.g. the Mahānāvika from Raktamṛttikā mentioned in a Malayan epigraph) and military adventures in the Gupta Age.

2. Smith (JRAS, 1897, 32) identified him with Grumbates. Some scholars take the expression to refer to different kings and chieftains. Cf. Allan xxvii. There may also be a reference to the Sassanids as well.

3 Ep. Ind., xvi, p. 232; JRAS, 1923, 337 ff.

existence of a Muruṇḍa power in the Ganges valley a couple of centuries before Samudra Gupta is vouched for by Ptolemy.¹ The Jaina Prabhāvaka-charita testifies to the control that a Muruṇḍa family once exercised over the imperial city of Pāṭaliputra.²

Samudra Gupta's Ceylonese contemporary was Meghavarna. A Chinese writer, Wang Hsien ts'e, relates that Chi-mi-kia-po-mo (i. e., Śrī Meghavarman or Meghavarna) sent an embassy with gifts to Samudra Gupta and obtained his permission to erect a splendid monastery to the north of the holy tree at Bodhi Gayā for the use of pilgrims from the Island.³

Allan thinks that it was at the conclusion of his campaigns that the Gupta conqueror celebrated the horse-sacrifice⁴ which, we are told in the inscriptions of his successors, had long been in abeyance. But it should be noted that the Aśvamedha was celebrated by several kings during the interval which elapsed from the time of Pushyamitra to that of Samudra Gupta, e.g., Pārāśariputra Sarvatāta, Śātakarṇi, the husband of Nāyanikā, Vāsishṭhiputra Ikshvāku Śrī-Chāntamūla, Devavarman Śālaṅkāyana, Pravarasena I Vākātaka, Śiva-skandavarman Pallava and the Nāga kings of the house of Bhāraśiva. It is probable, however, that the court poets

1 Ind. Ant., 1834, 377; Allan, xxix.

2 C. J. Shah, Jainism in N. India, p. 194; cf. Indian Culture, III, 49.

3 Geiger, the Mahāvamsa (trans.), p. xxxix; Lévi, Journ. As., 1900, pp. 316 ff, 401 ff.; Ind. Ant., 1902, 194.

4 Cf. Divekar, Annals of the Bhandarkar Institute, VII, pp. 164-65, "Allahabad Prāśasti and Aśvamedha." In the Poona plates Samudra Gupta receives the epithet anekāśvamedhayājīn. He was believed to have celebrated more than one horse sacrifice. Some of the campaigns described in the Allahabad panegyric may have been actually conducted by Princes or officers who kept guard over the sacrificial horse that was allowed to roam at large. In the inscription of Harishēṇa the credit for capturing some of the vanquished chieftains is given to the army. Among the great commanders were men like Tilabhāṭṭaka and Harishēṇa himself, who was the son of Dhruvabhūti.

of the Guptas knew little about these monarchs. After the horse-sacrifice Samudra Gupta apparently issued coins bearing the legend Aśva-medha-parākramaḥ, 'whose prowess was demonstrated by the performance of the horse-sacrifice.'¹

If Harishena, the writer of the Allahabad Praśasti, is to be believed, the great Gupta was a man of versatile genius. "He put to shame the preceptor of the lord of Gods and Tumburu² and Nārada and others by his sharp and polished intellect and choral skill and musical accomplishments. He established his title of Kavirāja by various poetical compositions."³ "He alone is worthy of the thoughts of the learned... His the poetic style which is worthy of study, and his are the poetic works which multiply the spiritual treasures of poets." Unfortunately none of these compositions have survived.⁴ But the testimony of Harishena to his musical abilities finds corroboration in the lyrist type⁵ of his coins. Himself a poet like Harsha, Mahendravarman and other kings of a later age, the Gupta monarch associated with men of letters who

1 Rapson and Allan refer to a seal bearing a horse and the legend Parākrama, and the stone figure of a horse, now in Lucknow, which are probably reminiscent of the Aśvamedha of Samudra Gupta. (JRAS, 1901, 102; Gupta Coins, xxxi.)

2 For Tumburu see Adbhuta-Rāmāyaṇa, VI, 7; E.I., I, 236.

3 According to the Kāvya Mīmāṃsā (3rd. ed. GOS. pp. xv, xxxii, 19) a "Kavirāja is one stage further than a Mahākavi, and is defined as one who is unrestrained in various languages, various sorts of poetical compositions and various sentiments." For the intellectual activities of the Gupta Age see Bhandarkar, "A Peep into the Early History of India," pp. 61-74 and Bühler, IA, 1913. The son and successor of Samudra Gupta had the title Rūpakṛitī, 'maker of plays.'

4 A poetical work called the Kṛishṇa-charitam is attributed to Vikramāṅka Mahārājādhirāja Paramabhāgavata Śrī Samudra Gupta. (IC, X, 79 etc.). But the ascription has been doubted by competent critics (cf. Jagannāth in Annals, BORI, and others).

5 A lute-player (Viṇā-gāthīn) plays an important part in the Aśvamedha.

were none too prosperous and "put an end to the war between good poetry and plenty" (saikāvyaśrīvirodha). As a result "he enjoyed in the world of the learned, a far-extending sovereignty whose shining glory endured in many poems."

Samudra Gupta favoured poetry as well as the Śāstra, while Aśoka seems to have specialised in scriptural studies alone. The former undertook military campaigns with the object of sarva-prithivī-jaya, conquest of the whole earth, as known to his panegyrist, the latter eschewed military conquest after the Kalinga war and organised missions to effect Dhamma-vijaya, conquest of the hearts of men, in three continents. Yet in spite of these differences there was much that was common to these remarkable men. Both laid stress on parākrama, ceaseless exertion in the cause in which they believed. Both expressed solicitude for the people committed to their care, and were kind even to vanquished enemies. And both laid emphasis on Dharma. Samudra Gupta, no less than Dharmāśoka made firm the rampart of the true law (Dharma-prāchīra-bandha).

The attribution of the coins bearing the name Kācha to Samudra Gupta may be accepted. But the emperor's identification with Dharmāditya (sun of the true faith) of a Faridpur grant is clearly wrong. The titles used by this monarch were Apratiratha, 'unrivalled car-warrior' Aprativāryavīrya, 'of irresistible valour,' Kritānta-paraśu, 'axe of death,' sarva-rāj-ochchettā,¹ 'uprooter of all kings,' Vyāghra-parākrama, 'possessed of the strength of a tiger,' Aśva-medha-parākrama, 'whose might was demonstrated by the horse-sacrifice,' and Parākramāṅka, 'marked with prowess,' but not Dharmāditya. Most of these epithets are connected with particular types of coins issued by the emperor. Thus Parākrama is found on the reverse of coins of the standard type, Apratiratha on coins of the archer type, Kṛitānta-paraśu on coins of the battle-axe type,¹ sarva-rajochchhetta on coins of the Kācha type, Vyāghra-parākrama (Rājā) on the tiger type of coins, and Aśvamedha-parākrama on the Aśvamedha type.² The appearance of a goddess seated on a lion (siṃha-vāhinī, i.e., Durgā or Pārvatī, Vindhya-vāsini or Haimavatī) may point to the extension of the Gupta dominions to the Vindhya and the Himavat.³ The tiger and river-goddess (makaravāhinī) type may indicate that the sway of Samudra Gupta spread from the Ganges valley to the realm of the 'Tiger king' in Mahākāntāra. The figures of Gaṅgā and Yamunā occur frequently in door jambs of the Gupta Age. It has been surmised that they symbolise connection with the Gangetic Doāb.

¹ Cf. the epithet "sarva-kshattrāntaka" applied to his great fore-runner, Mahāpadma Nanda,

Samudra Gupta's 'virtuous and faithful wife,' possibly Datta Devī, appears to be mentioned in an Eraṇ inscription referable to the period of his rule. We possess no genuine dated documents for the reign of the great emperor. The Nālandā⁴ and Gayā grants profess to be dated in the years 5 and 9 respectively, but no reliance can be placed on them and the reading of the numeral in the Gayā record is uncertain. Smith's date (A.D. 330-375) for Samudra Gupta is conjectural. As the earliest known date of the next sovereign is A. D.

1 The battle-axe appears also on coins of the Udumbaras, CHI, 539; and Jayadāman, Rapson (Andhra etc), 76.

2 Cf. 'Horse facing post' which appears also on a square coin attributed to Chashjana (Rapson ibid, 75) whose dynasty was overthrown by the Guptas.

3 Nana on lion of Huvishka's coins (Whitehead, 207) may have suggested this type.

4 ASI, AR, 1927-28, p. 138.

552 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

380-381¹ it is not improbable that his father and predecessor died some time after A.D. 375.² One of the last acts of Samudra Gupta was apparently the selection of his successor. The choice fell on Chandra Gupta, his son by Datta Devi.

1 An inscription of Chandra Gupta II, dated in the year 61, corresponding to A.D. 380-81 has been discovered recently in the Mathurā district (Ep. Ind., XXI, 1 ff.).

2 Sircar (IHQ, 1942, 272) reads the dated portion of the inscription of the year 61 as Śrī Chandra Guptasya vijaye-rājya samvatsare pañchame—the fifth regnal year of Chandra Gupta (II). Therefore, his first year may be taken to be A.D. 376-77.

CHAPTER XI. THE GUPTA EMPIRE—(continued): THE AGE OF THE VIKRAMĀDITYAS.

Kūman nṛipāḥ santu sahasraśo' nye rājanvatīmāhuranena bhūmim nakshatra-tārū-graha saṅkulāpi jyotiśmatī Chandramasaiva rātrih.

—Raghuvamśam.

SECTION I. CHANDRA GUPTA II VIKRAMĀDITYA.

Epigraphic evidence indicates that Samudra Gupta was succeeded by his son Chandra Gupta II, Vikramāditya, also called Narendra Chandra, Siṃha Chandra, Narendra Siṃha and Siṃha Vikrama,¹ born of queen Dattadevi. Chandra Gupta was chosen out of many sons by his father as the best fitted to succeed him.² Another name

1 Cf. the name Vikrama Siṃha of Ujjayinī, Penzer, III. 11. The story narrated in Vishamaśīla Lambaka, has for its hero Vikramāditya, son of Mahendrāditya, who is apparently to be identified with Skanda Gupta. But some of the motifs such as strīvesha (Kathā sar. XVIII. 3. 42), visit to the enemy's own place with a Vetāla (5. 40 f) were probably taken from the cycle of legends associated with Chandra Gupta II, father of Mahendra.

2 That Samudra Gupta had many sons and grandsons appears clear from the Eran epigraph. The theory of Dr. Altekar (JBORS. XIV, pp. 223-53; XV, pt. i-ii pp. 134 f.), and others that a king named Rāma (Śarma? Sena?) Gupta intervened between Samudra Gupta and Chandra Gupta II is unsupported by any contemporary epigraphic evidence. The tradition that a Gupta king killed his brother and took his wife and crown, dates only from a ninth century epigraph. The literary evidence on the point is discrepant and hardly conclusive. The version given by Bāṇa in the seventh century differs in important respects from the story known to the author of the Kāvya-Mīmāṃsā Cir. 900 A.D. (Cf. Ind. Ant., Nov., 1933, 201 ff.; JBORS. XVIII. 1, 1932, 17 ff.). The simple story, narrated in the Harsha-Charita, that Chandra Gupta, disguised as a female, destroyed a Śaka (not Khaśa) king, who coveted the wife of another, in the very city of the enemy, was doubtless embellished by later poets and dramatists, and (as is clear from certain data, to which Mr. V. V. Mirashi draws attention in IHQ, March, 1934, 48 ff.) details, such as fratricide, and association with Ghouls, not found in the earlier account, continued to be of the new monarch disclosed by certain Vākātaka inscriptions, several types of coins and the Sāñchi inscription of A. D. 412-3, was Deva Gupta, Deva-śri or Deva-rāja.¹

554 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

For the reign of Chandra Gupta II, we possess a number of dated inscriptions so that its limits may be defined with more accuracy than those of his predecessors. His accession should be placed before A.D. 381, and his death in or about A.D. 413-14.

The most important external events of the reign were the emperor's matrimonial alliance with the Vākātaka king Rudrasena II, son of Prithivishena I, and the war with the Śaka Satraps which added Western Mālwa and Surāshtra (Kāṭhiāwār) to the Gupta dominions.

Matrimonial alliances occupy a prominent place in the foreign policy of the Guptas. The Licchhavi connection had strengthened their position in Bihār. After the conquest of the upper provinces they sought alliances with other ruling families whose help was needed to consolidate the Gupta power in the newly acquired territory and prepare the ground for fresh conquests. Thus Samudra Gupta received presents of girls (kanyopāyana) from Śaka-Kushān chiefs and other foreign potentates. Chandra Gupta II married added in the days of Amoghavarsha I (A. D. 815-78) and Govinda IV (A.D. c. 927-933). The Devī Chandraguṇṭam and similar works are as much unsuited to form bases of the chronicles of Chandra Gupta II as the Mudrākshasam and the Aśokāvadāna are in regard to the doings of the great Mauryas. The subject has been fully discussed by the present writer in an article entitled "Vikramāditya in History and Legend" contributed to the Vikrama volume contemplated by the Gwalior authorities. The story of Chandra Gupta's adventure in its developed form has absorbed a good deal of folklore, such as tales about Ghouls Piśācha. The motif of the wife leaving a mean-spirited husband is found in Penzer Katha S.S., III. 290.

1 Cf. Bhandarkar, Ind. Ant. 1913, p. 160.

Kuberanāgā, a princess of Nāga lineage,¹ and had by her a daughter named Prabhavati, whom he gave in marriage to Rudrasena II, the Vākāṭaka king of Berar and the adjoining provinces. According to Dr. Smith² "the Vākāṭaka Mahārāja occupied a geographical position in which he could be of much service or disservice to the northern invader of the dominions of the Śaka satraps of Gujrat and Surāshtra. Chandra Gupta adopted a prudent precaution in giving his daughter to the Vākāṭaka prince and so securing his subordinate alliance."

The campaign against the Western Satraps is apparently alluded to in the Udayagiri Cave Inscription of Virasena-Śāba in the following passage "he (Śāba) came here (to Eastern Mālwa), accompanied by the king (Chandra Gupta) in person, who was seeking to conquer the whole world." Śāba was an inhabitant of Pāṭaliputra. He held the position, acquired by hereditary descent, of a Sachiva or minister of Chandra Gupta II, and was placed by his sovereign in charge of the Department of Peace and War. He naturally accompanied his master when the great western expedition was undertaken. Eastern Mālwa, which had already felt the might of Samudra Gupta, became the base of operations against the Śakas. Inscriptions at Udayagiri and Sāñchī suggest that the emperor Chandra Gupta II assembled at or near Vidiśā in East Mālwa many of his ministers, generals and feudatories, some of whom are 1 Nāga-kulotpannā, cf. JASB, 1924, p. 58. It is possible, as urged by many recent writers, that Chandra-Guptā Vikramāditya also entered into marriage alliances with the Kadambas of Vaijayanṭi or Banawāsi in the Kuntala, or the Kanarese, country. The sending of an embassy to Kuntala by Vikramāditya, is vouched for by Bhoja and Kshemendra. (Proceedings of the Third Oriental Conference, p. 6.) Kākusthavarman of the Kadamba dynasty gave his daughters in marriage to the Gupta and other kings in or about the fifth century (Talagunda Inscription, Ep. Ind., VIII, 33 ff.; IHQ, 1933, 197 ff.).

2 JRAS., 1914, p. 324.

mentioned in records dating from A. D. 402 to 413. The campaign against the Śakas was eminently successful. The fall of the Śaka Satrap is alluded to by Bāṇa. The annexation of his territory is proved by coins.¹

Chief Cities of the Empire.—The first important Gupta metropolis seems to have been at Pāṭaliputra—"the city named Pushpa" where Samudra Gupta is said to have "rested on his laurels" after one of his victorious campaigns, and from which a Gupta Minister for Peace and War went to East Mālwa in the company of his sovereign. From A.D. 402 Chandra Gupta seems to have had a residence in Mālwa, at first possibly at Vidiśā and later on, after his western conquests, at Ujjain. Certain chiefs of the Kanarese districts, who claimed descent from Chandra Gupta (Vikramāditya), referred to their great ancestor as Ujjayinī-puravar-ādhiśvara, 'lord of Ujjain, the best of cities,' as well as Pāṭalipuravar-ādhiśvara 'lord of Pāṭali (putra), the best of cities.' Sir R. G. Bhandarkar identifies Chandra Gupta II with the traditional Vikramāditya Śakāri, "the sun of valour, the destroyer of the Śakas," of Ujjain.² The titles Śrī

1 Silver coins of the Garuḍa type bearing the legend Parama-Bhāgavata, probably struck in Surāshṭra (Allan, p. xciv). Some of the coins bear the date 90 (= A.D. 409, E.H.I., 4th ed., p. 345). It has been suggested recently that, like his father, Chandra Gupta, too, performed a horse sacrifice (IHQ, 1927, p. 725) and that a stone horse lying in a village named Nagawa near Benares, and bearing an inscription containing the letters Chamdraḡu, commemorates the event. But there is no clear reference to such a sacrifice in the inscriptions or coins hitherto published.

2 In literature Vikramāditya is represented as ruling at Pāṭaliputra (Katha-sarit-sāgara, VII, 4.3 :—Vikramāditya ityāsidrājā Pāṭaliputrake) as well as Ujjayinī and other cities. Sāhasāṅka of Ujjain is said to have ordered the exclusive use of Sanskrit in his harem (Kāvya Mīmāṃsā, 3rd. ed, p. 50). He thus reversed the policy of Aḍhyarāja (p. 197) or Śātavāhaṇa of Kuntala. Cf. the verse in Sarasvatī Kanthābharaṇa II. 15.

Ke'bhunnādhyarājasya rājye prākṛita- bhāṣiṇaḥ kāle śrī Sāhasāṅkasya ke na Saṃskṛitavādīnaḥ.

Among the Kāvya-kāras tested in Ujjain mention is made of a Chandra Gupta along with Kālidāsa, Amara, Bhāravi and others (Kāvya M. p 55).

Vikramah, Siṃha-Vikramah, Ajita-Vikramah, Vikramāṅka and Vikramāditya actually occur on Chandra Gupta's coins.¹

We have no detailed contemporary notice of Ujjayini (also called Viśālā, Padmāvati, Bhogavati, Hiranyavati)² in the days of Chandra Gupta. But Fa-hien who visited Mid India during the period A.D. 405 to 411, has left an interesting account of Pāṭaliputra. The pilgrim refers to the royal palace of Aśoka and the halls in the midst of the city, "which exist now as of old," and were according to him "all made by spirits which Aśoka employed, and which piled up the stones, reared the walls and gates, and executed the elegant carving and inlaid sculpture-work,—in a way which no human hands of this world could accomplish." "The inhabitants are rich and prosperous, and vie with one another in the practice of benevolence and righteousness. Every year on the eighth day of the second month they celebrate a procession of images... The Heads of the Vaiśya families Paramārtha, the biographer of Vasubandhu, refers to Ayodhyā as the capital of a Vikramāditya while Hsien Tsang represents Śrāvastī as the seat of the famous king (EHI, 3rd Ed., pp. 332-33). Subandhu refers to the fame of Vikramāditya, but not to his capital city, "like a lake Vikramāditya hath left the earth, save indeed in fame" (Keith, Hist. Sans. Lit., p. 312). Cf. Hāla, v. 64.

1 Name, title or epithet.	Type of coin.
Śrī Vikrama ...	Archer type (gold).
Vikramāditya ...	Couch type (gold).
Rūpakṛiti ...	Chhatra (Parasol) type (gold).
Siṃha-Vikrama, Narendra Chandra, Narendra Siṃha, Siṃha Chandra	Couch type (gold).
Ajita-Vikrama	Lion-Slayer (gold)
Paramabhāgavata	Horseman type (gold).
Paramabhāgavata
Vikramāditya	Silver coins of the Guraḍa type.
Vikramāṅka
Vikramāditya, Mahārāja, Chandra	Copper coins (Garuḍa, Chhatra and Vase type).

2 Meghadūta (I, 31) and Kathā-sarit-sāgara, Tawney's translation. Vol. II, p. 275. For an account of Ujjayini in the seventh century A.D., see Beal, H. Tsang, II, p. 270; and Ridding, Kādambarī, pp. 210 ff.

establish houses for dispensing charity and medicines." The principal port of the empire on the east coast was Tāmralipti or Tamruk in West Bengal from which ships set sail for Ceylon, Java (then a centre of Brāhmanism), and China.

Much light is thrown on the character of Chandra Gupta Vikramāditya's administration by the narrative of Fa-hien and the inscriptions that have hitherto been discovered. Speaking of the Middle Kingdom, the dominions of Chandra Gupta in the upper Ganges Valley, the Chinese pilgrim says: "the people are numerous and happy; they have not to register their households, or attend to any magistrates and their rules; only those who cultivate the royal land have to pay a portion of the gain from it. If they want to go, they go: if they want to stay on, they stay. The king governs without decapitation or other corporal punishments. Criminals are simply fined, lightly or heavily, according to the circumstances of each case. Even in cases of repeated attempts at wicked rebellion they only have their right hands cut off. The king's bodyguards and attendants all have salaries. Throughout the whole country the people do not kill any living creature, nor drink intoxicating liquor, nor eat onions or garlic. The only exception is that of the Chāṇḍālas. In buying and selling commodities they use cowries."¹ The last statement evidently refers to such small transactions as Fa-hien had occasion to make.² The pilgrim does not seem to have met with the gold coins which would only be required for large transactions. That they were actually in currency, we know from the references to "dīnāras" and "suvarṇas" in inscriptions.³

1 Legge.

2 Allan.

3 Chandra Gupta II also issued silver and copper coins. The silver coins were mainly intended for the western provinces conquered from the Śaka satraps

That Chandra Gupta II was a good monarch may be inferred also from the inscriptions. Himself a devout Vaiṣṇava (Parama-bhūgavata), he appointed men of other sects to high offices. His general Āmrakārdḍava, the hero of a hundred fights, anēkasamar-āvāpta-vijaya-yaśas-patākah, appears to have been a Buddhist or at least a pro-Buddhist, while his Minister of Peace and War, Sāba-Virasena, and perhaps also his Mantrin or High Counsellor, Śikharasvāmin, were Śaivas.

Regarding the machinery of Government we have no detailed information. But the following facts may be gleaned from the inscriptions. As in Maurya times, the head of the state was the Rājā who was at times nominated by his predecessor. The king is now regarded as a divinity—Achintya Puruṣa, 'the Incomprehensible Being,' Dhanada-Varuṇendrāntaka-sama, the equal of Kuvera, Varuṇa, Indra and Yama, loka-dhāma deva, 'a god dwelling on earth,' Paramadaivata, 'the supreme deity.' He was assisted by a body of High Ministers whose office was very often hereditary as is suggested by the phrase "anvaya-prāpta Sāchiyya" 'acquirer of the post of minister by hereditary descent,' of the Udayagiri Inscription of Śāba.¹ The most important among the High Ministers were the Mantrin, 'High Counsellor,' the Sāndhi-vigrahika, Minister for Peace and War,' and the Akṣhapāṭal-ādhipāṭa, 'the Lord but they are also mentioned in the time of his son in inscriptions of Northern Bengal. The Baigram inscription of the year 128 (448 A.D.) for instance refers to rūpakas along with dināras (cf. Allan, p. cxxvii). The copper coins issued by Chandra Gupta II are commonly found around Ayodhyā (Allan, p. cxxxi).

1 The Mahā-daṇḍa-nāyaka Harisheṇa was the son of the Mahā-daṇḍa-nāyaka Dhruva-bhūti. The Mantrin Prithivishēṇa was the son of the Mantrin Śikharasvāmin. Cf. also the hereditary governors (goptrī), of Mandasor, Surāshṭra, etc. Things were somewhat different in the Maurya Period. Pushya Gupta, Rāshṭriya of Surāshṭra in the time of Chandra Gupta Maurya, was quite unconnected by blood with Tushāspā, governor or feudatory in the time of Aśoka.

Keeper of State Documents.' Like the Kauṭilyan Mantrin, the Gupta Sāmdhi-vigrahika accompanied the sovereign to the battle-field. As in the case of most of the Pradhānas of Śivājī there was no clear-cut division between civil and military officials. The same person could be Sāmdhi-vigrahika, Kumārāmātya (cadet-minister), and Mahā-danda-nāyaka, 'great commandant of the army,' and a Mantrin could become a Mahā-bal-ādhiprīta 'chief commander of forces.'

It is not clear whether the Guptas had a central council of ministers (Mantri-parishad).¹ But the existence of local parishads (e.g., the Parishad of Udānakūpa) is proved by a Basārli seal discovered by Bloch.

The empire was divided into a number of provinces styled Deśas, Bhuktis, etc., sub-divided into districts called Pradeśas or Vishayas. Among Deśas the Gupta inscriptions mention Śukuli-deśa. Surāshṭra (Kāthiāwāḍ), Dabhāla (the Jubbulpore region, Dāhala or Chedi of later times) and "Kālīndī Narmadayor Madhya," the territory lying between the Jumna and the Nerbudda, and embracing, no doubt, Eastern Mālwa, are also perhaps to be placed under this category.

Among Bhuktis (lit. allotments) we have reference in inscription of the Gupta and early Post-Gupta Age to Puṇḍra-vardhana bhukti (North Bengal), Vardhamāna bhukti (West Bengal) Tirabhukti (North Bihār), Nagara bhukti (South Bihār), Śrāvasti bhukti (Oudh), and Ahichchhatra bhukti (Rohilkhand), all situated in the Ganges valley. Among Pradeśas or Vishayas mention is made of Lāṭa-vishaya (in continental Gujarāt), Tripuri-vishaya (in the Jubbulpore region), Airikīṇa in Eastern

1 The Bilsāḍ Ins. (CII, 44) refers to a [Pa]rshad. But there is nothing to show that it was a central political assembly. The Sabhyas mentioned in connection with the nomination scene in the Allahabad Pillar Inscription may, however, have been members of a Central Curia Regis or Council.

Mālwa (called Pradeśa in Samudra Gupta's Eran inscription, and Vishaya in that of Toramāṇa), Antarvedi (the Gangetic Doab), Valavi (?), Gayā, Koṭivarsha (the Dinājpur region in North Bengal), Mahākhusbāpāra (?), Khāḍāpāra (?) and Kuṇḍadhāni.¹

The Deśas were governed by officers called Goptris, or Wardens of the Marches, as is suggested by the passage Sarveshu Deśeshu vidhāya Goptrin 'having appointed Goptris in all the Deśas.' The Bhuktis were usually governed by Uparikas or Uparika Mahārājas who were sometimes apparently princes of the Imperial family, e.g., Rājaputra-deva-bhaṭṭāraka, Governor of Puṇḍravardhana bhukti mentioned in a Dāmodarpur plate, Govinda Gupta, Governor of Tirabhukti mentioned in the Basārḥ seals² and possibly Ghaṭotkacha Gupta of Tumain in Central India. The office of Vishaya-pati or District Officer was held by Imperial officials like the Kumār-āmātyas and Āyuktakas, as well as by feudatory Mahārājas like Māṭri-viṣṇu of Eran. Some of the Vishayapatiś, e.g., Śarvanāga of Antarvedi,³ were possibly directly under the Emperor, while others, e.g., those of Koṭivarsha, Airikiṇa and Tripuri, were usually under provincial Governors. The Governors and District Officers were no doubt helped by officials and dignitaries like the Dāṇḍika, Chaur-oddharanika and *Danḍapāśika*⁴ (apparently judicial and police officials), Nagara Śreshṭhī (President or Alderman of a city-guild), Sārthavāha (lit. caravan-leader or merchant), Prathama-Kulika (foreman of artisans), Prathama-Kāyastha (the 1 Cf. Kuṇḍadhāni, a town mentioned in the Book of the Gradual Sayings, I, 18 n.

2 Govinda Gupta is known also from the newly discovered Mandasor Ins. of the Mālava-Vikrama year 524 (noticed by Garde, ASI, Annual Report, 1922-23, p. 187; Cal. Rev. 1926, July, 155; Ep. Ind., xix-App. No 7) which mentions his Senādhipa or captain Vāyurakshita, and Vāyu's son Dattabhaṭa, Commander-in-chief of the forces of king Prabhākara (467-68 A.D.).

3 And Kulavṛiddhi of Pañchanagarī (in North Bengal). Ep. Ind., xxi, 81.

4 Cf. Dandoāsi, village watchman, JASB, 1916. 30.

chief scribe), Pustu-pāla (record-keeper) and others. Every Vishaya consisted of a number of "grāmas" or villages which were administered by headmen and other functionaries styled Grāmikas, Mahattaras and Bhojakas.¹

Outside the limits of the Imperial provinces lay the vassal kingdoms and republics, mentioned in the Allahabad prasasti and other documents.

The Basārḥ seals throw some interesting sidelight on the provincial and municipal government as well as the economic organisation of the province of Tīrabhukti (Tirhut) in North Bihār. The province was apparently governed by prince Govinda Gupta, a son of the Emperor by the Mahādevī Śrī Dhruva-svāminī, who had his capital at Vaiśālī. The seals mention several officials like the Uparika (governor), the Kumār-āmātya (cadet-minister),² the Mahā-pratihāra (the great chamberlain),

1 In the Mṛichchhakatika (Act IX), which may be a composition of the period between Bāṇa (who knew a king Sūdraka, but no poet of the same name) and Vāmana (8th century) the judge (adhikaraṇika) in a court of law is accompanied by a Śreshṭhin and a Kāyastha. Reference is also made to the Adhikaraṇa-Bhojakas and a Mahattaraka in connection with the arrangement of benches in the Vyāvahāra-maṇḍapa (the hall of justice) and the detection of people "wanted" by the city Police (nagara-raksh-ādhiprīta.) The Mudrā-rākshasa which is probably to be assigned to a period anterior to Rājasekhara, the Dasarūpaka and Bhoja, perhaps also to Vāmana but not to Avantivarman (of the Maukhari or Utpala dynasty) or Dantivarman (Rāstrakūṭa or Pallava) whose name or names occur in the Bharata Vākya, makes mention of Kāyastha, Daṇḍapāśika, etc. Village functionaries were ordinarily placed under officials of the Vishaya or district. But in exceptional cases they had direct dealings with the Uparika or governor of a Bhukti (Ep. Ind., XV, 136).

2 It has been taken to mean (1) minister of a Prince as distinguished from that of the King (rājāmātya), (2) minister in charge of Princes, C. V. Vaidya, Med. Hind. Ind., I, 138, (3) a junior minister whose father is alive, or (4) one who has been a minister since the days of his youth. But cf. Ep. Ind., X, 49; XV, 302 f. It will be seen that the Kumārāmātyas were, as stated by a recent writer, divided into two classes, viz, (i) Yuvarājapādīya, those serving the Crown Prince, and (ii) Parama-bhaṭṭārakapādīya, those serving the Emperor himself. This perhaps makes the interpretation 'counsellor of, or in charge of, the Prince' untenable. See however Penzer, I, 32; III, 136. The most probable view is that the term Kumāra in the expression Kumārāmātya corresponds to Talavara (general or local chief),¹ the Mahā-danḍa-nāyaka (the great commandant), the *Vinayasthiti*² sthāpaka,³ the censor [?], and the Bhaṭāśvapati (lord of the army and cavalry), and the following offices, e.g., Yuvarāja-pādīya Kumar-āmātya-ādhikaraṇa (office of the Minister of His Highness the Crown Prince, according to Vogel), *Raṇabhāṇḍāgār-ādhikaraṇa*⁴ (office of the chief treasurer of the war department), Balādhikaraṇa (war office), Danḍapās-ādhikaraṇa (office of the chief of Police), Tīra-bhukty-Upārik-ādhikaraṇa (office of the Governor of Tirhut), Tīrabhuktāu Vinayasthiti-sthāpak-ādhikaraṇa (office of the censor [?] of Tirhut), Vaiśāly-ādhishtān-ādhikaraṇa (office of the government of the city of Vaiśālī), Śrī-parama-bhaṭṭāraka-pādīya Kumār-āmātya-ādhikaraṇa (office of the cadet-minister waiting on His Majesty).⁵

The reference to the Parishad (Council or Committee) of Udānakūpa shows that the Parishad still formed an important element of the machinery of local government. The mention of the 'moot-hall of aldermen of guilds, caravan-leaders and foremen of artisans' (Śreshṭhi-sārthavāha-kulika-nigama) is of interest to students of economics.

Pina, Chikka, Immadi, Ilaya, of the south, and is the opposite of Peda (Praudha), Piriya. In the Gupta Age the Kumarāmātyas often served district officers. The office was also combined with that of a general, counsellor and foreign secretary.

1 Cf. talāra of the Chirwā Inscription of Samara Simha.

2 Dr. Basak takes Vinaya-sthiti in the sense of law and order (the History of North-Eastern India, p. 312).

3 In the Nāṭya-śāstra Sthāpaka is the designation of the introducer of a play (Keith, Sanskrit Drama, p. 340). Here a different functionary may be meant.

4 The mention of Raṇa-bhāṇḍāgāra suggests that the finance department had its military as distinguished from the civil side.

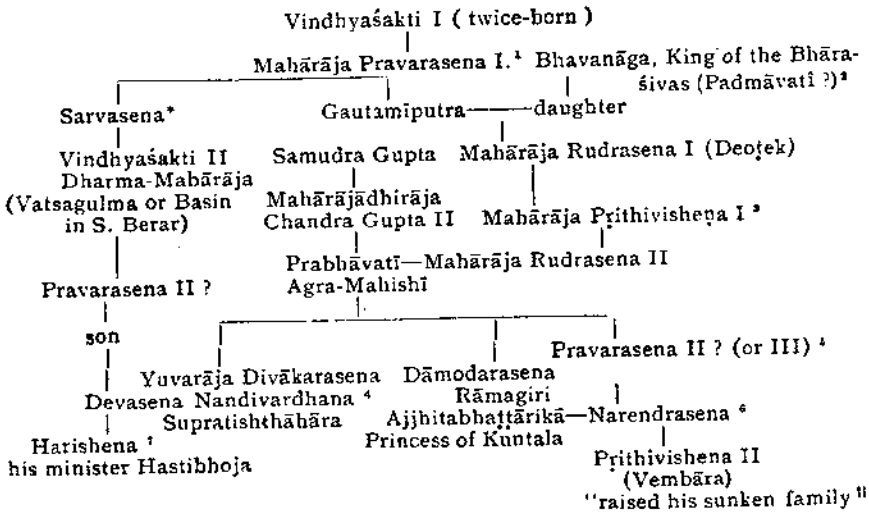

5 A distinction is drawn between imperial officials and those connected with viceregal administration and amongst the latter officers of the province of Tīra-bhukti are clearly distinguished from the public servants in charge of the subordinate administration of the ādhishtāna of Vaiśālī.

Chandra Gupta II had at least two queens, Dhruvadevi and Kubera-nāgā. The first queen was the mother of Govinda Gupta and Kumāra Gupta I.¹ The second queen had a daughter named Prabhāvatī who became queen of the Vākātakas. The latter was the mother of the Princes Divākarasena, Dāmodarasena and Pravarasena II. Certain mediaeval chiefs of the Kanarese country claimed descent from Chandra Gupta. The origin of these chiefs is probably to be traced to some unrecorded adventures of Vikramāditya in the Deccan.²

1 A son of Chandra Gupta styled bhūpati (king) Chandraprakāśa is mentioned in a verse quoted by Vāmana in his Kāvya-lāṅkāra-Sūtravṛtti (JASB, Vol I, No. 10. [N.S.], 1905, 253 ff.). But the identity of this Chandra Gupta is uncertain. His identification with Vikramāditya (i.e., Chandra Gupta II) rests on the vexed problem of the date of Vasubandhu (or Subandhu ?) alleged to be mentioned by Vāmana, and the question as to whether the personage mentioned may be identified with the Buddhist scholar whose biographer was Paramārtha (A.D. 500-69). Paramārtha was a Brāhmaṇa of the Bhāradvāja family of Ujjayinī who stayed for a time in Magadha and then went to China (A. D. 546-69.) According to his account Vasubandhu was born at Purushapura or Peshāwar, of the Brāhmaṇa family of Kauśika. He went to Ayodhyā at the invitation of Bālāditya, son of Vikramāditya (JRAS, 1905, 33 ff.). For some recent views about the date of Vasubandhu, see Indian Studies in Honour of C. R. Lanman, 79 ff.

2 Rājasekhara in his Kāvyamīmāṃsā and Bhoja, in his Śṛīṅgāra Prakāśikā, mention that Kālidāsa was sent on an embassy to a Kuntala king by Vikramāditya. "Ksemendra, in the Aucīya-Vicāra Carcā, refers to Kālidāsa's Kuntēśvara Dautya" (Proceedings of the Third Oriental Conference, 1924, p. 6). That the Guptas actually established contact with Kuntala appears clear from the Tālagund Inscription which states that a Kadamba ruler of the Kanarese country gave his daughters in marriage to the Gupta and other kings. An important indication of Gupta influence in the South Western Deccan is possibly afforded by the coins of Kumāra Gupta I found in the Satara District (Allan, p. cxxx.) The rôle assigned to Kālidāsa by Rājasekhara, Bhoja and Kshemendra is not unworthy of credence as tradition points to a date for him in the early Gupta Age. For traditions about his synchronism with Mahārājādhirāja Vikramāditya (Śakārāti) and Dignāgā and with king Pravarasena who is held to be the author of the poem Setubandha written in Mahārāshṭri Prākṛita and is, therefore, presumably identical with one of the kings bearing the same name in the Vākātaka family, (recorded in Abhinanda's Rāmacharita, ch. 32, Hāla, Gāthāsaptasatī, Bhūmikā, p. 8 and other works) see Proceedings of the Seventh Oriental Conference, 99 ff.; Mallinātha's comment on Meghadūta, I. 14; Ind. Ant., 1912, 267. JRAS, 1918. 118f. It has recently been pointed out by Mr. Mirashi that the Pattan plates of Pravarasena II (year 27) refer to a Kālidāsa as the writer of the charter Ep. Ind. xxiii (1935), pp. 81 ff. But the identity of the scribe with the great poet remains doubtful.

GENEALOGY OF THE VĀKĀTAKAS OF VISHNUVRIDDHA GOTRA

*It must not be understood that Sarvasena was necessarily the elder of the two brothers. The matter may be settled when further evidence is available.

1 He performed four Aśvamedhas, and is styled a Mahārāja and Samrāj. His traditional capital Kāñchanakāpura recalls Hiraṇyapura (Hirapur? SSE of Sāgar) of the Dudia plates (Ep. Ind. III. 258 ff). The splitting up of the name into Purikā and Chanakā seems hardly justifiable.

2 J. Num.-Soc., v pt ii, p. 2. Coins and Identity of Bhavanāga (Altekar).

3 A dharma-vijayī whose kosa-daṇḍa-sādhana is said to have been accumulating for a hundred years.

4 Identified by some with Nagardhan near Ramtek (Hiralal Ins. No. 4; Tenth Or. Conf., p. 458) and by others with Nandapur, near Ghughusgarh, north-east of Ramtek (Wellsted, Notes on the Vākātakas,) JASB, 1933, 160f.

5 Ruler of Pravrapura, Chārmimāhā and of following rājyas viz. Bhojakaṭa (N. Berar), Arammi, (east of Berar) and of the Wardhā region. Pravrapura has been identified by some with Pavnār in Wardha District (JASB, 1933, 159).

6 His commands were honoured by rulers of Kosalā, Mekalā (at the source of the Nerbudda) and Mālava.

7 Credited with the conquest of Kuntala, Avanti, Kalinga, Kosala, Andhra Triakūṭa, Lāṭa.

SECTION II. KUMĀRA GUPTA I MAHENDRĀDITYA.

Chandra Gupta II's successor was Kumāra Gupta I¹ surnamed Mahendrāditya² whose certain dates range from A.D. 415 to A.D. 455.³ His extensive coinage, and the wide distribution of his inscriptions show that he was able to retain his father's empire including the central and western provinces.⁴ One of his viceroys, Chirātadatta, governed Puṇḍravardhana Bhukti or roughly North

1 The Mandasor inscription of the Mālava year 524 suggests that Kumāra may have had a rival in his brother prince Govinda Gupta. In the record Indra (? Kumāra, who is styled Śrī Mahendra and Mahendrakarmā on coins) is represented as being suspicious of Govinda's power. Ep. Ind., XIX, App. No. 7 and n. 5.

2 Also called Śrī Mahendra (on coins of the Archer type), Aśvamedha Mahendra (on coins of the Aśvamedha type), Mahendrakarmā, Ajita Mahendra (on coins of the horseman type and sometimes on the lion-slayer type), Siṃha Mahendra (on coins of the lion-slayer type), Śrī Mahendra Siṃha (also on coins of the lion-slayer type), Mahendra Kumāra on coins of the peacock type), Mahendra-Kalpa (Tumain Ins.), Siṃha Vikrama (on coins of the lion-slayer type; Allan, Gupta Coins, p. 80), Vyāghra bala-parākrama (on coins of the tiger-slayer type) and Śrī Pratāpa. On the swordsman type of gold coins and on copper coins of the Garuḍa and possibly siṃha-vāhinī types the emperor is simply called Śrī Kumāra Gupta. The title Mahendrāditya with the epithet Parama bhāgavata, 'devoted worshipper of the Bhagavat (Vishṇu-Kṛishṇa),' is found on silver coins, apparently struck in Surāshṭra.

3 The date 96 (= A.D. 415) is found in the Bilsar Inscription and the date 136 (= A.D. 455) on silver coins (EHI, 4th ed., pp. 345-46). The Eraṇ inscription of Samudra Gupta refers to his 'virtuous and faithful wife' and many sons and son's sons of the royal pair. From this it seems probable that Kumāra Gupta and his brothers were already born during the reign of their grandfather, and that Kumāra had seen not less than some thirty five summers before his accession. As he reigned for at least forty years, he could not have died before the age of 75 (approximately).

4 The possession of the central districts in the Ganges valley is, according to Allan, confirmed by the silver coins of the peacock type (cf. the Ayodhyā coins of Āryamitra, CHI, I. 538), and the inclusion of the western province by those of the Garuḍa type. Silver plated coins with a copper core were intended for circulation in the Valabhī area, and coins of small thick fabric resembling the Traikūṭaka coinage were apparently struck in South Gujārā (Allan, pp. xciii ff.)

EXTENT OF THE EMPIRE OF KUMĀR GUPTA I 567

Bengal,¹ another viceroy, prince Ghaṭotkacha Gupta, held office in the province of Eraṇ (in Eastern Mālwa) which included Tumbavana;² a third viceroy or feudatory, Bandhuvarman, ruled at Daśapura in western Mālwa.³ The Karamadāṇḍe inscription of A. D. 436 mentions Prithivishena who was a Mantrin and Kumārāmātya, and afterwards Mahā-balādhikṛita or general under Kumāra Gupta, probably stationed in Oudh. The panegyrist of a Mālwa viceroy claims that the suzerainty of Kumāra Gupta extended over "the whole earth which is decked with the rolling seas as with a rocking girdle, which holds in its breast-like mountain altitudes the 1 Cf. the Dāmodarpur plates of the years 124 and 128. (Ep. xvii. 193). The Baigram inscription of the year 128 (A.D. 447-48) refers to a Kumārāmātya named Kulavṛiddhi who governed a viśhaya with its headquarters at Pañchanagari, apparently in N. Bengal. Ep. Ind., XXI, 78 ff. The Sultanpur or Kalaikuḍi Inscription (Bangasri 1350 B. S., Baiśākha, pp. 415-51 and Bhādra; IHQ XIX. 12) of the year 120 = A. D. 439 in the Bagra district, makes mention of another officer, the Āyuktaka, Achyutadāsa of Purṇakauśikā in Śrīngaveravīthi. The Natore Inscription of A. D. 432 (JPASB, 1911) is another record of Kumāra's reign found in N. Bengal.

2 Tumain in the Guna district of the Gwalior state, about 50 miles to the north-west of Eraṇ. M. B. Garde, Ind. Ant., xlix 1920, p. 114, Ep. Ind. xxvi (1941), pp. 115 ff; Tumain Inscription of the year 116, i.e., A. D. 435. The identity of the prince mentioned in the record, with Śrī Ghaṭotkacha Gupta of seals and Ghaṭo Kramāditya of coins is uncertain (Allan, xvi, xl, liv). Hema Chandra (in the Parīśiṣṭa parva, xii, 2-3) places Tumbavana in the Avantideśa, 'the ornament of the western half of Bhārata' in Jambūdvīpa.

Ihaiva Jambūdvīpe 'pāḡ Bharatārdha vibhūṣaṇam Avantirīti deśo'sti svargadeśīya piddhibhiḥ tatra Tumbavanamīti vidyate sanniveśanam

3 Mandasor Inscription of A. D. 437-38. Bhide suggests (JBORS, VII, March, 1921, pp. 33 f.) that Viśva-varman of Gupta Ins. No. 17 is an independent king, who flourished a century before his namesake of ins. No. 18, who is a feudatory (Gopṭri) of the Guptas. S. Majumdar points out that even Viśva-varman of Ins. No. 17 must be later than Naravarman of V. S. 461 (= A. D. 401-05). In the Bihar Kotra (Rajgaḍh state, Malwa) Ins (Ep. Ind. xxvi. 130 ff) of Mahārāja Naravarman of the year 474 (i.e., A. D., 417-18) the king is styled 'aulikara', thus establishing his connection with Viṣṇuvardhana of the Mālava Era 589 (A. D. 532-33).

founts of the vivifying liquid, and smiles with the flowers of its forest glens."

Like his father, Kumāra was a tolerant king. During his rule the worship of Svāmī Mahāsenā (Kārttikeya), of Buddha, of Śiva in the liṅga form and of the sun, as well as that of Viṣṇu, flourished peacefully side by side.¹

The two notable events of Kumāra's reign are the celebration of the horse sacrifice, evidenced by the rare Aśva-medha type of his gold coinage, and the temporary eclipse of the Gupta power by the Pushyamitras. The reading Pushyamitra in the Bhitari inscription is, however, not accepted by some scholars because the second syllable of this name is damaged.² Mr. H. R. Divekar in his article "Pushyamitras in the Gupta Period"³ makes the plausible emendation Yudhy = amitrāns = ca for Dr. Fleet's reading Pushyamitrāns = ca in the Bhitari Pillar Inscription.⁴ It is admitted on all hands that during the concluding years of Kumāra's reign the Gupta empire "had been made to totter." Whether the reference in the inscription is simply to amitras (enemies), or to Pushyamitras, cannot 1 Cf. the Bilsāḍ, Mankuwār, Karamadāṇḍe and Mandasor inscriptions. Śiva appears to have been the favourite deity of many high ministers, Viṣṇu of the most powerful ruling race and the sun of traders and artisans in the early Gupta period. The expression Jitam Bhagabatā appears to have been popularised by the king. His example seems to have been followed by Mādhava Gaṅga of Penukonda plates (Ep. Ind. XIV. 334), Viṣṇuvarman I Kadamba of Hebbata grant (Mys. A. S., A. R. 1925. 98), Nandivarman Pallava of Udayendiram (Ep. Ind. III. 145) and other kings of the south. The popularity of the cult of Kārttikeya is well illustrated not only by the sanctuaries erected in his honour, but also by the names Kumāra and Skanda assumed by members of the imperial family, and the issue of the peacock type of coins by the emperor Kumāra Gupta I. The Gupta empire reached the zenith of its splendour before its final decline in the time of the originator of the 'peacock' coins, as a later empire did in the days of the builder of the peacock-throne.

2 Cf. Fleet, CII, p. 55 n.

3 Annals of the Bhandarkar Institute, 1919-20, 99 f.

4 CII, iii, p. 55.

be satisfactorily determined. We should, however, remember in this connection that a people called Pushyamitra is actually referred to in the Vishnu Purāṇa and a Pushyamitika-Kula in the Jain Kaṭhasūtra.¹ The Purāṇa text associates the Pushyamitras, Paṭumitras, Durmitras and others with the region of Mekala near the source of the Nerbudda.² References to the warlike activities of Mekala and the neighbouring realm of Kosala that had once been overrun by Kumāra's grandfather, are found in inscriptions of the Vākātaka relations of Kumāra Gupta. Bāṇa relates the tragic story of a ruler of Magadha who was carried off by the ministers of the lord of Mekala. A passage in the Mankuwar stone image inscription of the year 129 (A.D. 449) where the emperor Kumāra Gupta I is styled simply Mahārāja Śrī instead of Mahārājādhirāja Śrī has been interpreted by some scholars to mean that he was possibly deprived by his enemies of his status as paramount sovereign. But the theory is rendered improbable by the Dāmodarpur plate of about the same date where Kumāra is given full imperial titles. It may be noted in this connection that in several inscriptions, and on certain coins, his immediate predecessors, too, are simply called Rājā or Mahārāja.

The assumption of the title Vyāghra-bala-parākrama "displaying the strength and prowess of a tiger", on coins of the tiger-slayer type, by Kumāra may possibly indicate that he attempted to repeat the southern venture of his grandfather and penetrate into the tiger-infested forest territory beyond the Nerbudda. Expansion towards the south is also indicated by a find of 1,395 coins in the Satara District.¹ But the imperial troops must have met with disaster. The fallen fortunes of the Gupta family were restored by prince Skanda Gupta who may have been appointed his father's warden in the Ghāzīpur region, the Aṭavi or Forest Country of ancient times.²

1 SBE, XXII, 292. Cf. the legend Pusamitasa found on Bhīṣa seals in characters of the Kushān period or a somewhat earlier date (JRAS, 1911, 138).

2 Vish., IV, 24, 17; Wilson, IX, 213. "Pushyamitra and Paṭumitra and others to the number of 13 will rule over Mekalā." The commentary, however, distinguishes the 13 Pushyamitra-Paṭumitras from the 7 Mekalas. But from the context it is apparent that the position of the Pushyamitras was between the Māhishyas (people of Māhishmati?) and the Mekalas in the Nerbudda valley, if not in a part of the country of the Mekalas themselves. Cf. Fleet, JRAS, 1889, 228; cf. also Bhīṣa seals.

The only queen of Kumāra I named in the genealogical portion of extant inscriptions is Anantadevī. He had at least two sons, viz., Puru Gupta, son of Anantadevī, and Skanda Gupta the name of whose mother is, in the opinion of some scholars, not given in the inscriptions. Sewell, however, suggests that it was Devakī.³ This is not an unlikely assumption as otherwise the comparison of the widowed Gupta empress with Kṛishṇa's mother in verse 6 of the Bhitari Pillar Inscription will be less explicable. Hiuen Tsang calls Buddha Gupta (Fo-to-kio-to) or Budha Gupta,⁴ a son (or descendent?) of Śakrāditya.⁵ The only predecessor of Budha Gupta who had a synonymous title was Kumāra Gupta I who is called Mahendrāditya on coins. Mahendra is the same as Śakra.

1 Allan, p. cxxx. Cf. also the Kadamba inscription referring to social relations between the Kadambas of the fifth century and the Guptas.

2 Cf. the Bhitari Inscription.

3 Historical Inscriptions of Southern India, p. 349.

4 The name Fo-to-kio-to has been restored as Buddha Gupta. But we have no independent evidence regarding the existence of a king named Buddha Gupta about this period. The synchronism of his successor's successor Bālāditya with Mihirakula indicates that the king meant was Budha Gupta, cf. also Ind. Ant., 1886, 251 n.

5 That Śakrāditya was a reality is proved by a Nālandā seal (H. Sastri, MAI, No. 66, p. 38). To him is ascribed an establishment at Nālandā, the far-famed place, which grew into a great university in the seventh century A. D. The pilgrim was not indulging in mere fancy as suggested by a recent writer in a treatise on Nālandā.

The use of terms conveying the same meaning as titles and epithets was not unknown in the Gupta period. Vikramāditya was also called Vikramāṅka. Skanda Gupta is called both Vikramāditya and Kramāditya, both the words meaning "puissant like the sun" or "striding like the sun." If Śakrāditya of Hiuen Tsang be identical with Mahendrāditya or Kumāra I, Buddha Gupta¹ was closely related to Kumāra. Another member of Kumara's family was possibly Ghaṭotkacha Gupta.²

1 Recent discoveries show that Budha Gupta was really a grandson (not a son) of Kumara Gupta I. The Chinese pilgrim may have failed to distinguish between a son and a grandson. Cf. The Koppāram plates where Pulakeśin II is represented as a grandson of Kirtivarman I. But he was really the son of the latter. It is also possible that Śakrāditya was an epithet of Purugupta, the father of Budha.

2 The Tumain Inscription referred to by Mr. Garde; cf. also the Basārḥ seal mentioning Śrī Ghaṭotkacha Gupta. The exact relationship with Kumāra is, however, not stated in the inscription.

SECTION III. - SKANDA GUPTA, VIKRAMĀDITYA.

According to the evidence of the Ārya-Maṇjuśrī-mūla-kalpa, confirmed by epigraphic testimony, the immediate successor of Mahendra, i.e., Kumāra Gupta I, was Skanda Gupta. In an interesting paper read at a meeting of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Dr. R. C. Majumdar suggested that after Kumāra's death, which apparently took place while the struggle with the Pushyamitras was still undecided, there was a fratricidal war in which Skanda Gupta came off victorious after defeating his brothers including Puru Gupta, the rightful claimant, and rescued his mother just as Kṛishṇa rescued Devakī.¹ Dr. Majumdar observed that the omission of the name of the mother of Skanda Gupta in the genealogy given in the Bihār and Bhitari Stone Pillar Inscriptions indicated that she was not the chief queen and Skanda 'had no natural claim to the throne'. The rightful heir of Kumāra was Puru Gupta, the son of the Mahādevī Anantadevī.

We should, however, remember that there was no rule prohibiting the mention of ordinary queens in inscriptions. The mother of Princess Prabhāvatī, Kuberaṇāgā, was not the chief queen of Chandra Gupta II.² No doubt the title Mahādevī is once given to her in the Poona plates of her daughter in the year 13, but it is not repeated in the Riddhapur plates of the year 19 where she is called simply Kuberaṇāgā devī without the prefix Mahādevī, whereas Kumāra-devī, Datta-devī and even her own daughter, Prabhāvatī-guptā are styled Mahādevīs. The contrast is full of significance and we know as a matter of fact that the real Mahādevī (chief queen) of Chandra

1 Cf. the Bhitari Inscription, JASB, 1921 (N. S. XVII), 253 ff.

2 JASB, 1924, 58. In IC. 1944, 171. Dr. Majumdar modified his views regarding the omission of the name of the queen mother in the Bhitari ins. and finds the names of Mahādevī Anantadevī and her son Purugupta in the inscription, Gupta II was Dhruva-devī or Dhruva-Svāminī. Though Kuberanāgā was not the principal consort (agramahishī) of her husband, she is mentioned in the inscriptions of her daughter. On the other hand the names of queens, the mothers of kings, are sometimes omitted.¹ In the genealogical portion of the Banskhera and Madhuban plates the name of Yaśomati as Harsha's mother is not mentioned, but in the Sonpat and the Nālandā seals² she is mentioned both as the mother of Rājya-vardhana and as the mother of Harsha. Therefore it is not safe to draw conclusions from a comparison of genealogies given on seals and those given in ordinary prāśastis. From a comparative study of the seals and plaques referred to above on the one hand and ordinary panegyric epigraphs on the other, two facts emerge, viz., (a) genealogies given by the records of the former class are fuller than those given in the others, and (b) names of mothers of reigning kings that are invariably given (even though this meant repetition) in documents of the first group are sometimes omitted by the writers of prāśastis, even though they be the names of the chief queens. There is no real analogy between the genealogy on the Bhitari seal and that in the Pillar Inscriptions. A seal should be compared to another seal and an ordinary prāśasti with another document of the same class.³

1 The name of the father of a reigning king is also sometimes omitted (cf. Kielhorn's N. Ins., Nos. 464, 468).

2 A. R. of the ASI, Eastern Circle, 1917-18, p. 44; Ep Ind., XXI. 74 ff. MAI, No. 66, 68 f.

3 We have already seen that in the opinion of Sewall the name of Skanda's mother is actually mentioned in one epigraph. According to that scholar her name was Devakī. The comparison with Kṛishṇa's mother (who, with all her misfortunes, did not experience the pangs of widowhood) in the Bhitari Inscription would be less explicable, if not altogether pointless, if Devakī was not the name of the mother of Skanda Gupta as well as that of Kṛishṇa. Why were Kṛishṇa and Devakī thought of in connection with the victory over hostile powers, instead of, say, Skanda (Kārttikeya) and Pārvatī, Indra or Viṣṇu and Aditi,

As to the question of rightful claim to the succession, we should remember that the cases of Samudra Gupta and Chandra Gupta II suggest that the ablest among the princes was chosen irrespective of any claim arising out of birth.

There is nothing to show that the struggle at the end of Kumāra's reign, referred to in the Bhitari Pillar inscription, was a fratricidal conflict. The relevant text of the inscription runs thus :—

Pitari divam upēte vīptūtām vāmśa-lakshmīn bhūja-bala-vijit-ārīr-yyah pratishtāpya bhūyah jīta-iti paritoshān mātaram sāsra-mettvān hata-rīpur-iva Kṛishṇa Devakīm-abhyupetaḥ

"Who, when (his) father had attained heaven (i. e., died), vanquished (his) enemies by the strength of (his) arm, and steadied once more the drifting fortunes of his family ; and then exclaiming ' the victory has been won ' betook himself, like Kṛishṇa, when his enemies had been slain, to his weeping mother, Devakī"¹

The hostile powers (ari), who made the Vāmśa-lakshmī, goddess of family fortune, of Skanda Gupta " vīpluta," ' convulsed,' after the death of his father, were apparently enemies of the Gupta family, i. e., outsiders not belonging to the Gupta line. As a matter of fact the antagonists expressly mentioned in the Bhitari Pillar by the panegyrist of Skanda Gupta who is compared to Śakra (Śakropama, Kahaum Inscription) and Vishṇu (Śrīparikshīptavakshā, Junāgaḍh epigraph) ? A possible explanation is that the name of his mother coupled with her miserable plight suggested to the court-poet comparison with Kṛishṇa and Devakī. Cf. Ep. Ind. I, 364 ; xiii. 126, 131 (Hampe and Conjeeveram ins. of Kṛishṇadeva Rāya) where we have a similar play on the name Devakī :—

tadvamśe Devakījānirddidīpe Timma bhūpatih Yasasvi Tuluvendreshu Yadoḥ Kṛishṇa ivānvaye sarasādudabhūttasmān Narasāvanipālakah Devakīnamdanāt Kāmo Devakī namdanādiva.

¹ For the reference to Devakī, see Vishṇu Purāṇa, V, 79.

Inscription were outsiders, e. g., the Pushyamitras¹ and the Hāṇas. There is not the slightest reference to a fratricidal war. There is no doubt a passage in the Junāgaḍh inscription of Skanda which says that "the goddess of fortune and splendour (Lakshmī) of her own accord selected (Skanda) as her husband (svayam varayan-chakūra)...having discarded all the other sons of kings (manujendra-putra)."² But "Śvayameva sriyā grihīta" "accepted by Śrī or Lakshmī of her own accord" is an epithet which is applied by Prabhākara-varḍhana, shortly before his death, to Harsha whose devotion to his elder brother is well-known. That Skanda Gupta like Harsha was considered to be the favourite of the Goddess of Luck is well-known. Attention may be invited to the Lakshmī type of his coins³ and the epithet Śrī-parikshipta-vakshāḥ ("whose breast is embraced by Śrī, i. e., Lakshmī"), occurring in the Junāgaḍh Inscription. The panegyrist of the emperor refers to a svayambara in the conventional style.³ A svayambara naturally presupposes an assemblage of princes, not necessarily of one particular family, in which all the suitors are discarded excepting one. But there is no inseparable connection between a svayambara and a fight, and, even when it is followed by a fight, the combatants are hardly ever princes who are sons of the 1 Even if the reference be merely to "amitras" (see ante, p. 568), these amitras could not have included an elder brother, as the passage "kshitipacharaya-piṭhe sthāpita vāma-pādah," "placed (his) left foot on a foot-stool which was the king (of that hostile power himself) clearly shows. The expression samudita bala kosha ("whose power and wealth had risen") would be singularly inappropriate in the case of the rightful heir to the imperial throne of the Guptas with its enormous resources existing for several generations, and can only point to a parvenu power that had suddenly leaped to fame.

2 Allan, p. xcix.

3 Cf. Ep. Ind., I. 25.

*Gurjareśvara-rājya-Śrīr
Yasya jajñe Svayambarā*

The Svayambara of Lakshmī forms the subject of the drama which Urvaśī acts before Indra with her system nymphs (JASB, 59, 32).

same king. The epigraphic passage referring to Lakshmi's svayambara, therefore, does not necessarily imply that there was a struggle between the sons of Kumāra in which Skanda came off victorious. It only means that among the princes he was specially fortunate and was considered to be the best fitted to rule because of the valiant fight he had put up against the enemies of the empire. In the Allahabad prasaṣti we have a similar passage :—"who (Samudra Gupta) being looked at with envy by the faces, melancholy through the rejection of themselves, of others of equal birth...was bidden by his father,—who exclaiming 'verily he is worthy' embraced him—to govern of a surety the whole world." It may be argued that there is no proof that Skanda was selected by Kumāra. On the contrary he is said to have been selected by Lakshmi of her own accord. But such was also the case with Harsha. Skanda like Harsha was called upon to save the empire of his forbears at a time when the fortunes of the imperial family were at a low ebb, and both these eminent men owed their success to their own prowess. The important thing to remember is that the avowed enemies of Skanda Gupta mentioned in his inscriptions were outsiders like the Pushyamitras, Hūṇas,¹ and Mlechchhas.² The manujendra-putras of the Junāgaḍh inscription are mentioned only as disappointed suitors, not as defeated enemies, comparable to the brothers of Samudra Gupta who were discarded by Chandra Gupta I. We are, therefore, inclined to think that as the tottering Gupta empire was saved from its enemies (e. g., the Pushyamitras) by Skanda Gupta it was he who was considered to be the best fitted to rule. There is no evidence that his brothers disputed his claim and actually fought for the crown. There is nothing to show that Skanda shed his brothers' blood and that the epithets "amalātmā," 'pure-souled,' and parahītakāri, 'the benefactor of others,' applied to him in the Bhitari inscription and coin legends,¹ were unjustified.

1 Bhitari Ins.

2 Junāgaḍh Ins.

The view that Skanda Gupta was the immediate successor of Kumara Gupta I seems to be confirmed by a verse in the *Ārya-Maṇjūsri-mūla-kalpa*² which runs thus :—

*Samudrākhyā nṛipaśchaiva Vikramaśchaiva kīrtitaḥ
Mahendranṛipavaro mukhyaḥ
Sākārādyam ataḥ param
Devarājākhyā nāmāsau yugādhame*

It is impossible not to recognise in the kings (nṛipa) Samudra, Vikrama, Mahendra and "Sākārādyā" mentioned in the verse, the great Gupta emperors Samudra Gupta, Chandra Gupta II Vikramāditya, Kumāra Gupta I Mahendrāditya, and Skanda Gupta.³

Skanda Gupta assumed the titles of Kramāditya and Vikramāditya.⁴ The passage from the Maṇjūsri-mūla-kalpa quoted above refers to his appellation Devarāja. The titles Vikramāditya and Devarāja were apparently assumed in imitation of his grandfather. The latter

1 Allan, Gupta Coins, cxxi.

2 Vol. I, ed. Ganapati Śāstrī, p. 628. Cf. the Rewa Ins. of 141 = A.D. 460/61. Attention was drawn to this record by Mr. B. C. Chhabra at the Oriental Conference, Twelfth (Benares) Session, Summaries of Papers, part II. p. 39. and later by Dr. Majumdar and Sircar.

3 IHQ, 1932 p. 352.

4 Allan, Catalogue pp. 117, 122; cf. Fleet, CII, p. 53 :—

"Vinaya-bala-sūnitair-vvikrameṇa krameṇa pratidinam-abhiyogād īpsitam yena labdhvā."

The epithet Kramāditya is found on certain gold coins of the heavy Archer type as well as on silver issues of the Garuḍa, Bull and Altar types. The more famous title of Vikramāditya is met with on silver coins of the Altar type.

epithet reminds one further of the name Mahendra given to his father. It is also to be noted that in the Allahabad Pillar Inscription Samudra Gupta is extolled as the equal of Indra and other gods and in the Kahānum record Skanda Gupta is called Śakropama.

From the evidence of coins and inscriptions we know that Skanda ruled from A. D. 455 to c. 467. The first achievement of the monarch was the resuscitation of the Gupta Empire and the recovery of lost provinces. From an inscriptional passage we learn that while preparing to restore the fallen fortunes of his family he was reduced to such straits that he had to spend a whole night sleeping on the bare earth. Line twelve of the Bhitari Inscription tells us that when Kumāra Gupta I had attained heaven, Skanda conquered his enemies by the strength of his arms. From the context it seems that these enemies were the Pushyamitras "whose power and wealth had (suddenly) gone up."

The struggle with the Pushyamitras was followed by conflicts with the Hūṇas¹ and probably also with the Vākāṭakas in which the emperor was presumably victorious in the end. The invasion of the Hūṇas took place not later than A.D. 458 if we identify them with the Mlechchhas or barbarian uitlanders of the Junāgaḍh inscription. The memory of the victory over the Mlechchhas is preserved in the story of king Vikramāditya, son of Mahendrāditya of Ujjain, in Somadeva's Kathā-sarīt-sāgara.² Central India and Surāshṭra seem to have been the vulnerable parts of the Gupta empire. The Bālāghaṭ plates³ refer to Narendrasena

1 The Hūṇas are mentioned not only in inscriptions, but in the Mahā-bhārata, the Purāṇas, the Raghuvamśa and later in the Harsha-charita and the Nīti-vākya-mṛita of Somadeva. The Lalita Vistara (translated by Dharmaraksha, d. A. D. 313) mentions the Hūṇalīpi (Ind. Ant., 1913, p. 266). See also W. M. Mc Govern, The Early Empires of Central Asia, 399ff, 455ff, 485f.

2 Allan, Gupta Coins, Introduction, p. xlix.

3 Ep. Ind., IX, p. 271.

Vākātaka, son of Skanda Gupta's cousin Pravarasena II (III?) as "Kosalā-Mekalā-Mālav-ādhipatyabhyarchita śāsana" 'whose commands were treated with respect by the lords of Kosala (Upper Mahānadi Valley), Mekala (Upper Valley of the Nerbudda), and Mālava (probably Eastern Mālwa).' The Junāgaḍh inscription tells us that Skanda "deliberated for days and nights before making up his mind who could be trusted with the important task of guarding the lands of the Surāshṭras." Allan deduces from this and from the words "sarveshu deśeshu vidhāya goptrin," 'appointing protectors in all the provinces' that the emperor was at particular pains to appoint a series of Wardens of the Marches to protect his dominions from future invasion. One of these Wardens was Paṇḍadatta,¹ governor of Surāshṭra. In spite of all his efforts Skanda Gupta could not, however, save the westernmost part of his empire from future troubles. During his lifetime he, no doubt, retained his hold over Surāshṭra, the Cambay coast and the adjoining portions of continental Gujarāt and Mālwa.² But his successors do not appear to have been so fortunate. Not a single inscription or coin has yet been discovered which shows that Surāshṭra and Western Mālwa formed parts of the Gupta empire after the death of Skanda Gupta. On the contrary Harishena Vākātaka, grandson of Narendrasena, claims victories over Lāṭa

1 Persian Farna-dāta seems, according to Jarl Charpentier, to be the form underlying the name Paṇḍadatta (JRAS, 1931, 140; Aiyangar Com. Vol., 15).

2 The inclusion of Surāshṭra within his empire is proved by the Junāgaḍh inscription and that of the Cambay coast by silver coins of the 'Bull type.' The type was imitated by Kṛishṇarāja (Allan, ci), who is to be identified with the king of that name belonging to the Kaṭachchuri family. Kṛishṇa's son and successor, Saṁkaragaṇa appropriates the epithets of the great Samudra Gupta. His son Buddharāja effected the conquest of Eastern Mālwa early in the seventh century A. D. (c. 608 A. D.; Vādnar plates, Ep. Ind., xii, 31 ff.; see also Marshall, A Guide to Sāñchi, p. 21n). The dynasty was overthrown by the early Chalukyas and it is interesting to note that three of the characteristic epithets of Samudra Gupta are applied to the Chalukya Vijaya-rāja in the Kaira grant; Fleet, CII, 14.

(South Gujarāt) and Avanti (district around Ujjain) besides Trikūṭa in the Koṅkan, Kuntala (the Kanarese country), Andhra (the Telugu country), Kalinga (South Orissa and adjoining tracts), and Kosala (Upper Mahānadi Valley), while the Maitrakas of Valabhī (Wala in the peninsular portion of Gujarāt) gradually assume independence.

The later years of Skanda seem to have been tranquil.¹ The emperor was helped in the work of administration by a number of able governors like Parnadatta, viceroy of the west, Sarvanāga, District Officer (Vishayapati) of Antarvedi or the Gangetic Doāb, and Bhimavarman, the ruler of the Kosam region.² Chakrapālita, son of Parnadatta, restored in A.D. 457-58 the embankment of the lake Sudarśana at Girnar which had burst two years previously.

The emperor continued the tolerant policy of his forefathers. Himself a Bhāgavata or worshipper of Kṛishṇa-Vishṇu, he and his officers did not discourage followers of other sects, e.g., Jainas and devotees of the Sun. The people were also tolerant. The Kahāum inscription commemorates the erection of Jaina images by a person "full of affection for Brāhmaṇas."³ The Indore plate records a deed by a Brāhmaṇa endowing a lamp in a temple of the Sun.

1 Cf. the Kahāum Ins. of 141 = A. D. 460-1.

2 The inclusion within Skanda's empire of provinces lying still further to the east is proved by the Bhitari and Bihār Pillar Inscriptions and possibly by gold coins of the Archer type struck on a standard of 144·6 grains of metal. Allan, p. xcvi, 118.

3 Cf. The Pāhāḍpur epigraph of the year 159 (A. D. 479) which records a donation made by a Brāhmaṇa couple for the worship of the Divine Arhats, i.e., the Jinas.

CHAPTER XII. THE GUPTA EMPIRE (continued): THE LATER GUPTAS.

*Vasvankasārāmatibhūya sāhañ
Saurājya vaddhotsavayā bibhūtyā
Samagraśaktau tvayi Sūryavaniśye
Sati prapannā karuṇāmavasthām*

—Raghuvaṃśam.

SECTION I. SURVIVAL OF THE GUPTA POWER AFTER SKANDA GUPTA.

It is now admitted on all hands that the reign of Skanda Gupta ended about A.D. 467.¹ When he passed away the empire declined,² especially in the west, but did not wholly perish. We have epigraphic as well as literary evidence of the continuance of the Gupta empire in parts of Central and Eastern India in the latter half of the fifth as well as the sixth and seventh centuries A.D. The Dāmodarpur plates, the Sārnāth Inscriptions³ and the Eraṇ epigraph of Budha Gupta prove that from A.D. 477 to 496 the Gupta empire extended from Bengal to Eastern Mālwa. The Betul plates of the Parivrajaka Mahārāja Saṃkshobha, dated in the year 199 G. E., i.e., 518 A.D., 'during the enjoyment of sovereignty by the Gupta King,'⁴ testify to the fact that the Gupta sway at this

1 Smith, the Oxford History of India, additions and corrections, p. 171, end.

2 For the causes of decline, see Calcutta Review, April, 1930, p. 36 ff.; also post.

3 A.S.I. Report, 1914-15; Hindusthan Review, Jan., 1918; JBORS, IV, 344 f.

4 Śrīmati-prāvardhamāna-vijaya-rājye saṃvatsara-śate nava-navaty uttare Gupta-nripa-rājya-bhuktau. "In the glorious, augmenting and victorious reign, in a century of years increased by ninety-nine, the enjoyment of sovereignty by the Gupta King."

period was acknowledged in Dabhālā, which included the Tripuri Vishaya (Jabbalpur region).¹ Another inscription of Saṅkshobha found in the valley near the village of Khoh in Baghelkhand, dated in A.D. 528, proves that the Gupta empire included some of the central districts even in A.D. 528.² Fifteen years later the grant of a village in the Koṭivarsha Vishaya (Dinājpur District) of Pandra-var-dhana-bhukti (roughly North Bengal) 'during the reign of Paramadaivata (the Supreme Divinity) Parama-bhaṭṭāraka (the Supreme Lord) Mahārājādhirāja (King of Kings) Śrī.....Gupta,"³ shows that the Gupta dominions at this period included the eastern as well as the central provinces. Towards the close of the sixth century a Gupta king, a contemporary of Prabhākara-var-dhana of the Pushyabhūti⁴ family of Śrīkaṇṭha (Thānēsar), was ruling in "Mālava."⁵ Two sons of this king, Kumāra Gupta and

1 Ep. Ind., VIII, pp. 284-87. Dabhālā = later Dāhala.

2 Fleet, CII, III, pp. 113-16; Hoernle in JASB, 1889 p. 95.

3 Ep. Ind., XV, p. 113 ff. Corrected in Ep. Ind., XVII (Jan., 1924), p. 193.

4 This seems to be the correct spelling and not Pushpabhūti (Ep. Ind., I, 68).

5 "Mālava" was graced by the presence of the Guptas as early as the fifth century. This is proved by the Udayagiri inscriptions of Chandragupta II and the Tumain inscription of Ghaṭotkacha Gupta. In the latter part of the sixth and the commencement of the seventh century, it seems to have been under the direct rule of a line of Guptas whose precise connection with the Great Guptas is not clear. Magadha was probably administered by local rulers like Kumārāmūtya Mahārāja Nandana (A. D. 551-2?) of the Amauna plate, Gayā Dist., Ep. Ind., X, 49, and the Varmans (cf. Nāgārjuni Hill Cave Ins., CII, 226; also Pūrṇavarman mentioned by Hiuen Tsang and Deva-varman, IA, X, 110). For a detailed discussion see Ray Chaudhuri, JBORS, XV, parts iii and iv (1929, pp. 651 f.). The precise location and extent of the "Mālava" of the "later Guptas" cannot be determined. In Ep. Ind., V, 229, the Daṇḍanāyaka Anantapāla, a feudatory of Vikramāditya VI, is said to have subdued the Sapta Mālava countries up to the Himālaya Mountains. This suggests that there were as many as seven countries called Mālava (cf. also Rice, Mysore and Coorg, 46). These were probably: (1) The country of the 'Mālavas' in the Western Ghats (Kanarese Districts, p. 569), (2) Mo-la-po (Mālavaka-āhāra of Valabhi grants) on the Mahi governed by the Maitrakas, (3) Avanti in the wider sense of the term ruled by the Kaśachchuris or Kalachuris of the Abhona plates (sixth century) and by a Brāhmaṇa family in the time of Mādhava Gupta were appointed to wait upon the princes Rājya-varḍhana and Harsha of Thānēsar. From the Aphsaḍ inscription of Ādityasena we learn that the fame of the father of Mādhava Gupta, the associate of Harsha,¹ marked with honour of victory in war over Susthitavarman, doubtless a king of Kāmarūpa, was constantly sung on the banks of the river Lohitya or Brahmaputra. This indicates that even in or about A.D. 600 (the time of Prabhākara-varḍhana) the sway of kings bearing the name Gupta extended from "Mālava" to the Brahmaputra.²

In the sixth century Gupta suzerainty was no doubt successively challenged by the Huns and their conquerors belonging to the Mandasor and Maukhari families. In Hsien Tsang the Chinese pilgrim, (4) Pūrva Mālava (round Bhilsa), (5) District round Prayāga, Kauśāmbī and Fatehpur in U. P. (Smith, EHI, 4th ed., p. 350n.; IHQ, 1931, 150f.; cf. JRAS, 1903, 561). (6) part of eastern Rājputāna, (7) Cis-Sutlej districts of the Pañjāb together with some Himālayan territory. The later Guptas probably held (4) and (5) and, at times, Magadha as well. The Bhāgavata Purāṇa (xii. 1. 36) whose date is not probably far removed from that of the later Guptas, associates Mālava with Arbuda (Abu) and distinguishes it from Avanti. The rulers of Mālava and Avanti are also distinguished from each other by Rājasekhara in his Viddhaśāla bhañjikā, Act IV (p. 121 of Jivānanda Vidyāsāgara's edition). Early in the seventh century the Guptas seem to have lost Eastern Mālwa to the Kaṭachchuris. In the Vadner plates issued from Vidiśā (Besnagar) in or about A. D. 608, a Kaṭachchuri king, Śaṅkaragaṇa receives epithets that are palpably borrowed from the Allahabad Praśasti of Samudra Gupta. The overthrow of the Kaṭachchuris was effected by the early Chalukyas of Badami and South Gujarāt. Fleet points out (CII, 14) that three of the epithets of Samudra Gupta are applied to the Chalukya chieftain Vijayarāja in the Kaira grant of the year 394 (IA, VII, 248.) Ādityasena of the later Gupta family, who ruled in the second half of the seventh century A. D., seems to be referred to in Nepalese inscriptions as 'King of Magadha.' Magadha, now replaced Eastern Mālwa as the chief centre of Gupta power.

1 Cf. Hoernle in JRAS, 1903, 561.

2 An allusion to the later Guptas seems to occur in the Kādambarī, Verse 10, of Bāṇa which says that the lotus feet of Kubera, the poet's great-grandfather, were worshipped by many a Gupta :—

Babhūva Vātsyāyana vanīśa saṁbhavo dviḥ jagadgitagūṇo' granīḥ satām aneka Guptārchita pāda paṅkajaḥ Kubera nāmānīśa iṣa Svayambhuvah.

the first half of the seventh century the Guptas lost Vidiśā to the Kaṭachchuris and their power in the Ganges Valley was overshadowed by that of Harsha. But, after the death of the great Kanauj monarch, the Gupta empire was sought to be revived by Ādityasēna, son of Mādhava Gupta, who "ruled the whole earth up to the shores of the oceans," performed the Asvamedha and other great sacrifices and assumed the titles of Parama-bhaṭṭāraka and Mahārājādhirāja.

SECTION II. PURU GUPTA AND NARASIMHA GUPTA BĀLĀDITYA.

We shall now proceed to give an account of Skanda Gupta's successors. The immediate successor of the great emperor seems to have been his brother Puru Gupta. The existence of this king was unknown till the discovery of the Bhitari seal of Kumāra Gupta II in 1889, and its publication by Smith and Hoernle.¹ The seal describes Puru Gupta as the son of Kumāra I by the queen Anantadevī, and does not mention Skanda Gupta. The mention of Puru Gupta immediately after Kumāra with the prefix tat-pād-ānudyāta "meditating on, or attached to, the feet of" (Kumāra), does not necessarily prove that Puru Gupta was the immediate successor of his father, and a contemporary and rival of his brother or half-brother Skanda Gupta.² In the Manahali grant Madanapāla is described as Śrī-Rāmapāla-Deva-pād-ānudyāta, although he was preceded by his elder brother Kumārapāla. In Kielhorn's Northern Inscription No. 39, Vijayapāla is described as the successor of Kshitipāla, although he was preceded by his brother Devapāla.³

1 JASB, 1889 pp. 84-105.

2 The omission of Skanda's name in the Bhitari seal of his brother's grandson does not necessarily imply that the relations between him and Puru's family were unfriendly as suggested by Mr. R. D. Banerji (cf. Annals of the Bhand. Ins., 1918-19, pp. 74-75). The name of Putakeśin II is omitted in an inscription of his brother and Yuvarāja Vishṇuvardhana (Sātārā grant, Ind. Ant., 1890 pp. 227f). The name of Bhoja II of the Imperial Pratihāra dynasty is not mentioned in the Partabgarh Inscription of his nephew Mahendrapāla II, but it is mentioned in an inscription of his brother Vināyakapāla, the father of Mahendrapāla. Besides, there was no custom prohibiting the mention of the name of a rival uncle or brother. Maṅgaleśa and Govinda II are mentioned in the inscriptions of their rivals and their descendants. On the other hand even an ancestor of a reigning king was sometimes omitted, e. g., Dharapaṭṭa is omitted in his son's inscription (Kielhorn, N. Ins., No. 464).

3 Kielhorn, Ins. No. 31.

Smith and Allan have shown that Skanda ruled over the whole empire including the eastern and the central as well as many of the western provinces. He may have lost some of his districts in the Far West. But the coin-types of the successors of Kumāra Gupta, with the exception of Skanda Gupta and Budha Gupta, show that none of them could have held sway in the lost territories of Western India. Epigraphic and numismatic evidence clearly indicate that there was no room for a rival Mahārājādhirāja in Northern India including Bihār and Bengal during the reign of Skanda Gupta. He was a man of mature years at the time of his death cir. A.D. 467.¹ His brother and successor Puru Gupta, too, must have been an old man at that time. It is, therefore, not at all surprising that he had a very short reign and died some time before A.D. 473 when his grandson Kumāra Gupta II was ruling. The name of Puru Gupta's queen has been read by various scholars as Śrī Vatsadevi, Vainyadevi or Śrī Chandradevi.² She was the mother of Narasimha Gupta Bālāditya.

The coins of Puru Gupta are of the heavy Archer type apparently belonging to the eastern provinces of the empire of his predecessors.³ Some of the coins hitherto attributed to him have the reverse legend Śrī Vikramah⁴ and possible traces of the fuller title of Vikramāditya. Allan identifies him with king Vikramāditya of Ayodhyā,

1 When sons succeed a father or mother after a prolonged reign they are usually well advanced in years. In the case of Skanda Gupta we know that already in A.D. 455 he was old enough to lead the struggle against all the enemies of his house and empire in succession.

2 Ep. Ind., XXI, 77; ASI, AR, 1934-35, 63.

3 Allan, pp. lxxx, xcvi.

4 Mr. S. K. Sarasvatī attributes these coins to Budha Gupta (Indian Culture, I, 692). This view, however, is not accepted by Prof. Jagan Nath (Summaries of paper submitted to the 13th. All India Oriental Conference, Nagpur, 1946, Sec. IX p. 11). According to Mr. Jagan Nath the reading is definitely Puru and not Budha. As to the title Vikramāditya, see Allan, p. cxxii.

father of Bālāditya, who was a patron of Buddhism through the influence of Vasubandhu. The importance of this identification lies in the fact that it proves that the immediate successors of Skanda Gupta had a capital at Ayodhyā probably till the rise of the Maukharis. If the spurious Gayā plate is to be believed Ayodhyā was the seat of a Gupta jaya-skandhāvāra, or 'camp of victory,' as early as the time of Samudra Gupta. The principal capital of Bālāditya and his successors appears to have been Kāśī.¹

The identification proposed by Allan also suggests that Puru Gupta could not have flourished much later than 472 A.D., for a Chinese history of the Indian patriarchs belonging to that year mentions "Ba-su-ban-da."²

The evidence of the Bharsar hoard seems to show that a king styled Prakāśāditya came shortly after Skanda Gupta. Prakāśāditya may be regarded as possibly a biruda or secondary epithet of Puru Gupta or of one of his immediate successors. Even if we think with Allan that Puru had the title Vikramāditya there is no inherent improbability in his having an additional Āditya title. That the same king might have two "Āditya" names is proved by the cases of Skanda Gupta (Vikramāditya and Kramāditya) and Śilāditya Dharmāditya of Valabhī. But the identification of Prakāśāditya still remains sub judice. His coins are of the combined horseman and lion-slayer type. The "horseman type" was associated with the southern provinces of the empire of the Guptas³ and the lion-slayer type with the north.⁴

1 CII, 285.

2 JRAS, 1905, 40. This is now confirmed by the seal which represents Puru as the father of Budha (476-95.)

3 Allan, p. lxxxvi.

4 Ibid, xci.

Puru Gupta seems to have been succeeded by his son Narasimha Gupta Bālāditya. This king has been identified with king Bālāditya whose troops are represented by Hiuen Tsang as having imprisoned the tyrant Mibirakula. It has been overlooked that Hiuen Tsang's Bālāditya was the immediate successor of Tathāgata Gupta,¹ who was himself the immediate successor of Bud(d)ha Gupta,² whereas Narasimha Gupta Bālāditya was the son and successor of Puru Gupta who in his turn was the son of Kumāra Gupta I and the successor of Skanda Gupta. The son and successor of Hiuen Tsang's Bālāditya was Vajra³ while the son and successor of Narasimha was Kumāra Gupta II. It is obvious that the conqueror of Mihirakula was not the son of Puru Gupta but an altogether different individual.⁴ The existence of several kings of the eastern part of the Madhyadēśa having the biruda Bālāditya is proved by the Sārnāth Inscription of Prakāṭāditya.⁵ Narasiṃha Gupta must have died in or about the year

1 Life of Hiuen Tsang, p. 111. Si-yu-ki, II, p. 168.

2 Fo-to-ki-to. Beal, Fleet and Watters render the term by Buddha Gupta, a name unknown to imperial Gupta epigraphy. The synchronism of his second successor Bālāditya with Mihirakula proves that Budha Gupta is meant. We have other instances of corruption of names. e.g. Skanda is transformed into Skandha in several Purāṇic lists of the so-called Andhra dynasty.

3 Yuan Chwang II, p. 165.

4 Drs. Bhaṭṭasālī and Basāk, who uphold the identification of Hiuen Tsang's Bālāditya with the son of Puru Gupta do not apparently attach due weight to the evidence of the Life of Hiuen Tsang, p. 111, which, as we shall see later on, is corroborated by the combined testimony of the Sārnāth inscription of Prakāṭāditya and the Ārya-Mañju-śrī-mūla-kalpa. The evidence of these documents suggests that Hiuen Tsang's Bālāditya was identical with Bhānu Gupta and was the father of Prakāṭāditya and Vajra.

5 CII, p. 285. A Bālāditya is mentioned in the Nālandā Stone Inscription of Yaśovarman (Ep. Ind., 1929, Jan., 38) and also a seal (Śrī Nālandāyām Śrī Bālāditya Gandhakuḍī, MASI, 66, 38).

A.D. 473. He was succeeded by his son Kumāra Gupta II Kramāditya by queen Mitradevi.¹

The coins of Narasiṁha and his successor belong to two varieties of the Archer type. One class of these coins was, according to Allan, apparently intended for circulation in the lower Ganges valley, and the other may have been issued in the upper provinces. The inclusion of Eastern India within the dominions of Bālāditya (Bālākhya) and Kumāra (II) is vouched for by the Ārya-Maṇjuśrī-mūla-kalpa.²

1 It is suggested in Ep. Ind., xxi, 77 (clay seals of Nālandā) and ASI, AR, 1934-35, 63, that the name of Kumāra Gupta's mother has to be read as Mitradevi and not Śrīmatī devī or Lakshmīdevī.

2 — Ganapati Śāstri's ed. p. 630. Cf. Jayaswal, Imperial History, 35.

Bālākhya nāmasau nṛpatir bhavitā Pūrva-deśakah tasyāpareṇa nṛpatiḥ Gauḍāṇām prabhaviṣṭavah Kumārākhya nāmataḥ proktaḥ so'pi atyanta dharmavān.

SECTION III. KUMĀRA GUPTA II AND VISHNUGUPTA.

Kumāra Gupta II of the Bhitari seal, son of Narasiṃha Gupta, has been identified with Kramāditya of certain coins of the Archer type that are closely connected with the issues of Narasiṃha Bālāditya. He is also identified with king Kumāra Gupta mentioned in the Sārnāth Buddhist Image Inscription of the year 154 G. E., i.e., A.D. 473-74.¹ Drs. Bhaṭṭasālī, Basāk and some other scholars think that the Kumāra Guptas of the Bhitari seal and the Sārnāth epigraph were distinct individuals. The former places Kumāra, son of Narasiṃha, long after A.D. 500.² But his theory is based upon the doubtful identification of Narasiṃha with the conqueror of Mihirakula. According to Dr. Basāk Kumāra of the Sārnāth Inscription was the immediate successor of Skanda. In his opinion there were two rival Gupta lines ruling simultaneously, one consisting of Skanda, Kumāra of Sārnāth and Budha, the other comprising Puru, Narasiṃha and his son Kumāra of the Bhitari seal. But there is not the slightest evidence of a partition of the Gupta empire in the latter half of the fifth century A.D. On the contrary inscriptions and coins prove that both Skanda and Budha ruled over the whole empire from Bengal to the West. We have already seen that according to the traditional account of the Ārya-Maṇjūsri-mūla-kalpa the kingdom of Bālākhyā, i.e., Bālāditya and his successor Kumāra embraced the Purva-deśa (Eastern India) including Gauḍa (Western and part of Northern Bengal).³ How 1 See ASI, AR, 1914-15, 124, Hindusthān Review, Jan., 1918, Ann. Bhand. Inst., 1918-19, 67 ff. and JBORS, iv, 344, 412, for the views of Venis, Pathak, Panday, Pannalall and others.

2 Dacca Review, May and June, 1920, pp. 54-57.

3 Ārya-Maṇjūsri-mūla-kalpa, G. Śāstrī's ed., pp. 630 f.

IDENTITY OF KUMĀRA GUPTA OF SĀRNĀTH 591

can we reconcile the rule of these kings with the contemporary sovereignty of a rival line represented by Skanda and Budha?¹ There is no cogent reason for doubting the identity of Kumāra of the Bhitari seal with his namesake of the Sarnāth inscription.

Kumāra II's reign must have terminated in or about the year A.D. 476-77, the first known date of Budha Gupta.² The reigns of Puru, Narasimha and Kumāra II appear to be abnormally short, amounting together to only ten years (A.D. 467-77). This is by no means a unique case. In Veṅgī three Eastern Chālukya monarchs, viz., Vijayāditya IV, his son Ammarāja I, and Ammarāja's

1 The seal of Budha Gupta (MASB, No. 66, p. 64) proves conclusively that Budha, far from belonging to a rival line, was actually a son of Puru Gupta. It also negatives the late date for Puru Gupta suggested by Dr. Bhattasālī.

2 One of the successors of Kumāra (II), son of Bālāditya, is according to the Ārya-Maṇjuśrī-mūla-kalpa, a prince styled Ukārākhyā. That appellation may according to Jayaswal apply to Prakāśāditya, for Allan finds the letters ru or u on his coins. But the identification of a prince whose designation was u, U(kārākhyā), with Budha Gupta (Jayaswal, An Imperial History of India, 38), does not seem to be plausible. The passage in the Ārya-Maṇjuśrī-mūla-kalpa suggests a name like Upagupta or Upendra. Though there is no direct epigraphic evidence for the name Upagupta, the existence of such a prince does not seem to be improbable in view of the fact that an Upaguptā is mentioned in Maukhari records as the mother of Išānavarman [Aśīrgaḍh (Fleet, CII, p. 220) and Nālandā (Ep. Ind., XXI, p. 74) seals]. Cf. Bhānu Gupta and Bhānu Guptā, Harsha Gupta and Harsha Guptā, Mahāsena Gupta and Mahāsena Guptā. On the analogy of these cases it is possible that there was a prince named Upagupta, apparently the brother of Upa Guptā. If this surmise be correct Upagupta may have to be placed in the same period as the mother of Išānavarman, i.e., in the first half of the sixth century A.D., sometime after Budha Gupta. If u is the initial of Upendra (Vishṇu or Kṛishṇa) and not of Upagupta, it may refer to Vishṇu Gupta or to Kṛishṇa Gupta, just as Somākhyā has reference to the Gauda king Śāsāṅka. The existence of a son of Kumāra Gupta II named Mahārājādhirāja Sri Vishṇu Gupta has recently been disclosed by a fragmentary seal at Nālandā (Ep. Ind. XXVI. 235; I. H. Q. XIX. 19). It is difficult in the present state of our knowledge to say whether he was the immediate successor of his father, or had to wait till the death of his great uncle Budha Gupta. Those who place him and his father after Budha Gupta, have to dissociate Kumāra of the Bhitari and Nālandā seals from the homonymous prince of Sarnāth. This is not improbable but must await future discoveries for confirmation.

son, another Vijayāditya, ruled only for seven years and six and a half months.¹ In Kaśmīra six kings, Śūravarman I, Pārtha, Śambhuvardhana, Chakravarman, Unmattāvanti and Śūravarman II, ruled within six years (A.D. 933-39); and three generations of kings, viz., Yaśaskara, his uncle Varṇa, and his son Saṃgrāmadeva ruled for ten years (A.D. 939-49). A fragmentary seal discovered at Nālandā refer to his son Vishṇu Gupta who is probably to be identified with Chandrāditya of the coins.

¹ Hultzsch, SII, Vol. I, p. 46.

SECTION IV. BUDEHA GUPTA.

For Budha Gupta, now known to have been a son of Puru Gupta¹ we have a number of dated inscriptions and coins which prove that he ruled for about twenty years (A.D. 477-c. 495).

Two copper-plate inscriptions discovered in the village of Dāmodarpur in the district of Dinājpur, testify to the fact that Budha Gupta's empire included Puṇḍravardhana bhukti (roughly North Bengal) which was governed by his viceroys (Uparika Mahārāja) Brahmādatta and Jayādatta.² The Sārnāth inscription of A.D. 476-77 proves his possession of the Kāśī country. In A.D. 484-85 the erection of a dhvaja-stambha or flag staff in honour of Janārdana, i.e., Viṣṇu, by the Mahārāja Mātrivishṇu, ruler of Eran, and his brother Dhanyaviṣṇu, while the Bhūpati (King) Budha Gupta was reigning, and Mahārāja Surasīmichandra was governing the land between the Kālindī (Jumna) and the Narmadā, (Nerbudda) indicates that Budha Gupta's dominions included part of Central India as well as Kāśī and North Bengal.

The coins of this emperor are dated in the year A.D. c. 495. They continue the peacock-type of the Gupta silver coinage that was meant, according to Allan, for circulation in the central part of the empire.³ Their

1 Seal of Budha Gupta (MASB, No. 66, p. 64.)

2 To the reign of this Gupta king belongs also probably the Pāhāḍpur (ancient Somapura) (Rājshāhi District) plate of A. D. 478-79 (Mod. Rev., 1931, 150; Prabāsi, 1338, 671; Ep. Ind. XX, 59 ff.) and also a copper-plate of A.D. 488-9 (Ep. Ind. xxiii-52), originally found at Nandapura (Monghyr District). For a possible reference to Budha Gupta in Purāṇic literature, see Pro. of the Seventh Or. Conf., 576.

3 Cf. also Mahābhārata, ii. 32. 4, legend is the claim to be lord of the earth and to have won heaven,—found on the coins of Kumāra Gupta I and Skanda Gupta.

SECTION V. SUCCESSORS OF BUDHA GUPTA.

According to the Life of Hiuen Tsang Budha Gupta was succeeded by Tathāgata Gupta, after whom Bālāditya succeeded to the empire.¹ At this period the supremacy of the Guptas in Central India was challenged by the Hun king Toramāṇa. We have seen that in A.D. 484-85 a Mahārāja named Mātrivishṇu ruled in the Airikīṇa Vishaya (Eran in Eastern Mālwa, now in the Sangor District of the Central Provinces) as a vassal of the emperor Budha Gupta. But after his death his younger brother Dhanyavishṇu transferred his allegiance to Toramāṇa. The success of the Huns in Central India was, however, short-lived. In 510-11 we find a general named Goparāja fighting by the side of a Gupta king at Eran and king Hastin of the neighbouring province of Dabhālā to the south-east of Eran acknowledging the sovereignty of the Guptas. In A. D. 518 the suzerainty of the Guptas is acknowledged in the Tripurī vishaya (Jubbulpore District). In the year 528-29 the Gupta sway was still acknowledged by the Parivrājaka-Mahārāja of Dabhālā. The Parivrājakas Hastin and Samikshobha seem to have been the bulwarks of the Gupta empire in the northern part of the present Central Provinces. The Harsha-charita of Bāṇa recognises the possession of Mālava, possibly Eastern Mālwa, by the Guptas as late as the time of Prabhākara-var dhana (cir. A.D. 600). There can be no doubt that the expulsion of the Huns from parts of Central India was final.² The recovery of the Central Provinces was probably

1 Beal, Si-yu-ki, II, p. 168 ; the Life, p. 111.

2 For the survival of the Huns in the Malwa region, See Rp. Ind. xxiii. 102.

effected in the time of Bālāditya whose troops are represented by Hiuen Tsang as having imprisoned Mihirakula, the son and successor of Toramāṇa, and set him at liberty at the request of the Queen Mother. The Hun king had to be content with a "small kingdom in the north."¹ It is not improbable that Bālāditya was a biruda of the "glorious Bhānu Gupta, the bravest man on the earth, a mighty king, equal to Pārtha" along with whom Goparāja went to Eran and having fought a "very famous battle" died shortly before A.D. 510-11.²

Mihirakula was finally subjugated by the *Janendra*³ Yaśodharman of Mandaśor some time before A.D. 533.

1 Si-yu-ki, p. 171.

2 In a Nālandā Stone Inscription (Ep. Ind., XX, 43-45) Bālāditya is described as a king of irresistible valour and vanquisher of all foes. The last of the Bālādityas mentioned in a Sārnāth Inscription (Fleet, CII, 285 f.) had a son named Prakaṣāditya by his wife Dhavalā. In the Ārya-Mañjuśrī-mūla-kalpa (ed. G. Śāstri, p. 637 ff.) Pukārākhya (Prakaṣāditya) is represented as the son of Bhakārākhya (Bhānu Gupta). Buddhist tradition thus corroborates the identification, first proposed in these pages, of Bālāditya with Bhānu Gupta. Cf. now Jayaswal, An Imperial History of India, pp. 47, 53. An inscription found at Guṇāighara near Comilla and certain seals at Nālandā disclose the existence of a king named (Vai)nya Gu(pta) who ruled in or about A. D. 507 and must have been also a contemporary of Mihirakula or of his father (Prabāsi, 1338, 675; IHQ, 1930, 53, 561). The seals give him the style Mahārājādhirāja (ASI. AR, 1930-34, Pt. I, 230, 249; MASI, 66, 67; IHQ, XIX, 275) and suggest relationship with the imperial Guptas. Dr. D. C. Ganguly identifies him with the Dvādaśāditya of coins (IHQ, 1933, 784, 989). But owing to damaged condition of the Nālandā seal his parentage cannot be ascertained.

3 The ascription of the title of Vikramāditya to Yaśodharman of Mandaśor, and the representation of this chief as a ruler of Ujjain, the father of Śīlāditya of Mo-la-po and the father-in-law of Prabhākara-varḍhana are absolutely unwarranted. According to Father Heras (JBORS, 1927, March, 8-9) the defeat of Mihirakula at the hands of Bālāditya took place after the Hun king's conflict with Yaśodharman. It should, however, be remembered that at the time of the war with Bālāditya Mihirakula was a paramount sovereign to whom the king of Magadha had been tributary, and with whom he dared not fight, being only anxious to conceal his poor person (Beal, Si-yu-ki, Vol. I, p. 168). This is hardly possible after the Janendra of Mandaśor had compelled the Hun "to pay respect to his two feet". The victory of Bālāditya over Mihirakula was certainly not decisive. The "loss of the royal estate" was only temporary, and the tyrant soon placed himself on the throne of Kāśmīra and conquered

Line 6 of the Mandasor Stone Pillar inscription¹ leaves the impression that in the time of Yaśodharman Mihirakula was the king of a Himālayan country ("small kingdom in the north"), i.e., Kāśmīra and that neighbourhood, who was compelled "to pay respect to the two feet" of the victorious Janendra probably when the latter carried his arms to "the mountain of snow the tablelands of which are embraced by the Gaṅgā."

Yaśodharman claims to have extended his sway as far as the Lauhitya or Brahmaputra in the east. It is not improbable that he defeated and killed Vajra, the son of Bālāditya,² and extinguished the viceregal family of the Dattas of Puṇḍra-vardhana. Hiuen Tsang mentions a king of Central India as the successor of Vajra. The Dattas, who governed Puṇḍra-vardhana from the time of Kumāra Gupta I, disappear about this time. But Yaśodharman's success must have been short-lived,

Gandhāra (Beal, II, 171). To the court-poet of Yaśodharman Mihirakula was pre-eminently a king of the Himālayan region. This is clear from the following passage which was misunderstood by Fleet whose interpretation has been followed by Father Heras (p. 8 n) :—

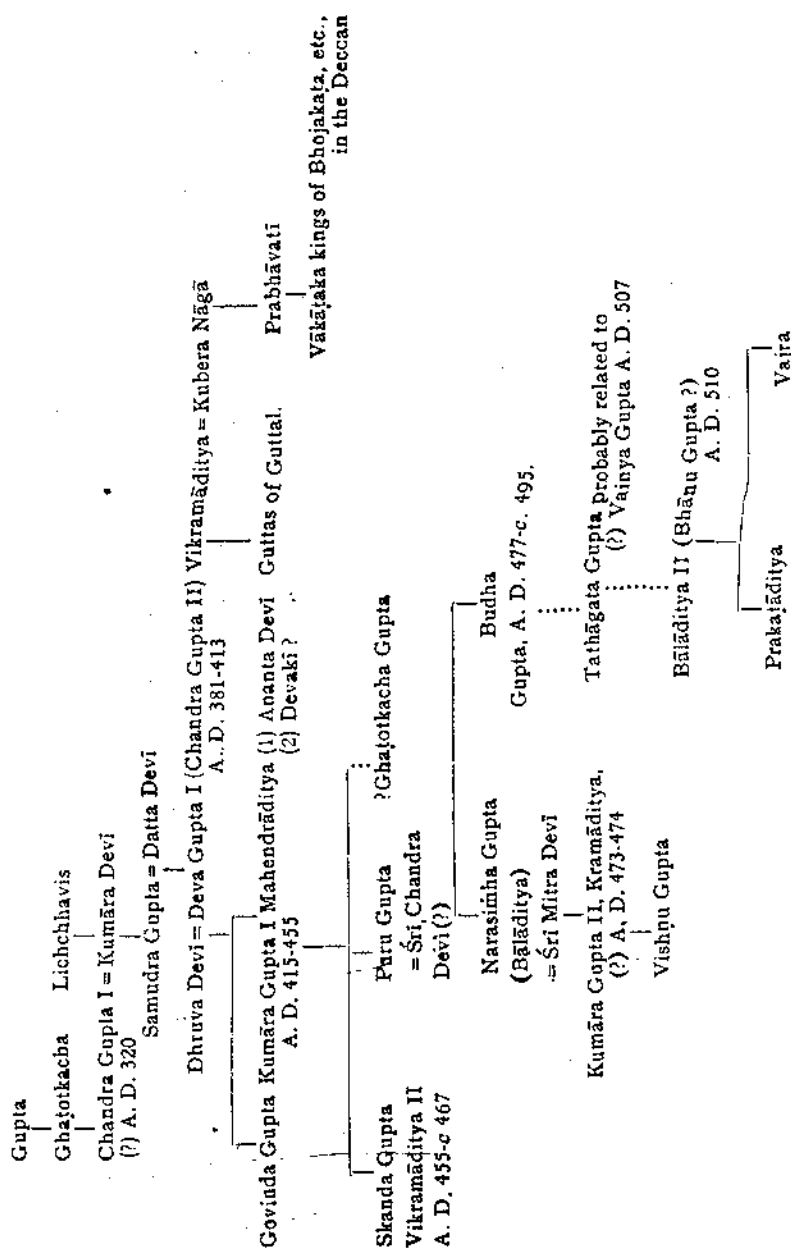

"He (Yaśodharman) to whose feet respect was paid...by even that (famous) king Mihirakula, whose head had never previously been brought into the humility of obeisance to any other save (the god) Sthānu (and) embraced by whose arms the mountain of snow falsely prides itself as being styled an inaccessible fortress" (Kielhorn in Ind. Ant., 1885, p. 219). Kielhorn's interpretation was accepted by Fleet. [The statement that Mihirakula's head 'had never been brought into the humility of obeisance to any other save (the god) Sthānu' shows that he refused to do homage to Bālāditya, and probably accounts for the order, given for his execution by that king.]

1 CII, pp. 146-147; Jayaswal, The Historical Position of Kalki, p. 9.

2 If the identification of Bālāditya with Bhānu Gupta first proposed in these pages is correct, his son Vajra may be identified with Vakārākhyā, the younger brother (anuja) of the Prakaṣāditya of the Sārnāth Inscription (Fleet, CII, 284 ff.)—the Pakārākhyā of the Ārya-Mañjuśrī-mūla-kalpa who is represented as the son of Bhakārākhyā, i.e., Bhānu Gupta (ed. G. Śāstrī, pp. 637-44). Prakaṣāditya is represented in the inscription named above as the son of Bālāditya by Dhavalā. Cf. now Jayaswal, An Imperial History of India, pp. 47, 53, 56, 63.

because in A.D. 543-44, ten years after the Mandaśor inscription which mentions the Janendra Yaśodharman as victorious, the son (?) and viceroy of a Gupta parama-bhaṭṭāraka mahārājādhirāja prithivīpati, 'supreme sovereign, king of kings, lord of the earth,' and not any official of the Central Indian Janendra, was governing the Puṇḍra-vardhana-bhukti, a province which lay between the Indian interior and the Laubhitya.

THE EARLY IMPERIAL GUPTAS.

SECTION VI. THE LINE OF KRISHNA GUPTA.

The name of the Gupta emperor in the Dāmodarpur plate of A.D. 543-44 is unfortunately lost. The Apsad inscription, however, discloses the names of a number of "Gupta" kings,¹ the fourth of whom, Kumāra Gupta (III), was a contemporary of Īśānavarman Maukhari who is known from Harāhā inscription to have been ruling in A.D. 554.² Kumāra Gupta III, and his three predecessors, viz., Kṛishṇa, Harsha and Jivita, should probably be placed in the period between A.D. 510, the date of Bhānu Gupta, and 554, the date of Īśānavarman. It is possible, but by no means certain, that one of these kings is identical with the Gupta emperor mentioned in the 1 Although the rulers, the names of most of whom ended in—gupta, mentioned in the Apsad and connected contemporary epigraphs, who ruled over the provinces in the heart of the early Gupta empire, are called "Guptas" for the sake of convenience, their relationship with the early Gupta-kula or Gupta-vamśa is not known. It is, however, to be noted that some of them (e.g., Kumāra Gupta and Deva Gupta), bore names that are found in the earlier family, and Kṛishṇa Gupta, the founder of the line, has been identified by some with Govinda Gupta, son of Chandra Gupta II. But the last suggestion is hardly acceptable, because Govinda must have flourished more than half a century before Kṛishṇa Gupta. And it is surprising that the panegyrists of Kṛishṇa Gupta's descendants should have omitted all references to the early Guptas if their patrons could really lay claim to such an illustrious ancestry. In the Apsad inscription the dynasty is described simply as Sad-vamśa 'of good lineage.' The designation Gupta, albeit not "Early Imperial Gupta," is possibly justified by the evidence of Bāṇa. The Guptas and the Gupta Kulaputra mentioned in Bāṇa's Kādambarī and Harsha-charita may refer to the family of Kṛishṇa, if not to some hitherto unknown descendants of the early imperial line. One of the princes of the early Gupta line, Ghaṭotkacha Gupta of the Tumain inscription is known to have ruled over Eastern Malwa and it is not impossible that Kṛishṇa Gupta was, in some way, connected with him. We must, however, await future discoveries to clear up the point.

2 H. Śāstri, Ep. Ind., XIV, pp. 110 ff.

Dāmodarpur plate of A.D. 543-44.¹ The absence of high-sounding titles like Mahārājādhirāja or Parama-bhaṭṭāraka in the *Śloka*s or verses of the Aphaṣaḍ inscription does not necessarily prove that the kings mentioned there were petty chiefs. No such titles are attached to the name of Kumāra I in the Mandasor inscription, or to the name of Budha in the Eraṇ inscription. On the other hand the queen of Mādhava Gupta, one of the least powerful kings mentioned in the Aphaṣaḍ inscription, is called Parama-bhaṭṭārikā and Mahādevī in the Dēo Baraṇārka epigraph.

Regarding Kṛṣṇa Gupta we know very little. The Aphaṣaḍ inscription describes him as a hero whose arm played the part of a lion, in bruising the foreheads of the array of the rutting elephants of (his) haughty enemy (driṭṭārāti), (and) in being victorious by (its) prowess over countless foes. The driṭṭārāti against whom he had to fight may have been Yaśodharman. The next king Deva Śrī Harsha Gupta had to engage in terrible contests with those who were "averse to the abode of the goddess of fortune being with (him, her) own lord." There were wounds from many weapons on his chest. The name of the enemies, who tried to deprive him of his rightful possessions, are not given. Harsha's son Jivita Gupta I probably succeeded in re-establishing the power of his family in the territory lying between the Himālayas and the sea, apparently in Eastern India. "The very terrible scorching fever (of fear) left not (his) haughty foes, even though they stood on seaside shores that were cool with the flowing and ebbing currents of water, (and) were covered with the branches of plantain trees severed by the trunks of elephants roaming through the lofty groves of palmyra palms; (or) even though they stood on (that) mountain (Himālaya) which is cold with the water of the rushing and waving torrents full of snow." The "haughty foes" on seaside shores were probably the Gauḍas who had already launched into a career of conquest about this time and who are described as living on the sea shore (samudra-āśraya) in the Harāhā inscription of A. D. 554.¹ The other enemies may have included ambitious Kumārāmātyas like Nandana of the Amauna plate.

1 Mr. Y. R. Gupte (Ind. Hist. Journal) reads the name of Kumāra in the inscription of A. D. 543-44, but he identifies him with the son of Narasiṃha Gupta. The ruler whose name is missing may represent one or other of the "Gupta" lines already known to scholars or some new line. Cf. the cases of Vainya Gupta and the princes mentioned on pp. 214-15 of Ep. Ind. xx, Appendix.

The next king, Kumāra Gupta III, had to encounter a sea of troubles. The Gauḍas were issuing from their "proper realm" which was Western Bengal as it bordered on the sea and included Kaṇṇasuvārṇa² and Rāḍhāpuri.³ The lord of the Andhras who had thousands of three-fold rutting elephants, and the Śūlikas who had an army of countless galloping horses, were powers to be reckoned with. The Andhra king was probably Mādhava-varman (I, Janāśraya) of the Polamuru plates belonging to the Viśṇukunḍin family who "crossed the river Godāvari with the desire to conquer the eastern region"⁴ and performed eleven horse-sacrifices. The Śūlikas were probably the Chalukyas.⁵ In the Mahākūṭa pillar

1 Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 110 et seq.

2 M. Chakravarti, JASB, 1908, p. 274.

3 Prabodha-chandrodaya, Act II.

4 Dubreuil, AHD, p. 92 and D. C. Sircar, IHQ, 1933, 276 ff.

5 In the Bṛihat-Saṃhitā, IX. 15; XIV. 8, the Śūlikas and Śaulikas are associated with Aparānta (N. Koṅkan), Vanavāsi (Kanara) and Vidarbha (Berar). In Bṛih. Sam., IX. 21; X. 7, XVI. 35, however, they are associated with Gandhāra and Vokkāṇa (Wakhan). A branch of the people may have dwelt in the north-west. In JRS, 1912, 128, we have a reference to Kulastambha of the Śulki family. Tārānātha (Ind. Ant., IV, 364) places the kingdom of "Śulik" beyond "Togara" (Ter in the Deccan?).

inscription the name appears as Chalikya. In the Gujarāt records we find the forms Solaki and Solāṅki. Śūlika may have been another dialectic variant. The Mahākūṭa pillar inscription tells us that in the sixth century A.D., Kīrtivarman I of the "Chalikya" dynasty gained victories over the kings of Vaṅga, Aṅga, Magadha, etc. His father is known to have performed the Aśvamedha sacrifice, "the super-eminent touch-stone to test the might of warriors conquering the world and an indication of the conquest of all the warriors." Prince Kīrtivarman may have been entrusted with the guardianship of the sacrificial steed that had to roam about for a year in the territories of the rulers to whom a challenge was thrown by the performer of the sacrifice.

A new power was rising in the Upper Ganges Valley which was destined to engage in a death grapple with the Guptas for the mastery of Northern India. This was the Mukhara or Maukhari¹ power. The Maukharis claimed descent from the hundred sons whom king Aśvapati got from Vaivasvata, i.e., Yama² (not Manu). The family consisted of several distinct groups. The stone inscriptions of one group have been discovered in the Jaunpur and Bārā Bankī districts of the United Provinces, while lithic records of another group have been discovered in the Gayā district of Bihār. A third family has left inscription at Baḍvā in the Kotah state in Rājputāna. The Maukharis of Gayā, namely, Yajña-varman, Śārdūlavarman and Anantavarman were a

1 The family was called both Mukhara and Maukhari. "Soma-Sūrya-vaiśā-viva Pushpabhūti (sic) Mukhara Vaiśau", "sakalabhuvana namaskṛito Maukhari vaiśah" (Harsha-charita, Parāb's ed., pp. 141, 146). Cf. also CII, p. 229.

2 MBh., III. 296. 38 ff. The reference is undoubtedly to the hundred sons that Aśvapati obtained as a boon from Yama on the intercession of his daughter Sāvitrī. It is surprising that some writers still identify the Vaivasvata of the Maukhari record with Manu.

fendatory family. Śārdūla is expressly called sāmanta chūdāmaṇi, 'crest-jewel of vassal chiefs' in the Barābar Hill Cave Inscription of his son.¹ The Baḍvā Maukharis held the office of general or military governor under some Prince of Western India in the third century A. D. The Maukharis of the United Provinces² probably also held a subordinate rank at first. The earliest princes of this family, viz., Harivarman, Āḍityavarman, and Īśvaravarman, were simply Mahārājas. Āḍityavarman's wife was Harsha Guptā, probably a sister of king Harsha Guptā. The wife of his son and successor Īśvaravarman was also probably a Gupta princess named Upa-Guptā. In the Harāhā inscription Īśānavarman, son of Īśvaravarman and Upa-Guptā,³ claims victories over the Andhras,⁴ the Śūlikas and the Gauḍas and is the first to assume the Imperial title of Mahārājādhirāja. It was this which probably brought him into conflict with king Kumāra

1 CII, p. 223. The connection of the Maukharis with Gayā is very old. This is proved by the clay seal with the inscription Mokhalīśa, or Mokhalīṇam (Fleet, CII, 14), to which attention has already been drawn above. A reference to the Mokharis seems also to occur in the Chandravalli Stone Inscription of the Kadamba king Mayūraśarman (Arch. Survey of Mysore, A. R. 1929, pp. 50 ff). Dr. Tripathi finds a possible reference in the Mahābhāṣya (JBORS, 1934, March). For the Baḍvā ins², see Ep. Ind., XXIII, 42 ff. (Altekar).

2 In literature the Maukhari of U. P. is associated with the city of Kanauj which may have been the capital at one time. Cf. C. V. Vaidya, Mediaeval Hindu India, I, pp. 9, 33; Aravamuthan, the Kaveri, the Maukharis and the Sangam Age, p. 101. Hsien Tsang, however, declares Kanauj to have been included within the realm of the House of Pushyabhūti even before Harsha. A Gupta noble was in possession of Kuśasthala (Kanauj) for some time after the death of Rājyavardhana and before the rise of Harsha. (Harsha-Charita. Parab's ed., pp. 226, 249).

3 Fleet, CII, 220.

4 The victory over the Andhras is also alluded to in the Jaunpur stone inscription (CII, p. 230) which, according to Fleet, also seems to refer to a conflict with Dhārā, the capital of Western Mālava (?). Dr. Basāk thinks that Dhārā in this passage refers to the edge of the sword (Hist. N. E. Ind., 109).

Gupta III.¹ Thus began a duel between the Maukharis and the Guptas which ended only when the latter with the help of the Gaudas wiped out the Maukhari power in the time of Grahavarman, brother-in-law of Harshavardhana.²

We have seen that Īśānavarman's mother and grandmother were probably Gupta princesses. The mother of Prabhākaravardhana, the other empire-builder of the second half of the sixth century, appears also to have been a Gupta princess. It seems that the Gupta marriages in this period were as efficacious in stimulating imperial ambitions³ as the Lichchhavi marriages of more ancient times.

Kumāra Gupta III claims to have "churned that formidable milk-ocean, the cause of the attainment of fortune, which was the army of the glorious Īśānavarman, a very moon among kings."⁴ This is not an empty boast, for the Maukhari records do not claim any victory over the Guptas. Kumāra Gupta III's funeral rites took place at Prayāga which probably formed a part of his dominions.

The son and successor of this king was Dāmodara Gupta. He continued the struggle with the Maukharis⁵ and fell fighting against them. "Breaking up the proudly stepping array of mighty elephants, belonging to the 1 Any one acquainted with the history of Europe knows that enumeration as I, II, III etc. need not imply that the kings in question belonged to the same dynasty.

2 The successors of Grahavarman may have survived as petty nobles. With them a "Later Gupta" king contracted a matrimonial alliance in the seventh century A. D.

3 Cf. Hoernle, JRAS, 1903, p. 557.

4 Aphaṣṭ Ins.

5 The Maukhari opponent of Dāmodara Gupta was either Sūryavarman or Śaravarman (both being sons of Īśānavarman), if not Īśānavarman himself. A Sūryavarman is described in the Sirpur stone inscription of Mahāśiva Gupta as "born in the unblemished family of the Varmans great on account of their ādhipatya (supremacy) over Magadha." If this Sūryavarman be identical with,

Maukhari, which had thrown aloft in battle the troops of the Hūṇas (in order to trample them to death), he became unconscious (and expired¹ in the fight)."

Dāmodara Gupta was succeeded by his son Mahāsena Gupta. He is probably the king of Mālava, possibly Eastern Mālwa, mentioned in the Harsha-charita, whose sons Kumāra Gupta and Mādhava Gupta were appointed to wait upon Rājya-varḍhana and Harsha-varḍhana by their father, king Prabhākara-varḍhana of the Pushyabhūti family of Śrikanṭha (Thānesar). The intimate relation between the family of Mahāsena Gupta and that of Prabhākara-varḍhana is proved by the Madhuban grant and the Sonpat copper seal inscription of Harsha which represent Mahāsena Guptā Devī as the mother of Prabhākara, and the Aphaṣ inscription of Ādityasena which alludes to the association of Mādhava Gupta, son of Mahāsena Gupta, with Harsha.

The Pushyabhūti alliance of Mahāsena Gupta was probably due to his fear of the rising power of the Maukharis.² The policy was eminently successful, and or a descendant of, Sūryavarman, the son of Išānavarman, then it is certain that for a time the supremacy of Magadha passed from the hands of the Guptas to that of the Maukharis. The Deo-Baraṇṇī Inscription (Shāhābad District) of Jivita Gupta II also suggests (CII, pp. 216-218) that the Maukharis Śarvavarman and Avantivarman held a considerable part of Magadha some time after Bālāditya-deva. After the loss of Magadha the later Guptas were apparently confined to "Mālava," till Mahāsena Gupta once more pushed his conquests as far as the Lauhitya.

1 Reference to Mahābhārata, XII. 98. 46-47; Raghuvamśa, VII. 53; Kāvya-darśa, II, 119; Rājatarangīṇī, I. 68. shows that the objections raised against the interpretation of Fleet are invalid. The significance of the touch of Surabadhūś as distinct from a human being, is entirely missed by a writer in Bhand. Com. Vol. 181, and a reviewer of Dr. Tripathi's History of Ancient India.

2 And perhaps of other aggressive states mentioned in the beginning of the fourth Uchchhvāsa of the Harsha-charita. The Lāṭas of that passage may have reference to the Kaṭachhuris who finally ousted the Guptas from Vidiśā in or about A. D. 608. The Kaṭachchuri (Kalachuri) dominions included the Lāṭa during his reign we do not hear of any struggle with that family. But a new danger threatened from the east. A strong monarchy was at this time established in Kāmarūpa by a line of princes who claimed descent from Bhagadatta. King Susthitavarman¹ of this family came into conflict with Mahāsenā Gupta and was defeated. "The mighty fame of Mahāsenā Gupta," says the Aphaṣṭ inscription, "marked with honour of victory in war over the illustrious Susthitavarman.....is still constantly sung on the banks of the river Lohitya."

Between Mahāsenā Gupta, the contemporary of Prabhākara-vardhana, and his younger or youngest son Mādhava Gupta, the contemporary of Harsha, we have to place a king named Deva Gupta II² who is mentioned by name in the Madhuban and Banskhera inscriptions of Harsha as the most prominent among the kings "who resembled wicked horses", who were all punished and restrained in their evil career by Rājya-vardhana. As the Gupta princes are uniformly connected with Mālava in the Harsha-charita there can be no doubt that the wicked Deva Gupta is identical with the wicked lord of Mālava who cut off Grahavarman Maukhari, and who was himself defeated "with ridiculous ease" by Rājya-vardhana.³ It is difficult country in the latter part of the sixth and the first decade of the seventh century A.D. (Dubreuil. A.H.D., 82).

1 See the Nidhanapur plates. A writer in the JRAS (1928) revives the theory that Susthitavarman was a Maukhari and not a king of Kāmarūpa. But no Maukhari king of that name is known. The association of Susthitavarman with the river Lohitya or Brahmaputra clearly shows that the king of that name mentioned in the Nidhanapur plates is meant.

2 The Emperor Chandra Gupta II was Deva Gupta I.

3 It is difficult to believe, as does a recent writer, that the Mālava antagonist of Grahavarman and Rājya-vardhana was Buddharāja of the Kalachuri (Kaṭach-churi) family. Had that been the case then it is rather surprising that a shadowy figure like Deva Gupta, and not Buddha-rāja, would be specially selected in the epigraphic records of the time of Harsha, for prominent notice among "the kings who resembled wicked horses," who received punishment at the hand of Rājya-vardhana. It is the 'Guptas' who are associated with Mālava in the Harsha- to determine the position of Deva Gupta in the dynastic list of the Guptas. He may have been the eldest son of Mahāsena Gupta, and an elder brother of Kumāra Gupta and Mādhava Gupta.¹ His name is omitted in the Aṃśad list of kings, just as the name of Skanda Gupta is omitted in the Bhītari list.

Shortly before his death, king Prabhākara-vardhana had given his daughter Rājyaśrī in marriage to Grahavarman, the eldest son of the Maukhari king Avantivarman. The alliance of the Pushyabhūti with the sworn enemies of his family must have alienated Deva Gupta, who formed a counter-alliance with the Gaudas whose hostility towards the Maukharis dated from the reign of Īśānavarman. As soon as Prabhākara died the Gupta king and the Gauda king, Śaśāṅka,² seem to have made a joint attack on the Maukhari kingdom. "Graha-varman was by the wicked rājā of Mālava cut off from the living along with his noble deeds. Rājyaśrī also, the princess, was confined like a brigand's wife with a pair of iron fetters kissing her feet charita which deals mainly with events till the rescue of Rājyaśrī. The rulers mentioned in connection with the tragic fate of the last of the Maukharis, the vicissitudes through which Rājyaśrī passed, and the struggles in which Rājya-vardhana engaged, include Guptas and Gaudas but no Kaṣachchuri king.

1 Hoernle. JRAS. 1903, p. 562. The suggestion, however, cannot be regarded as a well-established fact. Devagupta may have represented a collateral line of the Mālava family who continued to pursue a policy hostile to the Pushyabhūti and the Maukharis, while Kumāra, Mādhava, the Gupta Kulaputra who connived at the escape of Rājyaśrī from Kuśasthala (Kanauj), and Ādityasena, son of Mādhava, who gave his daughter in marriage to a Maukhari, may have belonged to a friendly branch.

2 There is no reason to believe that Śaśāṅka belonged to the Gupta family (cf. Allan, Gupta Coins, lxiv). Even if it be proved that he had a secondary name, Narendra Gupta, that by itself cannot establish a connection with the Gupta line in view of (a) the absence of any reference to his supposed Gupta ancestry in his own seal matrix ins. or in the record of his feudatories, (b) the use of the Nandīdhvaja to the exclusion of the Garuḍadhvaja, (c) his Gauda connection. The epithet 'Samudrāśraya' applied to the Gaudas of the sixth century A. D., can hardly be regarded as an apposite characterisation of the Guptas of Magadha, Prayāga or Mālwa.

and cast into prison at Kanyākubja." "The villain, deeming the army leaderless purposes to invade and seize this country (Thanesar) as well."¹ Rājya-varḍhana, though he routed the Mālava army "with ridiculous ease," was "allured to confidence by false civilities on the part of the overlord of Gauḍa, and then weaponless, confiding and alone despatched in his own quarters."

To meet the formidable league between the Guptas and the Gaudas, Harsha, the successor of Rājya-varḍhana, concluded an alliance with Bhāskara-varman, king of Kāmarūpa, whose father Sūsthita-varman Mṛigāṅka had fought against Mahāsena Gupta. This alliance was disastrous for the Gaudas as we know from the Nidhanapur plates of Bhāskara. At the time of the issuing of the plates Bhāskara-varman was in possession of the city of Karnaśuvārṇa that had once been the capital of the Gauḍa king, Śaśāṅka, whose death took place some time between A.D. 619 and 637. The king overthrown by Bhāskara-varman may have been Jayanāga (nāgarāja-samūhvaṇo Gauḍarāja, the king of Gauḍa named Nāga, successor of Somākhyā or Śaśāṅka), whose name is disclosed by the Vappaghoshavāṭa inscription.² The Gauḍa people, however, did not tamely acquiesce in the loss of their independence. They became a thorn in the side of Kanauj and Kāmarūpa, and their hostility towards those two powers was inherited by the Pāla and Sēna successors of Śaśāṅka.

In or about A.D. 608 the Guptas seem to have lost Vidiśā to the Kāṭachchuris. Magadha was held a little before A.D. 637 by Pūrṇavarman. Mādhava Gupta, the younger or youngest son of Mahāsena Gupta, remained a subordinate ally of Harsha of Thanesar and Kanauj, and 1 Harsha-charita, Uchchhvāsa 6, p. 183.

2 Ep. Ind., XVIII, pp. 60 ff.; Ārya-Maṇjuśrī-mūla-kalpa, ed. G. Śāstri, p. 636. The name Jaya is also given in the Buddhist work.

apparently resided at his court. In the period 618-27, Harsha 'punished the kings of four parts of India' and in 641 assumed the title of King of Magadha.¹ After his death the Gupta sovereignty in Magadha was revived by Ādityasena, a prince of remarkable vigour and ability, who found his opportunity in the commotion which followed the usurpation of Harsha's throne by Arjuna (?). For this "Later Gupta" king we have a number of inscriptions which prove that he ruled over a wide territory extending to the shores of the oceans. The Aphsāḍ, Shāhpur and Mandāra inscriptions recognise his undisputed possession of south and part of east Bihār. A Deoghar inscription, noticed by Fleet,² describes him as the ruler of the whole earth up to the shores of the seas, and the performer of the Āśvamedha and the other great sacrifices. He renewed contact with the Gaudas as well as the Maukharis and received a Gauda named Sūkshamsīva in his service. A Maukhari chief, Bhogavarman, accepted the hands of his daughter³ and presumably became his subordinate ally. The Dēo-Baraṇārī inscription refers to the Jayaskandhāvāra of his great-grandson Jivita Gupta II at Gomatikottaka. This clearly suggests that the so-called Later Guptas, and not the Maukharis, dominated about this time the Gomati valley in the Madhya-dēśa. The Mandāra inscription applies to Ādityasena the imperial titles of Parama-bhaṭṭāraka and Mahārājādhirāja. We learn from the Shāhpur stone image inscription that he was ruling in the year A. D. 672-73. It is not improbable that he or his son Deva Gupta (III) is the Sakalottarā-patha-nātha, lord of the whole of North India,

1 Ind. Ant. IX, 19.

2 CII, p. 213 n. Āditya is said to have performed three Āśvamedha sacrifices.

3 Kielhorn, INI, 541.

who was defeated by the Chalukya kings Vinayāditya (A.D. 680-96) and Vijayāditya.¹

We learn from the Dēo-Baraṇārka inscription that Ādityasena was succeeded by his son Deva Gupta (III), who in his turn was succeeded by his son Vishṇu Gupta.² The last king was Jivita Gupta II, son of Vishṇu. All these kings continued to assume imperial titles. That these were not empty forms appears from the records of the Western Chalukyas of Vātāpi which testify to the existence of a Pan-North Indian empire in the last quarter of the seventh century A. D. The only North Indian sovereigns, Uttarāpatha-nātha, who laid claim to the Imperial dignity during this period, and, actually dominated Magadha and the Madhya-deśa as is proved by the Aphaṣṭ and Dēo-Baraṇārka inscriptions, were Ādityasena and his successors.³

The Gupta empire was probably finally destroyed by the Gaudas who could never forgive Mādhava Gupta's desertion of their cause and who may have grown powerful in the service of Ādityasena. In the time of Yaśovarman of Kanauj, i.e., in the first half of the eighth century A. D., a Gauda king occupied the throne of Magadha.⁴

1 Bomb. Gaz. Vol. I, Part II, pp. 189, 368, 371; and Kendur plates.

2 This king seems also to be mentioned in an inscription discovered at Mangraon in the Buxar subdivision.

3 For a curious reference to the Chalukyas and king Jih-kwan ('Sun army' i. e. Ādityasena), see IA, X, p. 110.

4 Cf. the Gaudavaho by Vākpatirāja. Banerji confounds the Gaudas with the later Guptas. In the Harābhā Inscription the Gaudas are associated with the sea coast, Samudrāśraya, while the later Guptas, as is well-known, had their centres in the hinterland including Magadha and Mālwa. The people on the seashore were, according to the evidence of the Aphaṣṭ Inscription, hostile to Jivita Gupta I. The Praśastikāra of the Aphaṣṭ record is expressly mentioned as a Gauda, a designation that is never applied to his patrons. The family of Kṛishṇa Gupta is simply characterised as Sadvamśa and there is not the slightest hint that the kings of the line and their panegyrist belonged to the same nationality. The fact that Gauda is the designation of the lord of Magadha

Petty Gupta Princes, apparently connected with the imperial line, ruled in the Kanarese districts during the twelfth and the thirteenth centuries A. D. and are frequently mentioned in inscriptions. Evidence of an earlier connection of the Guptas with the Kanarese country is furnished by the Tālagund inscription which says that Kākustha-varman of the Kadamba dynasty gave his daughters in marriage to the Gupta and other kings. In the fifth or sixth century A. D. the Vakāṭaka king Narendrasena, a descendant of Chandra Gupta II Vikramāditya through his daughter Prabhāvatī Guptā, is said to have married a princess of Kuntala, i.e., of the Kanarese region.¹ Curiously enough, the Gutta or Gupta chiefs of the Kanarese country claimed descent from Chandra Gupta Vikramāditya,² lord of Ujjayini.³

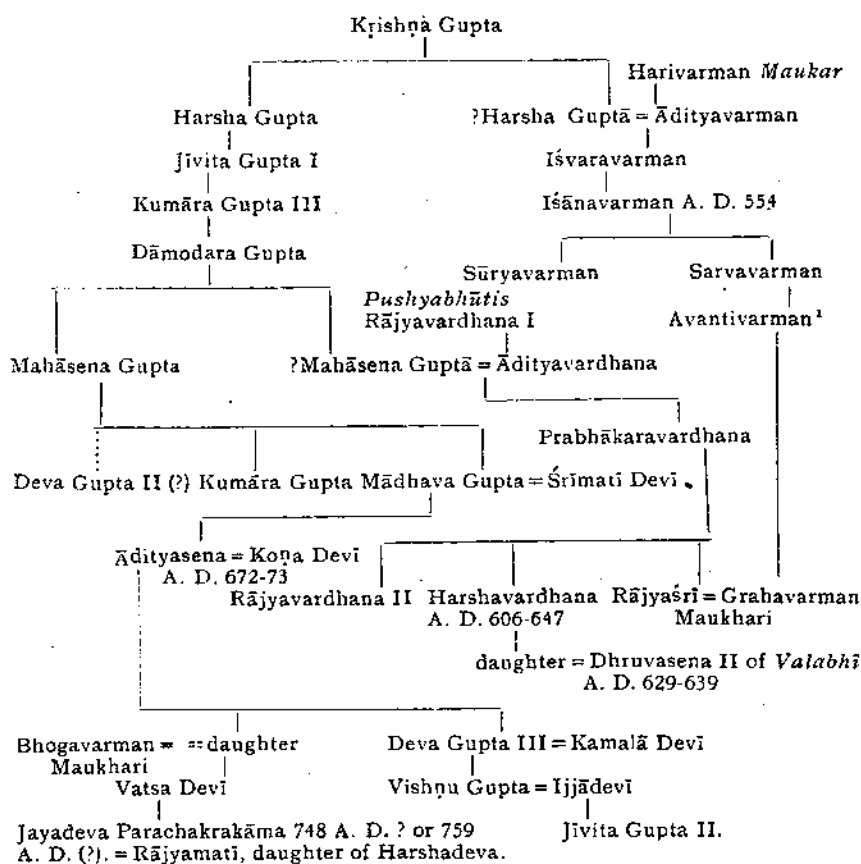

in the days of Yaśovarman early in the eighth century cannot be taken to prove that Gauḍa and later Gupta are interchangeable terms. In this period lordship of Magadha is not inseparably connected only with later Gupta lineage. Cf. the passage Magadhātīpatyamahatām jāta kule varmaṇām, which proves the existence of non-Gupta lines among rulers of Magadha in this age.

1 Jouveau-Dubreuil, AHD, p. 76.

2 Bomb. Gaz., Vol. I, Part II, pp. 578-80. Sir R. G. Bhandarkar, "A Peep into the Early History of India," p. 60. I owe this reference to Dr. Bhandarkar.

3 The account of the Later Guptas was first published in the JASB, 1920, No. 7.

THE LATEST GUPTAS

1 A. Ghosh, Two Maukhari seals from Nalanda, Ep. xxiv, 285. We have reference to another son of Avantivarman named Suva or Such.....who seems to have succeeded his father. Grahavarman too, has royal epithets in the Harsha-charita (pp. 149, 183). The order of succession is not, however, clear from available evidence.

APPENDIX A.

THE RESULTS OF AŚOKA'S PROPAGANDA IN WESTERN ASIA.¹

The vast region beyond the western frontiers of India came within the geographical horizon of Buddhist writers as early as the Bāveru Jātaka, and possibly the Sussandi Jātaka, and its princes figure not inconspicuously in Buddhist inscriptions of the third century B. C. The records of Aśoka show that the eyes of the imperial missionary of Magadha were turned more to the West than to the East; and even the traditional account of early Buddhist proselytising efforts given in the chronicles of Ceylon,² does not omit to mention the country of the Yonas where Mahārakkhita "delivered in the midst of the people the 'Kālakārāma suttanta,' in consequence of which a hundred and seventy thousand living beings attained to the reward of the path (of salvation) and ten thousand received the pabbajjā." It will perhaps be argued that the Yona country mentioned in the chronicles is to be identified with some district in the Kābul valley, and is not to be taken to refer to the realm of "Antiochos,"³ the Yona king, and the kings, the neighbours of that Antiochos, namely, Ptolemy, Antigonos, Magas and Alexander," mentioned in the second and the thirteenth rock edicts of Aśoka. Rhys Davids, in fact, is inclined to regard the declaration in these edicts about the success of Aśoka's

1 Mainly an extract from an article published in the Buddhistic Studies (ed. B. C. Law).

2 Mahāvamśa, Ch. XII.

3 Dr. Jarl Charpentier has contributed a paper to A Volume of Indian Studies presented to Professor E. J. Rapson in which he revives the suggestion of Prinsep (Hultzsch. Aśoka, xxxi) that "Am̐tiyaka" referred to by Aśoka is Antiochos Soter (c. 281-61), and not his son Antiochos Theos (261-46). But his theory requires that Chandragupta ascended the throne in 327-25 B.C., that he was identical with Xandrames and that the story of his visit to Alexander (recorded by Justin and Plutarch) is a myth. The theory is opposed not only to the evidence of Justin and Plutarch, but to the known facts about the ancestry of Chandragupta. Unlike Xandrames, Chandragupta is nowhere represented as of barber origin. His paternal ancestors are described as rulers by Brāhmanical and Buddhist writers alike.

BUDDHIST INFLUENCE IN EAST AND WEST 615

missionary propaganda in the realms of Yona princes as mere "royal rhodomontade". "It is quite likely," says he, "that the Greek kings are only thrown in by way of make-weight, as it were; and that no emissaries had been actually sent there at all."¹ Sir Flinders Petrie is, however, of opinion that in the Ptolemaic Period Buddhism and Buddhist festivals had already reached the shores of Egypt. He infers this from Indian figures found at Memphis. An epigraph from the Thebaid mentions as the dedicator "Sophon the Indian".²

Alberuni,³ writing in the eleventh century A.D. says, "In former times Khurāsān, Persis, Irāk, Mosul, the country up to the frontier of Syria, was Buddhistic, but then Zarathustra went forth from Adharbaijān and preached Magism in Balkh (Baktra). His doctrine came into favour with king Gushtasp, and his son Isfendiyād spread the new faith both in East and West, both by force and by treaties. He founded fire-temples through his whole Empire, from the frontiers of China to those of the Greek Empire. The succeeding kings made their religion (i.e., Zoroastrianism) the obligatory state-religion for Persis and Irāk. In consequence the Buddhists were banished from those countries, and had to emigrate to the countries east of Balkh.....Then came Islam." The above account may not be correct in all its particulars. The statement that Buddhism flourished in the countries of Western Asia before Zoroaster is clearly wrong. But the prevalence of the religion of Śākyamuni in parts of Western Asia in a period considerably anterior to Alberuni and its suppression by Zoroastrianism and Islam may well be based upon fact. The antagonism of Buddhism to the fire-cult is hinted at in the Bhūridatta Jātaka.⁴ It has even been suggested that Zoroastrian scriptures allude to disputes with the Buddhists.⁵

Four centuries before Alberuni, Hiuen Tsang bore witness to the fact that Lang kie(ka)-lo, a country subject to Persia, contained above 100 monasteries and more than 6,000 Brethren

¹ Buddhist India, p. 298.

² Mahaffy, A History of Egypt under the Ptolemaic Dynasty, 155 f.

³ Sachau, Alberuni's India, Vol. I. p. 21.

⁴ No. 543.

⁵ Sir Charles Eliot, Hinduism and Buddhism, III, 450.

who applied themselves to the study of the Great and Little "Vehicles". Persia (Po-la-sse) itself contained two or three Saṅghārāmas, with several hundred priests, who principally studied the teaching of the Little Vehicle according to the Sarvāstivādin school. The pātra of Śākya Buddha was in this country, in the King's palace.¹

The Chinese pilgrim did not probably personally visit Persia. But no doubt need be entertained regarding the existence of Buddhist communities and Saṅghārāmas or monasteries in Irān. Stein discovered a Buddhist monastery in "the terminal marshes of the Helmund" in Seistān.² Mānī, the founder of the Manichæan religion, who was born in A.D. 215-16, at Ctesiphon in Babylonia, and began to preach his gospel probably in A.D. 242, shows unmistakable traces of Buddhist influence.³ In his book Shābūrqān (Shapurakhan) he speaks of the Buddha as a messenger of God. Legge and Eliot refer to a Manichæan treatise which has the form of a Buddhist Sūtra. It speaks of Mānī as the Tathāgata and mentions Buddhas and the Bodhisattva. In Bunyiu Nanjio's Catalogue of the Chinese translation of the Buddhist Tripiṭaka, App., II, No. 4, we have reference to a Parthian prince who became a Buddhist Śramaya or monk before A.D. 148. In his History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon,⁴ Dr. Vincent Smith refers to a picture of a four-armed Buddhist saint or Bodhisattva in the guise of a Persian with black beard and whiskers, holding a thunderbolt (vajra) in his left hand, which has been found at a place called Dandān-Uiliq in Turkistan. Such figures are undoubtedly the products of a type of Buddhism which must have developed in Irān, and enjoyed considerable popularity as late as the eighth century A.D. which is the date assigned by Dr. Smith to the fresco or distemper paintings on wood and plaster discovered at Dandān-Uiliq.

It is difficult to say to what extent Buddhist literature made its influence felt in Western Asia. Sir Charles Eliot points

1 Beal, Records of the Western World, Vol. II. pp. 277-78; Watters, Yuan Chwang, II, 257.

2 Sir Charles Eliot, Hinduism and Buddhism, III, 3.

3 Ibid, p. 446; The Dacca University Journal, Feb. 1926, pp. 108, 111; JRAS, 1913, 69, 76, 81.

4 P. 310.

BUDDHIST INFLUENCE ON MANICHÆANS 617 out the close resemblance between certain Manichæan works and the Buddhist Suttas and the Pātimokkha, and says that according to Cyril of Jerusalem, the Manichæan scriptures were written by one Scythianus and revised by his disciple Terebinthus who changed his name to Boddas.¹ He finds in this "jumble" allusions to Buddha Śākyamuni and the Bo-tree. It may further be pointed out that some Jātaka tales show a surprising similarity to some of the stories in the Arabian Nights. The *Samugga Jātaka*², for instance, tells the story of the demon who put his beautiful wife in a box and guarded her in this manner in order that she might not go astray. But this did not prevent her from taking pleasure with others. The tale in all its essentials recurs in the Arabian Nights.³

The Jātaka verse,

*"He his true bliss in solitude will find,
Afar from woman and her treachery"*

is comparable to the statement of the poet in the Arabian Nights:

*"Never trust in women ; nor rely upon their vows ;
For their pleasure and displeasure depend upon their passions.
They offer a false affection ;
For perfidy lurks within their clothing."*

Whatever may be the case at the present day, in times gone by Western Asia was clearly not altogether outside the sphere of the intellectual and spiritual conquests of Buddhism.

1 Cf. McCrindle, Ancient India as described in Classical Literature p. 185. "Terebinthus proclaimed himself learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians and gave out that his name was no longer Terebinthus but that he was a new Buddha (Boddas) and that he was born of a virgin. Terebinthus was the disciple of Scythianus, who was a Saracen born in Palestine and who traded with India."

2 Np. 436.

3 Burton, The Book of the Thousand Nights, I. 12ff; Olcott, Stories from the Arabian Nights, p. 3; Lane's Arabian Nights, pp. 8-9. A similar story is found in Lambaka X, tarāṅga 8 of the Kathā-sarit-sāgara; Penzer, The Ocean of Story, Vol. V. pp. 151-52. "So attachment to women, the result of infatuation produces misery to all men. But indifference to them produces in the discerning emancipation from the bonds of existence."

APPENDIX B.

A NOTE ON THE CHRONOLOGICAL RELATION OF KANISHKA AND RUDRADĀMAN I.¹

In recent years² Mr. Haricharan Ghosh and Professor Jayachandra Vidyalankar contributed two very interesting notes on the date of Kanishka. The latter upholds the theory of Dr. Sten Konow, fortified by the calculations of Dr. Van Wijk, that the great Kushān Emperor began his rule in A.D. 128-29, and criticises the view put forward in this work that Kanishka I's rule in the "Lower Indus Valley" (this and not "Sind," is the expression actually used) could not have synchronised with that of Rudradāman I, who, "did not owe his position as Mahākshatrapa to anybody else." The conclusions of Professor Konow and Dr. Van Wijk are admittedly hypothetical, and little more need be said about them after the illuminating observations of Professor Rapson in JRAS, 1930, January, pp. 186-202. In the present note we shall confine ourselves to an examination of the criticism of Professor Jayachandra Vidyalankar and Mr. Haricharan Ghosh of the views expressed in the preceding pages.

The Professor has not a word to say about the contention that Kanishka's dates 1-23, Vāsishka's dates 24-28, Huvishka's dates 31³-60, and Vāsudeva's dates 67-98 suggest a continuous reckoning. In other words, Kanishka was the originator of an era. But we know of no era current in North-West India which commenced in the second century A. D. He only takes considerable pain to prove that Rudradāman's sway over Sindhu-Sauvira (which he identifies with modern Sind) between 130 and 150 A.D. does not imply control over Sui Vihār and Multān, and consequently Kanishka's sovereignty over Sui Vihār in the year 11 of an era starting from 128-29 A.D., i. e., in or about 140 A.D., is not irreconcilable with the rule of the Great Satrap in Sindhu-Sauvīra at about the same time. He is not oblivious of the difficulty of harmonising this limitation of Rudradāman's power with the known fact of the Great Satrap's campaign against the Yaudheyas in the course of which he claims to have uprooted that powerful tribe "in their country proper which was to the north of Suē Vihār" and, according to the theory advocated by the Professor, "formed part of Kanishka's dominions" at that time. He meets the difficulty by saying that "the pressure of the Kausāna armies from the north had driven the Yaudheyas to the desert of Marwar". Such surmises to explain away inconvenient details, are, to say the least, not convincing, especially in view of the fact that Maru finds separate mention in the inscription of Rudradāman as a territory under the rule of the mighty Satrap.

1 IHQ, March, 1930, pp. 149 ff.

2 IHQ, V, No. 1, March, 1929, pp. 49-80, and JBORS, XV, parts I & II, March-June, 1929, pp. 47-63.

3 The earliest recorded date of Huvishka is now known to be the year 28.

But is the contention of the Professor that Sindhu-Sauvīra did not include the country up to Multān correct? Alberuni, who based his assertions on the geographical data of the Purāṇas and the Bṛhatsaṃhitā, made the clear statement that Sauvīra was equivalent to Multān and Jāhrāvār.¹ Against this Professor Vidyānāth quotes the evidence of Yuan Chwang who says that in his days 'Mou-lo-san-pu-lu,' i.e., Mūla-sthāna-pura or Multān was a dependency of the "Che-ka" or Takka country in the C. Pañjāb. It should be noted, however, that the Chinese pilgrim is referring to political dependence, and not geographical inclusion. India was a dependency of Great Britain. But geographically it was not a part of the British Isles. On the other hand, Alberuni does not give the slightest hint that what he actually means by the equation "Sauvira, i.e., Multān and Jāhrāvār" is political subjection of Multān to Sind. His account here is purely geographical, and he is merely giving the names of the countries, as taken from the Saṃhitā of Varāhamihira with his own comments. Far from making Multān a political dependency of Sind he carefully distinguishes "Sauvira, i.e., Multān and Jāhrāvār" from "Sindhu" which is mentioned separately.

The view that ancient Sauvira was confined to Southern Sind and that Sindhu and Sauvira together correspond to modern Sind, and nothing but Sind, is unsupported by any early evidence. Yuan Chwang went east from Sin-tu above 900 li and, crossing to the east bank of the Indus, came to the Mou-lo-san-pu-lu country.¹ This proves that Sin-tu lay to the west of Mou-lo-san-pu-lu (Multān), and was situated on the west side of the Indus. The commentator of the Kāma-sūtras of Vātsyāyana makes the clear statement² सैन्धवानामिति । सिन्धुनामा नदस्तस्य पश्चिमेन सिन्धदेशस्तत्र भवानाम् । The major part of modern Sind was clearly outside the geographical (as opposed to political) limits of ancient "Sin-tu" or Sindhu and was, in the days of Yuan Chwang, included in the countries of A-tien-p'o-chih-lo, Pi-to-shih-lo, and A-fan-tu. Part of the modern territory of Sind may have been included in Sauvira whose southern limits undoubtedly reached the sea, because the Milinda-Paṇho mentions it in a list of countries where "ships do congregate". We are informed by the author of the Periplus that "ships lie at anchor at Barbaricum" (at the mouth of the Indus). But the evidence of Alberuni leaves no room for doubt that the northern limits of Sauvira reached Multān. A scholar like Alberuni thoroughly conversant with Purāṇic lore, is not likely to make an unwarranted statement. In fact, the inclusion of Multān within Sauvira receives striking confirmation from some of the Purāṇas. The Skandapurāṇa, for instance,³ referring to the famous temple of the Sun at Mūla-sthāna or Multān, says that it stood on the banks of the river Devikā (Devikātata):—

ततो गच्छेन्महादेवि मूलस्थानमिति श्रुतम् ।
देविकायास्तटे रम्ये भास्करं वारितस्करम् ॥

In the *Agnipurāṇa*⁴ the Devikā is brought into special relations with the realm of Sauvira :—

सौवीरराजस्य पुरा मैत्रेयोभूत् पुरोहितः ।
तेन चायतनं विष्णोः कारितं देविकातटे ॥

According to Yuan Chwang, Sin-tu and Multān were neighbouring countries lying on opposite sides of the Indus.

1 Watters, II. 254.

2 Benares edition, p. 295.

3 Prabhāsa-kshetra-Māhātmya, Ch. 278.

4 Ch. 200.

This is quite in accordance with the close association of Sindhu and Sauvira in early literature.

पतिः सौवीरसिन्धूनां दुष्टभावो जयद्रथः ।¹

कचिदेकः शिवीनाम्नान् सौवीरान् सह सिन्धुभिः ।²

शिविसौवीरसिन्धूनां विषादश्चाप्यजायत ।³

Rudradāman's mastery over Sindhu and Sauvira (in the sense in which these terms were understood by the Purāṇas, the commentator on the Kāmasūtras of Vātsyāyana, Yuan Chwang and Alberuni) is clearly irreconcilable with the simultaneous sovereignty of Kanishka over Sui Vihār.

Apart from the identification of Sauvira with Multān and Jahrvār, is it unreasonable to hold that a power which exercised sway over ancient Sindhu and Maru, and fought with the Yaudheyas of Johiyawār, had the Sui Vihār region under its control?

Mr. H. C. Ghosh asserts⁴ that it cannot be proved that Rudradāman held Sindhu and Sauvira some time from 136 A.D. at least. He also thinks that the argument that Kanishka started an era "involves a petitio principii." Now, we know that by 150 A.D. Rudradāman was "the lord of the whole of eastern and western Ākarāvanti, Anupanīvr̥ḍ, Ānaritta, Surāshṭra, Svabhra, Maru, Kachchha, Sindhu, Sauvira, Kukura, Aparānta, Nishāda, and other territories gained by his own valour." The conquest of so many countries must have taken a long time, and the Andhau inscriptions show that one of the countries, at any rate, namely, Kachchha, had come under the sway of the Great Satrap as early as 130 A.D. On p. 277 of the Political History of Ancient India (second edition) it has been pointed out that "the name of the capital of Scythia (i.e., the Lower Indus Valley) in the time of the Periplus was Minnagara, and this was evidently derived from the city of Min in Śākasthāna mentioned by Isidore. Rapson points out that one of the most characteristic features in the name of the western

¹ Mbh., III, Ch. 266.

² Mbh., III, Ch. 266.

³ Mbh., III, Ch. 270.

⁴ IHQ, 1929, p. 79.

Kshatrapas of Cashtana's line, viz., 'Dāman' (-dama) is found also in the name of a prince of the Drangianian house of Vonones. Lastly, the Kārdamaka family, from which the daughter of the Mahākshatrapa Rudra claimed descent, apparently derived its name from the Kārdama river in Persia."

The facts noted above indicate that the Śaka sept to which Chashtana and Rudradāman belonged came from Śakashthāna in Irān through the Lower Indus Valley to Cutch and other places in Western India. In view of this and the contiguity of Cutch to the Lower Indus Valley, it is permissible to think that the date of the conquest of Sindhu and Sauvira could not have been far removed from, and may have even preceded, that of Cutch (Kachchha). As the Great Satrap retained his hold on these provinces till 150 A.D. it stands to reason that he was their ruler from c. 136 A. D.

As to the second contention of Mr. Ghosh, it may be pointed out that Kanishka's dates 1-23, Vāsishka's dates 24-28, Huvishka's dates 31-60, and Vāsudeva's dates 67-98, do suggest a continuous reckoning. To deny that Kanishka started an era is tantamount to saying that the dates of his successors, Vasishka, Huvishka, and Vāsudeva are regnal years. But no serious student will contend that Vāsudeva's dates 67-98 are to be taken as regnal years.

APPENDIX C.

A NOTE ON THE LATER GUPTAS.¹

It was recently urged by Professor R. D. Banerji that Mahāsena Gupta of the Aphaṣaḍ inscription, father of Mādhava Gupta, the associate of Harsha, could not have been a king of East Mālava, and secondly, that Susthitavarman whose defeat at the hands of Mahāsena Gupta, in the Lohita or Lauhitya region, is mentioned in the Aphaṣaḍ inscription, was not a Maukhari, but a king of Kāmarūpa.

The second proposition will be readily accepted by all careful students of the Aphaṣaḍ epigraph and the Nidhanapur plate inscription, though some western scholars are still, I know not why, of a contrary opinion.² As to the first point, viz., whether Mahāsena Gupta was a direct ruler of East Mālava or of Magadha, a student will have to take note of the following facts :—

- (i) In the Dêô-Baraṇārka Inscription of Jivita Gupta II, which records the continuance of the grant of a village³ in South Bihar, we have reference to Bālāditya-deva, and after him, to the Maukharis Śarva-varman and Avanti-varman. Not a word is said about their later Gupta contemporaries in connection with the previous grants of the village. The inscription is no doubt damaged, but the sovereignty of Śarva-varman and Avanti-varman undoubtedly precludes the possibility of the direct rule of their contemporaries of the later Gupta line.

¹ Mainly an extract from an article published in JBORS, Sept.-Dec., 1929, p. 561 ff.

² JRAS, 1928, July, pp. 689f.

³ Dr. R. C. Majumdar's suggestion that the village in question may have been situated in U. P. has been commented upon by Dr. Sircar who points out that Fleet's reading of the name of the village (on which Dr. Majumdar bases his conclusions) is tentative and unacceptable.

- (ii) Inscriptions discovered in the Barābar and Nāgārjuni hill caves disclose the existence of another line of Maukharī "Varmans" who were feudatory (sāmanta) chiefs of the Gayā district in the time of the later Guptas.
- (iii) Yuan Chwang who visited Magadha in the time of Harsha mentions Pūrṇa-varman as the occupant of the throne of Magadha.¹ He does not say a word about Mādhava Gupta or his father in connection with Magadha.
- (iv) Bāṇa indeed, refers to Mādhava Gupta, the associate of Harsha, but he expressly mentions his father as the king of Mālava, and not of Magadha. The existence of two associates of Harsha, each bearing the name of Mādhava Gupta, one of whom was the son of a king of Magadha, is not known to the biographer of the great emperor.

From the evidence adduced above two facts emerge, viz., that the father of the only Mādhava Gupta whom the biographer of Harsha knew to be the associate of his royal patron, was a king of Mālava, and that before Harsha's conquest of the province in A. D. 641,² direct control over Magadha was exercised, not by the Guptas, but by the "Varmans". The memory of "Varman" ādhipatya (supremacy) over Magadha had not died away even in the time of the Sirpur stone inscription of Mahāśiva Gupta.

The only relevant argument that Professor Banerji urged against the view that Mahāsenā Gupta, the father of Mādhava Gupta, the associate of Harsha, was "probably"³ a king of Mālava, is that "it was impossible for a king of Mālava to reach the banks of the Lauhitya without strenuous opposition from the kings" who governed the intervening region. But how did Professor Banerji solve the problem? By making Mahāsenā Gupta king of Magadha, and assuming that "Assam very probably lay on his frontier and Rādhā and Vanga or Mithilā and Varendra were included in his kingdom." Anything in the nature of a proof he failed to give, but we were asked to accept his surmise because "in this case only is it possible for Mahāsenā Gupta to have fought with Susthitarman of Assam."

¹ Watters, III, 115.

² Ind. Ant., IX, 19.

³ Political History of Ancient India, Second Edition, p. 373.

Regarding the possibility of a king of Mālava carrying his arms to the banks of the Lauhitya, attention may be invited to the Mandaśor inscription of Yaśodharman. In the case of Mahāsenā Gupta a careful student of the Aphaṣṭ inscription cannot fail to note that the way before him had been prepared by his immediate predecessors. Kumāra Gupta, his grandfather, had pushed to Prayāga, while Dāmodara Gupta, father of Mahāsenā Gupta, claims to have "broken up the proudly stepping array of mighty elephants, belonging to the Maukhari" —the same power which we have already seen, held control of Magadha a little before Harsha's conquest of the Province. The Gauḍa expansion had already been stopped for a time by the victories of Īśānavarman Maukhari. What was there to prevent the son of Dāmodara Gupta (who must have assumed command after the death of his father on the battle-field)¹ from pushing on to the Lauhitya?

1 Cf. Fleet, Corpus III, pp. 203. II 206. Cf. also Viraśayyā motif.

APPENDIX D.

THE DECLINE OF THE EARLY GUPTA EMPIRE.¹

Towards the close of the fifth century A.D. the empire built up by the genius of Samudra Gupta and Vikramāditya was fast hastening towards dissolution. Skanda Gupta (A.D. 455- c. 467) was the last king of the Early Gupta line who is known to have controlled the westernmost provinces. After A.D. 467 there is no evidence that the Imperial Guptas had anything to do with Surāshtra or the major part of Western Mālwa.² Budha Gupta (A.D. 476-77 to c. 495) was probably the last prince of the family to be implicitly obeyed on the banks of the Lower Ganges as well as the Narmadā. The rulers who came after him retained a precarious hold for some time on Eastern Mālwa and North Bengal. But they had to fight with enemies on all sides, and, if a tradition recorded

1 First published in the Calcutta Review, April, 1930.

2 The identity of the supreme lord (Parama-svāmin) mentioned in connection with the consecration of the early Valabhi king Droṇasiṃha, is unknown. The surmise that he was a Gupta, though plausible, lacks convincing proof. Some scholars lay stress on the fact that the era used is the Gupta era (IC, v, 409). But the use of an era instituted by a dynasty does not always indicate political subordination to that line. It may simply have a geographical significance, a continuation of a custom prevailing in a particular locality. Even undoubted Gupta vassals used the Mālava-Vikrama Samvat in Mandaśor. Conversely the Gupta era is found used in regions, e.g., Shorkot and Ganjam, beyond the proper limits of the Gupta empire. Tejpur, too, should possibly come under the category, as we are not sure as to whether it formed a part of the state of Kāmarūpa in the fourth century A.D. Equally conjectural is the identification of the ruler in question with a Hun or a sovereign of Mandaśor. Theories and speculations in the absence of clear data are at best unprofitable. Some connection of the later kings of the Gupta line with the Mandaśor region in W. Mālwa in the first quarter of the sixth century A.D. may possibly be hinted at by the expression Guptanāthaiḥ 'by the Gupta lords' used in the Mandaśor praśasti or panegyric of Yaśodharman. The term nātha may have reference to the fact that the Guptas were once overlords of Mandaśor. But the analogy of Hūṇādhiṣa occurring in the same record may suggest that nātha simply means 'lord' or 'king' without reference to any special relations subsisting between Mandaśor and the Guptas in or about 533 A.D.

CAUSES OF DECLINE OF GUPTA EMPIRE 627

by Jināsena,¹ is to be believed, their power collapsed in A.D. 551 (320 + 231) :

*Guptānām cha śata-dvayam eka-triṃśachcha varshāṇi kāla-vidbhir udāhṛitam.*²

The supremacy over Āryāvarta then passed to the houses of Mukhara (cir. A.D. 554)³ and Pushyabhūti (family of Harsha, A.D. 606-47) under whom the centre of political gravity shifted from Magadha to Kanauj and that neighbourhood. Attempts were no doubt made by a line of so-called later Guptas to restore the fallen fortunes of their family, but these were not crowned with success till after the death of Harsha.

The causes of the decline of the early Gupta Empire are not far to seek, though a detailed presentation of facts is impossible in view of the paucity of contemporary records. The broad outline of the story is, however, perfectly clear. The same causes were at work which proved so disastrous to the Turki Sultanate of Delhi in the fourteenth century, and to the so-called Mughul Empire in the eighteenth, viz., outbreak of rebellions within, devastating invasions from without, the growth of a class of hereditary governors and other officials who commanded enormous influence in local centres, and assumed the titles of Mahārāja and Mahārājādhirāja, and dissensions in the imperial family itself.

Already in the time of Kumāra Gupta I, the stability of the empire was seriously threatened by a turbulent people whose name is commonly read as Pushya-mitra. The danger was averted by the crown prince Skandā Gupta. But a more formidable enemy appeared from the steppes of Central Asia. Inscriptions discovered at Bhitari, Kura, Gwalior and Eran, as well as the records of several Chinese pilgrims, prove that shortly after the death of Kumāra Gupta I, the fierce Huns swooped down upon the north-western provinces of the empire and eventually made themselves masters of the Pañjāb and Eastern Mālwa.

¹ Harivamśa, Ch. 60.

² Ind. Ant., 1886, 142; Bhand. Com., Vol., 195.

³ Ep. Ind., XIV, pp. 110-20; JRAS, 1906, 843 f. About this time (A. D. 554 or A. D. 564) as pointed out by Drs. Bhattasali and Sircar, king Bhūti-varman of Assam is found arrogating to himself imperial titles by the performance of an Aśvamedha sacrifice. Cf. Bhāratavarsha, Āshādha, 1348, p. 83 etc.

The newcomers were long known to the people of India as a race of Uitlanders closely associated with the Chinese. The *Mahāvastu*¹ mentions them along with the Chīnas, while the Sabhāparva of the *Mahābhārata*² includes them in a list of foreign tribes amongst whom the Chīnas occupy the first place :—

Chīnān śakams tathā ch Odrān (?)³ Varvarān Nanavāsīnūh Vārshpeyān (?) Hāra-Hūṇāmścha Kṛishṇān Haimavataṁstathā.

A verse in the *Bhishmaparva*⁴ brings the Huns into relations with the Pārasikas or Persians :—

Yavanūś Chīna-Kāmbojā dāruṇū Mlechchhajātayaḥ Sakṛidgrahāḥ Kulatthāscha Hūṇāḥ Pārasikāḥ saha.

This verse is reminiscent of the period when the Huns came into contact with the Sassanian dynasty of Persia.⁵ Kālidāsa, too, places the Huns close to Persia—in the saffron-producing country watered by the river Vāṅkshu, the modern Oxus.⁶ Early in the reign of the Emperor Skanda Gupta they poured into the Gupta Empire, but were at first beaten back. The repulse of the Huns is mentioned in the Bhitari Inscription and is also probably alluded to by the grammarian Chandragomin as a contemporary event.⁷ With the passing away of Skanda Gupta, however, all impediments to the steady advance of the invaders seem to have been removed and, if Somadeva, a Jaina contemporary of Kṛishṇa III, Rāshṭrakūṭa, is to be

1 I. 135.

2 II, 51. 23-24.

3 The mention of the Odras in this connection is odd. It is tempting to read in the epic verse Chaḍotāmcha (instead of tathāchodrān). Chaḍota is the name of a territory in Central Asia near Khotan.

4 9. 65-66.

5 Smith, EHI, 4th edition, p. 339. See also W. M. McGovern, the Early Empires of Central Asia.

6 Ind. Ant., 1912, 265f.

7 Ind. Ant., 1896, 105.

believed, they penetrated into the Indian interior as far as Chitrakūṭa.¹ They certainly conquered the Eraṇ district (Airikiṇa pradeśa) in the northern part of the present Central Provinces. The principal centres of their power in India, in the time of their kings Toramāṇa and Mihirakula, were Pavvaiya on the Chināb² and Śākala, modern Siālkoṭ, between the Chināb and the Degh, in the Upper Pañjāb.

Next to the Hun inroads must be mentioned the ambition of generals and feudatories. In the time of the Emperor Skanda Gupta, Surāshṭra was governed by a Goptri or Margrave named Parnadatta, who was appointed by the emperor himself to the Viceroyalty of the Far West. Shortly afterwards, Bhaṭārka, a chief of the Maitraka clan, established himself in this province as general or military governor, with his capital probably at Valabhi. He, as well as his immediate successor, Dharasena I, was satisfied with the title of Senāpati or general, but the next chief Droṇasiṃha, the second son of Bhaṭārka (A.D. 502-03) had to be installed as Mahārāja by his suzerain. A branch of the dynasty established itself in Mo-la-po (Mālavaka)³ or the westernmost part of Mālwa in the latter half of the sixth century, and made extensive conquests in the direction of the Sahya and Vindhya Hills.⁴ Another, and a junior, branch continued to rule at 1 Bhand., Com. Vol., 216. Chitrakūṭa may be Chitor in Rājaputāna, or more probably the equally famous Chitrakūṭa on the Mandākinī in Central India, where Rāma lived for a short time during his banishment. A Hūṇa-maṇḍala is mentioned in an inscription as being situated in the Mālwa region (Ep. Ind. XXIII, 102).

2 JBORS, 1928, March, p. 33; C. J. Shah, Jainism in Northern India, 210, quoting Kuvalayamālā (? 8th century A. D.).

3 Smith, EHI, 4th edition, p. 343.

4 Dharasena II, king of Valabhi, left two sons, viz., Śīlāditya II Dharmāditya and Kharagraha I. The account of Hiuen Tsang seems to suggest that in his time (i. e., shortly after Śīlāditya) the Maitraka dominions split up into two parts, one part including Mo-la-po and its dependencies probably obeying the line of Śīlāditya-Dharmāditya, the other part, including Valabhi, obeying Kharagraha and his sons, one of whom was Dhruvasena II, Bālāditya or Dhruva-bhaṭa, who married the daughter of Harsha of Kanauj. The account of the Chinese pilgrim seems to receive confirmation from the Alina plate of Śīlāditya VII (Fleet, CII, 171 f. esp. 182n) which associates Derabhata, the son of Śīlāditya I Dharmāditya, with the region of the Sahya and Vindhya mountains, while the descendants of Kharagraha I are connected with Valabhi. The Navalakhi and Nogāwā plates, however, suggest that occasionally the same Valabhi. In the seventh century Dhruvasena II of Valabhi married the daughter of Harsha. His son Dharasena IV (A.D. 645-49) assumed the imperial titles of Paramabhaṭṭāraka Paramēscara Chakravartin.

But the Maitrakas of Mo-la-po and Valabhi were not the only feudatories who gradually assumed an independent position. The rulers of Mandaśor pursued the same course, and their example was followed by the Māukharis of the Madhyadeśa and the kings of Navyāvakāśikā-Vardhamāna and Karpasuvarṇa in Bengal.

Mandaśor, the ancient Daśapura, was one of the most important Viceregal seats of the Early Gupta Empire. It was the capital of a long line of margraves belonging to the Aulikara family¹ who governed part of Western Mālwa on behalf of the Emperor Chandra Gupta II Vikramāditya and his son Kumāra-Gupta I Mahendrāditya. With the sixth century A.D., however, a new scene opened. Yaśodharman, ruler of Mandaśor about A.D. 533, emboldened no doubt by his success over the Huns, defied the power of the Gupta lords (Guptanātha), and set up pillars of victory commemorating his conquests, which, in the words of his court panegyrist, embraced the whole of Hindusthān from the river Lauhitya, or the Brahmaputra, to the Western Ocean, and from the Himālayas to the mountain Mahendra or the Eastern Ghāṭs. After his death the Guptas figure again as lords of Mālava (Eastern Mālwa) in literature and possibly in inscriptions of the time of Harsha. But Western Mālwa could not be recovered by the family. Part of it was, as we have already seen, included within the dominions of the Maitrakas. Another part, viz., Avanti or the district round Ujjain, the proud capital of Vikramāditya and Mahendrāditya in the fifth century A.D.,² is found in the next centuries in the ruler governed both Mālavaka and Valabhī. In the latter half of the seventh century A. D. the line of Kharagraha I became extinct, and the Maitraka dominions were once more united. For an alleged connection of the Valabhī dynasty with the Kanarese country, see Moraes, Kadamba-kula, 64 f. The recently discovered Virḍi copperplate grant of Kharagraha I of the year 297 (= A.D. 616-17) shows that for a time that ruler held Ujjain (Pro. of the 7th Or. Conf. 659 ff.). It is from the camp at Ujjain that the grant was issued.

1 Ep. Ind. XXVI. 130 ff; Fleet, CII, 153.

2 Somadeva, Kathā-sarit-sāgara, Bk. XVIII; Allan, Gupta Coins, xlix n; Bomb. Gaz., I, ii. 578.

IMPERIAL AMBITION OF THE MAUKHARIS 631 possession of Saṅkaragaṇa of the Kaṭachchhūri or Kalachūri dynasty¹ and Kharagraha I of the Maitraka line which gave way to a Brāhmaṇa family in the days of Hiuen Tsang,² which in its turn, was replaced by the Rāshtrakūṭas, the Gurjara Pratihāras and other families.³

Another family which came to the forefront in the sixth century A.D., was the line of the Mukharas or Maukharis. The stone inscriptions of the princes of this dynasty prove their control over the Bārā Bankī, Jaunpur and Gayā districts of the United Provinces and Bihār. All these territories formed integral parts of the Gupta Empire in the fourth and fifth centuries A.D. In the next century they must have passed into the hands of the Maukharis. The feudatory titles of the earlier princes of the Mukhara line leave no room for doubt that they occupied a subordinate position in the first few decades of the sixth century A.D. In or about the year A.D. 554, however, Īśāna-varman Maukhari ventured to measure swords with the Guptas, and probably also with Huns, and assumed the Imperial title of Mahārājādhirāja. For a period of about a quarter of a century (A. D. 554-cir. A. D. 580) the Maukharis were beyond question the strongest political power in the Upper Ganges Valley. They anticipated to some extent the glorious achievements of Harsha, the brother-in-law, and, apparently, the 1 G. Jouveau Dubreuil, Ancient History of the Deccan, 82.

2 Watters, Yuan Chwang, ii, 250. This family may have been connected with the viceregal line of Naigamas mentioned in the Mandaśor Inscription of the Mālava year 589, of the time of Yaśodharman and Vishṇuvardhana. Abbayadatta of this family was the viceory (Rājasthāniya, Sachiva) of a district bounded by the Vindhya, the Pāriyātra (Western Vindhya including the Aravalli range) and the Sindhu (the sea or a Central Indian stream bearing the same name). His nephew is called a nṛpati (king). Daksha, the young brother of the ruler, excavated a well in the year 589 (= A. D. 533-34).

3 Ind. Ant., 1886, 142; Ep. Ind., XVIII, 1926, 239 (verse 9 of Sañjam grant); cf. Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 177 (reference to a governor of Ujjain under the Pratihāra King Mahendrapāla II). In the Sañjam inscription it is claimed that at Ujjain an early Rāshtrakūṭa king made the Gurjara and other lords his door-keepers (Pratihāra). It is not improbable that, like the Paramāras, the Gurjara lords brought to Ujjain were for a long time feudatories of the Rāshtrakūṭas and the name Pratihāra had reference to their status under the Rāshtrakūṭas, before the theory of descent from Lakshmaṇa was adumbrated. Incidentally it may be pointed out that the home territory (Svavishaya) of Nāgabūṇa's line was in Marwar as is clear from the Jaina Kuvalayamāla and the Buchkala inscription.

successor (on the throne of Kanauj ?) of their last notable king Grahavarman.

Like the Maukharis, the rulers of Bengal, too, seem to have thrown off the Gupta yoke in the second half of the sixth century A.D. In the fourth and fifth centuries Bengal undoubtedly acknowledged the suzerainty of the Gupta Empire. The reference to Samatāṭa in Eastern Bengal as a pratyanta or border state in the Allahabad Pillar Inscription of the emperor Samudra Gupta proves that the Imperial dominions must have embraced the whole of Western and Central Bengal, while the inclusion of Northern Bengal (Puṇḍravardhana bhukti) within the empire from the days of Kumāra Gupta I (A. D. 443-44) to A. D. 543-44¹ is sufficiently attested by the Dāmodarpur plates. Samatāṭa, though outside the limits of the Imperial provinces, had, nevertheless, been forced to feel the irresistible might of the Gupta arms. The Harāhā Inscription of Īśānavarman, however, shows that the political situation had changed completely about the middle of the sixth century A.D. A new power, viz, that of the Gauḍas, was first rising to importance in the valley of the Lower Ganges. Gauḍa was already known to Pāṇini² and the Kautilīya Arthaśāstra.³ The grammarian seems to associate it with the East.⁴ A passage occurring in the Matsya, Kūrma and *Līṅga Purāṇas*⁵ has, however, been taken to mean that the Śrāvastī region was the cradle of the Gauḍa people. But the passage in question does not occur in the corresponding text of the Vāyu and Brahma Purāṇas and the Mahābhārata.⁶ In early literature the people of the Śrāvastī region are always referred to as the Kosalas. Vātsyāyana, the author of the Kūmasūtra, writing probably in the third or fourth century of the Christian era, refers to Gauḍa

1 For the date, see Ep. Ind., XVII, Oct., 1924, p. 345.

2 VI. ii. 100.

3 ii. 13.

4 Cf. VI. ii. 99.

5 Nirmitā yena Śrāvastī Gauḍa-deśe dvijottamāḥ.

Matsya, XII, 30, cf. Līṅga, I. 65.

Nirmitā yena Śrāvastī Gauḍadeśe mahāpurī (Kūrma, I. 20. 19).

6 Yajñe Śrāvastako rājā Śrāvastī yena nirmitā (Vāyu, 88. 27; Brahma, VII, 53).

Tasya Śrāvastako jñeyaḥ Śrāvastī yena nirmitā (Mbh., III, 201. 4).

and Kosala as names of distinct countries.¹ Gauḍa in the Matsya-Kūrma-Liṅga MSS. may have been inserted as a Sanskritised form of Goṇḍa in the same way as the term Madra-maṇḍala is employed to denote the Madras Presidency, by some modern paydits of the Southern Presidency, as well as other scholars and journalists who are unacquainted with the topography of Ancient India.² In the Central Provinces the name "Gond" is very often Sanskritised into Gauḍa.³ Varāhamihira, writing in the sixth century A.D., places Gauḍaka in the Eastern division of India. He does not include Gauḍa in the list of countries situated in the Madhyadeśa. Mention is no doubt made of a place called Guḍa. But, if Alberuni⁴ is to be believed, Guḍa is Thanesar and not Oudh. The use of the term Pañcha Gauḍa as the designation of a territory embracing Northern India as far as Kanauj and the river Sarasvati, is distinctly late and dates only from the twelfth century A. D. The term is possibly reminiscent of the Gauḍa empire of Dharmapāla and Devapāla, and cannot be equated with the ancient realm of the Gauḍas in the early centuries of the Christian era. The distinct statement in the Harāhā Inscription that the Gauḍas were on the sea-shore clearly suggests that the Bengal littoral and not Oudh, was the seat of the people in the sixth century A. D. In the next century, their king Śaśāṅka is found in possession of Kāraṣuvarṇa near Murshidābād. In the century that follows, a Gauḍa appears, in the Gauḍa-raho of Vākpati-rāja, as the occupant of the throne of Magadha. The zenith of Gauḍa power is reached in the ninth century when the Gauḍa dominion extends over the Gangetic Doāb and Kanauj. About the early kings of the Gauḍas our information is meagre. Certain copper-plate inscriptions, discovered in the Faridpur and Burdwan⁵ Districts, disclose the existence of three kings—Dharmāditya, Gopachandra⁶ and Samāchāradeva, who are

1 For Kosalā, see daśanachchhedyā-prakaraṇam; for Gauḍa, see nakha-chchhedyā prakaraṇam and dāvarakṣhikā-prakaraṇam.

2 Cf. Geiger's translation of Mahāvamśa, p. 62n.

3 Cf. Imperial Gazetteer of India, Provincial Series, Central Provinces, p. 158.

4 i. 300.

5 Mallasārula Plate (S. P. Patrikā, 1344, 17).

6 Gopachandra may be the Gopākhyā nṛpati who was apparently a contemporary and rival of Prakaṣāditya, son of Bhānu Gupta (Ārya-Mañjuśrī-mūla- described as overlords of Navyāvakāśikā, Vāraka-maṇḍala, and, in one case, of Varḍdamāna-bhukti (Burdwan Division). The Vappaghoshavāṭa inscription introduces to us a fourth king, viz., Jayanāga, who ruled at Karṇasuvarṇa. These kings are, however, not expressly referred to as Gaudas. The earliest king, to whom that epithet is applied is the famous Śaśāṅka, the great rival of Rājya-vardhana of Thanesar and his brother Harsha. The title Mahārājādhirāja assumed by the Bengal kings mentioned above, leaves no room for doubt that they no longer acknowledged the suzerainty of the Guptas and set themselves up as independent sovereigns.

The uprising of the Pushyamitras, the invasions of the Huns and the intransigentism of provincial governors and feudatories, were not the only sources of trouble to the Guptas in the last days of their sovereignty. Along with foreign inroads and provincial insubordination we should not fail to take note of the dissensions in the Imperial family itself. The theory of a struggle amongst the sons of Kumāra Gupta I may or may not be true, but there is evidence to show that the descendants of Chandra Gupta II did not pull on well together, and the later kings who bore the Gupta name sometimes took opposite sides in the struggles and convulsions of the period. The later imperial Guptas do not seem to have been on friendly terms with their Vākāṭaka cousins. Narendrasena Vākāṭaka, a great-grandson of Chandra-gupta II through his daughter Prabhāvatī, seems to have come into hostile contact with the lord of Mālava. Narendrasena's cousin Harishena claims victories over Avanti. Inasmuch as the Guptas are associated with parts of Mālava as late as the time of Harsha, some of the victories gained by the Vākāṭakas must have been won over their Gupta cousins. In the seventh century A.D. Deva Gupta appears as an enemy of Harsha's family, while Mādhava Gupta was a friend.

Lastly, it is interesting to note that while the earlier Guptas were staunch Brāhmanists, some of whom did not scruple to kalpa, ed. G. Śāstri, p. 637). It is not altogether improbable that Dhakārākhyā (ibid., p. 644) is identical with Dharmāditya. Was he a younger brother (anuja) of Vakārākhyā (Vajra) and Pakārākhyā (Prakāṣāditya)? If this surmise turns out to be correct he may have belonged to the Gupta line.

engage in sacrifices involving the slaughter of living beings, the later kings or at least some of them, e. g., Budha (Buddha) Gupta, Tathāgata Gupta and Bālāditya had Buddhist leanings. As in the case of Aśoka after the Kalinga war and Harsha after his intimate relation with the Chinese Master of the Law, the change of religion probably had its repercussions on the military and political activities of the Empire. In this connection it is interesting to recall a story recorded by Hiuen Tsang. When "Mahirakula," the Hun tyrant ruling at Śākala, proceeded to invade the territory of Bālāditya, the latter said to his ministers, "I hear that these thieves are coming, and I cannot fight with them (their troops); by the permission of my ministers I will conceal my poor person among the bushes of the morass." Having said this he withdrew to an island with many of his subjects. Mihirakula came in pursuit but was taken alive as a captive. He was, however, set free and allowed to go away on the intercession of the Queen Mother.¹ We do not know how far the story is authentic. But it seems that Indians of the seventh century A.D. from whom the Chinese pilgrim must have derived his information, did not credit the later Buddhist rulers of the Gupta dynasty with the possession of much courage or military vigour, though they bear testimony to their kindness and piety. The misplaced clemency of Bālāditya and his mother helped to prolong the tyrannical rule of Mihirakula and gave Yaśodharman and the succeeding aspirants for imperial dominion, viz., Īśānavarman and Prabhākara-vardhana, an opportunity of which they were not slow to take advantage and thereby seal the doom not only of the Hun (Yetha), but also of the Gupta domination in Northern India.

1 Beal, Sī-yu-ki, I, 168 f.; Watters, I, 288-89.

APPENDIX E.

KINGDOMS, PEOPLES AND DYNASTIES OF TRANS-VINDHYAN INDIA CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED.

Brāhmaṇa Period :—1. Nishadhas (capital Giriprastha, Mbh., III, 324. 12).

2. Vidarbhas (capital Kuṇḍina) and other Bhojas.

3. Dasyu tribes—Andhras, Śabarās, Pulindas and Mūtibas.

Sūtra Period :—1. Māhishmatī (Māndhātā or Maheśvara, IA, 4, 346).

2. Bhṛigu-Kachchha (Broach).

3. Śūrpāraka (Sopara in the Koṅkaṇ).

4. Āsmaka (capital Paudanya, Bodhan).

5. Mūlaka (capital Pratishṭhāna).

6. Kaliṅga (capital Dantapura).

7. (?) Ukkala (N. Orissa).

Rāmāyaṇic Period :—Aryan Expansion south of the Godāvari—settlement on the Pampā—exploration of Malaya, Mahendra and Laṅkā.

Maurya Period :—

1. Aparāntas proper (capital Śūrpāraka)

2. Bhojas (capital Kuṇḍina ?).

3. Rāshṭrikas (capital Nāsik ?).

4. Petenikas (of Pratishṭhāna ?).

5. Pulindas (capital Pulinda-nagara).

Maurya Empire.

6. Andhras (capital Bezvāḍa etc. ?).

7. Aṭavi.

8. Kaliṅgas (including Tosali and Samāpā).

9. Viceroyalty of Suvarṇagiri.

10. Ahāra of Isila.

11. Cholas.

12. Pāṇḍyas.

13. Keralaputra.

14. Satiyaputra (Satyabhūmi of Keralolpatti ?).

15. Tāmraparṇi (Ceylon).

EARLY KINGDOMS OF SOUTHERN INDIA 637

- Early Post-Maurya Period :—
1. Kingdom of Vidarbha.
 2. Śātavāhanas of Dakṣiṇāpatha.
 3. Chetas of Kaliṅga.
 4. Kingdom of Pithuḍa near Masulipatam.
 5. „ „ Chola.
 6. „ „ Pāṇḍya.
 7. „ „ Kerala.
 8. „ „ Ceylon (sometimes ruled by Chola princes).

- Age of the Periplus :—
1. Ariake under Mambarus (or Nam-banus ?).
 2. Dachinabades under Saraganus and his successors (i.e., the Deccan under the Śātavāhana-Śātakarṇis).
 3. Damirica (Tamilakam, Draviḍa) including :—
 - (a) Cerobothra (Keralaputra).
 - (b) The Pandian Kingdom.
 - (c) (Kingdom of) Argaru (=Uragapura).
 4. Masalia (Masulipatam).
 5. Dosarene (=Tosali).

- Age of Ptolemy :—
1. Kingdom of Baithana (Pratishṭhāna) ruled by Pulumāyi (Śātavāhana).
 2. Kingdom of Hippokoura (Kolhapur), ruled by Baleokouros (Vilivāyakura).
 3. Kingdom of Mousopalle (in the Kanarese Country).
 4. „ „ Karoura ruled by Kerobothros (Keralaputra).
 5. Pounnata (S. W. Mysore).
 6. Kingdom of the Aioi (capital Kottiarā in
S. Travancore).
 7. Kingdom of the Kareoi (Tāmrparṇi Valley).
 8. Kingdom of Modoura (Madurā) ruled by 'Pandion' (Pāṇḍya).

9. Kingdom of the Batoi (capital Nikama).
10. Kingdom of Orthoura, ruled by "Sornagos" (Chola-Nāga ?).
11. Kingdom of Sora (Chola) ruled by Arkatos.
12. Kingdom of Malanga (Kāñchi ? Mavilangai ?), ruled by Basaronagas (°Naga?)
13. Kingdom of Pitundra (Pithuḍa).

- A. D. 150-350 :—
1. Abhiras (N. Mahārāshṭra and W. India).
 2. Vākātakas (Berar and adjoining provinces), and chiefs of Mahākāntāra.
 3. Kingdoms of South Kosala, Kaurāla, Koṭṭura, Eraṇḍapalla, Devarāshṭra (under the Vaśishṭha family ?), Piśhāpura (under the Māṭhara-kulā ?), Avamukta, Palakka, Kusthalapura.
 4. Kingdom of Andhrāpatha (and Veṅgi) :—
 - (a) Ikshvākus.
 - (b) Rulers of the Ananda-gotra (Kandarapura).
 - (c) Bṛihatphalāyanas of Kudura etc.
 - (d) Śālaṅkāyanas (Salakenoi of Ptolemy ?) of Veṅgipura, one of whom was Hastivarman of Veṅgi.
 5. Pallavas of Kāñchi.
 6. Śātakarṇis of Kuntala.

- A. D. 350-600 :—
1. Traikūṭakas and Mauryas of the Koṅkan ; and Lāṭas, Nāgas and Gurjaras of South Gujarāt.
 2. Vākātakas (C. Deccan).
 3. Kaṭachchuris (N. Mahārāshṭra and Mālwa).
 4. Kings of Śarabhapura (S. Kosala ?).
 5. Kingdoms of Uḍra, Koṅgoda, Kalīṅga [under the Vaśishṭha family, the Māṭhara-kulā, the Mudgala family (Ep. Ind. xxiii. 199 ff) and Eastern Gaṅgas] ; Leṇḍulura (under Viśṇukundins) in East Deccan.

LATER DYNASTIES OF SOUTHERN INDIA 639

6. Pallavas of Kāñchī (in Dramila or Dravida).
7. Cholas, Pāṇdyas, Mūshakas and Keralas of the Far South.
8. Gaṅgas and Alupas of S. Mysore, Shimoga and S. Kanara.
9. Bāṇas of E. Mysore and N. Arcot, Kekayas of Dāvāṅgere tāluk, Kadambas of Vaijayanti etc. and Sendrakas of Nāgarakhaṇḍa (N. W. Mysore), or of the Tumkur region.
10. Nalas of (a) Pushkari who governed the Poḍāgaḍh region (Jeypore Agency), (b) Yeotmal in Berar and perhaps also (c) the Bellary District.
11. Early Chalukyas of Vātāpi.

- After A. D. 600 :—
1. Silāhāras of Koṅkaṇ.
 2. Early Chalukyas, Rāshṭrakuṭas including the lines of Mānadeśa etc., Later Chalukyas, Kalachuryas and Yādavas of W. Deccan.
 3. Haihayas, Kalachuris or Chedis of Tripurī and Ratnapura, and Nāgas of Chakrakūṭa (C.P.).
 4. Eastern Chālukyas, Chiefs of Velnāḍu, and Kākatīyas of the Telugu Country, Eastern Gaṅgas of Kālīṅga and Orissa, Karas, Śābaras (? Śāśadhara and Pāṇḍu family) and Somavamśi Guptas of Mahānadi Valley (N. E. Deccan).
 5. Western Gaṅgas, Sāntaras and Hoysalas (Mysore).
 6. Pallavas of Kāñchī, Vaidumbas of Benāḍu, Kalabhras of the Tinnevely District, Cholas of Tanjore, Varmans of Kerala and Kolamba, and Pāṇdyas of Madurā (Far South).
-

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL INDEX*

A

- Abhidhāna Chintāmaṇi, 112, 432
 Abhidhānappadīpikā, 198
 Acta Orientalia, 373, 378, 418, 467
 Advance, 409
 Aelian, 275, 328
 A Guide to Sāñchī, Marshall, 267, 393, 416, 579
 A Guide to Taxila. Marshall, 60, 429, 464
 Āin-i-Ākbarī, 86
 Aiyangar Commemoration Volume, 202, 274, 309, 314, 330, 479, 512, 528, 579
 Aiyangar, S. K., 269, 328n, 329
 Ājivikas, Barua, 323
 Alberuni, 5, 333, 475, 479, 615, 619, 632
 Allan, 393, 527, et passim
 Altekar, 553
 Amarakoṣa, 391
 —Oka, 391, 520
 Amṛita Bāzār Patrikā, 300, 393
 An Account of the Kingdom of Kābul, 149
 Ancient Geography of India, 94, 100, 127, 191, 193, 259, 433, 444, 474, etc.
 Ancient Hindu Polity, N. Law, 330
 Ancient History of the Deccan, G. Jouveau-Dubreuil, 64, 89, 468, 500, 536, 539f, 607 n, 631 n
 Ancient India, Aiyangar, 328
 Ancient India, Rapson, 191, 240, 444
 Ancient India as described in Classical Literature, McCrindle, 240, 251, 276, 333
 Ancient Indian Historical Tradition, Pargiter, 8, 17, 18, 72, 81, 102, 255
 Ancient Mid-Indian Kshatriya Tribes, B. C. Law, 26, 145
 Ancient Persian Lexicon and the Texts of the Achaemenid Inscriptions. H. C. Tolman, 147, 240
 A New History of the Indian People, 398
 An Indian Ephemeris by Swami Kannu Pillai, 227
 Annals of the Bhandarkar Institute, 202, 205, 317, 391, 412
 Annals of the First Han Dynasty, 433, 459
 Annals of the Later Han Dynasty, 436, 460
 Anspach, 251
 Anukramaṇī, 66
 Apadāna, 65
 Āpastamba, 35
 A Peep into the Early History of India, R. G. Bhandarkar, 549, 612 n
 A Political History of Parthia, Debevoise, 451
 Apollodorus of Artemita, 380
 Apollonios, 454
 Appianus, 272
 Arabian Nights (Burton), 617
 —Lane, 617
 —Olcott, 617
 Āraṇyaka Aitareya, 310
 —Kauśhitaki (Śāṅkhāyana) 33, 35, 113
 —Taittirīya, 22, 41
 Aravamuthan, 413, 604
 Arch. Expl. Ind., Marshall, 129
 Archaeological Report, Cunningham, 23
 Archaeological Survey of Mysore, A. R., 604n
 Archaeological Survey of India, 126, 329, 402, 416, 418, 454, 503, 535, 540, 552, 573, 581, et passim
 Archaeological Survey of Western India, 405, 503
 Aristobulus, 250
 Arrian (Chinnock's translation), 239, et passim
 Arthaśāstra—Bārhaspatya, Ed. by F. W. Thomas, 248, 255
 —Kauṭīliya, (Shama Sastry), 9, et passim
 Āryabhaṭa, 27
 Ārya Mañjuśrī Mūlakalpa, 199, 214, 572, 577, 588f, et passim
 Aryanisation of India, N. Dutt, 19
 Aryan Rule in India, Havell, 345
 Aryans, V. Gordon Childe, 8
 Āryaśūra, 10,
 Ashtādhyāyī of Pāṇini, Ed. by S. C. Vasu, passim
 Aśoka, Bhandarkar, 303, 315
 Aśoka Edicts in a New Light, Barua, 337
 Aśoka, Macphail, 276
 Aśoka, Smith (3rd edition), ch. iv, passim
 Aśoka Text and Glossary, Woolner, 311
 Aśokavadāna, 6, 222, 554
 Aśvaghosha, 83, 193

* This Index purports to give a general idea of the kind of literature that has been utilised in preparing the work. It may also be of some little use to students. In the case of the more well-known authorities no detailed reference has been deemed to be necessary; such references will ordinarily be found in the text itself.

642 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

A Survey of Persian Art, 239, 451

Athenaios, 277

Atthakathā, 214

Aucitya-Vicāra Carcā, 564

Avadāna-kalpalatā, 381

Āvasyaka-Kathānakas, 204

A volume of Indian Studies presented to Prof. E. J. Rapson, 341, 432

B

Bābar-nāma (in English), A. S. Beveridge, 268

Bakhe, V. S., 523

Bāna, pt. II, passim

Banerji, R. D., 223, 404, 471, 482, 495, 585, et passim

Bārhaspatya Artha-Śāstra, 248

Barnett, L. D. 8, 218, 223, 270, 331, 376,
413, et passim

Barua, B. M., 125, 236, 275, 336, 343, 375,
394, 420, et passim

Barua, K. L., 543

Basāk, R. G., 563, 588, 604n

Bauddha Dharma Kosha, 236

Beal, 63, 126, 215, 333, 460, 557, 595

Beginnings of Buddhist Art, Foucher, 430

Beginnings of South Indian History, 231, 269, 328, 517

Beloch, 331

Bevan, 258

Bhandarkar Commemoration Volume, 200,
409, 606 n

Bhandarkar, D. R., 182

Bhandarkar, R. G., pt. ii, passim

Bharata Mallika, 256

Bhārtavarsha, 627n

Bhāsa, 47, 131, 203

Bhāṭṭasāli, N. K., 543, 588, 627

Bhavabhūti, 56, 80, 171

Bhavanagar, Inscriptions, 516

Bhilsa Topas, 238, 298

Bhoja, 512, 564

Bigandet, 295

Black Yajus (Keith), 165, 168

Bloch, 560

Bloomfield, 13

Bodhāyana, 309

Bombay Gazetteer, see Gazetteer, Bombay

Book of Kindred Sayings, (where the volume is not specified, volume I is to be understood) Mrs. Rhys Davids, 120, 124, 155, 198, 206 f, 210, 349

Bose, A. K., 336

Brāhmaṇa—

———Aitareya, Part I., pt. II, ch. i-iv,
3, et passim

———Aitareya (Keith), 37, 157, 163

———Aitareya (Trivedi's Trans.) 44

———Gopatha, 39, 51, 66, 68, 100

———Jaiminiya, 46, 51, 86

———Jaiminiya Upanishad 25, 44, 101, 102, 175

———Kaushitaki, 62, 73

———Pāñchaviṃśa or Tāṇḍya, 36, 44
46, 48, 81, 101, 359

———Sāmhitopanishad, 71

———Śatapatha, Eggeling, pt. i, pt. ii,
ch. i-ii, 3, et passim

———Vamśa, 44, 50, 149, 370

Bṛihat Kathā 202, 221

Bṛihaddevatā, 25

Bṛihat Sāmhitā (Varāhamihira, ed. Kern),
29, 249, 300, 330, 352, 386, 485, 491,
602, 619, et passim

Buddha, Oldenberg, 24, 52, 72, 113, 131, 191

Buddha Charita, 88, 193

Buddhaghosha, 111, 207, 312

Buddhist Conception of Spirits, Law, 133,
150, 289

Buddhist India, Rhys Davids, 57, 100, 105,
108, 132, 147, 154, 191, 614

Buddhist Studies (ed. Law), 221, 475, 506
614

Buddhist Suttas, see Suttas, Buddhist

Bühler, pt. II, passim

Bunyu Nanjio, Catalogue, 3, 469, 616

Bury, 121, 261

C

Caland, 1, 37, 46, 359

Calcutta Review, 4, 8, 432, 453, 466, 473,
479, 514, 540, 581, 626

Cambridge Ancient History, vol. I, 139

Cambridge History of India, vol. I,
167, 240, 247, et passim

Cambridge History of India, vol. III, 449

Cambridge Shorter History of India, 452,
463, 467, 477, 485

Carl Cappeller, 5

Carlleyle, 127

Carmichael Lectures (1918), 67, 74, 76,
117, 133, 143, 225, 253, 308, 397, 475

Catalogue of Coins, Allan (Ancient India),
373, 391f, 393, 402, 511, 544

Catalogue of Coins, Allan (Guptas), 377,
529, et passim

———Gardner, 424

———Rapson (Andhras and W. Kshatrapas), 314, 404, 408, 415, 444, 448,
469, 475, et passim

———Smith (Indian Museum), 402, 428,
463, 482, 515, et passim

———Whitehead (Indo-Greeks and Indo-Scythians), 385, 420, 425, 438,
452, 459, 463, 477, 478, et passim

Ceylonese Chronicles, passim

Chakravarti, M., 602 n

Champā, R. C. Majumdar, 148

Chanda, R. P., 218, 223, 224, 375 f, 388
404

Chandragomin, 628

Charpentier, 296, 340, 479, 579

Chatterji, B. R., 148

Chatterji, S. K., 535,

Chattopadhyaya, K. P., 409
 Chaucer, 382
 Chhavillākara, 309
 Coins of Ancient India, Cunningham, 391, 393
 Corporate Life in Ancient India, R. C. Majumdar, 140
 Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum, Vol. I Hultzsch, passim
 Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum, Vol. II, Konow, passim
 Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum, Vol. III, Fleet, passim
 Cunningham, passim
 Curtius, 232; et passim
 Cyril, 617

D

Dacca Review, 590
 Dacca University Journal, 616n
 Dasa-kumāra-Charita, 107, 148, 253
 Desikar, S. S., 310
 Devibhāgavatam, 45
 Devī-Chandraguptam, 512, 554
 Devī-Māhātmya, 5
 Dey, N. L. 67, 108, 129, 330
 Dhammapada Commentary, 120, 124, 333,
 Dhoyi, 99, 539
 Dhruva, 352
 Dialogues of the Buddha, 75, 87, 109, 124,
 126, 127, 128, 154, 198, 214, 256, 323,
 327, 341, 408
 Dictionary of Pāli Proper Names, Malalasekera, 36, 85, 88, 131, 192, 194, 195, 200, 201, 202, 208, 211, 214
 Die Kosmographie Der Inder, 95, 330
 Dikshit, 409, 535
 Dikshitar, 413
 Diodorus, 237, et passim
 Dipavaṃsa, 331
 Divekar, 548, 568
 Divyāvadāna (Cowell and Neil), 66, 135,
 196, 267, et passim
 Dowson, 452 465
 D. R. Bhandarkar Volume, 383
 Dubreuil, 64, 89, 373, 468, 469 ff, 500, 536,
 539 ff, 602 n, 612 n
 Dvātrīṃśat-puttalikā, 219
 Dynasties of the Kali Age, Pargiter, 17, 22, 29, 113, 114, 201, 220, 236, 355, et passim
 ————Kanarese Districts, Fleet, 23, 235

E

Early Empires of Central Asia, McGovern,
 628 n
 Early History of Bengal, see Monahan
 Early History of the Dekkan, R. G.
 Bhandarkar, 401, 413, 417, et passim

Early History of India, Vincent Smith,
passim
 Early History of the Vaiṣṇava Sect,
 Raychaudhuri, 31, 41, 141, 171, 263,
 430
 Early Pallavas, D. C. Sircar, 523
 Eggeling, 1, 39, et passim
 Eliot (Hinduism and Buddhism), 108, 148,
 333, 469, 615 f
 Elphinstone, 149
 Epigraphia Indica, passim
 Erskine, K. D. (Rājputāna Gazetteer), 266
 Essay on Guṇādhya, 117, 146, 147, 202,
 204, 221
 Excavations at Harappa, 122

F

Fa Hien, Legge, 194, 209, 558, et passim
 Fan-ye, 429, 460 f
 Felix Lacote, 202
 Fergusson, 469
 Ferishta, 479 n
 Fick, The Social Organization in North-
 East India, trans., S. Maitra, 1, 146,
 177, 318
 Fleet, pt. II, passim
 Foreign Elements in the Hindu Population, 383
 Foucher, 60, 423, 430, 432
 Franke, 466
 Fundamental Unity of India, Radhakumud Mookerjee, 163, 165

G

Gaṇapātha, 252
 Gaṇḍavyūha, 306
 Gangooly, O. C., 223
 Ganguly D. C., 596 n
 Garde, 561, 567, 571
 Gardner, see Catalogue of Coins
 Gārgī Samhitā, 217, 352, 360, 365
 Gauḍavaho, 611, 633
 Gazetteer—Amraoti, 87
 —Bombay, Vol. I, Pt II, passim.
 —Godāvari District, 540
 —Rājputāna, IIA, the Mewar
 Residency, 266
 —Vizagapatam, 539
 Geiger, passim
 Geographical Dictionary, 67, 129
 Ghosh, A., 613 n
 Ghosh, Bhramar, 413
 Ghosh, Haricharan, 618, 621
 Ghoshal, U. N., see Hindu Revenue System
 Gītā, 141, 395
 Goldstücker, 34, 383
 Goṣwami, K. G. 473

644 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

- Great Epic of India, Hopkins, 4, 40, 142, 171
 Guṇāḍhya, Essay on, see Essay on Guṇāḍhya
 Gune, 202
 Gupta, Y. R., 484, 601
- H
- Hāla, 407, 557, 564
 Hamilton and Falconer, pt. II, ch. iii-viii, passim
 Hardy, Manual of Buddhism, 110
 Harisvāmin, 17, 69, 131
 Hārī Krishna Dev, 76, 423
 Harivaṁśa, 15, 87, 91, 107, 131, 133, 141, 145, 193, 327, et passim
 Harsha Charita, ed. Parab, 6, 182, et passim
 —Cowell and Thomas, 222, 469
 Harvard Oriental Series (28-30), 108, 136, et passim
 Hastings, 475
 Havell, 345
 Heaven and Hell in Buddhist Perspective, B. C., Law, 143, 155
 Hemchandra, 207, et passim
 Heras (JBORS), 596
 Hermann, 431
 Herodotus, 240
 Herzfeld, 182, 240, 428, 431, 482
 Hillebrandt, 164
 Hinduism and Buddhism, see Eliot
 Hindu Civilisation, Mookerji, 356
 Hindu Polity, Jayaswal, 258
 Hindu Revenue system, Ghoshal, 283
 Hindusthan Review, 581, 590
 Historical Inscriptions of Southern India, 570
 Historical Position of Kalki, Jayaswal, 597
 History of Ancient India, Tripathi, 606 n
 History of Bengal (D. U.), 256
 History of Buddhist Thought. E. J. Thomas, 96
 History of Central and Western-India, Ghosh, 391, 418
 History of Egypt under the Ptolemaic Dynasty, (Mahaffy), 615 n
 History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon, Smith, 345, 430
 History of Greece for Beginners, Bury, 121, 261
 History of Hindu Political Theories, Ghoshal 160
 History of India, K. P. Jayaswal, 537, 589, 597 n
 History of Indian and Indonesian Art Coomaraswami, 308, 430
 History of Indian Literature, Weber, 49, 65, 69, 113
 History of Indian Literature, Winternitz, 11
 History of Mediaeval India, C. V. Vaidya, 24
 History of Sanskrit Literature, Keith, 391, 430
 History of Sanskrit Literature, Macdonell, 3, 54
 History of Sanskrit Literature, Max Müller, 356
 Hsien-Tsang, passim
 Hoernle, 199, 583, 605 n, 608 n
 Hocoy, 193
 Hoffmann, 442
 Holdich, 247
 Hopkins, 2, 4, 40, 171, 430
 Hoyland, (The Empire of the Great Mogol), 543 Hultzsch, see Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum, I
- I
- Iconography, Bhattasali, 543
 Illustrated London News, 242
 Imperial Gazetteer, the Indian Empire 94, 430
 —C. P. 633
 Imperial History of India, Jayaswal, et passim
 India in 1932-33, 441
 India, What it can teach us, 430
 Indian Antiquary, passim
 Indian Culture, 10, 87, 99, 109, 125, 155, 171, 199, 265, 269, et passim
 Indian Cultural Influence in Cambodia, 148
 Indian Historical Journal, 507
 Indian Historical Quarterly, passim
 Indian Studies in Honour of C. R. Lanman, 467, 564
 Indica, see Megasthenes
 Indrajī, Bhagwanlāl, 374
 Intercourse between India and Western World, Rawlinson, 384
 Introduction to the Pratimānāṭaka, 316
 Introduction to the Kalpa Sūtra of Bhadrabāhu, Jacobi, 350
 Invasion of India by Alexander, McCrindle, 232, 237, et passim
 Isidor of Charax, 382, 431
 I-Tsing, 108, 305
 Iyengar, Srinivāsa, 92
- J
- Jackson, 182, 202
 Jacobi, 1, 11, 213, 350

- Jaina Canon, 11
 Jainism in North India, C. J. Shah, 295,
 548, 629 n
 Jātaka, Camb. ed.; also Fausbøll, 11, 99,
 107, et passim
 —Arāmadūsa (268), 98
 —Asātarūpa (100), 154
 —Assaka (207), 98, 144
 —Aṭṭhāna (425), 76
 —Bāveru (339), 614
 —Bhaddasāla (465), 97, 99, 128, 209
 —Bhallāṇiya (504), 98
 —Bhojajāṇiya (23), 98
 —Bhūridatta (543), 96, 149, 615
 —Brahāchatta (336), 97, 153
 —Brahmadatta (323), 135
 —Champeyya (506), 107, 110
 —Chatta (336), 105
 —Chetiya (422), 129
 —Chullakālīṅga (301), 124, 143, 144
 —Chulla Sutasoma (525), 173
 —Darimukha (378), 76, 161
 —Dasa Brāhmaṇa (495), 41, 133
 —Dasappaka (401), 161
 —Daśaratha, (461), 78, 162
 —Dhajāvihetha (391), 74
 —Dhonasākhā (353), 97, 133, 192
 —Dhumakāri (413), 133
 —Dummedha (50), 76, 175
 —Ekapanna (149), 119, 124
 —Ekarāja (303), 154
 —Gagga (155), 201
 —Gaṇḍatindu (520), 135
 —Gandhāra (406), 53, 146
 —Gaṇḍamāla (421), 76
 —Ghata (454), 105, 141
 —Ghaṭa (355), 154
 —Guttila (243), 96
 —Haritamāta (239), 154, 206, 210
 —Hatthimaṅgal (163), 323
 —Jayadissa (513), 135
 —Kaliṅga Bodhi (479), 65
 —Khaṇḍahāla (542), 176
 —Kosabmi (428), 97, 153
 —Kumbha (512), 105
 —Kumbhakāra (408), 82, 86, 135, 146
 —Kummāsapaṇḍa, (415), 76, 210
 —Kunāla (536), 97, 153, 192
 —Kurudhamma (276), 133
 —Kusa (531), 65, 100, 126, 127, 162
 —Lomasa Kassapa (433), 76
 —Machchha (75), 105
 —Mahāassāroha (302), 173
 —Mahājanaka (539), 53, 107
 —Mahā Kaṇha (469), 66
 —Mahā Nārada Kassapa (544), 66
 —Mahāsīlava (51), 154
 —Mahāsutasoma (537), 134
 —Mahā Ummagga (546), 53, 136
 —Maṅgala (87), 323
 —Mātaṅga (497), 203
 —Mātiposaka (455), 76
 —Mūsika (373), 206
 —Nandīya Miga (385), 105
 —Nimi (541), 55, 66, 82, 83, 135
 —Padakusalamānava (432), 176
 —Padañjali (247), 161, 174
 —Sabbamitta (512), 105
 —Sachchamkira (73), 161, 176
 —Sambhava (515), 96, 134
 —Sambulā (519), 76
 —Samkicchha (530), 142
 —Samugga (436), 617
 —Saṁvara (462), 161, 174
 —Sarabha miga (483), 96
 —Sarabhaṅga (522), 91
 —Sattubhastha (492), 75
 —Serivānīj (3), 92
 —Setaketo (377), 62
 —Seyya (282), 154
 —Somanassa (505), 73, 135
 —Sonaka (519), 161, 174
 —Sopa Nanda (532), 98, 143, 153
 —Suruchi (489), 53, 97, 162
 —Susima (163), 59
 —Susima (411), 76, 146
 —Sussondi (360), 614
 —Tachchhasūkara (492), 206, 210
 —Tandulanāli (5), 74
 —Telapatta (96), 59, 146, 177
 —Tesakuna (521), 154
 —Thusa (338), 206
 —Udaya (458), 98
 —Uddālaka (487), 61, 77
 —Ummadanti (527), 253
 —Vaddhakisūkara (283), 154, 206, 210
 —Vedabbha (48), 130
 —Vessantara (547), 175, 253, 418
 —Vidhurapaṇḍita (545), 97, 106, 110, 134
 Jātakamālā, 10
 Jayaswal, pt. II, passim
 Jinacharita, 125
 Jinaprabha sūri, 351
 Jinasena, 627
 Jñānaprasthāna, 3
 Johnston, 10
 Jolly, 251
 Journal Asiatique, 109, 150, 305
 —of the American Oriental Society, 86
 —of the Andhra Research Society, 397
 —of the Asiatic society of Bengal, passim
 —of the Bihār and Orissa Research Society, passim
 —of Indian History, 49, 51
 —of the Dacca University, 616
 —of the Department of Letters (Calcutta University), 429, 433, 447
 —of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland, passim
 —of the U. P. Historical Society, 256
 Justin, 233, 238, et passim

K

- Kadambakula (Moraes), 505, 630 n
 Kādambārī, Ridding, 557, 583

646 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Kālakāchārya Kathānaka, 433
 Kalhaṇa, see Rājatarāṅginī
 Kālidāsa, 203, 389, 540, 564
 Kalpadruma Kalikāvyaṅkhyā, 125
 Kalpanāmaṇḍitikā, 182, 473
 Kāmandaka, 5, 237
 Kāmasūtra, Vātsyāyana, 507, 620, 632
 Kanakasabhai Pillay, 328
 Karpūramanjari, 129
 Kāṭhaka Saṁhitā, 25, 159
 Kathākośa, 209, 211, 216
 Kathā-Sarit-Sāgara, Durgāprasād and,
 Parab, 32 f, 66, 114, 220, 224, 630
 —Tawney, 203, 221, 556
 Kātyāyana (grammarians), 328
 Kaumudī-mahotsava, 527
 Kauṭilya (see Arthaśāstra)
 Kaveri, Maukhari and the Sangam Age, see Aravamuthan
 Kāvya-darśa, 606 n
 Kāvya-mīmāṃsā, 221, 407, 478, 549
 Keith, I. G., 13, 19, 77, 82, 136, 158, 164 f 168 f, 171, 370, et passim
 Kennedy, 456, 466, 478
 Keralotpatti, 330
 Kern, 319, 354, 386
 Kielhorn, passim
 Kingsmill, 458
 Kittel's Dictionary, 45
 Knights Tale, 382
 Konow, see Sten Konow
 Kramadīśvara, 382
 Kshemendra, 223, 381, 564
 Kshiraśvāmin, 290
 Kumāralāta (Kalpanāmaṇḍitikā), 473
 Kuvalayamālā, 629 n,

L

Lalitavistara, 578
 Lane, see Arabian Knights
 Lassen, 1
 Law, B. C., 26, 65, 111, 122, 124, 128, 133, 143, 145
 Law, N. 330
 Legge, 309, also see Fa Hien
 Le Monde Oriental, 298
 Levi, Sylvain, passim
 Life of Alexander, 233, 268
 —of Apollonius, 439, 455 f
 —of Buddha (Rockhill), 120
 —of Hiuen Tsang, 111, 557, 588, 595
 —of Vasubandha, Paramārtha, 182
 List of Southern Inscriptions, Kielhorn, 253
 —Northern Inscriptions, 472
 Lokavibhāga, 501
 Lüders, passim

M

Macauliffe's Sikh Religion, 235
 Macdonell, passim, esp. 1, 3, 13, 77, 81, 370
 Macphail, Aśoka, 276
 Mc Govern, Early Empires of Central Asia,
 628 n.
 Mahābhārata, 3; et passim —translation by Dutt (M. N.), 17, et passim
 —by Ray (P. C.), 17
 —A Criticism, C. V., Vaidya, 42
 —Java text, 16, 19
 Mahābhāshya, Patañjali, passim
 Mahābodhivamsa, 222, 231, 236, 287
 Mahaffy, A History of Egypt under the Ptolemaic Dynasty, 615
 Mahāmāyūrī, 434
 Mahāvagga, passim, esp. 97, 106, 111, 124,
 153, 155, 173
 Mahāvamsa, 6, 225, 331, 614, et passim
 Mahāvamsa, Geiger, 117, et passim
 —Tikā, 219, 248, 269
 —Turnour, 117, 219, 267, 281
 Mahāvastu, 89, 91, 95, 100, 334, 628
 Mahāvibhāshā, 3
 Mahavira-Charita, 56, 80
 Majumdar, R. C., passim
 Majumdar, N. G., 434, 520
 Majumdar, S. N., 193, 567
 Matala, 423
 Mālahākhāravatthu, 116
 Mālavikāgnimitram, 329, 369 ff, 390
 —Tawney, 369 ff, 390
 Malcolm, 64
 Mamulanāt, 269
 Mānasi O Marmavāṇī, 309
 Manual of Buddhism, 110
 Manusāṁhitā, 68, 123
 Mārgabūmi Sūtra, 469
 Marshall, Sir John, passim
 McCridle, passim
 Mediaeval Hindu India, 253, 517
 Megasthenes and Arrian, 273 ff, 282, 292, 330
 Meghadūta, 94, 203, 557
 Mehta, Ratilal, 136
 Memoirs of the Archaeological Survey of India, 224, 240, 404, et passim
 Memoirs of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, 404
 Milinda Pañho. (S. B. E.), 238, 269, 418, 432, 507, 620
 —(Trenckner), 381, 388
 Mirashi, 497
 Mitra, S. N., 65
 Mitra, R. L., 3, 61, 300
 Modern Europe, Lodge, 176
 Modern Review, 122, 214, 223, 371, 426,
 431, 527, 542, 593
 Monahan, 277, 281, 285, 339
 Monuments of Sāñchi, 405

- Moraes, see Kadambakula
 Mrichchhakatika, 562
 Mudrārākshasa, 237, 266, 269, 295, 512, 554, 562
 Mysore and Coorg from the Inscriptions, see Rice

N

- Nāgari Prachārīṇī Patrikā, 371
 Nandisūtra, 9
 Nariman, 202
 Nātyadarpaṇa, 512
 Nātyaśāstra, 563
 Nazim, Life and Times of Sultan Mahmud, 482
 Nikāya—
 —Aṅguttara, passim
 —Dīgha, 99, 207, et passim
 —Majjhima, passim
 —Samyutta, 155, 206, 210
 Nilakantha Sastri, K. A., see Pandyan Kingdom
 Nilakantha, (Commentator), 67, 145
 Nirukta, Yaska, 111, 112, 161
 —ed. Kshemaraja. Srikrishna Das Sresthi, 25
 Nitisāra, Kāmandaka, 237
 Nītvākyaṃṛita (Somadeva), 578
 Norris, 331
 Notes on the Ancient Geography of Gandhāra, Foucher, 60
 Numismatic Chronicle, 252

O

- Ogden, 202
 Old Brāhmi Inscriptions, Barua, 312, 419
 Oldenberg, I, 13, 24, 52, 54, 58, 72, 113, 131
 Olcott, see Arabian Nights
 Oldham, 544
 Onesikritos, 251
 Origin and Development of Bengali Language (Chatterji), 535
 Origin of the Chalukyas, R. S. Satyasray, 603
 Orosius, 255, 425
 Oxford History of India, V. A. Smith, 223, 276, 295, 302, 348, 373, 463, 581

P

- Pali English Dictionary, Rhys Davids, and William Stede, 290, 520, 525, etc.
 Pandyan kingdom, 328 f, 420, 488, 546
 Panku, 456, 459
 Pan-yong, 460
 Papanichasūdani, 26
 Paramatthadipani, 65

- Paramatthajotikā, 83, 124, 125
 Parānar, 269
 Pargiter, I, et passim
 Parīśiṣṭa parvan, 207, 216, 224, 231, 265, 269, 295, 296, etc.
 Parthian Stations, Schoff, 427 f, 430
 Pātimokkha, 617
 Pāṭaliputrakalpa, Jinaprabhasuri, 351
 Patañjali (see Mahābhāṣya), —Index of words, 520
 Pavanadūtā, 539
 Penzer, The Ocean of Story, 617
 Periplus of the Erythraean Sea, Schoff, 60, 263, et passim
 Pischel, 162
 Philostratos, 430, 456
 Pliny, 93, 239, 281, 299, 310, 462
 Plutarch, 233, 260, 261, 268, 269, 272
 Political History, Raychaudhuri, 41
 Polybius, 361 f, 379
 Pompeius Trogus, 426
 Prabodha-chandrodaya, 602 n.
 Prachāṇḍa-Pāṇḍava, Cappelletti 5
 Prajñāpanā, 309
 Pratijñā Yaugandharāyana, 47, 131
 Pravachanasāroddhāra, 507
 Prabāsi 593 n, 596 n
 Pre-Aryen et Pre-Dravidien dans l'Inde, S. Lévi, 109, 150, 305, 309
 Pre-Buddhist India, 136
 Priyadarsikā, Śrī Harsha, 110, 203
 Proceedings of the Second Oriental Conference, 296
 Proceedings of the Seventh Oriental Conference, 593
 Proceedings of the Sixth Oriental Conference, 148
 Proceedings of the Third Oriental Conference, 369, 555
 Proceedings of the Seventh session of the Indian History Congress, 465, 593
 Przyluski, 413
 Ptolemy, Geographer, passim
 Ptolemy, Historian, 250
 Purāṇa—
 —Agni, 520, 620
 —Bhāgavata, 4, 5, 15, 350, 380, et passim
 —Brahma, 71, 72,
 —Brahmaṇḍa, 407 f
 —Bṛihadharma, 112
 —Kalki, 220
 —Kūrma, 304, 632
 —Liṅga, 632
 —Mārkaṇḍeya, Pargiter, 5, 72, 94 et passim
 —Matsya, passim
 —Padma, 414
 —Skanda, 620
 —Vāyu, passim
 —Vishṇu, passim

648 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

R

- Raghuvamśa, 91, 281, 304, 327, 479, 578, 606 n
 Rājasekhara, 5
 Rājasthān, Tod, 268
 Rājatarāṅginī, Kalhana, 148, 325, etc
 Rājāvalikathe, 294, 296
 Rāma-charita (Sandhyākara Nandi), 538
 Rāmdās, 539
 Rāmāyaṇa, 3, et passim
 Rapson, passim
 Ratnāvali, 203
 Raverty (Tabaqāt), Vol. I, 517
 Rawlinson, 300
 Ray, H. C., 65
 Records of the Western World, see Beal, 460
 Religion and Philosophy of the Veda and Upanishads (Keith), 19, 164 f Religions of India, Hopkins, 40, 430
 Renou, Louis, 165
 Rhys Davids, 1, passim
 Rhys Davids, Mrs. 200
 Rice, 235, 270, 295, 356, 582
 Ridding, 557
 Rig Veda Brāhmaṇas, Keith, 37, 157
 Rivett-Carnac, 391
 Rockhill, 120
 Roth, 13

S

- Sāhitya Parishat Patrikā, 633
 Sachau, Alberuni's India, see Alberuni
 Sahnī, Dayārām, 464
 Saint-Martin, V. De, 257
 Saletore, B. A., 330
 Sellet, 385
 Sāṅkhya System, Keith, 5
 Saṅgharakṣha, 469
 Sanskrit Drama (Keith), 391, 430, 563
 Sanskrit English Dictionary, Apte, 365
 Saṅkara (Commentator), 512
 Sarkar, B. K., 158
 Saraswati, Rangaswami, 512
 Sarasvati, S. K., 586
 Śāstrī, Pandit Ganapati, 47, 131, 316
 Śāstrī, Pandit H. P., 223, 354 ff, 535, 600 n
 Saundarānanda, 145
 Sāyaṇa, 158
 Schoff, 60, 263, 435, 482, 505
 Schwanbeck, 274
 Sen, J., 202
 Sen, P. C., 275
 Sen, Sukumar, 147
 Senart, passim
 Shābūrquān, Shapurkhan, 616
 Shah, C. J., 295, 548
 Shah, H. A., 369
 Shāma Sastry (see Arthasāstra)

- Siddhanta, N. K., Heroic Age of India, 17
 Sigālovāda, 341
 Sircar, D. C., 171, 393, 497, 507, 523, 602 n, 627 n
 Si-yu-ki, Beal, 63, 126, 215, 333, 588, 595
 Sketch of the Sikhs, (Malcolm), 64
 Smith, V. A., 1, et passim
 Somadeva (Author of the Kathā-Sarit-Sāgara) 223, et passim
 Somadeva (Nītivākyāmrīta), 578
 Some Ksatriya Tribes of Ancient India, 65, 124, 128
 Śonadaṇḍa sūta, 207
 South Indian Inscriptions, Hutzsch, 16, 323, 328, et passim
 Spooner, 276
 Śrīdhara, 112
 Śrīṅgārāprakāśa, 512, 564
 Śrinivasachari, C. S., 466, 517
 Sse-ki, 459
 Ssu-ma-chien, 458
 Stede, 99, 525
 Stein, Sir Aurel, Benares Hindu University Magazine, Jan., 1927, 246
 Stein, Sir Aurel, Kalhana's Rājatarāṅginī, 305
 Stein (Megasthenes and Kauṭilya), 285
 Steh Konow, passim, 618
 Strabo, see Hamilton and Falconer
 Studies in Indian Antiquities, H. C. Ray Chaudhuri, 25, 454
 Subandhu, 296
 Subramaṇiam, 329
 Successors of the Śātavāhanas in the Eastern Deccan, see Sircar, D. C.
 Sukhtibankar, 47, 412, 496
 Sukranīti, B. K. Sarkar, 158
 Sumaṅgalavilāsinī, 211, 343
 Sung-yun, 460
 Sūrya Kānta, 255
 Sūtra——Dharma :—
 —Āpastamba, 35
 —Bodhāyana (Baudhāyana), 85, 88
 —Grihya :—
 —Āśvalāyana, 33, 41
 —Sāṅkhāyana, 33
 —Jaina :—
 —Aupapātika, 209
 —Āśvayaka, 417, 485
 —Āyāraṅga, 118, 487
 —Bhagavati, 94, 207
 —Kalpa, 123, 125, 128, 209, 213
 —Nirayāvali, 125, 207, 212
 —Sūtrakritāṅga, 118
 —Uttarādhyayana, 57, 81, 82, 86, 87, 136 f, 146 f
 Sūtra, Śrauta :—
 —Āpastamba, 103, 170
 —Āśvalāyana, 58, 370

- Baudhāyana, 18, 36, 39, 101, 103, 369, 398
 —Kātyāyana, 158
 —Sāṅkhāyana, 42, 44, 74, 94, 102
 Sutta, Buddhist, 11
 —Aggañña, 99
 —Ambattha, 34, 99, 256
 —Chakkavatti Sihanāda 327
 —Kālakārāma, 614
 —Lohichcha, 34, 154
 —Mahāgovinda, 75, 87, 109, 144, 170
 —Mahāli, 124
 —Mahāparinibbāna, 105, 107, 119, 120, 122, 126 f., 212, 267
 —Mahāsudassana, 126
 —Makhādeva, 82
 —Pāyāsi, 99, 155
 —Sangiti, 126
 Sutta Nipāta, 89, 99, 120, 198
 Suvarṇadvīpa, R. C. Majumdar, 330
 Svapana-vāsavadattā, 47, 131, 133, 203, 216

T

- Tabard, 202
 Tabagāt-i-Nasiri, 517
 Takakusu, I-tsing, 340
 Tamils Eighteen Hundred Years Ago, 328
 Tantri Kāmandaka, 528
 Tāranāth, 236, 296 f., 351, 371, 602
 Tarn, Greeks in Bactria and India, 262, 272 f., 317, 380, 456
 Tawney, see Kathā-Sarīt-Sāgara,
 —The Ocean of Stories, Penzer, 617
 The North Western Provinces of India (Crooke), 241
 Therīgāthā, 65
 Thoma, 330
 Thomas, F. W., 248, 291, 334, 376, 419, 430, 434 f., 466, et passim
 Tirthakalpa, 417
 Tod, see Rājasthān
 Tolman, 147, 240
 Trenckner, 384, 388
 Tripathi, 604
 Tripiṭaka, (Chinese), 469
 Turnour, see Mahāvamsa, 117

U

- Upanishad : —
 —Brhādāraṇyaka, 3, et passim
 —Chhāndogya, 3, et passim
 —Rājendralāl Mitra's translation, 3, 61
 —Jaiminiya, 25, 50
 —Kaushitaki, 66, 77, 172
 —Muṇḍaka, 355

- Prašna, 33, 79, 86, 101 f., 166, 293
 —Taittiriya, 101
 Uttara-Rāma-Charita, 80, 171
 Uvāsagadasāo, Horenle, 95, 118, 119, 120, 199, 202, 211

V

- Vaidya, C. V., 24, 253, 517
 Vaishṇavism, Saivism and Minor Religious Systems (R. G. Bhandarkar), 475
 Vākpatrijā, see Gauḍavaho
 Varāhamihira, See Bṛihat Saṃhitā
 Vārshaganya, 5
 Vāsavadattā Nāyadhārā, 296
 Vasu, S. C., see Aṣṭādhyāyī
 Vats, 122
 Vātsyāyana, see Kāmasūtra
 Veda Saṃhitā—
 —Atharva, passim
 —Bloomfield's translation, 13
 —Paippalāda, recension, 74
 —Kāthaka, 25, 159
 —Maitrāyaṇī, 159
 —Rik, passim
 —Taittiriya, 166
 Vedic Index, Macdonell and Keith, passim
 Venkatesvaraiyar, 329
 Vidyābhūṣaṇa, S. C., 122
 Vidyālaṅkāra, Jaychandra, 618f
 Vimānavatthu, 155
 Vinaya Texts, 11, 97
 —Chullavagga, 198, 204
 —Mahāvagga, 97, 106, 111, 124, 173, 200, 207, 212
 Viracharita, 417
 Viśākhadatta, 186, 512
 Vogel, 253, 450
 Volume of Indian studies presented to Prof. Rapson, 341, 614n

W

- Warren, 125
 Watson, 233, 264, 271, 384
 Watters, see Yuan Chwang.
 Weber, 1, 49, 65, 69, 113, 162, 254
 Wei-liu, 464
 Wenger, J., 111
 Westergaard, 331
 Whitehead, see under Catalogue
 Wijk, Van, 464, 618
 Wilkie, W. One World, 289
 Wilson, 126
 Winternitz, 11, 37
 Woolner, 312

650 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Y

Yāska, 5, 25, 111, 149, 161

Young Men of India, the, July, (1926), 466, 517

Yuan Chwang, Watters, 107, 118, 308, 432

Yu-Houan, 464

Z

ZDMG., 428, 433

Zimmer, 13, 64

GENERAL INDEX

A

- Abastanoi, Sambastai, Sabarcae, Sabagrae, 255 f
 Abdagases, 454, 519
 Abhaya, Prince of Magadha, 209 n
 Abhayadatta, 631 n
 Abhipratārin Kākshaseni, 44 ff
 Ābhira, Abiria, 257, 446, 498, 502, 544
 Abhisāra, Abisāres, 248 f, 260
 Abhisāraprastha, 443
 Abhisheka, 167, 302
 Abhyamtar opasthāyaka, 523
 Abisares, see Abhisāra
 Achyuta, 534, 536
 Adhikritas, 166 n
 Adhisimākṛishṇa, 43, 69, 105
 Adhishthāna, 519
 Adhyakshas, 283 ff
 Ādityasena, 583, 606, 610
 Ādityavarman, 604
 Adraistai, 250
 Agalassoi, 254
 Agathokleia, 384, 386, 422
 Agathokles, 422
 Agesilaos, 476
 Agikhamdha, 340 n
 Agnimitra, Śuṅga 369, 371 ff, 391 ff
 Agra-mahishi, 517
 Agrāmātya, 302
 Agrammes, 232 f, 236 f, 261
 Agronomoi, 284 n, 294, 318
 Āhāla, Āhāra, 317, 523
 Ahichchhatrā, Adhichhatrā, or Chhatta-vati, 135, 393, 536, 560
 Ahvara, 66 n
 Aikshvāka, 120 and note
 Aila, see Purūravas
 Aindra mahābhisheka, 163 f, 168 f
 Airikina, 537, 595, 629
 Aiśvaryapāla 528 n
 Aioi, 637
 Ajaka, 220 f
 Ajātaśatru Kāśya, 66, 76 f, 83
 Ajātaśatru Kūpika, 209, 210 ff
 Ājīvika, 213, 326, 345, 351
 Ākarāvanti, 506 f, 621
 Akouphis, 247
 Akshadarśa, 520 n
 Akshapaṭal-ādhikṛita, Keeper of the Records, 559
 Akshāvāpa, 166
 Atasānda, Alexandria, 307, 381
 Alavi, Alabhiya, Alavaka, 197 f, 538
 Alexander of Corinth, 331 f
 Alexander of Epirus, 331 f
 Alexander the Great, 234, 244 f, 260 ff
 Alexandria in Kabul, 262
 Alexandria in Sind, 262
 Alikasudara, 332
 Allakappa, 193
 Allitrochades, 296
 Amachcha, Amātya, 280 ff, 372, 515, 521 f
 Ambashtha, Ambaṭṭha, see Abastanoi
 Āmbhi, 248, 260
 Āmbhiyas, 248, 418
 Amgiya family, Ambhiya family, 417 f
 Amitraghāta, Amitrakhāda, Amitrachates, see Bindusāra, 277 n, 296
 Āmrakārdḍava, 559
 Āmta-mahāmātras, 317
 Āmtekinā, 332
 Amyntas, 425
 Ānanda kings, 500 n, 638
 Anantadevi, 570
 Anantanemi, 146 n
 Anantapāla (Daṇḍanāyaka), 582
 Anantavarman, 603
 Anarta, 506, 621
 Ancestry of Chandragupta, 266 f, 355 ff
 Andhapura, 92
 Andhau Inscriptions, 486 f, 506
 Andhra, 5, 92, 312, 398, 403 ff, 602, 604
 Andhrāpatha, 92, 492
 Androkottus, see Chandra Gupta Maurya
 Androsthenes, 361, 380
 Āṅga, 98, 106 ff, 152, 310 n, 603
 An-Shih-Kao, 469
 Antapāla, 317
 Antarvamsika, 166, 317 n
 Antarvedi, 537
 Antialkidas, Antalikita, 384, 394, 404 n, 424
 Antigonos Gonatas, 331 f
 Antimachos, 422
 Antiochos Soter, 614 n
 Antiochos Theos, 299, 307, 331, 614
 Antiochos the Great, 381, 385, 423
 Anupa, 491, 506 f, 621
 Anupiyā, 128
 Anurūddha, 218
 Anusamyāna, 319, 336
 Anyataplakshā, 23
 Aornos, 246 n
 Aparā Matsyas, 67
 Aparāntas, 314, 491, 502, 507, 526, 602 n
 Aphrikes, 246
 Apollodotos, 384, 386 f, 422
 Apollophanes, 422
 Ārakshādhikṛita, 521
 Archebios, 425
 Ardeshir Bābagān, 479 n
 Argaru (Uruga-pura), 637
 Aria, 273
 Ariake, 637
 Ariththapura, 253
 Arjuna, of Kanauj, 610

652 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

- Arjuna (Matsya), 138
 Arjuna Paṇḍava, 123, 545
 Ārjunāyanas, 515 n, 544
 Arsakes (Parthian), 379
 Arsakes (Urasā), 248
 Arta, 445 n
 Artemidorus, 425
 Arthachintakas, 514
 Arthavidyā, 9 n, 514
 Arupi, 33, 49, 58, 61 f, 64
 Aryaka, 220 f
 Āśadhasena, 393
 Āśandhimitra, 367
 Āsandivant, 23, 39
 Asiani, 426
 Asii, 426
 Asika, 491
 Asitamriga, 38
 Āsmaka, Āssaka, Asaka, 89, 143 f, 233, 245 f, 491
 Āśoka, (in the epic), 5
 Āśokachandra, 209
 Āśoka Maurya, 5, 302 ff, 614 ff
 Aspasian, 245
 Aspavarma, 445, 454
 Aspionus, 425
 Assakenoi, 240, 245 f
 Assalāyana Āśvalāyana, 33, 79
 Assembly of Village Headmen, 173
 Astakenians, 239
 Astes, 247, 261
 Astynomoi, 284
 Āsuravijaya, 537 n
 Āśvaghoṣha, 476
 Āśvalāyana, see Assalāyana
 Āśvamedha, 170, 377, 388 f, 416, 480, 500 n, 504 n, 548, 568, 584
 Āśvamedha (king), 43
 Āśvamedhadatta, 44, 69
 Āśvamedha Parākrama, 549, 550
 Āśvapati, King of the Kekayas, 56, 63 f
 Āśvapati, King of the Madras, 65 n
 Āśvavarakas, 521
 Aṭavi, 307, 311
 Ājavika, 538
 Āthama, 442
 Ātṇāra, 81, 102
 Attivarman, 540
 Auchchamanyava, see Girikshit
 Audumbaras, 575 n
 Augrasainya, 236
 Aulikara Family, 630
 Avachatnuka, 108 n
 Avanti, 96, 144 f, 204, 214 f, 580
 Avantiputra, 142
 Avantivardhana, 221
 Avantivarman, 605 n, 608, 623
 Aya, 453, 466
 Ayama, 484
 Ayaputa, 316
 Ayasi-Kamuia, 517
 Ayodhyā, 99 f, 104, 586 f
 Āyogava, 160
 Āyukta, Āyuktaka, 316, 320, 561
 Azes I, 429, 439 ff
 Azes II, 442
 Azilises, 441 f
- B
- Bactrians 4, 244, 272, 379ff, 426
 Baṭ-kāmta, 543
 Bahasatimitra, see Brīhaspatimitra, 373
 Bāhli, 25 and note
 Baimbika, 369f
 Baithan, see Pratishthāna
 Bajji, see Vajji
 Balabhadra, 350
 Balādhikaraṇa, 563
 Balādhyaaksha, 285
 Bālādita I, see Narasimha Gupta
 Bālāditya II, 588n, 595f, 606, 623
 Balapradhāna, 285n
 Balaśri, 491ff, 517
 Balavarman, 534
 Balhika, 25, 26
 Bali, 293, 521
 Bandhula, 199
 Bandhupālita, 350
 Bandhuvarman, 567
 Barābar Hill Cave Inscription, 510
 Bārānasi, Benares 24f, 96, 100n
 Barbaricum, 435, 455, 620
 Bārhadraṭhas of Magadha, 113f
 Bārhadraṭhapura, 111
 Barygaza, 483
 Batoi, 638
 Benākataka Svāmī, 494
 Bengal, History of, 309, 535, 543f, 632ff
 Berar, see Vidarbha
 Besnagar Inscription, 394
 Bhaddā, 219 n
 Bhaddasāla, 239
 Bhaddiya, 108
 Bhadra-ghoṣha, 392
 Bhadraka, Ādraka, Odruka, Andhraka, Antaka, 393
 Bhadramukha, 488
 Bhadrabāhu, 295
 Bhadrayaśas, 429
 Bhāga, 293, 521
 Bhāgabhadra, 393
 Bhagadatta, 607
 Bhāgadugha, 166
 Bhagala, 252
 Bhāgavata (King), 394f
 Bhāgavata religion, 369, 394
 Bhaggas, 133, 192f
 Bhageratha, 101
 Bhāllaveya, see Indradyumna, 51n
 Bhāṇḍāgāra, 521
 Bhāṇḍāgārīka, 521
 Bhānu Gupta, 588n, 596, 597n, 600
 Bhāradvājas, 370
 Bhāraśivas, 480
 Bharata Dauṣhanti, 24n, 25, 90

Bharata, son of Rishabha, 24n
 Bharata of Sovira, 144
 Bharatas, 23, 24, 40, 73, 75, 142
 Bhāratavarsha, 420
 Bhārata War, 27, 40
 Bharga, see Bhagga
 Bharsar hoard of coins, 587
 Bhartṛidāman, 510
 Bhāskaravarman, 609
 Bhatamanushyas, 521
 Bhatārka, 629
 Bhaṭṭāśvapati, 563
 Bhaṭṭiprolu Inscription, 312n
 Bhaṭṭiya, 117
 Bhaujya, 175f
 Bhava Nāga, 480
 Bhimasena, Rājan, 531
 Bhima, King of Vidarbha, 86
 Bhimavarman, 580
 Bhitari Inscription, 568, 572
 Bhogas (clan), 120 and note
 Bhoganagara, 120 and note
 Bhogavarman, 610
 Bhoja, Dāndakya, 91
 Bhoja (title), 159
 Bhojaka, 562
 Bhojakata, 91
 Bhojanagara, 60
 Bhojas, 89f, 139f, 146, 311f
 Bhujyu, Lāhyāyani, 49, 58
 Bhukti, 560f
 Bhūmaka, 484
 Bhūmimitra, 392
 Bhūtapāla, 236
 Bhūtavīras, 38
 Bhūti-varman, 627n
 Bimbaka, 369n
 Bimbāsārapuri, see Girivraja, 111
 Bimbisāra, 115, 155, 204ff
 Bindusāra, Amitraghāta, 267, 282a, 295, 296ff
 Boar worship (significance) 186
 Boards of Five, 285f
 Boddas, 617
 Boukephala, 262f
 Brahmadatta of Aṅga, 110
 Brahmadatta of Assaka, 144, 170n
 Brahmadatta of Kāśi, 75f, 153
 Brahmadatta of Panchāla, 136
 Brahmadatta (Uparika Mahārāja), 593
 Brahmakshatra, 132 and note
 Brahmamitra 392
 Brahmarshideśa, 68
 Brahmaravardhana, 74
 Brihadishu, 71n
 Brihadratha (of Girivraja), 113f
 Brihadratha, Maurya, 350, 353
 Brihaduktba, 82, 135
 Brīhāspati Mitra, 373f, 420
 Brihatphalāyana, 500n, 638
 Buddhagupta, 570, 588n, 593
 Budha Gupta, 588, 593
 Budharāja, 607n
 Budhavarman, 501n

Buddhism in Irān, 615f
 Buddhist Council, 215, 222
 Bulis, 193

C

Cacouthes, 126
 Cadra Kanishka, 476 n
 Calingae, see Kaliṅga
 Cambodia, 148
 Care of foreigners, 292
 Ceylon, Sindhala, 330 f, 547 f
 Chadota, 628 n
 Chakrapālita, 580
 Chakravarti-kshetra, 271 n
 Chākṛāyana, 45, 58
 Chalukya, 602 f, 610 f
 Chalukyas (Eastern), 591 f
 Champā City, 107 f, 198, 207, 300
 Chāṇakya, Kauṭilya 237 f, 265 n, 268, 277, 296
 Chandanā, 109
 Chandradevi, 586
 Chanda Pradyota Mahāsena, 204
 Chandaśena, 527 n
 Chandra of the Meharauli Iron Pillar Inscription, 481, 535 n
 Chandrabālā, see Chandanā
 Chandragomin, 628
 Chandra Gupta I, 528 n, 530 ff
 Chandra Gupta II, 478 f, 511 f, 553 ff, 600, 612
 Chandragupta Maurya, 194 n, 238, 264 ff, 355 n, 614 n
 Chandragupta's government, 277 ff
 Chandra Gupta Vikramāditya, see Chandra Gupta II
 Chandraprakāśa, 564 n
 Chandravarman of Bengal, 534
 Chandravarman of Kamboja, 150
 Chang-K'ien, 459
 Chapada, 320
 Chāra, 320
 Charaka, 476
 Chārāyana, 211
 Chashtana, 469 n, 486 f, 505 f, 622
 Chatarapana, see Vāsishṭhiputra Chatarapana Śātakarṇi
 Chauroddharanika, 561
 Checks on absolutism, 172 ff
 Chedis, 68, 128 ff, 151, 418
 Chellanā, 209 n, 211
 Chera, see Kerala
 Chetaka, 125, 211
 Chetas, 418 ff
 Chhavillākara, 309
 China, 9 n, 474, 628
 Chirātadatta, 566
 Chitrakūṭa, 629
 Chitraratha Ārya, 78
 Chola, 328
 Chora Rajjukas, 318
 Chouang-mi, 459

654 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Chronology of the Bimbisara-Śiśunāga group, 225 ff
 Chuksba, 444
 Chūrṇi, 330
 Chinapaṭṭa 9 n, 277
 Chutukula, 503
 Cleisobora 138
 Cophaeus, see Kophaioi, 260
 Copen, see Kābul, 239
 Coronation Oath, see Oath, 168
 Courts of Justice, 208, 279, 286, 317, 318, 562
 Cutch, 381 n, 486, 488
 Cyrene, 331
 Cyrus, 239 f

D

Dabbasena, 154
 Dabhālā, 560, 595
 Daddarapura, 130
 Dadhivāhana, 109, 133, 170 n
 Dahae, 260
 Dharasena, 499 n
 Daivāpa, see Śaunaka, Indrota Daivāpa
 Daivaputra-Shāhi-Shāhānushāhi, 482, 546 f
 Daksh, 139 n
 Daksha, 139 n
 Dakshināpadā, 328
 Dakshināpadā, 85
 Dakshināpatha, 85, 288, 403, 538, 636 ff
 Dakshināpatha-pati, 411, 415, cf. 495 n
 Dāksinātya, 85
 Dālbya Chaikitāyana, 74
 Dālbya Kesin, 73
 Dāmaghasada I, 509
 Dāmajada Śrī, 510, 513
 Dāmana, 538
 Dāmasena, 510
 Dāmijada (or Namijada), 437 ff, note
 Dāmodara Gupta, 605 f, 625
 Dāmodarasena, 564 f
 Dāmodarpur plates, 543, 561, 567 n, 593
 Daṇḍaka, 91
 Daṇḍanāyaka, 520, 563
 Daṇḍa-pāś-ādhiparāṇa, 563
 Daṇḍa-pāśika, 561
 Daṇḍa-samatā, 358 f
 Daṇḍika, 561
 Dantābala Dhaumra, 39 n, 51 n
 Dantakūra, 89 n, 305 n
 Dantapura-nagara, 89, 305 n
 Dantavakra 89 n
 Darius I, 147, 240, 518
 Darius III, 244
 Daśaka, 216
 Dārvābhisāra, 248
 Dārayavaush, 240
 Daśapura, 484, 567, 630
 Daśaratha (Ikshvāku), 78, 101
 Daśaratha, Maurya, 351
 Daśārṇa, 94, 95 n
 Dattadevi, 551 f

Dattāmitra, 5, 382
 Dattāmitri, 382
 Dattas of Puṇḍravardhana, 597
 Davāka, 543
 Deccan, see Dakshināpatha
 Deimachos, 299
 Demetriaspolis, 382
 Demetrios, 5, 382 ff, 422
 Democracies, 256, 288
 Derbhata, 629 n
 Deśa, 523, 560
 Deśādhikṛita, 524
 Deśika, 285 n
 Devabhūmi, Devabhūti, 395
 Deva Gupta I, 554
 Deva Gupta II, 607 f
 Deva Gupta III, 610 f
 Deva Śrī Harsha Gupta, 601
 Devaki, 141 n, 570, 572, 573 n
 Devakulas, 477, 517
 Devānāṃpiya, cf. 271, 303, 326, 351
 Devānāṃpiya Tissa, 333
 Devapāla Gauda, 537
 Devapāla (Pratihāra), 585
 Devāpi, 161
 Devaputra, 477, 516, 518, 547
 Devarāja Chandra Gupta II, 554
 Devarāja Skanda Gupta, 577
 Devarāshtra, 538, 540, 638
 Devaśrī, 554, 601
 Devavarman (Eastern India), 528 n, 582 n
 Devavarman Maurya, 350
 Devavarman Śālaṅkāyana, 548
 Devavrata, 452 n
 Devikā, 620
 Dhamma, Law of Piety, 324 f, 335, 338 f
 Dhammaghosha, 327, 365
 Dhamma-mahāmātra, 315, 336 f, 357 f
 Dhamma-nigama, 525
 Dhamma-niyama, 343 n
 Dhamma Vijaya, Dharma Vijayī, 327, 332, 365, 516 n, 537, 540
 Dhamma-yutas, 336 f
 Dhamnakaḍa, Dhamnakaḍa, 92, 312 n
 Dhana (Nanda), 237
 Dhanabhūti, 528
 Dhanada-Varuṇendrāntaka-sama, 547 n, 559
 Dhanamjaya of Kusthalapura, 538
 Dhanamjaya Koravya, 134
 Dhanika, 553
 Dhanyavishnu, 593, 595
 Dhārā, 604 n
 Dharasena II (Valabhi), 629
 Dharasena IV, 630
 Dharmāditya of Eastern India, 550, 633
 Dharmāditya (Śilāditya I), see Śilāditya
 Dharma-mahāmātras, see Dhamma mahāmātras
 Dharma-Mahārājādhirāja, 516
 Dharmapāla, 537
 Dhammarakkhita, 304 n
 Dharmāranya-Vihāra, 308
 Dharmasthas, 283 n

Dharmayuta, 336 f
 Dhauli, 306
 Dhavala, 353
 Dhavalā, 596 n, 597 n
 Dhavalappadeva, 353
 Dhṛiṣṭadyumna, 21 n, 73 n
 Dhṛitarāshṭra, Prince of Kāśī 44, 75, 97
 Dhṛitarāshṭra Vaichitravīrya, 7, 25, 351, 487 n
 Dhruvabhāṭa, 629 n
 Dhruva-Devī, Dhruvasvāminī, 512 n, 562, 564, 573
 Dhvasan Dvaitavana, 67
 Dighati (Dighiti), 106, 153, 173
 Dighāvu, 173
 Diodotos I (King of Bactria), 379, 426
 Diodotos II, 379
 Diomedes, 420 n, 425
 Dion, 394
 Dionysios, Ambassador, 299
 Dionysios, king, 422
 Dioscuri, 424
 Dirgha Chārāyana, 199
 Divākara, 105, 114
 Divākarasena, 564
 Divodāsa (of Kāśī) 75
 Divodāsa Pañchāla, 73
 Drangians, 427 f, 621
 Dridhavarman, 110
 Droṇa of the Epic, 21 n, 371 n
 Droṇamukha, 283 n
 Droṇa Sīmha, 626n, 629
 Druhyu, 146
 Drupada, 73
 Dummukha Licchhavi, 124
 Dummukha Pañchāla, 82, 135 f
 Durdharā, 295
 Duryodhana, 487 n
 Dushṭaritu, 175
 Dūta, 316, 320, 522
 Dvādasāditya, 596 n
 Dvairājya, 487 n, 519
 Dvaitavana, 68
 Dvārakā, 150, 506
 Dvimukha, see Dummukha Pañchāla

Eastern Chalukya, 591
 Egypt, 276, 284, 290, 331
 Ekachakrā, 71
 Ekarāj, 164, 233, 534
 Embers Tope, 194
 Emetreus, 382
 Epander, 425
 Epirus, 331
 Episkopoi, 290
 Era of Samprati, 376 n
 Eran, 593
 Eraṇḍapalla, 538 f
 Erannobaos, 274
 Eudemos, 262
 Eukratides, 383 ff, 386, 422 ff

Euthydemia, 383
 Euthydemus, 379 f
 Euthymedia, 383
 Female guards, 276 f
 Fo-to-kio-to, 570, 588 n, 593

G

Gad, 452
 Gahapatis, 525
 Gaggara, 109
 Gamjavara, 521
 Gaṇapati Nāga, 534 ff
 Gaṇarājas, 125, 212
 Gandaris, 250
 Gandhāra, 59 f, 146 ff, 152, 197, 240 ff, 247, 250, 273, 308, 438, 444, 466, 473, 482, 597 n, 602 n
 Gandhārī, 60
 Gaṅgas of Mysore, 639 f
 Gangaridāe, 236, 261, 309
 Gardabhilla, 466 n
 Gārgi, 58
 Gārgya Bālāki, 77
 Gauḍas, 602, 604 ff, 608 f, 625, 632 ff
 Gaulmikas, 521
 Gaupālāyana, see Suchivriksha, 44
 Gaupālāyana Sthapati, 44 n
 Gautami Balaśrī, see Balaśrī, 347, 491
 Gautamīputra Śātakarṇi, 410 n, 413, 429, 491
 Gaya (Prince), 114
 Gedrosia, 239, 273
 Ghaṭāka, 450, 484
 Ghaṭotkacha (Gupta), 529
 Ghaṭotkacha Gupta, prince, 561, 567, 571, 600 n
 Ghaṭo Kramāditya, 567 n
 Ghora Āṅgīrasa, 141 n
 Girinagara (Girnar), 314
 Girivraja (in Kekaya), 62
 Girivraja (in Magadha), 62, 110
 Glauchukāyana, 250 n
 Glaugānikai, Glausians, 250
 Go'dhyaksha, 286
 Gomatikottaka, 610
 Gomitra, 401
 Gonarda, 397
 Gondophernes, 429, 440, 452 f
 Gopa, 293
 Gopachandra, 633
 Gopāli Vaidarī, 393
 Goparāja, 595 f
 Goptri, 317, 371, 561, 579
 Gorathagiri, 420
 Gosāla Mañkaliputta, 213
 Goshṭhis 525 f
 Govardhana, Nāsika, 91, 494, 501 f

656 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

- Govikartana, 167
 Govindachandra Gāhaḍavāla, 347
 Govinda Gupta, 561, 566 n, 600 n
 Govindarāja, 367
 Govishāṇaka, 237
 Grahavarman, 605, 607 f
 Grāma, 292, 524, 562
 Grāmabhṛitaka, 293
 Grāmābhāra, 524
 Grāmaṇi, 163, 166, 173, 174, 525
 Grāmaṛiddha, 292 n, 525
 Grāmeyika, Ayutta, 525
 Grāmika, 174, 208, 292, 525, 562
 Grāmabhojaka, 525
 Granavbryaka, 443
 Grumbates, 468
 Guḍa, 633
 Guḍha-Puruṣa, 320
 Guḍuvhara, 452
 Guṇākhyā Sāṅkhāyana, see Sāṅkhāyana, 33 ff
 Gupta administration, 558 ff
 Gupta Era, 530, 626 n
 Gupta (King), 529
 Guptas (Early), 527 ff, 626 ff
 Guptas (Later), 581 ff, 623 ff, 626 ff
 Guraeans, 245
 Gusana, see Kushān
 Gushtasp, 615
 Guttas (Kanarese), 518, 564

H

- Hagāmasha, 445
 Hagāna, 445
 Haihaya, 98, 145 f, 233
 Hairaṇyanābha, 101 ff
 Hakesiri, 417
 Hāla, 407 n
 Halla, 209 n, 211
 Harappa, discoveries at, 2
 Hariśchandra, 101
 Harishena, Prastastikāra and General, 542
 Harishena, Vākātaka king, 499 n, 579, 634
 Hārītiputra Siva-Skanda-Varman, 503
 Hārītiputra Viṣṇukaḍa Chuṣukulananda Sātākarni, 503
 Harivarman, 604
 Harsha of Kanauj, 583, 600, 605 f, 609, 624, 629 n
 Harsha Gupta, 600 f, 604
 Harsha, Gupta, 604
 Haryaṅka-kula, 115
 Hastidasanā, 340 n
 Hastin, 313 n, 595
 Hastinapura, 22, 23, 43
 Hastivarman, 538 f
 Hāthi Gumpā inscription, 235, 373 ff, 418 ff
 Hathisimha, 419
 Hatthālavaka, 198 n
 Hatthigāma, 120 and note
 Heliodoros, son of Diya (Dion), 394
 Heliokles, 385 ff, 425
 Hephaestion, 247
 Hermaois, 384, 425, 429, 441, 461, 470
 Hidus, 240
 Hieou-mi, 459
 Hi-heou, 460
 Himsrikās, 286
 Hippokoura, 502, 637
 Hippostratos, 422
 Hiraṇyavāha, 274 n
 Hiraṇyanābha, 79, 101 ff
 Hiraṇyavati, 126
 Hi-thun, 460
 Hi-touen, 460
 Hiung-nū, 431, 458 f
 Ho-ling, 305 n
 Hormisdas, 481
 Ho-ti, 463, 474
 Hunas, Huns, 575 ff, 583, 595 f, 606, 626 n, 628, 630 f
 Hupamaṇḍala, 629 n
 Huviṣka, 464, 476 f
 Hydaspes, battle of, 261
 Hydraces, 240
 Hyparch, 319
- Ibhyas, 337
 Ikshvākus, 100 f, 127, 143, 233, 500
 Indradatta, 499 n
 Indradyumna, 51 n, 64
 Indramitra, 392
 Indra-pālita, 350
 Indraprastha, Indrapatta, Indrapattana, 97, 133
 Indravarma, 445
 Indrota, 17, 18, 38, 50
 Irāvati, 38 n
 Irrigation in the Maurya Period, 284
 Isamus, 380
 Iśānavarman (Maukhari) 600, 604 ff, 625
 631
 Ishukāra, 134
 Isila, 307, 317
 Iśvaradatta, 498 n, 510
 Iśvarasena, 499 n
 Iśvaravarman, 604 f
 Ithihaka-mahāmātras, 317

J

- Jaivali, 74
 Jala Jātukarṇya, 74
 Jalauka, 349 f, 361
 Jāluka, 222
 Jambudīpa, Jambudvīpa, 97, 357
 Janaka (father of Sītā), 54
 Janaka of Kāśī, 74
 Janaka of the Upanishads, 48 ff, 55 ff, 74

Janaka vaiśa, 55
 Janamejaya 13, 16 f, 36 ff, 50, 51 n
 Jana Śārkarākshya, 64
 Jarāsandha, 113
 Jāratkāra, 58
 Jauṅga, 306
 Jaya (Itihāsa), 42
 Jayadāman, 487f, 506
 Jayadatta, 593
 Jayadeva, 525
 Jayanāga headman, 525
 Jayanāga (Gauḍa king), 538, 634
 Jeṭhamitra, 393
 Jeṭtuttara, Jeṭuttara, 198, 253
 Jih-kwan, same as Āditya Sena, 611n
 Jihonika, 444, 462
 Jinasena, 627
 Jivadāman, 509
 Jivaka, 206
 Jivita Gupta I, 601
 Jivita Gupta II, 606n, 610f, 623
 Jiyasattu, 198
 Jñāṭikas, 119
 Jogalthembbhi, 489
 Junāgaḍh Rock Inscription, 9n, 270, 280n, 282n
 Junha, 202
 Jushka, 465, 476
 Jushkapura, 476
 Jyeshṭha. see Vasu Jyeshṭha, 392

K

Kabandhi Kātyāyana, 34
 Kābul, 239, 381
 Kācha, 533
 Kachchha, 507, 621
 Kadambas 504n, 555n, 564n, 612
 Kadphises I, see Kujula
 Kadphises II, see Wema
 Kahola Kaushitaki, 33, 58
 Kairiśi Sutvan, 192
 Kaisara, 477
 Kaivarta (king), 237
 Kākanāda (Sāñchi), 546
 Kākas, 545f
 Kākakarṇa, 112
 Kākavarṇa, 112, 221f, 232f.
 Kakshasena, 16, 44
 Kakshaseni, 44
 Kakuda Kachchāyana, see Pakudha
 Kākutstha, 120
 Kākusthavarmān, 504n, 612
 Kalabhras, 639
 Kālachampā, 107
 Kalachuri Era, 468
 Kalachuris, 579n, 583n, 606n, 607n, 608n, 609, 631
 Kālaga, 209n
 Kālāmas, 99, 155, 193
 Kālāra Janaka, see Karāla
 Kalasa, 449n
 Kālasena, 105

Kālāsoka, 221f, 232f
 Kālādāsa, 564n
 Kālindī, 593
 Kālīnga, 87ff, 233, 304ff, 324, 363f, 373f, 403, 580
 Kālīnga-nagara, 89n, 419
 Kaliyuga Era, 27
 Kallār, 479n, 482
 Kalliope, Calliope, 384, 425
 Kalsigīāma, 381
 Kalyānavarman, 528n
 Kāmandaka, 5
 Kāmarūpa, 310, 546, 607ff
 Kamboja, 148f, 248, 288, 307
 Kāmchaṇa-pura, 89
 Kammāsadamma, 134
 Kāmpilya, Kāmpilla, 135, 198
 Kāmsa of Kosala, 154
 Kāmsa of Mathurā, 141
 Kamvoja, 148
 Kāmyaka, 22
 Kanakagiri, 311
 Kanakhala, 66
 Kanauj, 136, 532, 584, 604n, 608n
 Kāñchi, 501, 538f
 Kanishka I, 365ff, 618ff
 Kanishka II, 465ff, 477
 Kanishka III, 478n
 Kanishka-pura, 474
 Kañka, 166n
 Kaṇṭaka śodhana, 319
 Kantha, 251
 Kāntipurī, 481
 Kāṇvas, 398ff
 Kānyākubja, see Kanauj, 136
 Kao-fou, 455f
 Kapa, 456
 Kāpaṭika, 291
 Kāpeya, 44
 Kapilavastu, Kapilāvata, 191
 Kāpiśa, Kāpiśi, 239, 386f, 422, 425, 434, 443, 473
 Kapsha, see Kujula
 Kāpya Patañchala, 65
 Karakaṇḍu, 82, 147
 Karāla, 81, 82
 Kāraṇaka, 316
 Karaṇḍu, 87
 Karas, 639
 Kāraskara, 527n
 Karatai, 436, 484
 Kārdḍamaka, 437, 505, 622
 Kareoi, 637
 Karmamānta, 543
 Karmāntika, 522
 Karma Sachivas, 282n, 509
 Karṇa, 148, 152
 Karṇadā, 112
 Karṇasuvārṇa, 310, 602, 609, 630
 Karttipura, 544
 Kārttikeya (worship), 478, 568
 Kārusha, 93

658 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

- Kāruvāki, 343
 Kāsi, Kāśi, Kāśi, 74ff, 83, 96f, 153f, 206, 210, 212, 233, 587, 593
 Kasia, 126
 Kāsiputra, Kautsiputra, 393
 Kāsmira, Kāsmira, 308, 473, 482, 596n
 Kaspetroioli, 447
 Kassapiya Arhats, 393
 Kassites, 139n
 Kaśu Chaidya 130
 Kaśyapa Mātāṅga, 478
 Kaśpayas, 18, 369n
 Kaśachchuris, see Kalachuris
 Kaṭha, 251
 Kathaioi, 250f
 Katur (Katuria or Katyur) rājas, 544
 Kaundinya-pura, 87
 Kaundinya, Vidarbhi, 87
 Kautāla, 538f
 Kauravas, 120, and note
 Kauśāmbi, Kosambi, 43, 47, 70f, 131, 275, 307, 401
 Kauśiki river, 23
 Kauśiki, (lady), 392n
 Kautilya, see Chāṇakya, 62, 237f, 268, 277, 298
 Kautsa, 51
 Kāvashya, see Tura
 Kavirāja, 549
 Kāvīrīpattinam, 328
 Kākaya, 62f
 Keralaputra, 330
 Kesaputta, 99, 193
 Keśins, 72f, 93
 Ketumati, 74
 Kevatta, Minister, 136
 Khaḍḍavali, 502
 Khallāṭaka, 298n
 Khalatika-pavata, 307
 Khāṇḍava, 22
 Khapiṅgala, 307
 Kharagraha I, 629n, 631
 Kharaosta, 449
 Kharapallāna, 473
 Kharaparikas, 544, 546
 Khāravala, 373ff, 405ff, 418ff
 Khasa, 123, 298
 Khemā, 206n
 Khotan, 309n
 Khshayārshā, see Xerxes
 Kidāra Kushāns, 482
 Kien-chi, 459
 Kieou-tsieou-kio, 460ff
 Kikaṭa, 111f
 Kinds of rulership, 156ff
 King-maker, 173
 Kingship, 156ff
 Ki-pin, 432f, 436n, 456ff, 466, 479, 482
 Kiusha, 473
 Kirtivarman I (Chalikya), 603
 Kleophis, 246
 Koliyas, 192
 Kolkai, 328
 Kollāga, 119
 Konākamana, 342, 345
 Koṅgoda, 538n
 Koṅkaṇ, 580
 Kophaioi (Cophaeus) 260
 Korāṇḍavarna, 222
 Kosala (North), 74, 77ff, 97, 99ff, 151, 152f, 199ff, 211, 212, 235, 371
 Kosala (South), 306n, 469, 538, 580
 Kosṭhāgāra, 522
 Koṭa, 402, 534, 536
 Koṭāṭavi, 538n
 Koṭigama, 119
 Koṭivarsha, 561, 582
 Koṭṭa-Vishayas, 317n
 Koṭṭura, 538f
 Kouii chouang (Kushān), 458
 Krakuchchanda, 309
 Kramāditya, see Ghaṭotkacha Gupta
 Kramāditya, see Kumāra Gupta II
 Kramāditya, Skanda Gupta, 577
 Krātha, 251
 Krimilāśva, 71n
 Kṛishṇa Gupta, 600f, 611n
 Kṛishṇa Sātavāhana, 414f
 Kṛishṇavarman, 504n
 Kṛishṇa Vāsudeva, Devakīputra, see Vāsudeva Kṛishṇa
 Kritakshapa, 81
 Kṛitamālā, 328
 Kṛita-Mālava-Vikrama Era, 439
 Kṛiti, 54, 81
 Kṛivis, 71f
 Kshaharāta, 444, 483
 Kshatrapas, 443ff, 483ff, 491ff, 523
 Kshatri (tribe), 257
 Khattri (official) 166
 Kshemarāja, 516
 Kshitipāla, 585
 Kshudrakas, 254, 260
 Kubera (ancestor of Bāṇa), 583n
 Kubera of Devarāshṭra (king), 538
 Kuberanāga, 555, 564, 572
 Kubiraka, 312n
 Kujula Kadphises, 441, 461ff, 470f
 Kukura, 491, 507
 Kukutthā, 127
 Kulastambha, 602n
 Kulūta, 515n
 Kumāras, 288, 317, 349
 Kumāradevi (Gāhādavāla Queen), 304
 Kumāradevi (Lichchavi princess), 530
 Kumāragiri, 538n
 Kumāragupta I, 566ff, 627
 Kumāragupta II, 589, 590ff
 Kumāragupta III, 600, 602, 604f, 606, 625
 Kumāragupta, Prince, 583
 Kumārāmātya, 390n, 523, 560, 562n, 567n
 Kumārāpāla, 585
 Kumāravishṇu, 501

- Kumbhavatī, 91
 Kuṇḍāla, 350f, 363
 Kuṇḍadhāni, 561
 Kuṇḍagrāma, Kuṇḍapura, 119
 Kuṇḍina, 87
 Kūṇika, see Ajātasatru
 Kunindas, 515n
 Kuntala, 235, 369, 407, 503f, 580
 Kuntala Sātakarṇi, 407f, 503
 Kuraraghara, 145
 Kuru (Kingdom), 21f, 45, 68, 133f
 Kuru (dakshina), 26n
 Kurubindas, 129n
 Kurujāhgaia, 22
 Kurukshetra, 22
 Kurukshetra, battle of, 40
 Kurus, 12ff, 21ff, 25, 41, 68, 73, 233
 Kurush, 239
 Kuruśravaṇa, 23, 25n
 Kuśadhivaja, 54
 Kuśāgrapura, 111, 208
 Kuśāvati, 126
 Kushāns, 455ff, 458ff, 618ff
 Kushāns (Later), 480ff
 Kusinārā, 126
 Kuśāthala, see Kanauj
 Kusthalapura, 538, 540
 Kusuluka, 444
 Kusumadhivaja, 354
 Kusumapaura, 217
 Kuvinda, 143
 Kuyula (Kujula) Kadphisee, Kadphises I
 Kuyulakara Kapsa 470n
- Lagatūrmān, 479n
 Lala (general) 473
 Lāla, 331n
 Lālāka, 419
 Lalliya, 482
 Lampāka, 433
 Lañkā, 433, see also Tāmrparṇi
 Lan-shi, 460
 Laodike, 385
 Lātavishaya, 579, 606n
 Lauhitya, Lohitya (Brahmaputra), 597, 625
 Lekhaharas, 320n
 Lekhakas, 283
 Liaka, 444, 473, 484
 Licchavavis, 83, 118ff, 122ff, 211, 401, 530, 605
 Lipikaras, 316, 320
 Lumminigāma, 307
 Lysias, 384, 424
- M
- Māchālas, 86
 Machcha, see Matsy
 Mādavika, 523
 Maddā, 206n
 Mādava Gupta, 583, 601, 606, 609f, 623
 Mādhavasena, 373
 Mādhavavarman I, 602
 Madhumanta, 91
 Madhurā, Uttara, 138
 Madhyadeśa, Majjimaśā, 65, 142, 264, 288, 353, 611
 Madhyamikā, 253, 387
 Madra, Madrakas, 63, 64f, 152, 250n, 544f
 Madragāra, 65
 Mādravati, 16, 20
 Madurā, 328
 Magadha, 96, 110ff, 151, 205ff, 307, 377, 400f, 420, 529f, 530f, 582n, 603, et passim
 Magadhapura, 111
 Māgandiyā, 203
 Magas, 331f
 Mahābalādhiṛita, High Officer in charge of the Army, 560
 Mahābhāratachārya, 41
 Mahābbisheka, 136, 168
 Mahābhoja, 314
 Mahādaṇḍa-nāyaka, general, 520, 547, 559n, 563
 Mahājanaka I, 57
 Mahājanaka II, 57
 Mahājanapadas, 95ff
 Mahākāntāra, 538f
 Mahākosala (king) 103, 154f
 Mahākhushāpāra, 561
 Mahāmaṇḍala, 222n
 Mahāmātras, 208, 280, 288, 316f, 336ff, 515, 520
 Mahānāman, 200
 Mahānandin, 218, 223
 Mahāpadma (father of Bimbisāra), 117n
 Mahāpadma (Nanda), 231f, 231, 377
 Mahāpratibhāra, 562
 Māhārājya, 163
 Mahārāshtra, 314, 483ff, 542
 Mahārāṭhis, 314
 Mahāsāmiyas, 523
 Mahāsena, Pradyota, see Chaṇḍa Pradyota
 Mahāsena
 Mahāsena Gupta, 606f, 623ff
 Mahāsena Gupta Devī, 606
 Mahāsenāpati, 371n, 515, 520
 Mahāśilākāṇṭhapa, 213
 Mahāśilāva, 154
 Mahāśiva Gupta, 605n, 624
 Mahāsthāngarh, 275n
 Mahāsudassana, 127
 Mahattara, Mahattaraka, 525, 562
 Mahāvira, 119, 213, 323
 Mahendra Maurya, 300, 333, 349
 Mahendra (of Kosala), 538

- Mahendrāditya, Mahendrakarmā, Śrī
 Mahendra, see Kumāra Gupta I, 566
 Mahendragiri, 538f
 Mahendrapāla II (Pratihāra), 585n, 631n
 Mahendravarman I, Pallava, 328, 501n
 Mahesvara (sect), 369
 Mahesvara Nāga, 480
 Mahirakula, see Mihirakula
 Mahishī, 162, 166, 517, 573
 Mahīsmatī, 140, 144f
 Mahodya, 130
 Maitrakas of Valabhī, 580, 629f
 Makhādeva, 55
 Mālava, Mālaya, 96, 250n, 254f, 260, 484, 489, 515n, 544, 582, 595f, 606 et passim
 Mālavagana, 544
 Malichos, Maliku, 505n
 Mālīnī, 107
 Malla, Mallikī, 95, 126ff, 212
 Mallasārul plate, 633n
 Mallikā, 201
 Malloi, 254f
 Māmāla, 491
 Mambarus, 437, 485
 Mandākinī, 372n, 380n
 Mandasor, et passim
 Māṇḍavya (of Vedic texts), 51
 Māṇḍavya (of epic), 359
 Maṅgala, Maṅgala, 323, 339
 Maṅgaleśa, 585n
 Maṅgura, 222
 Mānī, 616f
 Manigul, 444
 Maniyatappo, 281
 Maṅkhaliputta, see Gosāla Maṅkhaliputta
 Manoja, 98
 Maṅṭrarāja of Kaurāla, 538
 Mantrin, 280ff, 559f
 Mantriparishad, 281f, 315f, 389f, 560
 Maru, 507, 621
 Marutta, Avikshita, 72
 Masala, 637
 Māsī, 303, 357
 Massaga, 261
 Massanoi, 257
 Maṭachi, 45, 70
 Māthara, 476, 638
 Māthava, 77
 Mathurā, Methora, 138, 381, 401, 468, 481
 Matila, 534
 Matisachivas, Councillors, 509, 520
 Mātrivishnu, 593, 595
 Matsya, 66f, 137
 Mauakes, Mavaces, 436
 Maues, 428, 437ff
 Maukhari, 400, 583, 603ff, 608n, 610, 623ff,
 627, 630ff
 Mautryas, Muriyas, 5n, 191, 194, 264ff
 Mayūraposhaka, 266
 Mayūrasarman, 504n, 604n
 Medus Hydaspes, 426n
 Meghas, 532
 Megasthenes, 273ff
 Meghavarṇa, 548
 Mekal-Ambashīha, 256n
 Menander, 381ff, 423f
 Meridarch, 319, 512
 Mevaki, Mauakes, Mevaces, 435f
 Mihirakula, 588, 595f, 629, 634
 Milinda, see Menander
 Min, 437, 621
 Minnagara, 435, 453, 485, 621
 Mitannī, 139n
 Mithradates, Mithridates, 425
 Mithi, 54
 Mithilā, 53, 118
 Mitras, 391, 400ff, 433
 Mitra coins, 390ff
 Mitradevi, 589
 Mokhalīśa or Mokhalīṅgam, 604n
 Mondo-galingae, 94
 Mondubae, 94
 Moga, 437
 Mo-la-po, 629
 Moli, 96
 Molini, 74
 Mophis, Ambhi, 248
 Mou-lo-san-pu-lu, see Mūlasthāna-pura
 Mousikanos, 258
 Mousopalle, 637
 Mrigadhara, 202
 Mrigaśikhāvana, 528
 Mrigēśa-varman, 504n
 Mūchīpa, Mūtibā, Mūvipa, 94
 Muchukarna, 258n
 Mudgala, 71n
 Mūjavats, 60
 Mukhalīṅgam, 89n
 Mukhara, see Maukhari
 Mūlaka, 143, 491
 Mūlasthāna-pura, 619
 Muluda, 525
 Muṇḍa (king), 218
 Muṇḍas (class of spies), 291
 Muriyakāla, 373ff
 Muruṇḍa, 401, 430, 546f
 Mushika, 94, 258n, 330
 Musikanagara, 419
 Mūtibas, 94
 Muziris, 330
- N
- Nabataeans, 505n
 Nābhaka, 309
 Nābhapaṇṭhi, 309
 Nāchne-ki-talai, 541
 Nāga, 145, 413, 468, 480f, 500n, 535f, 555
 Nāgabhaṭṭa, 480
 Nāga Dāsaka, 216, 218
 Nāgadatta, 534
 Nagala Viyohātaka, Nagaravyāvahārika,
 317, 520
 Nāganikā, Nāyanikā, 404f, 417, 517

Nagaraka, 317
 Nagara-bhukti, 560
 Nagarādhyaksha, 285
 Nagarākshadarśa, 520
 Nagaraśreshṭhin, 561
 Nāgārjuna, 468, 476
 Nāgārjuni, Hill, 351
 Nāgasāhvaya (Hastinapura), 23
 Nāgasena, Sage, 381
 Nāgasena, King, 534ff
 Nagnajit, Naggaji, Naggati, 146
 Nahapāna, 469n, 484ff, 495
 Naigamas, 631n
 Naimishas, 151
 Nakhavant, 481, 535n
 Naksh-i-Rustam, 240
 Nalas, 639
 Nambanus, 437, 485
 Nami, Sāpya, 55, 57, 81f
 Nāṇaka coins, 475
 Nanda, 219n, 224, 229ff, 375n, 376f, 419
 Nandi, King, 534ff
 Nandinagar, 150
 Nandivardhana, 218, 222
 Nandivarman, 501n
 Nandiyakās, 536
 Na-pei-kea, 309
 Narasimha Gupta, Bālāditya, 588f, 601n, 635
 Narasimha Varman, 501n
 Naravarman, 567n
 Nārāyaṇa Kāṇva, 398
 Nārāyaṇapāla, 403n
 Narendrachandra, 553
 Narendragupta, 608n
 Narendrasena Vākātaka, 579, 634
 Narendrasimha, 553
 Nāsatyas, 139n
 Nāsik Prāśasti, 491ff
 Sātikas, 119
 Nau-Nand-Dehra (Nander), 235
 Nāvadhyaaksha, 286
 Navananda, 223f
 Navanara, 496
 Navy, 286, 498
 Navyāvakāśikā, 630, 634
 Nāyaka, 521
 Nāyanikā, 404f
 Nemi, 81
 Nepāl, 53, 309, 530n, 544
 Nevika, 523
 Ngansi, 460
 Nichakshu, 43, 70f, 131
 Nichchhivi, see Liechchhavi
 Nigama, 525
 Nigamapradhānāḥ, 285n
 Nigamasabhā, 519
 Nigantva Nāṭaputta, see Mahāvira, 323
 Nijhātī, 337
 Nikaja, 262
 Nikias, 425n
 Nilapallī, 540

Nilarāja, 538f
 Nimi, 54, 135
 Nigranthas, 323
 Nirvāṇa, (of Mahāvira and Gotama), 213n, 215, 226f
 Nirvāṇa Temple, 126
 Nishāda, 507
 Nishadha, 636
 Nisrishṭārtha, 283, 320
 Nomarch, 250
 Nyagrodhavana, 194
 Nysa, 246

O

Oath (coronation), 168
 Oddavādi, 138
 Oddiyāna, 245
 Odraka, Udāka, 393
 Ohind, 482
 Okkāka, 127, 162
 Omphis, 248
 Ophir, 2
 Orthagnes, 452
 Ossadijai, 257
 Oxydrakai, see Kshudraka, 254
 Oxykanos, 259
 Ozene, see Ujjain

P

Pabhosa Inscription, 393
 Padmāvatī, city, 468, 480, 536n
 Padmāvatī, queen of Ajātaśatru, 211
 Padmāvatī, queen of Udayana, 203
 Pahlavas, 451ff
 Paithan, see Pratishṭhāna
 Paithānakas, 311n
 Pakores, 454
 Pakthas, 241, 253
 Paktyike, 241
 Pakudha, Kachchūyana, 34
 Paladas, 311, 313
 Palaesimundu, 330n
 Pālāgala (courier), 167
 Pālāgali, 162
 Pālaka, 218
 Pāla Kings, 371n, 475n,
 Pālakka, Pālakkadā, 538, 540
 Palāśikā, 504n
 Palibothra, Palimbothra, 235
 Palibothri, 310
 Pallava, 500
 Paloura, 305n
 Pampā, 540
 Pañcha Gauḍa, 633
 Pañchāla, 90, 134ff, 151, 233, 391
 Pañchamaka, 222

662 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

- Pān-chiao, 474
 Pāṇḍavas, Pāṇḍus 38, 40f, 147, 329, 544
 Pandion, 486n
 Pāṇḍugati, 236
 Pāṇḍuka, 236
 Pāṇḍya, 328, 421
 Pāṇiyagharika, 522
 Panku, 455, 459
 Pantaleon, 422
 Para Āṭṭāra, see Āṭṭāra
 Pāradas, 313
 Parākramāṅka, 533, 550
 Paramadaivata, 559
 Pārameshṭhya, 163
 Pārasamudra, 330
 Pārasika, 505n, 628
 Paraśurāma, 414
 Parikshit, 12ff, 27f
 Pārikshitas, 12ff, 48
 Parimitārthāḥ, 320
 Parishad (Parishā), 174f, 280n, 281, 315f, 341, 525
 Parivakrā, Parichakrā, 71
 Parivrājaka Mahārājas, 542, 595
 Parivrājikās, 291
 Parivṛkti, 162
 Pāriyātra, 491
 Parkham Statue, 214n
 Parṇadatta, 579f, 629
 Paropanisadai, 273
 Parṣus, 139
 Pārśva, Jina, 97
 Pārśva (Buddhist), 475
 Pārtha of Kāśmīra, 449n
 Parthalis, 305
 Parthians, 425, 429
 Parushni, 63
 Pasenadi, see Prasenajit
 Patala, Patalene, see Taula, 259, 381, 446
 Pāṭaliputra, 217, 234, 274f, 288, 307, 310, 351, 401, 473, 530, 548, 557
 Patañchala, 65
 Patika, 444, 447f, 484
 Pāṭivedaka, 316, 320, 337
 Patna statues, 218n, 222n
 Patrokles, 299
 Paudanya, 143n
 Pāumāvai, see Padmāvatī, wife of Ajātasatru
 Paurava, 23, 249
 Paura Vyāvahārika, 317
 Pauskarakasādi, 34
 Pāvā, 127
 Pavvaiyā, 629
 Pāyāsi, chief of Setavyā, 155
 Pedda-Vegi, 540
 Perimuda, 328n
 Periyar, River, 330
 Persians, 239f
 Pertanika, Pitinika, 311
 Peukelaotis, 247
 Peukalaos, 425
 Phegalas, (Phegeus), 252
 Philadelphos, (Ptolemy, II), 299
 Philippos, 262
 Philoxenos, 425
 Phraotes, 451
 Phryni, 381
 Pihunda, 420
 Pimprama, 250
 Piṇḍola, 203
 Piṅgala, 289
 Pippalāda, 79
 Pipphalivana, 194, 267
 Piprāwā, 191n
 Pishṭapura, Piṭhapuram, 538f, 638
 Pithuṇḍa, Pitundra, 420
 Piyadasi, see Aśoka
 Podiyil, Hill, 269, 310
 Po-ho, 63
 Pokharapa, 534f
 Poling, 305n
 Polyandry, 41
 Poros, 249, 252n
 Portikanos, 259
 Po-ta, 456, 460
 Potali, Potana, 89, 98, 143
 Po-t'iao, 464, 479
 Pounnata, 637
 Prabhākara, 561n
 Prabhākaravardhana, 595f, 605f, 608
 Prabhāvatī, (of Utkala), 137
 Prabhāvatī (Guptā), 564
 Prachamta, see Pratyanta, 315, 328, 543
 Prāchīnāsāla, Aupamanyava, 64
 Prāchya, 156, 288
 Prāchya Pañchālas, 71
 Pradeśas, 317n, 560
 Prādeśikeśvara, 319
 Pradeshtiris, 293, 319
 Pradesikas, Prādesikas, 316, 319, 336
 Pradyota of Avanti, 114, 146, 294
 Praesti, 259
 Prakāśāditya, 587, 591n
 Prakāṭaditya, 588, 596n, 597n, 633n
 Pramagaṇḍa, 113
 Praṇaya, 9n, 509, 522
 Prāṇjunas, 544f
 Prasenajit (Pasenadi), 102f, 154f, 199f, 210
 Prasenajit, successor of Kākavarṇin, 222n
 Prasians, Prasii, 236, 261, 310
 Prāśnīputra, 51
 Pratardana, 75, 83, 98
 Prathama-Kāyastha, 561
 Prathama-Kulika, 561
 Pratihāras, 631
 Pratīpa, 13
 Pratishṭhāna, 311n, 369, 415, 495
 Pratīśravas, 13
 Pravāhana Jaivali, see Jaivali
 Pravarasena I, 541f
 Pravarasena II, 564, 579

Prithivishēṇa I, 541f, 554
 Prithivishēṇa II, 541
 Prithivishēṇa, mantrin, 569n, 567
 Priyaka, 219n
 Protu Kanśāmbeya, 69
 Ptolemy Philadelphos, King, 331f
 Puā d'ien, 464
 Pugār, 328
 Pukkusāti, 147, 227
 Pulakeśin II, 328, 585n
 Pulika, Puṇika, Puṇaka, 146
 Pulindas, 94, 313
 Pulisā, 316, 320
 Pulumāvi of Śātavahanihāra, 412
 Pulumāvi of Baithana, 495f
 Punarabhisheka, 163, 167f
 Pundranagara, 275
 Puṇḍravardhana, 310, 453, 560, 593, 597f, 632
 Puppavati, 74
 Puru Gupta, 560, 572, 585ff, 593
 Purikā, 396
 Pūrṇavarman, 353, 528n, 609, 624
 Purohita, 166, 359
 Pūru, 23f, 249
 Purukutsa, 100
 Purūravas, 25
 Purushapura, 473f
 Pūrva-Mālava, 582n
 Pushkara, 484
 Pushkaraṇa, 534f
 Pushkarāvati, 60, 247, 260, 422, 425, 444
 Pushpapura, 354, 401, 443
 Pushyabhūti, 582, 604n, 606ff, 608n, 627
 Pushyadharman, 350
 Pushyagupta, 271, 289
 Pushyamitra (King), 350, 360n, 361, 368ff, 385, 429
 Pushyamitras, 568f 575f 627
 Pustapāla, 562

R

Rādha, Rādhāpurī, 331n, 602
 Rādhagupta, 302
 Rahamusala, 213
 Rahasyādhikṛita, 520
 Rāhula, 102
 Rājāgrīha (Kekaya), 62
 Rājāgrīha (Magadha), 63, 106, 110, 111, 116, 209, 220, 374, 420
 Rājāgrīha (Balkh), 63
 Rājakartri, Rājakṛit, 163, 173
 Rājālipikara, 520
 Rājāmāta, 521
 Rājan, 58, 159
 Rājapura (Kaliṅga), 89
 Rājapura (Kamboja), 148f
 Rājaputra-deva-bhaṭṭāraka, 561

Rājaśāsana, 279
 Rajasimha, 527
 Rājasūya, 159, 165f
 Rājātirāja, 516
 Rājavidya, 520
 Rājavishaya, 310, 315
 Rājayuktas, 316n
 Rajjugāhaka, 318
 Rajjuka, Rājukas, 286, 287, 318f, 336, 366n, 515, 520
 Rājula, Rājuvula, 445f
 Rājyaśrī, 608
 Rājyavardhana, 583, 604n, 606n
 Rāma, 78, 101
 Rāmāgama, 191
 Rāma (Sarma) Gupta, 553n
 Rāmāpāla, 585
 Ramma, city, 74
 Raṇa-Bhāṇḍāgār-ādihikaraṇa, 563
 Rashada, 291
 Rāshṭra, 12, 523
 Rāshṭrakūṭas, 631
 Rāshṭrapāla, King, 236
 Rāshṭrapāla official, 317
 Rāshṭrapati, 523
 Rāshṭrikas, 311f
 Rāshṭriya, 289, 318n
 Rathagritsa, 44
 Raṭhika, 290n, 311f, 315
 Ratnin, 166, 173
 Ravideva, 371n
 Reṇu, 87, 89, 144
 Republics, 121, 128, 134, 137, 140, 150, 173, 191ff, 245ff, 515, 544f
 Revottaras Pātava Chākra Sthapati, 175
 Riksha (mountain), 145n
 Rishabhadatta, see Ushavadāta
 Rītiparṇa, 101, 103
 Roads (Maurya), 284, 343
 Rohiṇi, 192
 Romakas, Rome, 4, 462
 Rornka, 197
 Rudrabhūti, 509
 Rudradāman I, 9n, 304, 467, 486f, 496, 505ff, 618ff
 Rudradāman II, 510
 Rudradeva, 534
 Rudradhara, Bhaṭṭārakā, 509
 Rudrasena I, Kshatrapa, 510
 Rudrasena II, 510
 Rudrasena III, 511
 Rudrasena (I) Vākātaka, 534, 541
 Rudrasena II, 541, 554
 Rudrasimha I, 509
 Rudrasimha III, 510f, 543n
 Rudrāyana, 197
 Rummindei, 309, 342
 Rūpadarśaka, 285
 Rūpnāth, 313

S

- Śāba, 555, 559
 Sabarae, 93
 Sabbamitta, 105n
 Sabbatthaka, 208
 Sacarauli, 426
 Sachiva, 280, 372, 555
 Sadānirā, 52
 Saffarids, 482
 Sāgala, Sāgalanagara, 64, 65n, 381, 422, 545, 629
 Sahadeva Sārñjaya, 121
 Sahaja, 137
 Sahajāti, 129
 Sahalātavi, 538n
 Sahāli, 222, 236n
 Sahasrāṇika, 132
 Śaivism, 464, 478
 Śai-wang, 431f
 Śaka (people), 3, 425f, 431ff, 505ff
 Śaka era, 29, 469n, 618f
 Śākala, see Sāgala
 Śākalya, 65
 Śaka Muruṇḍa, 546f
 Śakasthāna, 434f, 479, 483, 621
 Śāketa, 99, 105, 378
 Śakrāditya, 501, 570f
 Śakti-Kumāra, Śakti-Śrī, 417
 Śākya, 102
 Śākyas, 99, 155, 191
 Śalakenoi, Śālanākāyanas, 500n, 540
 Śālīsūka, 350, 352
 Śālivāhana, 403n, 466n
 Śālvas, 68, 151
 Samāchārādeva, 633
 Samāhatṛi, 293, 319, 521
 Samājas, 326, 334f, 366n
 Samāpā, 306, 311
 Samataṭa, 310, 632
 Sambhuttara, 96
 Saṁbodhi, 339
 Sambos, 259
 Saṁcharamtaka, Saṁchārin, 291, 515, 526
 Sāṁdhivigrahika (Minister of Peace and War), 522, 560
 Saṁgrahitṛi, 166
 Samiti, 174
 Saṁkara-gaṇa, 631
 Saṁkassa (Sāṅkāsya), 54, 198
 Saṁkshobha, 580, 595
 Saṁprati, Saṁpadi, 351f
 Saṁrāj, Saṁrāj, 58, 159
 Sāmrājya, 157f
 Saṁsthāh, 291
 Saṁtanu, 25
 Saṁudra Gupta, 468, 482, 533ff
 Saṁudra vijaya, 114
 Sanabares, 454
 Sanakānikas, 544f
 Sandanes, 483
 Sandrokokottus, see Chandragupta, Maury
 Sangaeus, 260
 Sangala, 251
 Saṅghadāman, 510
 Saṅghamukhya, 140
 Saṅgharaksha, 476
 Saṅgrāhāna, 283n
 Saṅjaya of Magadha, 222
 Saṅjaya of Pañchāla, 137
 Saṅjaya of Pushkaravati, 260
 Saṅjaya (Sūta), 166n
 Saṅkaragaṇa, 631
 Saṅkhyāyaka, 285
 Sāṅkhāyana, (Guṇākhyā), 33f
 Sannidhātṛi, 166, 294, 521
 Sapedanes, 454
 Sarabha, 246
 Saraganus, 415, 483
 Saravarman, 605n
 Śārdulavarman, 603f
 Sarpikā, 99
 Sārthavāha, 561
 Sārvabhauma, Sārvabhūmi, 37, 163, 170
 Sarva-kshatrāntaka, 233, 534
 Sarvanāga, 537, 561
 Sarvañjaha, 222
 Sarvarāj-ochchettā, 533f, 551
 Sarvāstivādin School, 616
 Sarvātāta, 398n, 548
 Sarvavarman, 605n, 623
 Śāsana-hara, 320
 Śasāṅka, 608f, 633f
 Sasa, 445, 454
 Sassanians, 479, 510, 628
 Satadhanvan, Sātadhanus, 350, 352
 Sātahanirājha, 412, 523
 Sātakarṇi I, 406ff, 410n, 414n, 548
 Śātānika, of Kauśāmbi, 132, 202
 Śātānika Sātājita, 44, 75, 97, 169
 Śātānika, son of Janamejaya, 43, 50
 Sātavāhana, 395, 403ff, 433, 483
 Sātavahana-hāra, 412, 523
 Satavastra, 454
 Satiyaputra, 329f
 Sātrāsaha, 71
 Satri, 291
 Sattabhu, 87, 144, 170n
 Satvats, Sātvas, 26, 87n, 90, 138ff, 142
 Satyayajña, 50, 64, 69
 Saubhūti (Sopeithes, Sophytes), 251f
 Saudyumni, 25
 Saunaka, Indrota Daivāpa, 17, 18, 38, 44, 50
 Śaunaka Kāpeya, 44
 Sauvīra, Sovira, 2, 197, 507
 Savaras, 93f
 Sāvattihī, (Srāvasti in Kosala), 99, 105, 198, et passim, 632

- Scylax, 241
 Scythian Administration, 514ff
 Seleukos, 271ff, 299
 Senāgopas, 521
 Sena king, 132
 Senānāyaka mahāmāttas, 208
 Senāni, 166
 Senāpati, 202, 278, 320, 521
 Seniya, 205
 Seres, 381
 Seri, 92
 Setakannika, 412
 Setavyā, 99, 155
 Seyanāga, 211
 Seyaviya, 64
 Shāhān-Shāh, 518
 Shapur II, 479n, 481, 511
 Šibi, Siboi, 66, 95n, 252f, 257
 Sibipura, 253
 Sibirios, 274
 Siddhārtha, father of Mahāvīra, 119
 Siddhārtha (Buddha), 102
 Sigal, 428n
 Sigerdis, 381
 Sihapura, 130
 Sikkhādin, 73
 Sikharasvāmin, 559
 Śīlāditya Dharmāditya of Mo-la-po, 596n, 629n
 Śilaka Śālāvatya, 74
 Śilavat, 209
 Śilavati, 162
 Śimbachandra, 553
 Śimbala, see also Ceylon, 547
 Śimhapura, 89
 Śimhasena, 295, 298
 Śimhavarman (Mandator), 535
 Śimhavarman (Pallava), 501n
 Śimha Vikrama, (Chandra Gupta II), 553
 Śimhavishnu, 501n
 Simuka, 403ff, 416
 Sindhu-Sauvira, 257, 467, 507, 618ff
 Singupuram, 89n
 Sinthus, 435
 Sin-tu, see Sindhu, 620
 Siradhvaia, (Janaka II), 54, 56, 80
 Sri-Vaddha, 202
 Śisikottos (Śaśigupta), 260
 Śisunāga (Susunāga), 115, 219f
 Śisunandi, 396, 536
 Śisupāla, 130
 Sita, 78
 Siva, (worship of), 322n, 464, 568
 Śivas, Sivas, see Šibi, Siboi
 Siva-Bhāgavata, 464
 Siva-datta, 499n
 Siva Gupta, 526
 Sivalakura, 502
 Sivamegha, 531
 Śiva Nandi, 536
 Sivapura, 253
 Sivasena, 444
 Śiva-Skanda-Dutta, 524
 Śiva-Skanda-Gupta, 503
 Śiva-Skanda-Nāga Śrī, 503
 Śiva-Skanda-Varman, 548
 Śiva-Śrī, Sivaśrī Āpilaka, 409, 497
 Śivi, 176, 252f
 Skanda (God), 322n
 Skanda Gupta, 481, 560, 572ff, 628
 Skanda Nāga, 483
 Skanda Nāga Śātaka, 407, 503
 Skandasvāti, 407, 522
 Skandavarman, 501n
 Slaves, 258, 276n, 339
 Soastus, 247
 Soḍāsa, 446
 Sodrai (Sogdoi), 257
 Sogdians, 244, 426f, 436
 Soked (Śāketa), 473
 Solaki, Solāhki, 603
 Solar race, 99
 Solasa Mahājanapada, 95ff
 Somadeva, 628
 Somakas (tribe), 73
 Somaka Śāhadevya, 82, 86, 121
 Somaśarman, 350
 Soṇa, 274n
 Soṇa daṇḍa, 207
 Soṇa Kolivisa, 174
 Soṇa Śātrāsāha, 71
 Sophon the Indian, 615
 Sophagasen, see Subhāgasena
 Sophytes, see Saubhuti
 Sotthisena, 76
 Sotthivatīnagara, 129
 Sovira, see Sauvira
 Spalagadama, 428
 Spalahara, 428
 Spalirises, 428, 440
 Spies, 298f
 Śramaṇa mahāmātra, 340n
 Śrāvastī, see Śāvattī
 Śrāvastī bhukti, 560
 Śreṇika, 205
 Śreṇya, 115, 205
 Śresthisārthavāha-kulika-nigama, 563
 Śrīdhavarman, 457
 Śrī Gupta, 528f
 Śrī Hariḍāsa, 528
 Śrīkaṇṭha, 582, 606
 Śrīmāra rāja, (kings of the family of), 108n
 Śrinagari, 308
 Śrinjaya of Vaiśālī, 123
 Śrinjayas (tribe), 26, 40n, 71f
 Śrī Pratāpa, 566n
 Śrīpura, 538
 Śrīrājya, 92
 Śrī Śāta, 415

666 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

- Sri Vijaya, 92n
 Sri Vikramañ, 556
 Śrī Vira Purushadatta, 500n
 Sri Vishaya, 92n
 Śruta coins, 536
 Sthānika, 293
 Sthānīya, 283n
 Sthapati, 167n
 Strategos, 443, 515
 Strato, 384, 386f, 422
 Stryadhyaksha, 317
 St. Thomas, 452n, 453
 Suari, 93
 Subāhu, 197
 Subandhu, 298
 Subhāgasena, 350, 361f
 Suchivriksha, 44
 Sudakshīṇa, 150
 Sudās, Sudāsa, 73
 Sudarśana Lake, 271, 580
 Sudarśana-pura, 145
 Sudassana, 74
 Suddhodana, 102
 Śūdra kings, 355
 Śūdra (Sodrai of Alexander) (tribe), 257, 493n, 545n
 Sugāṅga palace, 275n
 Sui Vihār, 435, 455, 467, 618ff
 Sujyeshtha, see Vasujyeshtha, 392
 Sukaipa, 236
 Sukeśā Bhāradvāja, 79, 102
 Suketuvvarman, 367
 Sūkhamśiva, 610
 Suktimati, Śuktisāhvaya, city, 129
 Suktimati river, 129
 Śukulideśa, 560
 Sulikas, 602f, 604
 Sulka, 521
 Sumana, 300
 Sumantra, 166n
 Sumati of Vaiśālī, 120
 Sumatra, 92n
 Sumsumāragiri, 133, 193
 Sunahśepa, 165
 Sunakkhatta, 124
 Suṅgas, 368ff, 398ff
 Sung-yun, 460n
 Sunidha, 212
 Sunitha, 130
 Suplan Sārījaya, 120
 Sūrasenas, Sūrasenakas, 68, 138, 142f, 151, 197, 234
 Surāshtra, 270, 288, 297, 314, 381, 434, 446, 491, 506f, 546
 Surasmichandra, 593
 Sūrpāraka, 484, 507n
 Surundhana, 74
 Sūryavarman, 605n
 Suśarman, 398, 403
 Sushena, 16
 Śushkalettra, 308
 Susīma, 303f
 Susthita-varman, 583, 607, 609, 623
 Sūta, 163, 166, 173, 174
 Sutasoma, 134
 Suvarṇabhūmi, 107, 333
 Suvarṇagiri, 288, 307, 311
 Suvāstu (Swāt), 245, 247
 Suviśakha, 508
 Suyāsa, 350
 Svabhra, 507, 621
 Svāmidatta, 538
 Svārājya, 157f
 Svarjit, 147
 Svaśa, 298, 304, 309n
 Śwayamvara, 576
 Svetaketu, 49, 62, 74, 174
 Syandikā, 99
 Symbouloi, 283
 Synedroi, 283
 Syrastrène, 446

T

- Ta-hia, 427, 479
 Takka country, Che-ka, 619
 Takshaśīlā, Taxila, 36f, 59, 61, 145, 217f, 275, 287, 307, 309n, 363, 422, 446f
 Talavara, 563
 Taxila University, 62
 Tālagund, 500n
 Tālajaṅghas, 176
 Tambapamni, Tāmraparnī, 330
 Tāmraparnī, river, 331
 Tāmralipti, 558
 Taprobane, see Tambapamni
 Tathāgata, 3
 Tathāgata Gupta, 588, 595
 Tauala, 259
 Ta-yue-tchi, see Yue-chi
 Tel or Telavāha, 92
 Telephos, 425n
 Terebinthus, 617
 Thānesar, 606f
 Theodamas, 429n
 Theūdora, 515n
 Thullakoṭṭhita, 128
 Tiastanes, 504
 Tien-tchou, 429, 464, 479
 Tikshṇa, 291
 Timitra, 382
 Tirabhukti, Tirhut, 52, 560ff
 Tirabhukty-Upārik-ādīkarapa, 563
 Tishya, 300
 Tishyarakshitā, 367
 Tissa, king of Ceylon, 331
 Tivara, 343, 349
 Tochari, 426f
 Togara, 602n

Toramāpa, 561, 595f, 629
 Tosali, 288, 305n, 306, 311
 Tou-mi, 455, 460n
 Traikūṭaka, 499n
 Traikūṭaka Era, 468
 Traṇakayiro, 417
 Trasadasyu, 101
 Trigartas, 68
 Trikāmala, 400
 Trikuṭa, 580
 Tripārvata, 504n
 Tripurī, 129
 Tripurī Vishaya, 560, 595
 Triśālā, 123
 Trisāmā, 380n
 Tsenn-Hoang, 458
 Tsung-ling mountains, 474
 Tukhāras, 148n, 427
 Tulakuchi 232n
 Tulus, 329
 Tumain, Tumbavana, 567
 Tundikeras, 146
 Tura Kāvasheya, 13, 15, 17, 19, 32
 Turamāya, 332
 Tūrgbna, 22
 Turiva, 425
 Turvaśas, 71f
 Tushāspba, 263, 289, 304, 314, 508n
 Tūthika, 523

U

Ubbhataka, 127
 Uberae, 94
 Ubhaka, 222
 Uchchaiṣravas, 25, 26
 Uchchaśrīṅgi, 504n
 Udāka, 393
 Udaśasena, 98n
 Udānakūpa, 560, 563
 Udāsthita, 291
 Udaya of Kāsi, 76; 98n
 Udaya, Udayibhadda, Udayin of Magadha, 216, 217f
 Udayana, 47, 202f
 Uddālaka, Arunī, see Arunī
 Udīchyas, 66, 157
 Udyana, Oḍḍiyāna, 245
 Ugra, Ugraputra, Ugras, 120 and note
 Ugrasena, Mahāpadma, 231ff, 239, 263
 Ugrasena of Paṭakka, 538
 Ugrasena Pārikshita, 16
 Ujjain (Ujjeni) Viślā, Padmāvatī; Bhogavati, Hiranyavati, 275, 287, 298, 307, 352, 364, 434, 505, 557, 596n
 Ukkachetā, 110n
 Ukkatṭha, 99, 198
 Ukkāvelā, 110n

Una, 246n
 Upachara, 130
 Upagupta, 591n
 Upaguptā, 591n, 604
 Upaplavya, 67
 Uparichara, 130
 Uparika Mahārāja, 561
 Urāgapura, 328, 541
 Uraiṃ, see Urāgapura
 Uraśā, 248, 447
 Uruvelakappa, 128
 Ushasti Chākṛāyaṇa, see Chākṛāyaṇa
 Ushavadāta, 484ff
 Uśinara, 65f
 Utkala, 137, 636
 Uttamabhadras, 489, 155n
 Uttamaujas, 73
 Uttarādhyakshas, 285
 Uttara Kurus, 64, 157
 Uttara Madra, 64, 157
 Uttara Pañchāla, 70, 134
 Uttarāpatha, 59, 308, 420
 Uttara Tosala, 306n
 Uvima Kavthisa, 462

V

Vachabhūmika, 316, 320
 Vachchha, see Vatsa
 Vāhlikas, Bāhli, 25, 535n
 Vaichitravīrya, see Dhṛitarāshṭra Vaichitravīrya
 Vaidebas, Later, 80f
 Vaidehīputra, Vedehiputia, 132, 206n
 Vaidyas, 256n
 Vaigai, 328
 Vaihāra, 111
 Vaijayanti, 492, 502, 504n
 Vainyadevi, 586
 (Vai)nya Gu(pta), 596n, 601n,
 Vairājya, 158f
 Vairochana, 108
 Vaiśālī, 118, 206, 211, 219, 531, 562
 Vaiśālīka Dynasty, 120f
 Vaiśāly-ādhiṣṭhān-ādhiṣṭhāna, 563
 Vaiśampāyana, 7, 18, 39, 41
 Vaiśravaṇa, 218n
 Vājapeya, 159, 163f
 Vājsheshka, 465, 477
 Vajirā, 201, 210
 Vajji, 83, 118ff, 212,
 Vajra, 588, 597
 Vākātakas, 541ff, 554, 564, 578, 612, 634
 Valabhi, 580, 626, 629f
 Vālavi, 561
 Vāmadeva, 82
 Vamataksa (ma ?), 459n
 Vamba Moriyar, 270

- Vamśa, see Vatsa
 Vamśadharā, 89n
 Vanashpara, 473
 Vanavāsi, 602n
 Vaṅga, 106, 309n, 331n, 535n, 603, 624
 Vāṇiyagāma, 198
 Vāṇji, 330
 Vaṅka, 105, 154
 Vaṅkshu, 628
 Varadā, 373
 Varadātāta, 86
 Vārakamaṇḍala, 560, 634
 Vārāṇasi, see Bārāṇasi
 Vāranāvata, 134
 Vardhamānabhukti, 560, 634
 Vardhamāna, see Nigaṇṭha Nātaputta
 Mahāvira
 Varhran, 479n, 481, 510
 Varman, 605n, 624
 Vārshagaṇya, 5
 Vāsas, 65, 131ff
 Vāsabha-Khattiyā, 200
 Vāśāti, 257
 Vāsavadattā, 202
 Vāseṭṭhas, 127
 Vāsishka, 465, 477
 Vāsishṭha dynasty, 542
 Vāsishṭhiputra Chatārapana Sātākarni, 496
 Vāsishṭhiputra Ehuvula Chāntamūla II, 500n
 Vāsishṭhiputra Pulumāyi, 410n, 492ff
 Vāsishṭhiputrā Śiva Sri Sātākarni, 496
 Vāsishṭhiputra Sri Chaṇḍa Sāti, 497n
 Vāsishṭhiputra Śri Sātākarni, 496, 507
 Vas Kushāṇa, 464n
 Vassakāra, 212
 Vasubandhu, 564n, 587
 Vasu of Chedi, 113, 130
 Vasudāna, 132
 Vasudeva Kāṇva, 392, 395, 398
 Vāsudeva Kṛishṇa, see Kṛishṇa Vāsudeva, 141, 394, 478
 Vāsudeva Kushān, 468, 478
 Vasu Jyeshṭha, 392
 Vasuladattā, see Vāsavadatta
 Vasumati, 111
 Vasumitra, King, 379, 388, 393, 475
 Vasumitra, sage, 475
 Vaṭāṭavi, 538n
 Vatsa, Vamśa, 131, 192, 202ff
 Vātsyāyana, 408, 526
 Vāvātā, 162
 Vāyurakhita, 561n
 Vedehaputta, 76
 Vedehiputta, 206n
 Vedhas, 104
 Vehalla, 209n, 211
 Vejayanti, 491n
 Veṅgi, 500n, 538ff
 Vesālī, see Vaiśālī
 Veśpasī, 473
 Vessantara, Prince, 176
 Veṭṭhadīpa, 193 and note
 Vichitravīrya, 302
 Vidagdha, Sākalya, 58
 Vidarbha, 86f, 91, 148, 372f, 602n
 Videgha, Māthava, 54, 77
 Videha, 48f, 52f, 74, 80f, 118, 132, 209n
 Vidiśā, 369ff, 393f, 396, 480, 555, 606n, 609
 Viḍuḍabha, 200, 211, 323n, 537n
 Vigataśoka Tishya, see Tishya
 Vigataśoka II, 300
 Vighraḥapāla, 223n
 Vihārayātrā, 323
 Vijaya (conquest), 327, 365, 537
 Vijaya (prince), 330n
 Vijayakirti, 468
 Vijaya Buddha Varman, 519
 Vijayeśa, 308
 Vikrama era, 465f, 472n
 Vikramāditya, Chandragupta II, 553ff
 Vikramāditya of Ayodhyā, 586
 Vikramāditya (Skanda), 577
 Vikramāditya Śakāri, 465n, 556, 596
 Vikrama, Puru (Buddha ?) Gupta, 586
 Vilivāyakura, 502, 637
 Village administration, 292, see Grāma
 Vima Kadphises II, see Wema
 Vimala-Koṇḍañña, 209n
 Vimānadasānā, 340n
 Vinaśana, 545
 Vinayāditya, 611
 Vināyakapāla (Pratihāra), 585n
 Vinaya-sthiti-sthāpaka, 563
 Vindhyaśaki, 541
 Vipāśā, 380n
 Vira Choḍa, 16
 Virakūcha, 501n
 Vira Matsyas, 67
 Virasena, General, 371, 390n
 Virasena Maurya, 350, 361
 Virasena, Śāba, 555, 559
 Viraṭa, 67, 137
 Virāṭanagara, 67, 137
 Viravarman, 501n
 Vīśadeva, 528
 Viśākha, 323n
 Viśākhayūpa, 220n
 Viśāla, King, 120
 Viśālā (Vaiśālī), 120
 Viśālā (Ujjain), 557
 Viśāṇins, 253
 Vishaya, 321, 523, 537, 560
 Vishayapati, 524, 537, 561
 Vishṇu Worship, 568
 Vishṇugopa, 538
 Vishṇugopa (Pālakkaḍa), 519
 Vishṇugupta, Chandrāditya, 611
 Vishṇukada-Chutu-Kulānada Sātākarni, 503

Vishṇukupḍin, 500n, 602, 638

Vishṇumitra, 401

Vishṇupada, 106

Vishṇupālita, 524

Vishṇuvardhana, 585n 631n

Vishṭi, 9n, 284n, 514,

Vishvaksena, 98n

Viśvasiṃha, 510

Viśvavarman, 567n

Vitabhaya, 507n

Vitahavyas, 98

Vitaṅkapura, 106

Vitastātra, 308

Vitihoiras, 146, 233

Vohārika Mahāmattas, 208, 286

Vokkāṇa, 602n

Vonones, 427f, 622

Vraja, 320

Vrātya, 112, 123, 127, 142

Vṛddhadyumna, 44

Vṛihaspati (king), 350, 352

Vṛijika, 309

Vṛishala, 295n, 355n

Vṛishalis, 291

Vṛishasena, 350

Vṛishṇis, 140ff

Vyaghra-bala-parākrama, 566n, 569

Vyaghradeva, 541f

Vyāghra-parākrama, 550

Vyāghra-rāja, 538

Vyāghra-sena, 499n

Vyāprita, 524

Vyāvahāra Samatā, 358f

Vyavaharika Mahāmātras, 208, 286

Vyāsa, 49

Vyūtha, 341n

W

Wardad, 435

Wei, 464

Wema Kadphises, 463f, 470

Wu-sun, 458

Wu-t'-ou-lao, 432

X

Xandrames, 233, 236, 519n

Xathroi, 257

Xerxes, 242f

Y

Yahgou, Yavuga, 460

Yādava, Yadu, 138, 145

Yajñasena of Pañchāla, 73

Yajñasena of Vidarbha, 373

Yajña śri, 497f, 502

Yajñavalkya, 49f

Yajñavarman, 603

Yaśaskara, 592

Yaśodāman, 510, 513

Yaśodharman, 596ff, 601, 625, 630

Yaśomati, 573

Yaśovarman, 588n, 611

Yaudheyas, 250n, 467f, 508, 515n, 544f 619, 621

Yauna, Yavana, Yona, 3, 5, 307, 354, 366, 378ff, 397

Yauvarājya, 519

Yayāti, 25, 63

Yayātiqagari, 539n

Yen-kao-tchen, see Wema Kadphises

Yin-mo-fu, 432, 439, 466

Ysāmotka 487, 505

Yudhishṭhira, Yudhitthila, 46, 81, 133, 166

Yueh-chi, Yue-eh (Yüe-ti, Yuo-teni), 427, 431, 458ff, 473

Yuktas, Yutas, 316, 319f, 336

Yung-ku, 432

Yuva Mahārāja, 519

Z

Za Hakale, Zoscales, 505n

Zeda, 473

Zeionises, see Jihonika, 462

Zoilos, 422

Zoroastriara, 276, 475, 615

SOME ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS

Page	Line	For	Read
23	20	laud	land
131	5	Vatsas	Vaśas
145	fn1	a rdly	is hardly
	fn2	fication	identification
148	fn1	Add "in the Pāla-Pratihāra age they are also found in Pehoa (Ep. Ind. I. 247) and Bengal.
151	11	Kāśya	Kāśaya
155	24	say gs	sayings
	26	Vim na	Vimāna
	34	Davadaha	Devadaha
182	fn1	AJSB	JASB
188	27	Chandaśoka	Chandāśoka
194	7	Mayūra	Māyūra
	fn2	Mahaparinibbānu	Mahaparinibbāna
208	fn2	amachchs	amachcha
240	4	For the contacts between the Medes and India, see India Antiqua, 1947. 180ff.
	23	486 B.C.	513 B.C.
		(Olmstead, History of the Persian Empire , P145. Some scholars believe that the conquest of Sind preceded Scylax's exploration of the Indus—India Antiqua, P.181).
241	24	after 'was' add 'at first'.
243	17	tracted	traced
256	35	after 'Ambaṣṭha' add 'Note also the attribution of the Surjan-charita to a Gauḍa Ambaṣṭha (DHNI, ii, 1061n4) of the time of Akbar.
260	21	Scythiads	Scythians
271	4	Dr. G. C. Raychaudhuri draws my attention to another Aramaic inscription of Devānampriya found at Laghman (ancient Lampaka, BSOAS, Vol. XIII, pt. I, 1949, 80ff). This confirms the Greek evidence about the inclusion of Kābul and its neighbourhood within the dominions of the early Mauryas.
290	29	Pratipāra	Pratihāra
298	24	objects	object
	36	Kaśas	Khaśas
304	24	Srinagari	Śrinagari
354	5	Cf. Strabo. XV. 1. 27—"We became acquainted with the eastern parts of India on this side the Hypanis and whatever parts beside which have been described by those who after Alexander, advanced beyond the Hypanis to the Ganges and Palibothra".

SOME ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS 671

Page	Line	For	Read
362	18	Add after Seleukos "The Antiochos-Sophagasenus alliance may also have been directed against the Imperial Mauryas of Pātaliputra". Greek intrigue may have played a part in the disintegration of the empire, before the Greek raids.
372	33	A Śuṅgarāja is known from certain coins found at Kauśāmbī (JNSI, IV, i, 14). His identity is however uncertain.
386	27	bronze	copper (CHI, 555, 690.
		Whitehead, Indo-Greek Coins, 26)
387	18	After "Strato I" add the following "Seltman (Greek Coins 235) refers to a large gold coin which Eukratides struck to mark his triumph over Demetrius.
419	fn2	o	or (R̥ṣika)
443	29	he	the
	35	paro	pars
445	fn4	Add at the end "Also Whitehead, Numismatic Chronicle , 1944, pp19-104. Apacharaja of the Bajour inscription is taken by some to mean 'ruler of the West'.
451	fn1	Before "A survey of Persian Art" insert "Pope and Ackerman".
480	25	Basnagor	Besnagar
482	19	of	or
500	22	After SII, add Vol. XII.
513	3	Chashatna	Chashtana
	15	Satyasimha	Satyasimhai
		Read dots above to indicate indefinite relationship with daughter of Rudra II.
518	31	Chines ine	Chinese in
532	6	to a third	to the third
540, 627		Recently Dr. D. C. Sircar has come across evidence (in an Orissa inscription) which indicates that in 569 one Prithivi-Vigraha held Kalinga apparently as a Gupta vassal.
555	1	Capital of the Gupta Empire	Fall of the Western Satraps
557	33	Guruḍa	Garuḍa
559	9	Sāba	Śāba
568	26	Bhāgabata	Bhāgavata
572	33	Bhitari	Bihar
575	49	System	Sister
579	26	grandson	cousin
584	8	Asvamedha	Aśvamedha
592	9	his	Kumara's
593	11	Add after 476-7 "together with the Benares ins. of 159 (JRASB, 1949, 56)
605	35	Iśānavarman	Iśānavarman
	"	Śaravarman	Śarvavarman
606	22	Iśānavarman	Iśānavarman
613	4	Manker	Maukhari

672 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

Page	Line	For	Read
628	11	Nanavāsinaḥ	Vanavāsinaḥ
630	5	Chakavartin	Chakravartin
631	2	Samkaragṇa	Śamkaragṇa
639	29	Śābara	Śabara
	"	Śāśadhara	Śaśadhara

OPINIONS AND REVIEWS

I.—Political History of Ancient India

From the Accession of Parikshit to the Extinction of the Gupta Dynasty

Published by the Calcutta University

Opinions on the earlier editions and on Part I :—

THE HINDUSTHAN REVIEW.—It is learned and luminous and is a scientific treatise based on the results of research into the records and materials of ancient Indian history, of which it is a sound and an accurate digest, interestingly put together. It is about the best text-book of the subject it deals with.

DR. L. D. BARNETT, LONDON.—The author treats his materials with a certain degree of originality, but at the same time he preserves throughout a well-balanced judgment and never sacrifices critical caution to the passion for novel theories.....This interesting book.....shews judgment, ingenuity, and learning. And not the least of the author's merits is that he can write plain English.

DR. F. W. THOMAS.—I have profited by a closer acquaintance with your Political History and other writings, which are really models of sound judgment combined with full knowledge.

PROFESSOR HULTZSCH, HALLE, GERMANY.—Your valuable work.....is the outcome of extensive researches and throws much light on darkest and most debated periods of Indian history. You have succeeded in building up an intelligible account from the stray and imperfect materials which are available to the historian of those times.

PROFESSOR JOLLY, WÜRZBURG, GERMANY.—Your splendid volume.....What an enormous mass of evidence has been collected and discussed in this work. ~~an~~ important feature of which is the quotation of the original texts along with their translation which makes it easy to control the conclusions arrived at. The ancient geography, not less than the ancient history of India, has been greatly furthered by your researches and much new light has been thrown on some of the most vexed problems of Indian Archaeology and Chronology. The indices are very copious and the study of your work is greatly facilitated by them.

PROFESSOR PELLIOU, PARIS.—Le nom de l'auteur est garant du sérieux du travail.

PROFESSOR JARL CHARPENTIER, UPSALA, SWEDEN.—Professor Ray Chaudhuri belongs to a set of young Hindu scholars who, combining the traditional education of a Pandit with a thorough training in English, German or French Universities, have lately been carrying on deep and fruitful researches in the various domains of Indian lore.....Even the student, who on essential points does differ widely from the opinions expressed by Professor Ray Chaudhuri, must willingly recognize his high merits as a scholar.

PROFESSOR A. SCHEPOTIEFF, UFA, RUSSIA.—For our study of the history of the Ancient Age your Political History of Ancient India is of very great importance (trans. from original).

C. E. A. W. OLDHAM (J. R. A. S., 1928, JULY)—Part I of Professor Ray Chaudhuri's work deals with the period from Parikṣit to Bimbisāra. The author seeks to show, as he tells us in his preface, "that chronological relation of the national transactions before 600 B.C. is not impossible." He has laid under contribution the usual authorities, the Vedic, Puranic, Buddhist, and Jaina texts—though he does not appear to place much reliance upon the last-named (cf. pp. 6 and 72). A vast mass of records has been collated, and the evidence marshalled in a very concise and able, and in some respects original, manner. The apposite quotations from the original texts are useful. Professor Ray Chaudhuri regards Parikṣit I and Parikṣit II, as they are named by the late Mr. Pargiter in his Ancient Indian Historical Tradition, as being probably one and the same king, and as identifiable with the Vedic Parikṣit. By "the great Janaka" he refers to the Janaka of the later Vedic texts, whose court is said to have been thronged with Brāhmaṇas, and not to the traditional first king Janaka, the eponymous founder of the Janakavaṃśa, or to Janaka Śiradhvaja, the reputed father of Sītā. Synchronizing Guṇākhyā Sāṅkhāyana with Aśvalāyana and the Buddha, he inclines, it seems, to place Parikṣit in the ninth, and the "great Janaka" in the seventh century B.C. though he wisely avoids coming to any positive conclusion as to these debatable dates, and points out that if the evidence of the Parāgas were accepted we would have to place them some five centuries earlier. If it could be established that Parikṣit came into power at the beginning of the ninth century, or the end of the tenth, this would help to corroborate the approximate chronology suggested by Mr. Pargiter, having regard also to the synchronism between Senājī Bārhadratha and Adhisīmaktṣṇa. But until more convincing evidence is discovered most scholars will probably agree in the verdict of Vincent Smith that nothing approaching exact chronology is yet available for periods anterior to about 650 B.C.

Much of the matter in Part II will perhaps be familiar to students of Indian history: but it has been arranged in a fresh and scholarly manner, while several important suggestions have been made on different questions. One or two of these may be cited as examples. On pp. 72-73 reasons are set forth for accepting the Ceylon tradition that Śisunāga was later than Bimbisāra. The view recorded by Mahāmahopādhyāya (sic) H. P. Śāstrī that the ultimate dismemberment of the Mauryan empire was due to a reaction promoted by the Brāhmanas, is vigorously controverted. Whatever other causes may have operated, and Professor Ray Chaudhuri undoubtedly lays his finger on more than one such, Brahmanical influences cannot be ignored. The arguments used for holding that Demetrius,¹ rather than Menander, was the Yavana invader of the Madhyadeśa in the time of Puṣyamitra, and that Simuka, the founder of the Śātavāhana dynasty, must be placed in the first century B. C., deserve careful consideration.

Since Hoernle made his well-known suggestion as to the identity of Devagupta, mentioned in two inscriptions of Harṣavardhana, several writers have attempted to frame the history of the later Guptas of Eastern Mālava and Bihār and the Maukharis of Kanauj. The period presents many difficulties, which are not likely to be solved until some further evidence reveals itself. Having regard to the conditions of the times and the bitter enmity of the Maukharis, who were then very powerful, it seems unlikely that the Susthitavarman mentioned in the Aḥsānd (sic) inscription of Adityasena as having been defeated by Mahāsenagupta of E. Mālava, could have been the king of Kāmarūpa, as the author states. Fleet's suggestion that he was the Maukhari king of that name,¹ whom we know to have been contemporaneous with Mahāsenagupta, seems more probable.

1. For the latest reading of the Hāthīgumphā inscription reference to the Yavana king, see JBORS., XIII, 228.

Not the least valuable part of the contents of this volume are the numerous comments on the geographical information supplied in the records quoted; and it is a matter of regret that of the five maps entered in the table of Contents (p. xvi), only one, viz., that of "Bhāratavarsha" appears in the volume before us. As regards this map we are not told what specific period, if any, it refers to. In any case, the positions assigned to the Nisādas, S. Kosala, Kamboja, and the Rikṣa mountains seem to call for some explanation. On the other hand, the geographical information given in the text is extensive, and often suggestive, and it indicates that much attention has been devoted to this important auxiliary to ancient Indian historical research. The indexes, both bibliographical and general, have been very well prepared.

PROFESSOR A. BERRIEDALE KEITH, EDINBURGH.—I have read through the work and find it to contain much that is valuable. The author has arrived at clearly cut opinions on many of the chief difficulties in the history of early India; he has formulated them effectively, and as a result, even when they do not commend themselves as final solutions, they will serve to promote the discussion and to facilitate further fruitful research. He observes a due sense of proportion and is well read in the literature. The work accordingly may justly be deemed a most valuable contribution to the subject-matter of which it treats.

PROFESSOR WILH. GEIGER, MÜNCHEN-NEUBERG, GERMANY.—I highly appreciate Mr. Ray Chaudhuri's work as a most happy combination of sound scientific method and enormous knowledge of both Brahmanical and non-Brahmanical literature. The work is written in lucid style in spite of its intricate subject and affords a mass of valuable evidence, throwing much light on the whole period of Indian History dealt in it. I see with special pleasure and satisfaction that we now are enabled by the author's penetrating researches to start in Indian chronology from the 9th instead of the 6th or 5th century B. C.

PROFESSOR JACKSON, COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY, NEW YORK.—I can see the scholarly research which you have put into the volume, and am glad to have such a work for future reference in my historical studies.

¹ No Maukhari king of that name is known (H. C. R. C.).

PROFESSOR LOUIS DE LA VALLEE POUSSIN, BRUSSELS, BELGIUM.—I believe that the book is well designed and has the twofold merit of collecting a vast amount (and in some chapters, an exhaustive one) of references, and of giving a clear and reasonable exposé of the main line of this history. I agree with the author on several controverted points of chronology.

MRS. C. A. F. RHYS DAVIDS.—Dr. Chaudhuri has made debtors of us all.

S. M. EDWARDES (The Indian Antiquary, July, 1927, p. 140).—Professor Raychaudhuri's book forms a solid contribution to the discussion of the various problems implicit in the early history of India.

PROFESSOR E. J. RAPSON, CAMBRIDGE.—My best thanks for the kind present of a copy of the "Political History of Ancient India," which I am very glad to possess and which I shall find most useful for reference.

PROFESSOR STEN KONOW, NORWAY.—The book is a very useful contribution.

DR. V. S. SUKTHANKAR.—I have to refer to it very often, both for corroboration of historical facts of the epic and for geographical information and the excellent maps included in the volume. It has been always a matter of great gratification to me that you have adopted my views with reference to the Sātavāhanas and at last given them, in a standard history of India the appellation by which they call themselves...rather than accept the doubtful description of them given by the late Purāṇas.

PROFESSOR NILAKANTA SASTRI.—Your excellent Ancient History of India. I have been using it on every conceivable occasion.

SITARAM KOHLI, LAHORE.—I have immensely liked your book "Political History of Ancient India."

C. S. SRINIVASACHARI, SOUTH INDIA.—Our author rightly holds the balance between the views of Pargiter which would give excessive value to Kshatriya tradition whose date allowed of manipulation to serve dynastic ends and the value of Vedic tradition whose two strong points are its priority of date and freedom from textual corruption.

W. CHARLES DE SILVA, COLOMBO.—I have the greatest pleasure to express my high appreciation of your very valuable and learned article (Part I of the Political History).

PROFESSOR E. WASHBURN HOPKINS.—It is a fine augury for Indian scholarship when native scholars of the first rank take seriously in hand the great problem of untangling the web of Indian history. To this work your book is a valuable contribution.

678 POLITICAL HISTORY OF ANCIENT INDIA

PROFESSOR H. JACOBI, BONN.—Very suggestive and contains some important details.

PROFESSOR F. OTTO SCHRADER.—I have read the book with increasing interest and do not hesitate to say that it contains a great many details which will be found useful by later historians. The portion I enjoyed most is that on the sixteen Mahājanapadas.

II. The Early History of the Vaishnava Sect

Published by the Calcutta University

PROFESSOR E. WASHBURN HOPKINS, YALE UNIVERSITY, AMERICA.—Your book has given me great satisfaction.....I am particularly pleased to see an incisive study of this kind in the realm of religious history.....Believe me, in the hope of further contributions of this character from your able pen.....

PROFESSOR A. BERRIEDALE KEITH, EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY.—While I do not concur in your view as to the original character of Kṛṣṇa, I recognise the care with which you have investigated the issue, and value highly the elaborate collation of the evidence which your work contains, and which will render it of much service to all students of this doubtless insoluble problem. The stress laid on the epigraphic evidence and the full use made of it is of special value, while in many details your opinions are of interest and value, as in the case of the date of Pāṇini.....

SIR GEORGE GRIERSON.—Very interesting and informing.....The book is full of matter which is of great importance for the history of religion in India and will form a valued addition to my collection of books on the subject...

F. E. PARGITER, OXFORD.—I agree with you in discarding various theories, but I don't think Kṛṣṇa Devakīputra is the famous Kṛṣṇa, and it seems to me your exposition can stand just as well without the identification as with it. Your book will help to elucidate the whole matter, but are you sure that the cult does not owe something to Christianity?

PROFESSOR F. OTTO SCHRADER, KIEL, GERMANY.—I perfectly agree with your opinion that Chāndogya passage on Kṛṣṇa Devakīputra and his teaching is to be considered as the first historical record of Bhāgavatism. There were, of course, many Kṛṣṇas, but to conjecture that more than one was also a Devakīputra, is to my mind an unscientific boldness which is the less justifiable as the teachings mentioned in that passage, as you show, perfectly agree with those, e.g., of the Bhagavad-gītā and the Rk. quoted with the famous तद्विष्णोः परमं पदं.....

PROFESSOR GARBE, TUBINGEN, GERMANY.—I have read your book with the greatest interest and perfectly agree with you in the main points, as to the personality of Kṛṣṇa and the development of Bhāgavatism..... You have brought together much important material and elucidated the dark early history of Bhāgavatism as far as possible.

THE TIMES LITERARY SUPPLEMENT, MAY 12, 1921.—The lectures of Mr. Hemchandra Ray Chaudhuri on the early history of the Vaiṣṇava Sect read almost as would a Bampton lecture on the "Historical Christ" to a Christian audience. They are an attempt to disentangle the authentic figure of Krishna from the mass of Puranic legend and gross tradition, from the wild conjectures and mistaken, if reasoned, theories which surround his name. The worship of Krishna is not a superstitious idolatry; it is the expression of the Bhakti, the devotional faith of an intellectual people, and many missionaries, ill-equipped for dealing with a dimly understood creed would do well to study this little volume.....

JOURNAL ASIATIQUE, JANUARY-MARCH, 1923. PARIS.—Dans le domaine historique, signalons un travail plein de mérite de M. Hemchandra Ray Chaudhuri. Materials for the Study of the Early History of the Vaiṣṇava Sect (Dr. Jules Bloch of Paris).

DR. JULES BLOCH, PARIS.—My Guru, Sylvain Levi, who has come back from his travels, told me also of his esteem for that book.

JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN.—The scope of this small book is rightly expressed in its title.—The author who is Lecturer in History in the Calcutta University, has collected and discussed statements, references, and allusions from the early literature to throw light on the position and life of Kṛṣṇa and the growth of Bhāgavatism. He deals with the various theories that have been put forward, and with good reasons discredits the views that Kṛṣṇa Vāsudeva was a solar deity or a tribal god or a vegetation deity. He is right in treating Kṛṣṇa Vāsudeva as one person, the Vṛṣṇi chief, but he unnecessarily identifies him with Kṛṣṇa Devakiputra, the scholar mentioned in the Chāndogya Upanishad(F. E. Pargiter).

THE BOMBAY CHRONICLE, JUNE 19, 1921.—Mr. Hem-chandra Ray Chaudhury of the Calcutta University has collected much valuable material from which he has succeeded in tracing the origin and growth of the Vaiṣṇava creed. The Historicity of Srikrishna—or as the author calls him, Krishna Vāsudeva, is also handled with remarkable clearness.....

A GOVINDACHARYA SVAMIN.—I pay you a most deserved compliment upon your acquaintance with the Azhvārs and Sri Vaiṣṇavism of southern India as evidenced in your learned book the Early History of the Vaiṣṇava Sect.

III. Studies in Indian Antiquities

Demy Svo. Pp. xvi, 211

Published by the Calcutta University

PROFESSOR E. J. RAPSON, CAMBRIDGE.—Dr. Raychaudhuri's essays on Indian History and Antiquities are always well-informed, thoughtful and suggestive.

E. J. THOMAS (J. R. A. S., OCTOBER, 1933, p. 925).—The study which Dr. Raychaudhuri has already devoted to ancient Indian history is well known. In the present book he discusses some of the geographical problems which still face the historians, as well as Vedic, epic, and specially historical questionsHe has shown that Indian historical scholarship is proceeding on sound lines of its own and achieving independent results.

O. C. GANGOLY.—Permit me to thank you for your valuable gift of Studies in Indian Antiquities in which I have read with great profit your article: Vanga Kon Des? It is an excellent contribution to our knowledge of the little known phase of old Bengal. You do not try to prove too much, yet you have given very much based on solid data. It is a pity many scholars do not know of this article—buried in a series of Essays in English.

Opinions on some of the Papers incorporated in the Volume.

DR. BARNETT.—They are very interesting and critically sound.

DR. KEITH.—They are all very interesting, and I am glad to note the very useful information elicited as to Bhoja.

PROFESSOR DR. STEN KONOW, KRISTIANIA, NORWAY.—They are written in a thoroughly scholar-like way, and more especially it seems to me that your paper about the Laksmana Sena era deserves very careful attention.

PROFESSOR H. JACOBI.—The verification of the Bhāgavata credo in the Besnagar inscription is a find on which you may be congratulated.

PROFESSOR SCHRADER, KIEL, GERMANY.—The Antiquity of the Rig Veda is a sober and useful little piece of research work with which, on the whole, I fully agree. If we follow Jacobi and Tilak we create a gap (which we cannot bridge over) between the Mantras and the Brāhmaṇas, for the latter are certainly not far removed from early Buddhism. On the other hand, if Hertel were right, the Rg Veda would immediately precede Buddhism, and there would be no room at all for Brāhmaṇas and Upanisads.

Your important paper on the inter-relation of the two epics: The opinion held by Macdonell, Winternitz, and others, viz., that the heroes of the Mahābhārata are unknown to the Rāmāyāṇa, seems, indeed, to be untenable... Again, I find it difficult, as you do, to distinguish between a Pāṇḍava story and a Kuru-Bhārata Epic, PROFESSOR JARL CHARPENTIER.—The identification of some words in this very important document (the Besnagar Inscription) with a passage in the Mahābhārata seems to be a most happy find.

PROFESSOR E. WASHBURN HOPKINS.—It is certainly a remarkable resemblance which you have established and I should be inclined to agree with your conclusion.

IV. An Advanced History of India

Opinion on the book and particularly on the chapters contributed by the author of the Political History of Ancient India

PROFESSOR LOUIS RENOY, PARIS.—C'est un ouvrage tout-à-fait remarquable, destiné à mon avis à remplacer pour les étudiants avancés le Vincent Smith (et autres) un peu vieillis. Votre exposé est très clair, sobre, prudent, éloigné de toute hypothèse inutile.

Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain & Ireland.—Parts 1 & 2, 1949
Pp. 103-104. L. D. Barnett.

An Advanced History of India. By R. C. Majumdar, H. C. Raychaudhuri, Kalikinkar Datta. Second edition. pp. ix, i, 1081; 10 maps. London: Macmillan and Co., 1948.

One of the most hopeful features in the mental life of modern India is its thirst for history. Schools, Colleges and Universities pursue this study with vigour. The favours of Clio are not easy to win: she loves to walk especially in the domain of India's past, though darkling ways,..... But her Indian suitors have urged their quest with courage and often with notable skill, and their labours have borne fruit in a large number of works, many of high merit. In this book three distinguished Indian scholars have collaborated in order to produce for advanced students an outline of their country's history from the earliest ages down to our time, in which are summarized the main results of modern studies. In this they have been on the whole very successful. Their attitude is generally fair and reasonable, their narrative lucid and straightforward. Naturally specialists, particularly in the realm of ancient Indian annals, on which opinions are very often divergent, will find food for criticism in some of the views presented; but our authors may justly claim a right to their opinions.

It must, however, be acknowledged that in at least one respect their work shows some lack of proportion. They are Bengalis whose studies have been mainly concerned with the history of Northern India; and this has led them to allot a very small space to the annals of the great kingdoms of the South from the decline of the Sātavāhanas to the end of the rule of the Calukyas, the Cōlas, and their epigoni (pp. 172-180 and 188-190). In some minor matters also there is room for improvement. Thus, the account of administration on p. 71 f. seems a little too summary and hardly critical enough; and the statement on p. 81 that "another (highway) stretched from Rājagriha in South Bihār by way of Śrāvasti in Oudh to the banks of the Godāvari" contradicts the facts,¹ for the highway ran from Śrāvasti through Rājagriha to the Godāvari. The diacritic marking length of vowels is so often misplaced that one is led to think that the authors would have done better to have never used it at all. To quote a few examples, we find passim errors such as "Kōhkān" "Mālābār", "Peshāwār", "Māndālay", "Kathakālī", "Alī", "Alivardi" (for "Ilahvirdī"), "Kāshmīr", "Wāzīr", and both "Qāsīm" and "Kāsīm", with other inconsistencies in representing the Arabic gutturals. On p. 71 we note with sorrow the misspelling "diarchy"; on p. 202 f. we regret to see Basava presented as "Vasava", while on p. 203 Vātsyāyana appears as 'Vātsāyana', both errors being due to the influence of Bengali pronunciation². It is disagreeable also to meet hybrid spellings of names such as "Hyder 'Alī" and "Omdut-ul-Umarā".

In a work of this kind there should have been some recognition of Warren Hastings' enlightened and successful efforts to revive Hindu education and law; absence is to be regretted.

This book, now in its second edition, will surely be soon reprinted; and then, we hope, blemishes will be eliminated.

1 Not, it may humbly be pointed out, the facts record in some early Buddhist texts (cf. Sutta-Nipāta and its trans. by Fausbøll, 1881, SBE, x, pt. ii, pp. 187-188, 209) which narrate a journey from Patitthāna (on the Godāvari) to several places including Sāvattthi and thence to the city of Magadha and to Pāsānaka cetiya in Magadha.

2 That the errors in spelling are not all due to the influence of Bengali pronunciations will be apparent from the Political History of Ancient India, 4th ed. 1938, p. 339, line 29; and the Ground-Work of Indian History by Sen and Raychaudhuri, seventh edition (1945), p. 112, which gives a brief account of "Basava". As to "diarchy" for which the authors are criticised attention may be invited to The Universal Dictionary of the English Language, edited by Henry Cecil Wyld (sixth impression, 1946) p. 304 where we have the following: "diarchy.....the irregularly formed dyarchy is common and should be avoided." That form irregular found on p. 124 of the Advanced History of India, is not commented on by the learned reviewer. The explanation for many of the blemishes will be found in the Preface, especially on p. vi.

DR. F. W. THOMAS.—I have profited by a closer acquaintance with your Political History and other writings, which are really models of sound judgment combined with full knowledge.

PROFESSOR HULTZSCH, HALLE, GERMANY.—Your valuable work.....is the outcome of extensive researches and throws much light on the darkest and most debated periods of Indian history. You have succeeded in building up an intelligible account from the stray and imperfect materials which are available to the historian of those times.

PROFESSOR A. SCHEPOTIEFF, UFA, RUSSIA.—For our study of the history of the Ancient Age your Political History of Ancient India is of very great importance (trans. from original).

PROFESSOR STEN KONOW, NORWAY.—The book is a very useful contribution.

PROF. and contain

—Very suggestive